THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT

EDITED BY THE REV.

W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

VOLUME I

NEW YORK
DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY
FIFTH AVENUE AND 21ST STREET
1902

University Press:
JOHN WILSON AND SON, CAMBRIDGE, U.S.A.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT

I

THE SYNOPTIC GOSPELS

BY THE REV.
ALEXANDER BALMAIN BRUCE, D.D.
PROFESSOR OF APOLOGETICS, FREE CHURCH COLLEGE, GLASGOW

II

THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN

BY THE REV.
MARCUS DODS, D.D.
PROFESSOR OF EXEGETICAL THEOLOGY, NEW COLLEGE, EDINBURGH

NEW YORK
DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY
FIFTH AVENUE AND 21ST STREET
1902

GENERAL EDITOR'S PREFACE

THE Expositor's Greek Testament is intended to do for the present generation the work accomplished by Dean Alford's in the past. Of the influence of Dean Alford's book there is no need to speak. It is almost impossible to exaggerate the success and usefulness of Dean Alford's commentary in putting English-speaking students into possession of the accumulated results of the labours of scholars up to the time it was published. He made the best critical and exegetical helps, previously accessible only to a few readers, the common privilege of all educated Englishmen. Dean Alford himself would have been the first to say that he undertook a task too great for one man. Though he laboured with indefatigable diligence, twenty years together, from 1841 to 1861, were occupied in his undertaking. Since his time the wealth of material on the New Testament has been steadily accumulating, and no one has as yet attempted to make it accessible in a full and comprehensive way.

In the present commentary the works have been committed to various scholars, and it is hoped that the completion will be reached within five years from the present date, if not sooner. As the plan of Alford's book has been tested by time and experience, it has been adopted here with certain modifications, and it is hoped that as the result English-speaking students will have a work at once up to date and practically useful in all its parts.

It remains to add that the commentators have been selected from various churches, and that they have in every case been left full liberty to express their own views. The part of the editor has been to choose them, and to assign the limits of space allowed to each book. In this assignment the judgment of Dean Alford has appeared to be sound in the main, and it has been generally followed.

W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.

PREFACE

In this Commentary on the Synoptical Gospels I give to the public the fruit of studies carried on for many years. These Gospels have taken a more powerful and abiding hold of me than any other part of the Scriptures. I have learnt much from them concerning Christ in the course of these years; not a little since I began to prepare this work for the press. I have done my best to communicate what I have learned to others. I have also laid under contribution previous commentators, ancient and modern, while avoiding the pedantic habit of crowding the page with long lists of learned names. I have not hesitated to introduce quotations, in Latin and Greek, which seemed fitted to throw light on the meaning. These, while possessing interest for scholars, may be passed over by English readers without much loss, as their sense is usually indicated.

In the critical notes beneath the Greek Text I have aimed at making easily accessible to the reader the results of the labours of scholars who have made the text the subject of special study; especially those contained in the monumental works of Tischendorf and Westcott and Hort. Readers are requested to peruse what has been stated on that subject in the Introduction, and, in using the commentary, to keep in mind that I have always made what I regard as the most probable reading the basis of comment, whether I have expressly indicated my opinion in the critical notes or not.

In these days one who aims at a competent treatment of the Evangelic narratives must keep in view critical methods of handling the story. I have tried to unite some measure of critical freedom and candour with the reverence of faith. If, in spite of honest endeavour, I have not succeeded always in realising this ideal, let it be imputed to the lack of skill rather than of good intention.

I rise from this task with a deepened sense of the wisdom and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. If what I have written help others to a better understanding of His mind and heart, I shall feel that my labour has not been in vain.

In the table of errata only such mistakes as more or less affect the sense are included; omissions and misplacements of aspirates and accents in Greek words, and the like, being omitted. In the preparation of this table I have received valuable aid from Mr. Vernon Bartlet, of Mansfield College, Oxford, and from Mr. John MacFadyen, of the Free Church College, Glasgow. I enjoyed the benefit of Mr. MacFadyen's assistance in reading the proofs of the second half of the work, and owe him earnest thanks, not only for increased accuracy in the printed text, but for many valuable suggestions.

The works of Dr. Gould on Mark and Dr. Plummer on Luke, in the International Critical Commentary, appeared too late to be taken advantage of in this commentary.

A. B. BRUCE.

GLASGOW.

THE GOSPELS

ACCORDING TO

MATTHEW, MARK AND LUKE

TABLE OF ERRATA

Page 70, col. 1, line 21 from top, delete comma after "errand".
" 72, " 2, line 17 from top, for πέμφας read πέμψας.
" 81, " 2, line 31 from top, for "particle" read "participle".
" 85, " 1, line 3 from foot, for "Saddusaic" read "Sadducaic".
" 88, " 2, line 13 from foot, for πειράξω read πειράζω.
" 92, " 2, line 17 from top, for "Phrynicus" read "Phrynichus"; again, p. 333, col. 2, line 6 from foot.
" 96, critical note, for "and old Latin and Syr. versions" read "most old Latin texts, and in Syr. Cur.".
" 103, col. 1, line 20 from foot, for σαπρὰ read πονηρὰ.
" 107, " 2, line 4 from foot, for "vv. 24, 25" read "vv. 25, 26".
" 109, " 1, line 13 from foot, for "substantive" read "subjunctive".
" 114, critical note, invert the two last clauses.
" 114, col. 2, line 7 from top, delete semicolon after "use".
" 117, " 1, line 11 from foot, for δοξασθῶσαν read δοξασθῶσιν.
" 119, " 2, last line, insert "into" before "law".
" 129, " 2, line 11 from top, for Δῶτε read "Δότε (in some minusc.)".
" 137, " 1, line 2 from foot, for "ver." read "v.".
" 153, " 2, line 2 from foot, for "makes" read "make".
" 154, " 1, line 13 from foot, for κράσπεδαι read κράσπεδα.
" 154, " 2, lines 17 and 3 from foot, for "tibicenes" read "tibicines".
" 156, " 1, line 25 from top, for εθαύμασεν read ἐθαύμασαν.
" 160, " 2, lines 22 and 24 from top, for "suspended to" read "suspended from".
" 160, " 2, line 24 from top, for φάσκωλα read φασκώλια.
" 161, " 2, line 4 from foot, for ἐκτινάξετε read ἐκτινάξατε.
" 167, " 1, line 10 from top, for "Vv. 31, 32" read "Vv. 32, 33".
" 172, " 1, line 17 from top, for "ver. 47" read "v. 47".
" 209, " 2, line 8 from top, for αὐτοῖς read αὐτούς.
" 222, " 1, line 3 from top, for "profisisceretur" read "proficisceretur".
" 225, " 2, line 21 from top, for κατησφαλήσατο read κατησφαλίσατο.
" 252, " 1, line 15 from foot, for "praerit" read "praeerit".
" 258, " 1, line 26 from top, for "imperiantiores" read "imperantiores".
" 275, " 1, line 3 from foot, for "diseased" read "deceased".
" 280, " 2, line 5 from top, for "dubtor" read "ductor".
" 286, Greek text, line 6, for ὁ ἐχόμενος read ὁ ἐρχόμενος.
" 289, col. 1, line 18 from foot, for "preclusive" read "prelusive".
" 295, " 2, line 14 from top, for "discunt" read "dicunt".
" 300, " 1, line 16 from foot, for ἐνύσταζαν read ἐνύσταξαν.
" 305, " 2, line 14 from foot, for ἐπισκέψασθέ read ἐπεσκέψασθέ.
" 320, " 2, lines 12 and 10 from foot, for "to strike" read "a stroke".
" 328, " 2, line 8 from foot, for "antenno" read "antenna".
" 332, " 1, line 8 from top, for "taint" read "taunt".
" 340, " 1, line 15 from top, place a rule after "Holy Ghost".
" 346, " 2, line 2 from top, for "ver 34, Mt. viii 19" read "ver. 24, Mt. viii. 29".
" 354, line 13, Greek text, insert νέον after οἶνον.
" 358, col. 2, line 15 from foot, for "He" read "Jesus".
" 362, " 2, line 13 from foot, for "30" read "31".
" 364, critical note 9, for οτι read οτε.
" 592, col. 1, line 8 from top, for "big" read "fig".

INTRODUCTION.

CHAPTER I.

CONCERNING THE THREE GOSPELS.

Section I. The Connection.

1. The three first Gospels, bearing the names of Matthew, Mark and Luke, have, during the present century, been distinguished by critics from the fourth by the epithet synoptical. The term implies that these Gospels are so like one another in contents that they can be, and for profitable study ought to be, viewed together. That such is the fact is obvious to every reader. A single perusal suffices to shew that they have much in common in contents, arrangement and phraseology; and a comparison with the fourth Gospel only deepens the impression. There everything appears different — the incidents related, the thoughts ascribed to Jesus, the terms in which they are expressed, the localities in which the Great Personage who is the common subject of all the four narratives exercised His remarkable teaching and healing ministries.

2. Yet while these three Gospels present obtrusive resemblances, they also exhibit hardly less obtrusive differences. The differences are marked just because the books are on the whole so like one another. One cannot help asking: Seeing they are so like, why are they not more like? Why do they differ at all? Or the question may be put the other way: Seeing there are so many idiosyncrasies in each Gospel, how does it come about that notwithstanding these they all bear an easily recognisable family likeness? The idiosyncrasies, though not always so obvious as the resemblances, are unmistakable, and some of them stare one in the face. Each Gospel, e.g., has some matter peculiar to itself; the first and the third a great deal. Then, while in certain parts of their narratives they follow the same order, in other places they diverge widely. Again, one cannot but be struck with the difference between the three records in regard to reporting the words of Jesus. Mark gives comparatively few; Matthew and Luke very many, and these for the most part very weighty and remarkable, insomuch that one wonders how any one undertaking to write a history of Christ's life could overlook them. Matthew and Luke again, while both giving much prominence to the words of Jesus, differ very widely in their manner of reporting them. The one collects the sayings into masses, apparently out of regard to affinity of thought; the other disperses them over his pages, and assigns to them distinct historical occasions.

3. These resemblances and differences, with many others not referred to, inevitably raise a question as to their cause. This is the synoptical problem, towards the solution of which a countless number of contributions have been made within the last hundred years. Many of these have now only a historical or antiquarian interest, and it would serve no useful purpose to attempt here an exhaustive account of the literature connected with this inquiry. While not insensible to the fascination of the subject, even on its curious side, as an interesting problem in literary criticism, yet I must respect the fact that we in this work are directly concerned with the matter only in so far as it affects exegesis. The statement therefore now to be made must be broad and brief.

4. All attempts at solution admit of being classified under four heads. First may be mentioned the hypothesis of oral tradition. This hypothesis implies that before our Gospels there were no written records of the ministry of Jesus, or at least none of which they made use. Their only source was the unwritten tradition of the memorabilia of that ministry, having its ultimate origin in the public preaching and teaching of the Apostles, the men who had been with Jesus. The statements made by the Apostles from time to time, repeated and added to as occasion required, caught up by willing ears, and treasured up in faithful memories: behold all that is necessary, according to the patrons of this hypothesis, to account for all the evangelic phenomena of resemblance and difference. The resemblances are explained by the tendency of oral tradition, especially in non-literary epochs and peoples, to become stereotyped in contents and even in phraseology, a tendency much helped by the practice of catechetical instruction, in which the teacher dictates sentences which his pupils are expected to commit to memory.[1] The differences are accounted for by the original diversity in the memorabilia communicated by different Apostles, by the measure of fluidity inseparable from oral tradition due to defective memory, and of course in part also by the peculiar tastes, aims and individualities of the respective evangelists. This hypothesis has been chiefly in favour among English scholars, though it can boast likewise of influential supporters among continental critics, such as Gieseler and Godet. It points to a vera causa, and cannot be wholly left out of account in an endeavour to explain how written records of the evangelic tradition arose. There was a time doubtless when what was known of Jesus was on the lip only. How long that primitive phase lasted is matter of conjecture; some say from 30 to 60 A.D. It seems probable that the process of transferring from the lip to the page began considerably sooner than the later of these dates. When Luke wrote, many attempts had been made to embody the tradition in a written form (Luke i. 1). This points to a literary habit which would naturally exert its power without delay in reference to any matter in which men took an absorbing interest. And when this habit prevails writers are not usually content to remain in ignorance of what others have done in the same line. They want to see each other's notes. The presumption therefore is that while oral tradition in all probability was a source for our evangelists, it was not the only source, probably not even the chief source. There were other writings about the acts, and words, and sufferings of Jesus in existence before they wrote; they were likely to know these, and if they knew them they would not despise them, but rather use them so far as serviceable. In Luke's case the existence of such earlier writings, and his acquaintance with them, are not mere presumptions but facts; the only point on which there is room for difference of opinion is how far he took advantage of the labours of his predecessors. That he deemed them unsatisfactory, at least defective, may be inferred from his making a new contribution; that he drew nothing from them is extremely improbable. Much can be said for the view that among these earlier writings known to Luke was our Gospel of Mark, or a book substantially identical with it in contents, and that he used it very freely.

[1] On the function of catechists as helping to stereotype the evangelic tradition vide Wright, The Composition of the Four Gospels, 1890. Mr. Wright is a thorough believer in the oral tradition.

5. The last observation naturally leads up to the second hypothesis, which is that the authors of the synoptical Gospels used each other's writings, each successive writer taking advantage of earlier contributions, so that the second Gospel (in time) borrowed from the first, and the third from both first and second. Which borrowed from which depends of course on the order of time in which the three Gospels appeared. Six permutations are possible, and every one of them has had its advocates. One of the most interesting, in virtue of the course it ran, is: Matthew, Luke, Mark. This arrangement was contended for by Griesbach, and utilised by Dr. Ferdinand Christian Baur in connection with his famous Tendency-criticism. Griesbach founded on the frequent duality in Mark's style, that is to say, the combination of phrases used separately in the same connection in the other synoptical Gospels: e.g., "at even when the sun did set" (i. 32). In this phenomenon, somewhat frequently recurring, he saw conclusive proof that Mark had Matthew and Luke before him, and servilely copied from both in descriptive passages. Baur's interest in the question was theological rather than literary. Accepting Griesbach's results, he charged Mark not only with literary dependence on his brother evangelists, whence is explained his graphic style, but also with studied theological neutrality, eschewing on the one hand the Judaistic bias of the first Gospel, and on the other the Pauline or universalistic bias of the third; both characteristics, the literary dependence and the studied neutrality, implying a later date. Since then a great change of view has taken place. For some time the prevailing opinion has been that Mark's Gospel is the earliest not the latest of the three, and this opinion is likely to hold its ground. Holtzmann observes that the Mark hypothesis is a hypothesis no longer,[1] meaning that it is an established fact. And he and many others recognise in Mark, either as we have it or in an earlier form, a source for both the other synoptists, thereby acknowledging that the hypothesis of mutual use likewise has a measure of truth.

6. The third hypothesis is that of one primitive Gospel from which all three synoptists drew their material. The supporters of this view do not believe that the evangelists used each other's writings. Their contention is that all were dependent on one original document, an Urevangelium as German scholars call it. This primitive Gospel was, ex hypothesi, comprehensive enough to cover the whole ground. From it all the three evangelists took much in common, hence their agreement in matter and language in so many places. But how about their divergencies? How came it to pass that with the same document before them they made such diverse use of it? The answer is: it was due to the fact that they used, not identical copies of one document, but different recensions of the same document. By this flight into the dark region of conjectural recensions, whereof no trace remains, the Urevangelium hypothesis was self-condemned to oblivion. With it are associated the honourable names of Lessing and Eichhorn.

[1] Hand-Commentar, p. 3.

7. The fourth and last hypothesis was propounded by Schleiermacher. He took for his starting-point the word διήγησις in the introduction of Luke's Gospel, and found in it the hint that not in one primitive Gospel of comprehensive character was the source exploited by our Gospels to be found, but rather in many Gospelets containing a record of some words or deeds of Jesus with which the writer had become acquainted, and which he specially desired to preserve. Each of our evangelists is to be conceived as having so many of these diegeses or Gospelets in his possession, and constructing out of them a larger connected story. In so far as they made use of copies of the same diegesis, there would be agreement in contents and style; in so far as they used Gospelets peculiar to their respective collections, there would be divergence; and of course diversity in the order of narration was to be expected in writings compiled from a handful of unconnected leaflets of evangelic tradition. In spite of the great name of its author, this hypothesis has found little support as an attempt to account for the whole phenomena of the Gospels. As a subordinate suggestion to explain the presence in any of the synoptists of elements peculiar to himself, it is worthy of consideration. Some of the particulars, e.g., peculiar to Luke may have been found by him not in any large collection, but in a leaflet, as others may have been derived not from written sources large or small, but from a purely oral source in answer to local inquiries.

8. None of the foregoing hypotheses is accepted by itself as a satisfactory solution of the synoptical problem by any large number of competent critics at the present time. The majority look for a solution in the direction of a combination of the second and third hypotheses under modified forms. To a certain extent they recognise use of one Gospel in another, and there is an extensive agreement in the opinion that for the explanation of the phenomena not one but at least two primitive documents must be postulated. In these matters certainty is unattainable, but it is worth while making ourselves acquainted with what may be called the most probable working hypothesis. With this view I offer here a brief statement as to the present trend of critical opinion on the subject in question.

9. It is a familiar observation that, leaving out of account the reports of the teaching of Jesus contained in the first and third Gospels, the matter that remains, consisting of narratives of actions and events, is very much the same in all the three synoptists. Not only so, the remainder practically consists of the contents of the second Gospel. It seems as if Matthew and Luke had made Mark the framework of their story, and added to it new material. This accordingly is now believed by many to have been the actual fact. The prevailing idea is that our Mark, or a book very like it in contents, was under the eye of the compilers of the first and third Gospels when they wrote, and was used by both as a source, not merely in the sense that they took from it this and that, but in the sense of adopting it substantially as it was, and making it the basis of their longer and more elaborate narratives. This crude statement of course requires qualification. What took place was not that the compilers of the first and third Gospels simply transcribed the second, page by page, as they found it in their manuscript, reproducing its contents in the original order, and each section verbatim. If that had been the case the synoptical problem would have been greatly simplified, and there would hardly have been room for difference of opinion. As the case stands the order of narration is more or less disturbed, and there are many variations in expression. The question is thus raised: On the hypothesis that Mark was a source for Matthew and Luke, in respect of the matter common to all the three, how came it to pass that the writers of the first and third Gospels deviated so much, and in different ways, from their common source in the order of events and in style? The general answer to the question, so far as order is concerned, is that the additional matter acted as a disturbing influence. The explanation implies that, when the disturbing influence did not come into play, the original order would be maintained. Advocates of the hypothesis try to show that the facts answer to this view; that is to say, that Mark's order is followed in Matthew and Luke, except when disturbance is explicable by the influence of the new material. One illustration may here be given from Matthew. Obviously the "Sermon on the Mount" exercised a powerful fascination on the mind of the evangelist. From the first he has it in view, and he desires to bring it in as soon as possible. Therefore, of the incidents connected with the commencement of the Galilean ministry reported in Mark, he relates simply the call of the four fisher Apostles, as if to furnish the Great Teacher with disciples who might form an audience for the great Discourse. To that call he appends a general description of the Galilean ministry, specifying as its salient features, preaching or teaching and healing. Then he proceeds to illustrate each department of the ministry, the teaching by the Sermon on the Mount in chapters v.–vii., the healing by a group of miracles contained in chapters viii. and ix., including the cure of Peter's mother-in-law, the wholesale cures on the Sabbath evening, and the healing of the leper, all reported in the first chapter of Mark. Of course, in regard neither to the sermon nor to the group of miracles can the first Gospel lay claim to chronological accuracy. In the corresponding part of his narrative, Luke follows Mark closely, reporting the cure of the demoniac in the synagogue of Capernaum, of Peter's mother-in-law, of many sick people on the Sabbath evening, and of the leper in the same order. There is only one deviation. The call of Peter, which in Luke replaces that of the four, Peter and Andrew, James and John, comes between the Sabbath evening cures and the cure of the leper.

The variations in style raise a much subtler question, which can only be dealt with adequately by a detailed comparative exegesis, such as that so admirably exemplified in the great work of Dr. Bernhard Weiss on the Gospel of Mark and its synoptical parallels.[1] Suffice it to say here that it is not difficult to suggest a variety of causes which might lead to literary alteration in the use of a source. Thus, if the style of the source was peculiar, markedly individualistic, colloquial, faulty in grammar, one can understand a tendency to replace these characteristics by smoothness and elegance. The style of Mark is of the character described, and instances of literary correction in the parallel accounts can easily be pointed out. Another cause in operation might be misunderstanding of the meaning of the source, or disinclination to adopt the meaning obviously suggested. Two illustrative instances may be mentioned. In reporting the sudden flight of Jesus from Capernaum in the early morning, Mark makes Him say to the disciples in connection with the reason for departure, "to this end came I forth," i.e., from the town. In Luke this is turned into, "therefore was I sent," i.e., into the world.[2] In the incident of the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, Mark makes Jesus bid the two disciples say to the owner of the colt, "straightway He (Jesus) will send it back," i.e., return it to its owner when He has had His use of it. In Matthew this is turned into, "straightway he (the owner) will send them (the ass and her colt)".[3] Yet another source of verbal alteration might be literary taste acting instinctively, leading to the substitution of one word or phrase for another, without conscious reason.

10. Thus far of the matter common to the three Gospels, or what may be called the triple tradition. But Matthew and Luke contain much more than this, the additional matter in both consisting mainly of words and discourses of Jesus. Each Gospel has not a little peculiar to itself, but there is a large amount of teaching material common to the two, and though this common element is very differently reproduced as to historic connection and grouping, yet there is such a pervading similarity in thought and expression as to suggest forcibly the hypothesis of a second source as its most natural explanation. Assuming that the first and third evangelists borrowed their narrative of events from Mark, and that what needs accounting for is mainly the didactic element, it would follow that this hypothetical second source consisted chiefly, if not exclusively, of sayings spoken by the Lord Jesus. Whether both evangelists possessed this source in the same form, and had each his own way of using it, as dictated by his plan, or whether it came into their hands in different recensions, formed under diverse influences, and meant to serve distinct purposes, are questions of subordinate moment. The main question is: Did there exist antecedent to the composition of our first and third Gospels a collection of the words of Christ, which both evangelists knew and used in compiling their memoirs of Christ's public ministry? Modern critics, such as Weiss, Wendt, Holtzmann, Jülicher, concur in answering this question in the affirmative. The general result is that for the explanation of the phenomena presented by the synoptical Gospels, modern criticism postulates two main written sources: a book like our canonical Mark, if not identical with it, as the source of the narratives common to the three Gospels, and another book containing sayings of Jesus, as the source of the didactic matter common to Matthew and Luke.

[1] Das Marcusevangelium und seine synoptischen Parallelen, 1872.

[2] Mark i. 38, Luke iv. 43. [3] Mark xi. 3, Matthew xxi. 3.

11. These conclusions, which might be reached purely by internal inspection, are confirmed by the well-known statements of Papias, who flourished in the first quarter of the second century, concerning books about Christ written by Mark and Matthew. They are to this effect: "Mark, being the interpreter of Peter, wrote carefully, though not in order, as he remembered them, the things spoken or done by Christ". "Matthew wrote the Logia in the Hebrew language, and each one interpreted these as he could."[1] The statements point to two books as the fountains of evangelic written tradition containing matter guaranteed as reliable as resting on the authority of two apostles, Peter and Matthew. The first of the two books is presumably identical with our canonical Mark. It is not against this that Papias represents Mark's work as including things spoken as well as done by Christ. For this is true of canonical Mark. Though, by comparison with Matthew and Luke, Mark is extremely meagre in the didactic element, yet he does report many very remarkable sayings of Jesus. But what of the other book? Is it to be identified with our Matthew? Primâ facie one would say no, because the Matthew of Papias is a book of Logia, which we naturally take to mean a book of oracles, or weighty words spoken by the Lord Jesus. But, on the other hand, it might be argued that Logia is simply a designation from the more prominent or characteristic part, and by no means excludes such narratives of events as we find in canonical Matthew. Indeed, it might be said that it would be difficult to compile a collection of sayings that should be interesting or even intelligible without the introduction of more or less narrative, if it were only by way of preface or historical setting. Granting that the leading aim was to report words, a minimum amount of narrative would still be necessary to make the report effective. And it might be added that it is, in many instances, only a minimum of narrative that we find in canonical Matthew, his historic statements being generally meagre in comparison with those in Mark and Luke. Hence, not a few critics and apologists still hold by the old tradition which practically identified the Logia of Papias with the Matthew of the New Testament. But the Logia, according to Papias, was written in Hebrew, and our canonical Matthew is in Greek which does not wear the aspect of a translation. This difficulty defenders of the old view do not find insurmountable. Yet the impression left on one's mind by such apologetic attempts is that of special pleading, or perhaps, one ought to say, of an honourable bias in favour of a venerable tradition, and of a theory which gives us, in canonical Matthew, a work proceeding directly from the hand of an apostle. If that theory could be established, the result would be highly satisfactory to many who at present stand in doubt. Meantime we must be content to acquiesce, provisionally, in a hypothesis, according to which we have access to the apostle Matthew's contribution only at second hand, in a Gospel from another unknown author which has absorbed a large portion, if not the whole, of the apostolic document. Even on this view we have the satisfaction of feeling that the three synoptists bring us very near to the original eye and ear witnesses. The essential identity, amid much diversity in form, of the words ascribed to our Lord in the two Gospels which draw upon the Logia, inspires confidence that the evangelic reports of these words, though secondary, are altogether reliable.

[1] Eusebii, Historia Ecclesiastica, lib. iii., c. 39.

12. We cannot but wonder that a work so precious as the Logia of Matthew was allowed to perish, and earnestly wish that, if possible, it might even yet be restored. Attempts at gratifying this natural feeling have recently been made, and conjectural reconstructions of the lost treasure lie before us in such works as that of Wendt on the Teaching of Jesus,[1] and of Blair on the Apostolic Gospel.[2] A critical estimate of these essays cannot here be given. Of course they are tentative; nevertheless they are interesting, and even fascinating to all who desire to get behind the existing records, and as near to the actual words of our Lord as possible. And, though an approach to a consensus of opinion may never be reached, the discussion is sure to bear fruit in a more intimate acquaintance with the most authentic forms of many of our Lord's sayings. As another aid to so desirable a result, one must give a cordial welcome to such works as that of Resch on Extracanonical Parallel Texts to the Gospels.[3] Resch believes it possible, through the use of Codex Bezae, the old Italian and Syriac versions, and quotations from the Gospels in the early fathers, to get behind the text of our canonical Gospels, and to reach a truer reflection in Greek of the Hebrew original in the case of many sayings recorded in the Logia of Matthew. There will be various estimates of the intrinsic value of his adventurous attempt. Personally, I am not sanguine that much will come out of it. But one cannot be sorry that it has been made, and by one who thoroughly believes that he is engaged in a fruitful line of inquiry. It is well to learn by exhaustive experiment how much or how little may be expected from that quarter.

13. Among those who accept the hypothesis of the two sources a difference of opinion obtains on two subordinate points, viz., first, the relation between the two sources used in Matthew and Luke, and, second, the relation between these two Gospels. Did Mark know and use the Logia, and did Matthew know Luke, or Luke Matthew? Dr. Bernhard Weiss answers the former question in the affirmative and the latter in the negative. From certain phenomena brought to light by a comparative study of the synoptists, he thinks it demonstrable that in many parts of his narrative Mark leans

[1] Wendt, Die Lehre Jesu, Erster Theil. This part of Wendt's work has not been translated. His exposition of Christ's words has been translated by Messrs. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.

[2] The Apostolic Gospel, with a Critical Reconstruction of the Text, by J. Fulton Blair, 1896. Mr. Blair's critical position differs widely from Wendt's, and his Apostolic Gospel contains much more besides words.

[3] Aussercanonische Paralleltexte zu den Evangelien.

on an older written source, whose accounts of evangelic incidents are reproduced in a more faithful manner in the companion Gospels, and especially in Matthew. This source he takes to be the Logia of the apostle Matthew. It follows from this, of course, that the Logia was not a mere collection of sayings, but a book containing histories as well, such narratives, e.g., as those relating to the palsied man, the feeding of the 5000, and the blind man at Jericho. The phenomena on which Weiss rests his case are of two kinds. One group consists of minute agreements between Matthew and Luke against Mark in narratives common to the three, as, e.g., in the use of the words ἰδού and ἐπὶ κλίνης in the opening sentence of the story of the palsied man. The inference is that these phrases are taken from the Logia, implying of course that the story was there for those who chose to use it. The other group consists of sayings of Jesus found in Mark's Gospel, and reproduced also in Matthew and Luke in nearly identical form, yet not taken, it is held, from Mark, but from the Logia. The contention is that the close similarity can be accounted for only by the assumption that Mark, as well as his brother evangelists, took the words from the Logia. An instance in point may be found in the respective accounts of the reply of Jesus to the charge of being in league with Beelzebub. Wendt dissents from the inference of Weiss in both classes of cases. The one group of facts he explains by assuming that Luke had access to the first canonical gospel; in the second group he sees simply accidental correspondences between independent traditions preserved respectively in the Logia and in Mark.[1]

Section II. Historicity.

1. The Gospels primâ facie wear the aspect of books aiming at giving a true if not a full account of the life, and more especially of the public career, of Jesus Christ, the Author of the Christian faith. For Christians, writings having such an aim must possess unique interest. There is nothing an earnest believer in Christ more desires to know than the actual truth about Him: what He said, did, and experienced. How far do the books, the study of which is to engage our attention, satisfy this desire? To what extent are they historically reliable?

2. The question has been recently propounded and discussed:

[1] Die Lehre Jesu, Erster Theil, pp. 191-3. On the question whether the third evangelist used canonical Matthew, vide the Abhandlung of Edward Simons, Bonn, 1880.

What interest did the apostolic age take in the evangelic history, and the conclusion arrived at that the earthly life of Jesus interested it very little?[1] Now, there can be no doubt that, comparing that age with the present time, the statement is true. We live in an age when the historical spirit is in the ascendant, creating an insatiable desire to know the origins of every movement which has affected, to any extent, the fortunes of humanity. Moreover, Christianity has undergone an evolution resulting in types of this religion which are, on various grounds, unsatisfactory to many thoughtful persons. Hence has arisen a powerful reaction of which the watchword is — "Back to Christ," and to which additional intensity has been given by the conviction that modern types of Christianity, whether ecclesiastical, philosophical, or pietistic, all more or less foster, if they do not avow, indifference to the historic foundations of the faith. We have thus a religious as well as a scientific reason for our desire to know the actual Jesus of history. In the primitive era, faith was free to follow its native tendency to be content with its immediate object, the Risen Lord, and to rely on the inward illumination of the Holy Spirit as the source of all knowledge necessary for a godly life. This indifference might conceivably pass into hostility. Faith might busy itself in transforming unwelcome facts so as to make the history serve its purpose. For the historic interest and the religious are not identical. Science wants to know the actual facts; religion wants facts to be such as will serve its ends. It sometimes idealises, transforms, even invents history to accomplish this object. We are not entitled to assume, à priori, that apostolic Christianity entirely escaped this temptation. The suggestion that the faith of the primitive Church took hold of the story of Jesus and so transfigured it that the true image of Him is no longer recoverable, however sceptical, is not without plausibility. The more moderate statement that the apostolic Church, while knowing and accepting many facts about Jesus, was not interested in them as facts, but only as aids to faith, has a greater show of reason. It might well be that the teaching of Jesus was regarded not so much as a necessary source of the knowledge of truth, but rather as a confirmation of knowledge already possessed, and that the acts and experiences of Jesus were viewed chiefly in the light of verifications of His claim to be the Messiah. It does not greatly matter to us what the source of interest in the evangelic facts was so long as they are facts; if the primitive Church in its traditions concerning Jesus was simply utilising and not manufacturing history. There is good reason to believe that in the main this is the true state of the case. Not only so, there are grounds for the opinion that the historic spirit — interest in facts as facts — was not wanting even amid the fervour of the apostolic age. It may be worth while to mention some of these, seeing they make for the historicity of the main body of the evangelic tradition concerning the words, deeds, and sufferings of Jesus as these are recorded, e.g., in the Gospel of Mark.

[1] Vide Von Soden's essay in the Theologische Abhandlungen, Carl von Weizsäcker Gewidmet, 1892.

3. In this connection it deserves a passing notice that there existed in the primitive Church a party interested in the fact-knowledge of Jesus, the knowledge of Christ "after the flesh" in Pauline phrase, a Christ party. From the statement made by St. Paul in the text from which the phrase just quoted is taken, it has been inferred that the apostle was entirely indifferent to the historical element.[1] The inference seems to me hasty, but, be this as it may, what I am now concerned to point out is that, if St. Paul undervalued the facts of the personal ministry, there were those who did not. There was a party who made acquaintance with these facts a necessary qualification for the apostleship, and on this ground denied that St. Paul was an apostle. The assumption underlying the Tübingen tendency-criticism is that there were two parties in the apostolic Church interested in misrepresenting Jesus in different directions, one virtually making Him a narrow Judaist, the other making Him a Pauline universalist, neither party being worthy of implicit trust. This hypothesis presents a somewhat distorted view of the situation. It would be nearer the truth to say that there was a party interested in facts and another interested chiefly in ideas. The one valued facts without seeing their significance; the other valued ideas without taking much trouble to indicate the fact basis. To the bias of the former party we might be indebted for knowledge of many facts in the life of Jesus, the significance of which was not understood by the transmitters of the tradition.

4. Even within the Pauline party there were those who were interested in facts and in some measure animated by the historical spirit. So far from regarding Paulinists in general as idealists, we ought probably to regard St. Paul, in his passion for ideas and apparent indifference to biographic detail, as an exception, and to think of the majority of his followers as men who, while sympathising with his universalism, shared in no small measure the common Jewish realism. Of this type was Luke. The absence from his

[1] 2 Corinthians v. 16.

Gospel of even the rudiments of a doctrine of atonement, so conspicuous a topic in the Pauline epistles, will be remarked on hereafter; meantime I direct attention simply to its opening sentence. That prefatory statement is full of words and phrases breathing the fact-loving spirit: Πεπληροφορημένων πραγμάτων, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς αὐτόπται καὶ ὑπηρέται, ἀκριβῶς, ἀσφάλειαν. The author wants to deal with facts believed; he wishes, as far as possible, to be guided by the testimony of eye-witnesses; he means to take pains in the ascertainment of the truth that the friend for whose benefit he writes may attain unto certainty. The question here is not how far he succeeded in his aim; the point insisted on is the aim itself, the historical spirit evinced. Luke may have been unconsciously influenced to a considerable extent by religious bias, preconceived opinion, accepted Christian belief, and therefore not sufficiently critical, and too easily satisfied with evidence; but he honestly wanted to know the historic truth. And in this desire he doubtless represented a class, and wrote to meet a demand on the part of Christians who felt a keen interest in the memorabilia of the Founder, and were not satisfied with the sources at command on account of their fragmentariness, or occasional want of agreement with each other.[1]

5. The peculiar character of the apostle who stood at the head of the primitive Jewish Church has an important bearing on the question of historicity. For our knowledge of Peter we are not wholly dependent on the documents whose historicity is in question. We have a rapid pencil-sketch of him in the epistles of St. Paul, easily recognisable as that of the same man of whom we have a more finished picture in the Gospels. A genial, frank, impulsive, outspoken, generous, wide-hearted man; not preoccupied with theories, illogical, inconsistent, now on one side, now on the other; brave yet cowardly, capable of honest sympathy with Christian universalism, yet under pressure apt to side with Jewish bigots. A most unsatisfactory, provoking person to deal with for such a man as St. Paul, with his sharply defined position, thorough-going adherence to principle, and firm resolute will. Yes, but also a very satisfactory source of first-hand traditions concerning Jesus; an excellent witness, if a weak apostle. A source, a copious fountain of information he was bound to be. We do not need Papias to tell us this. This disciple, open-hearted and open-mouthed, must speak concerning his beloved Master. It will not be long before everybody knows what he has to tell concerning the ministry of the Lord.

[1] Von Soden, in the essay above referred to, takes no notice of Luke's preface.

Papias reports that in Mark's Gospel we have the literary record of Peter's testimony. The statement is entirely credible. Peter would say more than others about Jesus; he would say all in a vivid way, and Mark's narrative reflects the style of an impressionable eye-witness. If it be a faithful report of Peter's utterances the general truth of its picture of Jesus may be implicitly relied on. For Peter was not a man likely to be biassed by theological tendency. What we expect from him is rather a candid recital of things as they happened, without regard to, possibly without perception of, their bearing on present controversies; a rough, racy, unvarnished story, unmanipulated in the interest of ideas or theories which are not in this man's line. How far the narratives of the second Gospel bear out this character will appear hereafter.

6. The other fact mentioned by Papias, viz., that the apostle Matthew was the source of the evangelic tradition relating to the words of Jesus, has an important bearing on historicity. Outside the Gospels we have no information concerning this disciple such as we have of Peter in the Pauline letters. But we may safely assume the truth of the Gospel accounts which represent him as having been a tax-gatherer before he was called to discipleship. The story of his call, under the name of Matthew or Levi, is told in all the three synoptists, as is also the significant incident of the feast following at which Jesus met with a large company of publicans. There is reason to believe that in calling this disciple our Lord had in view not merely ultimate service as an apostle, but immediate service in connection with the meeting with the publicans; that, in short, Jesus associated Matthew with Himself that He might use him as an instrument for initiating a mission to the class to which he had belonged. But if the Master might call a fit man to discipleship for one form of immediate service, He might call him for more than one. Another service the ex-publican might be able to render was that of secretary. In his old occupation he would be accustomed to writing, and it might be Christ's desire to utilise that talent for noting down things worthy of record. The gift would be most in demand in connection with the teaching of the Master. The preservation of that element could not be safely trusted to memories quite equal to the retention of remarkable healing acts, accompanied by not less remarkable sayings. The use of the pen at the moment might be necessary. And of all the members of the disciple-circle the ex-publican was the likeliest man for that service. We are not surprised, therefore, that the function assigned to Matthew in connection with the evangelic tradition is the preservation of the Logia.

That is just the part he was fitted to perform. As little are we surprised that Mark's Gospel, based on Peter's recollections, contains so little of the teaching. Peter was not the kind of man to take notes, nor were discourses full of deep thought the kind of material he was likely to remember. What would make an indelible impression on him would be, not thought, but extraordinary deeds, accompanied by striking gestures, original brief replies to embarrassing questions and the like; just such things as we find reported in the second Gospel.

From Matthew the publican might be expected not only a record of Christ's teaching as distinct from His actions, but an impartial record. We should not suspect him any more than Peter of theological bias; least of all in the direction of Judaism. As a Galilean he belonged to a half-Gentile community, and as a publican he was an outcast for orthodox Jews. It was probably the humane spirit and wide sympathies of Jesus that drew him from the receipt of custom. If, therefore, we find in the Logia any sayings ascribed to Jesus of a universalistic character we do not feel in the least tempted to doubt their authenticity. If, on the other hand, we meet with words of an apparently opposite character we are not greatly startled and ready to exclaim, Behold the hand of an interpolator. We rather incline to see in the combination of seemingly incongruous elements the evidence of candid chronicling. It is the case of an honest reporter taking down this and that without asking himself whether this can be reconciled with that. That a deep, many-sided mind like that of Jesus might give birth to startling paradoxes is no wise incredible. Therefore, without undertaking responsibility for every expression, one may without hesitation endorse the sentiment of Jülicher, "that Jewish and anti-Jewish, revolutionary and conservative, new and old, freedom and narrowness in judgment, sensuous hopes and a spiritualism blending together present and future, meet together, by no means weakens our impression that Jesus really here speaks".[1]

7. The mere fact of the preservation of Mark's Gospel is not without a bearing on the question of historicity. In its own way it testifies to the influence of the historic as distinct from the religious spirit in the early period of the Christian era. It would not have been at all surprising if that Gospel had fallen out of existence, seeing that its contents have been absorbed into the more comprehensive Gospels of Matthew and Luke. Assuming the correctness of modern critical views, the Logia of the Apostle Matthew has disappeared; how did it come about that the second Gospel did not disappear also, especially in view of its defects, as they would be regarded, comparing it with the longer narratives of the same type? Whether the authors of the first and third Gospels aimed at superseding the Logia and Mark is a question that need not be discussed. From Luke's preface it might plausibly be inferred that he did aspire at giving so full and satisfactory an account of the life of Jesus as should render earlier attempts superfluous. If he did he was not successful. The Gospel without the story of the infancy, and the Sermon on the Mount, and the detailed appearances after the resurrection survived. It might be undervalued. There is evidence of preference and partiality for one Gospel as against another in Patristic literature. Clement of Alexandria, true to his philosophy, undervalued all the synoptists as compared with the fourth Gospel, because they showed merely the body of Jesus, while the fourth Gospel showed His spirit. Augustine regarded Mark as a mere pedissequus to Matthew, en laquais, as D'Eichthal irreverently but not incorrectly renders the word.[1] Still Mark held his place, mere lackey to Matthew though some supposed him to be. The reason might be in part that he had got too strong a hold before the companion Gospels appeared to be easily dislodged, and had to be accepted in spite of defects and apparent superfluousness. But I think there was also a worthier reason, a certain diffused thankfulness for every scrap of information concerning the Lord Jesus, especially such as was believed to rest on apostolic testimony. Mark's Gospel passed for a report of St. Peter's reminiscences of the Master; therefore by all means let it be preserved, though it contained no account of the childhood of Jesus, and very imperfect reports of His teaching and of the resurrection. It was apostolic, therefore to be respected; as apostolic it was trustworthy, therefore to be valued. In short, the presence of the second Gospel in the New Testament, side by side with Matthew and Luke, is a witness to the prevalence in the Church of the first century of the historical spirit acting as a check on the religious spirit, whose instinctive impulse would be to obliterate traces of discrepancy, and to suppress all writings relating to the Christian origins, which in their presentation of Jesus even seemed to sink below the level of the Catholic faith.

[1] Einleitung in das Neue Testament, p. 231.

8. The foregoing five considerations all tend to make a favourable impression as to the historicity of the evangelic tradition in general. More special considerations are needful when the tradition is broken up into distinct divisions. The tradition consists of three layers. Faith would make three demands for information concerning its object: what did He teach? what did He do? how did He suffer? Some think that the first and most urgent demand would be for information concerning the teaching, and that only in the second place would there grow up a desire for narratives of facts and experiences. According to Holtzmann the order was: first the Logia, then the passion-drama, then the anecdotes of memorable acts.[1] I should be inclined to invert the order of the first two items, and to say: the Passion, the Logia, the memorable incidents. But the more important question is: how far can the evangelic records concerning these three departments of the tradition be trusted? Only a few hints can be given by way of answer here.

[1] Vide his work Les Evangiles, p. 66.

9. The narratives of the Passion, given in all the four Gospels with disproportionate fulness, have lately been subjected to a searching analysis in a sceptical spirit rivalling that of Strauss. Dr. Brandt,[2] after doing his utmost to shake our faith in the trustworthiness of these pathetic records, still leaves to us eight particulars, which even he is constrained to recognise as historical. These are: betrayal by one of the twelve; desertion by all of them; denial by Peter; death sentence under the joint responsibility of Jewish rulers and Roman procurator; assistance in carrying the cross rendered by Simon of Cyrene; crucifixion on a hill called Golgotha; the crime charged indicated by the inscription, "King of the Jews"; death, if not preceded by a prayer for the murderers, or by the despairing cry, "My God, my God," at least heralded by a loud voice. In these particulars we have the skeleton of the story, all that is needful to give the Passion tragic significance, and even form a basis for theological constructions. The items omitted, the process before the Sanhedrim, the interviews with Pilate and Herod, the mockery of the soldiers, the preferential release of Barabbas, the sneers of passers-by, the two thieves, the parting of the raiment, the words from the cross, the preternatural accompaniments of death, are all more or less of the nature of accessories, enhancing greatly the impressiveness of the picture, suggesting additional lessons, but not altering the character of the event as a whole.

But even accessories are important, and not to be lightly given over to the tender mercies of sceptical critics. The reasons assigned for treating them as unhistoric are not convincing. They come mostly under three heads: The influence of Old Testament prophecy, the absence of witnesses, and the bias manifest in the accounts of the trial against the Jews and in favour of the Gentiles. By reference to the first a whole group of incidents, including the cry, "Eli, Eli," are summarily disposed of. Texts taken from Psalm xxii. and Isaiah liii. created corresponding facts. This is a gratuitous assumption. The facts suggested the prophecies, the prophecies did not create the facts. The facts were there, and the primitive disciples looked out for Messianic oracles to suit them, by way of furnishing themselves with an apologetic, for the thesis, Jesus is the Christ. In some cases the links of proof are weak; no one could have thought of the texts unless the facts had been there to suggest them. The plea of lack of witnesses applies to what took place between Jesus and the various authorities before whom He appeared: the High Priests, Pilate, Herod. Who, it is asked, were there to see or hear? Who likely to be available as witnesses for the evangelic tradition? We cannot tell; yet it is possible there was quite sufficient evidence, though also possible, doubtless, that the evangelists were not in all cases able to give exact verifiable information, but were obliged to give simply the best information obtainable. This, at least, we may claim for them, that they did their best to ascertain the facts. As to the alleged prejudice leading to unfair distribution of blame for our Lord's death between the Jewish authorities and the Roman governor, we may admit that there were temptations to such partiality, arising out of natural dislike of the Jews and unequally natural desire to win the favour of those who held the reins of empire. Yet on the whole it may be affirmed that the representation of the evangelists is intrinsically credible as in harmony with all we know about the principal actors in the great tragedy.

[1] Vide Hand-Commentar, pp. 13-17.

[2] Die Evangelische Geschichte und der Ursprung des Christenthums, 1893.

10. With regard to the teaching, it is of course obvious that all recorded sayings of Jesus do not possess the same attestation. Some words are found in all three synoptists, some in two, and not a few in only one. Yet in many instances we can feel as sure of the authenticity of sayings found in a single Gospel as of that of sayings occurring in all the three. Who can doubt, e.g., that the word, "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath," emanated from the great Master? It is well in this connection to have before our minds the rules by which judgment should be guided. The following canons may legitimately be relied on:—

(a) Sayings supported by full synoptical attestation may be regarded as in substance authentic.

(b) Sayings unsupported by full synoptical attestation may be regarded as authentic when their absence from a particular Gospel can be explained by its plan, or by the idiosyncrasy of its author. This covers not a few omissions by Luke.

(c) Sayings found only in a single Gospel may be accepted as authentic when they sympathise with and form a natural complement to other well-attested sayings. This remark applies to the sayings in Luke vii. 47, xv. 7, concerning the connection between little forgiveness and little love, and about the joy of finding things lost, which are complementary to the saying in all three synoptists: "the whole need not a physician;" the three sayings together constituting a full apology for the relations between Jesus and the sinful.

(d) All sayings possess intrinsic credibility which suit the general historical situation. This applies to Christ's antipharisaic utterances, an element very prominent in Matthew, and very much restricted in Luke.

(e) All sayings may be accepted as self-attested and needing no other attestation which bear the unmistakable stamp of a unique religious genius, rise above the capacity of the reporters, and are reported by them simply as unforgettable memories of the great Teacher handed down by a faithful tradition.

The chief impulse to collecting the sayings of Jesus was not a purely historical interest, but a desire to find in the words of the Master what might serve as a rule to believers for the guidance of their life. Hence may be explained the topical grouping of sayings in Matthew and Luke, especially in the former, e.g., in the tenth chapter, whose rubric might be: a directory for the mission work of the church; and in the eighteenth, which might be headed: how the members of the Christian brotherhood are to behave towards each other. The question suggests itself, Would the influence of the practical aim be confined to grouping? Would it not extend to modifications, expansions, additions, even inventions, that the words of the Master might cover all present requirements and correspond fully to present circumstances and convictions? On this topic Weizsäcker makes the following statement: "From the beginning the tradition consisted not in mere repetition, but in repetition combined with creative activity. And from the nature of the case this activity increased as time went on. Elucidations grew into text. The single saying was multiplied with the multiplication of its uses, or the words were referred to a definite case and correspondingly modified. Finally, words were inserted into the text of Jesus' sayings, especially in the form of instances of narrative, which were only meant to make His utterances more distinct."[1] This may seem to open a door to licence, but second thoughts tend to allay our fears. The aim itself supplied a check to undue freedom. Just because disciples desired to follow the Master and make His words their law, they would wish to be sure that the reported sayings gave them the thoughts of Jesus at least, if not His ipsissima verba. Then there is reason to believe that the process of fixing the tradition was substantially completed when the memory of Jesus was recent, and the men who had been with Him were at hand to guide and control the process. Weizsäcker remarks that very little of the nature of accretion originated elsewhere than in the primitive church, and that the great mass of the evangelic tradition was formed under the influence of the living tradition.[2] That is to say, the freedom of the apostolic age was controlled by knowledge and reverence. It was known what the Master had taught, and great respect was cherished for His authority. If there was no superstitious concern as to literal accuracy, there was a loyal solicitude that the meaning conveyed by words should be true to the mind of Christ.

11. The incidents of the Healing Ministry, which form the bulk of the narrative of events, are complicated with the question of miracle. Those for whom it is an axiom that a miracle is impossible are tempted to pronounce on that ministry the summary and sweeping verdict, unhistorical. This is not a scientific procedure. The question of fact should be dealt with separately on its own grounds, and the question of explicability taken up only in the second place. There are good reasons for believing that the healing ministry, miraculous or not miraculous, was a great fact in the public career of Jesus. Healing is associated with teaching in all general notices of our Lord's work. Nine acts of healing, some of them very remarkable, are reported in all the synoptical Gospels. The healing element in the ministry is so interwoven with the didactic that the former cannot be eliminated without destroying the whole story. This is frankly acknowledged by Harnack, who, if he does not doubt the reality of miracles, attaches very little apologetic value to them.[3] The occasional notices in the Gospels of contemporary opinions, impressions, and theories regarding Christ's actions speak to something extraordinary over and above the preaching and teaching.

[1] The Apostolic Age, vol. ii., p. 62.
[2] Ibid.
[3] History of Dogma, vol. i., p. 65, note 3.

Mark's graphic report of the impression produced by Christ's first appearance in the synagogue of Capernaum may be cited as an instance. "What is this? A new teaching!—with authority He commandeth even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him."[1] This is a veritable reminiscence, and it points to a double surprise created by an original style of preaching, and by an unprecedented power. Still more significant are the theories invented to explain away the power. The Pharisees accounted for it, as displayed in the cure of demoniacs, by the suggestion of an alliance with Beelzebub. Herod said: "It is John whom I beheaded risen from the dead and exercising the power of the spirit world". The one theory was malevolent, the other absurd, but the point to be noticed is the existence of the theories. Men do not theorise about nothing. There were remarkable facts urgently demanding explanation of some sort.

The healing acts of Jesus then, speaking broadly, were to begin with facts. How they are to be explained, and what they imply as to the Person of the Healer, are questions for science and theology. It is not scientific to neglect the phenomena as unworthy of notice. As little is it scientific to make the solution easy by under-statement of the facts to be explained, as, e.g., by viewing demoniacal possession as an imaginary disease. Demoniacal possession might be an imaginary explanation of certain classes of diseases, but the diseases themselves were serious enough, as serious as madness and epilepsy, which appear to have formed the physical basis of the malady.

Finally, it is not to be supposed that these healing acts, though indubitable facts, have no permanent religious value. Their use in the evidences of Christianity may belong to an antiquated type of apologetic, but in other respects their significance is perennial. Whether miraculous or not, they equally reveal the wide-hearted benevolence of Jesus. They throw a side light on His doctrine of God and of man, and especially on His conception of the ideal of life. The healing ministry was a tacit but effective protest against asceticism and the dualism on which it rests, and a proof that Jesus had no sympathy with the hard antithesis between spirit and flesh.

12. Before leaving the topic of historicity, it may be well here to refer to a line of evidence which, though not worked out, has been suggestively sketched by Professor Sanday in his Bampton Lectures on Inspiration. The thesis to be proved is "that the great mass of the narrative in the first three Gospels took its shape before the destruction of Jerusalem, i.e., within less than forty years of the events".[1] "Was there ever," asks Dr. Sanday, "an easier problem for a critic to decide whether the sayings and narratives which lie before him came from the one side of this chasm or the other?" Among the instances he cites are such as these: "If, therefore, thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and then rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee," etc. "Woe unto you, ye blind guides, which say, whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing," etc. "See thou tell no man, but go thy way, show thyself to the priest," etc. That is to say, the altar, the temple, the priesthood are still in existence. This is not decisive as to the date of our Gospels, but it is decisive as to much of the material contained in them having assumed fixed shape, either in oral or in written form, before the great crisis of Israel.

[1] Mark i. 27.

13. Historicity, be it finally noted, is not to be confounded with absolute accuracy, or perfect agreement between parallel accounts. Harmonistic is a thing of the past. It was a well-meant discipline, but it took in hand an insoluble problem, and it unduly magnified the importance of a solution, even if it had been possible. Questions as to occasions on which reported words and acts of Jesus were spoken or done, as to the connections between sayings grouped together in one Gospel, dispersed in the pages of another, as to the diverse forms of sayings in parallel reports, are for us now secondary. The broad question we ask as to the words of Jesus is: have we here, in the main, words actually spoken by Jesus, once or twice, now or then, in this connection or in that, in separate aphorisms or in connected discourse, in the form reported by this or that evangelist, or in a form not exactly reproduced by any of them, yet conveying a sense sufficiently reflected in all the versions? Is the Lord's prayer the Lord's at whatever time given to His disciples? Is the "Sermon on the Mount" made up of real utterances of Jesus, whether all spoken at one time, as Matthew's report seems to imply, or on various occasions, as we should infer from Luke's narrative? Did Jesus actually say: "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners," whether with the addition, "to repentance," as it stands in Luke, or without, as in the genuine text of the same Logia in Matthew and Mark? Did He speak the parable of the lost sheep—whether in Matthew's form or in Luke's, or in a form differing verbally from both — to disciples, to Pharisees, or perhaps to neither, but to publicans, yet conveying in some form and to some audience the great thought that there was a passion in His heart and in the heart of God for saving lost men? It is greatly to be desired that devout readers of the Gospels should be emancipated from legal bondage to the theological figment of inerrancy. Till this is done, it is impossible to enjoy in full the Gospel story, or feel its essential truth and reality.

[1] Page 283.

CHAPTER II.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MARK.

SECTION I. CONTENTS.

1. The second Gospel has no account of the birth and infancy of Jesus. The narrative opens with the prelude to the public ministry, the preaching and baptism of the prophet John; and the sequel consists of a rapid sketch of that ministry in a series of graphic tableaux from its commencement in Galilee to its tragic close in Jerusalem. This fact alone raises a presumption in favour of Mark's claim to be the earliest of the three synoptical Gospels. Other considerations pointing in the same direction are its comparative brevity and the meagreness of its account of Christ's teaching. This Gospel wears the aspect of a first sketch of the memorable career of one who had become an object of religious faith and love to the circle of readers for whose benefit it was written. As such it is entitled to precedence in an introduction to the three synoptists, though, in our detailed comments, we follow the order in which they are arranged in the New Testament. It is convenient to take Mark first for this further reason, that from its pages we can form the clearest idea of the general course of our Lord's history after He entered on His Messianic calling. In none of the three Gospels can we find a definite chronological plan, but it is possible from any one of them to form a general idea of the leading stages of the ministry, and most easily and clearly from the second.

2. The first stage was the synagogue ministry. After His baptism in the Jordan and His temptation in the wilderness, Jesus returned to Galilee and began to preach the "Gospel of the Kingdom of God".[1] The synagogue was the scene of this preaching. The first appearance of Jesus in a synagogue was in Capernaum, where He at once made a great impression both by His discourse and by the cure of a demoniac.[2] This was simply the commencement of a preaching tour in the synagogues of Galilee. Jesus made no stay in Capernaum. He left the town the day after He preached in its synagogue, very early in the morning.[1] He left so early in the day because He feared detention by the people. He left in such haste because He knew that He could preach in the synagogues only by the consent of the authorities, which might soon be withheld through sinister influence. This synagogue preaching naturally formed the first phase in Christ's work. The synagogue presented a ready opportunity of coming into contact with the people. Any man might speak there with the permission of the ruler. But he could speak only so long as he was a persona grata, and Jesus, conscious of the wide cleavage in thought and feeling between Himself and the scribes, could not but fear that He would not remain such long. It was now or never, at the outset or not at all, so far as the synagogue was concerned.

[1] Mark i. 14. [2] Mark i. 27.

3. How long this synagogue ministry lasted is not expressly indicated. A considerable period is implied in the statement: "He preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee".[2] It is not necessary to take this strictly, especially in view of the populousness of Galilee, and the multitude of its towns large and small, as indicated by Josephus.[3] But the statement must be taken in earnest so far as to recognise that Jesus had a deliberate plan for a synagogue ministry in Galilee, and that He carried it out to a considerable extent. It is not improbable that it was interrupted by the influence of the scribes, whom we find lying in wait for Him on His return from the preaching tour to Capernaum.[4]

4. With the anecdote in which the scribes figure as captious critics of Jesus a new phase in the story begins. The keynote of the first chapter is popularity; that of the next is opposition. In this juxtaposition the evangelist is not merely aiming at dramatic effect, but reflecting in his narrative a real historical sequence. The popularity and the opposition were related to each other as cause and effect. It is true that having once entered on this second topic, he groups together a series of incidents illustrating the hostile attitude of the scribes, which have a topical rather than a temporal connection, in this probably following the example of his voucher, Peter. These extend from chap. ii. 1 to chap. iii. 6, constituting the second division of the story, chap. i. 14-45 being the first. The two together set before us the two forces whose action and interaction can be traced throughout the drama, and whose resultant will be the cross: the favour of the people, the ill-will of their religious leaders.

[1] Mark i. 35. [2] Mark i. 39.

[3] Josephus gives the number of towns at 204, the smallest having 15,000 inhabitants. Vide his Vita, chap. xlv., and Bel. Jud., iii., 2, 3.

[4] Chap. ii. 1.

5. Within the second group of anecdotes illustrating the hostility of the scribes, a place is assigned to an incident which ought not to be regarded as a mere subordinate detail under that general category, but rather as pointing to another phase of our Lord's activity co-ordinate in importance with the preaching in the synagogues. I refer to the meeting with the publicans, and in connection with that the call of Levi or Matthew.[1] That action of Jesus had a decisive effect in alienating the scribes, but meantime that is not the thing to be emphasised. We have to recognise in this new movement a second stage in the ministry of Jesus. First, preaching in the synagogues to the Jews of respectable character and good religious habit; next, a mission to the practically excommunicated, non-synagogue-going, socially outcast part of the community. Mark, more than his brother evangelists, shows his sense of the importance and significance of this new departure, especially by the observation: "there were many (publicans and sinners), and they followed Him".[2] That is to say, the class was large enough to demand special attention, and they were inviting attention and awakening interest in them by the interest they on their side were beginning to take in Jesus and His work. Without doubt this mission to the publicans bulked much larger in fact than it does in the pages of the evangelists or in the thoughts of average readers of the Gospel, and it must be one of the cares of the interpreter to make it appear in its true dimensions.[3] There is nothing in the Gospels more characteristic of Jesus, or of deeper, more lasting significance as to the nature and tendency of the Christian faith.

6. The third stage in the ministry of Jesus was the formation of a disciple-circle. Of the beginnings of this movement Mark gives us a glimpse in chap. i. 16-20, where he reports the call of the four fishermen, Peter and Andrew, James and John; and in the words Jesus is reported to have spoken to the first pair of brothers there is a clear indication of a purpose to gather about Him a band of men not merely for personal service but in order to training for a high calling. Levi's call, reported in chap. ii., is another indication of the same kind. But it is in the section of the Gospel beginning at chap. iii. 7, and extending to chap. vi. 13, that the disciples properly come to the front. An intention on the part of the evangelist to give them prominence is betrayed in the pointed way in which he refers to them in iii. 7: "And Jesus with the disciples withdrew towards the sea".[1] A little further on in the same chapter we read of the retirement of Jesus to the mountain with a band of disciples, out of which He selects an inner circle of twelve.[2] And at various points in this division of the Gospel the disciple-band is referred to in a way to indicate that they are assuming a new importance to the mind of Jesus.[3]

[1] Chap. ii. 13-17. [2] Chap. ii. 15.

[3] Vide notes on this section in Matthew and in Mark.

7. This importance was due in part to dissatisfaction with the result of the general ministry among the people. Jesus had preached often, and healed many, in synagogue and highway, and had become in consequence the idol of the masses who gathered in increasing numbers from all quarters, and crowded around Him wherever He went, as we read in chap. iii. 7-12. But this popularity did not gratify Him; it rather bored Him. He did not weary in well-doing, but He was disappointed with the outcome. This disappointment found expression in the parable of the sower, which was really a critical estimate of the synagogue ministry to this sad effect: much seed sown; little fruit. From this comparatively fruitless ministry among the many, Jesus turned with yearning to the susceptible few in hope to find in them a good soil that should bring forth ripe fruit, thirty, sixty, or even an hundred fold. After a long enough time had elapsed to make it possible to form an estimate of the spiritual situation, He judged that in a disciple-circle lay His only chance of deep permanent influence. Hence He naturally sought to extricate Himself from the crowd, and to get away from collisions with unsympathetic scribes, that He might have leisure to indoctrinate the chosen band in the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven. Leisure, quiet, retirement — that more and more was His aim.

8. This desire for opportunity to perform the functions of a master is made more apparent by Mark than by the two other synoptists. He comes far short of them in his report of Christ's teaching, but he brings out much more clearly than they Christ's desire for undisturbed intercourse with the twelve, the reasons for it, and the persistent efforts of the Master to accomplish His object. It is from his pages we learn of the escapes of Jesus from the crowds and from the scribes. These escapes, as reported by Mark, take place in all directions possible for one whose work lay on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee: towards the hill behind, towards the eastern shore, towards the northern borderland. Five in all are mentioned: one to the hill;[1] two to the eastern shore, first in an eastward,[2] then in a northerly direction;[3] two to the north, first to the borders of Tyre and Sidon,[4] next to the neighbourhood of Caesarea Philippi.[5] All had the same end in view: the instruction of the disciples. It was in connection with the first that the "Sermon on the Mount," or the Teaching on the Hill, though not mentioned by Mark, was doubtless communicated. The second and third attempts, the flights across the lake, were unsuccessful, being frustrated in the first case by an accidental meeting with a demoniac, and in the second by the determination of the multitude not to let Jesus get away from them. Therefore, to make sure, the Master had to retire with His disciples to the northern limits of the land, and even beyond them, into Gentile territory, that there He might, undisturbed, talk to His disciples about the crisis that He now clearly perceived to be approaching.

[1] μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν stands before ἀνεχώρησεν in the best texts.

[2] Chap. iii. 13.

[3] Vide iii. 31-35; iv. 10-25; vi. 7-13.

9. These last flights of Jesus take us on to a point in the story considerably in advance of the end of the third section, chap. vi. 13. The material lying between this place and chap. viii. 27 shows us the progress of the drama under the ever-intensifying influence of the two great forces, popularity and hostility. The multitude grows ever larger till it reaches the dimensions of 5000,[6] and the enmity of the scribes becomes ever more acute as the divergence of the ways of Jesus from theirs becomes increasingly manifest, and His abhorrence of their doctrines and spirit receives more unreserved expression.[7] After the encounter with the scribes occasioned by the neglect of the disciple-circle to comply with Rabbinical customs in the matter of ceremonial ablutions, Jesus felt that it was a mere matter of time when the enmity of His foes would culminate in an effort to compass His death. What He had now to do therefore was to prepare Himself and His disciples for the end. Accordingly, Mark reports that after that incident Jesus went thence into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, desiring that no one should know.[8] He could not be hid even there, and so to make sure of privacy He seems to have made a wide excursion into heathen territory, through Tyre and Sidon, possibly across the mountains towards Damascus, and so through Decapolis back to Galilee.[1] Then followed, after an interval, the excursion to Caesarea Philippi, for ever memorable as the occasion on which Peter confessed his belief that his Master was the Christ, and the Master began to tell His disciples that He was destined ere long to suffer death at the hands of the scribes.[2]

[1] Chap. iii. 13. [2] Chap. iv. 35. [3] Chap. vi. 30. [4] Chap. vii. 24.
[5] Chap. viii. 27. [6] Chap. vi. 44. [7] Chap. vii. 1-23. [8] Chap. vii. 24.

10. From that point onwards Mark relates the last scenes in Galilee, the departure to the south, with the incidents on the way, the entry into Jerusalem, with the stirring incidents of the Passion Week, and, finally, the tragic story of the crucifixion. Throughout this later part of his narrative it is evident that the one great theme of conversation between Jesus and His disciples was the cross: His cross and theirs, the necessity of self-sacrifice for all the faithful, the rewards of those who loyally bear their cross, and the penalties appointed for those whose ruling spirit is ambition.[3]

Section II. Characteristics.

1. The outstanding characteristic of Mark is realism. I have in view here, not the graphic, descriptive, literary style which is generally ascribed to Mark, but the unreserved manner in which he presents the person and character of Jesus and of the disciples. He states facts as they were, when one might be tempted not to state them at all, or to exhibit them in a subdued light. He describes from the life, avoiding toning down, reticence, generalised expression, or euphemistic circumlocution. In this respect there is a great contrast between the second Gospel and the third, and it is only when we have made ourselves acquainted with the peculiarities of the two Gospels that we are able fully to appreciate those of either. The difference is this. Luke's whole style of presentation is manifestly influenced by the present position of Jesus and the disciples: Jesus the risen and exalted Lord, the disciples Apostles. For Mark Jesus is the Jesus of history, and the disciples are simply disciples. Luke writes from the view-point of reverential faith, Mark from that of loving vivid recollection. It is impossible by rapid citation of instances to give an adequate idea of these distinguishing features; all that can be done is to refer to a few examples in explanation of what I mean. In Mark's pages, Jesus before He begins His public career is a carpenter.[4] At the temptation He is driven by the Spirit

[1] Chap. vii. 31.
[2] Chap. viii. 27-33.
[3] Vide chap. ix. 33-50; x. 23-45.
[4] Chap. vi. 3.

into the wilderness.[1] His first appearance in the synagogue of Capernaum is so remarkable that people say to each other: "What is this? A new teaching! With authority commandeth He even unclean spirits, and they obey Him."[2] Early the following morning He makes what has the aspect of an unaccountable and undignified flight from Capernaum.[3] By-and-by when He is fully engrossed in His teaching and healing ministries His relatives come to rescue Him from His enthusiasm, deeming Him beside Himself.[4] On the day of the parable-discourse from the boat He makes another flight, He saying to the disciples: Let us go over to the other side; they promptly obeying orders suddenly given and carrying Him off from the crowd, even as He was.[5] Towards the end, on the ascent to Jerusalem, Jesus goes before the disciples, and His manner is such that those who follow are amazed.[6] When He sends for the colt on which He rides into the Holy City, He bids the two disciples promise to the owner that the colt will be returned when He has had His use of it.[7]

2. The realism of Mark makes for its historicity. It is a guarantee of first-hand reports, such as one might expect from Peter. Peter reverences his risen Lord as much as Luke or any other man. But he is one of the men who have been with Jesus, and he speaks from indelible impressions made on his eye and ear, while Luke reports at second-hand from written accounts for the most part. The same realism is a strong argument in favour of Mark's priority. It speaks to an early date before the feeling of decorum had become controlling as it is seen to be in Luke's Gospel. Mark is the archaic Gospel, written under the inspiration not of prophecy like Matthew, or of present reverence like Luke, but of fondly cherished past memories. In it we get nearest to the true human personality of Jesus in all its originality and power, and as coloured by the time and the place.[8] And the character of Jesus loses nothing by the realistic presentation. Nothing is told that needed to be hid. The homeliest facts reported by the evangelist only increase our interest and our admiration. One who desires to see the Jesus of history truly should con well the pages of Mark first, then pass on to Matthew and Luke.

3. By comparison with the companion Gospels Mark lacks a conspicuous didactic aim. The purpose of the writer seems to be

[1] Chap. i. 12. [2] Chap. i. 27. [3] Chap. i. 35-38. [4] Chap. iii. 21. [5] Chap. iv. 35. [6] Chap. x. 32. [7] Chap. xi. 3.
[8] Vide Holtzmann, Hand-Commentar, p. 7.

mainly just to tell what he knows about Jesus. Some have tried to show that this Gospel is an endeavour to read into the evangelic history the ideas of Paulinism.[1] Others have maintained that the purpose of the writer is to observe a studied, calculated neutrality between Paulinism and Judaism.[2] These opposite views may be left to destroy each other. Others, again, have found in the book a contribution towards establishing Christians in the faith that Jesus was the Messiah, when that faith was tried by a delayed second coming.[3] A didactic programme has been supposed to be hinted at in the opening words: The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and attempts have been made to show that in the sequel this programme is steadily kept in view. I am by no means anxious to negative these last suggestions; all I say is that the didactic purpose is not prominent. The writer seems to say, not: "These are written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God," but more simply: "These are written that ye may know Jesus". This also makes for the historicity and early date of the archaic Gospel.

4. Among the more obvious characteristics of Mark's literary style are the use of dual phrases in descriptive passages, a liking for diminutives, occasional Latinisms, the frequent employment of εὐθὺς in narrative, and of the historical present, both tending to vividness, and giving the impression of an eye-witness. The rough vigour and crude grammar frequently noticeable in Mark's reports strengthen this impression. The style is colloquial rather than literary. To this in part is due the unsatisfactory state of the text. Mark's roughness and originality were too much for the scribes. They could not rest till they had smoothed down everything to commonplace. Harmonising propensities also are responsible for the multiplicity of variants, the less important Gospel being forced into conformity with the more important.

SECTION III. AUTHOR, DESTINATION, DATE.

1. The Gospel itself contains no indication as to who wrote it. That the writer was one bearing the name of Mark rests solely on an ecclesiastical tradition whose reliableness there has been no disposition to question. The Mark referred to has been from the earliest times till now identified with the Mark named in Acts xii. 12, as the son of a Mary; in xiii. 5, 13, as the attendant of Paul and Barnabas on their mission journey; and in xv. 39, as the travelling companion of Barnabas alone after he had separated from Paul; also, in Colossians iv. 10, as the cousin (ἀνεψιός) of Barnabas; and, finally, in 2 Timothy iv. 11, and Philemon 24, as rendering useful services to Paul.

[1] So Pfleiderer in his Urchristenthum.

[2] So Dr. Baur and other members of the Tübingen school.

[3] So Dr. Bernhard Weiss, vide Das Marcus Evangelium, Einleitung, p. 23.

2. The explanations of Jewish customs, e.g., ceremonial washings (chap. vii. 3-4), and words such as Talitha cumi, and Ephphatha, and the technical term "common" or "unclean" (v. 41, vii. 34, vii. 2) point to non-Jewish readers, and the use of Latinisms is most naturally accounted for by the supposition that the book was written among and for Roman Christians.

3. The dates of the Gospels generally have been a subject of much controversy, and the endless diversity of opinion means that the whole matter belongs largely to the region of conjecture. The very late dates assigned to these writings by the Tübingen school are now generally abandoned. By many competent critics the Synoptical Gospels are placed well within the first century, say, between the years 60 and 80. To condescend upon a precise year is impossible. One cannot even determine with absolute confidence whether the earliest of them, i.e., Mark, was written before or after the destruction of Jerusalem. The point of practical importance is not the date at which a Gospel was composed, but the historical value of its materials. In this respect the claims of Mark, as we have seen, stand high.[1]

[1] On the Appendix of Mark, chap. xvi. 9-20, vide Notes ad loc.

CHAPTER III.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MATTHEW.

SECTION I. CONTENTS.

1. As has been stated in chap. i., the bulk of Mark's narrative is substantially taken up into Matthew's longer story. But to that narrative of the archaic Gospel is added much new material, consisting mainly of the teaching of our Lord. This teaching as reproduced in the first Gospel consists not of short pregnant sentences such as Mark has preserved, but of connected discourses of considerable length — the longest and the most important being that familiarly known as the "Sermon on the Mount". Whether this connected character is due to the Teacher or to the evangelist has been disputed, the bias of critical opinion being strongly in favour of the latter alternative. Extreme views on either side are to be avoided. That Jesus uttered only short pithy sayings is a gratuitous assumption. In connection with deliberate efforts to instruct the disciples, the presumption is in favour of continuous discourse. On the other hand, in some of the discourses reported in Matthew, e.g., that in chap. x. on apostolic duties and tribulations, agglomeration is apparent. To what Jesus said to the twelve in sending them forth on their Galilean mission the evangelist, naturally and not inappropriately, adds weighty words which bear on the more momentous mission of the apostles as the propagandists in the wide world of the Christian faith. A similar instance of editorial combination of kindred matter only topically connected may be found in the parabolic discourse. Matthew's seven parables were doubtless all spoken by Jesus, but not that day. The parables spoken from the boat were probably all of one type, presenting together a critical review of Christ's past ministry among the people. On the other hand, I am inclined to think that the contents of chaps. xviii. and xxiii. for the most part belong to the respective occasions with which they are connected in the Gospel. The call for careful admonition to the twelve at Capernaum was urgent, and the Master would have much to say to His offending disciples. Then nothing could be more fitting than that Jesus should at the close of His life deliver a final and full testimony against the spurious sanctity which He had often criticised in a fragmentary way, and which was now at last to cause His death.

2. The main interest of the question now under consideration revolves around the "Sermon on the Mount". That a discourse of some length was delivered on the mountain Luke's report proves. Luke, even in this case, breaks up much of Matthew's connected matter into short separate utterances, but yet he agrees with Matthew in ascribing to Jesus something like an oration. Though much abbreviated, his report of the discourse is still a discourse. The only question is which of the two comes nearer the original in length and contents. Now, the feeling is a very natural one that Jesus could hardly have spoken so long a discourse as Matthew puts into His mouth at one time, and to a popular audience. But two questions have to be asked here. Did Jesus address a popular audience? Did He speak all at one time in the sense of a continuous discourse of one hour or two hours' length? I am strongly inclined to answer both questions in the negative. Jesus addressed Himself to disciples; His discourse was teaching, not popular preaching—Didache, not Kerygma. And the time occupied in communicating that teaching was probably a week rather than an hour. Matthew's report, in chaps. v.-vii., in that case will have to be viewed as a summary of what the Great Teacher said to His disciples in a leisurely way on sundry topics relating to the Kingdom of Heaven, during a season of retreat on the summit of the hills to the west of the Galilean Lake. Instead of calling it the Sermon on the Mount, we should more properly designate it the Teaching on the Hill.[1]

3. The insertion of great masses of didactic matter into the framework of Mark's narrative weakens our sense of the progress of the history in reading Matthew. The didactic interest overshadowed the historical in the evangelist's own mind, with the result that his story does not present the aspect of a life-drama steadily moving on, but rather that of a collection of discourses furnished with slight historical introductions. The "Sermon on the Mount" comes upon us before we are prepared for it. To appreciate it fully we must realise that before it was spoken Jesus had preached in many synagogues and to many street crowds, and that a long enough time had elapsed for the Preacher to feel that His ministry had been to a large extent fruitless, and that to establish and perpetuate His influence He must now devote Himself to the careful instruction of a disciple-circle. The miscellaneousness of the parable-collection in chap. xiii. hides from us the fact that that day Jesus was sitting in judgment on His own past ministry and pronouncing on it the verdict: Much seed, little fruit; so justifying Himself for attending henceforth less to the many and more to the few.

[1] For further remarks on this point vide Notes on the Sermon at the beginning and throughout.

4. While the connections of Matthew's discourses are topical rather than temporal, and the sense of progress in his narrative is comparatively weak, there is a manifest correspondence between the discourses he imputes to Jesus and the whole circumstances of the times in which Jesus lived. This remark applies especially to the criticism of Pharisaism, which occupies so prominent a place in the first Gospel, as compared, e.g., with the third, in which that element retires comparatively into the background. Keen conflict between our Lord and the Scribes and Pharisees was inevitable, and the amount of controversial material in the first Gospel speaks strongly in favour of its fidelity to fact in this part of its record, even as the unique quality of the anti-Pharisaic sayings ascribed to Jesus bears witness to their originality. In the Teaching on the Hill the references to Scribism and Pharisaism are, as was fitting, the criticised parties not being present, didactic rather than controversial, but there can be little doubt that Jesus would take occasion there to indicate the difference between His religious ideas and those in vogue at the time. Here it is not Matthew that adds, but Luke that omits.

5. It has been maintained that Matthew's account of our Lord's teaching is not uniform in character—is, indeed, so discrepant as to suggest different hands writing in diverse interests and with conflicting theological attitudes. D'Eichthal, e.g., is of opinion that the primitive Matthew was the earliest written Gospel, and that its contents were much the same as those found in canonical Mark; but that, through being the earliest, it had exceptional authority, and was therefore liable to be added to with a view to furnishing it with support in the teaching of Christ for developing Christianity.[1] D'Eichthal counts as many as forty-five "Annexes," gradually introduced in this way, including the history of the infancy, many parables, numerous passages bearing on the Person of Christ, the Church, the Resurrection, the Second Advent, etc. From this questionable honour of becoming "a place of deposit" for new material, as Dr. Estlin Carpenter calls it,[1] Mark, according to D'Eichthal, was protected by its greater obscurity and inferior authority; hence its modest dimensions, and superior reliableness in point of fidelity to actual historic truth.

[1] Les Evangiles.

This theory is plausible, and we are not entitled to say à priori that it has no foundation in fact. Additions to the Gospels might creep in before they became canonical, as they crept in afterwards through the agency of copyists. The sayings about the indestructibility of the law (v. 17-19) and the founding of the Church (xvi. 18, 19) might possibly be examples in point. But possibility is one thing, probability another. To prove diversity of hand or successive deposits of evangelic tradition by men living at different times, and acting in the interest of distinct or even opposing tendencies, it is not enough to point to apparently conflicting elements and exclaim: "Behold a Gospel of contradictions".[2] On this topic I may refer readers to what has been already stated in discussing the subject of the historicity of the Gospels. And I may here add that it would not be difficult to conceive a situation for which the Gospel might have been written by one man, as it now stands. Dr. Weiss, indeed, has successfully done this in his work on the Gospel of Matthew and its parallels in Luke. He conceives the Gospel substantially as we have it to have been written shortly after the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish State, when the faith of Jewish Christians in the Messiahship of Jesus would be sorely shaken by the events: the promised Messianic Kingdom passing away irretrievably from Israel and taking up its abode among Gentiles. The Gospel that was to meet this situation would have to show that Jesus was indeed the Messianic King, in whose history many prophetic oracles found their fulfilment; that He did His utmost to found the kingdom in Israel, but was frustrated by the unbelief of the people, and especially of its rulers; that, therefore, the kingdom was driven forth from Jewish soil, and was now to be found mainly in the Gentile Church, and there had been left to Israel only an inheritance of woe; that though Jesus had predicted this doom He nevertheless loved His people, had loyally and lovingly sought her good, had spoken with reverence of her God-given law (while treating with disrespect Rabbinical traditions), and honoured it by personal observance. This hypothesis fairly meets the requirements of the case. It covers the phenomena of the Gospel, and it is compatible with unity of plan and authorship.[1]

[1] The First Three Gospels, p. 370.

[2] Dr. Estlin Carpenter, in the above work, p. 363, remarks: "Truly has the first Gospel been called a 'Gospel of contradictions'".

SECTION II. CHARACTERISTICS.

1. The most outstanding characteristic of the first Gospel is that it paints the life-image of Jesus in prophetic colours. While in Mark Jesus is presented realistically as a man, in Matthew He is presented as the Christ, verified as such by the applicability of many prophetic oracles to the details of His childhood, His public ministry, and His last sufferings.

2. If the realism of Mark makes for the historicity of this Gospel, the prophetic colouring so conspicuous in Matthew need not detract from the historicity of its accounts. This feature may be due in part to the personal idiosyncrasy of the writer and in part to his didactic aim. He may have set himself to verify the thesis, Jesus the Christ, for his own satisfaction, or it may have been necessary that he should do so in order to strengthen the faith of his first readers. In either case the presumption is that the operation he was engaged in consisted in discovering prophetic texts to answer facts ready to his hand, not in first making a collection of texts and then inventing facts corresponding to them. The facts suggested the texts, the texts did not create the facts, though in some instances they might influence the mode of stating facts. In this connection it is important to note that the evangelist applies his prophetic method to the whole of his material, including that which is common to him with Mark. He has his prophetic oracles ready to be attached as labels to events which Mark reports simply as matters of fact. Thus Mark's dry statement, "they went into Capernaum,"[2] referring to Jesus and His followers proceeding northwards from the scene of the baptism, in Matthew's hands assumes the character of a solemn announcement of an epoch-making event, whereby an ancient oracle concerning the appearing of a great light in Galilee of the Gentiles received its fulfilment.[3] Again, Mark's matter-of-fact report of the extensive healing function in Capernaum on the Sabbath evening is in Matthew adorned with a beautiful citation from Isaiah's famous oracle concerning the suffering servant of Jehovah.[1] Once more, to Mark's simple statement that Jesus withdrew Himself to the sea after the collision with the Pharisees, occasioned by the healing on a Sabbath of the man with a withered hand, the first evangelist attaches a fine prophetic picture, as if to show readers the true Jesus as opposed to the Jesus of Pharisaic imagination.[2] From these instances we see his method. He is not inventing history, but enriching history with prophetic emblazonments for apologetic purposes, or for increase of edification. Such is the fact, we observe, when we have it in our power to control his statements by comparison with Mark's; such we may assume to be the fact when we have not that in our power, as, e.g., in the narrative relating to the birth and infancy of Jesus, in which prophetic citations are unusually abundant. The question as to the historicity of that narrative has its own peculiar difficulties, into which I do not here enter. The point I wish to make is that the numerous prophetic references cast no additional shadow of doubt on its historicity. Here too the evangelist is simply attaching prophetic oracles to what he regards as historic data. If invention has been at work it has not been in his imagination. This is manifest even from the very weakness of some of the citations, such as "Out of Egypt have I called my Son," "Rachel weeping for her children," and "He shall be called a Nazarene". Who could ever have thought of these unless there had been traditional data accepted by the Christian community (and by the writer of the Gospel) as facts? The last citation is especially far-fetched. It is impossible to say whence it is taken; it could never have entered into the mind of any one unless the fact of the settlement in Nazareth had been there to begin with, creating a desire to find for it also, if at all possible, some prophetic anticipation.

[1] Vide Weiss, Das Matthäus-Evangelium und seine Lucas-parallelen, p. 39.

[2] Mark i. 21.

[3] Matt. iv. 12-17.

These prophetic passages served their purpose in the apologetic of the apostolic age. For us now their value is not apologetic, except indeed in a way not contemplated by the evangelist. Their occasional weakness as proofs of the Messiahship of Jesus can be utilised in the manner above hinted at in support of the historicity of the evangelic tradition. But the chief permanent value of these citations lies in the light they throw on the evangelist's own conception of Jesus. We see from them that he thought of Jesus as the Light of Galilee, the sympathetic Bearer of humanity's heavy burden, the Beloved of God, the Peacemaker, the Friend of weakness, the Man who had it in Him by gifts and graces to perform a Christ's part for all the world. Truly a noble conception, which lends perennial interest to the texts in which it is embodied.

[1] Matt. viii. 17. [2] Matt. xii. 15-21. Cf. Mark iii. 7.

3. In the foregoing remarks I have anticipated to a certain extent what relates to the question of didactic aim. That the first Gospel has such an aim is obvious from the careful manner in which the prophetic argument is elaborated. The purpose is to confirm Jewish Christians in the faith that Jesus is the Christ. The purpose is revealed in the very first sentence and in the genealogy to which it forms a preface. "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham." The Son of David first, because on that hangs the Messianic claim; the Son of Abraham likewise, because that makes Him a Jew, a fellow-countryman of those for whose benefit the Gospel is written. The genealogy is the first contribution to the apologetic argument. The logic of it is this: "The Psalms and Prophets predict the coming of a great Messianic King who shall be a descendant of the house of David; this genealogy shows that Jesus possessed that qualification for Messiahship. He is the rod out of the stem of Jesse." Whoever compiled the genealogy did it under the impression that physical descent from David was indispensable to Jesus being the Christ. But it does not follow that the genealogy was manufactured to serve that purpose. The descent from David might be a well-known fact utilised for an apologetic aim. For us, though a fact, it is of no vital consequence. Our faith that Jesus is the Christ does not rest on any such external ground, but on spiritual fitness to be the world's Saviour. We reverse the logic of the Jewish Church. They reasoned: because David's Son, therefore the Christ. We reason: because the Christ, therefore David's Son at least in spirit.[1]

4. In speaking of the literary characteristics of Matthew it is necessary to keep in mind that some of these may come from the Logia of the apostle Matthew, and that others may be due to the evangelist. Critics ascribe to the apostolic source certain phrases of frequent recurrence, such as καὶ ἰδού, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὁ πατὴρ ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Among the features of the evangelist's own style they recognise the frequent use of such words as τότε, λέγων, προσελθών, ὄχλοι, ἀποκριθείς, ἀναχωρεῖν, λεγόμενος, and such phrases as τί σοι δοκεῖ, συμβούλιον λαμβάνειν, κατ' ὄναρ, ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ.[2] By comparison with Mark, the style of this Gospel is smooth and correct.

[1] Vide notes on Matt. i. [2] Vide Weiss, Matthäus-Evangelium, pp. 23-4.

Section III. Author, Destination, Date.

1. If the views of modern critics as to the relation of the first Canonical Gospel to the Logia, compiled by the apostle Matthew, be well founded, then that apostle was not its author. Who the evangelist was is unknown. That he was a Jew is highly probable, that he was a Palestinian Jew has been generally assumed; but Weiss calls this in question. That he wrote in Greek is held to be proved by the use which he makes of the Septuagint in his citations of Old Testament prophecy, and by traces of dependence on the Greek Gospel of Mark. But the view that our Greek Gospel of Matthew is a translation by some unknown hand from a book with the same contents in the Hebrew tongue still has its advocates, among whom may be mentioned Schanz, of Tübingen.[1]

2. The destination of the Gospel was in all probability to a community of Jewish Christians, whose faith it was designed to strengthen. How it was fitted to serve this end has been indicated in Section I. § 5.

3. The probable date is shortly after the destruction of the Jewish State. Some things have been supposed to imply a much later date, e.g., the commission to the disciples in chapter xxviii. 18, with its explicit Trinity, its pronounced universalism, and its doctrine of a spiritual presence. On these points the reader is referred to the commentary.

[1] Vide his Commentar über das Evangelium des heiligen Matthaus, Einleitung.

CHAPTER IV.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO LUKE.

SECTION I. THE CONTENTS.

1. Luke's Gospel includes much of the narrative of Mark and large portions of the didactic matter contained in Matthew. There are numerous omissions in both departments, but on the other hand also considerable additions, especially in the didactic element. The third evangelist has greatly enriched the treasure of the parables, for it is in this important division of our Lord's teaching that his peculiar contribution chiefly lies. The amount of new matter suffices to raise the question as to its source. It can hardly be thought that the author of the first Gospel would have omitted so much valuable material, had it lain before his eye in the Logia. The hypothesis of a third source, therefore, readily suggests itself — a collection of reminiscences distinct from Mark and the book of Logia, whence Luke drew such beautiful parables as the Good Samaritan, the Selfish Neighbour and the Unjust Judge, the Prodigal Son, the Unjust Steward, Lazarus and Dives, and the Pharisee and Publican. The chapters on the infancy and on the resurrection, so entirely different from the corresponding chapters in Matthew, might suggest a fourth source, unless we suppose that the third included these.

2. The distribution of the material in this Gospel arrests attention. In the early part of the history, from chapters iv. 31 to vi. 16, the author follows pretty closely in the footsteps of Mark. Then comes in a digression, extending from vi. 17 to viii. 3, containing a version of the Sermon on the Mount, the stories of the Centurion and the Widow of Nain, the Message of the Baptist with relative discourse, and the woman in Simon's house. Thereafter Luke's narrative again flows in Mark's channel from the parable of the Sower onwards to the end of the Galilean ministry, as reported in the second Gospel (Mark iv. 1 to ix. 50. Luke viii. 4 to ix. 50), only that the whole group of incidents contained in Mark vi. 45 to viii. 26 is omitted in Luke. Then at ix. 51 begins another longer digression, extending from that point to xviii. 14, consisting mainly of didactic matter, and containing the larger number of Luke's peculiar contributions to the evangelic tradition. Thereafter our author joins the company of Mark once more, and keeps beside him to the end of the Passion history.[1]

3. This lengthy insertion destroys the sense of progress in the story. The stream widens out into a lake, within which any movement perceptible is rather circular than rectilinear. It is a dogmatic section, and any indications of time and place it contains are of little value for determining sequence, or pointing out the successive stages of the journey towards Jerusalem mentioned in ix. 51. It may be affirmed, indeed, that throughout this Gospel the interest in historic sequence or in the causal connection of events is weak. Sometimes, as in the incident of Christ's appearance in the synagogue of Nazareth, the author, consciously and apparently with deliberate intention, departs from the chronological order.[2] Whatever, therefore, he meant by καθεξῆς in his preface, he cannot have intended to say that he had made it a leading aim to arrange his material as far as possible in the true order of events. Still less can it have been his purpose so to set forth his story that it should appear a historic drama in which all events prepare for and steadily lead up to the final catastrophe. When at ix. 22 we find Jesus announcing for the first time that "the Son of Man must suffer many things," it takes us by surprise. No reason has appeared in the previous narrative why it should come to that. It has indeed been made clear by sundry indications—at chapter v. 21; v. 30, 33; vi. 7-11; vii. 34, 50—that there was not a good understanding between Jesus and the Scribes and Pharisees; but from Luke's narrative by itself we could not have gathered that matters were so serious. Two important omissions and one transposition are largely responsible for this. Luke leaves out the collision between Jesus and the Pharisees in reference to the washing of hands (Mark vii. 1-23. Matt. xv. 1-20), and the demand for a sign (Mark viii. 11. Matt. xvi. 1); he throws the blasphemous insinuation of a league with Beelzebub into chapter xi., beyond the point at which he introduces the first announcement of the Passion. Therefore, the necessity (δεῖ) of that tragic issue is not apparent in the sense that it is the inevitable result of causes which have been shown to be in operation. For Luke the δεῖ refers exclusively to the prophetic oracles which predicted Messiah's sufferings. Jesus must die if these oracles are to be fulfilled. And for him it is a matter of course, and so he treats it in his narrative. The announcement of the Passion is not brought in as a new departure in Christ's communication with His disciples, as in the companion narratives, with indication of the place, and solemn introductory phrase: "He began to teach them". It is reported in a quite casual way, as if it possessed no particular importance. In connection with this it may be noted that Luke gives a very defective report of those words of our Lord concerning His death which may be said to contain the germs of a theory as to its significance. For particulars readers are referred to the notes.

[1] In the main, that is to say, for Luke's Passion history contains a number of peculiar elements.

[2] Chap. iv. 16-30; vide v. 23.

Section II. Characteristics.

1. One very marked feature of this Gospel is what, for want of a better word, may be called the idealisation of the characters of Jesus and the disciples. These are contemplated not in the light of memory, as in Mark, but through the brightly coloured medium of faith. The evangelist does not forget that the Personages of whom he writes are now the Risen Lord, and the Apostles of the Church. Jesus appears with an aureole round His head, and the faults of the disciples are very tenderly handled. The truth of this statement can be verified only by a detailed study of the Gospel, and readers will find indications of proof at appropriate places in the notes. It applies equally to the Master and to His disciples, though Von Soden, in the article already referred to, states that the tendency in question appears mainly in the presentation of the conduct of the disciples, drawing from the supposed fact the precarious inference that the Apostolic Church cared little or nothing for the earthly history of Jesus.[1] The delicate treatment of the disciples is certainly very apparent. Luke, as Schanz remarks, ever spares the twelve; especially Peter. The stern word, "Get thee behind me," is not in this Gospel. The narrative of the denial is an interesting subject of study in this connection. But the whole body of the disciples are treated with equal consideration. Their faults —ignorance, weak faith, mutual rivalries—are acknowledged, yet touched with sparing hand. Some narratives in which these faults appear very obtrusively, e.g., the conversation about the leaven of the Pharisees, the ambitious request of James and John, and the anointing in Bethany, are omitted, as is also the flight of all the disciples at the apprehension of their Master. The weak faith of the disciples is very mildly characterised. "Where is your faith?" asks Jesus in the storm on the lake, in Luke's version of the story, instead of uttering the reproachful word: "Why are ye cowardly? Have ye not yet faith?" Their failure to watch in the garden of Gethsemane is apologetically described as sleeping for sorrow. In his portraiture of the Lord Jesus the evangelist gives prominence to the attributes of power, benevolence, and saintliness. The pictorial effect is brought out by omission, emphasis, and understatement. Among the omissions are the realistic word about that which defileth, about "dogs" in the story of the woman of Canaan which is wholly wanting, and the awful cry on the Cross: "My God, my God!" Among the things emphasised are those features in acts of healing which show the greatness of Christ's might and of the benefit conferred. Peter's mother-in-law suffers from a great fever; and the leper is full of leprosy. The hand restored on the Sabbath is the right hand, the centurion's servant is one dear to him, the son of the widow of Nain is an only son, the daughter of Jairus an only daughter, the epileptic boy at the hill of Transfiguration an only child. The holiness of Jesus is made conspicuous by the prominence given to prayer in connection with critical occasions, and by understatement where the incidents related might to ill-instructed minds seem to compromise that essential characteristic. Luke's narratives of the cleansing of the temple and the agony in Gethsemane may be referred to as striking illustrative instances of the latter. To the same category may be referred the treatment by Luke of the anti-Pharisaic element in Christ's teaching. Much is omitted, and what is retained is softened by being given, much of it, not as spoken about, but as spoken to, Pharisees by Jesus as a guest in their houses.[1]

[1] Vide Theologische Abhandlungen, p. 138.

2. The influence of the Christian consciousness of the time in which he wrote is traceable not only in Luke's presentation of the characters of Jesus and His disciples, but in his account of Christ's teaching. He seems to have in view throughout the use of the Lord's words for present guidance. Weizsäcker has endeavoured to analyse the didactic element in the third Gospel into doctrinal pieces bearing on definite religious questions and interests of the primitive Church.[1] This may be carried too far, but the idea is not altogether baseless. In this Gospel the so-called "Sermon on the Mount" is really a Sermon (Kerygma not Didache) delivered to a Christian congregation with all the local and temporary matter eliminated and only the universal and perennial retained. The same adaptation to present and general use is apparent in the words, καθ' ἡμέραν, added to the law of cross-bearing (ix. 23).

[1] Luke vii. 36-50; xi. 37-52; xiv. 1-24.

3. The question may be asked whether this adaptation of the matter of the evangelic tradition to present conceptions and needs is to be set down to the account of Luke as editor, or is to be regarded as already existing in the documents he used. On this point there may be room for difference of opinion. J. Weiss in his commentary on Luke (Meyer, eighth edition) inclines to the latter alternative. Thus, in reference to Luke's mild version of Peter's denial, he remarks: "A monstrous minimising of the offence if Luke had Mark's account before him"; and he accordingly thinks he had not, but used instead a Jewish Christian source, giving a mitigated account of Peter's sin. Of such a source he finds traces throughout Luke's Gospel, following in the footsteps of Dr. Paul Feine, who had previously endeavoured to establish the existence of a precanonical Luke, i.e., a first attempt to work up into a single volume the evangelic traditions in Mark, the Logia, and other sources, after the manner of the third Gospel.[2] This may be a perfectly legitimate hypothesis for solving certain literary problems connected with this Gospel, and the argument by which Feine seeks to establish it is entitled on its merits to serious consideration. But I hardly think it suffices to account for all the traces of editorial discretion in Luke's Gospel. It does not matter what documents Luke used; he exercised his own judgment in using them. If he did not, his relation to the work of redacting the memoirs of Jesus becomes so colourless that one fails to see what occasion there was for that imposing prefatory announcement in the opening sentence. A primitive Luke was ready to his hand, and he did not even contribute to it the colour of his own religious personality. Intention, bias, purpose to utilise the material for edification of believers were all there before he began. He did what? Added, perhaps, a few anecdotes and sayings gleaned from other sources, oral or written!

[1] Vide his Untersuchungen über die Evangelischen Geschichte, and his Apostolic Age, vol. ii.

[2] Eine vorkanonische Überlieferung des Lukas in Evangelium und Apostelgeschichte, 1891.

4. Notwithstanding this pervading regard to what may be comprehensively called edification, the author of the third Gospel cannot justly be charged with indifference to historic truth. He professes in his preface to have in view acribeia, and the profession is to be taken in earnest. But he is writing not as a mere chronicler, but as one seeking to promote the religious welfare of those for whom he writes, and so must strive to combine accuracy, fidelity to fact, with practical utility. The task is a delicate one, and execution without error of judgment not easy. Even where mistakes are made, they are not to be confounded with bad faith. Nor should it be forgotten that Luke's peculiarities can be utilised for the apologetic purpose of establishing the general credibility of the evangelic tradition. Luke omits much. But it does not follow that he did not know. He may omit intentionally what he knows but does not care to report. Luke often understates. What a writer tones down he is tempted to omit. By simply understating, instead of omitting, he becomes a reluctant and therefore reliable witness to the historicity of the matter so dealt with. Luke often states strongly. Either he adds particulars from fuller information or he exaggerates for a purpose. Even in the latter case he witnesses to the truth of the basal narrative. A writer who has ideas to embody is tempted to invent when he cannot find what will suit his purpose. Luke did not invent but at most touched up stories given to his hand in trustworthy traditions.

5. The author of the third Gospel avowedly had a didactic aim. He wrote, so it appears from the preface, to confirm in the faith a friend called "most excellent (κράτιστε) Theophilus," expecting probably that the book would ultimately be useful for a wider circle. But there is no trace of a dominant theological or controversial aim. The writer, e.g., is not a Paulinist in the controversial sense of the word. He is doubtless in sympathy with Christian universalism, as appears from his finishing the quotation from Isaiah beginning with "The voice of one crying in the wilderness," and ending with, "All flesh shall see the salvation of God" (iii. 6). Yet, in other places, e.g., in the history of the infancy, the salvation brought by Jesus is conceived of as belonging to Israel, the chosen people (τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ, i. 68; cf. ii. 10; vii. 16; xiii. 16; xix. 9). The author is not even Paulinist in a theological sense, as the absence from his pages of all words of Jesus bearing on a theory of atonement, already remarked on, sufficiently proves. He appears to be an eclectic, rather than a man whose mind is dominated by a great ruling idea. Distinct, if not conflicting, tendencies or religious types find houseroom in his pages: Pauline universalism, Jewish particularism, Ebionitic social ideals, the blessedness of poverty, the praise of almsgiving. Geniality, kindliness of temper, is the personal characteristic of the evangelist. And if there is one thing more than another he desires to inculcate on his readers it is the graciousness of Christ. "Words of grace" (iv. 22) is his comprehensive title for the utterances of Jesus, and his aim from first to last is to show the Saviour as the friend of the sinful and the social outcast, and even of those who suffer justly for their crimes (vii. 36-50; xix. 1-10; xxiii. 39-43).

6. The literary aspect of this Gospel is a complex phenomenon. At times, especially in the preface, one gets the impression of a writer having at his command a knowledge of Greek possible only for one to whom it was his native tongue, an expert at once in the vocabulary and the grammatical structure of that language. But far oftener the impression is that of a Jew thinking in Hebrew and reflecting Hebrew idiom in phrase and construction. Hebraisms abound, especially in the first two chapters. Two explanations are possible: That the author was really a Jew, that his natural style was Hebrew-Greek, in which case it would have to be shown that the preface was no such marvellous piece of classicism after all; or that he was a Gentile well versed in Greek, but somewhat slavish in his copious use of Jewish-Christian sources, such as the primitive Luke for which Feine contends.

SECTION III. AUTHOR, DESTINATION, DATE.

1. The author of the third Gospel was also the author of the Acts of the Apostles, as appears in chap. i. 1 of the latter work, where the name of Theophilus recurs. Neither book bears the name of the writer, but uniform ancient tradition ascribes it to Luke, the companion of Paul, and by occupation a physician (Col. iv. 11). From the preface to the Gospel we gather that he had no personal knowledge of Jesus, but was entirely dependent on oral and written tradition.

2. From the prefaces of the Gospel and the book of Acts we learn that the author wrote for the immediate benefit of a single individual, apparently a man of rank, say a Roman knight. It is not necessary to infer that a larger circle of readers was not contemplated either by the writer or by the first recipient of his work.

3. The date cannot be definitely fixed. Opinion ranges from A.D. 63 to the early years of the second century. As late a date as say A.D. 90 is compatible with the writer being, in his younger years, a companion of St. Paul in his later missionary movements. The still later date of A.D. 100 or 105 would be required if it were certain, which it is not, that the writer used the Antiquities of Josephus, which were published about the year 93-94. Dr. Sanday, in his work entitled Inspiration, expresses the view that Acts was written about A.D. 80, and the Gospel some time in the five years preceding.

CHAPTER V.

THE TEXT, CRITICAL LANDMARKS, CRITICAL TESTS OF READINGS.

SECTION I. THE TEXT.

The Greek text given in this work is that known as the Textus Receptus, on which the Authorised Version of the New Testament is based. Representing the Greek text as known to Erasmus in the sixteenth century, and associated with the names of two famous printers, Stephen and Elzevir, whose editions (Stephen's 3rd, 1550, Elzevir's 2nd, 1633) were published when the apparatus at command for fixing the true text was scanty, and when the science of textual criticism was unborn, it may seem to be entirely out of date. But it is an important historical monument, and it is the Greek original answering to the English Testament still largely in use in public worship and in private reading. Moreover, while the experts in modern criticism have done much to provide a purer text, their judgments in many cases do not accord, and their results cannot be regarded as final. It is certain, however, that the texts prepared by such scholars as Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, and the company of experts to whom we are indebted for the Revised Version, are incomparably superior to that of Stephen or of Elzevir, and that they must be taken into account by every competent commentator. That means that to the text must be annexed critical notes showing all important various readings, with some indication of the documentary authority in their favour, and of the value attached thereto by celebrated editors. This accordingly has been done, very imperfectly of course, still it is hoped sufficiently for practical purposes. Variations not affecting the sense, but merely the spelling or grammatical forms of words, have been for the most part disregarded. There are many variations in the spelling of proper names, of which the following are samples:—

Ναζαρέτ	Ναζαρέθ	Γεθσημανή	Γεθσημανεί
Ματθαῖος	Μαθθαῖος	Ἰωάννης	Ἰωάνης
Δαβίδ	Δαυείδ	Ἰεριχώ	Ἰερειχώ
Ἡλίας	Ἡλείας	Μωσῆς	Μωυσῆς
Καπερναούμ	Καφαρναούμ	Πιλάτος	Πειλᾶτος

Among other insignificant variations may be mentioned the presence or absence of ν final in verbs (ἔλεγε, ἔλεγεν); the omission or insertion of μ (λήψομαι, λήμψομαι); the assimilation or non-assimilation of ἐν and σὺν in compound verbs (συζητεῖν, συνζητεῖν; ἐκκακεῖν, ἐνκακεῖν); the doubling of μ, ν, ρ or the reverse (μαμμωνᾶς, μαμωνᾶς; γέννημα, γένημα; ἐπιρράπτει, ἐπιράπτει); the conjunction or disjunction of syllables (οὐκ ἔτι, οὐκέτι); οὕτως for οὕτω; the aorist forms εἶπον, ἦλθον, etc., replaced by forms in α (εἶπαν, ἦλθαν); single or double augment in certain verbs (ἐδυνάμην, ἠδυνάμην; ἔμελλον, ἤμελλον).

Section II. Critical Landmarks.

1. Up till 1831 editors of the New Testament in Greek had been content to follow in the wake of the Textus Receptus, timidly adding notes indicating good readings which they had discovered in the documents accessible to them in their time. Lachmann in that year inaugurated a new critical era by printing a text constructed directly from ancient documents without the intervention of any printed edition. It is not given to pioneers to finish the work they begin, and Lachmann's effort judged by present-day tests was far from perfect. "This great advance was marred by too narrow a selection of documents to be taken into account, and too artificially rigid an employment of them, and also by too little care in obtaining precise knowledge of some of their texts" (Westcott and Hort's New Testament, Introduction, p. 13). Tischendorf in Germany and Tregelles in England worthily followed up Lachmann's efforts, and made important contributions towards the ascertainment of the true text by adopting as their main guides the most ancient MSS., in place of the later documents which had formed the basis of the early printed editions. The critical editions of the Greek New Testament by these scholars appeared about the same time; Tischendorf's eighth edition (the important one which supersedes the earlier) bearing the date 1869, and the work of Tregelles being published in 1870. The characteristic feature of Tischendorf's edition is the predominant importance attached to the great Codex Sinaiticus (א), with the discovery of which his name is connected.

The defect common to it with the edition of Tregelles is failure to deal on any clear principle with the numerous instances in which the ancient texts on which they placed their reliance do not agree. All goes smoothly when Codex Sinaiticus and Codex Vaticanus (B) and Codex Bezae (D) and the most ancient versions bear the same testimony; but what is to be done when the trusted guides follow divergent paths?

2. It is by the answer which they have given to this question that Westcott and Hort have made an epoch-making contribution to the science of Biblical Criticism in the first volume of their monumental work, The New Testament in the Original Greek, published in 1881. Following up hints thrown out by earlier investigators, like Bengel and Griesbach, they discriminated three types of text prevalent in ancient times, before the period of eclectic revision which fixed to a great extent the character of the text in actual use throughout the Middle Ages and on to the dawn of modern criticism. To these types they gave the names Western, Alexandrian, and Neutral. The last epithet is to be understood only when viewed in relation to the other two. The Western and Alexandrian types of text had very well-marked characteristics. The Western was paraphrastic, the Alexandrian literary. The tendency of the one was to alter the primitive text by explanatory additions with a view to edification, made by men who combined to a certain extent the functions of copyist and commentator. The tendency of the other was to improve the text from a literary point of view by scholarly refinements. The neutral text is neutral in the sense of avoiding both these tendencies and aiming steadily at the faithful reproduction of the exemplar assumed to approach in its text as near as possible to the autographs. A text adhering honestly to this programme ought to be the most reliable guide to the original Greek Testament as it proceeded from the hands of the writers, making due allowance for errors in the exemplar and for mistakes in transcription. The result of investigation has been to justify this expectation.

3. The main representative of the Western text is Codex Bezae (D), containing the Gospels and the Acts. Of the Alexandrian text there is no pure example. This divergent stream broke up into rills, and lost itself as a mere element in mixed texts, like those of Codex Sinaiticus and Codex Ephraemi (C). It is important to note by the way that these names do not denote local prevalence. The Western text was not merely Western. This divergent stream overflowed its banks and spread itself widely over the Church, reaching even the East. Hence traces of its influence are to be found not merely in the old Latin versions, but also in the Syriac versions, e.g., in what is called the Curetonian Syriac, and in the recently discovered Syriac version of the Four Gospels, which may be distinguished as the Sinaitic Syriac. Of the neutral text, the great, conspicuous, honourable monument is Codex Vaticanus (B), containing the Gospels, Acts, and Catholic epistles, and the epistles of St. Paul, as far as Heb. ix. 14; and being, especially in the Gospels, a nearly pure reproduction of a text uninfluenced by the tendencies of the Western and Alexandrian texts respectively. To this MS., belonging like Codex Sinaiticus to the fourth century, Westcott and Hort, after applying to it all available tests, assign the honour of being on the whole the nearest approach to the original verity in existence, always worthy of respect and often deserving to be followed when it stands alone against all comers. A very important conclusion if it can be sustained.

4. In recent years a certain reaction against the critical results of Westcott and Hort has been manifesting itself to the effect of imputing to them an overweening estimate of Codex B, analogous to that of Tischendorf for Codex א. Some scholars, such as Resch in Germany and Ramsay in this country, are disposed to insist that more value should be set on Codex D; the former finding in it the principal witness for the text of the Gospels in their precanonical stage, the assumption being that when the four-Gospel canon was constructed the text underwent a certain amount of revision. The real worth of this Codex is one of the unsettled questions of New Testament textual criticism. Interesting contributions have been made to the discussion of the question, such as those of J. Rendel Harris, and more may be expected.

SECTION III. CRITICAL TESTS OF READINGS.

1. The fixation of the true text is not a simple matter like that of following a single document, however trustworthy, like Codex B. Every editor may have his bias in favour of this or that MS., but all editors recognise the obligation to take into account all available sources of evidence — not merely the great uncial MSS. of ancient dates, but the cursives of later centuries, and, besides Greek MSS. of both kinds containing the whole or a part of the New Testament, ancient versions, Latin, Syriac, Egyptian, etc., and quotations in the early Fathers. The evidence when fully adduced is a formidable affair, demanding much space for its exhibition (witness Tischendorf's eighth edition in two large octavos), and the knowledge of an expert for its appreciation. In such a work as the present the space cannot be afforded nor can the knowledge be expected even in the author, not to say in his readers. Full knowledge of the critical data through first-hand studies belongs to specialists only, who have made the matter the subject of lifelong labour. All one can do is to utilise intelligently their results. But because all cannot be specialists it is not profitless to have a juryman's acquaintance with the relative facts. It is the aim of the critical notes placed beneath the Greek text to aid readers to the attainment of such an acquaintance, and to help them to form an intelligent opinion as to the claims of rival readings to represent the true text. Fortunately, this can be done without adducing a very long array of witnesses.

2. For it turns out that there are certain groups of witnesses which often go together, and whose joint testimony is very weighty. Westcott and Hort have carefully specified these. They may here be indicated: —

For the Gospels the most important and authoritative group is ℵBCDL 33.

In this group L and 33 have hitherto not been referred to. L (Codex Regius), though belonging to the eighth century, represents an ancient text, and is often in agreement with ℵ and B. 33 belongs to the cursive class (which are indicated by figures), but is a highly valuable Codex, though, like all cursives, of late date. In his Prolegomena to Tischendorf's New Testament, Dr. Caspar René Gregory quotes (p. 469) with approval the opinion of Eichhorn that this is the "queen of the cursives". In the above group, it will be noticed, representatives of the different ancient types — Western, Alexandrian, Neutral (D, ℵ, C, B) — are united. When they agree the presumption that we have the true text is very strong.

When D falls out we have still a highly valuable group in ℵBCL 33.

When DC and 33 drop out there remains a very trustworthy combination in ℵBL.

There are, besides these, several binary combinations of great importance. The following is the list given by Westcott and Hort for the Gospels: —

BL, BC, BT, BΞ, BD, AB, BZ, B 33, and for St. Mark BΔ.

In these combinations some new documents make their appearance.

T stands for the Greek text of the Graeco-Thebaic fragments of St. Luke and St. John (century v., ancient and non-Western).

Ξ = fragments of St. Luke (cent. viii., comparatively pure, though showing mixture).

A is the well-known Codex Alexandrinus of the fifth century, a chief representative of the "Syrian" text, that is, the revised text formed by judicious eclectic use of all existing texts, and meant to be the authoritative New Testament. This Codex contains nearly the whole New Testament except Matthew as far as chapter xxv. 5. For the Gospels it is of no independent value as a witness to the true text, but its agreements with B are important.

Δ = Codex Sangallensis, a Graeco-Latin MS. of the tenth century, and having many ancient readings, especially in Mark.

To these authorities has to be added, as containing ancient readings, and often agreeing with the best MSS., Codex Purpureus Rossanensis (Σ), published in 1883, edited by Oscar Von Gebhardt; of the sixth century, containing Matthew and Mark in full. Due note has been taken of the readings of this MS.

The foregoing represent the chief authorities referred to in the critical notes. In these notes I have not uniformly indicated my personal opinion. But in the commentary I have always adopted as the subject of remark the most probable reading. Reference to modern editors has been chiefly restricted to Tischendorf, and Westcott and Hort, meaning thereby no depreciation of the work done by others, but simply recognising these as the most important.

MSS. were corrected from time to time. Corrected copies are referred to by critics by letters or figures: thus, $\aleph^a$ (4th cent.), $\aleph^b$ (6th cent.), $\aleph^c$ (7th cent.), B^2 (4th cent.), B^3 (10th cent.).

Besides the above-named documents the following uncials are occasionally referred to in the critical notes:—

E cod. Basiliensis. 8th century (Gospels nearly entire).
G cod. Seidelii. 9th or 10th century (Gospels defective).
K cod. Cyprius. 9th century (Gospels complete).
M cod. De Camps, Paris. 9th century (Gospels complete).
N cod. Purpureus. 6th century (fragments of all the Gospels).
P cod. Guelpherbytanus I. 6th century (fragments of all the Gospels).
Q cod. Guelpherbytanus II. 5th century (fragments from Luke and John).
R cod. Nitriensis, London. 6th century (fragments of Luke).
U cod. Nanianus Venetus. 9th or 10th century (Gospels entire).
V cod. Mosquensis. 9th century (contains Matthew and Mark, and Luke nearly complete).
X cod. Monacensis. 9th or 10th century (fragments of all the Gospels).
Z cod. Dublinensis. 6th century (fragments of Matthew).
Γ cod. Oxoniensis et Petropolitanus. 10th century (four Gospels, Matthew and Mark defective).
Λ cod. Oxoniensis Tisch. 9th century (Luke and John entire).
Π cod. Petropolitanus Tisch. 9th century (Gospels nearly complete).
Φ cod. Beratinus. 5th century (Matthew and Mark with lacunae).

CHAPTER VI.

LITERATURE.

The following list of works includes only those chiefly consulted. Many others are occasionally referred to in the notes.

1. To the pre-Reformation period belong—

ORIGEN'S Commentary on Matthew. Books x.-xvii. in Greek (Matt. xiii. 36—xxii. 33), the remainder in a Latin translation (allegorical method of interpretation).

CHRYSOSTOM'S Homilies on Matthew. The Greek text separately edited in three vols. by Dr. Field (well worth perusal).

JEROME'S Commentarius in Matthaeum (a hasty performance, but worth consulting).

AUGUSTINE. De Sermone Domini in monte.

THEOPHYLACTUS (12th century, Archbishop in Bulgaria). Commentarii in quatuor Evangelistas, Graece.

EUTHYMIUS ZIGABENUS (Greek monk, 12th century). Commentarius in quatuor Evangelia, Graece et Latine. Ed. C. F. Matthaei, 1792 (a choice work).

2. From the sixteenth century downwards—

CALVIN. Commentarii in Harmoniam ex Evangelistis tribus . . . compositam.

BEZA. Annotationes in Novum Testamentum. 1556.

MALDONATUS. Commentarii in quatuor Evangelistas (Catholic). 1596.

PRICAEI (Price). Commentarii in varios N. T. libros (including Matthew and Luke, philological, with classical examples, good). 1660.

GROTIUS. Annotationes in N. T. (erudite and still worth consulting). 1644.

LIGHTFOOT. Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae. 1644.

HEINSIUS. Sacrarum exercitationum ad N. T. libri xx. 1665.

RAPHEL. Annotationes Philologicae in N. T., ex Xenophonte, Polybio, Arriano et Herodoto. 1747.

OLEARIUS. Observationes sacrae ad Evangelium Matthaei. 1713.

WOLF. Curae philologicae et criticae in N. T. Five vols. 1741.

SCHÖTTGEN. Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae in N. T. 1733.

WETSTEIN. Novum Testamentum Graecum (full of classic citations). 1751.

BENGEL. Gnomon Novi Testamenti (unique). 1734.

PALAIRET (French pastor at London, † 1765). Observationes philologico-criticae in sacros N. T. libros. 1752.

KYPKE. Observationes sacrae in N. T. libros. 1755.

ELSNER. Observationes sacrae in N. T. libros (the three last named, like Pricaeus, abound in classic examples). 1767.

LOESNER. Observationes ad N. T. e Philone Alexandrino (of the same class as Raphel). 1777.

KUINOEL. Commentarius in libros N. T. historicos. 1807.

FRITZSCHE. Evangelium Matthaei recensuit. 1826.

FRITZSCHE. Evangelium Marci recensuit (both philological). 1830.

DE WETTE. Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum N. T. 1836-48.

BORNEMANN. Scholiae in Lucae Evangelium. 1830.

ALFORD. The Greek Testament. Four vols. 1849-61.

FIELD. Otium Norvicense. 1864.

BLEEK. Synoptische Erklärung der drei ersten Evangelien. 1862.

MEYER. Commentary on the New Testament. Sixth edition (T. & T. Clark).

MEYER. Eighth edition by Dr. Bernhard Weiss (Matthew and Mark, largely Weiss). 1890-92.

MEYER. Eighth edition by J. Weiss (son of Bernhard Weiss; Luke, also largely the editor's work). 1892.

WEISS. Das Marcusevangelium und seine synoptischen Parallelen (a contribution to comparative exegesis in the interest of his critical views on the synoptical problem). 1872.

WEISS. Das Matthäusevangelium und seine Lucas-parallelen (a work of similar character). 1876.

LUTTEROTH. Essai d'Interprétation de quelques parties de l'Evangile selon Saint Matthieu. 1864-76.

SCHANZ. Commentar über das Evangelium des heiligen Matthäus. 1879.

SCHANZ. Commentar über das Evangelium des heiligen Marcus. 1881.

SCHANZ. Commentar über das Evangelium des heiligen Lucas (these three commentaries by Schanz, a Catholic theologian, are good in all respects, specially valuable for patristic references). 1883.

GODET. Commentaire sur l'Evangile de Saint Luc. 3[me] edition. 1888-89.

HAHN. Das Evangelium des Lucas. Two vols. 1892-94.

HOLTZMANN. Die Synoptiker in Hand-Commentar zum Neuen Testament (advanced but valuable). 1892.

The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools and Colleges; Matthew, Mark, and Luke. 1891-93.

The well-known lexical and grammatical helps, including Grimm, Cremer, Winer, and Buttman, have been consulted. Frequent reference has been made to Burton's Syntax of the Moods and Tenses in New Testament (T. & T. Clark, 1894), both because of its excellence and its accessibility to students.

A new edition of Winer's Grammatik (the eighth) by Schmiedel is in course of publication; also of Kühner by Blass.

In the notes, the matter common to the three Gospels is most fully treated in Matthew, the notes in the other two Gospels being at these points supplementary and comparative.

The marginal references to passages of Scripture are simply supplementary to those in the notes.

It is hoped that most abbreviations used will need no special explanation, but the following table may be helpful :—

Mt. = Matthew.
Mk. = Mark.
Lk. = Luke.
O. T. = Old Testament.
N. T. = New Testament.
Sept. = Septuagint.
A. V. = Authorised Version.
R. V. = Revised Version.
C. N. T. = Cambridge New Testament.
Tisch. = Tischendorf.
Treg. = Tregelles.
W. H. = Westcott and Hort.
Ws. = Weiss (Dr. Bernhard).
Egypt. = Egyptian versions (viz., the two following).
Cop. = Coptic (called Memphitic by W. H.).
Sah. = Sahidic (called Thebaic by W. H.).
Syrr. = Syriac versions.
Pesh. = Peshito (= Syrian Vulgate).
Syr. Cur. = Curetonian Syriac. (For Greek equivalent vide Baethgen's Evangelienfragmente).
Syr. Sin. = Sinaitic Syriac (recently discovered).
Latt. = Latin versions.
Vulg. = Vulgate (Jerome's revision of old Latin version).
Vet. Lat. = Vetus Latina (Old Latin, referred to also as It. = Itala). The codices of the old Latin are distinguished by the letters a, b, c, etc.
Minusc. = Minusculi (Codices), another name for cursives.

ΤΟ ΚΑΤΑ ΜΑΤΘΑΙΟΝ

ΑΓΙΟΝ ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ.[1]

I. 1. [a] ΒΙΒΛΟΣ [b] γενέσεως ἸΗΣΟΥ Χριστοῦ, [c] υἱοῦ Δαβίδ,[2] υἱοῦ Ἀβραάμ. 2. Ἀβραὰμ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰσαάκ· Ἰσαὰκ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν a Gen. ii. 4. Mk. xii. 26. Lk. iii. 4; xx. 42.

b ver. 18. Gen. xxxi. 13; xxxii. 9. Lk. i. 14. Jas. i. 23; iii. 6.
c xii. 23; xx. 19; xxii. 42.

[1] The title in T.R. (as above) is late. ℵB have simply Κατα Μαθθαιον. Other expanded forms occur.

[2] Δαβιδ is found only in minusc. ℵB have Δαυειδ. This is one of several variations in spelling occurring in the genealogy, among which may be named βοοζ (ver. 5) = βοες in W.H.; Ωβηδ (ver. 5) = Ιωβηδ, W.H.; Ματθαν (ver. 15) = Μαθθαν, W.H. For a list of such variations in the spelling of names in the three first Gospels vide p. 53.

THE TITLE. The use of the word εὐαγγέλιον in the sense of a book may be as old as the Teaching of the twelve Apostles (Didache, 8, 11, 15. Vide Sanday, Bampton Lectures, 1893, p. 317, n. 1). The word passed through three stages in the history of its use. First, in the older Greek authors (Hom., Od. ξ, 152, 166), a reward for bringing good tidings; also a thank-offering for good tidings brought (Arist., Eq. 656). Next, in later Greek, the good tidings itself (2 Sam. xviii. 20, 22, 25, in Sept. In 2 Sam. iv. 10, εὐαγγέλια occurs in the earliest sense). This sense pervades the N. T. in reference to the good news of God, the message of salvation. Finally, it came very naturally to denote the books in which the Gospel of Jesus was presented in historic form, as in the Didache and in Justin M., Apol. i. 66, Dial. con. Tryp. 100. In the titles of the Gospels the word retains its second sense, while suggesting the third. εὐαγγ. κατὰ M. means the good news as reduced to writing by M. κατὰ is not = of, nor κατὰ Ματθαῖον = Ματθαίου, as if the sense were: The book called a "Gospel" written by Matthew. (Vide Fritzsche against this the older view, supported by Kuinoel.)

CHAPTER I. THE GENEALOGY AND BIRTH OF JESUS.—The genealogy may readily appear to us a most ungenial beginning of the Gospel. A dry list of names! It is the tribute which the Gospel pays to the spirit of Judaism. The Jews set much store by genealogies, and to Jewish Christians the Messiahship of Jesus depended on its being proved that He was a descendant of David. But the matter can hardly be so vital as that. We may distinguish between the question of fact and the question of faith. It may be that Jesus was really descended from David—many things point that way; but even if He were not He might still be the Christ, the fulfiller of O. T. ideals, the bringer-in of the highest good, if He possessed the proper spiritual qualifications. What although the Christ were not David's son in the physical sense? He was a priest after the order of Melchisedec, though ἀγενεαλόγητος; why not Messiah under the same conditions? He might still be a son of David in the sense in which John the Baptist was Elijah—in spirit and power, realising the ideal of the hero king. The kingdom of prophecy came only in a spiritual sense, why not also the king? The two hang together. Paul was not an apostle in the legitimist sense, not one of the men who had been with Jesus; yet he was a very real apostle.

Ἰακώβ. Ἰακὼβ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰούδαν καὶ τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοῦ. 3. Ἰούδας δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Φαρὲς καὶ τὸν Ζαρὰ [d] ἐκ τῆς Θάμαρ· Φαρὲς δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἐσρώμ· Ἐσρὼμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀράμ.

d similar const. in Gal. iv. 4, 22, 23.

So might Jesus be a Christ, though not descended from David. St. Paul writes (Gal. iii. 29): "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed". So might we say: If Jesus was fit to be the Christ in point of spiritual equipment, then was He of the seed of David. There is no clear evidence in the Gospels that Jesus Himself set value on Davidic descent; there are some things that seem to point the other way: e.g., the question, "Who is my mother?" (Matt. xii. 47; Mk. iii. 33), and the other, "What think ye of the Christ, whose son is He?" (Matt. xxii. 42, et par.). There is reason to believe that, like St. Paul, He would argue from the spiritual to the genealogical, not vice versâ: not Christ because from David, but from David, at least ideally, because Christ on other higher grounds.

Ver. 1. βίβλος γενέσεως κ.τ.λ. How much does this heading cover: the whole Gospel, the two first chapters, the whole of the first chapter, or only i. 1-17? All these views have been held. The first by Euthy. Zigab., who argued: the birth of the God-man was the important point, and involved all the rest; therefore the title covers the whole history named from the most important part (ἀπὸ τοῦ κυριωτέρου μέρους). Some moderns (Ebrard, Keil, etc.) have defended the view on the ground that the corresponding title in O. T. (Gen. vi. 9; xi. 27, etc.) denotes not merely a genealogical list, but a history of the persons whose genealogy is given. Thus the expression is taken to mean a book on the life of Christ (liber de vita Christi, Maldon.). Against the second view and the third Weiss-Meyer remarks that at i. 18 a new beginning is made, while ii. 1 runs on as if continuing the same story. The most probable and most generally accepted opinion is that of Calvin, Beza, and Grotius that the expression applies only to i. 1-17. (Non est haec inscriptio totius libri, sed particulae primae quae velut extra corpus historiae prominet. Grotius.)

Ἰησου Χριστου. Christ here is not an appellative but a proper name, in accordance with the usage of the Apostolic age. In the body of the evangelistic history the word is not thus used; only in the introductory parts. (Vide Mk. i. 1; John i. 17.)

υἱοῦ Δ., υἱοῦ Α. Of David first, because with his name was associated the more specific promise of a Messianic king; of Abraham also, because he was the patriarch of the race and first recipient of the promise. The genealogy goes no further back, because the Gospel is written for the Jews. Euthy. Zig. suggests that David is placed first because he was the better known, as the less remote, as a great prophet and a renowned king. (ἀπὸ τοῦ γνωριμωτέρου μᾶλλον ἀρξάμενος, ἐπὶ τὸν παλαιότερον ἀνῆλθεν.) The word υἱοῦ in both cases applies to Christ. It can refer grammatically to David, as many take it, but the other reference is demanded by the fact that ver. 1 forms the superscription of the following genealogy. So Weiss-Meyer.

Vv. 2-16. The genealogy divides into three parts: from Abraham to David (vv. 2-6a); from David to the captivity (vv. 6b-11); from the captivity to Christ. On closer inspection it turns out to be not so dry as it at first appeared. There are touches here and there which import into it an ethical significance, suggesting the idea that it is the work not of a dry-as-dust Jewish genealogist, but of the evangelist; or at least worked over by him in a Christian spirit, if the skeleton was given to his hand. To note these is the chief interest of non-Rabbinical exegesis.

Vv. 2-6a. καὶ τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοῦ. This is not necessary to the genealogical line, but added to say by the way that he who belonged to the tribe of Judah belonged also to all the tribes of Israel. (Weiss, Matthäusevang.) . . . Ver. 3. τὸν Φαρὲς καὶ τὸν Ζαρά. Zerah added to Perez the continuator of the line, to suggest that it was by a special providence that the latter was first born (Gen. xxxviii. 27-30). The evangelist is on the outlook for the unusual or preternatural in history as prelude to the crowning marvel of the virgin birth (Gradus futurus ad credendum partum e virgine. Grot.).—ἐκ τῆς Θάμαρ. Mention of the mother wholly unnecessary and unusual from a genealogical point of view, and in this case one would say, primâ facie, impolitic, reminding of a hardly readable story (Gen. xxxviii. 13-26). It is the first of four references to mothers

4. Ἀρὰμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀμιναδάβ· Ἀμιναδὰβ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ναασσών· Ναασσὼν δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Σαλμών. 5. Σαλμὼν δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Βοὸζ ἐκ τῆς Ῥαχάβ· Βοὸζ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ὠβὴδ ἐκ τῆς Ῥούθ· Ὠβὴδ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰεσσαί· 6. Ἰεσσαὶ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Δαβὶδ τὸν βασιλέα. Δαβὶδ δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς[1] ἐγέννησε τὸν Σολομῶντα[2] ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Οὐρίου· 7. Σολομὼν δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ῥοβοάμ· Ῥοβοὰμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀβιά· Ἀβιὰ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀσά· 8. Ἀσὰ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωσαφάτ· Ἰωσαφὰτ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωράμ· Ἰωρὰμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ὀζίαν· 9. Ὀζίας δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωάθαμ· Ἰωάθαμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἄχαζ· Ἄχαζ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἐζεκίαν· 10. Ἐζεκίας

[1] ο βασιλευς omitted in ℵB, found in CL. Most modern editors omit.
[2] So in Δ. Σολομωνα in BCL and most uncials.

in the ancestry of Jesus, concerning whom one might have expected the genealogy to observe discreet silence: Tamar, Rahab, Ruth, Bathsheba; three of them sinful women, and one, Ruth, a foreigner. Why are they mentioned? By way of defence against sinister misconstruction of the birth of Jesus? So Wetstein: Ut tacitæ Judaeorum objectioni occurreretur. Doubtless there is a mental reference to that birth under some aspect, but it is not likely that the evangelist would condescend to apologise before the bar of unbelief, even though he might find means of doing so in the Jewish habit of glorying over the misdeeds of ancestors (Wetstein). Much more probable is the opinion of the Fathers, who found in these names a foreshadowing of the gracious character of the Gospel of Jesus, as it were the Gospel in the genealogy. Schanz follows the Fathers, except that he thinks they have over-emphasised the sinful element. He finds in the mention of the four women a hint of God's grace in Christ to the sinful and miserable: Rahab and Bathsheba representing the one, Tamar and Ruth the other. This view commends itself to many interpreters both Catholic and Protestant. Others prefer to bring the four cases under the category of the extraordinary exemplified by the case of Perez and Zerah. These women all became mothers in the line of Christ's ancestry by special providence (Weiss-Meyer). Doubtless this is at least part of the moral. Nicholson (New Com.) thinks that the introduction of Tamar and Ruth is sufficiently explained by Ruth iv. 11, 12, viewed as Messianic, of Rahab by her connection with the earlier Jesus (Joshua), and of Bathsheba because she was the mother of a second line culminating in Christ, as Ruth of a first culminating in David.—Ver. 6a. τὸν Δαβὶδ τὸν βασιλέα, David the King, the title being added to distinguish him from the rest. It serves the same purpose as if David had been written in large letters. At length we arrive at the great royal name! The materials for the first part of the genealogy are taken from Ruth iv. 18-22, and 1 Chron. ii. 5-15.

Vv. 6b-10, ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Οὐρίου, vide above. The chief feature in this second division of the genealogical table is the omission of three kings between Joram and Uzziah (ver. 8), viz., Ahaziah, Joash, Amaziah. How is the omission to be explained? By inadvertence, or by intention, and if the latter, in what view? Jerome favoured the second alternative, and suggested two reasons for the intentional omission—a wish to bring out the number fourteen (ver. 17) in the second part of the genealogy, and a desire to brand the kings passed over with the stamp of theocratic illegality. In effect, manipulation with a presentable excuse. But the excuse would justify other omissions, e.g., Ahaz and Manasseh, who, were as great offenders as any. One can, indeed, imagine the evangelist desiring to exemplify the severity of the Gospel as well as its grace in the construction of the list—to say in effect: God resisteth the proud, but He giveth grace to the lowly, and even the low. The hypothesis of manipulation in the interest of symbolic numbers can stand on its own basis without any pretext. It is not to be supposed that the evangelist was at all concerned to make sure that no link in the line was omitted. His one concern

δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Μανασσῆ· Μανασσῆς δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀμών· Ἀμὼν δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωσίαν· 11. Ἰωσίας δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰεχονίαν καὶ τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοῦ, ἐπὶ τῆς [e] μετοικεσίας Βαβυλῶνος. 12. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν μετοικεσίαν Βαβυλῶνος, Ἰεχονίας ἐγέννησε τὸν Σαλαθιήλ· Σαλαθιὴλ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ζοροβάβελ· 13. Ζοροβάβελ δὲ ἐγέννησε would be to make sure that no name appeared that did not belong to the line. He can hardly have imagined that his list was complete from beginning to end. Thus Nahshon (ver. 4) was the head of the tribe of Judah at the Exodus (Num. i. 7), yet between Hezron and him only two names occur—four names for 400 years. Each name or generation represents a century, in accordance with Genesis xv. 13-16. The genealogist may have had this passage in view, but he must have known that the actual succession embraced more links than four (vide Schanz on ver. 4). The hypothesis of inadvertence or error in consulting the text of the O. T., favoured by some modern commentators, is not to be summarily negatived on the ground of an a priori theory of inerrancy. It is possible that in reading 1 Chron. iii. 11 in the Sept. the eye leapt from Ὀχοζίας to Ὀζίας, and so led to omission of it and the two following names. (Ἀζαρίας, not Ὀζίας, is the reading in Sept., but Weiss assumes that the latter, Azariah's original name, must have stood in the copy used by the constructor of the genealogy.) The explanation, however, is conjectural. No certainty, indeed, is attainable on the matter. As a curiosity in the history of exegesis may be mentioned Chrysostom's mode of dealing with this point. Having propounded several problems regarding the genealogy, the omission of the three kings included, he leaves this one unsolved on the plea that he must not explain everything to his hearers lest they become listless (ἵνα μὴ ἀναπέσητε, Hom. iv.). Schanz praises the prudence of the sly Greek orator.

[e] again twice in ver. 17. Also in 2 Kings xxiv. 6; 1 Chron. v. 22. The verb (μετοικίζω) in Acts vii. 4, 43.

Ver. 11. Ἰωσίας ἐγεν. τὸν Ἰεχονίαν. There is an omission here also: Eliakim, son of Josiah and father of Jeconiah. It was noted and made a ground of reproach to Christians by Porphyry. Maldonatus, pressed by the difficulty, proposed to substitute for Jeconiah, Jehoiakim, the second of four sons ascribed to Josiah in the genealogist's source (1 Chron. iii. 14), whereby the expression τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοῦ would retain its natural sense. But, while the two names are perhaps similar enough to be mistaken for each other, it is against the hypothesis as a solution of the difficulty that Jehoiakim did not share in the captivity (2 Kings xxiv. 6), while the words of ver. 11 seem to imply that the descendant of Josiah referred to was associated with his brethren in exile. The words ἐπὶ τῆς μετοικεσίας Βαβυλῶνος probably supply the key to the solution. Josiah brings us to the brink of the period of exile. With his name that doleful time comes into the mind of the genealogist. Who is to represent it in the line of succession? Not Jehoiakim, for though the deportation began in his reign he was not himself a captive. It must be Jeconiah (Jehoiakin), his son at the second remove, who was among the captives (2 Kings xxiv. 15). His "brethren" are his uncles, sons of Josiah, his grandfather; brethren in blood, and brethren also as representatives of a calamitous time—(vide Weiss-Meyer). There is a pathos in this second allusion to brotherhood. "Judah and his brethren," partakers in the promise (also in the sojourn in Egypt); "Jeconiah and his brethren," the generation of the promise eclipsed. Royalty in the dust, but not without hope. The omission of Eliakim (or Jehoiakim) serves the subordinate purpose of keeping the second division of the genealogy within the number fourteen.—Μετοικεσίας: literally change of abode, deportation, "carrying away," late Greek for μετοικία or μετοίκησις.—Βαβυλῶνος: genitive, expressing the terminus ad quem (vide Winer, § 30, 2 a, and cf. Matt. iv. 15, ὁδὸν θαλάσσης, x. 5, ὁδὸν ἐθνῶν).—ἐπὶ τ. μ., at the time of, during, the time being of some length; the process of deportation went on for years. Cf. Mk. ii. 26, ἐπὶ Ἀβιάθαρ, under the high priesthood of Abiathar, and Mk. xii. 26 for a similar use of ἐπὶ in reference to place, ἐπὶ τοῦ βάτου—at the place where the story of the bush occurs. Μετὰ τ. μ. in ver. 12 means after not during, as some have supposed, misled by taking μετοικεσία as denoting the state of exile. Vide on this Fritzsche.

Vv. 12-15. In the last division the τὸν Ἀβιούδ· Ἀβιοὺδ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἐλιακείμ· 14. Ἐλιακεὶμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀζώρ· Ἀζὼρ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Σαδώκ· Σαδὼκ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀχείμ· Ἀχεὶμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἐλιούδ· 15. Ἐλιοὺδ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἐλεάζαρ· Ἐλεάζαρ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ματθάν· Ματθὰν δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰακώβ· 16. Ἰακὼβ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωσήφ, τὸν ἄνδρα Μαρίας, ἐξ ἧς ἐγεννήθη [f] Ἰησοῦς ὁ λεγόμενος Χριστός.

[f] same expression in xxvii. 17, 22 ("Jesus called the Christ").

17. Πᾶσαι οὖν αἱ γενεαὶ ἀπὸ Ἀβραὰμ ἕως Δαβίδ, γενεαὶ δεκατέσσαρες· καὶ ἀπὸ Δαβὶδ ἕως τῆς μετοικεσίας Βαβυλῶνος, γενεαὶ genealogical table escapes our control. After Zerubbabel no name occurs in the O. T. We might have expected to find Abiud in 1 Chron. iii. 19, where the children of Zerubbabel are given, but Abiud is not among them. The royal family sank into obscurity. It does not follow that no pains were taken to preserve their genealogy. The priests may have been diligent in the matter, and records may have been preserved in the temple (Schanz). The Messianic hope would be a motive to carefulness. In any case we must suppose the author of the genealogy before us to give here what he found. He did not construct an imaginary list. And the list, if not guaranteed as infallibly accurate by its insertion, was such as might reasonably be expected to satisfy Hebrew readers. Amid the gloom of the night of legalism which broods over all things belonging to the period, this genealogy included, it is a comfort to think that the Messiahship of Jesus does not depend on the absolute accuracy of the genealogical tree.

Ver. 16. Ἰακὼβ . . . τὸν Ἰωσήφ: the genealogy ends with Joseph. It is then presumably his, not Mary's. But for apologetic or dogmatic considerations, no one would ever have thought of doubting this. What creates perplexity is that Joseph, while called the husband (τὸν ἄνδρα) of Mary, is not represented as the father of Jesus. There is no ἐγέννησε in this case, though some suppose that there was originally, as the genealogy came from the hand of some Jewish Christian, who regarded Jesus as the Son of Joseph (Holtzmann in H. C.). The Sinaitic Syriac Codex has "Joseph, to whom was betrothed Mary the Virgin, begat Jesus," but it does not alter the story otherwise to correspond with Joseph's paternity. Therefore Joseph can only have been the legal father of Jesus. But, it is argued, that is not enough to satisfy the presupposition of the whole N. T., viz., that Jesus was the actual son of David (κατὰ σάρκα, Rom. i. 3); therefore the genealogy must be that of Mary (Nösgen). This conclusion can be reconciled with the other alternative by the assumption that Mary was of the same tribe and family as Joseph, so that the genealogy was common to both. This was the patristic view. The fact may have been so, but it is not indicated by the evangelist. His aim, undoubtedly, is to set forth Jesus as the legitimate son of Joseph, Mary's husband, at His birth, and therefore the proper heir of David's throne.—ἐξ ἧς ἐγεννήθη Ι. The peculiar manner of expression is a hint that something out of the usual course had happened, and prepares for the following explanation: ὁ λεγόμενος Χριστός; not implying doubt, but suggesting that the claim of Jesus to the title Christ was valid if He were a legitimate descendant of David, as the genealogy showed Him to be.

Ver. 17. The evangelist pauses to point out the structure of his genealogy: three parts with fourteen members each; symmetrical, memorable; πᾶσαι does not imply, as Meyer and Weiss think, that in the opinion of the evangelist no links are omitted. He speaks simply of what lies under the eye. There they are, fourteen in each, count and satisfy yourself. But the counting turns out not to be so easy, and has given rise to great divergence of opinion. The division naturally suggested by the words of the text is: from Abraham to David, terminating first series, 14; from David, heading second series, to the captivity as limit, i.e., to Josiah, 14; from the captivity represented by Jeconiah to Christ, included as final term, 14. So Bengel and De Wette. If objection be taken to counting David twice, the brethren of Jeconiah, that is, his uncles, may be taken as representing the concluding term of series 2, and Jeconiah himself as the first member of series 3 (Weiss-Meyer). The identical number g Lk. i. 27; ii. 5. h Lk. xvii. 18. 1 Cor. iv. 2. i again in xxiv. 19. Lk. xxi. 23. j Mt. xx. 4. Mk. vi. 20. Lk. xx. 20. Rom. v. 7.

δεκατέσσαρες· καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς μετοικεσίας Βαβυλῶνος ἕως τοῦ Χριστοῦ, γενεαὶ δεκατέσσαρες.

18. ΤΟΥ δὲ Ἰησοῦ[1] Χριστοῦ ἡ γέννησις[2] οὕτως ἦν. [g] μνηστευθείσης γὰρ[3] τῆς μητρὸς αὐτοῦ Μαρίας τῷ Ἰωσήφ, πρὶν ἢ συνελθεῖν αὐτούς, [h] εὑρέθη [i] ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα ἐκ Πνεύματος Ἁγίου. 19. Ἰωσὴφ δὲ ὁ ἀνὴρ αὐτῆς, [j] δίκαιος ὤν, καὶ μὴ θέλων αὐτὴν παρα-

[1] B inverts the order of the names (X. I.). I. X. in ℵCL, etc. Weiss (Meyer, 8th ed.) remarks B has a preference for "Christ Jesus".

[2] The best old MSS. read γενεσις . . . γεννησις is doubtless a correction of the scribe to bring the text into conformity with εγεννησε in the genealogy.

[3] γαρ omitted in ℵBC[1], etc. The sense is clearer without it.

in the three parts is of no importance in itself. It is a numerical symbol uniting three periods, and suggesting comparison in other respects, e.g., as to different forms of government—judges, kings, priests (Euthy. Zig.), theocracy, monarchy, hierarchy (Schanz), all summed up in Christ; or as to Israel's fortunes: growth, decline, ruin—redemption urgently needed.

Vv. 18-25. THE BIRTH OF JESUS. This section gives the explanation which ἐξ ἧς ἐγεννήθη (ver. 16) leads us to expect. It may be called the justification of the genealogy (Schanz), showing that while the birth was exceptional in nature it yet took place in such circumstances, that Jesus might justly be regarded as the legitimate son of Joseph, and therefore heir of David's throne. The position of the name Τοῦ δὲ Ι. Χ. at the head of the sentence, and the recurrence of the word γένεσις, point back to ver. 1; γένεσις, not γέννησις, is the true reading, the purpose being to express the general idea of origin, ortus, not the specific idea of generation (ὁ εὐαγγελιστὴς ἐκαινοτόμησε τὸ κατὰ φύσιν ὄνομα τῆς γεννήσεως, γένεσιν αὐτὴν καλέσας. Euthy. Zig. on ver. 1).

Ver. 18. μνηστευθείσης . . . αὐτοὺς indicates the position of Mary in relation to Joseph when her pregnancy was discovered. Briefly it was—betrothed, not married. Πρὶν ἢ συνελθεῖν means before they came together in one home as man and wife, it being implied that that would not take place before marriage. συνελθεῖν might refer to sexual intercourse, so far as the meaning of the word is concerned (Joseph. Antiq. vii. 9, 5), but the evangelist would not think it necessary to state that no such intercourse had taken place between the betrothed. That he would regard as a matter of course. Yet most of the fathers so understood the word; and some, Chrysostom, e.g., conceived Joseph and Mary to be living together before marriage, but sine concubitu, believing this to have been the usual practice. Of this, however, there is no satisfactory evidence. The sense above assigned to συνελ corresponds to the verb παραλαβεῖν, ver. 20, παρέλαβε, ver. 25, which means to take home, domum ducere. The supposed reason for the practice alleged to have existed by Chrysostom and others was the protection of the betrothed (δι' ἀσφάλειαν, Euthy.). Grammarians (vide Fritzsche) say that πρὶν ἢ is not found in ancient Attic, though often in middle Attic. For other instances of, with infinitive, vide Mk. xiv. 30, Acts vii. 2; without ἢ, Mt. xxvi. 34, 75. On the construction of πρὶν with the various moods, vide Hermann ed. Viger, Klotz ed. Devarius, and Goodwin's Syntax.—εὑρέθη . . . ἔχουσα: εὑρέθη, not ἦν. (So Olearius, Observ. ad Ev. Mat., and other older interpreters.) There was a discovery and a surprise. It was apparent (de Wette); διὰ τὸ ἀπροσδόκητον (Euthy.). To whom apparent not indicated. Jerome says: "Non ab alio inventa est nisi a Joseph, qui pene licentia maritali futurae uxoris omnia noverat".—ἐκ πν. ἁγ. This was not apparent; it belonged to the region of faith. The evangelist hastens to add this explanation of a painful fact to remove, as quickly as possible, all occasion for sinister conjecture. The expression points at once to immediate divine causality, and to the holy character of the effect: a solemn protest against profane thoughts.

Ver. 19. Ι. ὁ ἀνὴρ: proleptic, implying possession of a husband's rights and responsibilities. The betrothed man had a duty in the matter.—δίκαιος . . . δειγμα- δειγματίσαι,[1] ἐβουλήθη λάθρα[2] [k] ἀπολῦσαι αὐτήν. 20. ταῦτα δὲ αὐτοῦ [l] ἐνθυμηθέντος, ἰδού, ἄγγελος Κυρίου [m] κατ' ὄναρ ἐφάνη αὐτῷ, λέγων, "Ἰωσήφ, υἱὸς Δαβίδ, μὴ φοβηθῇς [n] παραλαβεῖν Μαριὰμ[3] τὴν γυναῖκά σου· τὸ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθὲν ἐκ Πνεύματός ἐστιν Ἁγίου. 21. τέξεται δὲ υἱόν, καὶ [o] καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦν· αὐτὸς γὰρ σώσει τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν." 22. Τοῦτο δὲ ὅλον γέγονεν, ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ [p] ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ[4] Κυρίου διὰ k ver. 31, 32 xix. 3. Mk. x. 12 (in ref. to a husband).

l chap. ix. 4.
m chap. ii. 12, 13, 19, 22; xxvii. 19.
n again ver. 24.
o Lk. i. 13; ii. 21.
p chap. ii. 15; iii. 3; xxii. 31.

[1] B and ℵ[2] have the simple verb (δειγματισαι).

[2] λαθρᾳ in W.H.

[3] Μαριαν in BL (W.H. text). The Μαριαμ of the T. R. probably comes from the history of Christ's birth in Luke i., ii.

[4] The article του before κυριου is omitted in the best MSS.

τίσαι. He was in a strait betwixt two. Being δίκαιος, just, righteous, a respecter of the law, he could not overlook the apparent fault; on the other hand, loving the woman, he desired to deal with her as tenderly as possible: not wishing to expose her (αὐτὴν in an emphatic position before δειγματίσαι—the loved one. Weiss-Meyer). Some (Grotius, Fritzsche, etc.) take δίκαιος in the sense of bonitas or benignitas, as if it had been ἀγαθός, so eliminating the element of conflict.—ἐβουλήθη . . . αὐτήν. He finally resolved on the expedient of putting her away privately. The alternatives were exposure by public repudiation, or quiet cancelling of the bond of betrothal. Affection chose the latter. δειγματίσαι does not point, as some have thought, to judicial procedure with its penalty, death by stoning. λάθρα before ἀπολῦσαι is emphatic, and suggests a contrast between two ways of performing the act pointed at by ἀπολῦσαι. Note the synonyms θέλων and ἐβουλήθη. The former denotes inclination in general, the latter a deliberate decision between different courses—maluit (vide on chapter xi. 27).

Vv. 20-21. Joseph delivered from his perplexity by angelic interposition. How much painful, distressing, distracting thought he had about the matter day and night can be imagined. Relief came at last in a dream, of which Mary was the subject.—ταῦτα . . . ἐνθυμηθέντος: the genitive absolute indicates the time of the vision, and the verb the state of mind: revolving the matter in thought without clear perception of outget. ταῦτα, the accusative, not the genitive with περί: ἐνθ. περί τινος = Cogitare de re, ἐνθ. τι = aliquid secum reputare. Kühner, § 417, 9.—ἰδού: often in Mt after genitive absolute; vivid introduction of the angelic appearance (Weiss Meyer).—κατ' ὄναρ (late Greek condemned by Phrynichus. Vide Lobeck Phryn., p. 423. ὄναρ without preposition the classic equivalent), during a dream reflecting present distractions.—υἱὸς Δαβίδ: the angel addresses Joseph as son of David to awaken the heroic mood. The title confirms the view that the genealogy is that of Joseph.—μὴ φοβηθῇς: he is summoned to a supreme act of faith similar to those performed by the moral heroes of the Bible, who by faith made their lives sublime.—τὴν γυναῖκά σου, to take Mary, as thy wife, so in ver. 24—τὸ . . . ἁγίου: negativing the other alternative by which he was tormented. The choice lies between two extremes: most unholy, or the holiest possible. What a crisis!—ver. 21. τέξεται—Ἰησοῦν: Mary is about to bear a son, and He is to bear the significant name of Jesus. The style is an echo of O. T. story, Gen. xvii. 19, Sept., the birth of Isaac and that of Jesus being thereby placed side by side as similar in their preternatural character.—καλέσεις: a command in form of a prediction. But there is encouragement as well as command in this future. It is meant to help Joseph out of his doubts into a mood of heroic, resolute action. Cease from brooding anxious thought, think of the child about to be born as destined to a great career, to be signalised by His name Jesus — Jehovah the helper.—αὐτὸς γὰρ . . . ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν: interpretation of the name, still part of the angelic speech. αὐτὸς emphatic, he and no other. Sins, implying a spiritual conception of Israel's need.

q Is. vii. 14. τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 23. q "Ἰδού, ἡ παρθένος ἐν γαστρὶ ἕξει καὶ τέξεται υἱόν, καὶ καλέσουσι[1] τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἐμμανουήλ," ὅ ἐστι r Mk. v. 41; xv. 22, 34. John i. 42. r μεθερμηνευόμενον, Μεθ' ἡμῶν ὁ Θεός. 24. Διεγερθεὶς[2] δὲ ὁ[3] Ἰωσὴφ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕπνου ἐποίησεν ὡς προσέταξεν αὐτῷ ὁ ἄγγελος s Lk. i. 34. Κυρίου· καὶ παρέλαβε τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, 25. καὶ οὐκ s ἐγίνωσκεν αὐτήν, ἕως οὗ[4] ἔτεκε τὸν[5] υἱὸν αὐτῆς τὸν πρωτότοκον[5] καὶ ἐκάλεσε τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἸΗΣΟΥΝ.

[1] D has καλεσεις as in Sept. ver. of Is. vii. 14.

[2] Here again, as in ver. 19, the simple verb εγερθεις is used instead of the compound of T. R. in the best texts (ℵBCZ).

[3] ο omitted in ℵZΔ al., bracketed in W.H.

[4] ου is omitted in B and bracketed in W.H.

[5] Instead of the words τον υιον αυτης τον πρωτοτοκον, ℵBZ 1, 33, some old Latin MSS., the Egyptian versions and Syr. Cur., have simply υιον. The expanded phrase of T. R., found in many copies, is doubtless imported from Lk. ii. 7.

Vv. 22-23. The prophetic reference. As it is the evangelist's habit to cite O. T. prophecies in connection with leading incidents in the life of Jesus, it is natural, with most recent interpreters, to regard these words, not as uttered by the angel, but as a comment of the narrator. The ancients, Chry., Theophy., Euthy., etc., adopt the former view, and Weiss-Meyer concurs, while admitting that in expression they reveal the evangelist's style. In support of this, it might be urged that the suggestion of the prophetic oracle to the mind of Joseph would be an aid to faith. It speaks of a son to be born of a virgin. Why should not Mary be that virgin, and her child that son? In favour of it also is the consideration that on the opposite view the prophetic reference comes in too soon. Why should not the evangelist go on to the end of his story, and then quote the prophetic oracle? Finally, if we assume that in the case of all objective preternatural manifestations, there is an answering subjective psychological state, we must conclude that among the thoughts that were passing through Joseph's mind at this crisis, one was that in his family experience as a "son of David," something of great importance for the royal race and for Israel was about to happen. The oracle in question might readily suggest itself as explaining the nature of the coming event. On all these grounds, it seems reasonable to conclude that the evangelist, in this case, means the prophecy to form part of the angelic utterance.

Ver. 22. τοῦτο δὲ . . . ἵνα πληρωθῇ. ἵνα is to be taken here, and indeed always in such connections, in its strict telic sense. The interest of the evangelist, as of all N. T. writers, in prophecy, was purely religious. For him O. T. oracles had exclusive reference to the events in the life of Jesus by which they were fulfilled. The virgin, ἡ παρθένος, supposed to be present to the eye of the prophet, is the young woman of Nazareth betrothed to Joseph the carpenter, now found to be with child.—Ἰδοὺ . . . Ἐμμανουήλ: in the oracle as here quoted, ἕξει (cf. ἔχουσα, ver. 18), is substituted for λήψεται, and καλέσεις changed into the impersonal καλέσουσι. Emmanuel = "with us God," implying that God's help will come through the child Jesus. It does not necessarily imply the idea of incarnation.

Vv. 24-25. Joseph hesitates no more: immediate energetic action takes the place of painful doubt. Euthymius asks: Why did he so easily trust the dream in so great a matter? and answers: because the angel revealed to him the thought of his own heart, for he understood that the messenger must have come from God, for God alone knows the thoughts of the heart.—ἐγερθεὶς . . . Κυρίου: rising up from the sleep (τοῦ ὕπνου), in which he had that remarkable dream, on that memorable night, he proceeded forthwith to execute the Divine command, the first, chief, perhaps sole business of that day.—καὶ παρέλαβεν . . . αὐτοῦ. He took Mary home as his wife, that her offspring might be his legitimate son and heir of David's throne.—Ver. 25. καὶ οὐκ ἐγίνωσκεν . . . υἱόν: absolute habitual (note the imperfect) abstinence from a again in vv. 7, 16 (bis). Acts xiii. 6, 8.

II. 1. Τοῦ δὲ Ἰησοῦ γεννηθέντος ἐν Βηθλεὲμ τῆς Ἰουδαίας, ἐν ἡμέραις Ἡρῴδου τοῦ βασιλέως, ἰδού, [a] μάγοι ἀπὸ [b] ἀνατολῶν

b chap. viii. 11; xxiv. 27. Lk. xiii. 29.

marital intercourse, the sole purpose of the hastened marriage being to legitimise the child.—ἕως: not till then, and afterwards? Here comes in a quæstio vexata of theology. Patristic and catholic authors say: not till then and never at all, guarding the sacredness of the virgin's womb. ἕως does not settle the question. It is easy to cite instances of its use as fixing a limit up to which a specified event did not occur, when as a matter of fact it did not occur at all. E.g., Gen. viii. 7; the raven returned not till the waters were dried up; in fact, never returned (Schanz). But the presumption is all the other way in the case before us. Subsequent intercourse was the natural, if not the necessary, course of things. If the evangelist had felt as the Catholics do, he would have taken pains to prevent misunderstanding.—υἱόν: the extended reading (T. R.) is imported from Luke ii. 7, where there are no variants. πρωτότοκον is not a stumbling-block to the champions of the perpetual virginity, because the first may be the only. Euthymius quotes in proof Isaiah xliv. 6: "I am the first, and I am the last, and beside Me there is no God."—καὶ ἐκάλεσεν, he (not she) called the child Jesus, the statement referring back to the command of the angel to Joseph. Wünsche says that before the exile the mother, after the exile the father, gave the name to the child at circumcision (Neue Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Evangelien, p. 11).

CHAPTER II. HISTORY OF THE INFANCY CONTINUED. The leading aim of the evangelist in this chapter is not to give biographic details as to the time and place of Christ's birth. These are disposed of in an introductory subordinate clause with a genitive absolute construction: "Jesus being born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the King": that is all. The main purpose is to show the reception given by the world to the new-born Messianic King. Homage from afar, hostility at home; foreshadowing the fortunes of the new faith: acceptance by the Gentiles, rejection by the Jews; such is the lesson of this new section. It is history, but not of the prosaic sort: history with a religious bias, and wearing a halo of poetry. The story forms a natural sequel to the preceding account. The δὲ in ver. 1, as in i. 18, is adversative only to the extent of taking the attention off one topic and fixing it on another connected and kindred. This, according to Klotz, who regards δὲ as a weak form of δή, is the original force of the particle. He says (in Devarius, p. 355): "Illa particula eam vim habet, ut abducat nos ab ea re, quae proposita est, transferat que ad id, quod, missa illa priore re, jam pro vero ponendum esse videatur".

Vv. 1-12. Visit of the Magi. Ver. 1, ἐν Βηθλεέμ: The first hint of the birthplace, and no hint that Bethlehem is not the home of the family.—τῆς Ἰουδαίας: to distinguish it from another Bethlehem in Galilee (Zebulon), named in Joshua xix. 15. Our Bethlehem is called Bethlehem-Judah in 1 Sam. xvii. 12, and Jerome thought it should be so written here—Bethlehem of Judah, not of Judaea, taking the latter for the name of the whole nation. The name means "house of bread," and points to the fertility of the neighbourhood; about six miles south of Jerusalem.—ἐν ἡμέραις, "in the days," a very vague indication of time. Luke aims at more exactness in these matters. It is enough for our evangelist to indicate that the birth of Jesus fell within the evil time represented by Herod. A name of evil omen; called the Great; great in energy, in magnificence, in wickedness; a considerable personage in many ways in the history of Israel, and of the world. Not a Jew, his father Antipater an Edomite, his mother an Arabian—the sceptre has departed from Judah—through the influence of Antony appointed King of Judaea by the Roman senate about forty years before the birth of Christ. The event here recorded therefore took place towards the close of his long reign; fit ending for a career blackened with many dark deeds.—ἰδοὺ μάγοι: "Behold!" introducing in a lively manner the new theme, and a very different class of men from the reigning King of Judaea. Herod, Magi; the one representing the ungodly element in Israel, the other the best element in the Gentile world; Magi, not kings as the legend makes them, but having influence with kings, and intermeddling much by astrological lore with the fortunes of individuals and peoples. The c Acts xiii. 14 (in same const.). d vv. 7, 9, 10; xxiv. 29. 1 Cor. xv. 41.

c παρεγένοντο εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, 2. λέγοντες, "Ποῦ ἐστιν ὁ τεχθεὶς βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων; εἴδομεν γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὸν d ἀστέρα ἐν τῇ homage of the Gentiles could not be offered by worthier representatives, in whom power, wisdom, and also error, superstition meet.—μάγοι ἀπὸ ἀνατ. παραγ., Magi from the east came—so the words must be connected: not "came from the east"; from the east, the land of the sunrise; vague indication of locality. It is vain to inquire what precise country is meant, though commentators have inquired, and are divided into hostile camps on the point: Arabia, Persia, Media, Babylon, Parthia are some of the rival suggestions. The evangelist does not know or care. The east generally is the suitable part of the world for Magi to come from on this errand.—εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα: they arrived at Jerusalem, the capital, the natural place for strangers to come to, the precise spot connected with their errand to be determined by further inquiry. Note the Greek form of the name, usual with Matthew, Mark and John. In Luke, the Hebrew form Ἰερουσαλήμ is used. Beforehand, one would have expected the first evangelist writing for Jews to have used the Hebrew form, and the Pauline evangelist the Greek.

Ver. 2, ποῦ . . . Ἰουδαίων: the inquiry of the Magi. It is very laconic, combining an assertion with a question. The assertion is contained in τεχθείς. That a king of the Jews had been born was their inference from the star they had seen, and what they said was in effect thus: that a king has been born somewhere in this land we know from a star we have seen arising, and we desire to know where he can be found: "insigne hoc concisae orationis exemplum," Fritzsche. The Messianic hope of the Jews, and the aspiration after world-wide dominion connected with it, were known to the outside world, according to the testimony of non-Christian writers such as Josephus and Tacitus. The visit of the Magi in quest of the new-born king is not incredible.—εἴδομεν . . . ἀνατολῇ, we saw His star in its rising, not in the east, as in A. V., the plural being used for that in ver. 1. Always on the outlook, no heavenly phenomenon escaped them; it was visible as soon as it appeared above the horizon.—ἀστέρα, what was this celestial portent? Was it phenomenal only? an appearance in the heavens miraculously produced to guide the wise men to Judaea and Bethlehem; or a real astronomical object, a rare conjunction of planets, or a new star appearing, and invested by men addicted to astrology with a certain significance; or mythical, neither a miraculous nor a natural phenomenon, but a creation of the religious imagination working on slender data, such as the Star of Jacob in Balaam's prophecies? All these views have been held. Some of the fathers, especially Chrysostom, advocated the first, viz., that it was a star, not φύσει, but ὄψει μόνον. His reasons were such as these: it moved from north to south; it appeared in the daytime while the sun shone; it appeared and disappeared; it descended down to the house where the child lay, and so indicated the spot, which could not be done by a star in the sky (Hom. vi.). Some modern commentators have laid under contribution the investigations of astronomers, and supposed the ἀστήρ to have been one of several rare conjunctions of planets occurring about the beginning of our era or a comet observed in China. Vide the elaborate note in Alford's Greek Testament. The third view is in favour with students of comparative religion and of criticism, who lay stress on the fact that in ancient times the appearance of a star was expected at the birth of all great men (De Wette), and who expect mythological elements in the N. T. as well as in the Old. (Vide Fritzsche, Strauss, L. J., and Holtzmann in H. C.) These diverse theories will probably always find their abettors; the first among the devout to whom the miraculous is no stumbling-block, the second among those who while accepting the miraculous desire to reduce it to a minimum, or at least to avoid its unnecessary extension, the third among men of naturalistic proclivities. I do not profess to be able to settle the question. I content myself with expressing general acquiescence in the idea thrown out by Spinoza in his discussion on prophecy in the Tractatus theologico-politicus, that in the case of the Magi we have an instance of a sign given, accommodated to the false opinions of men, to guide them to the truth. The whole system

[e]ἀνατολῇ, καὶ ἤλθομεν προσκυνῆσαι αὐτῷ." 3. Ἀκούσας δὲ Ἡρώδης ὁ βασιλεὺς[1] [f]ἐταράχθη, καὶ πᾶσα Ἱεροσόλυμα μετ' αὐτοῦ· 4. καὶ [g]συναγαγὼν πάντας τοὺς ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ γραμματεῖς τοῦ λαοῦ, [h]ἐπυνθάνετο παρ' αὐτῶν, ποῦ ὁ Χριστὸς γεννᾶται. 5. οἱ δὲ εἶπον[2]

e again v. 9, and in Lk. i. 78 (in the sense of rising). f chap. xiv. 26. Lk. i. 12. 1 Pet. iii. 14. g chap. xxii. 10. John xi. 47. Acts xiv. 27. h Cf. Acts xxiii. 20 (τὶ περί τινος).

[1] ο βασιλευς Ηρωδης in ℵBDZ. In the T. R. the order of the words is conformed to that in ver. 1.

[2] ειπαν in ℵB. All such forms have been corrected in the text which the T. R. represents and need not be further noticed.

of astrology was a delusion, yet it might be used by Providence to guide seekers after God. The expectation of an epoch-making birth was current in the east, spread by Babylonian Jews. That it might interest Magians there is no wise incredible; that their astrological lore might lead them to connect some unknown celestial phenomenon with the prevalent expectation is likewise credible. On the other hand, that legendary elements might get mixed up in the Christian tradition of the star-guided visit must be admitted to be possible. It remains to add that the use of the word ἀστήρ, not ἀστρόν, has been supposed to have an important bearing on the question as to the nature of the phenomenon. ἀστήρ means an individual star, ἀστρόν a constellation. But in the N. T. this distinction is not observed. (Vide Luke xxi. 5; Acts xxvii. 20; Heb. xi. 12; and Grimm's Lexicon on the two words.)

Ver. 3. ὁ βασιλεὺς Ἡρώδης ἐταράχθη: βασιλεὺς before the name, not after, as in ver. 1, the emphatic position suggesting that it was as king and because king that Herod was troubled. The foreigner and usurper feared a rival, and the tyrant feared the rival would be welcome. It takes little to put evildoers in fear. He had reigned long, men were weary, and the Pharisees, according to Joseph (A. J. xvii. 2-4), had predicted that his family would ere long lose its place of power. His fear therefore, though the occasion may seem insignificant, is every way credible.—καὶ πᾶσα Ι., doubtless an exaggeration, yet substantially true. The spirit of the city was servile and selfish. They bowed to godless power, and cared for their own interest rather than for Herod's. Few in that so-called holy city had healthy sympathies with truth and right. Whether the king's fears were groundless or not they knew not nor cared. It was enough that the fears existed. The world is ruled not by truth but by opinion.—πασα: is Ιεροσόλυμα feminine here, or is ἡ πόλις understood? or is it a construction, ad sensum, of the inhabitants? (Schanz).

Ver. 4. Herod's measures. — καὶ συναγαγὼν . . . τοῦ λαοῦ. Was this a meeting of the Sanhedrim? Not likely, as the elders are not mentioned, who are elsewhere named as the representatives of the people, vide xxvi. 3, "the chief priests, scribes and elders of the people". Here we read only of the chief priests and scribes of the people. The article is not repeated before γραμματεῖς, the two classes being joined together as the theological experts of the people. Herod called together the leading men among the priests and scribes to consult them as to the birth-place of Messiah. Holtzmann (H. C.), assuming that a meeting of the Sanhedrim is meant, uses the fact as an argument against the historicity of the narrative. The Herod of history slew the Sanhedrists wholesale, and did his best to lull to sleep Messianic hopes. It is only the Herod of Christian legend that convenes the Sanhedrim, and makes anxious inquiries about Messiah's birthplace. But the past policy of the king and his present action, as reported by the evangelist, hang together. He discouraged Messianic hopes, and, now that they have revived in spite of him, he must deal with them, and his first step is to consult the experts in as quiet a way as possible, to ascertain the whereabouts of the new-born child—ἐπυνθάνετο, etc.: it is not a historical question he submits to the experts as to where the Christ has been born, or shall be, but a theological one: where, according to the accepted tradition, is His birth-place? Hence γεννᾶται, present tense.

Vv. 5-6. The answer of the experts.— οἱ δὲ εἶπον, etc. This is not a Christian opinion put into the mouth of the scribes. It was the answer to be exαὐτῷ, "Ἐν Βηθλεὲμ τῆς Ἰουδαίας. οὕτω γὰρ γέγραπται διὰ τοῦ προφήτου, 6. 'Καὶ σύ, Βηθλεέμ, γῆ Ἰούδα, [i] οὐδαμῶς ἐλαχίστη εἶ ἐν τοῖς ἡγεμόσιν Ἰούδα· ἐκ σοῦ γὰρ [j] ἐξελεύσεται [k] ἡγούμενος, ὅστις [l] ποιμανεῖ τὸν λαόν μου τὸν Ἰσραήλ.'" 7. Τότε Ἡρώδης, λάθρα[1] καλέσας τοὺς μάγους, [m] ἠκρίβωσε παρ' αὐτῶν τὸν χρόνον τοῦ φαινομένου ἀστέρος, 8. καὶ πέμψας αὐτοὺς εἰς Βηθλεὲμ εἶπε, "Πορευθέντες [n] ἀκριβῶς [o] ἐξετάσατε[2] περὶ τοῦ παιδίου· [p] ἐπὰν δὲ εὕρητε, ἀπαγγείλατέ μοι, ὅπως κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν προσκυνήσω αὐτῷ."

i here only. j in Heb. vii. 5 in same sense. k Acts vii. 10. Cf. Lk. xxii. 26. l John xxi. 16. Acts xx. 28. 1 Pet. v. 2. m here and in ver. 16. n Lk. i. 3. Acts xviii. 25. 1 Thess. v. 2. o chap. x. 11. John xx. 12. p Lk. xi. 12. Lk. xi. 34 (with aor. sub.).

[1] λαθρᾳ as in i. 19 in W.H.

[2] εξετασατε ακριβως in ℵBCD, which accords with Mt.'s usual order.

pected from them as reflecting the current opinion of the time. The Targum put upon the oracle in Micah a Messianic interpretation (Wetstein, and Wünsche, Beiträge). Yet with the Talmudists the Messiah was the one who should come forth from a strange, unknown place (Weber, Die Lehren des Talmud, p. 342). Vide on this point Schanz, who quotes Schegg as denying the statement of Wetstein, and refers to Celsus as objecting that this view about Messiah's birthplace was not current among the Jews. (Origen c. Celsum, i. 51. Cf. John vii. 27, and 42.)—οὕτως γὰρ γέγραπται, etc.: The Scripture proof that Messiah's birth-place was Bethlehem is taken from Micah v. 2. The oracle put into the mouth of the experts consulted by Herod receives its shape from the hand of the evangelist. It varies very considerably both from the original Hebrew and from the Sept. The "least" becomes "by no means the least," "among the thousands" becomes "among the princes," and the closing clause, "who shall rule my people Israel," departs from the prophetic oracle altogether, and borrows from 2 Sam. v. 2, God's promise to David; the connecting link apparently being the poetic word descriptive of the kingly function common to the two places—ποιμανεῖ in Micah v. 3, ποιμανεῖς in 2 Sam. v. 2. The second variation arises from a different pointing of the same Hebrew word באלפי. בְּאַלְפֵי = among the thousands, בְּאַלֻּפֵי = among the heads of thousands. Such facts are to be taken as they stand. They do not correspond to modern ideas of Scripture proof.

Vv. 7, 8. Herod's next step.—τότε Ἡρώδης . . . ἀστέρος: τότε, frequent formula of transition with our evangelist, cf. vv. 16, 17; iii. 1, 5, 11, etc. Herod wished to ascertain precisely when the child the Magi had come to worship was born. He assumed that the event would synchronise with the ascent of the star which the Magi had seen in its rising, and which still continued to be seen (φαινομένου). Therefore he made particular inquiries (ἠκρίβωσεν) as to the time of the star, i.e., the time of its first appearing. This was a blind, an affectation of great interest in all that related to the child, in whose destinies even the stars were involved.—Ver. 8. καὶ πέμψας . . . αὐτῷ: his hypocrisy went further. He bade the strangers go to Bethlehem, find out the whereabouts of the child, come back and tell him, that he also might go and worship Him. Worship, i.e., murder! "Incredible motive!" (H.C.). Yes, as a real motive for a man like Herod, but not as a pretended one, and quite likely to be believed by these simple, guileless souls from the east.—πέμψας εἶπεν: the sending was synchronous with the directions according to De Wette, prior according to Meyer. It is a question of no importance here, but it is sometimes an important question in what relation the action expressed by the aorist participle stands to that expressed by the following finite verb. The rule certainly is that the participle expresses an action going before: one thing having happened, another thereafter took place. But there is an important class of exceptions. The aorist participle "may express time coincident with that of the verb, when the actions of the verb and the participle are practically one". Goodwin, Syntax, p. 52, and vide article there referred to by

9. Οἱ δὲ ἀκούσαντες τοῦ βασιλέως ἐπορεύθησαν· καὶ ἰδού, ὁ ἀστήρ, ὃν εἶδον ἐν τῇ ἀνατολῇ, [q] προῆγεν αὐτούς, ἕως ἐλθὼν ἔστη [1] [r] ἐπάνω οὗ ἦν τὸ παιδίον. 10. ἰδόντες δὲ τὸν ἀστέρα, ἐχάρησαν χαρὰν μεγάλην [s] σφόδρα· 11. καὶ ἐλθόντες εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, εὗρον [2] τὸ

q Mk. x. 32. Mt. xxi. 9 (with αὐτὸν W.H.)
r Ch. v. 14; xxi. 7; xxiii. 18.
s Ch. xvii. 6, 23; xviii. 31; xix. 25; xxvi. 22; xxvii. 54.

[1] εσταθη in ℵBCD.

[2] ειδον in all uncials, ευρον only in minusc. Came in probably from ver. 8 (ευρητε).

Prof. Ballantine in Bibl. Sacra., 1884, on the application of this rule to the N. T., in which many instances of the kind occur. Most frequent in the Gospels is the expression ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπε, which does not mean "having first answered he then proceeded to say," but "in answering he said". The case before us may be one of this kind. He sent them by saying "Go and search," etc.

Vv. 9, 10. The Magi go on their errand to Bethlehem. They do not know the way, but the star guides them. ἰδοὺ ὁ ἀστὴρ: looking up to heaven as they set out on their journey, they once more behold their heavenly guide.—ὃν εἶδον ἐ. τ. ἀνατολῇ: is the meaning that they had seen the star only at its rising, finding their way to Jesus without its guidance, and that again it appeared leading them to Bethlehem? So Bengel, and after him Meyer. Against this is φαινομένου, ver. 7, which implies continuous visibility. The clause ὃν εἶδον, etc., is introduced for the purpose of identification. It was their celestial guide appearing again.—προῆγεν: it kept going before them (imperfect) all the way till, arriving at Bethlehem, it took up its position (ἐστάθη) right over the spot where the child was. The star seemed to go before them by an optical illusion (Weiss-Meyer); it really, in the view of the evangelist, went before and stopped over the house (De Wette, who, of course, regards this as impossible in fact). Ver. 10, ἰδόντες δὲ . . . χαρὰν μεγάλην σφόδρα: seeing the star standing over the sacred spot, they were overjoyed. Their quest was at an end; they had at last reached the goal of their long journey. σφόδρα, a favourite word of our evangelist, and here very appropriate after μεγάλην to express exuberant gladness, ecstatic delight. On the convoy of the star, Fritzsche remarks: "Fuit certe stellae pompa tam gravi tempore digna". Some connect the seeing of the star in ver. 10 with the beginning of the journey from Jerusalem to Bethlehem. They rejoiced, says Euthy. Zig. ὡς εὑρόντες τὸν ἀψευδέστατον ὁδηγόν

Ver. 11. The Magi enter and do homage.—καὶ ε. ε. τ. οἰκίαν: the house. In Luke the shepherds find the holy family in a stable, and the holy child lying in a manger; reconcilable by assuming that the Magi arrived after they had found refuge in a friend's house (Epiphan. Theophy.).—εἶδον τ. π. αὐτοῦ: εἶδον better than εὗρον, which seems to have been introduced by the copyists as not only in itself suitable to the situation, but relieving the monotony caused by too frequent use of εἶδον (vv. 9, 10). The child with His mother, Joseph not mentioned, not intentionally, that no wrong suspicions might occur to the Gentiles (Rabanus in Aquin. Cat. Aur.).—καὶ πεσόντες . . . σμύρναν. They come, eastern fashion, with full hands, as befits those who enter into the presence of a king. They open the boxes or sacks (θησαυρούς, some ancient copies seem to have read πήρας = sacculos, which Grotius, with probability, regards as an interpretative gloss that had found its way into the text, vide Epiphanius Adv. Haer. Alogi., c. 8), and bring forth gold, frankincense and myrrh, the two latter being aromatic gums distilled from trees.—λίβανον, in classic Greek, the tree, in later Greek and N. T., the gum, τὸ θυμιώμενον = λιβανωτός, vide Phryn. ed. Lobeck, p. 187. The gifts were of three kinds, hence the inference that the Magi were three in number. That they were kings was deduced from texts in Psalms and Prophecies (e.g., Psalm lxxii. 10, Isaiah lx. 3), predicting that kings would come doing homage and bringing gifts to Messiah. The legend of the three kings dates as far back as Origen, and is beautiful but baseless. It grew with time; by-and-by the kings were furnished with names. The legendary spirit loves definiteness. The gifts would be products of the givers' country, or in high esteem and costly there. Hence the inference drawn by some that the Magi were from Arabia. Thus Grotius: "Myrrha nonnisi in Arabia nascitur, nec thus nisi apud Jabaeos Arabum portionem: sed et aurifera est felix Arabia". Gold and incense παιδίον μετὰ Μαρίας τῆς μητρὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ πεσόντες προσεκύνησαν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀνοίξαντες τοὺς [t] θησαυροὺς αὐτῶν προσήνεγκαν αὐτῷ δῶρα, χρυσὸν καὶ [u] λίβανον καὶ [v] σμύρναν. 12. καὶ χρηματισθέντες κατ' ὄναρ μὴ [w] ἀνακάμψαι πρὸς Ἡρώδην, δι' ἄλλης ὁδοῦ [x] ἀνεχώρησαν εἰς τὴν χώραν αὐτῶν.

13. Ἀναχωρησάντων δὲ αὐτῶν, ἰδοὺ, ἄγγελος Κυρίου φαίνεται κατ' ὄναρ[1] τῷ Ἰωσήφ, λέγων, "Ἐγερθεὶς παράλαβε τὸ παιδίον καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ, καὶ φεῦγε εἰς Αἴγυπτον, καὶ ἴσθι ἐκεῖ ἕως ἂν εἴπω σοί· μέλλει γὰρ Ἡρώδης ζητεῖν τὸ παιδίον, τοῦ ἀπολέσαι αὐτό." 14. Ὁ δὲ ἐγερθεὶς παρέλαβε τὸ παιδίον καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ νυκτός, καὶ ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς Αἴγυπτον, καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ ἕως τῆς t Cf. vi. 19-21. Lk. xii. 33. Heb. xi. 26 (= contentum).

u Rev. xviii. 13.
v John xix. 39.
w Lk. x. 6. Acts xviii. 21. Heb. x. 15.
x vv. 14, 22; iv. 12; ix. 24; xii. 15, al.

[1] B has κατ οναρ εφανη as in i. 20 (W.H. margin).

(λίβανος) are mentioned in Isaiah lx. 6 among the gifts to be brought to Israel in the good time coming. The fathers delighted in assigning to these gifts of the Magi mystic meanings: gold as to a king, incense as to God, myrrh as to one destined to die (ὡς μέλλοντι γεύσασθαι θανάτου). Grotius struck into a new line: gold = works of mercy; incense = prayer; myrrh = purity—to the disgust of Fritzsche, who thought such mystic interpretations beneath so great a scholar.

Ver. 12. Their pious errand fulfilled, the Magi, warned to keep out of Herod's way, return home by another road.—χρηματισθέντες points to divine guidance given in a dream (κατ ὄναρ); responso accepto, Vulg. The passive, in the sense of a divine oracle given, found chiefly in N. T. (Fritzsche after Casaubon). Was the oracle given in answer to a prayer for guidance? Opinions differ. It may be assumed here, as in the case of Joseph (i. 20), that the Magi had anxious thoughts corresponding to the divine communication. Doubts had arisen in their minds about Herod's intentions. They had, doubtless, heard something of his history and character, and his manner on reflection may have appeared suspicious. A skilful dissembler, yet not quite successful in concealing his hidden purpose even from these guileless men. Hence a sense of need of guidance, if not a formal petition for it, may be taken for granted. Divine guidance comes only to prepared hearts. The dream reflects the antecedent state of mind.—μὴ ἀνακάμψαι, not to turn back on their steps towards Jesus and Herod. Fritzsche praises the felicity of this word as implying that to go by Jerusalem was a roundabout for travellers from Bethel to the east. Apart from the question of fact, such a thought does not seem to be in the mind of the evangelist. He is thinking, not of the shortest road, but of avoiding Herod—ἀνεχώρησαν, they withdrew not only homewards, but away from Herod's neighbourhood. A word of frequent occurrence in our Gospel, four times in this chapter (vv. 13, 14, 22).

Vv. 13-23. Flight to Egypt, massacre in Bethlehem, return to Nazareth. These three stories have one aim. They indicate the omens which appear in beginnings—omina principiis inesse solent (Ovid). The fortunes of Christianity foreshadowed in the experiences of the holy child: welcomed by Gentiles, evil entreated by Jews. "The real contents of these sections embody an ideal aim" (Schanz).

Vv. 13-15. Flight to Egypt. Ver. 13, φαίνεται: assuming that this is the correct reading, the flight to Egypt is represented as following close on the departure of the Magi; the historic present, vividly introducing one scene after another. A subjective state of anxiety is here also to be presumed. Whence arising we can only conjecture. Did the Magi give a hint, mentioning Herod's name in a significant manner? Be that as it may, Joseph also gets the necessary direction.—Ἐγερθεὶς . . . εἰς Αἴγυπτον: Egypt—near, friendly, and the refuge of Israel's ancestors in days of old, if also their house of bondage.—παράλαβε, take with a view to taking care of (cf. John i. 11, "His own received Him not," παρέλαβον); benigne, Fritzsche—ἕως . . . σοί: either generally, till I give thee further orders (Fritzsche); or till I tell thee to return

[y] τελευτῆς Ἡρώδου· 15. ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ[1] Κυρίου διὰ τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, "Ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἐκάλεσα τὸν υἱόν μου." 16. Τότε Ἡρώδης, ἰδὼν ὅτι [z] ἐνεπαίχθη ὑπὸ τῶν μάγων, [a] ἐθυμώθη λίαν, καὶ ἀποστείλας [b] ἀνεῖλε πάντας τοὺς παῖδας τοὺς ἐν Βηθλεὲμ καὶ ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς [c] ὁρίοις αὐτῆς, ἀπὸ [d] διετοῦς καὶ κατωτέρω, κατὰ τὸν χρόνον ὃν ἠκρίβωσε παρὰ τῶν μάγων. 17. Τότε ἐπληρώθη τὸ

y here only in N. T. Sept. (Gen. xxvii. 2) for מוֹת
z Ch. xx. 19; xxvii. 41, parall.
a here only in N. T. Gen. xxx. 2.
b Lk. xxii. 2: xxiii. 32 (Acts often).
c Ch. iv. 13; viii. 34; xv. 22; xix. 1.
d here only. Cf. Acts xxiv. 27.

[1] אBCD, etc., omit του.

(Meyer, Schanz); sense the same; the time of such new direction is left vague (ἂν with sub.).—μέλλει γὰρ: gives reason of the command.—τοῦ απολέσαι αὐτό: Herod's first purpose was to kill Mary's child alone. He afterwards killed many to make sure of the one. The genitive of the infinitive to express purpose belongs to comparatively late Greek. It occurs constantly in the Sept. and in N. T.—Ver. 14. ὁ δὲ ἐγερθεὶς: Joseph promptly executes the command, νυκτὸς, before the day, indicating alarm as well as obedience. The words of the command in ver. 13 are repeated by the evangelist in ver. 14 to emphasise the obedient spirit of Joseph.—Ver. 15. καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ, etc.: the stay in Egypt cannot have been long, only a few months, probably, before the death of Herod (Nösgen).—ἵνα πληρωθῇ: another prophetic reference, this time proceeding directly from the evangelist; Hosea xi. 1, given after the Hebrew, not the Sept., which for בָּנָי has τέκνα αὐτοῦ. The oracle states a historical fact, and can therefore only be a typical prophecy. The event in the life of the infant Jesus may seem an insignificant fulfilment. Not so did it appear to the evangelist. For him all events in the life of the Christ possessed transcendent significance. Was it an event at all? criticism asks. Did the fact suggest the prophetic reference, or did the prophecy create the fact? In reply, be it said that the narratives in this chapter of the Infancy all hang together. If any one of them occurred, all might occur. The main question is, is Herod's solicitude credible? If so, then the caution of the Magi, the flight to Egypt, the massacre at Bethlehem, the return at the tyrant's death to Nazareth, are all equally credible.

Vv. 16-18. The massacre. Τότε: ominous then. When he was certain that the Magi were not going to come back to report what they had found at Bethlehem, Herod was enraged as one who had been befooled (ἐνεπαίχθη). Maddened with anger, he resolves on more truculent measures than he at first intended: kill all of a certain age to make sure of the one—such is his savage order to his obsequious hirelings. Incredible? Anything is credible of the man who murdered his own wife and sons. This deed shocks Christians; but it was a small affair in Herod's career, and in contemporary history.—ἐν Βηθ. καὶ ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ὁρίοις αὐτῆς, in Bethlehem, and around in the neighbourhood, to make quite sure.—ἀπὸ διετοῦς καὶ κατωτέρω: the meaning is clear—all children from an hour to two years old. But διετοῦς may be taken either as masculine, agreeing with παιδός understood = from a two-year-old child, or as a neuter adjective used as a noun = from the age of two years, a bimatu as in Vulg. There are good authorities on both sides. For a similar phrase, vide 1 Chron. xxvii. 23, ἀπὸ εἰκοσαετοῦς. Herod made his net wide enough; two years ensured an ample margin.—κατὰ τ. χ. . . . μάγων. Euthy. Zig. insists that these words must be connected, not with διετοῦς, but with κατωτέρω, putting a comma after the former word, and not after the latter. If, he argues, Herod had definitely ascertained from the Magi that the child must be two years old, he would not have killed those younger. They made Mary's child younger; Herod kept their time and added a margin: πλάτος ἕτερον αὐτὸς προσέθηκε. It does not seem to matter very much. Herod would not be very scrupulous. He was likely to add a margin in either case; below if they made the age two years, above if they made it less—ver. 18: still another prophetic reference, Jerem. xxxi. 15, freely reproduced from the Sept.; pathetic and poetic certainly, if the relevance be not conspicuously apparent. The evangelist introduces the prophetic passage in this case, not with ἵνα, but with τότε, sug-ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ[1] Ἱερεμίου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 18. "Φωνὴ ἐν Ῥαμᾶ ἠκούσθη, θρῆνος καὶ[2] κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὀδυρμὸς πολύς, Ῥαχὴλ κλαίουσα τὰ τέκνα αὐτῆς· καὶ οὐκ ἤθελε[3] παρακληθῆναι, ὅτι οὐκ εἰσί." 19. Τελευτήσαντος δὲ τοῦ Ἡρώδου, ἰδού, ἄγγελος Κυρίου κατ' ὄναρ φαίνεται[4] τῷ Ἰωσὴφ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, λέγων, 20. "Ἐγερθεὶς παράλαβε τὸ παιδίον καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ, καὶ πορεύου εἰς γῆν Ἰσραήλ· τεθνήκασι γὰρ οἱ ζητοῦντες τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ παιδίου." 21. Ὁ δὲ ἐγερθεὶς παρέλαβε τὸ παιδίον καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἦλθεν[5] εἰς γῆν Ἰσραήλ. 22. ἀκούσας δὲ ὅτι Ἀρχέλαος βασιλεύει

e Ch. xiii. 42, 50, al.
f 2 Cor. vii. 7.
g with acc. here only.
h Rom. xi. 3.
i Rev. v. 10 (with ἐπί and gen.).

[1] δια in ℵBCD; υπο not acc. to style of Evang. (Weiss in Meyer).

[2] θρηνος και om. ℵBZ; probably introduced to correspond with Sept.

[3] ηθελησε in DZ.

[4] φαινεται κατ οναρ, ℵBDZ.

[5] εισηλθεν in ℵBC.

gestive of a fulfilment not regarded as exclusive. The words, even in their original place, are highly imaginative. The scene of Rachel weeping for her children is one of several tableaux, which passed before the prophet's eye in a vision, in a dream which, on awaking, he felt to be sweet. It was poetry to begin with, and it is poetry here. Rachel again weeps over her children; hers, because she was buried there, the prophet's Ramah, near Gibeah, north of Jerusalem, standing for Bethlehem as far to the south. The prophetic passage did not create the massacre; the tradition of the massacre recalled to mind the prophecy, and led to its being quoted, though of doubtful appositeness in a strict sense. Jacob's beloved wife seems to have occupied an imaginative place also in Rabbinical literature. Wünsche quotes this from the Midrasch: "Why did Jacob bury Rachel on the way to Ephratah or Bethlehem? (Gen. xxxv. 16). Because he foresaw that the exiles would at some future time pass that way, and he buried her there that she might pray for them" (Beiträge, p. 11). Rachel was to the Hebrew fancy a mother for Israel in all time, sympathetic in all her children's misfortunes.

Vv. 19-21. Joseph's return. Τελευτήσαντος δὲ τ. Ἡρ: Herod died in 750 U.C. in his 70th year, at Jericho, of a horrible loathsome disease, rotten in body as in soul, altogether an unwholesome man (vide Joseph, Bell, i. 33, 1-5; Antiq., xvii. 6, 5; Euseb., H. E., i. 6, 8). The news of his death would fly swiftly, and would not take long to reach Egypt. There would be no need of an angel to inform Joseph of the fact. But his anxieties would not therefore be at an end. Who was to succeed Herod? Might he not be another of the same type? Might disorder and confusion not arise? Would it be safe or wise to return to Palestine? Guidance was again needed, desired and obtained.—ἰδοὺ ἄγγελος . . . λέγων: the guidance is given once more in a dream (κατ' ὄναρ). The anxious thoughts of the daytime are reflected in the dream by night, and the angelic message comes to put an end to uncertainty.—ver. 20. Ἐγερθεὶς . . . Ἰσραήλ: it is expressed in the same terms as those of the message directing flight to Egypt, except of course that the land is different, and the order not flee but return. "Arise, take the child and His mother." The words were as a refrain in the life of Joseph in those critical months.—τεθνήκασι γὰρ: in this general manner is the death of Herod referred to, as if in studious avoidance of the dreaded name. They are dead. The plural here (οἱ ζητοῦντες), as often, expressed a general idea, a class, though only a single person is meant (vide Winer, § 27, 2, and Exodus iv. 19). But the manner of expression may indicate a desire to dissipate completely Joseph's apprehensions. There is nothing, no person to fear: go! Ver. 21. ὁ δὲ ἐγερθεὶς . . . Ἰσραήλ: prompt obedience follows, but νυκτὸς (ver. 14) is omitted this time. Joseph may wait till day; the matter is not so urgent. Then the word was φεῦγε. It was a flight for life, every hour or minute important.

Vv. 22-23. Settlement in Nazareth in ἐπὶ[1] τῆς Ἰουδαίας ἀντὶ Ἡρώδου τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ,[2] ἐφοβήθη [j] ἐκεῖ ἀπελθεῖν· χρηματισθεὶς δὲ κατ᾽ ὄναρ, ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς τὰ [k] μέρη τῆς j for ἐκεῖσε. Ch. xvii. 20. John xi. 8; xviii. 3.

k Ch. xv. 21; xvi. 13. Mk. viii. 10.

[1] Omit επι ℵB and several cursives. With επι the usual construction; therefore its omission here probably correct.

[2] ℵBC place Ηρωδου after τ. πατ. αυτου.

Galilee. Joseph returns with mother and child to Israel, but not to Judaea and Bethlehem.—ἀκούσας . . . Ἡρῴδου: Archelaos reigns in his father's stead. A man of kindred nature, suspicious, truculent (Joseph., Ant., 17, 11, 2), to be feared and avoided by such as had cause to fear his father.—βασιλεύει, reigns, not in the strict sense of the word. He exercised the authority of an ethnarch, with promise of a royal title if he conducted himself so as to deserve it. In fact he earned banishment. At Herod's death the Roman emperor divided his kingdom into four parts, of which he gave two to Archelaus, embracing Judaea, Idumaea and Samaria; the other two parts were assigned to Antipas and Philip, also sons of Herod: to Antipas, Galilee and Peraea; to Philip, Batanea, Trachonitis and Auranitis. They bore the title of Tetrarch, ruler of a fourth part (Joseph., Ant., 17, 11, 4).—ἐφοβήθη ἐκεῖ ἀπελθεῖν. It is implied that to settle in Judaea was the natural course to follow, and that it would have been followed but for a special reason. Schanz, taking a hint from Augustine, suggests that Joseph wished to settle in Jerusalem, deeming that city the most suitable home for the Messiah, but that God judged the despised Galilee a better training school for the future Saviour of publicans, sinners and Pagans. This hypothesis goes on the assumption that the original seat of the family was Nazareth.—ἐκεῖ: late Greek for ἐκεῖσε. In later Greek authors the distinction between ποῖ ποῦ, οἷ οὗ, ὅποι ὅπου, ἐκεῖ and ἐκεῖσε practically disappeared. Rutherford's New Phrynichus, p. 114. Vide for another instance, Luke xxi. 2. Others explain the substitution as a case of attraction common in adverbs of place. The idea of remaining is in the mind = He feared to go thither to abide there. Vide Lobeck's Phryn., p. 44, and Fritzsche.—χρηματισθεὶς τῆς Γαλιλαίας: again oracular counsel given in a dream, implying again mental perplexity and need of guidance. Going to Galilee, Judaea being out of the question, was not a matter of course, as we should have expected. The narrative of the first Gospel appears to be constructed on the assumption that Nazareth was not the original home of the holy family, and to represent a tradition for which Nazareth was the adopted home, Bethlehem being the original. "The evangelist did not know that Nazareth was the original seat of the family." Weiss, Matt. evang., p. 98.

Ver. 23. κατῴκησεν. κατοικεῖν in Sept. is used regularly for יָשַׁב in the sense of to dwell, and with ἐν in Luke and Acts (Luke xiii. 4; Acts i. 20, etc.) in the same sense. Here with εἰς it seems to mean going to settle in, adopting as a home, the district of Galilee, the particular town called Nazareth.—εἰς πόλιν is to be taken along with κατῳ. not with ἐλθών. Arrived in Galilee he transferred his family to Nazareth, as afterwards Jesus migrated to Capernaum to carry on there His ministry (iv. 13, where the same form of expression recurs).—Ναζαρέτ, a town in lower Galilee, in the tribe of Zebulon, nowhere mentioned in O. T. or Josephus. —ὅπως πληρωθῇ, etc.: a final prophetic reference winding up the history of the infancy. ὅπως not ἵνα, as usual, but with much the same meaning. It does not necessarily imply that a prophetic oracle consciously influenced Joseph in making his choice, but only that the evangelist saw in that choice a fulfilment of prophecy. But what prophecy? The reference is vague, not to any particular prophet, but to the prophets in general. In no one place can any such statement be found. Some have suggested that it occurred in some prophetic book or oracle no longer extant. "Don't ask," says Euthy. Zig., "in what prophets; you will not find: many prophetic books were lost" (after Chrys.). Olearius, in an elaborate note, while not adopting, states with evident sympathy this view as held by others. Jerome, following the Jewish scholars (eruditi Hebraeorum) of his time, believed the reference to be mainly to Isaiah xi., where mention is made of a branch (נֵצֶר) that shall 1 with εἰς. Ch. iv. 23. Acts vii. 4 (ἐν).

Γαλιλαίας, 23. καὶ ἐλθὼν [1] κατῴκησεν εἰς πόλιν λεγομένην Ναζαρέτ [1] ὅπως πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τῶν προφητῶν, Ὅτι Ναζωραῖος κληθήσεται spring out of Jesse's root. This view is accepted by most modern scholars, Catholic and Protestant, the name of the town being viewed as a derivative from the Hebrew word (a feminine form). The epithet Ναζωραῖος will thus mean: "the man of Nazareth, the town of the offshoot". De Wette says: "In the spirit of the exegetical mysticism of the time, and applying what the Jews called Midrasch, deeper investigation, the word is used in a double sense in allusion at once to נֵצֶר, Isaiah xi. 1, sprout, and to the name of Nazareth". There may be something in the suggestion that the reference is to Judges xiii. 7: ὅτι Ναζιραῖον θεοῦ ἔσται, and the idea: one living apart in a secluded town. (So Furrer in Die Bedentung der bibl. Geographie für d. bib. Exegese, p. 15.)

[1] This spelling is found in ℵBDL and adopted by W.H. Ναζαρεθ in CΣ. Other forms occur.

This final prophetic reference in the history of the infancy is the weakest link in the chain. It is wasted effort to try to show its value in the prophetic argument. Instead of doing this, apologists would act more wisely by frankly recognising the weakness, and drawing from it an argument in favour of historicity. This may very legitimately be done. Of all the incidents mentioned in this chapter, the settlement in Nazareth is the only one we have other means of verifying. Whether it was the original or the adopted home of Jesus may be doubtful, but from many references in the Gospels we know that it was His home from childhood till manhood. In this case, therefore, we certainly know that the historic fact suggested the prophetic reference, instead of the prophecy creating the history. And the very weakness of the prophetic reference in this instance raises a presumption that that was the nature of the connection between prophecy and history throughout. It is a caveat against the critical theory that in the second chapter of Matthew we have an imaginary history of the infancy of Jesus, compiled to meet a craving for knowledge on the subject, and adapted to the requirements of faith, the rudiments of the story consisting of a collection of Messianic prophecies—the star of Jacob, princes bringing gifts, Rachel weeping for her children, etc. The last of the prophetic references would never have occurred to any one, whether the evangelist or any other unknown source of the tradition, unless there had been a fact going before, the settlement in Nazareth. But given the fact, there was a strong desire to find some allusion to it in the O. T. Faith was easily satisfied; the faintest allusion or hint would do. That was in this case, and presumably in most cases of the kind, the problem with which the Christian mind in the Apostolic age was occupied: not creating history, but discovering in evangelic facts even the most minute, prophetic fulfilments. The evangelist's idea of fulfilment may provoke a smile, but it might also awaken a feeling of thankfulness in view of what has been stated. It is with the prophetic references in the Gospels as with songs without words. The composer has a certain scene or state of mind in his view, and writes under its inspiration. But you are not in his secret, and cannot tell when you hear the music what it means. But let the key be given, and immediately you find new meaning in the music. The prophecies are the music; the key is the history. Given the prophecies alone and you could with difficulty imagine the history; given the history you can easily understand how religious fancy might discover corresponding prophecies. That the prophecies, once suggested, might react on the facts and lead to legendary modifications is of course not to be denied.

CHAPTER III. THE MINISTRY OF THE BAPTIST, AND THE BAPTISM OF JESUS. This chapter and part of the next, containing the narrative of the temptation (iv. 1-11), form the prelude to the public ministry of Jesus. John, of whom we have not heard before, appears as consecrating Jesus to His Messianic calling by baptism, and from the baptism Jesus passes to the scene of moral trial. In what year of Christ's life these events happened is not indicated. The new narrative begins with the vague phrase,

III. 1. [a] Ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἡμέραις [a] ἐκείναις [b] παραγίνεται Ἰωάννης ὁ βαπτιστής, [c] κηρύσσων ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ τῆς Ἰουδαίας, καὶ[1] λέγων, 2. "Μετανοεῖτε· [d] ἤγγικε γὰρ ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν." 3. Οὗτος a Cf. Ex. ii. 11, 23. Is. xxxviii. 1. b Cf. Heb. ix. 11 for same absolute use. c passim in Mt. Mk. & Lk. in ref. to the kingdom of God. Cf. Ex. xxxii. 5. d Cf. ἐγγίζομεν, Heb. vii. 19, and ἔγγυος, ver. 22 (= one who keeps us near to God).

[1] καὶ omitted in ℵB and Egypt. verss.

"in those days". But it is obvious from the contents that Jesus has now reached manhood; His thoughts and experiences are those of mature years. From childhood to manhood is an absolute blank in our Gospel. The evangelist gives a genesis of Christ's body, but no genesis of His mind. As we see it in the sequel, it is a miracle of wisdom. It too, doubtless, had its genesis and history, but they are not given or even hinted at. Christ is ushered on the scene an unexplained prodigy. One would like to know how He reached this unprecedented height of wisdom and grace (Luke ii. 52). The only possible source of knowledge is reasoning back from the outcome in the full-grown man. Jesus grew, and the final result may reveal in part the means and process of growth. The anti-Pharisaic spirit and clean-cut descriptions of Pharisaic ways imply antecedent study, perhaps in Rabbinical schools. The parables may not have been so extempore as they seem, but may be the ripe fruit of long brooding thought, things new and yet old.

Vv. 1-6. John the Baptist appears (Mark i. 1-6, Luke iii. 1-6). Ver. 1. ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις: the time when most vaguely indicated. Luke's narrative here (iii. 1) presents a great contrast, as if with conscious intent to supply a want. John's ministry is there dated with reference to the general history of the world, and Christ's age at His baptism is given. Luke's method is more satisfactory in a historical point of view, but Matthew's manner of narration is dramatically effective. He passes abruptly to the new theme, and leaves you to guess the length of the interval. A similarly indefinite phrase occurs in the story of Moses (Ex. ii. 11). There has been much discussion as to what period of time the evangelist had in view. Some say none, except that of the events to be related. "In those days," means simply, "in the days when the following events happened" (so Euthy. Zig.). Others suggest explanations based on the relation of our Gospel to its sources, e.g., use of a source in which more was told about John, or anticipation of Mark i. 9, where the phrase is used in reference to Christ's coming to be baptised. Probably the best course is to take it as referring back from the apostolic age to the great creative epoch of the evangelic history = "In those memorable years to which we look back with wistful reverent gaze".—παραγίνεται ὁ Ι.: John appears on the stage of history—historical present, used "to give a more animated statement of past events" (Goodwin's Syntax, p. 11). John ὁ βαπτιστὴς, well known by this epithet, and referred to under that designation by Josephus (Antiq., xviii. 5, 2, on which vide Schürer; Jewish History, div. i., vol. ii., p. 23). Its currency naturally suggests that John's baptism was partly or wholly an originality, not to be confounded with proselyte baptism, which perhaps did not even exist at that time.—κηρύσσων, preaching as well as baptising, heralding the approach of the Kingdom of Heaven, standing especially in N. T. for proclamation of the good news of God, distinct from διδάσκων (iv. 23); a solemn word for a momentous matter.—ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ τ. Ἰουδαίας: scene of the ministry, the pasture lands lying between the central range of hills and the Jordan and the Dead Sea, not all belonging to Judaea, but of the same character; suitable scene for such a ministry.

Ver. 2. λέγων introduces the burden of his preaching.—μετανοεῖτε. Repent. That was John's great word. Jesus used it also when He began to preach, but His distinctive watchword was Believe. The two watchwords point to different conceptions of the kingdom. John's kingdom was an object of awful dread—Jesus' of glad welcome. The message of the one was legal, of the other evangelic. Change of mind John deemed very necessary as a preparation for Messiah's advent.—ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν. The Kingdom of Heaven. This title is peculiar to Matthew. In the other Gospels it is called the Kingdom of God. Not used either by John or by γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ῥηθεὶς ὑπὸ[1] Ἠσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, "[e]Φωνὴ βοῶντος ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, 'Ἑτοιμάσατε τὴν ὁδὸν Κυρίου· εὐθείας ποιεῖτε τὰς [f]τρίβους αὐτοῦ.'" 4. Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Ἰωάννης εἶχε τὸ [g]ἔνδυμα αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τριχῶν καμήλου, καὶ ζώνην δερματίνην περὶ τὴν ὀσφὺν αὐτοῦ· ἡ δὲ τροφὴ αὐτοῦ ἦν[2] [h]ἀκρίδες καὶ μέλι [i]ἄγριον.

e Is. xl. 3. f here and in parall. in sense of a worn path (τρίβω). g Ch. xxii. 11, xxviii. 3; clothing generally in Mt. vi. 25, 28. h Mk. i. 6. Rev. ix. 3, 7. i Mk. i. 6. Jude 13 (fierce).

[1] υπο here as in ii. 17 instead of δια in ℵBCD.

[2] αυτου after ην in ℵBCD. The T. R. is suspiciously smooth.

Jesus, says Weiss, but to be ascribed to the evangelist. There does not seem to be any urgent reason for this judgment. In Daniel ii. 44 the kingdom is spoken of as to be set up by "the God of heaven," and in the Judaistic period previous to the Christian era, when a transcendent conception of God began to prevail, the use of heaven as a synonym for God came in. Custom might cause it to be employed, even by those who did not sympathise with the conception of God as transcendent, outside and far off from the world (vide note in H. C., p. 55).

Ver. 3. οὗτος γάρ ἐστιν, etc.: the evangelist here speaks. He finds in John the man of prophecy who proclaims in the desert the near advent of Jehovah coming to deliver His people. He quotes Isaiah only. Mark (i. 2) quotes Malachi also, identifying John, not only with the voice in the desert, but with Elijah. Isaiah's herald is not merely a type of John in the view of the evangelist; the two are identical. The quotation follows the Sept., except that for τοῦ θεοῦ ἡμῶν is substituted αὐτοῦ. Note where Matthew stops. Luke, the universalist, goes on to the end of the oracle. The mode of introducing the prophetic citation is peculiar. "This is he," not "that it might be fulfilled". Weiss (Meyer) thinks this an indication that the passage is taken from "the apostolic source".

Ver. 4. αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Ι. The story returns to the historical person, John, and identifies him with the herald of prophecy. "This same John." Then follows a description of his way of life—his clothing and his food, the details conveying a life-like picture of the manner of the man: his habits congruous to his vocation.—τὸ ἔνδυμα ἀπὸ τριχῶν καμήλου: his characteristic (αὐτοῦ) piece of clothing was a rough rude garment woven out of camel's hair, not as some have thought, a camel's skin. We read in Heb. xi. 37, of sheep skins and goat skins worn by some of God's saints, but not of camel skins. Fritzsche takes the opposite view, and Grotius. Euthy., following Chrysostom, says: "Do not ask who wove his garment, or whence he got his girdle; for more wonderful is it that he should live from childhood to manhood in so inhospitable a climate". John took his fashion in dress from Elijah, described (2 Kings i. 8) as "an hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins". It need not be doubted that the investment is historical, not a legendary creation, due to the opinion that John was Elijah redivivus. The imitation in dress does not imply a desire to pass for Elijah, but expresses similarity of mood.—ἡ δὲ τροφὴ: his diet, as poor as his clothing, was mean.—ἀκρίδες: the last of four kinds of edible locusts named in Lev. xi. 22 (Sept.), still it seems used by the poor in the east; legs and wings stripped off, and the remainder boiled or roasted. "The Beduins of Arabia and of East Jordan land eat many locusts, roasted, boiled or baked in cakes. In Arabia they are sold in the market. They taste not badly" (Benzinger, Hebraische Archäologie). Euthy. reports to the same effect as to his own time: many eat it in those parts τεταριχευμένον (pickled). Not pleasant food, palatable only to keen hunger. If we may trust Epiphanius, the Ebionites, in their aversion to animal food, grudged the Baptist even that poor diet, and restricted him to cakes made with honey (ἐγκρίδας ἐν μελίτι), or to honey alone. Vide Nicholson's Gospel according to the Hebrews, p. 34, and the notes there. Also Suicer's Thesaurus, sub. v. ἀκρίς.—μέλι ἄγριον. Opinion is divided between bee honey and tree honey, i.e, honey made by wild bees in trees or holes in the rocks, or a liquid exuding from palms and fig trees. (On this also consult Nicholson, Gospel of Hebrews, p. 35.) Both were used as food, but our decision should incline to

5. Τότε ἐξεπορεύετο πρὸς αὐτὸν Ἱεροσόλυμα καὶ πᾶσα ἡ Ἰουδαία [j] καὶ πᾶσα ἡ [j] περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου· 6. καὶ ἐβαπτίζοντο [1] ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ [2] ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, [k] ἐξομολογούμενοι τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν. 7. Ἰδὼν δὲ πολλοὺς τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ Σαδδουκαίων ἐρχομένους ἐπὶ τὸ βάπτισμα αὐτοῦ,[3] εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "[l] Γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, τίς [m] ὑπέδειξεν

j Gen. xiii. 10 (same phrase). Mt. xiv. 35. Mk. i. 28 al.

k here and in Mk. i. 5 = to confess sin. Similar sense in Acts xix. 18. James v. 16.

l Ch. xii. 34; xxiii. 33. Lk. iii. 7.

m Lk. iii. 7 (same const. and sense).

[1] Some copies (C[2] 33) have παντες after εβαπτ.

[2] ℵBCΔ al. have ποταμω after Ιορ. which the scribes may have omitted as superfluous.

[3] αυτου omitted in ℵB and by Origen.

vegetable honey, on the simple ground that it was the poorer food. Bee honey was a delicacy, and is associated with milk in Scripture in descriptions of a fertile land. The vegetable product would suit best John's taste and state. "Habitatori solitudinis congruum est, non delicias ciborum, sed necessitatem humanae carnis explere." Jerome.

Vv. 5-6. Effects of John's preaching. Remarkable by his appearance, his message, and his moral intensity, John made a great impression. They took him for a prophet, and a prophet was a novelty in those days. His message appealed to the common Messianic hope, and proclaimed fulfilment to be at hand.—Τότε, then, general note of time, frequent in this Gospel—ἐξεπορεύετο imperfect, denoting continued action. The movement of course was gradual. It began on a small scale and steadily grew till it reached colossal dimensions. Each evangelist, in his own way, bears witness to this. Luke speaks of crowds (iii. 7), Mark and Matthew give graphic particulars, similar, but in diverse order. "All Judaea and all the Jerusalemites," says Mark. Jerusalem, Judaea and the Jordan country, Matthew. The historical order was probably the reverse of that in Matthew's narrative. First came those from the surrounding country—people living near the Jordan, on either side, in what is now called El. Ghor. Then the movement extended in widening circles into Judaea. Finally it affected conservative, disdainful Jerusalem, slow to be touched by new popular influences—Ἱεροσόλυμα, the Greek form here as in ii. 3, and generally in this Gospel. It is not said all Jerusalem, as in Mark. The remarkable thing is that any came from that quarter. Standing first, and without the "all," the reference means even Jerusalem. The πᾶσα in the other two clauses is of course an exaggeration. It implies, not that every human being went to the Jordan, but that the movement was general. The evangelist expresses himself just as we should do in a similar case. Πᾶς with the article means "the whole," without "every".—Ver. 6. καὶ ἐβαπτίζοντο, the imperfect again. They were baptised as they came—ἐν τῷ Ἰορ. ποταμῷ. The word ποταμῷ, omitted in T. R., by all means to be retained. Dull prosaic scribes might deem it superfluous, as all men knew the Jordan was a river, but there is a touch of nature in it which helps us to call up the scene.—ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, by him, the one man. John would not want occupation, baptising such a crowd, one by one.—ἐξομολογούμενοι: confession was involved in the act of submitting to baptism at the hands of one whose preaching had for its burden, Repent. But there was explicit confession, frank, full (ἐκ intensifies), on the part of guilt-burdened men and women glad to get relief so. General or special confession? Probably both, now one, now the other, according to idiosyncrasy and mood. Confession was not exacted as a conditio sine qua non of baptism, but voluntary. The participle means, while confessing; not, provided they confessed. This confession of sins by individuals was a new thing in Israel. There was a collective confession on the great day of atonement, and individual confession in certain specified cases (Numb. v. 7), but no great spontaneous self-unburdenment of penitent souls—every man apart. It must have been a stirring sight.

Vv. 7-10. Words of rebuke and warning to unwelcome vistors (Luke iii. 7-9). Ver. 7. Ἰδὼν δὲ, etc.: among those who visited the Jordan were some, not a few, many indeed (πολλοὺς) of the ὑμῖν [n] φυγεῖν ἀπὸ [o] τῆς μελλούσης ὀργῆς; 8. ποιήσατε οὖν καρποὺς ἀξίους [1] τῆς μετανοίας· 9. καὶ μὴ [p] δόξητε [q] λέγειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, n Cf. Is xlviii. 20. Mk. xvi. 8. o for the idea of "the coming wrath," vide Rom. ii. 5. 1 Thess. i. 10. p Ch. vi. 7; xxvi. 53. q Ch. ix. 21. Lk. iii. 8. Cf. Ps. iv. 5; x. 6; xiv. 1.

[1] καρπον αξιον in ℵBCD and many other uncials. The reading in T. R. (found in L) may have come in from Lk. iii. 8, where it is undisputed.

Pharisees and Sadducees. The first mention of classes of whom the Gospels have much to say, the former being the legal precisians, virtuosi in religion, the latter the men of affairs and of the world, largely belonging to the sacerdotal class (consult Wellhausen, Die Pharisäer und die Sadducäer). Their presence at the scene of John's ministry is credible. Drawn doubtless by mixed motives, as persons of their type generally are, moral simplicity not being in their line; partly curious, partly fascinated, partly come to spy; in an ambiguous state of mind, neither decidedly in sympathy nor pronouncedly hostile. In any case they cannot remain indifferent to a movement so deep and widespread. So here they are; coming to (ἐπὶ) John's baptism, not to be baptised, nor coming against, as some (Olearius, e.g.) have thought, as if to put the movement down, but coming to witness the strange, novel phenomenon, and form their impressions. John did not make them welcome. His spirit was troubled by their presence. Simple, sensitive, moral natures instinctively shrink from the presence of insincerity, duplicity and craftiness.—ἰδὼν: how did they come under his observation? By their position in the crowd or on the outskirts of it, and by their aspect? How did he identify them as Pharisees and Sadducees? How did the hermit of the desert know there were such people? It was John's business to know all the moral characteristics of his time. These were the matters in which he took supreme interest, and he doubtless had means of informing himself, and took pains to do so. It may be assumed that he knew well about the Essenes living in his neighbourhood, by the shores of the Dead Sea, somewhat after his own fashion, and about the other two classes, whose haunts were the great centres of population. There might be Essenes too in the crowd, though not singled out, the history otherwise having no occasion to mention them.—γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν: sudden, irrepressible outburst of intense moral aversion. Why vipers? The ancient and mediæval interpreters (Chrysos., Aug., Theophy., Euthy.) had recourse in explanation to the fable of the young viper eating its mother's womb. The term ought rather to be connected with the following words about fleeing from the coming wrath. The serpents of all sorts lurking in the fields flee when the stubble is set on fire in harvest in preparation for the winter sowing. The Baptist likens the Pharisees and Sadducees to these serpents fleeing for their lives (Furrer in Zeitschrift für Missionskunde und Religionswissenschaft, 1890). Professor G. A. Smith, Historical Geography of the Holy Land, p. 495, suggests the fires among the dry scrub, in the higher stretches of the Jordan valley, chasing before them the scorpions and vipers, as the basis of the metaphor. There is grim humour as well as wrath in the similitude. The emphasis is not on vipers but on fleeing. But the felicity of the comparison lies in the fact that the epithet suits very well. It implies that the Pharisees and Sadducees are fleeing. They have caught slightly the infection of repentance; yet John does not believe in its depth or permanence.—τίς ὑπέδειξεν: there is surprise in the question. Can it be possible that even you have learned to fear the approaching crisis? Most unlikely scholars.—φυγεῖν ἀπὸ: pregnant for "flee and escape from" (De Wette). The aorist points to possibility, going with verbs of hoping and promising in this sense (Winer, § xliv. 7 c.). The implied thought is that it is not possible = who encouraged you to expect deliverance? The aorist further signifies a momentary act: now or never.—τῆς μελ. ὀργῆς, the day of wrath impending, preluding the advent of the Kingdom. The idea of wrath was prominent in John's mind: the coming of the Kingdom an awful affair; Messiah's work largely a work of judgment. But he rose above ordinary Jewish ideas in this: they conceived of the judgment as concerning the heathen peoples; he thought of it as concerning the godless in Israel—Ver. 8. ποιήσατε

Πατέρα ἔχομεν τὸν Ἀβραάμ· λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν, ὅτι δύναται ὁ Θεὸς [r] ἐκ τῶν λίθων τούτων ἐγεῖραι τέκνα τῷ Ἀβραάμ. 10. ἤδη δὲ καὶ[1] ἡ ἀξίνη πρὸς τὴν ῥίζαν τῶν δένδρων κεῖται· πᾶν οὖν δένδρον μὴ [r] ποιοῦν καρπὸν καλὸν [s] ἐκκόπτεται καὶ εἰς πῦρ βάλλεται. 11. Ἐγὼ μὲν βαπτίζω ὑμᾶς[2] ἐν ὕδατι εἰς μετάνοιαν· ὁ δὲ ὀπίσω μου ἐρχόμενος ἰσχυρότερός μου ἐστίν, οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ [t] ἱκανὸς τὰ ὑποδήματα

r vide ver. 8 and vii. 17-19; xiii. 26 al. Cf. Gen. i. 11.
s Ch. vii. 19; an eye, etc., v. 30; ἐκ τινος, Rom. xi. 24.
t Mk. i. 7. Lk. iii. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 9. 2 Cor. iii. 5 (=fit with inf.). 2 Cor. ii. 16 (πρός τι) οὖν, etc. "If, then, ye are in earnest about escape, produce fruit worthy of repentance; repentance means more than confession and being baptised." That remark might be applied to all that came, but it contained an innuendo in reference to the Pharisees and Sadducees that they were insincere even now. Honest repentance carries amendment along with it. Amendment is not expected in this case because the repentance is disbelieved in.—καρπὸν, collective, as in Gal. v. 22, fruit; the reading in T. R. is probably borrowed from Luke iii. 8. The singular is intrinsically the better word in addressing Pharisees who did good actions, but were not good. Yet John seems to have inculcated reformation in detail (Luke iii. 10-14). It was Jesus who proclaimed the inwardness of true morality. Fruit: the figure suggests that conduct is the outcome of essential character. Any one can do (ποιήσατε, vide Gen. i. 11) acts externally good, but only a good man can grow a crop of right acts and habits.

[1] και omitted in ℵBCDΔ and most modern editors.

[2] βαπτιζω υμας inverted in ℵB 1, 33.

Vv. 9-10. Protest and warning. καὶ μὴ δόξητε . . . τ. Ἀβραάμ: the meaning is plain = do not imagine that having Abraham for father will do instead of repentance—that all children of Abraham are safe whatever betide. But the expression is peculiar: do not think to say within yourselves. One would have expected either: do not think within yourselves, or, do not say, etc. Wetstein renders: "ne animum inducite sic apud vosmet cogitare," with whom Fritzsche substantially agrees = do not presume to say, cf. Phil. iii. 4.—πατέρα, father, in the emphatic position = we have as father, Abraham; it is enough to be his children: the secret thought of all unspiritual Jews, Abraham's children only in the flesh. It is probable that these words (vv. 9, 10) were spoken at a different time, and to a different audience, not merely to Pharisees and Sadducees, but to the people generally. Vv. 7-12 are a very condensed summary of a preaching ministry in which many weighty words were spoken (Luke iii. 18), these being selected as most representative and most relevant to the purpose of the evangelist. Vv. 7-8 contain a word for the leaders of the people; vv. 9-10 for the people at large; vv. 11-12 a word to inquirers about the Baptist's own relation to the Messiah.—Ver. 10. ἤδη δὲ ἡ ἀξίνη . . . κεῖται: judgment is at hand. The axe has been placed (κεῖμαι = perfect passive of τίθημι) at the root of the tree to lay it low as hopelessly barren. This is the doom of every non-productive fruit tree.—ἐκκόπτεται, the present tense, expressive not so much of the usual practice (Fritzsche) as of the near inevitable event.—μὴ ποιοῦν καρπὸν καλὸν, in case it produce not (μὴ conditional) good fruit, not merely fruit of some kind, degenerate, unpalatable.—ε. πῦρ βάλλεται, useless for any other purpose except to be firewood, as the wood of many fruit trees is.

Vv. 11, 12. John defines his relation to the Messiah (Mark i. 7-8; Luke iii. 15-17). This prophetic word would come late in the day when the Baptist's fame was at its height, and men began to think it possible he might be the Christ (Luke iii. 15). His answer to inquiries plainly expressed or hinted was unhesitating. No, not the Christ, there is a Coming One. He will be here soon. I have my place, important in its own way, but quite secondary and subordinate. John frankly accepts the position of herald and forerunner, assigned to him in ver. 3 by the citation of the prophetic oracle as descriptive of his ministry.—ἐγὼ μὲν, etc. ἐγὼ emphatic, but with the emphasis of subordination. My function is to baptise with water, symbolic of repentance.—ὁ δὲ ο. μ. ἐρχόμενος. He who is just coming (present participle). How did John know u Lk. iii. 17. v Lk. iii. 17. w Ch. vi. 26; xiii. 30. Lk. xii. 18. Jer. l. 26. x Mk. ix. 43. Lk. iii. 17.

βαστάσαι· αὐτὸς ὑμᾶς βαπτίσει ἐν Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρί. 12. οὗ τὸ [u] πτύον ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ [v] διακαθαριεῖ τὴν ἅλωνα αὐτοῦ, καὶ συνάξει τὸν σῖτον αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν [w] ἀποθήκην,[1] τὸ δὲ ἄχυρον κατακαύσει πυρὶ [x] ἀσβέστῳ."

[1] BL have αυτου after αποθηκην (W.H. marg.). L omits αυτου after σιτον.

the Messiah was just coming? It was an inference from his judgment on the moral condition of the time. Messiah was needed; His work was ready for Him; the nation was ripe for judgment. Judgment observe, for that was the function uppermost in his mind in connection with the Messianic advent. These two verses give us John's idea of the Christ, based not on personal knowledge, but on religious preconceptions. It differs widely from the reality. John can have known little of Jesus on the outer side, but he knew less of His spirit. We cannot understand his words unless we grasp this fact. Note the attributes he ascribes to the Coming One. The main one is strength—ἰσχυρότερος fully unfolded in the sequel. Along with strength goes dignity—οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ, etc. He is so great, august a personage, I am not fit to be His slave, carrying to and from Him for and after use His sandals (a slave's office in Judaea, Greece and Rome). An Oriental magnificent exaggeration.—αὐτὸς ὑμᾶς βαπτίσει, returns to the Power of Messiah, as revealed in His work, which is described as a baptism, the better to bring out the contrast between Him and His humble forerunner.—ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρί. Notable here are the words, ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ. They must be interpreted in harmony with John's standpoint, not from what Jesus proved to be, or in the light of St. Paul's teaching on the Holy Spirit, as the immanent source of sanctification. The whole baptism of the Messiah, as John conceives it, is a baptism of judgment. It has been generally supposed that the Holy Spirit here represents the grace of Christ, and the fire His judicial function; not a few holding that even the fire is gracious as purifying. I think that the grace of the Christ is not here at all. The πνεῦμα ἅγιον is a stormy wind of judgment; holy, as sweeping away all that is light and worthless in the nation (which, after the O. T. manner, is conceived of as the subject of Messiah's action, rather than the individual). The fire destroys what the wind leaves. John, with his wild prophetic imagination, thinks of three elements as representing the functions of himself and of Messiah: water, wind, fire. He baptises with water, in the running stream of Jordan, to emblem the only way of escape, amendment. Messiah will baptise with wind and fire, sweeping away and consuming the impenitent, leaving behind only the righteous. Possibly John had in mind the prophetic word, "our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away," Is. lxiv. 6; or, as Furrer, who I find also takes πνεῦμα in the sense of "wind," suggests, the "wind of God," spoken of in Is. xl. 7: the strong east wind which blights the grass (Zeitschrift für Missionskunde und Religionswissenschaft, 1890). Carr, Cambridge G. T., inclines to the same view, and refers to Is. xli. 16: "Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away".

Ver. 12. This ver. follows up ver. 11, and explains the judicial action emblemed by wind and fire.—οὗ τὸ πτύον ε. τ. χ. αὐτοῦ. The construction is variously understood. Grotius takes it as a Hebraism for ἐν οὗ χειρὶ τὸ πτύον. Fritzsche takes ἐν τ. χειρὶ αὐτοῦ as epexegetical, and renders: "whose will be the fan, viz., in His hand". Meyer and Weiss take οὗ as assigning a reason: "He (αὐτὸς of ver. 11) whose fan is in hand and who is therefore able to perform the part assigned to Him". Then follows an explanation of the modus operandi.—διακαθαριεῖ from διακαθαρίζω, late for classic διακαθαίρω. The idea is: He with His fan will throw up the wheat, mixed with the chaff, that the wind may blow the chaff away; He will then collect the straw, ἄχυρον (in Greek writers usually plural τὰ ἄχυρα, vide Grimm), and burn it with fire, and collect the wheat lying on the threshing floor and store it in His granary. So shall He thoroughly (δια intensifying) cleanse His floor. And the sweeping wind and the consuming fire are the emblems and measure of His power; stronger than mine, as the tempest and the devastating flames are mightier than the stream which I use as my element.—ἅλων, a place

13. Τότε παραγίνεται ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀπὸ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰορδάνην πρὸς τὸν Ἰωάννην, τοῦ βαπτισθῆναι ὑπ᾽ αὐτοῦ. 14. ὁ δὲ Ἰωάννης[1] [y] διεκώλυεν αὐτόν, λέγων, "Ἐγὼ [z] χρείαν ἔχω ὑπὸ σοῦ βαπτισθῆναι, καὶ σὺ ἔρχῃ πρός με;" 15. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε πρὸς αὐτόν,[2] "Ἄφες [a] ἄρτι· οὕτω γὰρ [b] πρέπον ἐστὶν ἡμῖν

y here only; for force of tense cf. Lk. i. 59. Acts vii. 16. z Ch. xiv. 16. John xiii. 10 (same const.). a John xiii. 37. 1 Cor. xiii. 12 (now, opp. to fut. time). b Heb. ii. 10. With acc. and inf., 1 Cor. xi. 13.

[1] ιωαννης omitted in ℵB sah. vers. (W.H. omit.)

[2] For προς αυτον B and it. vg. cop. versions have αυτω. Though weakly attested this reading accords best with the usage of the Evangelist. W.H. adopt it.

in a field made firm by a roller, or on a rocky hill top exposed to the breeze.—ἀποθήκη means generally any kind of store, and specially a grain store, often underground. Bleek takes the epithet ἀσβέστῳ applied to the fire as signifying: inextinguishable till all the refuse be consumed. It is usually understood absolutely.

Vv. 13-17. Jesus appears, His baptism and its accompaniments (Mark i. 9-11; Luke iii. 21-22). Ver. 13. Τότε παρα. ὁ Ι. . . . Γαλιλαίας: then, after John had described the Messiah, appears on the scene, παραγίνεται, the historical present again, as in ver. 1, with dramatic effect; from Galilee, where He has lived since childhood, Jesus, the real Christ; how widely different from the Christ conceived by the Baptist we know from the whole evangelic history. But shutting off knowledge gathered from other sources, we may obtain significant hints concerning the stranger from Galilee from the present narrative. He comes ἐπὶ τὸν Ι. πρὸς τὸν Ἰωαν., τοῦ βαπτισθῆναι ὑπ᾽ αὐτοῦ. These words at once suggest a contrast between Jesus and the Pharisees and Sadducees. They came to the baptism as a phenomenon to be critically observed. Jesus comes to the Jordan (ἐπὶ), towards the Baptist (πρὸς) to enter into personal friendly relations with him (vide John i. 1, πρὸς τὸν θεόν), in order to be baptised by him (genitive of the infinitive expressing purpose). Jesus comes thoroughly in sympathy with John's movement, sharing his passion for righteousness, fully appreciating the symbolic significance of his baptism, and not only willing, but eager to be baptised; the Jordan in His mind from the day He leaves home. A very different person this from the leaders of Israel, Pharisaic or Sadducaic. But the sequel suggests a contrast also between Him and John himself.

Vv. 14-15. John refuses. It is instructive to compare the three synoptical evangelists in their respective narratives of the baptism of Jesus. Mark (i. 9) simply states the fact. Matthew reports perplexities created by the desire of Jesus to be baptised in the mind of John, and presumably in the minds of Christians for whom he wrote. Luke (iii. 21) passes lightly over the event in a participial clause, as if conscious that he was on delicate ground. The three narratives exhibit successive phases of opinion on the subject, a fact not without bearing on the dates and relations of the three Gospels. Matthew represents the intermediate phase. His account is intrinsically credible.—Ver. 14. διεκώλυεν: imperfect, pointing to a persistent (note the διὰ) but unsuccessful attempt to prevent. His reason was a feeling that if either was to be baptised the relation ought to be inverted. To understand this feeling it is not necessary to import a fully developed Messianic theology into it, imputing to the Baptist all that we believe concerning Jesus as the Christ and the sinless one. It is enough to suppose that the visitor from Galilee had made a profound moral impression on him by His aspect and conversation, and awakened thoughts, hopes, incipient convictions as to who He might be. Nor ought we to take too seriously the Baptist's statement: "I have need to be baptised of Thee". Hitherto he had had no thought of being baptised himself. He was the baptiser, not one feeling need to be baptised; the censor of sinners, not the sympathetic fellow-sinner. And just here lies the contrast between John and Jesus, and between the Christ of John's imagination and the Christ of reality. John was severe; Jesus was sympathetic. John was the baptiser of sinners; Jesus wished to be baptised, as if a sinner

c Lk. iii. 21. John i. 51. Acts x. 11 (with διὰ, Acts vii. 56).

πληρῶσαι πᾶσαν δικαιοσύνην." Τότε ἀφίησιν αὐτόν. 16. Καὶ βαπτισθεὶς[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνέβη εὐθὺς[2] ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕδατος· καὶ ἰδού, [c] ἀνεῴχθησαν[3] αὐτῷ[4] οἱ οὐρανοί, καὶ εἶδε τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ κατα

[1] βαπτισθεις δε in ℵBC vg. sah. cop.

[2] For ανεβη ευθυς ℵB have ευθυς ανεβη.

[3] B has ηνεωχθησαν.

[4] ℵB omit αυτω.

Himself, a brother of the sinful. In the light of this contrast we are to understand the baptism of Jesus. Many explanations of it have been given (for these, vide Meyer), mostly theological. One of the most feasible is that of Weiss (Matt.-Evan.), that in accordance with the symbolic significance of the rite as denoting death to an old life and rising to a new, Jesus came to be baptised in the sense of dying to the old natural relations to parents, neighbours, and earthly calling, and devoting Himself henceforth to His public Messianic vocation. The true solution is to be found in the ethical sphere, in the sympathetic spirit of Jesus which made Him maintain an attitude of solidarity with the sinful rather than assume the position of critic and judge. It was impossible for such an one, on the ground of being the Messiah, or even on the ground of sinlessness, to treat John's baptism as a thing with which He had no concern. Love, not a sense of dignity or of moral faultlessness, must guide His action. Can we conceive sinlessness being so conscious of itself, and adopting as its policy aloofness from sinners? Christ's baptism might create misunderstanding, just as His associating with publicans and sinners did. He was content to be misunderstood.

Ver. 15. The reasoning with which Jesus replies to John's scruples is characteristic. His answer is gentle, respectful, dignified, simple, yet deep.—Ἄφες ἄρτι—deferential, half-yielding, yet strong in its very gentleness. Does ἄρτι imply a tacit acceptance of the high position assigned to Him by John (Weiss-Meyer)? We may read that into it, but I doubt if the suggestion does justice to the feeling of Jesus.—οὕτως γὰρ πρέπον, a mild word when a stronger might have been used, because it refers to John as well as Jesus: fitting, becoming, congruous; vide Heb. ii. 10, where the same word is used in reference to the relation of God to Christ's sufferings. "It became Him."—πᾶσαν δικαιοσύνην: this means more than meets the ear, more than could be explained to a man like John. The Baptist had a passion for righteousness, yet his conception of righteousness was narrow, severe, legal. Their ideas of righteousness separated the two men by a wide gulf which is covered over by this general, almost evasive, phrase: all righteousness or every form of it. The special form meant is not the mere compliance with the ordinance of baptism as administered by an accredited servant of God, but something far deeper, which the new era will unfold. John did not understand that love is the fulfilling of the law. But he saw that under the mild words of Jesus a very earnest purpose was hid. So at length he yielded—τότε ἀφίησιν αὐτόν.

Vv. 16, 17. The preternatural accompaniments. These have been variously viewed as meant for the people, for the Baptist, and for Jesus. In my judgment they concern Jesus principally and in the first place, and are so viewed by the evangelist. And as we are now making the acquaintance of Jesus for the first time, and desiring to know the spirit, manner, and vocation of Him whose mysterious birth has occupied our attention, we may confine our comments to this aspect. Applying the principle that to all objective supernatural experiences there are subjective psychological experiences corresponding, we can learn from the dove-like vision and the voice from heaven the thoughts which had been passing through the mind of Jesus at this critical period. These thoughts it most concerns us to know; yet it is just these thoughts that both believers and naturalistic unbelievers are in danger of overlooking; the one through regarding the objective occurrences as alone important, the other because, denying the objective element in the experience, they rush to the conclusion that there was no experience at all. Whereas the truth is that, whatever is to be said as to the objective element, the subjective at βαῖνον ὡσεὶ [d] περιστεράν, καὶ [1] ἐρχόμενον ἐπ' αὐτόν. 17. καὶ ἰδού, φωνὴ ἐκ τῶν οὐρανῶν λέγουσα, "Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱός μου ὁ ἀγαπητός, ἐν ᾧ [e] εὐδόκησα." [2] d Ch. x. 16; xxi. 12. Lk. ii. 24.

e Ch. xii. 18; xvii. 5. 1 Cor. x. 5. Heb. x. 38 (all with εν and dat.).

[1] אB omit και.

[2] אCL have ηυδοκ., which Tischendorf follows. W.H. as in T. R.

all events is real: the thoughts reflected and symbolised in the vision and the voice.

Ver. 16. εὐθὺς may be connected with βαπτισθεὶς, with ἀνέβη, or with ἠνεῴχθησαν in the following clause by a hyperbaton (Grotius). It is commonly and correctly taken along with ἀνέβη. But why say straightway ascended? Euthy. gives an answer which may be quoted for its quaintness: "They say that John had the people under water up to the neck till they had confessed their sins, and that Jesus having none to confess tarried not in the river". Fritzsche laughs at the good monk, but Schanz substantially adopts his view. There might be worse explanations.—καὶ ἰδοὺ ἠνεῴχθησαν, etc. When Jesus ascended out of the water the heavens opened and He (Jesus) saw the spirit of God descending as a dove coming upon Him. According to many interpreters, including many of the Fathers, the occurrence was of the nature of a vision, the appearance of a dove coming out of the heavens. ὁ εὐαγγελιστὴς οὐκ εἶπεν ὅτι ἐν φύσει περιστερᾶς, ἀλλ' ἐν εἴδει περιστερᾶς—Chrys. Dove-like: what was the point of comparison? Swift movement, according to some; soft gentle movement as it sinks down on its place of rest, according to others. The Fathers insisted on the qualities of the dove. Euthy. sums up these thus: φιλάνθρωπον γάρ ἐστι καὶ ἀνεξίκακον· ἀποστερούμενον γὰρ τῶν νεοσσῶν ὑπομένει, καὶ οὐδὲν ἧττον τοὺς ἀποστεροῦντας προσίεται. Καὶ καθαρώτατόν ἐστι, καὶ τῇ εὐωδίᾳ χαίρει. Whether the dove possesses all these qualities—philanthropy, patient endurance of wrong, coming lovingly to those who have robbed it of its young, purity, delight in sweet smells—I know not; but I appreciate the insight into the spirit of Christ which specifying such particulars in the emblematic significance of the dove implies. What is the O. T. basis of the symbol? Probably Gen. viii. 9, 10. Grotius hints at this without altogether adopting the view. Thus we obtain a contrast between John's conception of the spirit and that of Jesus as reflected in the vision. For John the emblem of the spirit was the stormy wind of judgment; for Jesus the dove with the olive leaf after the judgment by water was past.

Ver. 17. οὗτός ἐστιν: this is as if addressed to the Baptist; in Mk. i. 9, σὺ εἶ, as if addressed to Jesus.—ἐν ᾧ εὐδοκ: a Hebraism, חָפֵץ בְּ.—εὐδόκησα, aorist, either to express habitual satisfaction, after the manner of the Gnomic Aorist (vide Hermann's Viger, p. 169), or to denote the inner event = my good pleasure decided itself once for all for Him. So Schanz; cf. Winer, § 40, 5, on the use of the aorist. εὐδοκεῖν, according to Sturz, De Dialecto Macedonica et Alexandrina, is not Attic but Hellenistic. The voice recalls and in some measure echoes Is. xlii. 1, "Behold My servant, I uphold Him; My chosen one, My soul delights in Him. I have put My spirit upon Him." The title "Son" recalls Ps. ii. 7. Taking the vision, the voice, and the baptism together as interpreting the consciousness of Jesus before and at this time, the following inferences are suggested. (1) The mind of Jesus had been exercised in thought upon the Messianic vocation in relation to His own future. (2) The chief Messianic charism appeared to Him to be sympathy, love. (3) His religious attitude towards God was that of a Son towards a Father. (4) It was through the sense of sonship and the intense love to men that was in His heart that He discovered His Messianic vocation. (5) Prophetic texts gave direction to and supplied means of expression for His religious meditations. His mind, like that of John, was full of prophetic utterances, but a different class of oracles had attractions for Him. The spirit of John revelled in images of awe and terror. The gentler spirit of Jesus delighted in words depicting the ideal servant of God as clothed with meekness, patience, wisdom, and love.

CHAPTER IV. THE TEMPTATION, AND THE BEGINNING OF THE GALILEAN MINISTRY. It is in every way credible that the baptism of Jesus with its con-

IV. 1. Τότε ὁ[1] Ἰησοῦς [a] ἀνήχθη εἰς τὴν ἔρημον ὑπὸ τοῦ Πνεύματος, [b] πειρασθῆναι ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου. 2. καὶ [c] νηστεύσας ἡμέρας τεσσαράa Lk. ii. 22; iv. 5. Acts ix. 39. Cf. Rom. x. 7. Heb. xiii. 20 (to lead up from the dead). b besides parall. 1 Cor. vii. 5. 1 Thess. iii. 5 (same sense). c Ch. vi. 18-20; ix. 14. Acts xiii. 2.

[1] B omits ο; bracketed in W.H.

nected incidents should be followed by a season of moral trial, or, to express it more generally, by a period of retirement for earnest thought on the future career so solemnly inaugurated. Retirement for prayer and meditation was a habit with Jesus, and it was never more likely to be put in practice than now. He had left home under a powerful impulse with the Jordan and baptism in view. The baptism was a decisive act. Whatever more it might mean, it meant farewell to the past life of obscurity and consecration to a new, high, unique vocation. It remained now to realise by reflection what this calling, to which He had been set apart by John and by heavenly omens, involved in idea, execution, and experience. It was a large, deep, difficult subject of study. Under powerful spiritual constraints Jesus had taken a great leap in the dark, if one may dare to say so. What wonder if, in the season of reflection, temptations arose to doubt, shrinking, regret, strong inclination to look back and return to Nazareth?

In this experience Jesus was alone inwardly as well as outwardly. No clear, adequate account could be given of it. It could only be faintly shadowed forth in symbol or in parable. One can understand how in one Gospel (Mk.) no attempt is made to describe the Temptation, but the fact is simply stated. And it is much more important to grasp the fact as a great reality in Christ's inner experience than to maintain anxiously the literal truth of the representation in Matt. and Luke. In the fight of faith and unbelief over the supernatural element in the story all sense of the inward psychological reality may be lost, and nothing remain but an external miraculous, theatrical transaction which utterly fails to impress the lesson that Jesus was veritably tempted as we are, severely and for a length of time, before the opening of His public career, in a representative manner anticipating the experiences of later date. All attempts to dispose summarily of the whole matter by reference to similar temptation legends in the case of other religious initiators like Buddha are to be deprecated. Nor should one readily take up with the theory that the detailed account of the Temptation in Matt. and Luke is simply a composition suggested by O. T. parallels or by reflection on the critical points in Christ's subsequent history. (So Holtzmann in H. C.) We should rather regard it as having its ultimate source in an attempt by Jesus to convey to His disciples some faint idea of what He had gone through.

Vv. 1-11. The Temptation (Mk. i. 12, 13; Luke iv. 1-13). Ver. 1. Τότε, then, implying close connection with the events recorded in last chapter, especially the descent of the Spirit.—ἀνήχθη, was led up, into the higher, more solitary region of the wilderness, the haunt of wild beasts (Mk. i. 13) rather than of men.—ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος. The divine Spirit has to do with our darker experiences as well as with our bright, joyous ones. He is with the sons of God in their conflicts with doubt not less than in their moments of noble impulse and heroic resolve. The same Spirit who brought Jesus from Nazareth to the Jordan afterward led Him to the scene of trial. The theory of desertion hinted at by Calvin and adopted by Olshausen is based on a superficial view of religious experience. God's Spirit is never more with a man than in his spiritual struggles. Jesus was mightily impelled by the Spirit at this time (cf. Mk.'s ἐκβάλλει). And as the power exerted was not physical but moral, the fact points to intense mental preoccupation.—πειρασθῆναι, to be tempted, not necessarily covering the whole experience of those days, but noting a specially important phase: to be tempted inter alia.—πειράζω, a later form for πειράω, in classic Greek, primary meaning to attempt, to try to do a thing (vide for this use Acts ix. 26, xvi. 7, xxiv. 6); then in an ethical sense common in O. T. and N. T., to try or tempt either with good or with bad intent, associated in some texts (e.g., 2 Cor. xiii. 5) with δοκιμάζω, kindred in meaning. Note the omission of τοῦ before infinitive.—ὑπὸ τ. διαβόλου: in later Jewish theology the devil is the agent in all temptation with evil design. In the earlier period κοντα[1] καὶ νύκτας τεσσαράκοντα,[2] ὕστερον ἐπείνασε. 3. καὶ προσελθὼν αὐτῷ[3] [d]ὁ πειράζων εἶπεν,[3] "Εἰ υἱὸς εἶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, εἰπὲ ἵνα οἱ λίθοι οὗτοι ἄρτοι γένωνται." 4. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπε, "Γέγραπται, [e]'Οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται[4] ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ[5] παντὶ [e]ῥήματι [f]ἐκπορευομένῳ διὰ στόματος Θεοῦ.'" 5. Τότε [f]παραλαμβάνει αὐτὸν [g]ὁ διάβολος εἰς τὴν [g]ἁγίαν πόλιν, καὶ ἵστησιν[6] αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὸ d ὁ πειρ. as a subst. in 1 Thess. iii. 5.

e Cf. Mk. ix. 32.
f Ch. xvii. 1.
g ἁ. π. again Ch. xxvii. 53. Rev. xi. 2.

[1] τεσσερ. both places in ℵBCL.

[2] τεσσαρ. before νυκτας in ℵD (Tisch.).

[3] ℵB omit this αυτω and ℵBD insert one after ειπεν (D with και before ειπεν).

[4] ℵBCD, etc., insert ο before ανθρωπος.

[5] CD have εν; επι in Sept. and retained by Tisch. and W.H.

[6] εστησεν in ℵBCDZ 1, 33, 209 (Tisch., W.H.). The reading in T. R. conforms to παραλαμβανει.

the line of separation between the divine and the diabolic was not so carefully defined. In 1 Sam. xxiv. 11 God tempts David to number the people; in 1 Chron. xxi. 1 it is Satan.—ver. 2. καὶ νηστεύσας. The fasting was spontaneous, not ascetic, due to mental preoccupation. In such a place there was no food to be had, but Jesus did not desire it. The aorist implies that a period of fasting preceded the sense of hunger. The period of forty days and nights may be a round number.—ἐπείνασεν, He at last felt hunger. This verb like διψάω contracts in α rather than η in later Greek. Both take an accusative in Matt. v. 6.

Vv. 3-4. First temptation, through hunger. Ver. 3. προσελθὼν, another of the evangelist's favourite words, implies that the tempter is conceived by the narrator as approaching outwardly in visible form.—εἰπὲ ἵνα: literally "speak in order that". Some grammarians see in this use of ἵνα with the subjunctive a progress in the later Macedonian Greek onwards towards modern Greek, in which νά with subjunctive entirely supersedes the infinitive. Buttmann (Gram. of the N. T.) says that the chief deviation in the N. T. from classic usage is that ἵνα appears not only after complete predicates, as a statement of design, but after incomplete predicates, supplying their necessary complements (cf. Mk. vi. 25, ix. 30). εἰπὲ here may be classed among verbs of commanding which take ἵνα after them.—οἱ λίθοι οὗτοι, these stones lying about, hinting at the desert character of the scene.—ἄρτοι γεν., that the rude pieces of stone may be turned miraculously into loaves. Weiss (Meyer) disputes the usual view that the temptation of Jesus lay in the suggestion to use His miraculous power in His own behoof. He had no such power, and if He had, why should He not use it for His own benefit as well as other men's? He could only call into play by faith the power of God, and the temptation lay in the suggestion that His Messianic vocation was doubtful if God did not come to His help at this time. This seems a refinement. Hunger represents human wants, and the question was: whether Sonship was to mean exemption from these, or loyal acceptance of them as part of Messiah's experience. At bottom the issue raised was selfishness or self-sacrifice. Selfishness would have been shown either in the use of personal power or in the wish that God would use it.—Ver. 4. ὁ δὲ ἀποκ. εἶπεν: Christ's reply in this case as in the others is taken from Deuteronomy (viii. 3, Sept.), which seems to have been one of His favourite books. Its humane spirit with laws even for protecting the animals would commend it to His mind. The word quoted means, man is to live a life of faith in and dependence on God. Bread is a mere detail in that life, not necessary though usually given, and sure to be supplied somehow, as long as it is desirable. Ζῆν ἐπὶ is unusual, but good Greek (De Wette).

Vv. 5-7. Second temptation. τότε παραλαμ. . . . τοῦ ἱεροῦ: τότε has the force of "next," and implies a closer order of sequence than Luke's καὶ (iv. 5). παραλαμβάνει, historical present with dramatic effect; seizes hold of Him and carries Him to.—τὴν ἁγίαν πόλιν: Jerusalem so named as if with affection (vide v. 35 and especially xxvii. 53, where the designation recurs).—τὸ h here and in Lk. iv. 9.

i Ch. xvii. 9. Acts i. 2. Heb. xi. 20.
j Lk. x. 25. 1 Cor. x. 9.
k Ch. vi. 29. Lk. xii. 27.

[h] πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ, καὶ λέγει[1] αὐτῷ, 6. "Εἰ υἱὸς εἶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, βάλε σεαυτὸν κάτω· γέγραπται γάρ, 'Ὅτι τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ [i] ἐντελεῖται περὶ σοῦ, καὶ ἐπὶ χειρῶν ἀροῦσί σε, μήποτε προσκόψῃς πρὸς λίθον τὸν πόδα σοῦ.'" 7. Ἔφη αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Πάλιν γέγραπται, 'Οὐκ [j] ἐκπειράσεις Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου.'" 8. Πάλιν παραλαμβάνει αὐτὸν ὁ διάβολος εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν λίαν, καὶ δείκνυσιν αὐτῷ πάσας τὰς βασιλείας τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τὴν [k] δόξαν αὐτῶν, καὶ

[1] For λεγει Z has ειπεν.

πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ: some part of the temple bearing the name of "the winglet," and overhanging a precipice. Commentators busy themselves discussing what precisely and where it was.—Ver. 6. βάλε σεαυτὸν κάτω: This suggestion strongly makes for the symbolic or parabolic nature of the whole representation. The mad proposal could hardly be a temptation to such an one as Jesus, or indeed to any man in his senses. The transit through the air from the desert to the winglet, like that of Ezekiel, carried by a lock of his hair from Babylon to Jerusalem, must have been "in the visions of God" (Ezek. viii. 3), and the suggestion to cast Himself down a parabolic hint at a class of temptations, as the excuses in the parable of the Supper (Lk. xiv. 16) simply represent the category of preoccupation. What is the class represented? Not temptations through vanity or presumption, but rather to reckless escape from desperate situations. The second temptation, like the first, belongs to the category of need. The Satanic suggestion is that there can be no sonship where there are such inextricable situations, in proof of which the Psalter is quoted (Ps. xci. 11, 12).—γέγραπται, it stands written, not precisely as Satan quotes it, the clause τοῦ διαφυλάξαι σε ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς σου being omitted. On this account many commentators charge Satan with mutilating and falsifying Scripture.—Ver 7. Jesus replies by another quotation from Deut. (vi. 16).—πάλιν, on the other hand, not contradicting but qualifying: "Scriptura per scripturam interpretanda et concilianda," Bengel. The reference is to the incident at Rephidim (Ex. xvii. 1-7), where the people virtually charged God with bringing them out of Egypt to perish with thirst, the scene of this petulant outburst receiving the commemorative name of Massah and Meribah because they tempted Jehovah, saying: "Is Jehovah among us or not?" An analogous situation in the life of Jesus may be found in Gethsemane, where He did not complain or tempt, but uttered the submissive, "If it be possible". The leap down at that crisis would have consisted in seeking escape from the cross at the cost of duty. The physical fall from the pinnacle is an emblem of a moral fall. Before passing from this temptation I note that the hypothesis that it was an appeal to vanity presupposes a crowd at the foot to witness the performance, of which there is no mention.

Vv. 8-10. Third temptation. εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν λίαν, a mountain high enough for the purpose. There is no such mountain in the world, not even in the highest ranges, "not to be sought for in terrestrial geography," says De Wette. The vision of all the kingdoms and their glory was not physical.—τοῦ κόσμου. What world? Palestine merely, or all the world, Palestine excepted? or all the world, Palestine included? All these alternatives have been supported. The last is the most likely. The second harmonises with the ideas of contemporary Jews, who regarded the heathen world as distinct from the Holy Land, as belonging to the devil. The tempter points in the direction of a universal Messianic empire, and claims power to give effect to the dazzling prospect.—Ver. 9. ἐὰν πεσὼν προσκυνήσῃς μοι. This is the condition, homage to Satan as the superior. A naïve suggestion, but pointing to a subtle form of temptation, to which all ambitious, self-seeking men succumb, that of gaining power by compromise with evil. The danger is greatest when the end is good. "The end sanctifies the means." Nowhere is homage to Satan more common than in connection with sacred causes, the interests of truth, righteousness, and God. Nothing tests purity of motive so thoroughly as temptaλέγει[1] αὐτῷ, 9. "Ταῦτα πάντα σοι[2] δώσω, ἐὰν πεσὼν προσκυνήσῃς μοι." 10. Τότε λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "[l]Ὕπαγε,[3] Σατανᾶ· γέγραπται γάρ, 'Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου [m]προσκυνήσεις, καὶ αὐτῷ μόνῳ [n]λατρεύσεις.'" 11. Τότε ἀφίησιν αὐτὸν ὁ διάβολος· καὶ ἰδού, ἄγγελοι προσῆλθον καὶ [o]διηκόνουν αὐτῷ.

12. ΑΚΟΥΣΑΣ δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς[4] ὅτι Ἰωάννης [p]παρεδόθη, ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν· 13. καὶ [q]καταλιπὼν τὴν Ναζαρέτ, ἐλθὼν κατῴκησεν εἰς Καπερναοὺμ[5] τὴν [r]παραθαλασσίαν, ἐν ὁρίοις l very freq. in N. T. always intrans.

m with acc. here and in Lk. iv. 8, and in Rev.
n Lk. i. 74; ii. 37; iv. 8.
o Mk. i. 13.
p Ch. x. 19. Mk. i. 14.
q Heb. xi. 27.
r here only in N. T., in Sept. (e.g., 2 Chron. viii. 17).

[1] ℵBCDZ have ειπεν (most mod. edd.).

[2] παντα σοι tr. ℵBCZ with several cursives.

[3] Some MSS. (DLZ) insert οπισω μου, obviously imported from xvi. 23.

[4] ο Ι. omit ℵBCDZ; probably the insertion is due to ver. 12 commencing a lesson in Lectionaries.

[5] This name is spelt καφαρ. in the older MSS. (ℵBDZ), which is adopted throughout by W.H.

tions of this class. Christ was proof against them. The prince of the world found nothing of this sort in Him (John xiv. 30). In practice this homage, if Jesus had been willing to render it, would have taken the form of conciliating the Pharisees and Sadducees, and pandering to the prejudices of the people. He took His own path, and became a Christ, neither after the type imagined by the Baptist, nor according to the liking of the Jews and their leaders. So He gained universal empire, but at a great cost.—Ver. 10. ὕπαγε σατανᾶ. Jesus passionately repels the Satanic suggestion. The ὕπαγε σ. is true to His character. The suggestions of worldly wisdom always roused in Him passionate aversion. The ὀπίσω μου of some MSS. does not suit this place; it is imported from Matt. xvi. 23, where it does suit, the agent of Satan in a temptation of the same sort being a disciple. Christ's final word to the tempter is an absolute, peremptory Begone. Yet He condescends to support His authoritative negative by a Scripture text, again from Deut. (vi. 13), slightly adapted, προσκυνήσεις being substituted for φοβηθήσῃ (the μόνῳ in second clause is omitted in Swete's Sept.). It takes the accusative here instead of dative, as in ver. 9, because it denotes worship proper (Weiss-Meyer). The quotation states a principle in theory acknowledged by all, but how hard to work it out faithfully in life!

Ver. 11. τότε ἀφίησιν: Then, when the peremptory ὕπαγε had been spoken. Nothing was to be made of one who would not do evil that good might come.—καὶ ἰδοὺ ἄγγελοι. The angels were ministering to Him with food, presumably, in the view of the evangelist. It might be taken in a wider sense as signifying that angels ministered constantly to one who had decidedly chosen the path of obedience in preference to that of self-pleasing.

Vv. 12-25. Beginnings of the Galilean ministry (Mk. i. 14, 15; Lk. iv. 14, 15). In a few rapid strokes the evangelist describes the opening of the Messianic work of Jesus in Galilee. He has in view the great Sermon on the Mount, and the group of wonderful deeds he means thereafter to report, and he gives first a summary description of Christ's varied activities by way of introduction.

Vv. 12, 13. ἀκούσας δὲ . . . Γαλιλαίαν: note of time. Jesus returned to Galilee on hearing that John was delivered up, i.e., in the providence of God, into the hands of his enemies. Further particulars as to this are given in chapter xiv. Christ's ministry in Galilee began when the Baptist's came to an end; how long after the baptism and temptation not indicated. Weiss (Meyer) thinks that in the view of the evangelist it was immediately after, and that the reference to John's imprisonment is meant simply to explain the choice of Galilee as the sphere of labour.—Ver. 13. Ναζαρέτ. Jesus naturally went to Nazareth first, but He did not tarry there.—κατῴκησεν εἰς Καπερναοὺμ. He went to settle (as in ii. 23) in Capernaum. This migration to

Ζαβουλὼν καὶ Νεφθαλείμ, 14. ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 15. "Γῆ Ζαβουλὼν καὶ γῆ Νεφθαλείμ, [s] ὁδὸν θαλάσσης πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, Γαλιλαία τῶν ἐθνῶν, 16. ὁ λαὸς ὁ καθήμενος ἐν σκότει [1] εἶδε φῶς [2] μέγα, καὶ τοῖς καθημένοις ἐν χώρᾳ καὶ [t] σκιᾷ θανάτου, φῶς [u] ἀνέτειλεν αὐτοῖς."

17. Ἀπὸ τότε [v] ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς κηρύσσειν καὶ λέγειν, "Μετανοεῖτε· ἤγγικε γὰρ [3] ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν." 18. Περιπατῶν δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς [4] [w] παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν τῆς Γαλιλαίας εἶδε δύο ἀδελφούς, Σίμωνα τὸν λεγόμενον Πέτρον, καὶ Ἀνδρέαν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, βάλλοντας s Ch. x. 5.

t Lk. i. 79.
u Ch. xiii. 6. Mk. xvi. 2. James i. 11 (all intrans.).
v Ch. xi. 7, 20; xii. 1. Mk. iv. 1. Lk. iii. 8 et al. (on force of this word vide Grimm's Lex.).
w again xiii. 1. Mk. v. 21. Cf. Acts x. 6.

[1] σκοτια, BD.

[2] φως before ειδεν in ℵBCΣ (W.H.).

[3] The Syr. Cur. (Baethgen) omits μετανοειτε before ηγγικε γαρ.

[4] ο I. found in ELΔ; omit ℵBCD (beginning of a new lesson).

Capernaum is not formally noted in the other Gospels, but Capernaum appears in all the synoptists as the main centre of Christ's Galilean ministry. — τὴν παραθαλασσίαν, etc.: sufficiently defined by these words, "on the sea (of Galilee), on the confines of Zebulun and Naphthali". Well known then, now of doubtful situation, being no longer in existence. Tel Hûm and Khan Minyeh compete for the honour of the site. The evangelist describes the position not to satisfy the curiosity of geographers, but to pave the way for another prophetic reference.

Vv. 14-16. Jesus chose Capernaum as best suited for His work. There He was in the heart of the world, in a busy town, and near others, on the shore of a sea that was full of fish, and on a great international highway. But the evangelist finds in the choice a fulfilment of prophecy—ἵνα πληρωθῇ. The oracle is reproduced from Is. viii. 22, ix. 1, freely following the original with glances at the Sept. The style is very laconic: land of Zebulun and land of Naphthali, way of the sea (ὁδὸν absolute accusative for דֶּרֶךְ = versus, vide Winer, § 23), Galilee of the Gentiles, a place where races mix, a border population. The clause preceding, "beyond Jordan," is not omitted, because it is viewed as a reference to Peraea, also a scene of Christ's ministry.—Ver. 16. ἐν σκοτίᾳ, the darkness referred to, in the view of the evangelist, is probably that caused by the imprisonment of the Baptist (Fritzsche). The consolation comes in the form of a greater light, φῶς μέγα, great, even the greatest. The thought is emphasised by repetition and by enhanced description of the benighted situation of those on whom the light arises: "in the very home and shadow of death"; highly graphic and poetic, not applicable, however, to the cities of the plain more than to other parts of the land; descriptive of misery rather than of sin.

Ver. 17. ἀπὸ τότε . . . κηρύσσειν: After settling in Capernaum Jesus began to preach. The phrase ἀπὸ τότε offends in two ways, first as redundant, being implied in ἤρξατο (De Wette); next as not classic, being one of the degeneracies of the κοινή. Phrynichus forbids ἐκ τότε, and instructs to say rather ἐξ ἐκείνου (Lobeck's ed., p. 45)—κηρύσσειν, the same word as in describing the ministry of the Baptist (iii. 1). And the message is the same—Μετανοεῖτε, etc. "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The same in word but not in thought, as will appear soon. It may seem as if the evangelist meant to represent Jesus as simply taking up and continuing the arrested ministry of the Baptist. So He was in form and to outward appearance, but not in spirit. From the very first, as has been seen even in connection with the baptism, there was a deep-seated difference between the two preachers. Even Euthy. Zig. understood this, monk though he was. Repent, he says, with John meant "in so far as ye have erred" = amendment; with Jesus, "from the old to the new" (ἀπὸ τῆς παλαιᾶς ἐπὶ τὴν καινήν) = a change from within. For the evangelist this was the absolute beginning of Christ's ˣἀμφίβληστρον εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν· ἦσαν γὰρ ʸἁλιεῖς.[1] 19. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "ᶻΔεῦτε ὀπίσω μου, καὶ ποιήσω ὑμᾶς ἁλιεῖς ἀνθρώπων." 20. Οἱ δὲ εὐθέως ἀφέντες τὰ δίκτυα ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ. 21. Καὶ προβὰς ἐκεῖθεν, εἶδεν ἄλλους δύο ἀδελφούς, Ἰάκωβον τὸν τοῦ Ζεβεδαίου καὶ Ἰωάννην τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ μετὰ Ζεβεδαίου τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτῶν, καταρτίζοντας τὰ δίκτυα αὐτῶν· καὶ ἐκάλεσεν αὐτούς. 22. οἱ δὲ εὐθέως ἀφέντες τὸ πλοῖον καὶ τὸν πατέρα αὐτῶν ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ.

23. Καὶ ᵃπεριῆγεν ὅλην τὴν Γαλιλαίαν ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[2] διδάσκων ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ κηρύσσων τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς βασιλείας, καὶ x here only in N. T.; verb in Mk. i. 16; in Sept.

y Mk. i. 16, 17. Lk. v. 2.
z Ch. xi. 28; xxv. 34.
a with ἐν here only (true text); with acc. of place ix. 35; xxiii. 15. Mk. vi. 6.

[1] ℵC have αλεεις, B αλειεις.

[2] ℵBC have εν ολη τη Γαλιλαια. The acc. (T. R. as in D, etc.) is the more usual construction, hence preferred by ancient revisers. B omits ο Ιησους.

ministry. He knows nothing of an earlier activity.

Vv. 18-22. Call of four disciples. The preceding very general statement is followed by a more specific narrative relating to a very important department of Christ's work, the gathering of disciples. Disciples are referred to in the Sermon on the Mount (v. 1), therefore it is meet that it be shown how Jesus came by them. Here we have simply a sample, a hint at a process always going on, and which had probably advanced a considerable way before the sermon was delivered. — περιπατῶν δὲ: δὲ simply introduces a new topic, the time is indefinite. One day when Jesus was walking along the seashore He saw two men, brothers, names given, by occupation fishers, the main industry of the locality, that tropical sea (500 feet below level of Mediterranean) abounding in fish. He saw them, may have seen them before, and they Him, and thought them likely men, and He said to them, ver. 19: Δεῦτε . . . ἀνθρώπων. From the most critical point of view a genuine saying of Jesus; the first distinctively individual word of the Galilean ministry as recorded by Matthew and Mark. Full of significance as a self-revelation of the speaker. Authoritative yet genial, indicating a poetic idealistic temperament and a tendency to figurative speech; betraying the rudiments of a plan for winning men by select men. Δεῦτε plural form of δεῦρο = δεῦρ' ἴτε, δεῦρο being an adverb of place with the force of command, a verb of commanding being understood: here! after me; imperial yet kindly, used again in Matt. xi. 28 with reference to the labouring and heavy-laden. δεῦτε and ἁλιεῖς (= sea-people) are samples of old poetic words revived and introduced into prose by later Greek writers.—Ver. 20. The effect was immediate: εὐθέως ἀφέντες. This seems surprising, and we naturally postulate previous knowledge in explanation. But all indications point to the uniquely impressive personality of Jesus. John felt it; the audience in the synagogue of Capernaum felt it on the first appearance of Jesus there (Mk. i. 27); the four fishermen felt it.—δίκτυα, ἀμφίβληστρον in ver. 18. In xiii. 47 occurs a third word for a net, σαγήνη; δίκτυον (from δικεῖν, to throw) is the general name; ἀμφίβληστρον (ἀμφιβάλλω), anything cast around, e.g., a garment, more specifically a net thrown with the hand; σαγήνη, a sweep-net carried out in a boat, then drawn in from the land (vide Trench, Synonyms of N. T., § 64).—Ver. 21. ἄλλους δύο, another pair of brothers, James and John, sons of Zebedee, the four together an important instalment of the twelve. The first pair were casting their nets, the second were mending them, καταρτίζοντες, with their father. —Ver. 22. οἱ δὲ εὐθέως ἀφέντες. They too followed immediately, leaving nets, ship, and father (vide Mk. i. 20) behind.

Vv. 23-25. Summary account of the Galilean ministry. A colourless general statement serving as a mere prelude to chapters v.-ix. It points to a ministry in Galilee, varied, extensive, and far-famed, conceived by the evangelist as antecedent to the Sermon on the Mount; not necessarily covering a long period of time, though if the expression "teaching in their synagogues" be pressed it must imply a good many Sabbath days.

b Ch. ix. 35; x. 1. c Ch. xiv. 1; xxiv. 6. d Ch. viii. 16; ix. 12 al. e Lk. xvi. 23, 28. f Ch. xvii. 15.

θεραπεύων πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν [b] μαλακίαν ἐν τῷ λαῷ. 24. καὶ ἀπῆλθεν [1] ἡ [c] ἀκοὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς ὅλην τὴν Συρίαν· καὶ προσήνεγκαν αὐτῷ πάντας τοὺς [d] κακῶς ἔχοντας, ποικίλαις νόσοις καὶ [e] βασάνοις συνεχομένους, καὶ [2] δαιμονιζομένους, καὶ [f] σεληνιαζομένους, καὶ παραλυτικούς· καὶ ἐθεράπευσεν αὐτούς. 25. καὶ ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ ὄχλοι πολλοὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Γαλιλαίας καὶ Δεκαπόλεως καὶ Ἱεροσολύμων καὶ Ἰουδαίας, καὶ πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου.

[1] So in BD (W.H.), ἐξῆλθεν in ℵC.
[2] BC omit και, which is in C²D. The force of και = and especially.

The ministry embraced three functions: διδάσκων, κηρύσσων, θεραπεύων (ver. 23), teaching, preaching, healing. Jesus was an evangelist, a master, and a healer of disease. Matt. puts the teaching function first in accordance with the character of his gospel. The first gospel is weak in the evangelistic element compared with the third: διδαχή is more prominent than κήρυγμα. The healing function is represented as exercised on a large scale: πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν, every form of disease and ailment. Euthy. Zig. defines νόσος as the chronic subversion of health (ἡ χρονία παρατροπὴ τῆς τοῦ σώματος ἕξεως), μαλακία as the weakness in which it begins (ἀρχὴ χαυνώσεως σώματος, πρoάγγελος νόσου). The subjects of healing are divided into two classes, ver. 24. They brought to Him πάντας τ. κ. ἔχ. ποικίλαις νόσοις, all who were afflicted with various diseases (such as fever, leprosy, blindness); also those βασάνοις συνεχομένους, seized with diseases of a tormenting nature, of which three classes are named—the καὶ in T. R. before δαιμον. is misleading; the following words are epexegetical: δαιμονιζομένους, σεληνιαζομένους, παραλυτικούς = demoniacs, epileptics (their seizures following the phases of the moon), paralytics. These forms of disease are graphically called torments. (βάσανος, first a touch-stone, lapis Lydius, as in Pindar, Pythia, x. 105: Πειρῶντι δὲ καὶ χρυσὸς ἐν βασάνῳ πρέπει καὶ νόος ὀρθός; then an instrument of torture to extract truth; then, as here, tormenting forms of disease.) The fame, ἡ ἀκοή, of such a marvellous ministry naturally spread widely, εἰς ὅλην τὴν Συρίαν, throughout the whole province to which Palestine belonged, among Gentiles as well as Jews. Crowds gathered around the wonderful Man from all quarters: west, east, north, south; Galilee, Decapolis on the eastern side of the lake, Jerusalem and Judaea, Peraea. With every allowance for the exaggeration of a popular account, this speaks to an extraordinary impression.

CHAPTERS V.-VII. THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. This extended utterance of Jesus comes upon us as a surprise. Nothing goes before to prepare us to expect anything so transcendently great. The impression made on the Baptist, the people in Capernaum Synagogue (Mk. i. 27), and the four fishermen speak to wisdom, power, and personal charm, but not so as to make us take the sermon as a thing of course. Our surprise is all the greater that there is so little antecedent narrative. By an effort of imagination we have to realise that much went before—preaching, teaching, interviews with disciples, conflicts with Pharisees, only once mentioned hitherto (iii. 7), yet here the leading theme of discourse.

The sermon belongs to the didache, not to the kerygma. Jesus is here the Master, not the evangelist. He ascends the hill to get away from the crowds below, and the disciples, now become a considerable band, gather about Him. Others are not excluded, but the μαθηταὶ are the audience proper. The discourse may represent the teaching, not of a single hour or day, but of a period of retirement from an exciting, exhausting ministry below, and all over Galilee; rest being sought in variation of work, evangelist and teacher alternately. A better name for these chapters than the Sermon on the Mount, which suggests a concio ad populum, might be The Teaching on the Hill. It may be a combination of several lessons. One very outstanding topic is Pharisaic righteousness. Christ evidently made it His business in one of the hill lessons to define controversially His position in reference to the prevailing type of piety, which we may assume to have been to

V. 1. ΙΔΩΝ δὲ τοὺς ὄχλους [a] ἀνέβη εἰς τὸ ὄρος· καὶ [b] καθίσαντος αὐτοῦ, προσῆλθον αὐτῷ [1] οἱ [c] μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ· 2. καὶ [d] ἀνοίξας τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ, ἐδίδασκεν αὐτούς, λέγων, 3. "[e] Μακάριοι οἱ [f] πτωχοὶ a same phrase ch. xiv. 23; xv. 29. Mk. iii. 13.

b here and in xiii. 48. Mk. ix. 35. Lk. iv. 20 al., intrans. also Heb. i. 3, trans. 1 Cor. vi. 4. Eph. ii. 6 (συνεκ).
c frequent in Gospp. and Acts, nowhere else in N. T. d again in xiii. 35.
e Ch. xi. 6; xiii. 16. Lk. i. 45; x. 23.
f Ch. xi. 5. Lk. iv. 18.

[1] B omits αυτω; bracketed as doubtful in W.H.

Him a subject of long and careful study before the opening of His public career. The portions of the discourse which bear on that subject can be picked out, and others not relating thereto eliminated, and we may say if we choose that the resulting body of teaching is the Sermon on the Mount (so Weiss). Perhaps the truth is that these portions formed one of the lessons given to disciples on the hill in their holiday summer school. The Beatitudes might form another, instructions on prayer (vi. 7-15) a third, admonitions against covetousness and care (vi. 19-34) a fourth, and so on. As these chapters stand the various parts cohere and sympathise wonderfully so as to present the appearance of a unity; but that need not hinder us from regarding the whole as a skilful combination of originally distinct lessons, possessing the generic unity of the Teaching on the Hill. This view I prefer to that which regards the sermon as a compendium of Christ's whole doctrine (De Wette), or the magna charta of the kingdom (Tholuck), though there is a truth in that title, or as an ordination discourse in connection with the setting apart of the Twelve (Ewald), or in its original parts an anti-Pharisaic manifesto (Weiss-Meyer). For comparison of Matthew's version of the discourse with Luke's see notes on Lk. vi. 20-49.

Chap. v. 1-2. Introductory statement by evangelist. Ἰδὼν δὲ . . . εἰς τὸ ὄρος. Christ ascended the hill, according to some, because there was more room there for the crowd than below. I prefer the view well put by Euthy. Zig.: "He ascended the near hill, to avoid the din of the crowd (θορύβους) and to give instruction without distraction; for He passed from the healing of the body to the cure of souls. This was His habit, passing from that to this and from this to that, providing varied benefit." But we must be on our guard against a double misunderstanding that might be suggested by the statement in ver. 1, that Jesus went up to the mountain, as if in ascetic retirement from the world, and addressed Himself henceforth to His disciples, as if they alone were the objects of His care, or to teach them an esoteric doctrine with which the multitude had no concern. Jesus was not monastic in spirit, and He had not two doctrines, one for the many, another for the few, like Buddha. His highest teaching, even the Beatitudes and the beautiful discourse against care, was meant for the million. He taught disciples that they might teach the world and so be its light. For this purpose His disciples came to Him when He sat down (καθίσαντος αὐτοῦ) taking the teacher's position (cf. Mk. iv. 1, ix. 35, xiii. 3). Lutteroth (Essai d'Interprétation, p. 65) takes καθίσαντος as meaning to camp out (camper), to remain for a time, as in Lk. xxiv. 49, Acts xviii. 11. He, I find, adopts the view I have indicated of the sermon as a summary of all the discourses of Jesus on the hill during a sojourn of some duration. The hill, τὸ ὄρος, may be most naturally taken to mean the elevated plateau rising above the seashore. It is idle to inquire what particular hill is intended.—Ver. 2. ἀνοίξας τὸ στόμα: solemn description of the beginning of a weighty discourse.—ἐδίδασκεν, imperfect, implying continued discourse.

Vv. 3-12. The Beatitudes. Some general observations may helpfully introduce the detailed exegesis of these golden words.

1. They breathe the spirit of the scene. On the mountain tops away from the bustle and the sultry heat of the region below, the air cool, the blue sky overhead, quiet all around, and divine tranquillity within. We are near heaven here.

2. The originality of these sayings has been disputed, especially by modern Jews desirous to credit their Rabbis with such good things. Some of them, e.g., the third, may be found in substance in the Psalter, and possibly many, or all of them, even in the Talmud. But what then? They are in the Talmud as a few grains of wheat lost in a vast heap τῷ πνεύματι· ὅτι αὐτῶν ἐστιν ἡ [g] βασιλεία τῶν [g] οὐρανῶν. 4. μακάριοι [1] οἱ [h] πενθοῦντες· ὅτι αὐτοὶ παρακληθήσονται. 5. μακάριοι g the name for the k. of G. in Mt., put into the Baptist's mouth, in iii. 2. His, not Christ's, acc. to Weiss et al. h Ch. ix. 15.

[1] The 2nd and 3rd Beatitudes (vv. 4, 5) are transposed in D, most old Latin texts, and in Syr. Cur. Tisch. adopts this order.

of chaff. The originality of Jesus lies in putting the due value on these thoughts, collecting them, and making them as prominent as the Ten Commandments. No greater service can be rendered to mankind than to rescue from obscurity neglected moral commonplaces.

3. The existence of another version of the discourse (in Lk.), with varying forms of the sayings, has raised a question as to the original form. Did Christ, e.g., say "Blessed the poor" (Lk.) or "Blessed the poor in spirit" (Matt.)? This raises a larger question as to the manner of Christ's teaching on the hill. Suppose one day in a week of instruction was devoted to the subject of happiness, its conditions, and heirs, many things might be said on each leading proposition. The theme would be announced, then accompanied with expansions. A modern biographer would have prefaced a discourse like this with an introductory account of the Teacher's method. There is no such account in the Gospels, but there are incidental notices from which we can learn somewhat. The disciples asked questions and the Master answered them. Jesus explained some of His parables to the twelve. From certain parts of His teaching, as reported, it appears that He not only uttered great thoughts in aphoristic form, but occasionally enlarged. The Sermon on the Mount contains at least two instances of such enlargement. The thesis, "I am not come to destroy but to fulfil" (ver. 17), is copiously illustrated (vv. 21-48). The counsel against care, which as a thesis might be stated thus: "Blessed are the care-free," is amply expanded (vv. 25-34). Even in one of the Beatitudes we find traces of explanatory enlargement; in the last, "Blessed are the persecuted". It is perhaps the most startling of all the paradoxes, and would need enlargement greatly, and some parts of the expansion have been preserved (vv. 10-12). On this view both forms of the first Beatitude might be authentic, the one as theme, the other as comment. The theme would always be put in the fewest possible words; the first Beatitude therefore, as Luke puts it, Μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοί, Matthew preserving one of the expansions, not necessarily the only one. Of course, another view of the expansion is possible, that it proceeded not from Christ, but from the transmitters of His sayings. But this hypothesis is not a whit more legitimate or likely than the other. I make this observation, not in the spirit of an antiquated Harmonistic, but simply as a contribution to historical criticism.

4. Each Beatitude has a reason annexed, that of the first being "for theirs is the kingdom of heaven". They vary in the different Beatitudes as reported. It is conceivable that in the original themes the reason annexed to the first was common to them all. It was understood to be repeated like the refrain of a song, or like the words, "him do I call a Brahmana," annexed to many of the moral sentences in the Footsteps of the Law in the Buddhist Canon. "He who, when assailed, does not resist, but speaks mildly to his tormentors—him do I call a Brahmana." So "Blessed the poor, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven"; "blessed they who mourn, for," etc.; "blessed the meek, the hungry, for," etc. The actual reasons annexed, when they vary from the refrain, are to be viewed as explanatory comments.

5. It has been maintained that only certain of the Beatitudes belong to the authentic discourse on the mount, the rest possibly based on true logia of Jesus spoken at another time, being added by the evangelist, true to his habit of massing the teaching of Jesus in topical groups. This is the view of Weiss (in Matt. Evan., and in Meyer). He thinks only three are authentic—the first, third, and fourth—all pointing to the righteousness of the kingdom as the summum bonum: the first to righteousness as not yet possessed; the second to the want as a cause of sorrow; the third to righteousness as an object of desire. This view goes with the theory that Christ's discourse on the hill had reference exclusively to the nature of true and false righteousness.

6. A final, much less important quesοἱ [l]πρᾳεῖς· ὅτι αὐτοὶ κληρονομήσουσι τὴν γῆν. 6. μακάριοι οἱ [j]πεινῶντες καὶ διψῶντες τὴν δικαιοσύνην· ὅτι αὐτοὶ [k]χορτασθήσονται.

l Ch. xi. 29; xxi. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 4.
j Ch. xxv. 34. Heb. vi. 12.
k Ch. xiv. 20.

tion in reference to the Beatitudes is that which relates to their number. One would say at a first glance eight, counting ver. 10 as one, vv. 11, 12 being an enlargement. The traditional number, however, is seven—vv. 10-12 being regarded as a transition to a new topic. This seems arbitrary. Delitsch, anxious to establish an analogy with the Decalogue, makes out ten—seven from ver. 3 to ver. 9, ver. 10 one, ver. 11 one, and ver. 12, though lacking the μακάριοι, the tenth; its claim resting on the exulting words, χαίρετε καὶ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε. This savours of Rabbinical pedantry.

Ver. 3. μακάριοι. This is one of the words which have been transformed and ennobled by N. T. use; by association, as in the Beatitudes, with unusual conditions, accounted by the world miserable, or with rare and difficult conduct, e.g., in John xiii. 17, "if ye know these things, happy (μακάριοι) are ye if ye do them". Notable in this connection is the expression in 1 Tim. i. 11, "The Gospel of the glory of the happy God". The implied truth is that the happiness of the Christian God consists in being a Redeemer, bearing the burden of the world's sin and misery. How different from the Epicurean idea of God! Our word "blessed" represents the new conception of felicity.—οἱ πτωχοί: πτωχός in Sept. stands for אֶבְיוֹן Ps. cix. 16, or עָנִי Ps. xl. 18: the poor, taken even in the most abject sense, mendici, Tertull. adv. Mar. iv. 14. πτωχός and πένης originally differed, the latter meaning poor as opposed to rich, the former destitute. But in Biblical Greek πτωχοί, πένητες, πραεῖς, ταπεινοί are used indiscriminately for the same class, the poor of an oppressed country. Vide Hatch, Essays on Biblical Greek, p. 76. The term is used here in a pregnant sense, absolute and unqualified at least to begin with; qualifications come after. From πτώσσω, to cower in dispiritment and fear, always used in an evil sense till Christ taught the poor man to lift up his head in hope and self-respect; the very lowest social class not to be despaired of, a future possible even for the mendicant. Blessedness possible for the poor in every sense; they, in comparison with others, under no disabilities, rather contrariwise—such is the first and fundamental lesson.—τῷ πνεύματι: Possibilities are not certainties; to turn the one into the other the soul or will of the individual must come in, for as Euthy. Zig. quaintly says, nothing involuntary can bless (οὐδὲν τῶν ἀπροαιρέτων μακαριστόν). "In spirit" is, therefore, added to develop and define the idea of poverty. The comment on the theme passes from the lower to the higher sphere. Christ's thought includes the physical and social, but it does not end there. Luke seems to have the social aspect in view in accordance with one of his tendencies and the impoverished condition of most members of the apostolic Church. To limit the meaning to that were a mistake, but to include that or even to emphasise it in given circumstances was no error. Note that the physical and spiritual lay close together in Christ's mind. He passed easily from one to the other (John iv. 7-10; Lk. x. 42, see notes there). τῷ πν. is, of course, to be connected with πτωχοί, not with μακάριοι. Poor in spirit is not to be taken objectively, as if spirit indicated the element in which the poverty is manifest—poor intellect: "homines ingenio et eruditione parum florentes" (Fritzsche) = the νήπιοι in Matt. xi. 25; but subjectively, poor in their own esteem. Self-estimate is the essence of the matter, and is compatible with real wealth. Only the noble think meanly of themselves. The soul of goodness is in the man who is really humble. Poverty laid to heart passes into riches. A high ideal of life lies beneath all. And that ideal is the link between the social and the spiritual. The poor man passes into the blessedness of the kingdom as soon as he realises what a man is or ought to be. Poor in purse or even in character, no man is beggared who has a vision of man's chief end and chief good.—αὐτῶν, emphatic position theirs, note it well. So in the following verses αὐτοι and αὐτων.—ἐστι, not merely in prospect, but in present possession. The kingdom of heaven is often presented in the Gospels apocalyptically as a thing in the future to be given to the worthy by way of external recompense. But this view pertains rather to the form of thought than to the essence of the matter. Christ speaks of the kingdom here not as a known quan-

l Heb. ii. 17. m Rom. xi. 30, 31. 1 Tim. i. 13, 16.

7. μακάριοι οἱ [l] ἐλεήμονες· ὅτι αὐτοὶ [m] ἐλεηθήσονται. 8. μακάριοι οἱ [n] καθαροί τῇ καρδίᾳ· ὅτι αὐτοὶ τὸν Θεὸν [o] ὄψονται. 9. μακάριοι n 1 Tim. i. 5; ii. 22. o Heb. xii. 14 (seeing God).

tity, but as a thing whose nature He is in the act of defining by the aphorisms He utters. If so, then it consists essentially in states of mind. It is within. It is ourselves, the true ideal human.

Ver. 4. οἱ πενθοῦντες. Who are they? All who on any account grieve? Then this Beatitude would give utterance to a thoroughgoing optimism. Pessimists say that there are many griefs for which there is no remedy, so many that life is not worth living. Did Jesus mean to meet this position with a direct negative, and to affirm that there is no sorrow without remedy? If not, then He propounds a puzzle provoking thoughtful scholars to ask: What grief is that which will without fail find comfort? There can be no comfort where there is no grief, for the two ideas are correlative. But in most cases there is no apparent necessary connection. Necessary connection is asserted in this aphorism, which gives us a clue to the class described as οἱ πενθοῦντες. Their peculiar sorrow must be one which comforts itself, a grief that has the thing it grieves for in the very grief. The comfort is then no outward good. It lies in a right state of soul, and that is given in the sorrow which laments the lack of it. The sorrow reveals love of the good, and that love is possession. In so far as all kinds of sorrow tend to awaken reflection on the real good and ill of human life, and so to issue in the higher sorrow of the soul, the second Beatitude may be taken absolutely as expressing the tendency of all grief to end in consolation.—παρακληθήσονται, future. The comfort is latent in the very grief, but for the present there is no conscious joy, but only poignant sorrow. The joy, however, will inevitably come to birth. No noble nature abides permanently in the house of mourning. The greater the sorrow the greater the ultimate gladness, the "joy in the Holy Ghost" mentioned by St. Paul among the essentials of the Kingdom of God (Rom. xiv. 17).

Ver. 5. οἱ πραεῖς: in Sept. for עֲנָוִים in Ps. xxxvii. 11, of which this Beatitude is an echo. The men who suffer wrong without bitterness or desire for revenge, a class who in this world are apt to go to the wall. In this case we should have expected the Teacher to end with the common refrain: theirs is the kingdom of heaven, that being the only thing they are likely to get. Jean Paul Richter humorously said: "The French have the empire of the land, the English the empire of the sea; to the Germans belongs the empire of the air". But Jesus promises to the meek the empire of the solid earth—κληρονομήσουσι τὴν γῆν. Surely a startling paradox! That the meek should find a foremost place in the kingdom of heaven is very intelligible, but "inherit the earth"—the land of Canaan or any other part of this planet—is it not a delusive promise? Not altogether. It is at least true as a doctrine of moral tendency. Meekness after all is a power even in this world, a "world-conquering principle" (Tholuck). The meek of England, driven from their native land by religious intolerance, have inherited the continent of America. Weiss (Meyer) is quite sure, however, that this thought was far (ganz fern) from Christ's mind. I venture to think he is mistaken.

The inverse order of the second and third Beatitudes found in Codex D, and favoured by some of the Fathers, e.g., Jerome, might be plausibly justified by the affinity between poverty of spirit and meekness, and the natural sequence of the two promises: possession of the kingdom of heaven and inheritance of the earth. But the connection beneath the surface is in favour of the order as it stands in T. R.

Ver. 6. If the object of the hunger and thirst had not been mentioned this fourth Beatitude would have been parallel in form to the second: Blessed the hungry, for they shall be filled. We should then have another absolute affirmation requiring qualification, and raising the question: What sort of hunger is it which is sure to be satisfied? That might be the original form of the aphorism as given in Luke. The answer to the question it suggests is similar to that given under Beatitude 1. The hunger whose satisfaction is sure is that which contains its own satisfaction. It is the hunger for moral good. The passion for righteousness is righteousness in the deepest sense of the word.—πεινῶντες καὶ διψῶντες. These verbs, like all verbs of desire, ordinarily take the genitive of the object. Here and in οἱ [p] εἰρηνοποιοί· ὅτι αὐτοὶ [1] [q] υἱοὶ Θεοῦ κληθήσονται. μακάριοι οἱ δεδιωγμένοι ἕνεκεν δικαιοσύνης· 10. ὅτι αὐτῶν ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν p here only. The verb Col. i. 20.

q υἱοὶ Θ. in Lk. xx. 36. Rom. viii. 14, 19. Gal. iii. 26.

[1] αυτοι omitted in ℵCD it. vul. syr., bracketed in W.H. It may have been omitted by homœoteleuton and it seems needed for emphasis.

other places in N. T. they take the accusative, the object being of a spiritual nature, which one not merely desires to participate in, but to possess in whole. Winer, § xxx. 10, thus distinguishes the two constructions: διψῆν φιλοσοφίας = to thirst after philosophy; διψ. φιλοσοφίαν = to thirst for possession of philosophy as a whole. Some have thought that διὰ is to be understood before δικ., and that the meaning is: "Blessed they who suffer natural hunger and thirst on account of righteousness". Grotius understands by δικ. the way or doctrine of righteousness.

Ver. 7. This Beatitude states a self-acting law of the moral world. The exercise of mercy (ἔλεος, active pity) tends to elicit mercy from others—God and men. The chief reference may be to the mercy of God in the final awards of the kingdom, but the application need not be restricted to this. The doctrine of Christ abounds in great ethical principles of universal validity: "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," "to him that hath shall be given," etc. This Beatitude suitably follows the preceding. Mercy is an element in true righteousness (Mic. vi. 8). It was lacking in Pharisaic righteousness (Matt. xxiii. 23). It needed much to be inculcated in Christ's time, when sympathy was killed by the theory that all suffering was penalty of special sin, a theory which fostered a pitiless type of righteousness (Schanz). Mercy may be practised by many means; "not by money alone," says Euthy. Zig., "but by word, and if you have nothing by tears" (διὰ δακρύων).

Ver. 8. οἱ καθαροὶ τῇ καρδίᾳ: τ. καρ. may be an explanatory addition to indicate the region in which purity shows itself. That purity is in the heart, the seat of thought, desire, motive, not in the outward act, goes without saying from Christ's point of view. Blessed the pure. Here there is a wide range of suggestion. The pure may be the spotless or faultless in general; the continent with special reference to sexual indulgence—those whose very thoughts are clean; or the pure in motive, the single-minded, the men who seek the kingdom as the summum bonum with undivided heart. The last is the most relevant to the general connection and the most deserving to be insisted on. In the words of Augustine the mundum cor is above all the simplex cor. Moral simplicity is the cardinal demand in Christ's ethics. The man who has attained to it is in His view perfect (Matt. xix. 21). Without it a large numerical list of virtues and good habits goes for nothing. With it character, however faulty in temper or otherwise, is ennobled and redeemed.—τὸν θεὸν ὄψονται: Their reward is the beatific vision. Some think the reference is not to the faculty of clear vision but to the rare privilege of seeing the face of the Great King (so Fritzsche and Schanz). "The expression has its origin in the ways of eastern monarchs, who rarely show themselves in public, so that only the most intimate circle behold the royal countenance" (Schanz) = the pure have access to the all but inaccessible. This idea does not seem to harmonise with Christ's general way of conceiving God. On the other hand, it was His habit to insist on the connection between clear vision and moral simplicity; to teach that it is the single eye that is full of light (Matt. vi. 22). It is true that the pure shall have access to God's presence, but the truth to be insisted on in connection with this Beatitude is that through purity, singleness of mind, they are qualified for seeing, knowing, truly conceiving God and all that relates to the moral universe. It is the pure in heart who are able to see and say that "truly God is good" (Ps. lxxiii. 1) and rightly to interpret the whole phenomena of life in relation to Providence. They shall see, says Jesus, casting His thought into eschatological form, but He means the pure are the men who see; the double-minded, the two-souled (δίψυχος, James i. 8) man is blind. Theophylact illustrates the connection between purity and vision thus: ὥσπερ γὰρ τὸ κάτοπτρον, ἐὰν ᾖ καθαρὸν, τότε δέχεται τὰς ἐμφάσεις, οὕτω καὶ ἡ καθαρὰ ψυχὴ δέχεται ὄψιν θεοῦ.

Ver. 9. οἱ εἰρηνοποιοί: not merely those who have peace in their own souls

r Rom. ix. 1. Heb. vi. 18. s Lk. x. 21. t ver. 46. Ch. vi. 1, 2, 5, etc.

οὐρανῶν. 11. μακάριοί ἐστε, ὅταν ὀνειδίσωσιν ὑμᾶς καὶ διώξωσι, καὶ εἴπωσι πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα[1] καθ' ὑμῶν[2] r ψευδόμενοι,[3] ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ. 12. χαίρετε καὶ s ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, ὅτι ὁ t μισθὸς ὑμῶν πολὺς ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· οὕτω γὰρ ἐδίωξαν τοὺς προφήτας τοὺς πρὸ ὑμῶν.

[1] This word (in CΔΣ) is omitted in ℵBD. It may have been added to make the sense clear.

[2] καθ υμων before παν in D.

[3] Omitted in D; found in ℵBC al.

through purity (Augustine), or the peace-loving (Grotius, Wetstein), but the active heroic promoters of peace in a world full of alienation, party passion, and strife. Their efforts largely consist in keeping aloof from sectional strifes and the passions which beget them, and living tranquilly for and in the whole. Such men have few friends. Christ, the ideal peace-maker, was alone in a time given up to sectarian division. But they have their compensation—υἱοὶ θεοῦ κληθήσονται. God owns the disowned and distrusted as His sons. They shall be called because they are. They shall be called at the great consummation; nay, even before that, in after generations, when party strifes and passions have ceased, and men have come to see who were the true friends of the Divine interest in an evil time.

Vv. 10-12. οἱ δεδιωγμένοι ε. δικ. The original form of the Beatitude was probably: Blessed the persecuted. The added words only state what is a matter of course. No one deserves to be called a persecuted one unless he suffers for righteousness' sake. The persecuted! They are not merely men who have passed through a certain experience, but men who bear abiding traces of it in their character. They are marked men, and bear the stamp of trial on their faces. It arrests the notice of the passer-by: commands his respect, and prompts the question, Who and whence? They are veteran soldiers of righteousness with an unmistakable air of dignity, serenity, and buoyancy about them.—αὐτῶν ἐστὶν ἡ β. τ. οὐρ. The common refrain of all the Beatitudes is expressly repeated here to hint that theirs emphatically is the Kingdom of Heaven. It is the proper guerdon of the soldier of righteousness. It is his now, within him in the disciplined spirit and the heroic temper developed by trial.—Ver. 11. μακάριοί ἐστε. The Teacher expatiates as if it were a favourite theme, giving a personal turn to His further reflections. "Blessed are ye." Is it likely that Jesus would speak so early of this topic to disciples? Would He not wait till it came more nearly within the range of their experience? Nay, is the whole discourse about persecution not a reflection back into the teaching of the Master of the later experiences of the apostolic age, that suffering disciples might be inspired by the thought that their Lord had so spoken? It is possible to be too incredulous here. If it was not too soon to speak of Pharisaic righteousness it was not too soon to speak of suffering for true righteousness. The one was sure to give rise to the other. The disciple circle may already have had experience of Pharisaic disfavour. In any case Jesus saw clearly what was coming. He had had an apocalypse of the dark future in the season of temptation, and He deemed it fitting to lift the veil a little that His disciples might get a glimpse of it.—ὅταν ὀνειδίσωσιν . . . ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ: illustrative details pointing to persistent relentless persecution by word and deed, culminating in wilful, malicious, lying imputations of the grossest sort—πᾶν πονηρὸν, every conceivable calumny—ψευδόμενοι, lying, not merely in the sense that the statements are false, but in the sense of deliberately inventing the most improbable lies; their only excuse being that violent prejudice leads the calumniators to think nothing too evil to be believed against the objects of their malice—ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ, for Him who has undertaken to make you fishers of men. Do you repent following Him? No reason why.—Ver. 12. χαίρετε καὶ ἀγ. In spite of all, joy, exultation is possible—nay, inevitable. I not only exhort you to it, but I tell you you cannot help being in this mood, if once you throw yourselves enthusiastically into the warfare of God. Ἀγαλλιάω is a strong word of Hellenistic coinage, from ἄγαν and ἅλλομαι, to leap much, signifying irrepressible demonstrative gladness. This joy is inseparable from the heroic

13. "Ὑμεῖς ἐστε τὸ [u] ἅλας τῆς γῆς· ἐὰν δὲ τὸ ἅλας [v] μωρανθῇ, ἐν τίνι [w] ἁλισθήσεται; εἰς οὐδὲν ἰσχύει ἔτι, εἰ μὴ βληθῆναι[1] ἔξω, u Mk. ix. Lk. xiv. 34. Col. iv. 6.

v Lk. xiv. 34. Rom. i. 22. 1 Cor. i. 20. w here and in Mk. ix. 49.

[1] βληθεν in ℵBC 1, 33, Origen, which carries along with it the omission of και after εξω.

temper. It is the joy of the Alpine climber standing on the top of a snow-clad mountain. But the Teacher gives two reasons to help inexperienced disciples to rise to that moral elevation.—ὅτι ὁ μισθὸς . . . οὐρανοῖς. For evil treatment on earth there is a compensating reward in heaven. This hope, weak now, was strong in primitive Christianity, and greatly helped martyrs and confessors.—οὕτως γὰρ ε. τοὺς προφήτας. If we take the γὰρ as giving a reason for the previous statement the sense will be: you cannot doubt that the prophets who suffered likewise have received an eternal reward (so Bengel, Fritzsche, Schanz, Meyer, Weiss). But we may take it as giving a co-ordinate reason for joy = ye are in good company. There is inspiration in the "goodly fellowship of the prophets," quite as much as in thought of their posthumous reward. It is to be noted that the prophets themselves did not get much comfort from such thoughts, and more generally that they did not rise to the joyous mood commended to His disciples by Jesus; but were desponding and querulous. On that side, therefore, there was no inspiration to be got from thinking of them. But they were thoroughly loyal to righteousness at all hazards, and reflection on their noble career was fitted to infect disciples with their spirit.—τοὺς πρὸ ὑμῶν: words skilfully chosen to raise the spirit. Before you not only in time but in vocation and destiny. Your predecessors in function and suffering; take up the prophetic succession and along with it, cheerfully, its tribulations.

Vv. 13-16. Disciple functions. It is quite credible that these sentences formed part of the Teaching on the Hill. Jesus might say these things at a comparatively early period to the men to whom He had already said: I will make you fishers of men. The functions assigned to disciples here are not more ambitious than that alluded to at the time of their call. The new section rests on what goes before, and postulates possession of the attributes named in the Beatitudes. With these the disciples will be indeed the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Vitally important functions are indicated by the two figures. Nil sole et sale utilius was a Roman proverb (Pliny, H. N., 31, 9). Both harmonise with, the latter points expressly to, a universal destination of the new religion. The sun lightens all lands. Both also show how alien it was from the aims of Christ to be the teacher of an esoteric faith.

Ver. 13. ἅλας, a late form for ἅλς, ἅλος, masculine. The properties of salt are assumed to be known. Commentators have enumerated four. Salt is pure, preserves against corruption, gives flavour to food, and as a manuring element helps to fertilise the land. The last mentioned property is specially insisted on by Schanz, who finds a reference to it in Lk. xiv. 35, and thinks it is also pointed to here by the expression τῆς γῆς. The first, purity, is a quality of salt per se, rather than a condition on which its function in nature depends. The second and third are doubtless the main points to be insisted on, and the second more than the third and above all. Salt arrests or prevents the process of putrefaction in food, and the citizens of the kingdom perform the same function for the earth, that is, for the people who dwell on it. In Schanz's view there is a confusion of the metaphor with its moral interpretation. Fritzsche limits the point of comparison to indispensableness = ye are as necessary an element in the world as salt is; a needlessly bald interpretation. Necessary certainly, but why and for what?—τῆς γῆς might mean the land of Israel (Achelis, Bergpredigt), but it is more natural to take it in its widest significance in harmony with κόσμου. Holtzmann (H. C.) sets κόσμου down to the account of the evangelist, and thinks γῆς in the narrow sense more suited to the views of Jesus.—Ver. 14. μωρανθῇ. The Vulgate renders the verb evanuerit. Better Beza and Erasmus, infatuatus fuerit. If the salt become insipid, so as to lack its proper preserving virtue. Can this happen? Weiss and others reply: It does not matter for the point x Ch. vii. 6. Lk. viii. 5. Heb. x. 29. y part. pass. in Lk. xii. 35. Heb. xii. 18 al.

καὶ [1] x καταπατεῖσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. 14. Ὑμεῖς ἐστε τὸ φῶς τοῦ κόσμου· οὐ δύναται πόλις κρυβῆναι ἐπάνω ὄρους κειμένη· 15. οὐδὲ y καίουσι λύχνον καὶ τιθέασιν αὐτὸν ὑπὸ τὸν μόδιον, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ of the comparison. Perhaps not, but it does matter for the felicity of the metaphor, which is much more strikingly apt if degeneracy can happen in the natural as well as in the spiritual sphere. Long ago Maundrell maintained that it could, and modern travellers confirm his statement. Furrer says: "As it was observed by Maundrell 200 years ago, so it has often been observed in our time that salt loses somewhat of its sharpness in the storehouses of Syria and Palestine. Gathered in a state of impurity, it undergoes with other substances a chemical process, by which it becomes really another sort of stuff, while retaining its old appearance" (Ztscht. für M. und R., 1890). A similar statement is made by Thomson (Land and Book, p. 381). There is no room for doubt as to whether the case supposed can happen in the spiritual sphere. The "salt of the earth" can become not only partially but wholly, hopelessly insipid, losing the qualities which constitute its conservative power as set forth in the Beatitudes and in other parts of Christ's teaching (e.g., Mat. xviii.). Erasmus gives a realistic description of the causes of degeneracy in these words: "Si vestri mores fuerint amore laudis, cupiditate pecuniarum, studio voluptatum, libidine vindicandi, metu infamiae damnorum aut mortis infatuati," etc. (Paraph. in Evan. Matt.).—ἐν τίνι ἁλισ. Not with what shall the so necessary salting process be done? but with what shall the insipid salt be salted? The meaning is that the lost property is irrecoverable. A stern statement, reminding us of Heb. vi. 6, but true to the fact in the spiritual sphere. Nothing so hopeless as apostate discipleship with a bright past behind it to which it has become dead—begun in the spirit, ending in the flesh.—εἰς οὐδὲν, useless for salting, good for nothing else any more (ἔτι).—εἰ μὴ βληθὲν, etc. This is a kind of humorous afterthought: except indeed, cast out as refuse, to be trodden under foot of man, i.e., to make footpaths of. The reading βληθὲν is much to be preferred to βληθῆναι, as giving prominence to καταπατεῖσθαι as the main verb, pointing to a kind of use to which insipid salt can after all be put. But what a downcome: from being saviours of society to supplying materials for footpaths!

[1] Omitted in MSS. named in preceding note.

Ver. 14. τὸ φῶς τ. κ. The light, the sun of the moral world, conceived of as full of the darkness of ignorance and sin. The disciple function is now viewed as illuminating. And as under the figure of salt the danger warned against was that of becoming insipid, so here the danger to be avoided is that of obscuring the light. The light will shine, that is its nature, if pains be not taken to hide it.—οὐ δύναται πόλις, etc. As a city situate on the top of a hill cannot be hid, neither can a light fail to be seen unless it be expressly prevented from shining. No pains need to be taken to secure that the light shall shine. For that it is enough to be a light. But Christ knew that there would be strong temptation for the men that had it in them to be lights to hide their light. It would draw the world's attention to them, and so expose them to the ill will of such as hate the light. Therefore He goes on to caution disciples against the policy of obscuration.

Ver. 15. A parabolic word pointing out that such a policy in the natural sphere is unheard of and absurd.—καίουσι, to kindle, accendere, ordinarily neuter = urere; not as Beza thought, a Hebraism; examples occur in late Greek authors (vide Kypke, Obser. Sac.). The figure is taken from lowly cottage life. There was a projecting stone in the wall on which the lamp was set. The house consisted of a single room, so that the tiny light sufficed for all. It might now and then be placed under the modius, an earthenware grain measure, or under the bed (Mk. iv. 21); high, to keep clear of serpents, therefore without danger of setting it on fire (Koetsveld, De Gelijkenissen, p. 305). But that would be the exception, not the rule—done occasionally for special reasons, perhaps during the hours of sleep. Schanz says the lamp burned all night, and that when they wanted darkness they put it on the floor and covered it with the "bushel". Tholuck also thinks people might cover the light when they wished to keep it burning, when they had occasion to leave τὴν λυχνίαν καὶ [z] λάμπει πᾶσι τοῖς ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ. 16. οὕτω λαμψάτω τὸ φῶς ὑμῶν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὅπως ἴδωσιν ὑμῶν τὰ [a] καλὰ ἔργα, καὶ δοξάσωσι τὸν πατέρα ὑμῶν τὸν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

z Lk. xvii. 22, 24. Acts xii. 7. 2 Cor. iv. 6.

a Cf. Mt. xxvi. 10, Mk. xiv. 6, for an example of a "good work".

the room for a time. Weiss, on the other hand, thinks it would be put under a cover only when they wished to put it out (Matt.-Evan., p. 144). But was it ever put out? Not so, according to Benzinger (Heb. Arch., p. 124).

Ver. 16. οὕτως. Do ye as they do in cottage life: apply the parable.—λαμψάτω, let your light shine. Don't use means to prevent it, turning the rare exception of household practice into the rule, so extinguishing your light, or at least rendering it useless. Cowards can always find plausible excuses for the policy of obscuration—reasons of prudence and wisdom; gradual accustoming of men to new ideas; deference to the prejudices of good men; avoidance of rupture by premature outspokenness; but generally the true reason is fear of unpleasant consequences to oneself. Their conduct Jesus represents as disloyalty to God—ὅπως, etc. The shining of light from the good works of disciples glorifies God the Father in heaven. The hiding of the light means withholding glory. The temptation arises from the fact—a stern law of the moral world it is—that just when most glory is likely to accrue to God, least glory comes to the light-bearer; not glory but dishonour and evil treatment his share. Many are ready enough to let their light shine when honour comes to themselves. But their "light" is not true heaven-kindled light; their works are not καλὰ, noble, heroic, but πονηρὰ (vii. 17), ignoble, worthless, at best of the conventional type in fashion among religious people, and wrought often in a spirit of vanity and ostentation. This is theatrical goodness, which is emphatically not what Jesus wanted. Euthy. Zig. says: οὐ κελεύει θεατρίζειν τὴν ἀρετήν.

Note that here, for the first time in the Gospel, Christ's distinctive name for God, "Father," occurs. It comes in as a thing of course. Does it presuppose previous instruction? (So Meyer.) One might have expected so important a topic as the nature and name of God to have formed the subject of a distinct lesson. But Christ's method of teaching was not scholastic or formal. He defined terms by discriminating use; Father, e.g., as a name for God, by using it as a motive to noble conduct. The motive suggested throws light on the name. God, we learn, as Father delights in noble conduct, as human fathers find joy in sons who acquit themselves bravely. Jesus may have given formal instruction on the point, but not necessarily. This first use of the title is very significant. It is full, solemn, impressive: your Father, He who is in the heavens; so again in ver. 45. It is suggestive of reasons for faithfulness, reasons of love and reverence. It hints at a reflected glory, the reward of heroism. The noble works which glorify the Father reveal the workers to be sons. The double-sided doctrine of this logion of Jesus is that the divine is revealed by the heroic in human conduct, and that the moral hero is the true son of God. Jesus Himself is the highest illustration of the twofold truth.

Vv. 17-20. Jesus defines His position. At the period of the Teaching on the Hill Jesus felt constrained to define His ethical and religious position all round, with reference to the O. T. as the recognised authority, and also to contemporary presentations of righteousness. The disciples had already heard Him teach in the synagogues (Matt. iv. 23) in a manner that at once arrested attention and led hearers to recognise in Him a new type of teacher (Mk. i. 27), entirely different from the scribes (Mk. i. 22). The sentences before us contain just such a statement of the Teacher's attitude as the previously awakened surprise of His audiences would lead us to expect. There is no reason to doubt their substantial authenticity though they may not reproduce the precise words of the speaker; no ground for the suggestion of Holtzmann (H. C.) that so decided a position either for or against the law was not likely to be taken up in Christ's time, and that we must find in these vv. an anti-Pauline programme of the Judaists. At a first glance the various statements may appear inconsistent with each other. And assuming their genuineness, they might easily be misunderstood, and give rise to disputes in the apostolic age, or be taken hold of in rival interests. The words of great epoch-making men generally have this fate. Though apparently contradictory they might all proceed

17. "Μὴ [b]νομίσητε ὅτι ἦλθον [c]καταλῦσαι τὸν νόμον ἢ τοὺς προφήτας· οὐκ ἦλθον καταλῦσαι, ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι. 18. ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω ὑμῖν, ἕως ἂν [d]παρέλθῃ ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ, [e]ἰῶτα ἓν ἢ μία [f]κεραία οὐ μὴ παρέλθῃ ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, ἕως ἂν πάντα γένηται.

b with ὅτι here and in x. 34 (ὅτι ἦλθον), oftener with inf. or an accus. with inf. c in same sense Acts v. 38, 39. Rom. xiv. 20. d Ch. xxiv. 34. Lk. xvi. 17. 2 Cor. v. 17. James i. 10. e here only. f Lk. xvi. 17 (κερέα in both pl. W.H.).

from the many-sided mind of Jesus, and be so reported by the genial Galilean publican in his Logia. The best guide to the meaning of the momentous declaration they contain is acquaintance with the general drift of Christ's teaching (vide Wendt, Die Lehre Jesu, ii., 330). Verbal exegesis will not do much for us. We must bring to the words sympathetic insight into the whole significance of Christ's ministry. Yet the passage by itself well weighed is more luminous than at first it may seem.

Ver. 17. Μὴ νομίσητε: These words betray a consciousness that there was that in His teaching and bearing which might create such an impression, and are a protest against taking a surface impression for the truth.—καταλῦσαι, to abrogate, to set aside in the exercise of legislative authority. What freedom of mind is implied in the bare suggestion of this as a possibility! To the ordinary religious Jew the mere conception would appear a profanity. A greater than the O. T., than Moses and the prophets, is here. But the Greater is full of reverence for the institutions and sacred books of His people. He is not come to disannul either the law or the prophets. ἢ before τ. προφ. is not = καὶ. "Law" and "Prophets" are not taken here as one idea = the O. T. Scriptures, as law, prophets and psalms seem to be in Lk. xxiv. 44, but as distinct parts, with reference to which different attitudes might conceivably be taken up. ἢ implies that the attitude actually taken up is the same towards both. The prophets are not to be conceived of as coming under the category of law (Weiss), but as retaining their distinctive character as revealers of God's nature and providence. Christ's attitude towards them in that capacity is the same as that towards the law, though the Sermon contains no illustrations under that head. "The idea of God and of salvation which Jesus taught bore the same relations to the O. T. revelation as His doctrine of righteousness to the O. T. law" (Wendt, Die L. J., ii., 344).—πληρῶσαι: the common relation is expressed by this weighty word. Christ protests that He came not as an abrogator, but as a fulfiller. What rôle does He thereby claim? Such as belongs to one whose attitude is at once free and reverential. He fulfils by realising in theory and practice an ideal to which O. T. institutions and revelations point, but which they do not adequately express. Therefore, in fulfilling He necessarily abrogates in effect, while repudiating the spirit of a destroyer. He brings in a law of the spirit which cancels the law of the letter, a kingdom which realises prophetic ideals, while setting aside the crude details of their conception of the Messianic time.

Vv. 18-19. These verses wear on first view a Judaistic look, and have been regarded as an interpolation, or set down to the credit of an over-conservative evangelist. But they may be reconciled with ver. 17, as above interpreted. Jesus expresses here in the strongest manner His conviction that the whole O. T. is a Divine revelation, and that therefore every minutest precept has religious significance which must be recognised in the ideal fulfilment.—Ἀμὴν, formula of solemn asseveration, often used by Jesus, never by apostles, found doubled only in fourth Gospel.—ἕως ἂν παρέλθῃ, etc.: not intended to fix a period after which the law will pass away, but a strong way of saying never (so Tholuck and Weiss).—ἰῶτα, the smallest letter in the Hebrew alphabet.—κεραία, the little projecting point in some of the letters, e.g., of the base line in Beth; both representing the minutiæ in the Mosaic legislation. Christ, though totally opposed to the spirit of the scribes, would not allow them to have a monopoly of zeal for the commandments great and small. It was important in a polemical interest to make this clear.—οὐ μὴ π., elliptical = do not fear lest. Vide Kühner, Gram., § 516, 9; also Goodwin's Syntax, Appendix ii.—ἕως ἂν π. γεν., a second protasis introduced with ἕως explanatory of the first ἕως ἂν παρέλθῃ; vide Goodwin, § 510; not saying the same thing, but a kindred: eternal, lasting, till adequately fulfilled; the latter the more exact statement of Christ's thought.

19. ὃς ἐὰν οὖν [g] λύσῃ μίαν τῶν [h] ἐντολῶν τούτων τῶν ἐλαχίστων, καὶ διδάξῃ οὕτω τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, ἐλάχιστος κληθήσεται ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν· ὃς δ' ἂν ποιήσῃ καὶ διδάξῃ, οὗτος μέγας κληθήσεται ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν. 20. λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἐὰν μὴ [i] περισσεύσῃ ἡ δικαιοσύνη ὑμῶν [1] πλεῖον τῶν [j] γραμματέων καὶ Φαρισαίων, οὐ μὴ εἰσέλθητε εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν.

g John v. 18; vii. 23; x. 35.
h Ch. xv. 3; xix. 17; xxii. 40. Lk. i. 6. John xiii. 34.
i with παρα in Eccles. iii. 19. Cf. Rom. v. 15.
j sim. ellipt. const. 1 John ii. 2.

[1] υμων before η δικ. (= your righteousness) in ℵBLΔ al. T. R. as in SUΣ.

Ver. 19. ὃς ἐὰν οὖν λύσῃ, etc.: οὖν pointing to a natural inference from what goes before. Christ's view being such as indicated, He must so judge of the setter aside of any laws however small. When a religious system has lasted long, and is wearing towards its decline and fall, there are always such men. The Baptist was in some respects such a man. He seems to have totally neglected the temple worship and sacred festivals. He shared the prophetic disgust at formalism. Note now what Christ's judgment about such really is. A scribe or Pharisee would regard a breaker of even the least commandments as a miscreant. Jesus simply calls him the least in the Kingdom of Heaven. He takes for granted that he is an earnest man, with a passion for righteousness, which is the key to his iconoclastic conduct. He recognises him therefore as possessing real moral worth, but, in virtue of his impatient radical-reformer temper, not great, only little in the scale of true moral values, in spite of his earnestness in action and sincerity in teaching. John the Baptist was possibly in His mind, or some others not known to us from the Gospels.—ὃς δ' ἂν ποίησῃ καὶ διδάξῃ, etc. We know now who is least: who is great? The man who does and teaches to do all the commands great and small; great not named but understood—οὗτος μέγας. Jesus has in view O. T. saints, the piety reflected in the Psalter, where the great ethical laws and the precepts respecting ritual are both alike respected, and men in His own time living in their spirit. In such was a sweetness and graciousness, akin to the Kingdom as He conceived it, lacking in the character of the hot-headed law-breaker. The geniality of Jesus made Him value these sweet saintly souls.

Ver. 20. Here is another type still, that of the scribes and Pharisees. We have had two degrees of worth, the little and the great. This new type gives us the moral zero.—λέγω γὰρ. The γὰρ is somewhat puzzling. We expect δὲ, taking our attention off two types described in the previous sentence and fixing it on a distinct one. Yet there is a hidden logic latent in the γὰρ. It explains the ἐλάχιστος of the previous verse. The earnest reformer is a small character compared with the sweet wholesome performer, but he is not a moral nullity. That place is reserved for another class. I call him least, not nothing, for the scribe is the zero.—πλεῖον τῶν γρ. κ. φ., a compendious comparison, τῆς δικαιοσύνης being understood after πλεῖον. Christ's statements concerning these classes of the Jewish community, elsewhere recorded, enable us to understand the verdict He pronounces here. They differed from the two classes named in ver. 18, thus: Class 1 set aside the least commandments for the sake of the great; class 2 conscientiously did all, great and small; class 3 set aside the great for the sake of the little, the ethical for the sake of the ritual, the divine for the sake of the traditional. That threw them outside the Kingdom, where only the moral has value. And the second is greater, higher, than the first, because, while zeal for the ethical is good, spirit, temper, disposition has supreme value in the Kingdom. These valuations of Jesus are of great importance as a contribution towards defining the nature of the Kingdom as He conceived it.

Nothing, little, great: there is a higher grade still, the highest. It belongs to Christ Himself, the Fulfiller, who is neither a sophistical scribe, nor an impatient reformer, nor a strict performer of all laws great and small, walking humbly with God in the old ways, without thought, dream or purpose of change, but one who lives above the past and the present in the ideal, knows that a change is impending, but wishes it to come gently, and so as to do full justice to all

21. Ἠκούσατε ὅτι [k] ἐρρέθη [1] τοῖς [l] ἀρχαίοις, Οὐ φονεύσεις· ὃς δ᾽ ἂν φονεύσῃ, [m] ἔνοχος ἔσται τῇ [n] κρίσει· 22. ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι πᾶς ὁ ὀργιζόμενος τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ εἰκῆ [2] ἔνοχος ἔσται τῇ κρίσει· ὃς δ᾽ ἂν εἴπῃ τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ, Ῥακά, [3] ἔνοχος ἔσται τῷ [o] συνεδρίῳ· ὃς k Rom. ix. 12.

l again ver. 33. Lk. ix. 8, 19. Acts xv. 7. 2 Pet. ii. 5 (ethical). 2 Cor. v. 17.
m with dat. here four times; with gen. of punisht. Ch. xxvi. 66. Mk. xiv. 64.
n of the tribunal, here only.
o Ch. xxvi. 59. Mk. xiv. 55. Lk. xx. 66. Often in Acts.

[1] ερρηθη in BD; text in ℵLMΔ al. pl. (W.H.). ερρεθη was more usual in later Greek.

[2] εικη is an ancient gloss found in many late MSS. but omitted in ℵB, Origen, Vulgate, and in the best modern editions.

[3] ραχα in ℵ*D abc (Tisch.); text in ℵ^{b}BE (W.H.).

that is divine, venerable, and of good tendency in the past. His is the unique greatness of the reverently conservative yet free, bold inaugurator of a new time.

Vv. 21-26. First illustration of Christ's ethical attitude, taken from the Sixth Commandment. In connection with this and the following exemplifications of Christ's ethical method, the interpreter is embarrassed by the long-continued strifes of the theological schools, which have brought back the spirit of legalism, from which the great Teacher sought to deliver His disciples. It will be best to ignore these strifes and go steadily on our way.—Ver. 21. Ἠκούσατε. The common people knew the law by hearing it read in the synagogue, not by reading it themselves. The aorist expresses what they were accustomed to hear, an instance of the "gnomic" use. Tholuck thinks there may be an allusion to the tradition of the scribes, called Shema.—τοῖς ἀρχαίοις might mean: in ancient times, to the ancients, or by the ancients. The second is in accord with N. T. usage, and is adopted by Meyer, Weiss and Holtzmann (H. C.). How far back does Christ go in thought? To Moses or to Ezra? The expression is vague, and might cover the whole past, and perhaps is intended to do so. There is no reason à priori why the criticism should be restricted to the interpretation of the law by the scribes. Christ's position as fulfiller entitled Him to point out the defects of the law itself, and we must be prepared to find Him doing so, and there is reason to believe that in the sequel He actually does (so Wendt, L. J., ii., 332).—Οὐ φονεύσεις . . . κρίσει. This is a correct statement, not only of the Pharisaic interpretation of the law, but of the law itself. As a law for the life of a nation, it could forbid and punish only the outward act. But just here lay its defect as a summary of human duty. It restrained the end not the beginning of transgression (Euthy. Zig.).—ἔνοχος = ἐνεχόμενος, with dative of the tribunal here.—Ver. 22. ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν. Christ supplies the defect, as a painter fills in a rude outline of a picture (σκιαγραφίαν), says Theophy. He goes back on the roots of crime in the feelings: anger, contempt, etc.—πᾶς . . . αὐτοῦ. Every one; universal interdict of angry passion.—ἀδελφῷ, not in blood (the classical meaning) or in faith, but by common humanity. The implied doctrine is that every man is my brother; companion doctrine to the universal Fatherhood of God (ver. 45).—εἰκῆ is of course a gloss; qualification of the interdict against anger may be required, but it was not Christ's habit to supply qualifications. His aim was to impress the main idea, anger a deadly sin.—κρίσει, here as in ver. 21. The reference is to the provincial court of seven (Deut. xvi. 18, 2 Chron. xix. 5, Joseph. Ant. iv. 8, 14) possessing power to punish capital offences by the sword. Christ's words are of course not to be taken literally as if He were enacting that the angry man be tried as a criminal. So understood He would be simply introducing an extension of legalism. He deserves to go before the seven, He says, meaning he is as great an offender as the homicide who is actually tried by them.

Ῥακά: left untranslated in A. V. and R. V.; a word of little meaning, rendered by Jerome "inanis aut vacuus absque cerebro". Augustine says a Jew told him it was not properly a word at all, but an interjection like Hem. Theophy. gives as an equivalent σὺ spoken by a Greek to a man whom he despised. And the man who commits this trivial offence (as it seems) must go before, not the provincial seven, but the supreme seventy, the Sanhedrim that tried the most heinous offences and sentenced to the severest

δ' ἂν εἴπῃ, Μωρέ, ἔνοχος ἔσται εἰς τὴν γέενναν τοῦ πυρός. 23. Ἐὰν οὖν προσφέρῃς τὸ δῶρόν σου ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον, κἀκεῖ μνησθῇς ὅτι ὁ ἀδελφός σου [p] ἔχει τὶ κατὰ σοῦ, 24. ἄφες ἐκεῖ τὸ δῶρόν σου ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, καὶ ὕπαγε, πρῶτον [q] διαλλάγηθι τῷ ἀδελφῷ σου, καὶ τότε ἐλθὼν πρόσφερε τὸ δῶρόν σου. 25. [r] ἴσθι [s] εὐνοῶν τῷ [t] ἀντιδίκῳ σου ταχύ, [u] ἕως ὅτου εἶ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ μετ' αὐτοῦ,[1] μήποτέ σε [v] παραδῷ ὁ ἀντίδικος τῷ κριτῇ, καὶ ὁ κριτής σε p ἔχειν τι κ. τινος here. Mk. xi. 25. Rev. ii. 4. Cf. Acts xxiv. 19 (πρός τινα).

q here only in N. T.
r ἴσθι with part. Lk. xix. 17.
s here only in N. T.
t Lk. xii. 58; xviii. 3. 1 Peter v. 8.
u ἕως ὅτου = while, here only.
v τινά τινι here and Ch. xviii. 34; xx. 18; xxvii. 2, etc.

[1] μετ αυτου before εν τ. οδῷ, ℵBDL.

penalties, e.g., death by stoning! Trivial in appearance, the offence is deadly in Christ's eyes. It means contempt for a fellow-man, more inhuman than anger; a violent passion, prompting to words and acts often bitterly regretted when the hot temper cools down. Μωρέ, if a Greek word, the equivalent for נָבָל = fool, good for nothing, morally worthless. It may, as Paulus, and after him Nösgen, suggests, be a Hebrew word, מוֹרֶה (Num. xx. 24, Deut. xxi. 18), a rebel against God or against parents, the most worthless of characters. Against this Field (Otium Norvicense) remarks that it would be the only instance of a pure Hebrew word in the N. T. In either case the word expresses a more serious form of contempt than Raca. Raca expresses contempt for a man's head = you stupid! More expresses contempt for his heart and character = you scoundrel. The reckless use of such opprobrious epithets Jesus regarded as the supreme offence against the law of humanity.—ἔνοχος . . . πυρός. He deserves to go, not to the seven or the seventy, but to hell, his sin altogether damnable. Kuinoel thinks the meaning is: He deserves to be burned alive in the valley of Hinnom: is dignus est qui in valle Hinnomi vivus comburatur. This interpretation finds little approval, but it is not so improbable when we remember what Christ said about the offender of the little ones (Matt. xviii. 6). Neither burning alive nor drowning was actually practised. In these words of Jesus against anger and contempt there is an aspect of exaggeration. They are the strong utterance of one in whom all forms of inhumanity roused feelings of passionate abhorrence. They are of the utmost value as a revelation of character.

Vv. 23, 24. Holtzmann (H. C.) regards these verses, as well as the two following, as an addition by the evangelist. But the passage is at least in thorough harmony with what goes before, as well as with the whole discourse.—Ἐὰν οὖν προσφέρῃς, if thou art in the very act of presenting thine offering (present tense) at the altar.—κἀκεῖ μνησθῇς . . . κατὰ σοῦ, and it suddenly flashes through thy mind there that thou hast done something to a brother man fitted to provoke angry feeling in him. What then? Get through with thy worship as fast as possible and go directly after and make peace with the offended? No, interrupt the religious action and go on that errand first.—ἄφες ἐκεῖ. Lay it down on the spur of the moment before the altar without handing it to the priest to be offered by him in thy stead.—καὶ ὕπαγε πρῶτον. The πρῶτον is to be joined to ὕπαγε, not to the following verb as in A. V. and R. V. (πρῶτον stands after the verb also in chaps. vi. 33, vii. 5). First go: remove thyself from the temple, break off thy worship, though it may seem profane to do so.—διαλλάγηθι . . . καὶ τότε . . . πρόσφερε: no contempt for religious service expressed or implied. Holtzmann (H. C.) asks, did Jesus offer sacrifice? and answers, hardly. In any case He respected the practice. But, reconciliation before sacrifice: morality before religion. Significant utterance, first announcement of a great principle often repeated, systematically neglected by the religion of the time. Placability before sacrifice, mercy before sacrifice, filial affection and duty before sacrifice; so always in Christ's teaching (Matt. ix. 13, xv. 5). πρόσφερε: present; set about offering: plenty of time now for the sacred action.

Vv. 25, 26. There is much more reason for regarding this passage as an interpolation. It is connected only externally (by the references to courts of w ver 33. Ch. xviii. 25; xxii. 21. Rom. xiii. 7.

x Mk. xii. 24.

παραδῷ[1] τῷ ὑπηρέτῃ, καὶ εἰς φυλακὴν βληθήσῃ. 26. ἀμὴν λέγω σοι, οὐ μὴ ἐξέλθῃς ἐκεῖθεν, ἕως ἂν [w] ἀποδῷς τὸν ἔσχατον [x] κοδράντην. 27. Ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις,[2] 28. Οὐ μοιχεύσεις· ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι πᾶς ὁ βλέπων γυναῖκα πρὸς τὸ ἐπιθυμῆσαι αὐτῆς[3] law) with what goes before, and it is out of keeping with the general drift of the teaching on the hill. It occurs in a different connection in Luke xii. 58, there as a solemn warning to the Jewish people, on its way to judgment, to repent. Meyer pleads that the logion might be repeated. It might, but only on suitable occasions, and the teaching on the hill does not seem to offer such an occasion. Kuinoel, Bleek, Holtzmann, Weiss and others regard the words as foreign to the connection. Referring to the exposition in Luke, I offer here only a few verbal notes mainly on points in which Matthew differs from Luke.—ἴσθι εὐνοῶν, be in a conciliatory mood, ready to come to terms with your opponent in a legal process (ἀντίδικος). It is a case of debt, and the two, creditor and debtor, are on the way to the court where they must appear together (Deut. xxi. 18, xxv. 1). Matthew's expression implies willingness to come to terms amicably on the creditor's part, and the debtor is exhorted to meet him half way. Luke's δὸς ἐργασίαν throws the willingness on the other side, or at least implies that the debtor will need to make an effort to bring the creditor to terms.—παραδῷ, a much milder word than Luke's κατασύρῃ, which points to rough, rude handling, dragging an unwilling debtor along whither he would rather not go.—ὑπηρέτῃ, the officer of the court whose business it was to collect the debt and generally to carry out the decision of the judge; in Luke πράκτωρ.—κοδράντην = quadrans, less than a farthing. Luke has λεπτόν, half the value of a κοδ., thereby strengthening the statement that the imprisoned debtor will not escape till he has paid all he owes.

[1] This second σε παρ. is omitted in ℵB. Luke's text may have suggested the addition.

[2] τοις αρχαιοις is wanting in MSS. except LMΔ.

[3] επιθυμησαι without pronoun, ℵ* (Tisch.); with αυτην, BDL al. (W.H. brackets); text MΣ. αυτην probably the true reading.

Vv. 27-30. Second illustration, taken from the seventh commandment. A grand moral law, in brief lapidary style guarding the married relation and the sanctity of home. Of course the Hebrew legislator condemned lust after another man's wife; it is expressly prohibited in the tenth commandment. But in practical working as a public law the statute laid main stress on the outward act, and it was the tendency of the scribes to give exclusive prominence to this. Therefore Christ brings to the front what both Moses and the scribes left in the background, the inward desire of which adultery is the fruit—Ver. 28.—ὁ βλέπων: the looker is supposed to be a husband who by his look wrongs his own wife.—γυναῖκα, married or unmarried.—πρὸς τὸ ἐπιθυμῆσαι. The look is supposed to be not casual but persistent, the desire not involuntary or momentary, but cherished with longing. Augustine, a severe judge in such matters, defines the offence thus: "Qui hoc fine et hoc animo attenderit ut eam concupiscat; quod jam non est titillari delectatione carnis sed plene consentire libidini" (De ser. Domini). Chrysostom, the merciless scourge of the vices of Antioch, says: ὁ ἑαυτῷ τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν συλλέγων, ὁ μηδενὸς ἀναγκάζοντος τὸ θηρίον ἐπεισάγων, ἠρεμοῦντι τῷ λογισμῷ. Hom. xvii. The Rabbis also condemned unchaste looks, but in how coarse a style compared with Jesus let this quotation given by Fritzsche show: "Intuens vel in minimum digitum feminae est ac si intueretur in locum pudendum". In better taste are these sayings quoted by Wünsche (Beiträge): "The eye and the heart are the two brokers of sin"; "Passions lodge only in him who sees".—αὐτὴν (bracketed as doubtful by W. H.): the accusative after ἐπιθ. is rare and late.—We cannot but think of the personal relations to woman of One who understood so well the subtle sources of sexual sin. Shall we say that He was tempted in all points as we are, but desire was expelled by the mighty power of a pure love to which every woman was as a daughter, a sister, or a betrothed: a sacred object of tender respect?

ἤδη ἐμοίχευσεν αὐτὴν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ.[1] 29. εἰ δὲ ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου ὁ δεξιὸς [y] σκανδαλίζει σε, [z] ἔξελε αὐτὸν καὶ βάλε ἀπὸ σοῦ· [a] συμφέρει γάρ σοι ἵνα ἀπόληται ἓν τῶν μελῶν σου, καὶ μὴ ὅλον τὸ σῶμά σου βληθῇ εἰς γέενναν. 30. καὶ εἰ ἡ δεξιά σου χεὶρ σκανδαλίζει σε, ἔκκοψον αὐτὴν καὶ βάλε ἀπὸ σοῦ· συμφέρει γάρ σοι ἵνα ἀπόληται ἓν τῶν μελῶν σου, καὶ μὴ ὅλον τὸ σῶμά σου βληθῇ εἰς γέενναν.[2]

31. "Ἐρρέθη δέ, ὅτι[3] ὃς ἂν ἀπολύσῃ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, δότω y Ch. xviii. 6, 8, parall. 1 Cor. viii. 13 (= tempt). Ch. xv. 12; xvii. 27 (to give offence).

z Ch. xviii. 9.

a Ch. xviii. 6 with ἵνα. Ch. xix. 10 with inf.

[1] B has εαυτου.

[2] For the reading in text ℵB have εις γεενναν απελθη. The T. R. has doubtless been conformed to the reading in ver. 29. Had it stood here in the copies used by the scribes they would not have substituted the reading in ℵB.

[3] Omit. ℵ BDL.

Vv. 29, 30. Counsel to the tempted, expressing keen perception of the danger and strong recoil from a sin to be shunned at all hazards, even by excision, as it were, of offending members; two named, eye and hand, eye first as mentioned before.—ὁ ὀφ. ὁ δεξιὸς: the right eye deemed the more precious (1 Sam. xi. 2, Sach. xi. 17). Similarly ver. 30 the right hand, the most indispensable for work. Even these right members of the body must go. But as the remaining left eye and hand can still offend it is obvious that these counsels are not meant to be taken literally, but symbolically, as expressing strenuous effort to master sexual passion (vide Grotius). Mutilation will not serve the purpose; it may prevent the outward act, but it will not extinguish desire.—σκανδαλίζει, cause to stumble, not found in Greek authors but in Sept. Sirach. and in N. T. in a tropical moral sense. The noun σκάνδαλον is also of frequent occurrence, a late form for σκανδάληθρον, a trap-stick with bait on it which being touched the trap springs. Hesychius gives as its equivalent ἐμποδισμός. It is used in a literal sense in Lev. xix. 14 (Sept.).—συμφέρει . . . ἵνα ἀπολ.: ἵνα with subjunctive instead of infinitive (vide on ch. iv. 3). Meyer insists on ἵνα having here as always its telic sense and praises Fritzsche as alone interpreting the passage correctly. But, as Weiss observes, the mere destruction of the member is not the purpose of its excision. Note the impressive solemn repetition in ver. 30 of the thought in ver. 29, in identical terms save that for βληθῇ is substituted, in the true reading, ἀπέλθῃ. This logion occurs again in Matthew (xviii. 8, 9). Weiss (Marc.-Evang., 326) thinks it is taken here from the Apostolic document, i.e., Matthew's book of Logia, and there from Mark ix. 43-47.

Vv. 31-32. Third illustration, subordinate to the previous one, connected with the same general topic, sex relations, therefore introduced less formally with a simple ἐρρέθη δὲ. This instance is certainly directed against the scribes rather than Moses. The law (Deut. xxiv. 1) was meant to mitigate an existing usage, regarded as evil, in woman's interest. The scribes busied themselves solely about getting the bill of separation into due legal form. They did nothing to restrain the unjust caprice of husbands; they rather opened a wider door to licence. The law contemplated as the ground of separation a strong loathing, probably of sexual origin. The Rabbis (the school of Shammai excepted) recognised whimsical dislikes, even a fancy for another fairer woman, as sufficient reasons. But they were zealous to have the bill in due form that the woman might be able to show she was free to marry again, and they probably flattered themselves they were defending the rights of women. Brave men! Jesus raised the previous question, and asserted a more radical right of woman—not to be put away, except when she put herself away by unfaithfulness. He raised anew the prophetic cry (Mal. ii. 16), I hate putting away. It was an act of humanity of immense significance for civilisation, and of rare courage, for He was fighting single-handed against widely prevalent, long established opinion and custom.—ἀπολύσῃ:

αὐτῇ [b]ἀποστάσιον· 32. ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ὃς ἂν ἀπολύσῃ[1] τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, [c]παρεκτὸς λόγου πορνείας, ποιεῖ αὐτὴν μοιχᾶσθαι[2]· καὶ ὃς ἐὰν ἀπολελυμένην γαμήσῃ, μοιχᾶται.[3] 33. Πάλιν ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, Οὐκ [d]ἐπιορκήσεις, ἀποδώσεις δὲ τῷ Κυρίῳ τοὺς ὅρκους σου· 34. ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν μὴ [e]ὀμόσαι ὅλως· μήτε ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὅτι θρόνος ἐστὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ· 35. μήτε ἐν τῇ γῇ, ὅτι [f]ὑποπόδιόν ἐστι τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ· μήτε εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, ὅτι [g]πόλις ἐστὶ τοῦ μεγάλου βασιλέως· 36. μήτε ἐν τῇ κεφαλῇ σου ὀμόσῃς, ὅτι

b here and in Ch. xix. 7.
c Acts xxvi. 29. 2 Cor. xi. 28.
d here only in N. T., twice in Sept.
e Ch. xxiii. 16-21 (with ἐν). Heb. vi. 13 (with κατά), ver. 35 (with εἰς).
f Lk. xx. 43. Heb. i. 13.
g this title for J. here and in Ps. xlvii. 3.

[1] πας ο απολυων in ℵBLΔ al. Text in D al.

[2] ℵBD have μοιχευθηναι.

[3] The clause και ος εαν . . . μοιχαται is wanting in D and bracketed in W.H. In B it runs ο απολελυμενην γαμησας.

the corresponding word in Greek authors is ἀποπέμπειν.—ἀποστάσιον = βιβλίον ἀποστασίου in Deut. xxiv. The husband is to give her her dismissal, with a bill stating that she is no longer his wife. The singular form in ιον is to be noted. The tendency in later Greek was to substitute ιον for ια, the plural ending. Vide Lobeck, Phryn., p. 517.—παρ. λ. πορνείας: a most important exception which has given rise to much controversy that will probably last till the world's end. The first question is: Did Christ really say this, or is it not rather an explanatory gloss due to the evangelist, or to the tradition he followed? De Wette, Weiss, Holtzmann (H. C.) take the latter view. It would certainly be in accordance with Christ's manner of teaching, using strong, brief, unqualified assertions to drive home unfamiliar or unwelcome truths, if the word as He spoke it took the form given in Lk. xvi. 18: "Every one putting away his wife and marrying another committeth adultery". This was the fitting word to be spoken by one who hated putting away in a time when it was common and sanctioned by the authorities. A second question is: What does πορνεία mean? Schanz, a master, as becomes a Catholic, in this class of questions, enumerates five senses, but decides that it means adultery committed by a married woman. Some, including Döllinger (Christenthum und Kirche: The First Age of Christianity and the Church, vol. ii., app. iii.), think it means fornication committed before marriage. The predominant opinion, both ancient and modern, is that adopted by Schanz. A third question is: Does Christ, assuming the words to have been spoken by Him, recognise adultery as a ground of absolute divorce, or only, as Catholics teach, of separation a toro et mensa? Is it possible to be quite sure as to this point? One thing is certain. Christ did not come to be a new legislator making laws for social life. He came to set up a high ethical ideal, and leave that to work on men's minds. The tendency of His teaching is to create deep aversion to rupture of married relations. That aversion might even go the length of shrinking from severance of the tie even in the case of one who had forfeited all claims. The last clause is bracketed by W. H. as of doubtful genuineness. It states unqualifiedly that to marry a dismissed wife is adultery. Meyer thinks that the qualification unjustly dismissed, i.e., not for adultery, is understood. Weiss (Meyer) denies this.

Vv. 33-37. Fourth illustration: concerning oaths. A new theme, therefore formally introduced as in ver. 21. πάλιν points to a new series of illustrations (Weiss, Mt.-Evan., p. 165). The first series is based on the Decalogue. Thou shalt not swear falsely (Lev. xix. 12), and thou shalt perform unto the Lord thy vows (Num. xxx. 3; Deut. xxiii. 22). What is wrong in these dicta? Nothing save what is left unsaid. The scribes misplaced the emphasis. They had a great deal to say, in sophistical style, of the oaths that were binding and not binding, nothing about the fundamental requirement of truth in the inward parts. Again, therefore, Jesus goes back on the previous question: Should there be any need for oaths? — Ver. 34. ὅλως, emphatic = παντελῶς, don't swear at all. Again an unqualified statement, to be taken not in the letter as a new law, οὐ δύνασαι μίαν τρίχα λευκὴν ἢ μέλαιναν ποιῆσαι.[1] 37. ἔστω[2] δὲ ὁ λόγος ὑμῶν, [h] ναὶ ναί, οὒ οὔ· τὸ δὲ περισσὸν τούτων ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ ἐστιν. 38. Ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐῤῥέθη, [i] Ὀφθαλμὸν ἀντὶ ὀφθαλ-h 2 Cor. i. 17-19. James v. 12.

i Ex. xxi. 24. Lev. xxiv. 20. Deut. xix. 21.

[1] ℵBL place ποιησαι before η μελαιναν. The T. R. represents an effort by the scribes to give a smoother reading.

[2] For εστω (ℵDL al.) BΣ have εσται, which expresses the injunction in the strongest way and is to be preferred (W.H. on margin).

but in the spirit as inculcating such a love of truth that so far as we are concerned there shall be no need of oaths. In civil life the most truthful man has to take an oath because of the untruth and consequent distrust prevailing in the world, and in doing so he does not sin against Christ's teaching. Christ Himself took an oath before the High Priest (Mt. xxvi. 63). What follows (vv. 34-6) is directed against the casuistry which laid stress on the words τῷ κυρίῳ, and evaded obligation by taking oaths in which the divine name was not mentioned: by heaven, earth, Jerusalem, or by one's own head. Jesus points out that all such oaths involved a reference to God. This is sufficiently obvious in the case of the first three, not so clear in case of the fourth.—λευκὴν ἢ μέλαιναν: white is the colour of old age, black of youth. We cannot alter the colour of our hair so as to make our head look young or old. A fortiori we cannot bring on our head any curse by perjury, of which hair suddenly whitened might be the symbol. Providence alone can blast our life. The oath by the head is a direct appeal to God. All these oaths are binding, therefore, says Jesus; but what I most wish to impress on you is: don't swear at all. Observe the use of μήτε (not μηδέ) to connect these different evasive oaths as forming a homogeneous group. Winer, sect. lv. 6, endorses the view of Herrmann in Viger that οὔτε and μήτε are adjunctival, οὐδέ and μηδέ disjunctival, and says that the latter add negation to negation, while the former divide a single negation into parts. Jesus first thinks of these evasive oaths as a bad class, then specifies them one after the other. Away with them one and all, and let your word be ναὶ ναί, οὒ οὔ. That is, if you want to give assurance, let it not be by an oath, but by simple repetition of your yes and no. Grotius interprets: let your yea or nay in word be a yea or nay in deed, be as good as your word even unsupported by an oath. This brings the version of Christ's saying in Mt. into closer correspondence with Jas. v. 12. ἤτω τὸ Ναί ναί, καὶ τὸ Οὔ οὔ. Beza, with whom Achelis (Bergpredigt) agrees, renders, "Let your affirmative discourse be a simple yea, and your negative nay". τὸ δὲ περισσὸν the surplus, what goes beyond these simple words.—ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ, hardly "from the evil one," though many ancient and modern interpreters, including Meyer, have so understood it. Meyer says the neuter "of evil" gives a very insipid meaning. I think, however, that Christ expresses Himself mildly out of respect for the necessity of oaths in a world full of falsehood. I know, He means to say, that in certain circumstances something beyond yea and nay will be required of you. But it comes of evil, the evil of untruthfulness. See that the evil be not in you. Chrysostom (Hom. xvii.) asks: How evil if it be God's law? and answers: Because the law was good in its season. God acted like a nurse who gives the breast to an infant and afterwards laughs at it when it wants it after weaning.

Vv. 38-42. Fifth illustration, from the law of compensation. Ver. 38 contains the theme, the following vv. Christ's comment.—Ὀφθαλμὸν . . . ὀδόντος. An exact quotation from Ex. xxi. 24, Christ's criticism here concerns a precept from the oldest code of Hebrew law. Fritzsche explains the accusatives, ὀφθαλμόν, ὀδόντα, by supposing εἶναι to be understood: "Ye have heard that Moses wrote that an eye shall be for an eye". The simplest explanation is that the two nouns in the original passage are under the government of δώσει, Ex. xxi. 23. (So Weiss and Meyer after Grotius.) Tersely expressed, a sound principle of civil law for the guidance of the judge, acted on by almost all peoples, Christ does not condemn it: if parties come before the judge, let him by all means give fair compensation for injuries received. He simply leaves it on one side.

j Ch. xxvi. 67. Sept. Hosea xi. 4.
k Lk. vi. 29. (Hosea xi. 4).

μοῦ, καὶ ὀδόντα ἀντὶ ὀδόντος· 39. ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν μὴ ἀντιστῆναι τῷ πονηρῷ· ἀλλ᾿ ὅστις σε [j] ῥαπίσει ἐπὶ [1] τὴν δεξιάν σου [k] σιαγόνα,[2] στρέψον αὐτῷ καὶ τὴν ἄλλην· 40. καὶ τῷ θέλοντί σοι κριθῆναι καὶ τὸν χιτῶνά σου λαβεῖν, ἄφες αὐτῷ καὶ τὸ ἱμάτιον· 41. καὶ ὅστις σε

[1] For ρaπισει επι ℵBΣ have ραπιζει (pres.) εις. The επι of the T. R. conforms to the parall. in Luke.

[2] For σου σιαγονα BD have σιαγονα σου. Tisch. (with ℵ) omits σου. W.H. bracket it.

"Though the judge must give redress when demanded, you are not bound to ask it, and if you take My advice you will not." In taking up this position Jesus was in harmony with the law itself which contains dissuasives against vindictiveness, e.g., Lev. xix. 18: "Thou shalt not avenge nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people". The fault of the scribes did not lie in gainsaying this and introducing the jus talionis into private life, but in giving greater prominence to the legal than to the ethical element in the O. T. teaching, and in occupying themselves mainly with discussing the casuistry of compensation, e.g., the items to be compensated for in a case of wounding—the pain, the cure, the loss of time, the shame, etc., and the money value of the whole. Jesus turned the minds of His disciples away from these trivialities to the great neglected ethical commonplace.

Ver. 39. μὴ ἀντιστῆναι: resist not, either by endeavouring to prevent injury or by seeking redress for it.—τῷ πονηρῷ, not the devil, as Chrys. and Theophy. thought; either the evil doer or the evil doing or done. Opinion is much divided between the last two meanings. The sense is the same in either case. The A. V. takes πονηρῷ as neuter, the R. V. as masculine. The former is on the whole to be preferred. Instances of injury in various forms are next specified to illustrate the general precept. These injuries have been variously distinguished—to body, and property, and freedom, Tholuck; exemplum citatur injuriae, privatae, forensis, curialis, Bengel; injuries connected with honour, material good, waste of time, Achelis, who points out that the relation of the three, Ex. in vv. 39-41, is that of an anti-climax, injuries to honour being felt most, and those involving waste of time least.—ὅστις . . . ἄλλην. In the following instances there is a climax: injury proceeds from bad to worse. It is natural to expect the same in this one. But when the right cheek has been struck, is it an aggravation to strike the left? Tholuck, Bleek, and Meyer suggest that the right cheek is only named first according to common custom, not supposed to be struck first. Achelis conceives the right cheek to be struck first with the back of the hand, then the left with a return stroke with the palm, harder than the first, and expressing in a higher measure intention to insult.—ῥαπίζω in class. Greek = to beat with rods; later, and in N. T., to smite with the palm of the hand; vide Lobeck, Phryn., p. 175.—Ver. 40, κριθῆναι = κρίνεσθαι in 2 Cor. vi. 1, to sue at law as in A. V. Grotius takes it as meaning extra-judicial strife, while admitting that the word is used in the judicial sense in the Sept., e.g., Job ix. 3, Eccles. vi. 10. Beza had previously taken the same view.—χιτῶνα, ἱμάτιον. The contention is supposed to be about the under garment or the tunic, and the advice is, rather than go to law, let him have not only it but also καί, the more costly upper robe, mantle, toga. The poor man might have several tunics or shirts for change, but only one upper garment, used for clothing by day, for bed-cover by night, therefore humanely forbidden to be retained over night as a pledge, Ex. xxii. 26.

Ver. 41. ἀγγαρεύσει, compel thee to go one mile in A. V. and R. V. Hatch (Essays in Biblical Greek, p. 37) thinks it means compel thee to carry his baggage, a very probable rendering in view of the history of the word as he gives it. A Persian word, originally, introduced into the Greek, Latin, and Rabbinic languages, it denoted first to requisition men, beasts, beasts or conveyances for the courier system described in Herod. viii. 98, Xen. Cyr. viii. 6, 17; next in post-classical use under the successors of the Persians in the East, and under the Roman Empire, it was applied to the forced transport of military baggage by the inhabitants of a country through which troops were passing. Hatch remarks: "The l Ch. xxvii. 32. Mk. xv. 21.

[l]ἀγγαρεύσει [m]μίλιον ἕν, [n]ὕπαγε μετ' αὐτοῦ δύο. 42. τῷ [o]αἰτοῦντί σε δίδου[1]· καὶ τὸν θέλοντα ἀπὸ σοῦ δανείσασθαι[2] μὴ ἀποστραφῇς. 43. Ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη, Ἀγαπήσεις τὸν [p]πλησίον σου, καὶ μισήσεις τὸν ἐχθρόν σου· 44. ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν, ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ὑμῶν, εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρωμένους ὑμᾶς, καλῶς ποιεῖτε τοὺς μισοῦντας ὑμᾶς,[3] καὶ προσεύχεσθε ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐπηρεαζόντων ὑμᾶς, καὶ[4] διωκόντων

m here only.
n followed by μετὰ and gen. here and in Lk. xii. 58 (ἐπί τινα added).
o with acc. of person asked here. Ch. vi. 8. Lk. vi. 30.
p Ch. xix. 19. Lk. x. 27.

[1] δος in ℵBD. διδου (T. R.) conforms to Luke (vi. 30).

[2] W.H. give δανιζασθαι after ℵB*DΔ.

[3] One of the more important various readings occurs here. From ευλογειτε to υμας is omitted in ℵB, some ancient versions (including Syr. Sin.), and some cursives. The omitted part may be regarded as an importation in a harmonistic spirit from Lk. vi. 27. It is left out by most modern editors.

[4] των επηρεαζοντων υμας και also wanting in ℵB, and also imported from Lk. (vi. 28).

extent to which this system prevailed is seen in the elaborate provisions of the later Roman law: angariae came to be one of those modes of taxing property which, under the vicious system of the empire, ruined both individuals and communities". An instance in N. T. of the use of the word in this later sense occurs in Mt. xxvii. 32, Mk. xv. 31, in reference to Simon compelled to carry Christ's cross. We may conceive the compulsion in the present case to proceed from a military man.—μίλιον, a Roman mile, about 1600 yards, a late word.—δύο, in point of time, the additional mile = two, there and back, with proportional fatigue, a decided climax of hardship. But it is not merely a question of time, as Achelis thinks. The sense of oppression is involved, subjection to arbitrary military power. Christ's counsel is: do not submit to the inevitable in a slavish, sullen spirit, harbouring thoughts of revolt. Do the service cheerfully, and more than you are asked. The counsel is far-reaching, covering the case of the Jewish people subject to the Roman yoke, and of slaves serving hard masters. The three cases of non-resistance are not meant to foster an abject spirit. They point out the higher way to victory. He that magnanimously bears overcomes.

Ver. 42. This counsel does not seem to belong to the same category as the preceding three. One does not think of begging or borrowing as an injury, but at most as a nuisance. Some have doubted the genuineness of the logion as a part of the Sermon. But it occurs in Luke's redaction (vi. 30), transformed indeed so as to make it a case of the sturdy beggar who helps himself to what he does not get for the asking. Were there idle, lawless tramps in Palestine in our Lord's time, and would He counsel such treatment of them? If so, it is the extreme instance of not resisting evil.—μὴ ἀποστραφῇς with τὸν θέλοντα in accusative. One would expect the genitive with the middle, the active taking an accusative with genitive, e.g., 2 Tim. iv. 4, τὴν ἀκοὴν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας. But the transitive sense is intelligible. In turning myself away from another, I turn him away from me. Vide Heb. xii. 25, 2 Tim. i. 15.

Vv. 43-48. Sixth and final illustration: from the Law of Love. To an old partial form of the law Jesus opposes a new universal one.—Ver. 43. ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη: said where, by whom, and about whom? The sentiment Jesus supposes His hearers to have heard is not found in so many words in the O. T. The first part, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour," occurs in Lev. xix. 18. The contrary of the second part is found in Ex. xxiii. 4, where humanity towards the straying or overburdened beast of an enemy is enjoined. It is to be hoped that even the scribes did not in cold blood sin against the spirit of this precept by teaching men to love their private friends and hate their private enemies. Does πλησίον then mean an Israelite, and ἐχθρόν a Gentile, and was the fault of the traditional law of love that it confined obligation within national limits? The context in Lev. xix. 18 gives πλ. that sense: "Thou shalt not bear any grudge against the children of thy people". On the other hand, the tendency of Israel's q transitive-ly here only in N. T.; vide Gen. iii. 18.

r Lk. vii. 38, 44; xvii. 29. Jas. v. 17.

ὑμᾶς· 45. ὅπως γένησθε υἱοὶ τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν τοῦ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, ὅτι τὸν ἥλιον αὐτοῦ q ἀνατέλλει ἐπὶ πονηροὺς καὶ ἀγαθούς, καὶ r βρέχει ἐπὶ δικαίους καὶ ἀδίκους. 46. ἐὰν γὰρ ἀγαπήσητε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, τίνα μισθὸν ἔχετε; οὐχὶ καὶ οἱ τελῶναι τὸ αὐτὸ[1] ποιοῦσι; election, and of certain texts (vide Ex. xxiii., Deut. vii.), was to foster aversion to the outside nations, and from Ezra onwards the spirit of Judaism was one of increasing hostility towards the goyim—vide Esther. The saying quoted by Jesus, if not an exact report of Rabbinical teaching, did no injustice to its general attitude. And the average Jew in this respect followed the guidance of his teachers, loving his own countrymen, regarding with racial and religious aversion those beyond the pale.—Ver. 44. ἐχθροὺς may be taken in all senses: national, private, religious. Jesus absolutely negatives hatred as inhuman. But the sequel shows that He has in view the enemies whom it is most difficult to love—διωκόντων: those who persecute on account of religion. The clauses imported into the T. R. from Luke have a more general reference to enmities arising from any cause, although they also receive a very emphatic meaning when the cause of alienation is religious differences. There are no hatreds so bitter and ruthless as those originating therein. How hard to love the persecutor who thinks he does God service by heaping upon you all manner of indignities. But the man who can rejoice in persecution (ver. 12) can love and pray for the persecutor. The cleavage between Christians and unbelievers took the place of that between the chosen race and the Gentiles, and tempted to the same sin.

[1] Some editors, following DZ, prefer ουτως to το αυτο. W.H., while retaining το αυτο, which has the support of ℵBL, put ουτως on the margin.

Vv. 45-47. Characteristically lofty inducements to obey the new law; likeness to God (ver. 45); moral distinction among men (vv. 46, 47).—υἱοὶ τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν: in order that ye may be indeed sons of God: noblesse oblige; God's sons must be Godlike. "Father" again. The new name for God occurs sixteen times in the Sermon on the Mount; to familiarise by repetition, and define by discriminating use.—ὅτι, not = ὅς, but meaning "because": for so your Father acts, and not otherwise can ye be His sons.—ἀνατέλλει, sometimes intransitive, as in Mt. iv. 16, Lk. xii. 54, here transitive, also in Sept., Gen. iii. 18, etc., and in some Greek authors (Pindar. Isth. vi., 110, e.g.) to cause to rise. The use of καίειν (ver. 15) and ἀνατέλλειν in an active sense is a revival of an old poetic use in later Greek (exx. of the former in Elsner).—βρέχει = pluit (Vulg.), said of God, as in the expression ὕοντος τοῦ Διός (Kypke, Observ. Sac.). The use of this word also in this sense is a revival of old poetic usage.—πονηροὺς, ἀγαθοὺς; δικαίους, ἀδίκους, not mere repetition. There is a difference between ἀγαθός and δίκαιος similar to that between generous and just. πονηροὺς may be rendered niggardly—vide on vi. 23. The sentiment thus becomes: "God makes His sun rise on niggardly and generous alike, and His rain fall on just and unjust". A similar thought in Seneca, De benif. iv. 26: "Si deos imitaris, da et ingratis beneficia, nam et sceleratis sol oritur, et piratis patent maria". The power of the fact stated to influence as a motive is wholly destroyed by a pantheistic conception of God as indifferent to moral distinctions, or a deistic idea of Him as transcendent, too far above the world, in heaven, as it were, to be able to take note of such differences. The divine impartiality is due to magnanimity, not to indifference or ignorance. Another important reflection is that in this word of Jesus we find distinct recognition of the fact that in human life there is a large sphere (sun and rain, how much these cover!) in which men are treated by Providence irrespectively of character; by no means a matter of course in a Jewish teacher, the tendency being to insist on exact correspondence between lot and character under a purely retributive conception of God's relation to man.—Ver. 46. μισθὸν here, and three times in next chapter; one of several words used in this connection of thought—περισσὸν (ver. 47), τέλειοι (ver. 48)—having a legal sound, and capable of being misunderstood. The scribes and Rabbis had much to say about merit

47. καὶ ἐὰν [s] ἀσπάσησθε τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς [1] ὑμῶν μόνον, τί περισσὸν ποιεῖτε; οὐχὶ καὶ οἱ τελῶναι οὕτω [2] ποιοῦσιν; 48. ἔσεσθε οὖν ὑμεῖς [t] τέλειοι, ὥσπερ [3] ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς [4] τέλειός ἐστι.

s Ch. x. 12. Lk. x. 4. Cf. Heb. xi. 13 (saluting the promises).
t Ch. xix. 21. James i. 4; iii. 2. Heb. v. 14.

[1] Many copies have φιλους, but αδελφους is the reading of ℵBDZ.

[2] ℵBDZ have εθνικοι instead of τελωναι and το αυτο for ουτω. See below.

[3] ως in ℵBDLZΣ. ωσπερ possibly a literary refinement of the scribes.

[4] ο ουρανιος instead of ο εν τ. ουρανοις in ℵBDLZΣ.

and reward—vide Weber, Die Lehre des Talmud, c. xix. § 59, on the idea of Sechûth (merit). Totally opposed to Rabbinism, Jesus did not lose His balance, or allow Himself to be driven into extremes, after the usual manner of controversialists (Protestants and Catholics, e.g.). He speaks of μισθὸς without scruple (cf. on Lk. vi. 32).—τελῶναι (τέλος, tax, ὠνέομαι), first mention of a class often referred to in the Gospels, unpopular beyond their deserts; therefore, like women unjustly treated by husbands, befriended by Jesus; the humble agents of the great farmers of taxes, disliked as representing a foreign yoke, and on account of too frequent acts of injustice, yet human and kindly within their own class, loving those that loved them. Jesus took advantage of this characteristic to win their love by friendly acts.—Ver. 47. ἀσπάσησθε, "Salute," a very slight display of love from our Western point of view, a mere civility; more significant in the East; symbolic here of friendly relations, hence Tholuck, Bleek and others interpret, "to act in a friendly manner," which, as Meyer remarks, is, if not the significatio, at least the adsignificatio.—περισσὸν, used adverbially, literally "that which is over and above"; A. V., "more"; here, tropically = distinguished, unusually good = "quid magnum, eximium, insigne" (Pricaeus), so in Rom. iii. 1. In Plutarch, Romulus, xi., of one who excelled in casting horoscopes. Christ would awaken in disciples the ambition to excel. He does not wish them to be moral mediocrities, men of average morality, but to be morally superior, uncommon. This seems to come perilously near to the spirit of Pharisaism (cf. Gal. i. 14, προέκοπτον), but only seems. Christ commends being superior, not thinking oneself superior, the Pharisaic characteristic. Justin, Apol. i. 15, mixes vv. 46 and 47, and for περισσὸν puts καίνον, and for τελῶναι, or ἐθνικοί, πόρνοι. "If ye love those who love you what new thing do ye? for even fornicators do this."—ἐθνικοί, here as elsewhere in the Gospels associated with τελῶναι (Mt. xviii. 17). A good many of the publicans would be Gentiles. For a Jew it was a virtue to despise and shun both classes. Surely disciples will not be content to be on a moral level with them! Note that Jesus sees some good even in despised classes, social outcasts.

Ver. 48. Concluding exhortation. οὖν, from an ancient form of the participle of the verb εἶναι (Klotz, Devar.) = "things being so;" either a collective inference from all that goes before (vv. 21-47) or as a reflection on the immediately preceding argument. Both come to the same thing. Godlike love is commended in vv. 44-47, but the gist of all the six illustrations of Christ's way of thinking is: Love the fulfilling of the law; obviously, except in the case of oaths, where it is truth that is enjoined. But truth has its source in love; Eph. iv. 15: ἀληθεύοντες ἐν ἀγάπῃ, "truthing it in love".—ἔσεσθε, future, "ye shall be" = BE.—ὑμεῖς, ye, emphatic, in contrast with τελ. and ἐθν., who are content with moral commonplace and conventional standards.—Τέλειοι, in general, men who have reached the end, touched the ideal, that at least their purpose, not satisfied with anything short of it. The τέλειοι are not men with a conceit of perfection, but aspirants—men who seek to attain, like Paul: διώκω εἰ καὶ καταλάβω, Phil. iii. 12, and like him, single-minded, their motto: ἓν δέ. Single-mindedness is a marked characteristic of all genuine citizens of the kingdom (Mt. vi. 33), and what the Bible means by perfection. All men who attain have one great ruling aim. That aim for the disciple, as here set forth, is Godlikeness—ὡς ὁ πατὴρ . . . τέλειός ἐστιν. God is what His sons aspire to be; He never sinks below the ideal: impartial, benignant, gracious love, even to the unworthy; for a followed by μὴ with inf. here, by μήποτε with subj. Lk. xxi. 34. b Ch. xxiii. 5. Mk. xvi. 11. c same phrase in Sir. vii. 10. Tobit iv. 7. Acts x. 2; xxiv. 17. d 1 Cor. xv. 52 and several times in Revel. e Lk. xiv. 21. Acts ix. 11; xii. 10.

VI. 1. "[a] ΠΡΟΣΕΧΕΤΕ[1] τὴν ἐλεημοσύνην[2] ὑμῶν μὴ ποιεῖν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, πρὸς τὸ [b] θεαθῆναι αὐτοῖς· εἰ δὲ μήγε, μισθὸν οὐκ ἔχετε παρὰ τῷ πατρὶ ὑμῶν τῷ ἐν τοῖς[3] οὐρανοῖς. 2. ὅταν οὖν ποιῇς [c] ἐλεημοσύνην, μὴ [d] σαλπίσῃς ἔμπροσθέν σου, ὥσπερ οἱ ὑποκριταὶ ποιοῦσιν ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς καὶ ἐν ταῖς [e] ῥύμαις, ὅπως δοξασθῶσιν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων· ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἀπέχουσι τὸν

[1] δε after προσεχετε in ℵLZ, inserted by Tisch. and W.H. within brackets. BD have no δε. It might have fallen out by similar ending (τε); on the other hand, it would stand here appropriately as a connecting particle of transition.

[2] ℵBD have δικαιοσυνην; doubtless the true reading, as a general caution against counterfeit righteousness was to be looked for first; then particular examples: alms, prayer, fasting.

[3] Tisch., on the authority of ℵD 1, 33, omits τοις.

that, not all conceivable attributes, is what is in view. ὡς, not in degree, that were a discouraging demand, but in kind. The kind very necessary to be emphasised in view of current ideas and practice, in which holiness was dissociated from love. The law "Be holy for I am holy" (Lev. xi. 44) was taken negatively and worked out in separation from the reputedly sinful. Jesus gave it positive contents, and worked it out in gracious love.

CHAPTER VI. THE SERMON CONTINUED. From Scribe law, the main theme of vv. 21-48, the Teacher passes to speak of Pharisaic practice. Ver. 1 describes the general character of Pharisaic righteousness. Then follow three special examples: alms, vv. 2-4; prayer, vv. 5-6; fasting, vv. 16-18. The transition from the one theme to the other was almost inevitable, and we may be sure that what follows formed part of the instruction on the hill.

Ver. 1. προσέχετε (τὸν νοῦν understood), to attend to; here, with μὴ following, take heed, be on your guard against.—δικαιοσύνην, not ἐλεημοσύνην (T. R.), is the reading demanded in a general introductory statement. Alms formed a very prominent part of Pharisaic righteousness, and was in Rabbinical dialect called righteousness, צדקה (vide Weber, p. 273), but it was not the whole, and it is a name for the whole category that is wanted in ver. 1. If Jesus spoke in Aramaic He might, as Lightfoot (Hor. Hebr.) suggests, use the word tsedakah both in the first and in the following three verses; in the first in the general sense, in the other places in the special sense of alms.—ἔμπροσθεν τ. ἀνθρώπων. In chap. v. 16 Christ commands disciples to let their light shine before men. Here He seems to enjoin the contrary. The contradiction is only apparent. The two places may be combined in a general rule thus: Show when tempted to hide, hide when tempted to show. The Pharisees were exposed, and yielded, to the latter temptation. They did their righteousness, πρὸς τὸ θεαθῆναι, to be seen. Their virtue was theatrical, and that meant doing only things which in matter and mode were commonly admired or believed by the doers to be. This spirit of ostentation Christ here and elsewhere represents as the leading feature of Pharisaism.—εἰ δὲ μήγε, a combination of four particles frequently occurring in the Gospels, meaning: if at least ye do not attend to this rule, then, etc. γὲ is a very expressive particle, derived by Klotz, Devar. ii. 272, from ΓΕΩ, i.e., ΕΑΩ, or from ἄγε, and explained as meant to render the hearer attentive. Bäumlein, dissenting from Klotz's derivation, agrees substantially with his view of its meaning as isolating a thought from all else and placing it alone in the light (Untersuchungen über Griechische Partikeln, p. 54) = "Mark my words, for if you do not as I advise then," etc.—μισθὸν οὐκ ἔχετε: on μισθὸν, vide v. 46. The meaning is that theatrical virtue does not count in the Kingdom of God. Right motive is essential there. There may be a reward, there must be, else theatrical religion would not be so common; but it is not παρὰ τῷ πατρί.

μισθὸν αὐτῶν. 3. σοῦ δὲ ποιοῦντος ἐλεημοσύνην, μὴ γνώτω ἡ ἀριστερά σου τί ποιεῖ ἡ δεξιά σου, 4. ὅπως ᾖ σου ἡ ἐλεημοσύνη [1] ἐν τῷ [f] κρυπτῷ· καὶ ὁ πατήρ σου ὁ βλέπων ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ, αὐτὸς [2]

f Rom. ii. 29 (phrase).

[1] Tisch. has η σου ελεημοσυνη η, following ℵD (η σ. ελ. η). Most modern editors as in text.

[2] ℵBL omit αυτος, which is found in D.

Vv. 2-4. Almsgiving. Ver 2. ἐλεημοσύνην, mercy in general, but specifically alms, as a common mode of showing mercy. Compare our word charity.—σαλπίσῃς: to be understood metaphorically, as there is no evidence of the literal practice. Furrer gives this from Consul Wetstein to illustrate the word. When a man (in Damascus) wants to do a good act which may bring a blessing by way of divine recompense on his own family, e.g., healing to a sick child, he goes to a water-carrier with a good voice, gives him a piece of money, and says "Sebil," i.e., give the thirsty a fresh drink of water. The water-carrier fills his skin, takes his stand in the market, and sings in varied tones: "O thirsty, come to the drink-offering," the giver standing by, to whom the carrier says, as the thirsty drink, "God forgive thy sins, O giver of the drink" (Zscht. für M. und R., 1890. Vide also his Wanderungen d. d. H. L., p. 437).—ὑποκριταί, stage-players in classics, used in N. T. in a moral and sinister sense, and for the Christian mind heavily burdened with evil connotation—hypocrites! What a deepening of the moral sense is implied in the new meaning! The abhorrence of acting for effect in religion is due to Christ's teaching. It has not yet quite banished the thing. There are religious actors still, and they draw good houses.—συναγωγαῖς: where alms were collected, and apparently also distributed.—ῥύμαις, streets, in eastern cities narrow lanes, a late meaning; in earlier Greek = impetus—onset. Vide Rutherford's New Phryn., 488. Cf. πλατειῶν, ver. 5. πλατεῖα, supp. ὁδός = a broad street.—δοξασθῶσιν: in chap. v. 16 God is conceived as recipient of the glory; here the almsgiver, giving for that purpose.—ἀμὴν introducing a solemn statement, and a very serious one for the parties concerned.—ἀπέχουσι, they have in full; they will get no more, nothing from God: so in Lk. vi. 24, Phil. iv. 18 (vide on Mk. xiv. 41). The hypocrite partly does not believe this, partly does not care, so long as he gets the applause of his public.—Ver. 3. μὴ γνώτω: in proverbial form a counsel to give with simplicity. Let not even thy left hand, if possible even thyself, know, still less other men; give without self-consciousness or self-complacency, the root of ostentation.—ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ: known to the recipient, of course, but to no other, so far as you are concerned, hardly even to yourself. "Pii lucent, et tamen latent," Beng.—ὁ βλέπων ε. τ. κ., who seeth in the dark. "Acquainted with all my ways." Ps. cxxxix., a comfort to the sincerely good, not to the counterfeits.—ἀποδώσει σοι: a certainty: and not merely of the future. The reward is present; not in the form of self-complacency, but in the form of spiritual health, like natural buoyancy, when all physical functions work well. A right-minded man is happy without reflecting why; it is the joy of living in summer sunshine and bracing mountain air. The ἐν τῷ φανερῷ here and in vv. 6 and 18, a gloss by some superficial copyist, ignores the inward present reward, and appeals in a new form to the spirit of ostentation.

Vv. 5-6. Prayer. ὡς οἱ ὑποκριταί, as the actors. We shrink from the harshness of the term "hypocrite". Jesus is in the act of creating the new meaning by the use of an old word in a new connection.—φιλοῦσι stands in place of an adverb. They love to, are wont, do it with pleasure. This construction is common in classics, even in reference to inanimate objects, but here only and in Mt. xxiii. 6-7 in N. T.—ἑστῶτες, ordinary attitude in prayer. στῆναι and καθῆσθαι seem to be used sometimes without emphasis to denote simply presence in a place (so Pricaeus).—συναγωγαῖς, γωνίαις τ. πλατ.: usual places of prayer, especially for the "actors," where men do congregate, in the synagogue for worship, at the corners of the broad streets for talk or business; plenty of observers in both cases. Prayer had been reduced to system among the Jews. Methodising, with stated hours and forms, began after g Ch. xvi. 27. [g] ἀποδώσει σοι ἐν τῷ φανερῷ.[1] 5. Καὶ ὅταν προσεύχῃ, οὐκ ἔσῃ[2] h Ch. xxiii. 6. Lk. xx. 46. ὥσπερ[3] οἱ ὑποκριταί, ὅτι [h] φιλοῦσιν ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς καὶ ἐν ταῖς γωνίαις τῶν πλατειῶν ἑστῶτες προσεύχεσθαι, ὅπως ἂν[4] φανῶσι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις· ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι[5] ἀπέχουσι τὸν μισθὸν αὐτῶν. 6. i Ch. xxiv. 26. Lk. xii. 3, 24. Sir. xxix. 12 al. in Sept. σὺ δέ, ὅταν προσεύχῃ, εἴσελθε εἰς τὸ [i] ταμιεῖόν[6] σου, καὶ κλείσας τὴν θύραν σου, πρόσευξαι τῷ πατρί σου τῷ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ· καὶ ὁ πατήρ σου ὁ βλέπων ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ ἀποδώσει σοι ἐν τῷ φανερῷ.[7]

[1] ℵBD omit. This time L goes with the MSS. which have this reading. Doubtless a gloss, vide below.

[2] For προσευχη ουκ εση ℵB have προσευχησθε ουκ εσεσθε, adopted by W.H. and other editors.

[3] ως in ℵBDZ.

[4] αν omitted in ℵBDL.

[5] οτι omitted in ℵBDZ.

[6] ταμειον in W.H. So in ℵBDL (ταμιον, ℵD).

[7] ℵBDZ omit εν τω φανερω, followed by most modern editors.

Ezra, and grew in the Judaistic period; traces of it even in the later books of O. T., e.g., Dan. vi. 10, 11 (vide Schultz, Alt. Theol.). The hour of prayer might overtake a man anywhere. The "actors" might, as De Wette suggests, be glad to be overtaken, or even arrange for it, in some well-frequented place. — ὅπως φανῶσιν τ. α. in order that they may appear to men, and have it remarked: how devout! Ver. 6: true prayer in contrast to the theatrical type.— σὺ δὲ, thou, my disciple, in opposition to the "actors".—ὅταν, when the spirit moves, not when the customary hour comes, freedom from rule in prayer, as in fasting (Mt. ix. 14), is taken for granted — τὸ ταμεῖον, late form for ταμιεῖον (Lobeck, Phryn., 493), first a store-chamber, then any place of privacy, a closet (Mt. xxiv. 26). Note the σου after ταμ. and θύραν and πατρί, all emphasising isolation, thy closet, thy door, thy Father.—κλείσας, carefully shutting thy door, the door of thine own retreat, to exclude all but thy Father, with as much secrecy as if you were about a guilty act. What delicacy of feeling, as well as sincerity, is implied in all this; greatly to be respected, often sinned against.—τῷ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ. He who is in the secret place; perhaps with allusion to God's presence in the dark holy of holies (Achelis). He is there in the place from which all fellowmen are excluded. Is social prayer negatived by this directory? No, but it is implied that social prayer will be a reality only in proportion as it proceeds from a gathering of men accustomed to private prayer.

Vv. 7-15. Further instruction in prayer. Weiss (Mt.-Evan.) regards this passage as an interpolation, having no proper place in an anti-Pharisaic discourse. Both the opinion and its ground are doubtful. As regards the latter, it is true that it is Gentile practice in prayer that is formally criticised, but it does not follow that the Pharisees were not open to the same censure. They might make long prayers, not in ignorance, but in ostentation (Lutteroth), as a display of devotional talent or zeal. But apart from the question of reference to the Pharisees, it is likely that prayer under various aspects formed one of the subjects of instruction in the course of teaching on the hill whereof these chapters are a digest.

Ver. 7. βατταλογήσητε; a ἅπαξ λεγ. in N. T., rarely used anywhere, and of doubtful derivation. Some (Erasmus, e.g.) have thought it was formed from Battus, the stammerer mentioned by Herod. (iv. 155), or from a feeble poet of the name who made long hymns full of repetitions (Suidas, Lexicon), but most now incline to the view that it is onomatopoetic. Hesychius (Lex.) takes this view of the kindred word, βατταρίζειν (ἐμοὶ μὲν δοκεῖ κατὰ μίμησιν τῆς φωνῆς πεποίησθαι). It points to the repetition without end of the same forms of words as a stammerer involuntarily repeats the same syllable, like the Baal worshippers

7. Προσευχόμενοι δὲ μὴ βαττολογήσητε,[1] ὥσπερ οἱ [j] ἐθνικοί·[2] [j] δοκοῦσι γὰρ ὅτι ἐν τῇ πολυλογίᾳ αὐτῶν [k] εἰσακουσθήσονται. 8. μὴ οὖν [l] ὁμοιωθῆτε αὐτοῖς· οἶδε γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ[3] ὑμῶν ὧν [m] χρείαν ἔχετε, πρὸ τοῦ ὑμᾶς αἰτῆσαι αὐτόν. 9. οὕτως οὖν προσεύχεσθε ὑμεῖς·

j Ch. v. 47 (in critical notes); xviii. 17.
k Lk. i. 13. Acts x. 31. 1 Cor. xiv. 31. Heb. v. 7.
l Ch. vii. 24, 26; xiii. 24.
m Ch. ix. 12; xxi. 3.

[1] ℵB have βαττα., which Tisch. and W.H. follow. L as in text. D has βλαττολ.

[2] B and Syr. Cur. have υποκριται.

[3] ℵB Sah. version have ο θεος before ο πατηρ (W.H. within brackets).

shouting from morning till noon, "O Baal, hear us" (1 Kings xviii. 26, cf. Acts xix. 34, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians"). This repetition is characteristic of Pagan prayer, and when it recurs in the Church, as in saying many Aves and Paternosters, it is Paganism redivivus.—ἐθνικοί, the second of three references to Pagans (v. 47, vi. 32) in the Sermon on the Mount, not to be wondered at. The Pagan world was near at hand for a Jew belonging to Galilee with its mixed population. Pagan customs would be familar to Galileans, and it was natural that Jesus should use them as well as the theory and practice of scribes and Pharisees to define by contrast true piety.—πολυλογίᾳ, epexegetical of βατταλογ. The Pagans thought that by endless repetitions and many words they would inform their gods as to their needs and weary them ("fatigare deos") into granting their requests. Ver. 8, οὖν, infers that disciples must not imitate the practice described, because it is Pagan, and because it is absurd. Repetition is, moreover, wholly uncalled for—οἶδεν γὰρ. The God whom Jesus proclaims—"your Father"—knows beforehand your needs. Why, then, pray at all? Because we cannot receive unless we desire, and if we desire, we will pray; also because things worth getting are worth asking. Only pray always as to a Being well informed and willing, in few words and in faith. With such thoughts in mind, Jesus proceeds to give a sample of suitable prayer.

Vv. 9-13. The Lord's Prayer. Again, in Lk. xi. 1-4—vide notes there. Here I remark only that Luke's form, true reading, is shorter than Matthew's. On this ground Camphausen (Das Gebet des Herrn) argues for its originality. But surely Matthew's form is short and elementary enough to satisfy all reasonable requirements! The question as to the original form cannot be settled on such grounds. The prayer, as here given, is, indeed, a model of simplicity. Besides the question as to the original form, there is another as to the originality of the matter. Wetstein says, "tota haec oratio ex formulis Hebraeorum concinnata est". De Wette, after quoting these words, asserts that, after all the Rabbinical scholars have done their utmost to adduce parallels from Jewish sources, the Lord's Prayer is by no means shown to be a Cento, and that it contains echoes only of well-known O. T. and Messianic ideas and expressions, and this only in the first two petitions. This may be the actual fact, but there is no need for any zeal in defence of the position. I should be very sorry to think that the model prayer was absolutely original. It would be a melancholy account of the chosen people if, after thousands of years of special training, they did not yet know what to pray for. Jesus made a new departure by inaugurating (1) freedom in prayer; (2) trustfulness of spirit; (3) simplicity in manner. The mere making of a new prayer, if only by apt conjunction of a few choice phrases gathered from Scripture or Jewish prayer-books, was an assertion of liberty. And, of course, the liberty obtains in reference to the new form as well as to the old. We may use the Paternoster, but we are not bound to use it. It is not in turn to become a fetish. Reformers do not arise to break old fetters only in order to forge new ones.

Ver. 9. οὕτως, thus, not after the ethnic manner.—προσεύχεσθε: present, pray so habitually.—ὑμεῖς: as opposed to the Pagans, as men (i.e.) who believe in an intelligent, willing God, your Father. The prayer which follows consists of six petitions which have often been elaborately explained, with learned discussions on disputed points, leaving the reader with the feeling that the new form is any thing but simple, and wondering how it ever came into universal use. Gospel has been turned into law, spirit into n 1 Pet. iii. 15. (Is. xxix. 23.) o Ch. xxvi. 42. Acts xxi. 14 (same phrase). p Acts vii. 51 (ὡς καὶ).

Πάτερ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, [n] ἁγιασθήτω τὸ ὄνομά σου· 10. ἐλθέτω ἡ βασιλεία σου· [o] γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, [p] ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ,

letter, poetry into prose. We had better let this prayer alone if we cannot catch its lyric tone.—Πάτερ. In Luke's form this name stands impressively alone, but the words associated with it in Matthew's version of the address are every way suitable. Name and epithet together—Father, in heaven—express reverential trust.—Ἁγιασθήτω τ. ο. σου: first petition—sanctified, hallowed be Thy name. Fritzsche holds that σου in this and the next two petitions is emphatic, σοῦ not σου enclitic. The suggestion gives a good direction for the expositor = may God the Father-God of Jesus become the one object of worship all the world over. A very natural turn of thought in view of the previous reference to the Pagans. Pagan prayer corresponded to the nature of Pagan deities—indifferent, capricious, unrighteous, unloving; much speaking, iteration, dunning was needed to gain their ear. How blessed if the whole pantheon could be swept away or fall into contempt, and the one worshipful Divinity be, in fact, worshipped, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς; for this clause appended to the third petition may be conceived as common to all the first three. The One Name in heaven the One Name on earth, and reverenced on earth as in heaven. Universalism is latent in this opening petition. We cannot imagine Jesus as meaning merely that the national God of Israel may be duly honoured within the bounds of His own people.

Ver. 10. Ἐλθέτω ἡ βασιλεία σου: second petition. The prayer of all Jews. Even the Rabbis said, that is no prayer in which no mention of the kingdom is made. All depends on how the kingdom is conceived, on what we want to come. The kingdom is as the King. It is the kingdom of the universal, benignant Father who knows the wants of His children and cares for their interests, lower and higher, that Jesus desires to come. It will come with the spread of the worship of the One true Divine Name; the paternal God ruling in grace over believing, grateful men. Thus viewed, God's kingdom comes, is not always here, as in the reign of natural law or in the moral order of the world.—γενηθήτω τ. θ. σ.: third petition. Camphausen, bent on maintaining the superior originality of Luke's form in which this petition is wanting, regards it as a mere pendant to the second, unfolding its meaning. And it is true in a sense that any one of the three first petitions implies the rest. Yet the third has its distinct place. The kingdom, as Jesus preached it, was a kingdom of grace. The second petition, therefore, is a prayer that God's gracious will may be done. The third, on the other hand, is a prayer that God's commanding will may be done; that the right as against the wrong may everywhere prevail.—ὡς ἐν οὐρ. καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς. This addendum, not without application to all three petitions, is specially applicable to this one. Translated into modern dialect, it means that the divine will may be perfectly, ideally done on this earth: as in heaven, so also, etc. The reference is probably to the angels, described in Ps. ciii., as doing God's commandments. In the O. T. the angels are the agents of God's will in nature as well as in Providence. The defining clause might, therefore, be taken as meaning: may God's will be done in the moral sphere as in the natural; exactly, always, everywhere.

The foregoing petitions are regarded by Grotius, and after him Achelis, as pia desideria, εὐχαί, rather than petitions proper—αἰτήματα, like the following three. The distinction is not gratuitous, but it is an exegetical refinement which may be disregarded. More important is it to note that the first group refers to the great public interests of God and His kingdom, placed first here as in vi. 33, the second to personal needs. There is a corresponding difference in the mode of expression, the verbs being in the third person in Group I., objective, impersonal; in the second in Group II., subjective, personal.

Ver. 11. Fourth petition. τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν: whatever the adjective qualifying ἄρτον may mean, it may be taken for granted that it is ordinary bread, food for the body, that is intended. All spiritualising mystical meanings of ἐπιούσιον are to be discarded. This is the one puzzling word in the prayer. It is a ἅπαξ λεγ., not only in O. and N. T., but in Greek literature, as known not only to us, but even to Origen, who (De Oratione, cap. xxvii.) states that it

καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς[1] γῆς· 11. τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν [q] ἐπιούσιον δὸς ἡμῖν σήμερον· 12. καὶ ἄφες ἡμῖν τὰ [r] ὀφειλήματα ἡμῶν, ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς

q here and in Lk. xi. 3 (not found in Greek literature).
r Rom. iv. 4.

[1] ℵBZΔ and some cursives omit της. So most modern editors.

is not found in any of the Greeks, or used by private individuals, and that it seems to be a coinage (ἔοικε πεπλάσθαι) of the evangelists. It is certainly not likely to have proceeded from our Lord. This one word suffices to prove that, if not always, at least in uttering this prayer, Jesus spoke in Aramaean. He would not in such a connection use an obscure word, unfamiliar, and of doubtful meaning. The problem is to account for the incoming of such a word into the Greek version of His doubtless simple, artless, and well-understood saying. The learned are divided as to the derivation of the word, having of course nothing but conjecture to go on. Some derive it from ἐπὶ and οὐσία, or the participle of εἶναι; others from ἐπιέναι, or ἡ ἐπιοῦσα = the approaching day (ἡμέρα understood). In one case we get a qualitative sense—bread for subsistence, bread needed and sufficient (τὰ δέοντα καὶ αὐτάρκη. Prov. xxx. 8, Sept.), in the other, a temporal—bread of the coming day, panem quotidianum (Vulg., Lk., xi. 3), "daily bread". Either party argues against the other on grammatical grounds, e.g., that derived from οὐσία the word should be ἐπούσιος, and that derived from ἐπιοῦσα it should be ἐπιουσαῖος. In either case the disputants are ready with their answer. Another source of argument is suitableness of the sense. Opponents of the temporal sense say that to pray for to-morrow's bread sins against the counsel, "Take no thought for the morrow," and that to pray, "Give us to-day our bread of to-morrow," is absurd (ineptius, Suicer, Thesaurus, s.v. ἐπιούσιος). On the other side it is said: Granting that the sense "sufficient" can be got from ἐπὶ, οὐσία, and granting its appropriateness, how comes it that a simpler, better-known word was not chosen to represent so plain a meaning? Early tradition should have an important bearing on the question. Lightfoot, in the appendix on the words ἐπιούσιος and περιούσιος, in his work "On a fresh Revision of the N. T.," summarises the evidence to this effect: Most of the Greeks follow Origen, who favoured derivation from οὐσία. But Aramaic Christians put for ἐπιούσιος Mahar = crastinum. (Jerome comm. in Mt.) The Curetonian Syriac has words meaning, "our bread continual of the day give us". The Egyptian versions have similar readings. The old Latin version has quotidianum, retained by Jerome in revision of L. V. in Lk. xi. 2, while supersubstantialem is given in Mt. vi. 11. The testimony of these early versions is important in reference to the primitive sense attached to the word. Still the question remains: How account for the coinage of such a word in Greek-speaking circles, and for the tautology: give us to-day (σήμερον, Mt.) or daily (τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν, Luke), the bread of to-morrow? In his valuable study on "The Lord's Prayer in the early Church" (Texts and Studies, 1891), Principal Chase has made an important contribution to the solution of this difficulty by the suggestion that the coinage was due to liturgical exigencies in connection with the use of the prayer in the evening. Assuming that the original petition was to the effect: "to us give, of the day, our bread," and that the Greek equivalent for the day was ἡ ἐπιοῦσα, the adjective ἐπιούσιος was coined to make the prayer suitable at all hours. In the morning it would mean the bread of the day now begun, in the evening the bread of to-morrow. But devotional conservatism, while adopting the new word as convenient, would cling to the original "of the day"; hence σήμερον in Matt. and τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν in Luke, along with ἐπιούσιος. On the whole the temporal meaning seems to have the weight of the argument on its side. For a full statement of the case on that side vide Lightfoot as above, and on the other the article on ἐπιούσιος in Cremer's Bib. Theol., W. B., 7th Aufl., 1893.

Ver. 12. Fifth petition. ὀφειλήματα, in classics literal debts, here moral debts, sins (ἁμαρτίας in Lk. xi. 4). The more men desire God's will to be done the more conscious they are of shortcoming. The more conscious of personal shortcoming, the more indulgent towards the faults of others even when committed against themselves. Hence the added s Ch. xviii. 24 (literal). Lk. xiii. 4 (moral). Gal. v. 3 (logical obligation). t Lk. xi. 4. u Mk. xi. 25. Rom. v. 15-18. Gal. vi. 1. al. v Lk. xxiv. 17. w vv. 19, 20. Acts xiii. 41. James iv. 14.

ἀφίεμεν[1] τοῖς [s]ὀφειλέταις ἡμῶν· 13. καὶ μὴ [t]εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν, ἀλλὰ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία καὶ ἡ δύναμις καὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. ἀμήν.[2] 14. Ἐὰν γὰρ ἀφῆτε τοῖς ἀνθρώποις τὰ [u]παραπτώματα αὐτῶν, ἀφήσει καὶ ὑμῖν ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ οὐράνιος· 15. ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ἀφῆτε τοῖς ἀνθρώποις τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν,[3] οὐδὲ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ἀφήσει τὰ παραπτώματα ὑμῶν. 16. [v]Ὅταν δὲ νηστεύητε, μὴ γίνεσθε ὥσπερ[4] οἱ ὑποκριταὶ [v]σκυθρωποί· [w]ἀφανίζουσι γὰρ τὰ πρόσωπα αὐτῶν,[5] ὅπως φανῶσι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις νηστεύοντες· ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι[6]

[1] ℵBZ have αφηκαμεν, adopted by modern editors. αφιεμεν (T. R.) has probably come in from Luke (xi. 4).

[2] The Doxology οτι σου . . . αμην is wanting in ℵBDZ and is regarded by most modern critics as an ancient liturgical insertion. It is found in LΔΣ al.

[3] τα παραπτωματα αυτων wanting in ℵD, omitted by Tisch., bracketed by W.H., though found in BL.

[4] ως in ℵBDΔ.

[5] For αυτων B has εαυτων.

[6] T. R. has οτι with L. ℵBD omit.

words: ὡς καὶ ἡ. ἀφήκαμεν, etc. It is natural and comforting to the sincere soul to put the two things together. ὡς must be taken very generally. The prayer proceeds from child-like hearts, not from men trained in the distinctions of theology. The comment appended in vv. 14, 15 introduces an element of reflection difficult to reconcile with the spontaneity of the prayer. It is probably imported from another connection, e.g., Mt. xviii. 35 (so Weiss-Meyer).

Ver. 13. Sixth petition: consists of two members, one qualifying or limiting the other.—μὴ . . . πειρασμόν, expose us not to moral trial. All trial is of doubtful issue, and may therefore naturally and innocently be shrunk from, even by those who know that the result may be good, confirmation in faith and virtue. The prayer is certainly in a different key from the Beatitude in V. 10. There Jesus sets before the disciple a heroic temper as the ideal. But here He does not assume the disciple to have attained. The Lord's Prayer is not merely for heroes, but for the timid, the inexperienced. The teacher is considerate, and allows time for reaching the heights of heroism on which St. James stood when he wrote (i. 2) πᾶσαν χαρὰν ἡγήσασθε, ἀδελφοί μου, ὅταν πειρασμοῖς περιπέσητε ποικίλοις.—ἀλλὰ, not purely adversative, cancelling previous clause, but confirming it and going further (Schanz), in accordance with original meaning of ἀλλὰ, derived from ἄλλο or ἄλλα, and signifying that what is going to be said is another thing, aliud, in relation to what has been said, Klotz, Devar. ii., p. 2 = Lead us not into temptation, or so lead us that we may be safe from evil: May the issue ever be beneficent.—ῥῦσαι ἀπὸ, not ἐκ; the latter would imply actual implication in, the former implies danger merely. Both occur in N. T. (on the difference cf. Camphausen, Das G. des H.).—τοῦ πονηροῦ, either masculine or neuter, which? Here again there is an elaborate debate on a comparatively unimportant question. The probability is in favour of the masculine, the evil one. The Eastern naturally thought of evil in the concrete. But we as naturally think of it in the abstract; therefore the change from A. V. in R. V. is unfortunate. It mars the reality of the Lord's Prayer on Western lips to say deliver us from the evil one. Observe it is moral evil, not physical, that is deprecated.—ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν . . . Ἀμήν: a liturgical ending, no part of the original prayer, and tending to turn a religious reality into a devotional form.

On vv. 14-15 vide under ver. 12.

Vv. 16-18. Fasting. Ver. 16. ὅταν δὲ: transition to a new related topic.—σκυθρωποί, of sad visage, overdone of course by the "actors". Fasting, like ἀπέχουσι τὸν μισθὸν αὐτῶν. 17. σὺ δὲ νηστεύων [x] ἄλειψαί σου τὴν κεφαλήν, καὶ τὸ πρόσωπόν σου νίψαι· 18. ὅπως μὴ φανῇς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις νηστεύων,[1] ἀλλὰ τῷ πατρί σου τῷ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ[2] καὶ ὁ πατήρ σου ὁ βλέπων ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ[2] ἀποδώσει σοι ἐν τῷ φανερῷ.[3]

19. "Μὴ [y] θησαυρίζετε ὑμῖν θησαυροὺς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ὅπου σὴς καὶ βρῶσις ἀφανίζει, καὶ ὅπου κλέπται [z] διορύσσουσι καὶ κλέπτουσι· 20. θησαυρίζετε δὲ ὑμῖν θησαυροὺς ἐν οὐρανῷ, ὅπου οὔτε σὴς οὔτε βρῶσις ἀφανίζει, καὶ ὅπου κλέπται οὐ διορύσσουσιν οὐδὲ κλέπτουσιν. 21. ὅπου γάρ ἐστιν ὁ θησαυρὸς ὑμῶν,[4] ἐκεῖ ἔσται καὶ[5] ἡ καρδία ὑμῶν.[4] 22. Ὁ λύχνος τοῦ σώματός ἐστιν ὁ ὀφθαλμός[6]· ἐὰν οὖν ὁ x Mk. vi. 13. Lk. vii. 38, 46. James v. 14.

y Lk. xii. 21. Rom. ii. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 2 al.

z Ch. xxiv. 43. Lk. xii. 39.

[1] B places νηστευων before τοις ανθρωποις.

[2] κρυφαιω in ℵBD.

[3] ℵBDL omit εν τω φανερω.

[4] ℵB have σου, which makes the reflection more pointed.

[5] B omits και.

[6] B adds σου.

prayer, was reduced to a system; twice a week in ordinary Pharisaic practice: Thursday and Monday (ascent and descent of Moses on Sinai), artificial gloom inevitable in such circumstances. In occasional fasting, in circumstances of genuine affliction, the gloom will be real (Lk. xxiv. 17).—ἀφανίζουσιν—ὅπως φανῶσιν, a play upon words, may be rendered in English "they disfigure that they may figure". In German: Unsichtbar machen, sichtbar werden (Schanz and Weiss).—Ver. 17. ἄλειψαι, νίψαι: not necessarily as if preparing for a feast (Meyer and Weiss), but performing the usual daily ablutions for comfort and cleanliness, so avoiding parade of fasting by neglect of them (Bleek, Achelis).

The foregoing inculcations of sincerity and reality in religion contribute indirectly to the illustration of the divine name Father which is here again defined by discriminating use. God as Father desires these qualities in worshippers. All close relations (father, son, husband, wife) demand real affection as distinct from parade.

Vv. 19-34. Counsels against covetousness and care (reproduced in Lk. xii. 22-34, with exception of vv. 22-23, which reappear in Lk. xi. 34-36). An interpolation, according to Weiss. Doubtless, if the Sermon on the Mount was exclusively an anti-Pharisaic discourse. But this homily might very well have formed one of the lessons on the hill, in connection with the general theme of the kingdom which needs to be defined in contrast to worldliness not less than to spurious types of piety.

Vv. 19-21. Against hoarding. θησαυροὺς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, treasures upon earth, and therefore earthly, material, perishable, of whatever kind.—σὴς, moth, destructive of costly garments, one prominent sort of treasure in the East.—βρῶσις, not merely "rust," but a generic term embracing the whole class of agents which eat or consume valuables (so Beza, Fritzsche, Bleek, Meyer, etc.). Erosionem seu corrosionem quamlibet denotat, quum vel vestes a tineis vel vetustate et putredine eroduntur, vel lignum a cossibus et carie, frumentum a curculionibus, quales τρῶγας Graeci vocant, vel metalli ab aerugine, ferrugine, eroduntur et corroduntur (Kypke, Obs. Sac.).—διορύσσουσιν, dig through (clay walls), easier to get in so than through carefully barred doors (again in Matt. xxiv. 43). The thief would not find much in such a house.—Ver. 20. θησ. ἐν οὐρανῷ: not = heavenly treasures, says Fritzsche, as that would require τοὺς before ἐν. Grammatically this is correct, yet practically heavenly treasure is meant.—Ver. 21. ὅπου θησ. . . . ἐκεῖ καρδία. The reflection goes back on the negative counsel in ver. 19. Do not accumulate earthly treasures, for then your heart will be there, whereas it ought to be in heaven with God and the Kingdom of God.

Vv. 22-24. Parable of the eye. A difficult passage; connection obscure, ὀφθαλμός σου [a] ἁπλοῦς ᾖ,[1] ὅλον τὸ σῶμά σου [b] φωτεινὸν ἔσται· 23. ἐὰν δὲ ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου πονηρὸς ᾖ, ὅλον τὸ σῶμά σου [c] σκοτεινὸν ἔσται. εἰ οὖν τὸ φῶς τὸ ἐν σοὶ σκότος ἐστί, τὸ σκότος πόσον; 24. Οὐδεὶς δύναται δυσὶ κυρίοις δουλεύειν· ἢ γὰρ τὸν ἕνα μισήσει, καὶ τὸν ἕτερον ἀγαπήσει· ἢ ἑνὸς [d] ἀνθέξεται, καὶ τοῦ ἑτέρου [e] καταφρονήσει. οὐ δύνασθε Θεῷ δουλεύειν καὶ [f] μαμμωνᾷ.[2] 25. διὰ a Lk. xi. 34. b Ch. xvii. 5. Lk. xi. 34, 36. c Lk. xi. 34, 36. d Lk. xvi. 13. 1 Thess. v. 14. Tit. i. 9. e Ch. xviii. 10. Lk. xvi. 13. Rom. ii. 4 al. f Lk. xvi. 13.

[1] η before ο οφθαλμος σου απλους in ℵB.

[2] μαμωνα in all uncials.

and the evangelic report apparently imperfect. The parallel passage in Luke (xi. 33-36) gives little help. The figure and its ethical meaning seem to be mixed up, moral attributes ascribed to the physical eye which with these still gives light to the body. This confusion may be due to the fact that the eye, besides being the organ of vision, is the seat of expression, revealing inward dispositions. Physically the qualities on which vision depends are health and disease. The healthy eye gives light for all bodily functions, walking, working, etc.; the diseased eye more or less fails in this service. If the moral is to be found only in last clause of ver. 23, all going before being parable, then ἁπλοῦς must mean sound and πονηρὸς diseased, meanings which, if not inadmissible, one yet does not expect to find expressed by these words. They seem to be chosen because of their applicability to the moral sphere, in which they might suitably to the connection mean "liberal" and "niggardly". ἁπλότης occurs in this sense in Rom. xii. 8, and Hatch (Essays in B. G., p. 80) has shown that πονηρός occurs several times in Sept. (Sir.) in the sense of niggardly, grudging. He accordingly renders: "The lamp of the body is the eye. If therefore thine eye be liberal thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be grudging, thy whole body shall be full of darkness." Of course this leaves the difficulty of the mixing of natural and moral untouched. The passage is elliptical, and might be paraphrased thus: The eye is the lamp of the body: when it is healthy we see to do our daily work, when diseased we are in darkness. So with the eye of the soul, the heart, seat of desire: when it is free from covetousness, not anxious to hoard, all goes well with our spiritual functions —we choose and act wisely. When sordid passions possess it there is darkness within deeper than that which afflicts the blind man. We mistake the relative value of things, choose the worse, neglect the better, or flatter ourselves that we can have both.

Ver. 24. Parable of the two masters. Οὐδεὶς: In the natural sphere it is impossible for a slave to serve two masters, for each claims him as his property, and the slave must respond to one or other of the claims with entire devotion, either from love or from interest.—ἢ γὰρ . . . μισήσει . . . ἀγαπήσει: We may take this clause as referring to the case of honest preference. A slave has his likes and dislikes like other men. And he will not do things by halves. His preference will take the form of love, and his aversion that of hate.—ἢ ἑνὸς ἀνθέξεται, etc.: this clause may be taken as referring to the case of interest. The slave may not in his heart care for either of the rival masters. But he must seem to care, and the relative power or temper of one as compared to the other, may be the ground of his decision. And having decided, he attaches himself, ἀνθέξεται, to the one, and ostentatiously disregards the other. In ordinary circumstances there would be no room for such a competition of masters. But a case might occur in time of war when the conquered were sold into slavery.—οὐ δύνασθε, etc. Application of the parable to God and earthly possessions.—μαμωνᾷ, wealth personified = Plutus, a Chaldee, Syriac, and Punic word ("lucrum punice mammon dicitur," Aug. de S. D.) derived from טָמַן = to conceal or אָמַן to trust (vide Buxtorf, Lex. Talm., p. 1217). The meaning is not, "ye cannot serve God and have riches," but "ye cannot be faithful to God and make an idol of wealth". "Non dixit, qui habet divitias, sed qui servit divitiis," Jerome.

Vv. 25-34. Counsels against care. More suitable to the circumstances of the τοῦτο λέγω ὑμῖν, μὴ [g] μεριμνᾶτε τῇ ψυχῇ ὑμῶν, τί φάγητε καὶ [1] τί πίητε· μηδὲ τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν, τί [h] ἐνδύσησθε. οὐχὶ ἡ ψυχὴ πλεῖόν ἐστι τῆς τροφῆς, καὶ τὸ σῶμα τοῦ ἐνδύματος; 26. [i] ἐμβλέψατε εἰς τὰ [j] πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ὅτι οὐ [k] σπείρουσιν, οὐδὲ [k] θερίζουσιν, οὐδὲ συνάγουσιν εἰς ἀποθήκας, καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ οὐράνιος τρέφει αὐτά· οὐχ ὑμεῖς μᾶλλον [l] διαφέρετε αὐτῶν; 27. τίς δὲ ἐξ ὑμῶν μεριμνῶν δύναg Ch. x. 19. Lk. x. 41; xii. 25. Phil. iv. 6 (various const.).

h Ch. xxii. 11. Mk. i. 6. Rom. xiii. 12. Eph. vi. 11. 1 Thess. v. 8 (last three exx. metaphorical). i Acts i. 11 (with εἰς). j Ch. viii. 20; xiii. 4. Lk. viii. 5. Acts x. 12. k John iv. l Ch. x. 31; xii. 12. Lk. xii. 24 (with μᾶλλον).

[1] η τι πιητε in B. This clause is wanting in ℵ, omitted by Tisch., and bracketed by W.H.

disciples than those against amassing treasures. "Why speak of treasures to us who are not even sure of the necessaries of life? It is for bread and clothing we are in torment" (Lutteroth).—Ver. 25, διὰ τοῦτο: because ye can be unfaithful to God through care as well as through covetousness.—μὴ μεριμνᾶτε: μέριμνα from μερίς, μερίζω, because care divides and distracts the mind. The verb is used in N. T. in various constructions and senses; sometimes in a good sense, as in 1 Cor. vii. 32: "The unmarried care for the things of the Lord," and xii. 25 in reference to the members of the body having the same care for each other. But the evil sense predominates. What is here deprecated is not work for bread and raiment, but worry, "Labor exercendus est, solicitudo tollenda," Jerome.—οὐχὶ ἡ ψυχὴ . . . ἐνδύματος: the life not the soul; the natural life is more than meat, and the body more than the clothing which protects it, yet these greater things are given to you already. Can you not trust Him who gave the greater to give the less? But a saying like this, life is more than meat, in the mouth of Jesus is very pregnant. It tends to lift our thoughts above materialism to a lofty conception of man's chief end. It is more than an argument against care, it is a far-reaching principle to be associated with that other logion—a man is better than a sheep (Matt. xii. 12).—Ver. 26. ἐμβλέψατε εἰς, fix your eyes on so as to take a good look at (Mk. x. 21, xiv. 67).—τὰ πετεινὰ τ. ου., the birds whose element is the air; look, not to admire their free, careless movements on the wing, but to note a very relevant fact—ὅτι, that without toil they get their food and live—σπείρουσιν, θερίζουσιν, συνάγουσι ε. α.: the usual operations of the husbandman in producing the staff of life. In these the birds have no part, yet your Father feedeth them. The careworn might reply to this: yes; they feed themselves at the farmer's expense, an additional source of anxiety to him. And the cynic unbeliever in Providence: yes, in summer; but how many perish in winter through want and cold! Jesus, greatest of all optimists, though no shallow or ignorant one, quietly adds: οὐχ ὑμεῖς μᾶλλον διαφέρετε αὐτῶν: do not ye differ considerably from them? They fare, on the whole, well, God's humble creatures. Why should you fear, men, God's children?

Ver. 27. τίς δὲ, etc. The question means: care is as bootless as it is needless. But there is much difference of opinion as to the precise point of the question. Does it mean, who by care can add a cubit to his height or who can add a short space of time, represented by a cubit, to the length of his life? ἡλικία admits of either sense. It means stature in Lk. xix. 3; age in John ix. 21, Heb. xi. 11. Most recent commentators favour the latter interpretation, chiefly influenced by the monstrosity of the supposition as referring to stature. Who could call adding a cubit, 1½ feet, to his height a very small matter, the expression of Lk. (ἐλάχιστον, xii. 26)? The application of a measure of length to length of days is justified by Ps. xxxix. 5: "Thou hast made my days as handbreadths". But Dr. Field strongly protests against the new rendering. Admitting, of course, that ἡλικία is ambiguous, and that in classic authors it oftener means age than stature, he insists that πῆχυς is decisive. "πηχυς," he remarks (Ot. Nor.), "is not only a measure of length, but that by which a man's stature was properly measured." Euthy. on this place remarks: "καὶ μὴν οὐδὲ σπιθαμήν (half a cubit) οὐ δὲ δάκτυλον (a 24th part): λοιπὸν οὖν πῆχυν εἶπε, διότι κυρίως μέτρον τῶν ἡλικιῶν ὁ πῆχύς ἐστι. Thus a short man is τρίπηχυς, a tall man τετράπηχυς." But how are we to get over the monstrosity of the supposition?

ται προσθεῖναι ἐπὶ τὴν ἡλικίαν αὐτοῦ [m] πῆχυν ἕνα; 28. καὶ περὶ ἐνδύματος τί μεριμνᾶτε; καταμάθετε τὰ [n] κρίνα τοῦ ἀγροῦ, πῶς αὐξάνει[1]· οὐ κοπιᾷ,[1] οὐδὲ νήθει[1]· 29. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι οὐδὲ Σολομὼν ἐν πάσῃ τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ [o] περιεβάλετο ὡς ἓν τούτων. 30. εἰ δὲ τὸν [p] χόρτον τοῦ ἀγροῦ, σήμερον ὄντα, καὶ αὔριον εἰς [q] κλίβανον βαλλόμενον, ὁ Θεὸς οὕτως [r] ἀμφιέννυσιν, οὐ πολλῷ μᾶλλον ὑμᾶς, [s] ὀλιγόπιστοι; 31. μὴ οὖν μεριμνήσητε, λέγοντες, Τί φάγωμεν, ἢ

m Lk. xii. 25. John xxi. 8. Rev. xxi. 17.
n Lk. xii. 27.
o ver. 31 (with τι). Lk. xii. 27.
p Ch. xiv. 19. Lk. xii. 28. Jas. i. 10 (of grass). Ch. xiii. 26. Mk. iv. 28 (of grain). 1 Cor. iii. 12 (of hay).
q here and Lk. xii. 28.
r Ch. xi. 8.
s Ch. viii. 26; xiv. 31; xvi. 8. Lk. xii. 28.

[1] אB have plurals (W.H.). The singulars are a grammatical correction (κρινα neut. pl. nom.) wholly unnecessary. The lilies are viewed singly.

Lutteroth helps us here by finding in the question of Jesus a reference to the growth of the human body from infancy to maturity. By that insensible process, accomplished through the aid of food, Gods adds to every human body more than one cubit. How impossible for you to do what God has done without your thinking of it! And if He fed you during the period of growth, can you not trust Him now when you have ceased to grow?

Vv. 28-30. Lesson from the flowers. καταμάθετε, observe well that ye may learn thoroughly the lesson they teach. Here only in N.T., often in classics. Also in Sept., e.g., Gen. xxiv. 21: The man observed her (Rebekah), learning her disposition from her actions.—τὰ κρίνα, the lilium Persicum, Emperor's crown, according to Rosenmüller and Kuinoel; the red anemone, according to Furrer (Zscht. für M. und R.) growing luxuriantly under thorn bushes. All flowers represented by the lily, said Euthy. Zig. long ago, and probably he is right. No need to discover a flower of rare beauty as the subject of remark. Jesus would have said the same thing of the snowdrop, the primrose, the bluebell or the daisy. After ἀγροῦ should come a pause. Consider these flowers! Then, after a few moments' reflection: πῶς, not interrogative (Fritzsche), but expressive of admiration; vague, doubtful whether the growth is admired as to height (Bengel), rapidity, or rate of multiplication. Why refer to growth at all? Probably with tacit reference to question in ver. 27. Note the verbs in the plural (vide critical notes) with a neuter nominative. The lilies are viewed individually as living beings, almost as friends, and spoken of with affection (Winer, § 58, 3). The verb αὐξάνω in active voice is transitive in class., intransitive only in later writers.—κοπιῶσιν, νήθουσιν: illud virorum est, qui agrum colunt, hoc mulierum domisedarum (Rosenmüller). The former verb seems to point to the toil whereby bread is earned, with backward glance at the conditions of human growth; the latter to the lighter work, whereby clothing, the new subject of remark, is prepared.—Ver. 29. λέγω δὲ: the speaker is conscious He makes a strong statement, but He means it.—οὐδὲ, not even Solomon the magnificent, most glorious of the kings of Israel, and on state occasions most gorgeously attired.—ἓν τούτων: the lilies are in view, and one of them is singled out to vie with Solomon.—Ver. 30. εἰ δὲ τὸν χόρτον. Application. The beautiful flowers now lose their individuality, and are merged in the generic grass: mere weeds to be cut down and used as fuel. The natural sentiment of love for flowers is sacrificed for the ethical sentiment of love for man, aiming at convincing him of God's care.—κλίβανον (Attic κρίβανος, vide Lobeck, Phryn., 179), a round pot of earthenware, narrow at top, heated by a fire within, dough spread on the sides; beautiful flowers of yesterday thus used to prepare bread for men! ὀλιγόπιστοι: several times in Gospels, not in classics; not reproachful but encouraging, as if bantering the careworn into faith. The difficulty is to get the careworn to consider these things. They have no eye for wild flowers, no ear for the song of birds. Not so Jesus. He had an intense delight in nature. Witness the sentiment, "Solomon in all his glory," applied to a wild flower! These golden words are valuable as revealing His genial poetic nature. They reflect also in an interesting way the holiday mood of the hour, up on the hill away from heat, and crowds, and human misery.

Vv. 31-33. Renewed exhortation τί πίωμεν, ἢ τί περιβαλώμεθα; 32. πάντα γὰρ ταῦτα τὰ ἔθνη [t] ἐπιζητεῖ[1]· οἶδε γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ οὐράνιος ὅτι [w] χρῄζετε τούτων ἁπάντων· 33. ζητεῖτε δὲ πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τὴν [u] δικαιοσύνην[2] αὐτοῦ, καὶ ταῦτα πάντα [v] προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν· 34. μὴ οὖν μεριμνήσητε εἰς τὴν αὔριον· ἡ γὰρ αὔριον μεριμνήσει τὰ ἑαυτῆς.[3] [v] ἀρκετὸν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἡ [x] κακία αὐτῆς.

t Lk. xii. 30. Rom. xi. 7. Heb. xi. 19.
u Lk. xi. 8. Rom. xvi. 2 (gen. of pers.). 2 Cor. iii. 1.
v Mk. iv. 24. Lk. xii. 31. Heb. xii. 14.
w Ch. x. 25. 1 Pet. iv. 3.
x here only in N. T. in sense of trouble. Sept. Eccl. vii. 15; xii. 1. Amos iii. 6. Sir. xix. 6.

[1] Another grammatical correction (neut. pl. nom. ἔθνη), ℵB have επιζητουσι.

[2] ℵB omit του θεου, and B transposes the nouns and has την δικ. και την βασ. αυτου. Tisch. and W.H. retain the order as in T. R., omitting του θεου.

[3] τα εαυτης in EΣ (Δ τα περι αυτης). B*L have simply αυτης.

against care. Ver. 31. οὖν, goes back on ver. 25, repeating the counsel, reinforced by intervening argument.—Ver. 32. τὰ ἔθνη, again a reference to heathen practice; in vi. 7 to their battology in prayer, here to the kind of blessings they eagerly ask (ἐπιζητοῦσιν): material only or chiefly; bread, raiment, wealth, etc. I never realised how true the statement of Jesus is till I read the Vedic Hymns, the prayer book and song book of the Indian Aryans. With the exception of a few hymns to Varuna, in which sin is confessed and pardon begged, most hymns, especially those to Indra, contain prayers only for material goods: cows, horses, green pastures, good harvests.

> To wifeless men thou givest wives,
> And joyful mak'st their joyless lives;
> Thou givest sons, courageous, strong,
> To guard their aged sires from wrong.
> Lands, jewels, horses, herds of kine,
> All kinds of wealth are gifts of thine.
> Thy friend is never slain; his might > Is never worsted in the fight.
> —Dr. Muir, Sanskrit Texts, vol. v., p. 137.

—οἶδεν γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ υ.: Disciples must rise above the pagan level, especially as they worship not Indra, but a Father in heaven, believed in even by the Indian Aryans, in a rude way, under the name of Dyaus-Pitar, Heaven-Father. γὰρ explains the difference between pagans and disciples. The disciple has a Father who knows, and never forgets, His children's needs, and who is so regarded by all who truly believe in Him. Such faith kills care. But such faith is possible only to those who comply with the following injunction.—Ver. 33. ζητεῖτε πρῶτον. There is considerable variation in the text of this counsel. Perhaps the nearest to the original is the reading of B, which omits τοῦ θεοῦ with ℵ, and inverts the order of βασ. and δικαι. Seek ye His (the Father's) righteousness and kingdom, though it may be against this that in Luke (xii. 31) the kingdom only is mentioned, πρῶτον also being omitted: Seek ye His kingdom. This may have been the original form of the logion, all beyond being interpretation, true though unnecessary. Seeking the kingdom means seeking righteousness as the summum bonum, and the πρῶτον is implied in such a quest. Some (Meyer, Sevin, Achelis) think there is no second, not even a subordinate seeking after earthly goods, all that to be left in God's hands, our sole concern the kingdom. That is indeed the ideal heroic attitude. Yet practically it comes to be a question of first and second, supreme and subordinate, and if the kingdom be indeed first it will keep all else in its proper place. The πρῶτον, like the prayer against temptation, indicates consideration for weakness in the sincere.—προστεθήσεται, shall be added, implying that the main object of quest will certainly be secured.

Ver. 34. Final exhortation against care. Not in Luke's parallel section, therefore regarded by Weiss as a reflection appended by the evangelist, not drawn from apostolic doctrine. But it very fitly winds up the discourse. Instead of saying, care not about food and raiment, the Teacher now says finally, care not with reference to to-morrow, εἰς τὴν αὔριον (ἡμέραν understood). It comes to the same thing. To restrict care to to-day is to master it absolutely. It is the future that breeds anxiety and leads to hoarding.—μεριμνήσει: future, with force of an imperative = let it, with genitive (αὐτῆς, W.H.) like other verbs of care; in ver. 25, with accus.—ἀρκετὸν: a a Lk. vi. 37. Rom. ii. 1, 3, 27; xiv. 3. Jas. iv. 11.

b Lk. vi. 41, 42.

VII. 1. "ΜΗ [a] κρίνετε, ἵνα μὴ κριθῆτε· ἐν ᾧ γὰρ κρίματι κρίνετε, κριθήσεσθε· 2. καὶ ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε, ἀντιμετρηθήσεται[1] ὑμῖν. 3. Τί δὲ βλέπεις τὸ [b] κάρφος τὸ ἐν τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου, neuter adjective, used as a noun; a sufficiency.—τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, for each successive day, the article distributive.—ἡ κακία, not the moral evil but the physical, the misery or affliction of life (not classical in this sense). In the words of Chrys. H. xxii., κακίαν φησι, οὐ τὴν πονηρίαν, μὴ γένοιτο, ἀλλὰ τὴν ταλαιπωρίαν, καὶ τὸν πόνον, καὶ τὰς συμφόρας. Every day has some such troubles: "suas afflictiones, quas nihil est necesse metu conduplicare". Erasmus, Paraph. Fritzsche proposes a peculiar arrangement of the words in the second and third clauses. Putting a full stop after μεριμνήσει, and retaining the τὰ of T.R. before ἑαυτῆς, he brings out this sense: The things of itself are a sufficiency for each day, viz., the evil thereof.

[1] Most uncials have the simple μετρηθησεται. The compound (T. R.) is in minusc. and Σ. Doubtless it came in originally from Lk. (vi. 38), being there the most probable reading.

CHAPTER VII. THE SERMON CONTINUED AND CLOSED. The contents of this chapter are less closely connected and more miscellaneous than in the two preceding. In vv. 1-12 the polemic against Pharisaism seems to be continued and concluded. Vv. 6-11 Weiss regards as an interpolation foreign to the connection. It seems best not to be too anxious about discovering connections, but to take the weighty moral sentences of the chapter as they stand, as embodying thoughts of Christ at whatever time uttered, on the hill or elsewhere, or in whatever connection. Section 1-5 certainly deals with a Pharisaic vice, that of exalting ourselves by disparaging others, a very cheap way of attaining moral superiority. Jesus would have His disciples rise above Pagans, publicans, Sadducees, Pharisees, but not by the method of detraction.

Vv. 1-5. Against judging. Ver. 1. μὴ κρίνετε, judge not, an absolute prohibition of a common habit, especially in religious circles of the Pharisaic type, in which much of the evil in human nature reveals itself. "What levity, haste, prejudice, malevolence, ignorance; what vanity and egotism in most of the judgments pronounced in the world" (Lutteroth). Judge not, said Christ. Judge, it is your duty, said the Dutch pietists of last century through a literary spokesman, citing in proof Matt. xxiii. 33, when the Pharisees are blamed for neglecting "judgment". Vide Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus, i., p. 328. How far apart the two types!—ἵνα μὴ κριθῆτε: an important, if not the highest motive; not merely a reference to the final judgment, but stating a law of the moral order of the world: the judger shall be judged; to which answers the other: who judges himself shall not be judged (1 Cor. xi. 31). In Rom. ii. 1 St. Paul tacitly refers to the Jew as ὁ κρίνων. The reference there and here defines the meaning of κρίνειν. It points to the habit of judging, and the spirit as evinced by the habit, censoriousness leading inevitably to sinister judging, so that κρίνειν is practically equivalent to κατακρίνειν or καταδικάζειν (Lk. vi. 37).—ἐν ᾧ γὰρ, etc.: Vulgatissimum hoc apud Judaeos Adagium, says Lightfoot (Hor. Heb.). Of course; one would expect such maxims, based on experience, to be current among all peoples (vide Grotius for examples). It is the lex talionis in a new form: character for character. Jesus may have learned some of these moral adages at school in Nazareth, as we have all when boys learned many good things out of our lesson books with their collections of extracts. The point to notice is what the mind of Jesus assimilated—the best in the wisdom of His people—and the emphasis with which He inculcated the best, so as to ensure for it permanent lodgment in the minds of His disciples and in their records of His teaching.

Vv. 3-5. Proverb of the mote and beam. Also current among Jews and Arabs (vide Tholuck).—κάρφος, a minute dry particle of chaff, wood, etc.—δοκός, a wooden beam (let in, from δέχομαι) or joist, a monstrous symbol of a great fault. A beam in the eye is a natural impossibility; cf. the camel and the needle eye. The Eastern imagination was prone to exaggeration. This is a case of tu quoque (Rom. ii. 2), or rather of "thou much more". The faults may τὴν δὲ ἐν τῷ σῷ ὀφθαλμῷ [c] δοκὸν οὐ [d] κατανοεῖς; 4. ἢ πῶς ἐρεῖς τῷ ἀδελφῷ σου, Ἄφες ἐκβάλω τὸ κάρφος ἀπὸ[1] τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ σου· καὶ ἰδού, ἡ δοκὸς ἐν τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ σου; 5. ὑποκριτά, ἔκβαλε πρῶτον τὴν δοκὸν ἐκ τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ σου,[2] καὶ τότε [e] διαβλέψεις ἐκβαλεῖν τὸ κάρφος ἐκ τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου. 6. Μὴ δῶτε τὸ ἅγιον τοῖς κυσί· μηδὲ βάλητε τοὺς μαργαρίτας ὑμῶν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν χοίρων, μήποτε

c Lk. vi. 41, 42.
d Lk. vi. 41; xx. 23. Acts xxvii. 39. Cf. Lk. xii. 24, 27. Rom. iv. 19.
e Mk. viii. 25. Lk. vi. 42.
f Ch. xiii. 45. 1 Tim. ii. 9. Rev. xvii. 4; xviii. 16; xxi. 21.

[1] ℵBΣ have εκ, which is preferred by most modern edd. Weiss suspects conformity to the εκ in εκβαλω.

[2] ℵBC place εκ του οφθ. σου before την δοκον, so giving to the censor's own eye due emphasis.

be of the same kind: κάρφος, a petty theft, δοκός, commercial dishonesty on a large scale—"thou that judgest doest the same things" (Rom. ii. 2); or of a different sort: moral laxity in the publican, pride and inhumanity in the Pharisee who despised him (Lk. xviii. 9-14).—βλέπεις, οὐ κατανοεῖς: the contrast is not between seeing and failing to see, but between seeing and not choosing to see; ignoring, consciously overlooking. The censorious man is not necessarily ignorant of his own faults, but he does not let his mind rest on them. It is more pleasant to think of other people's faults.—Ver. 4. ἐκβάλω, hortatory conjunctive, first person, supplies place of imperative which is wanting in first person; takes such words as ἄγε, φέρε, or as here ἄφες, before it. Vide Goodwin, section 255. For ἄφες modern Greek has ἄς, a contraction, used with the subjunctive in the first and third persons (vide Vincent and Dickson, Modern Greek, p. 322).—Ver. 5. ὑποκριτά: because he acts as no one should but he who has first reformed himself. "What hast thou to do to declare my statutes?" Ps. l. 16.—διαβλέψεις, thou will see clearly, vide Mk. viii. 24, 25, where three compounds of the verb occur, with ἀνά, διά, and ἐν. Fritzsche takes the future as an imperative and renders: se componere ad aliquid, curare; i.e., set thyself then to the task of, etc.

Ver. 6. A complementary counsel. No connecting word introduces this sentence. Indeed the absence of connecting particles is noticeable throughout the chapter: vv. 1, 6, 7, 13, 15. It is a collection of ethical pearls strung loosely together. Yet it is not difficult to suggest a connecting link, thus: I have said, "Judge not," yet you must know people, else you will make great mistakes, such as, etc. Moral criticism is inevitable. Jesus Himself practised it. He judged the Pharisees, but in the interest of humanity, guided by the law of love. He judged the proud, pretentious, and cruel, in behalf of the weak and despised. All depends on what we judge and why. The Pharisaic motive was egotism; the right motive is defence of the downtrodden or, in certain cases, self-defence. So here.—Δότε (in some minusc.), βάλητε, curious combination of imperative and subjunctive; a similar combination in next clause of future indicative with subjunctive: καταπατήσουσι, ῥήξωσιν. On the use of the future after μήποτε and other final particles, vide Burton, Syntax of the Moods and Tenses in N. T. Greek, § 199.—τὸ ἅγιον, τοὺς μαργαρίτας: what is the holy thing, and what are the pearls? In a moral aphorism special indications are not to be expected, and we are left to our own conjectures. The "holy" and the "pearls" must define themselves for each individual in his own experience. They are the things which are sacred and precious for a man or woman, and which natural feeling teaches us to be careful not to waste or expose to desecration. For this purpose knowledge of the world, discrimination, is necessary. We must not treat all people alike, and show our valuables, religious experiences, best thoughts, tenderest sentiments, to the first comer. Shyness, reserve, goes along with sincerity, depth, refinement. In all shyness there is implicit judgment of the legitimate kind. A modest woman shrinks from a man whom her instinct discerns to be impure; a child from all hard-natured people. Who blames woman or child? It is but the instinct of self-preservation.—κυσίν, χοίρων. The people to be feared and shunned are those represented by dogs and swine, regarded by Jews as shameless and καταπατήσωσιν[1] αὐτοὺς ἐν τοῖς ποσὶν αὐτῶν, καὶ στραφέντες [g]ῥήξωσιν ὑμᾶς. 7. Αἰτεῖτε, καὶ δοθήσεται ὑμῖν· ζητεῖτε, καὶ εὑρήσετε· [h]κρούετε, καὶ ἀνοιγήσεται ὑμῖν. 8. πᾶς γὰρ ὁ αἰτῶν λαμβάνει, καὶ ὁ ζητῶν εὑρίσκει, καὶ τῷ κρούοντι ἀνοιγήσεται.[2] 9. ἢ τίς ἐστιν[3] ἐξ ὑμῶν ἄνθρωπος, ὃν ἐὰν[4] αἰτήσῃ ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ ἄρτον, μὴ λίθον [i]ἐπιδώσει αὐτῷ; 10. καὶ ἐὰν ἰχθὺν αἰτήσῃ,[5] μὴ g Ch. ix. 17. Mk. ix. 18. Lk. ix. 42. Gal. iv. 27 (to break out into joy).

h Lk. xi. 9, 10; xii. 36. Acts xii. 16. Rev. iii. 20.
i Lk. xi. 11; xxiv. 30, 42. Acts xv. 30; xxvii. 15.

[1] καταπατησουσιν in BCLXΣ. Weiss against most critics thinks this combination of the fut. ind. with the subj. (ρηξωσιν) impossible. He ascribes the reading ου to a confusion of ου with ω. Vide below.

[2] ανοιγεται in B Cop. Syr. Cur. W.H. in margin. Weiss decides for this reading.

[3] BL omit εστιν, and among modern editors Treg. and W.H.

[4] For εαν αιτηση ℵBCLΔ have αιτησει. Tisch. and W.H. adopt this.

[5] For και εαν αιτηση ℵBC have η και αιτησει, which modern critics generally adopt.

unclean animals. There are such people, unhappily, even in the judgment of charity, and the shrewd know them and fight shy of them; for no good can come of comradeship with them. Discussions as to whether the dogs and the swine represent two classes of men, or only one, are pedantic. If not the same they are at least similar; one in this, that they are to be avoided. And it is gratuitous to limit the scope of the gnome to the apostles and their work in preaching the gospel. It applies to all citizens of the kingdom, to all who have a treasure to guard, a holy of holies to protect from profane intrusion.—μήποτε, lest perchance. What is to be feared?—καταπατήσουσιν, ῥήξωσιν: treading under foot (ἐν τ. π., instrumental, with, de Wette; among, Weiss) your pearls (αὐτοὺς), rending yourselves. Here again there is trouble for the commentators as to the distribution of the trampling and rending between dogs and swine. Do both do both, or the swine both, or the swine the trampling and the dogs the rending? The latter is the view of Theophylact, and it has been followed by some moderns, including Achelis. On this view the structure of the sentence presents an example of ἐπάνοδος or ὑστέρησις, the first verb referring to the second subject and the second verb to the first subject. The dogs—street dogs, without master, living on offal—rend, because what you have thrown to them, perhaps to propitiate them, being of uncertain temper at the best, is not to their liking; the swine trample under foot what looked like peas or acorns, but turns out to be uneatable.

Before passing from these verses (1-6) two curious opinions may be noted. (1) That ἅγιον represents an Aramaic word meaning ear-ornaments, answering to pearls. This view, once favoured by Michaelis, Bolten, Kuinoel, etc., and thereafter discredited, has been revived by Holtzmann (H. C.). (2) That ὀφθαλμός (vv. 3, 5) means, not the eye, but a village well. So Furrer. Strange, he says, that a man should need to be told by a neighbour that he has a mote in his eye, or that it should be a fault to propose to take it out! And what sense in the idea of a beam in the eye? But translate the Aramaic word used by Jesus, well, and all is clear and natural. A neighbour given to fault-finding sees a small impurity in a villager's well and tauntingly offers to remove it. Meantime his own boys, in his absence, throw a beam into his own well (Zeitsch. für M. und R. Vide also Wanderungen, p. 222).

Vv. 7-11. Admonition to prayer: presupposes deferred answer to prayer, tempting to doubt as to its utility, and consequent discontinuance of the practice. A lesson more natural at a later stage, when the disciples had a more developed religious experience. The whole subject more adequately handled in Luke xi. 1-13.—Ver. 7. Αἰτεῖτε, ζητεῖτε, κρούετε, threefold exhortation with a view to impressiveness; first literally, then twice in figurative language: seek as for an object lost, knock as at a barred door, appropriate after the parable of the neighbour in bed (Lk. xi. 5-8). The promise of answer is stated in corresponding terms.—δοθήσεται, εὑρήσετε, ἀνοιγήσεται.—Ver. 8, iteration in form ὄφιν ἐπιδώσει αὐτῷ; 11. εἰ οὖν ὑμεῖς, πονηροὶ ὄντες, [j] οἴδατε [k] δόματα ἀγαθὰ διδόναι τοῖς τέκνοις ὑμῶν, πόσῳ μᾶλλον ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς δώσει ἀγαθὰ τοῖς αἰτοῦσιν αὐτόν; 12. Πάντα οὖν ὅσα ἂν [1] θέλητε ἵνα [l] ποιῶσιν ὑμῖν οἱ ἄνθρωποι, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς [l] ποιεῖτε αὐτοῖς· οὗτος γάρ ἐστιν ὁ νόμος καὶ οἱ προφῆται.

j Lk. xii. 56. 2 Pet. 9 (vide below, also Mt. xxvii. 65).

k Lk. xi. 13. Eph. iv. 8. Phil. iv. 17.

l Ch. xviii. 35; xx. 32; xxi. 40; xxv. 40, 45. Mk. v. 19, 20. Lk. i. 49 al. (with dat. of person in all cases cited. Not usual in classics).

[1] For αν ℵC have εαν, which has been adopted by Tisch. and W.H.

of a general proposition: πᾶς γὰρ, for every one, etc.—Ver. 9, ἢ answers to a state of mind which doubts whether God gives in answer to prayer at all, or at least gives what we desire.—τίς ἐξ ὑμῶν ἄν: argument from analogy, from the human to the divine. The construction is broken. Instead of going on to say what the man of the parable will do, the sentence changes into a statement of what he will not do. Well indicated in W.H.'s text by a — after ἄρτον. The anacolouthon could be avoided by omitting the ἐστι of T. R. after τίς and μὴ before λίθον, when the sentence would stand: τίς ἐξ ὑμῶν ἄν., ὃν αἰτήσει ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ ἄρτον, λίθον ἐπιδώσει αὐτῷ. But the broken sentence, if worse grammar, is better rhetoric.—μὴ λ. ἐπιδώσει, he will not give him a stone, will he? Bread, stone; fish, serpent. Resemblance is implied, and the idea is that a father may refuse his child's request but certainly will not mock him. Grotius quotes from Plautus: "Altera manu fert lapidem, panem ostentat altera". Furrer suggests that by ὄφιν is meant not a literal serpent, but a scaleless fish, therefore prohibited to be eaten (Lev. xi. 12), serpent-like, found in the Sea of Galilee, three feet long, often caught in the nets, and of course thrown away like the dogfish of our waters.—Ver. 11, πονηροί, morally evil, a strong word, the worst fathers being taken to represent the class, the point being that hardly the worst will treat their children as described. There is no intention to teach a doctrine of depravity, or, as Chrysostom says, to calumniate human nature (οὐ διαβάλλων τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν). The evil specially in view, as required by the connection, is selfishness, a grudging spirit: "If ye then, whose own nature is rather to keep what you have than to bestow it on others, etc." (Hatch, Essays in B. Gr., p. 81).—οἴδατε διδόναι soletis dare, Maldon. Wetstein; rather, have the sense to give; with the infinitive as in Phil. iv. 12, 1 Tim. iii. 5. Perhaps we should take the phrase as an elegant expression for the simple δίδοτε. So Palairet.—δόματα, four times in N. T. for the attic δῶρον, δώρημα; δομ. ἀγαθά, gifts good not only in quality (bread not stone, etc.) but even in measure, generous, giving the children more than they ask.—πόσῳ μᾶλλον, a fortiori argument.—ὁ πατήρ, etc., the Father whose benignant nature has already been declared.—Ver. 45. ἀγαθά, good things emphatically, insignia dona, Rosenm., and only good (Jas. i. 17, an echo of this utterance). This text is classic for Christ's doctrine of the Fatherhood of God.

Ver. 12. The golden rule. οὖν here probably because in the source, cf. καὶ in quotation in Heb. i. 6. The connection must be a matter of conjecture—with ver. 11, a, "Extend your goodness from children to all," Fritzsche; with ver. 11, b, "Imitate the divine goodness," Bengel; with vii. 1-5, vv. 6-11 being an interpolation, Weiss and Holtz. (H.C.). Lk. vi. 31 places it after the precept contained in Matt. v. 42, and Wendt, in his reconstruction of the logia (L. J., i. 61), follows that clue. The thought is certainly in sympathy with the teaching of Matt. v. 38-48, and might very well be expounded in that connection. But the meaning is not dependent on connection. The sentence is a worthy close to the discourse beginning at v. 17. "Respondent ultima primis," Beng. Here as there "law and prophets".—ἵνα with subjunctive after θέλητε, instead of infinitive.—πάντα οὖν . . . ποιεῖτε αὐτοῖς. The law of nature, says Rosenmüller. Not quite. Wetstein, indeed, gives copious instances of something similar in Greek and Roman writers and Rabbinical sources, and the modern science of comparative religion enables us to multiply them. But recent commentators (including Holtz., H.C.) have remarked that, in these instances, the rule is stated in negative terms. So, e.g., in Tobit, m (with διά and gen. of way). Lk. xiii. 24. John x. 1. n Lk. xiii. 24.

13. "[m] Εἰσέλθετε διὰ τῆς [n] στενῆς πύλης· ὅτι [o] πλατεῖα ἡ πύλη,[1] καὶ [p] εὐρύχωρος ἡ ὁδὸς ἡ ἀπάγουσα εἰς τὴν ἀπώλειαν, καὶ πολλοί εἰσιν οἱ εἰσερχόμενοι δι' αὐτῆς· 14. ὅτι στενὴ ἡ πύλη,[2] καὶ [q] τεθλιμμένη ἡ ὁδὸς ἡ ἀπάγουσα εἰς τὴν ζωήν, καὶ ὀλίγοι εἰσὶν οἱ εὑρίσκοντες

o here only in N. T., several times in Sept. p here only in N. T., Sept. Ps. ciii. (iv.) 25. q here only in the sense of contracted.

[1] η πυλη is wanting in ℵ and many Fathers (Clem. Orig.), and omitted by W.H. and bracketed by Tisch. Weiss thinks it very suspicious.

[2] Some copies have τι for οτι and omit η πυλη, but the text as it stands is approved by W.H. Tisch. brackets η πυλη.

iv. 15, ὃ μισεῖς, μηδενὶ ποιήσῃς, quoted by Hillel in reply to one who asked him to teach the whole law while he stood on one leg. So also in the saying of Confucius: "Do not to others what you would not wish done to yourself," Legge, Chinese Classics, i. 191 f. The negative confines us to the region of justice; the positive takes us into the region of generosity or grace, and so embraces both law and prophets. We wish much more than we can claim—to be helped in need, encouraged in struggles, defended when misrepresented, and befriended when our back is at the wall. Christ would have us do all that in a magnanimous, benignant way; to be not merely δίκαιος but ἀγαθός.—νόμος καὶ προφῆται: perhaps to a certain extent a current phrase = all that is necessary, but, no doubt, seriously meant; therefore, may help us to understand the statement in v. 17, "I came not to destroy, but to fulfil". The golden rule was Law and Prophets only in an ideal sense, and in the same sense only was Christ a fulfiller.—Vide Wendt, L. J., ii. 341.

Vv. 13, 14. The two ways (Lk. xiii. 23-25). From this point onwards we have what commentators call the Epilogue of the sermon introduced without connecting particle, possibly no part of the teaching on the hill, placed here because that teaching was regarded as the best guide to the right way. The passage itself contains no clue to the right way except that it is the way of the few. The allegory also is obscure from its brevity. Is the gate at the beginning or end of the way, or are gate and way practically one, the way narrow because it passes through a narrow doorway? Possibly Christ's precept was simply, "enter through the narrow gate" or "door" (θύρα, Luke's word), all the rest being gloss.—πύλης, the large entrance to an edifice or city, as distinct from θύρα, a common door; perhaps chosen by Lk. because in keeping with the epithet στενῆς.—ὅτι, etc.: explanatory enlargement to unfold and enforce the precept.—ἡ ὁδὸς: two ways are contrasted, either described by its qualities and end. The "way" in the figure is a common road, but the term readily suggests a manner of life. The Christian religion is frequently called "the way" in Acts (ix. 2, xix. 9, etc.). The wrong road is characterised as πλατεῖα and εὐρύχωρος, broad and roomy, and as leading to destruction (ἀπώλειαν). The right way (and gate, ἡ πύλη, is to be retained in ver. 14, though omitted in ver. 13) is described as στενὴ καὶ τεθλιμμένη, narrow and contracted, and as leading to life.—ζωήν, a pregnant word, true life, worth living, in which men realise the end of their being—the antithesis of ἀπώλεια. The one is the way of the many, πολλοί εἰσιν οἱ εἰσερ.; the other of the few, ὀλίγοι . . . οἱ εὑρίσκοντες. Note the word "finding". The way is so narrow or so untrodden that it may easily be missed. It has to be sought for. Luke suggests the idea of difficulty in squeezing in through the very narrow door. Both points of view have their analogue in life. The practical application of this counsel requires spiritual discernment. No verbal directory will help us. Narrow? Was not Pharisaism a narrow way, and the monastic life and pietism with its severe rules for separation from the "world" in amusement, dress, etc.?

Vv. 15-20. Warning against pseudo-prophets. Again, without connecting particle and possibly not a part of the Sermon on the Mount. But the more important question here is: Does this section belong to Christ's teaching at all, or has it been introduced by the Evangelist that false teachers of after days appearing in the Church might be condemned under the authority of the Master? (Holtz., H.C.). What occasion had αὐτήν. 15. [r]Προσέχετε δὲ[1] ἀπὸ τῶν [s]ψευδοπροφητῶν, οἵτινες ἔρχονται πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐν ἐνδύμασι προβάτων, ἔσωθεν δέ εἰσι [t]λύκοι ἅρπαγες. 16. ἀπὸ τῶν καρπῶν αὐτῶν [u]ἐπιγνώσεσθε αὐτούς· μήτι [v]συλλέγουσιν ἀπὸ ἀκανθῶν σταφυλήν,[2] ἢ ἀπὸ τριβόλων σῦκα; 17. οὕτω πᾶν δένδρον ἀγαθὸν καρποὺς καλοὺς ποιεῖ[3]· τὸ δὲ [w]σαπρὸν δένδρον καρποὺς πονηροὺς ποιεῖ. 18. οὐ δύναται δένδρον ἀγαθὸν καρποὺς πονηροὺς ποιεῖν,[4] οὐδὲ δένδρον σαπρὸν καρποὺς καλοὺς ποιεῖν.[4] 19. πᾶν δένδρον μὴ ποιοῦν καρπὸν καλὸν ἐκκόπτεται καὶ

r Ch. x. 17; xvi. 6, 11. Lk. xx. 46 (all with ἀπό τινος).
s Ch. xxiv. 11, 24 al.
t Acts xx. 29 trop., so in Sept. Jer. v. 6 al.
u Ch. xi. 27.
v Ch. xiii. 28, 41 (with ἐκ).
w Ch. xii. 33; xiii. 48. Eph. iv. 29.

[1] ℵB omit δε (so W.H.).

[2] ℵBC have σταφυλας. The sing. comes from Lk. (vi. 44).

[3] B has ποιει καλους (W.H. margin).

[4] For ποιειν ℵ has ενεγκειν (Tisch. both places, W.H. 1st place).

Christ to speak of false prophets? The reference can hardly be to the Pharisees or the Rabbis. They were men of tradition, not prophetic, either in the true or in the false sense. But, apart from them, there might be another class of men in evidence in our Lord's day, who might be so characterised. It was a time of religious excitement; the force of custom broken, the deep fountains of the soul bursting forth; witness the crowds who followed John and Jesus, and the significant saying about the kingdom of heaven suffering violence (Matt. xi. 12). Such times call forth true prophets and also spurious ones, so far in religious sympathy with prevalent enthusiasms, but bent on utilising them for their own advantage in gain or influence, men of the Judas type. If such men, as is likely, existed, Jesus would have something to say about them, as about all contemporary religious phenomena.

Ver. 15. Προσέχετε ἀπὸ, take heed to and beware of.—οἵτινες, I mean, such as.—ἐν ἐνδύμασι προβάτων. Grotius, Rosenm. and Holtz. (H.C.) take this as referring to the dress worn (ἐν μηλωταῖς, Heb. xi. 37) as the usual badge of a prophet, but not without reference to the plausible manner of the wearer; deceptive and meant to deceive (Zechar. xiii. 4); gentle, innocent as sheep; speaking with "unction," and all but deceiving "the very elect". The manner more than the dress is doubtless intended. ἔσωθεν δὲ: manner and nature utterly different; within, λύκοι ἅρπαγες; greedy, sometimes for power, ambitious to be first; often for gain, money. The Didache speaks of a type of prophet whom it pithily names a χριστέμπορος (chap. xii.), a Christ-merchant. There have always been prophets of this type, "each one to his gain" (Is. lvi. 11), Evangel-merchants, traders in religious revival.—Ver. 16. ἀπὸ τ. καρπῶν. By the nature of the case difficult to detect, but discernible from their fruit. —ἐπιγνώσεσθε. Ye shall know them through and through (ἐπί) if ye study carefully the outcome of their whole way of life.

Vv. 16-20. An enlargement in parabolic fashion on the principle of testing by fruit. Ver. 16. μήτι, do they perhaps, τι suggesting doubt where there is none = men never do collect, or think of collecting, grapes from thorns or figs from thistles. And yet the idea is not absurd. There were thorns with grape-like fruit, and thistles with heads like figs (Holtz., H.C.). But in the natural sphere these resemblances never deceived; men saw at a glance how the matter stood.—Ver. 17. Another illustration from good and bad trees of the same kind. ἀγαθὸν, sound, healthy; σαπρὸν, degenerate, through age or bad soil. According to Phryn., σαπρός was popularly used instead of αἰσχρός in a moral sense (σαπράν οἱ πολλοὶ ἀντὶ τοῦ αἰσχράν, p. 377). Each tree brings forth fruit answering to its condition.—Ver. 18. οὐ δύναται, etc. Nothing else is possible or looked for in nature.—Ver. 19. Men look on this as so certain that they do not hesitate to cut down and burn a degenerate tree, as if it were possible it might bring forth good fruit next year.—μὴ ποιοῦν, if it do not, that once ascertained. Weiss thinks this verse is imported from iii. 10, and foreign to the connection.—Ver. 20. ἄραγε: final inference, a very lively and forcible composite particle, again with similar effect

x Ch. xii. 50; xxi. 31 al.
y Ch. xxiv. 36. Lk. x. 12. 2 Thess. i. 10 al.
z Mk. ix. 38. Jas. v. 10.
a John i. 20. Heb. xi. 13 (τινι τι οτι, Acts xxiv. 14).

εἰς πῦρ βάλλεται. 20. ἄραγε ἀπὸ τῶν καρπῶν αὐτῶν ἐπιγνώσεσθε αὐτούς.

21. "Οὐ πᾶς ὁ λέγων μοι, Κύριε, Κύριε, εἰσελεύσεται εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν· ἀλλ' ὁ ˣποιῶν τὸ θέλημα τοῦ πατρός μου τοῦ ἐν[1] οὐρανοῖς. 22. πολλοὶ ἐροῦσί μοι ἐν ʸἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, Κύριε, Κύριε, οὐ τῷ σῷ ὀνόματι προεφητεύσαμεν,[2] καὶ ᶻτῷ σῷ ὀνόματι δαιμόνια ἐξεβάλομεν, καὶ τῷ σῷ ὀνόματι δυνάμεις πολλὰς ἐποιήσαμεν; 23. καὶ τότε ᵃὁμολογήσω αὐτοῖς, ὅτι οὐδέποτε ἔγνων ὑμᾶς· in Matt. xvii. 26. The γε should have its full force as singling out for special attention; "at least from their fruits, if by no other means". It implies that to know the false prophet is hard. Ver. 22 explains why. He has so much to say, and show, for himself: devils cast out, souls saved, spiritual if not physical miracles done. What other or better "fruit" would you have? What in short is the test? Doctrine, good moral life? Is the false prophet necessarily a false teacher or an immoral man? Not necessarily though not unfrequently. But he is always a self-seeking man. The true prophet is Christ-like, i.e., cares supremely for truth, righteousness, humanity; not at all for himself, his pocket, his position, his life. None but such can effectively preach Christ. This repetition of the thought in ver. 16 is not for mere poetical effect, as Carr (Camb. G. T.), following Jebb (Sacred Literature, p. 195), seems to think.

[1] ℵBC have τοις before ουρανοις, which T. R., following many MSS., omits.

[2] ℵBCLZ have the augment at the beginning (επροφ.); adopted by modern editors.

Vv. 21-23. False discipleship. From false teachers the discourse naturally passes to spurious disciples. Luke's version contains the kernel of this passage (Luke vi. 46). Something of the kind was to be expected in the teaching on the hill. What more likely than that the Master, who had spoken such weighty truths, should say to His hearers: "In vain ye call me Master, unless ye do the things which I say"? As it stands here the logion has probably, as Weiss suggests (Matt. Evang., p. 219), undergone expansion and modification, so as to give to the title "Lord," originally = מרי, Teacher, the full sense it bore when applied to Christ by the Apostolic Church, and to make the warning refer to false prophets of the Apostolic age using Christ's name and authority in support of anti-Christian tendencies, such as antinomianism (ἀνομίαν, ver. 23).—Ver. 21. ὁ λέγων, ὁ ποιῶν: Of all, whether disciples or teachers, the principle holds good without exception that not saying "Lord" but doing God's will is the condition of approval and admittance into the kingdom. Saying "Lord" includes taking Jesus for Master, and listening to His teaching with appreciation and admiration; everything short of carrying out His teaching in life. In connection with such lofty thoughts as the Beatitudes, the precept to love enemies and the admonition against care, there is a great temptation to substitute sentimental or æsthetic admiration for heroic conduct.—τὸ θέλημα τοῦ πατρός μου. Christ's sense of His position as Master or Lord was free from egotism. He was simply the Son and Servant of the Father, whose will He and all who follow Him must obey; my Father here for the first time.—Ver. 22. ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, the great dread judgment day of Jehovah expected by all Jews, with more or less solemn awe; a very grave reference.—τῷ σῷ ὀνόματι: thrice repeated, the main ground of hope. Past achievements, prophesyings, exorcisms, miracles are recited; but the chief point insisted on is: all was done in Thy name, honouring Thee, as the source of wisdom and power.—Ver 23. τότε. When they make this protestation, the Judge will make a counter-protestation.—ὁμολογήσω αὐτοῖς, I will own to them. Bengel's comment is: aperte, Magna potestas hujus dicti. But there is a certain apologetic tone in the expression, "I will confess" ("profess," A.V. and R.V.), as if to say: I ought to know men who can say so much for themselves, but I do not.—ὅτι, recita-

[b] ἀποχωρεῖτε ἀπ᾽ ἐμοῦ οἱ [c] ἐργαζόμενοι τὴν [d] ἀνομίαν. 24. Πᾶς οὖν ὅστις ἀκούει μου τοὺς λόγους τούτους,[1] καὶ ποιεῖ αὐτούς, ὁμοιώσω αὐτὸν[2] ἀνδρὶ [e] φρονίμῳ, ὅστις ᾠκοδόμησε τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ[3] ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν· 25. καὶ κατέβη ἡ βροχὴ καὶ ἦλθον οἱ ποταμοὶ καὶ ἔπνευσαν οἱ ἄνεμοι, καὶ [f] προσέπεσον τῇ οἰκίᾳ ἐκείνῃ, καὶ οὐκ ἔπεσε· τεθεμελίωτο γὰρ ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν. 26. καὶ πᾶς ὁ ἀκούων μου τοὺς λόγους τούτους καὶ μὴ ποιῶν αὐτούς, ὁμοιωθήσεται ἀνδρὶ [g] μωρῷ, b Lk. ix. 39. Acts xiii. 13.

c Ch. xxvi. 10.
d Ch. xiii. 41. 1 John iii. 4.
e Ch. x. 16; xxiv. 45; xxv. 2, 4. Lk. xii. 42.
f here only in sense of beat against.
g Ch. xxii. 17, 19; xxv. 2, 8.

[1] B omits τουτους, which is bracketed by W.H. It seems needed, and may have fallen out by homœot.

[2] ℵBZ have ομοιωθησεται for ομοιωσω αυτον. So W.H.

[3] αυτου before την οικιαν in ℵBZΣ, so giving the pronoun due emphasis—his house.

tive, the exact words directly reported.—οὐδέποτε: never, at no point in that remarkable career when so many wonderful things were done in my name.—ἀποχωρεῖτε, etc.: an echo of Ps. vi. 9, and sentence of doom, like Matt. xxv. 41.

Vv. 24-27. Epilogue (Lk. vi. 47-49, which see for comparative exegesis). οὖν, ver. 24, may be taken as referring to the whole discourse, not merely to vv. 21-23 (Tholuck and Achelis). Such a sublime utterance could only be the grand finale of a considerable discourse, or series of discourses. It is a fit ending of a body of teaching of unparalleled weight, dignity, and beauty. The τούτους after λόγους (ver. 24), though omitted in B, therefore bracketed in W. H., is thoroughly appropriate. It may have fallen out through similar ending of three successive words, or have been omitted intentionally to make the statement following applicable to the whole of Christ's teaching. Its omission weakens the oratorical power of the passage. It occurs in ver. 26.

Ver. 24. Πᾶς ὅστις. Were the reading ὁμοιώσω adopted, this would be a case either of attraction πᾶς for πάντα to agree with ὅστις (Fritzsche), or of a broken construction: nominative, without a verb corresponding, for rhetorical effect. (Meyer, vide Winer, § lxiii., 2, d.)—ἀκούει, ποιεῖ: hearing and doing, both must go together; vide James i. 22-25, for a commentary on this logion. "Doing" points generally to reality, and what it means specifically depends on the nature of the saying. "Blessed are the poor in spirit"; doing in that case means being poor in spirit. To evangelic ears the word has a legal sound, but the doing Christ had in view meant the opposite of legalism and Pharisaism.—ὁμοιωθήσεται, not at the judgment day (Meyer), but, either shall be assimilated by his own action (Weiss), or the future passive to be taken as a Gerund = comparandus est (Achelis).—φρονίμῳ: perhaps the best rendering is "thoughtful". The type of man meant considers well what he is about, and carefully adopts measures suited to his purpose. The undertaking on hand is building a house—a serious business—a house not being meant for show, or for the moment, but for a lasting home. A well-selected emblem of religion.—τὴν πέτραν: the article used to denote not an individual rock, but a category—a rocky foundation.

Ver. 25. What follows shows his wisdom, justified by events which he had anticipated and provided for; not abstract possibilities, but likely to happen every year—certain to happen now and then. Therefore the prudence displayed is not exceptional, but just ordinary common sense.—καὶ: observe the five καὶ in succession—an eloquent polysyndeton, as grammarians call it; note also the rhythm of the sentence in which the war of the elements is described: down came the rain, down rushed the rivers, blew the winds; sudden, fell, terrible.—προσέπεσαν, they fell upon that house; rain on roof, river on foundation, wind on walls. And what happened? καὶ οὐκ ἔπεσεν. The elements fell on it, but it did not fall.—τεθεμελίωτο γὰρ: for a good reason, it was founded on the rock. The builder had seen to that.

Vv. 26-27. μωρῷ, Jesus seems here to offend against His own teaching, v. 22, but He speaks not in passion or contempt, but in deep sadness, and with humane intent to prevent such folly.

h Lk ii. 34. Cf. Rom. xi. 11.
i Ch. xxii. 33. Mk. i. 22; xi. 18. Lk. iv. 32 (all in ref. to Christ's doctrine).
j Mk. i. 23.

ὅστις ᾠκοδόμησε τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ[1] ἐπὶ τὴν ἄμμον· 27. καὶ κατέβη ἡ βροχὴ καὶ ἦλθον οἱ ποταμοὶ καὶ ἔπνευσαν οἱ ἄνεμοι, καὶ προσέκοψαν[2] τῇ οἰκίᾳ ἐκείνῃ, καὶ ἔπεσε· καὶ ἦν ἡ [h]πτῶσις αὐτῆς μεγάλη." 28. Καὶ ἐγένετο ὅτε συνετέλεσεν[3] ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοὺς λόγους τούτους, [i]ἐξεπλήσσοντο οἱ ὄχλοι ἐπὶ τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ· 29. ἦν γὰρ διδάσκων αὐτοὺς ὡς [j]ἐξουσίαν ἔχων, καὶ οὐχ ὡς οἱ γραμματεῖς.[4]

[1] αυτου before την οικιαν in ℵBZΣ as in ver. 24.

[2] Some copies have προσερρηξαν.

[3] ετελεσεν in ℵBCZΣ.

[4] After γραμματεις ℵBΔΣ have αυτων (W.H. and other editors). Some copies add και οι φαρισαιοι (W.H. margin).

Wherein lay the second builder's folly? Not in deliberately selecting a bad foundation, but in taking no thought of foundation; in beginning to build at haphazard and anywhere; on loose sand (ἄμμος) near the bed of a mountain torrent. His fault was not an error in judgment, but inconsiderateness. It is not, as is commonly supposed, a question of two foundations, but of looking to, and neglecting to look to, the foundation. In the natural sphere no man in his senses commits such a mistake. But utterly improbable cases have to be supposed in parables to illustrate human folly in religion.—Ver. 27. καὶ . . . ἄνεμοι: exactly the same phrases as in ver. 25, to describe the oncome of the storm.—προσέκοψαν: a different word for the assault on the house—struck upon it with immediate fatal effect. It was not built to stand such rough handling. The builder had not thought of such an eventuality.—ἔπεσεν, καὶ ἦν ἡ πτῶσις αὐτῆς μεγάλη: not necessarily implying that it was a large building, or that the disaster was of large dimensions, like the collapse of a great castle, but that the ruin was complete. The fool's house went down like a house of cards, not one stone or brick left on another.

Allegorising interpretation of the rain, rivers and winds, and of the foundations, is to be avoided, but it is pertinent to ask, what defects of character in the sphere of religion are pointed at in this impressive parabolic logion? What kind of religion is it that deserves to be so characterised? The foolish type is a religion of imitation and without forethought. Children play at building houses, because they have seen their seniors doing it. There are people who play at religion, not realising what religion is for, but following fashion, doing as others do, and to be seen of others (Matt. vi. 1). Children build houses on the sea sand below high-tide mark, not thinking of the tide which will in a few hours roll in and sweep away their houselet. There are men who have religion for to-day, and think not of the trial to-morrow may bring.

Ver. 28. Concluding statement as to the impression made by the discourse. A similar statement occurs in Mk. i. 22, 27, whence it may have been transferred by Matthew. It may be assumed that so unique a teacher as Jesus made a profound impression the very first time He spoke in public, and that the people would express their feelings of surprise and admiration at once. The words Mark puts into the mouth of the audience in the synagogue of Capernaum are to the life (vide comments there). They saw, and said that Christ's way of speaking was new, not like that of the scribes to which they had been accustomed. Both evangelists make the point of difference consist in "authority".

Ver. 29. ὡς ἐξουσίαν ἔχων: Fritzsche supplies, after ἔχων, τοῦ διδάσκειν, and renders, He taught as one having a right to teach, because He could do it well, "scite et perite," a master of the art. The thought lies deeper. It is an ethical, not an artistic or æsthetical contrast that is intended. The scribes spake by authority, resting all they said on traditions of what had been said before. Jesus spake with authority, out of His own soul, with direct intuition of truth; and, therefore, to the answering soul of His hearers. The people could not quite explain the difference, but that was what they obscurely felt.

CHAPTERS VIII., IX. THE HEALING MINISTRY OF JESUS. These two chapters consist mainly of miracle narratives, VIII. 1. ΚΑΤΑΒΑΝΤΙ δὲ αὐτῷ[1] ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄρους, ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ ὄχλοι πολλοί· 2. καὶ ἰδού, [a]λεπρὸς ἐλθὼν[2] προσεκύνει αὐτῷ, λέγων, "Κύριε, ἐὰν θέλῃς, δύνασαί με [b]καθαρίσαι." 3. Καὶ [c]ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα, ἥψατο αὐτοῦ ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[3] λέγων, "Θέλω, καθαρίσθητι." Καὶ a Ch. x. 8; xi. 5; xxvi. 6. Lk. iv. 27; xvii. 12.

b Ch. x. 8; xi. 5. Lk. iv. 27; xvii. 14, 17.
c with τὴν χεῖρα often in Sept. and frequently in the Gospels (Ch. xii. 13, 49, etc.).

[1] For καταβαντι δε αυτω (the reading of ℵ al. adopted by Tisch.) ℵ[b]BC have καταβαντος δε αυτου. Z has the gen. also (και κατ. αυ.). The dative is a grammatical "improvement".

[2] For ελθων (in CKL, etc.) ℵBΔΣ have προσελθων. The προς has probably fallen out through homœot. (λεπρος).

[3] ℵBCZ omit ο Ιησους, which T. R. often introduces.

the greater number being reports of healing acts performed by Jesus, nine in all, being the second part of the programme sketched in chap. iv. 23-25. These wonderful works are not to be regarded, after the manner of the older apologists, as evidential signs appended to the teaching on the hill to invest it with authority. That teaching needed no external credentials; it spoke for itself then as now. These histories are an integral part of the self-revelation of Jesus by word and deed; they are demonstrations not merely of His power, but above all, of His Spirit. Therein lies their chief permanent interest, which is entirely independent of all disputes as to the strictly miraculous character of the events. This collection is not arranged in chronological order. The connection is topical, not temporal.

CHAPTER VIII. 1-4. The leper (Mk. i. 40-45; Lk. v. 12-16). This is the first individual act of healing reported in this Gospel, chap. iv. 23-24 containing only a general notice. It is a very remarkable one. No theory of moral therapeutics will avail here to eliminate the miraculous element. Leprosy is not a disease of the nerves, amenable to emotional treatment, but of the skin and the flesh, covering the body with unsightly sores. The story occurs in all three Synoptics, and, as belonging to the triple tradition, is one of the best attested. Matthew's version is the shortest and simplest here as often, his concern being rather to report the main fact and what Christ said, than to give pictorial details. Possibly he gives it as he found it in the Apostolic Document both in form and in position, immediately after Sermon on Mount, so placed, conceivably, to illustrate Christ's respectful attitude towards the law as stated in v. 17 (cf. viii. 4 and vide Weiss, Matt. Evan., p. 227).

Ver. 1. καταβάντος αὐτοῦ (for the reading vide above). Jesus descended from the hill towards Capernaum (ver. 5), but we must beware of supposing that the immediately following events all happened there, or at any one place or time. Mark seems to connect the cure of the leper with the preaching tour in Galilee (i. 40), and that of the palsied man with Christ's return therefrom (ii. 1). Jesus had ascended the hill to escape the pressure of human need. He descends, in Matt.'s narrative, to encounter it again—ἠκολούθησαν, large crowds gather about and follow Him.—ἰδού, the sign mark of the Apostolic Document according to Weiss; its lively formula for introducing a narrative.—προσεκύνει, prostrated himself to the ground, in the abject manner of salutation suitable from an inferior to one deemed much superior, and also to one who had a great favour to ask.—Κύριε: not implying in the leper a higher idea than that of Master or Rabbi.—ἐὰν θέλῃς: the leper's doubt is not about the power, for he probably knows what marvellous things have been happening of late in and around Capernaum, but about the will, a doubt natural in one suffering from a loathsome disease. Besides, men more easily believe in miraculous power than in miraculous love. θέλῃς, present subjunctive, not aorist, which would express something that might happen at a future time (vide Winer, § xlii., 2, b).—καθαρίσαι—of course the man means to cleanse by healing, not merely to pronounce clean. This has an important bearing on the meaning of the word in next ver.—ἥψατο, touched him, not to show that He was not under the law, and that to the pure nothing is unclean (Chrys., Hom. xxv.), but to evince His willingness and sympathy. The stretching out of the hand does not mean that, in touching, He might be as far off as d here and in parall. e Ch. xviii. 10. Heb. viii. 5. f Ch. x. 18; xxiv. 14. Heb. iii. 5. g ver. 14; ix. 2. Mk. vii. 30. h Lk. xi. 53.

εὐθέως ἐκαθαρίσθη [1] αὐτοῦ ἡ [d] λέπρα. 4. καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "[e] Ὅρα μηδενὶ εἴπῃς· ἀλλ' ὕπαγε, σεαυτὸν δεῖξον τῷ ἱερεῖ, καὶ προσένεγκε [2] τὸ δῶρον ὃ προσέταξε Μωσῆς, [f] εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς." 5. Εἰσελθόντι δὲ τῷ Ἰησοῦ [3] εἰς Καπερναούμ, προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ ἑκατόνταρχος παρακαλῶν αὐτόν, 6. καὶ λέγων, "Κύριε, ὁ παῖς μου [g] βέβληται ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ παραλυτικός, [h] δεινῶς βασανιζόμενος."

[1] BZXΣ have the less correct, but none the less likely, εκαθεριcθη.

[2] BC have προσενεγκον. ℵ as in T. R.

[3] The dative is here also a correction. ℵBCZ have the gen. as in ver. 1.

possible to avoid defilement and infection (Weiss-Meyer). It was action suited to the word.—θέλω, "I will" pronounced in firm, cordial tone, carefully recorded by all the evangelists. καθαρίσθητι, naturally in the sense of the man's request. But that would imply a real miracle, therefore naturalistic interpreters, like Paulus and Keim, are forced to take the word in the sense of pronouncing clean, the mere opinion of a shrewd observer. The narrative of Matthew barely leaves room for this hypothesis. The other evangelists so express themselves as to exclude it.—ἐκαθαρίσθη: forthwith the leprosy disappeared as if by magic. The man was and looked perfectly well.

Ver. 4. ὅρα, see to it! Look you!—imperative in mood and tone (vide Mark's graphic account). Christ feared the man would be content with being well without being officially pronounced clean—physically healed, though not socially restored. Hence μηδενὶ εἴπῃς, ἀλλ' ὕπαγε, etc.: speak of it to nobody, but go at once and show thyself (δεῖξον), τῷ ἱερεῖ, to the priest who has charge of such matters. What was the purpose of this order? Many good commentators, including Grot., Beng. and Wetstein, say it was to prevent the priests hearing of the cure before the man came (lingering on the road to tell his tale), and, in spite, declaring that he was not clean. The truth is, Jesus desired the benefit to be complete, socially, which depended on the priest, as well as physically. If the man did not go at once, he would not go at all.—τὸ δῶρον, vide Lev. xiv. 10, 21; all things to be done according to the law; no laxity encouraged, though the official religion was little worthy of respect (cf. Matt. v. 19).—εἰς μαρτύριον, as a certificate to the public (αὐτοῖς) from the constituted authority that the leper was clean. The direction shows Christ's confidence in the reality of the cure. The whole story is a picture of character. The touch reveals sympathy; the accompanying word, "I will, be clean," prompt, cordial, laconic, immense energy and vitality; the final order, reverence for existing institutions, fearlessness, humane solicitude for the sufferer's future well-being in every sense.

Vv. 5-13. The centurion's son or servant (Lk. vii. 1-10). Placed by both Matthew and Luke after Sermon on Mount, by the latter immediately after.—Ver. 5. εἰσελθόντος, aorist participle with another finite verb, pointing to a completed action. He had entered Capernaum when the following event happened. Observe the genitive absolute again with a dative of the same subject, αὐτῷ, following προσῆλθεν. ἑκατόνταρχος, a Gentile (ver. 10), probably an officer in the army of Herod Antipas.—Ver. 6. Κύριε again, not necessarily expressing any advanced idea of Christ's person.—παῖς may mean either son or servant. Luke has δοῦλος, and from the harmonistic point of view this settles the matter. But many, including Bleek and Weiss (Meyer), insist that παῖς here means son.—βέβληται, perf. pointing to a chronic condition; bed-ridden in the house, therefore not with the centurion.—παραλυτικός, a disease of the nerves, therefore emotional treatment might be thought of, had the son only been present. But he could not even be brought on a stretcher as in another case (Matt. ix. 1) because not only παραλ., but δεινῶς βασανιζόμενος, not an ordinary feature of paralysis.—Ver. 7. This is generally taken as an offer on Christ's part to go to the house. Fritzsche finds in it a question, arranging the words (T. R.) thus: καί, λέγει α. ὁ. Ι., Ἐγὼ ἐλθὼν θεραπεύσω αὐτόν; and rendering: "And," saith Jesus to him, "shall I go and heal him?" = is that i with ἵνα here and in Lk. vii. 6; vide at Mt. iii. 11.

7. Καὶ[1] λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[2] "Ἐγὼ ἐλθὼν θεραπεύσω αὐτόν." 8. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς[3] ὁ ἑκατόνταρχος ἔφη, "Κύριε, οὐκ εἰμὶ [i]ἱκανὸς ἵνα μου ὑπὸ τὴν στέγην εἰσέλθῃς· ἀλλὰ μόνον εἰπὲ λόγον,[4] καὶ ἰαθήσεται ὁ παῖς μου. 9. καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπός εἰμι [j]ὑπὸ ἐξουσίαν,[5] ἔχων ὑπ' ἐμαυτὸν στρατιώτας· καὶ λέγω τούτῳ, Πορεύθητι, καὶ πορεύεται· καὶ ἄλλῳ, Ἔρχου, καὶ ἔρχεται· καὶ τῷ δούλῳ μου, Ποίησον τοῦτο, καὶ ποιεῖ." 10. Ἀκούσας δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐθαύμασε, καὶ εἶπε τοῖς ἀκολουθοῦσιν, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐδὲ ἐν τῷ Ἰσραὴλ

j Lk. vii. 8.

[1] B and many vers. (including Syr. Cur.) omit the και, so giving an expressive asyndeton.

[2] ℵB omit ο Ιησους.

[3] αποκριθεις δε in ℵB 33.

[4] ℵBC have λογῳ, adopted by both Tisch. and W.H.

[5] ℵB al. add τασσομενος, adopted within brackets by W.H. "Manifestly out of Lk.," Weiss in Meyer.

what you wish? The following verse then contains the centurion's reply. This is, to say the least, ingenious.—Ver. 8, ἱκανὸς, the Baptist's word, chap. iii. 11, but the construction different in the two places, there with infinitive, here with ἵνα: I am not fit in order that. This is an instance illustrating the extension of the use of ἵνα in later Greek, which culminated in its superseding the infinitive altogether in modern Greek. On the N. T. use of ἵνα, vide Burton, M. and T., §§ 191-222. Was it because he was a Gentile by birth, and also perhaps a heathen in religion, that he had this feeling of unworthiness, or was it a purely personal trait? If he was not only a Gentile but a Pagan, Christ's readiness to go to the house would stand in remarkable contrast to His conduct in the case of the Syro-Phenician woman. But vide Lk. vii. 5.—εἰπὲ λόγῳ, speak (and heal) with a word. A bare word just where they stand, he thinks, will suffice.—Ver. 9, καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ: he argues from his own experience not with an air of self-importance, on the contrary making light of his position as a commander.—ὑπὸ ἐξουσίαν, spoken in modesty. He means: I also, though a very humble person in the army, under the authority of more important officers, still have a command over a body of men who do implicitly as I bid them. Fritzsche rightly suggests that ἄνθρωπος ὑπὸ ἐξουσίαν does not express a single idea = "a man under authority". He represents himself as a man with authority, though in a modest way. A comma might with advantage be placed after εἰμι. The centurion thinks Jesus can order about disease as he orders his soldiers—say to fever, palsy, leprosy, go, and it will go. His soldiers go, his slaves do (Carr, C. G. T.).

Ver. 10. In ver. 13 we are told that Jesus did not disappoint the centurion's expectation. But the interest of the cure is eclipsed for the evangelist by the interest of the Healer's admiration, certainly a remarkable instance of a noteworthy characteristic of Jesus: His delight in signal manifestations of faith. Faith, His great watchword, as it was St. Paul's. This value set on faith was not a mere idiosyncrasy, but the result of insight into its nobleness and spiritual virtue.—καὶ εἶπε: Christ did not conceal His admiration; or His sadness when He reflected that such faith as this Gentile had shown was a rare thing in Israel.—Ἀμὴν: He speaks solemnly, not without emotion.—παρ' οὐδενὶ: This is more significant than the reading of T. R., assimilated to Lk. vii. 9. The οὐδὲ implies that Israel was the home of faith, and conveys the meaning not even there. But παρ' οὐδενὶ means not even in a single instance, and implies that faith in notable degree is at a discount among the elect people. Such a sentiment at so early a period is noteworthy as showing how far Jesus was from cherishing extravagant hopes of setting up a theocratic kingdom of righteousness and godliness in Israel.

Vv. 11-12. This logion is given by Luke (xiii. 28-29) in a different connection, and it may not be in its historical k Ch. xvi. 19, parall. Lk. xiii. 29 (parall. to this text). l Ch. xxii. 13; xxv. 30 (same phrase). m Ch. xiii. 42, 50; xxv. 30 (same phrase). n parall. John iv. 52. Acts xxviii. 8.

τοσαύτην πίστιν[1] εὗρον. 11. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι πολλοὶ ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν καὶ δυσμῶν ἥξουσι, καὶ [k]ἀνακλιθήσονται μετὰ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακὼβ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν· 12. οἱ δὲ υἱοὶ τῆς βασιλείας ἐκβληθήσονται εἰς [l]τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον· ἐκεῖ ἔσται [m]ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων." 13. Καὶ εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τῷ ἑκατοντάρχῳ, "Ὕπαγε, καὶ[2] ὡς ἐπίστευσας γενηθήτω σοι." Καὶ ἰάθη ὁ παῖς αὐτοῦ[3] ἐν τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐκείνῃ.[4]

14. Καὶ ἐλθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν Πέτρου, εἶδε τὴν πενθερὰν αὐτοῦ βεβλημένην καὶ πυρέσσουσαν, 15. καὶ ἥψατο τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῆς, καὶ ἀφῆκεν αὐτὴν ὁ [n]πυρετός· καὶ ἠγέρθη, καὶ διηκόνει

[1] Authorities are much divided between the reading ουδε εν τω I. . . . ευρον (T. R.), which is found in ℵCLΔΣ al. (Tisch.), and παρ ουδενι τοσαυτην πιστιν εν τω I. ευρον, found in B, old Latin verss., Syr. Cur., Egypt. verss., and several cursives (W.H.). The former has probably come in from Lk. vii. 9.

[2] ℵB omit και. Vide below.

[3] ℵB omit αυτου, also superfluous.

[4] απο της ωρας εκεινης in CΔΣ.

place here. But its import is in thorough harmony with the preceding reflection on the spiritual state of Israel. One who said the one thing was prepared to say the other. At whatever time said it would give offence. It is one of the heavy burdens of the prophet that he cannot be a mere patriot, or say complimentary things about his nation or his Church. ἀνακλιθήσονται: Jesus expresses Himself here and throughout this logion in the language of His time and people. The feast with the patriarchs, the outer darkness, the weeping and the gnashing of teeth (observe the article before σκότος, κλαυθμὸς, βρυγμὸς, implying that all are familiar ideas) are stock phrases. The imagery is Jewish, but the thought is anti-Jewish, universalistic, of perennial truth and value.

Ver. 13. ὕπαγε, etc.: compressed impassioned utterance, spoken under emotion = Go, as thou hast believed be it to thee; cure as thorough as thy faith. The καὶ before ὡς in T. R. is the addition of prosaic scribes. Men speaking under emotion discard expletives.

Weizsäcker (Untersuchungen über die Evang. Gesch., p. 50) remarks on the felicitous juxtaposition of these two narratives relatively to one another and to the Sermon on Mount. "In the first Jesus has to do with a Jew, and demands of him observance of the law. In this respect the second serves as a companion piece, the subject of healing being a heathen, giving occasion for a word as to the position of heathens. The two combined are happily appended to a discourse in which Jesus states His attitude to the law, forming as complements of each other a commentary on the statement."

Vv. 14-15. Cure of a fever: Peter's mother-in-law (Mark i. 29-31; Luke iv. 38, 39). This happened much earlier, at the beginning of the Galilean ministry, the second miracle-history in Mark and Luke. Mark at this point becomes Matthew's guide, though he does not follow implicitly. Each evangelist has characteristic features, the story of the second being the original.—Ver. 14. ἐλθὼν, coming from the synagogue on a Sabbath day (Mark i. 29) with fellow-worshippers not here named. The story here loses its flesh and blood, and is cut down to the essential fact.—εἰς τ. ο. Πέτρου: Peter has a house and is married, and already he receives his disciple name (Simon in Mark).—πενθερὰν. It is Peter's mother-in-law that is ill.—βεβλημένην καὶ πυρέσσουσαν, lying in bed, fevered. Had she taken ill since they left to attend worship, with the suddenness of feverish attacks in a tropical climate? βεβλημένην is against this, as it naturally suggests an illness of some duration; but on the other hand, if she had been ill for some time, why should they need to tell Jesus after coming back from the synagogue? (Mark i. 30). πυρέσσ. does not necessarily αὐτοῖς.[1] 16. [o] Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης προσήνεγκαν αὐτῷ δαιμονιζομένους πολλούς· καὶ ἐξέβαλε τὰ πνεύματα λόγῳ, καὶ πάντας τοὺς κακῶς ἔχοντας ἐθεράπευσεν· 17. ὅπως πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 'Αὐτὸς τὰς [p] ἀσθενείας ἡμῶν ἔλαβε, καὶ τὰς νόσους ἐβάστασεν.'

18. Ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς πολλοὺς ὄχλους[2] περὶ αὐτόν, ἐκέλευσεν ἀπελθεῖν [q] εἰς τὸ [q] πέραν. 19. καὶ προσελθὼν εἷς γραμματεὺς εἶπεν o same phrase. Ch. xiv. 15, 23; xxvii. 57, and in Mk. and John.

p Lk. v. 15; viii. 2. Acts xxviii. 9. 1 Tim. v. 23.
q phr. freq. in Mt. and Mk. (ver. 28, Ch. xiv. 22. Mk. iv. 35 al.).

[1] αυτω in ℵBCΣ al. αυτοις (in LΔ) has come in from parall.

[2] B has οχλον; ℵ οχλους, which once introduced was enlarged into πολλους οχλους (ℵ^c CLΔΣ al.), not a usual expression in Mt.

imply a serious attack, but vide Luke iv. 38.—Ver. 15. ἥψατο. He touched her hand; here to cure, in Mark to raise her up.—ἠγέρθη, διηκόνει: she rose up at once and continued to serve at the meal; all present but Jesus only referred to here (αὐτῳ, plural in Mark, but inappropriate here). Not only the fever but the weakness it causes left her. "Ordinarily a long time is required for recovery, but then all things happened at once" (Chryst., Hom. xxvii.). Not a great miracle or interesting for anything said; but it happened at an early time and in the disciple circle; Peter the informant; and it showed Christ's sympathy (ver. 17).

Vv. 16-17. Events of that Sabbath evening (Mark i. 32-34; Luke iv. 40, 41). A general statement, which, after iv. 23 f., might have been dispensed with; but it is in the source (Mark) in the same context, and it gives our evangelist a welcome opportunity of quoting a prophetic text in reference to Christ's healing work. Ver. 16. Ὀψίας γενομένης: vague indication of time on any day, but especially a Sabbath day. There were two evenings, an early and a late (Ex. xxx. 8). Which of them was it; before or after sunset? Mark is more exact.—δαιμον. πολλούς: why a crowd just then, and why especially demoniacs brought to be healed? For explanation we must go to Mark. The preaching of Jesus in the synagogue that Sabbath day, and the cure of a demoniac (Mark i. 21-28), had created a great sensation, and the result is a crowd gathered at the door of Peter's house at sunset, when the Sabbath ended, witb their sick, especially with demoniacs.—Ver. 17. Prophetic citation, apposite, felicitous; setting Christ's healing ministry in a true light; giving prominence not to the thaumaturgic but to the sympathetic aspect; from the Hebrew original, the Sept. making the text (Is. liii. 4) refer to sin. The Hebrew refers to sicknesses and pains. It is useless to discuss the precise meaning of ἔλαβεν and ἐβάστασεν: took and bore, or took and bore away; subjective or objective? The evangelist would note, not merely that Jesus actually did remove diseases, but that He was minded to do so; such was His bent.

Vv. 18-34. Excursion to the eastern shore with its incidents (Mark iv. 35—v. 20; Luke viii. 22-39). These narratives make a large leap forward in the history. As our evangelist is giving a collection of healing incidents, the introduction of vv. 18-22, disciple interviews, and even of vv. 23-27, a nature miracle, needs an explanation. The readiest is that he found these associated with the Gadara incident, his main concern, in his source or sources, the whole group in the Apostolic Document (so Weiss). Besides, as the evangelist did not apparently make himself the slave of his plan, it was natural to give together incidents that possibly (?) happened on the same eventful journey, though Luke (ix. 57-62) gives the disciple interviews in a different connection.

Ver. 18. Ἰδὼν . . . περὶ αὐτόν. The evangelist makes a desire to escape from the crowd the motive of the journey. This desire is still more apparent in Mark, but the crowd and the time are different. The multitude from which Jesus escapes, in Mark's narrative, is that gathered on the shore to hear the parable-discourse from a boat on the lake.—ἐκέλευσεν ἀπελθεῖν. Grotius thinks this elliptical for: ἐκέλευσε πάντα ἑτοιμάσαι εἰς τὸ ἀπ. Beza renders: indixit profectionem = He ordered departure. τοὺς μαθητάς is understood, not menr Lk. ix. 58; xii. 32.

s Lk. ix. 58.
t Lk. ix. 58.
u Ch. xix. 8. Lk. viii. 32 (with inf.). 1 Cor. xvi. 7. Heb. vi. 3 (absol.).
v Ch. xiv. 12. Lk. ix. 59; xvi. 22.

αὐτῷ, "Διδάσκαλε, ἀκολουθήσω σοι, ὅπου ἐὰν ἀπέρχῃ." 20. Καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Αἱ ʳ ἀλώπεκες ˢ φωλεοὺς ἔχουσι, καὶ τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ᵗ κατασκηνώσεις· ὁ δὲ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἔχει, ποῦ τὴν κεφαλὴν κλίνῃ." 21. Ἕτερος δὲ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ[1] εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Κύριε, ᵘ ἐπίτρεψόν μοι πρῶτον ἀπελθεῖν καὶ ᵛ θάψαι τὸν πατέρα μου." 22. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[2] εἶπεν[3] αὐτῷ, "Ἀκολούθει μοι, tioned because they alone could be meant.—Ver. 19, εἷς, either "one, a scribe" (Weiss and very decidedly Meyer, who says that εἷς never in N. T. = τὶς), or "a certain scribe," indefinite reference, so Fritzsche, falling back on Suicer, I., p. 1037, and more recently Bleek and others. Vide Winer, § xviii. 9, who defends the use of εἷς for τὶς as a feature of later Greek.—γραμματεὺς, a scribe! even one of that most unimpressionable class, in spirit and tendency utterly opposed to the ways of Jesus. A Saul among the prophets. He has actually become warmed up to something like enthusiasm. A striking tribute to the magnetic influence of Jesus.—ἀκολουθήσω: already more or less of a disciple—perhaps he had been present during the teaching on the hill—he proposes now to become a constant attendant, and to begin at once, going on this journey with the companions of Jesus, now grown to a larger group than the four (Matt. iv. 18 f.). Quite honestly meant, but—ver. 20, λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰ. Jesus distrusted the class, and the man, who might be better than the average, still he was a scribe. Christ's feeling was not an unreasoning or invincible prejudice, but a strong suspicion and aversion justified by insight and experience. Therefore He purposely paints the prospect in sombre colours to prevent a connection which could come to no good.—αἱ ἀλώπεκες, etc.: a notable saying; one of the outstanding logia of Jesus, in style and spirit characteristic; not querulous, as if lamenting His lot, but highly coloured to repel an undesirable follower. Foxes have holes, and birds resting places, roosts (not nests, which are used only for breeding), but—ὁ δὲ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου: a remarkable designation occurring here for the first time. It means much for the Speaker, who has chosen it deliberately, in connection with private reflections, at whose nature we can only guess, by study of the many occasions on which the name is used. Here it seems to mean the man simpliciter (son of man = man in Hebrew or Syriac), the unprivileged Man: not only no exception to the rule of ordinary human experience in the way of being better off, but rather an exception in the way of being worse off; for the rule is, that all living creatures, even beasts, and still more men, have their abodes, however humble. If it be Messianic, it is in a hidden enigmatical way. The whole speech is studiously enigmatical, and calculated to chill the scribe's enthusiasm. Was Jesus speaking in parables here, and hinting at something beyond the literal privations of His life as a wanderer with no fixed home? The scribe had his spiritual home in Rabbinical traditions, and would not be at ease in the company of One who had broken with them. Jesus had no place where He could lay His head in the religion of His time (vide my With Open Face, chap. ix.).

[1] ℵB omit αυτου, which here as often elsewhere occurs in T. R., where it is not required.

[2] On the authority of ℵ, Tisch. omits ο Ιησους found in BCLΔ al.

[3] λεγει in ℵBC.

Vv. 21-22. Another disciple. Ἕτερος, another, not only numerically (ἄλλος), but in type. The first was enthusiastic; this one is hesitating, and needs to be urged; a better, more reliable man, though contrasting with his neighbour unfavourably.—τῶν μαθητῶν: the expression seems to imply that the scribe was, or in spite of the repellent word of Jesus, had become, a regular disciple. That is possible. If the scribe insisted, Jesus would suffer him to become a disciple, as He did Judas, whom doubtless He instinctively saw through from the beginning. But not likely. The inference may be avoided by rendering with Bleek: "another, one of the disciples".—

καὶ ἄφες τοὺς νεκροὺς θάψαι τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νεκρούς." 23. Καὶ ἐμβάντι αὐτῷ εἰς τὸ[1] πλοῖον, ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ. 24. καὶ ἰδού, [w] σεισμὸς μέγας ἐγένετο ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, ὥστε τὸ πλοῖον [x] καλύπτεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν κυμάτων· αὐτὸς δὲ ἐκάθευδε. 25. καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ[2] ἤγειραν αὐτόν, λέγοντες, w here only = tempest. Ch. xxiv. 7; xxvii. 54 al. (earthquake).

x Lk. viii. 16 (τί τινι). Ch. x. 26. 2 Cor. iv. 3 (vide from knowledge).

[1] το omitted in ℵ[b]BC 33.

[2] οι μαθηται αυτου wanting in ℵB; added for clearness, but not needed.

ἐπίτρεψόν μοι: he wished, before setting out from Capernaum, on the journey to the eastern side of the lake, to attend to an urgent domestic duty; in fact to bury his father. In that climate burial had to take place on the day of death. Permission would have involved very little delay of the voyage, unless, with Chrysostom, we include under θάψαι all that goes along with death and burial, arranging family affairs, distribution of inheritance, etc. There would not probably be much trouble of that sort in the case of one belonging to the Jesus-circle.—Ver. 22, Ἀκολούθει μοι: the reply is a stern refusal, and the reason apparently hard and unfeeling—ἄφες τοὺς νεκροὺς . . . νεκρούς: word for word the same in Luke (ix. 60), an unforgettable, mystic, hard saying. The dead must be taken in two senses = let the spiritually dead, not yet alive to the claims of the kingdom, bury the naturally dead. Fritzsche objects, and finds in the saying the paradox: "let the dead bury each other the best way they can," which, as Weiss says, is not a paradox, but nonsense. Another eccentric idea of some commentators is that the first νεκροὺς refers to the vespillones, the corpse-bearers who carried out the bodies of the poor at night, in Hebrew phrase, the men of the dead. Take it as we will, it seems a hard, heartless saying, difficult to reconcile with Christ's denunciation of the Corban casuistry, by which humanity and filial piety were sacrificed on the altar of religion (Matt. xv. 3-6). But, doubtless, Jesus knew to whom He was speaking. The saying can be understood and justified; but it can also very easily be misunderstood and abused, and woe to the man who does so. From these two examples we see that Jesus had a startling way of speaking, which would create reflection, and also give rise to remark. Vide on Lk. ix. 57-62, where three cases are given, the above two included.

Vv. 23-27. Storm on the lake (Mk. iv. 35-41, Lk. viii. 22-25). Ver. 23. ἐμβάντι αὐτῷ might be called a dative absolute; if taken as dative after ἠκολούθησαν, the αὐτῷ after this verb is superfluous. This short sentence is overcharged with pronouns (αὐτοῦ after μαθηταί).—τὸ πλοῖον (τὸ omitted in Lk.), the ship in readiness in accordance with previous instructions (ver. 18). Ver. 24, ἰδοὺ indicates sudden oncome.—σεισμὸς ἐν τ. θ., literally an earthquake of the sea, the waters stirred to their depths by the winds referred to in vv. 26, 27; λαῖλαψ in Mark and Luke = hurricane.—ὥστε, here with infinitive, used also with finite moods (e.g., Gal. ii. 13). In the one case ὥστε indicates aim or tendency, in the other it asserts actual result (vide Goodwin, p. 221, also Baümlein, Schulgrammatik, §§ 593, 594). Klotz, Devar., ii. p. 772, gives as the equivalent of ὥστε, with infinitive, ita ut; with indicative, itaque or quare.—καλύπτεσθαι, was covered, hidden, the waves rising high above the boat, breaking on it, and gradually filling it with water (cf. Mark and Luke).—αὐτὸς δὲ ἐκάθευδεν: dramatic contrast = but He was sleeping (imperfect), the storm notwithstanding. Like a general in time of war Jesus slept when He could. He had fallen asleep before the storm came on, probably shortly after they had started (Lk. viii. 23, πλεόντων αὐτῶν ἀφύπνωσεν: while they sailed He went off to sleep), soothed by the gliding motion. It was the sleep of one worn by an intense life, involving constant strain on body and mind. The mental tension is apparent in the words spoken to the two disciples (vv. 20-22). Words like these are not spoken in cold blood, or without waste of nervous power. Richard Baxter describes Cromwell as "of such vivacity, hilarity, and alacrity as another man hath when he hath drunken a cup too much" (Reliquiae Baxt.). "Drunken, but not with wine," with a great epoch-making enthusiasm. The storm did not wake the sleeper. A tempest, the sublime

y Mk. iv. 40. Rev. xxi. 8. z here and parall. of the wind and sea (Ps. cv. 8). a here and parall. b Mk. xiii. 1. Lk. i. 29; vii. 39. 1 John iii. 1.

"Κύριε, σῶσον ἡμᾶς,[1] ἀπολλύμεθα." 26. Καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Τί [y] δειλοί ἐστε, ὀλιγόπιστοι;" Τότε ἐγερθεὶς [z] ἐπετίμησε τοῖς ἀνέμοις καὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ, καὶ ἐγένετο [a] γαλήνη μεγάλη. 27. οἱ δὲ ἄνθρωποι ἐθαύμασαν, λέγοντες, "[b] Ποταπός ἐστιν οὗτος, ὅτι καὶ οἱ ἄνεμοι καὶ ἡ θάλασσα ὑπακούουσιν αὐτῷ;"[2]

[1] ημας, another addition for clearness, wanting in ℵB; more expressive without.

[2] ℵB transpose υπακ. αυτω (so Tisch., W.H.).

in nature, is a lullaby to a great spirit. The Fathers viewed the sleep and the storm theologically, both arranged for beforehand, to give time for cowardice to show itself (Chrys., Hom. xxviii.), to let the disciples know their weakness and to accustom them to trials (Theophyl.). A docetic Christ, an unreal man, a theatrical affair!—Ver. 25. προσελθόντες: one of our evangelist's favourite words.—ἤγειραν: they would not have waked Him if they could have helped it. They were genuinely terrified, though experienced sailors accustomed to rough weather.—Κύριε, σῶσον . . . ἀπολλύμεθα: laconic speech, verbs unconnected, utterance of fear-stricken men. Luke's ἐπιστάτα, ἐπιστάτα is equally descriptive. Who could tell exactly what they said? All three evangelists report differently.—Ver. 26, δειλοί, ὀλιγόπιστοι, He chides them first, then the winds, the chiding meant to calm fear. Cowards, men of little faith! harsh in tone but kindly meant; expressive really of personal fearlessness, to gain ascendency over panic-stricken spirits (cf. Luke).—τότε ἐγερθεὶς: He had uttered the previous words as He lay, then with a sudden impulse He rose and spoke imperial words to the elements: animos discipulorum prius, deinde mare composuit (Bengel).—ἀνέμοις, θαλάσσῃ: He rebuked both. It would have been enough to rebuke the winds which caused the commotion in the water. But the speech was impassioned and poetic, not scientific.—γαλήνη μεγάλη: antithetic to σεισμὸς μέγας, ver. 24.—Ver. 27, οἱ ἄνθρωποι: who? Naturally one would say the disciples with Jesus in the boat, called men to suit the tragic situation. But many think others are referred to, men unacquainted with Jesus: "quibus nondum innotuerat Christus" (Calvin); either with the disciples in the boat, and referred to alone (Jerome, Meyer) or jointly (De Wette, Bleek), or who afterwards heard the story (Hilary, Euthy., Fritzsche: "homines, quotquot hujus portenti nuntium acceperant," and Weiss). Holtzmann (H. C.) says they might be the men in the other ships mentioned in Mk. iv. 36, but in reality the expression may simply point to the contrast between the disciples as men and the divine power displayed.—ποταπὸς . . . οὗτος, what manner of person? The more classic form is ποδαπός = from what land? where born? possibly from ποῦ and ἀπο, with a euphonic δ (Passow). ποταπός, in later use, = of what sort? vide Lobeck, Phryn., p. 56.—This story of the triple tradition is a genuine reminiscence of disciple life. There was a storm, Jesus slept, the disciples awoke Him in terror. He rebuked the winds and waves, and they forthwith subsided. The only escape of naturalism from a miracle of power or Providence (Weiss, Leben Jesu) is to deny the causal sequence between Christ's word and the ensuing calm and suggest coincidence. The storm sudden in its rise, equally sudden in its lull.

Vv. 28-34. The demoniacs of Gadara (Mk. v. 1-20, Lk. viii. 26-39). This narrative raises puzzling questions of all sorts, among them a geographical or topological one, as to the scene of the occurrence. The variations in the readings in the three synoptical gospels reflect the perplexities of the scribes. The place in these readings bears three distinct names. It is called the territory of the Gadarenes, the Gerasenes, and the Gergesenes. The reading in Mk. v. 1 in B, and adopted by W.H., is Γερασηνῶν, and, since the discovery by Thomson (Land and Book, ii. 374) of a place called Gersa or Kersa, near the eastern shore of the lake, there has been a growing consensus of opinion in favour of Gerasa (not to be confounded with Gerasa in Gilead, twenty miles east of the Jordan) as the true name of the scene of the story. A place near the sea seems to be demanded by the circumstances, and Gadara on the Hieromax

28. Καὶ ἐλθόντι αὐτῷ[1] εἰς τὸ πέραν εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γεργεσηνῶν,[2] [c] ὑπήντησαν αὐτῷ δύο δαιμονιζόμενοι ἐκ τῶν μνημείων ἐξερχόμενοι [d] χαλεποὶ λίαν, ὥστε μὴ ἰσχύειν τινὰ παρελθεῖν διὰ τῆς ὁδοῦ ἐκείνης· 29. καὶ ἰδού, ἔκραξαν, λέγοντες, "[e] Τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί, Ἰησοῦ,[3] υἱὲ τοῦ

c Ch. xxviii. 9. Lk. viii. 27; xiv. 31 (in a hostile sense).
d here and 2 Tim. iii. 1 (Isa. xviii. 2).
e Mk. i. 24. Lk. iv. 34.

[1] Dat. again by way of grammatical correction for the gen. abs. found in ℵbBC and adopted by Tisch., W.H., etc.

[2] So in ℵcC³L al., Memph. vers., Origen. Γαδαρηνων in ℵ*BC*ΔΣ al., adopted by Tisch., Treg., W.H., Weiss. Vide below.

[3] Ιησου is wanting in ℵBCL. Comes in from Mk. Modern editors omit.

was too far distant. The true reading in Matthew (v. 28) nevertheless is Γαδαρηνῶν. He probably follows Mark as his guide, but the village Gerasa being obscure and Gadara well known, he prefers to define the locality by a general reference to the latter. The name Gergesa was a suggestion of Origen's made incidentally in his Commentary on John, in connection with the place named in chap. i. 28, Bethabara or Bethany, to illustrate the confusion in the gospel in connection with names. His words are: Γέργεσα, ἀφ' ἧς οἱ Γεργεσαῖοι, πόλις ἀρχαία περὶ τὴν νῦν καλουμένην Τιβεριάδα λίμνην, περὶ ἣν κρημνὸς παρακείμενος τῇ λίμνῃ, ἀφ' οὗ δείκνυται τοὺς χοιροὺς ὑπὸ τῶν δαιμόνων καταβεβλῆσθαι (in Ev. Ioan., T. vi. c. 24). Prof. G. A. Smith, Historical Geography, p. 459, note, pronounces Gerasa "impossible". But he means Gerasa in Decapolis, thirty-six miles away. He accepts Khersa, which he identifies with Gergesa, as the scene of the incident, stating that it is the only place on the east coast where the steep hills come down to the shore.

Ver. 28. δύο, two, in Mark and Luke one. According to some, e.g., Holtzmann (H. C.), the two includes the case reported in Mk. i. 23-27, Lk. iv. 31-37, omitted by Matthew. Weiss' hypothesis is that the two is an inference from the plurality of demons spoken of in his source (vide Matt.-Evan., p. 239). The harmonists disposed of the difficulty by the remark that there might be two though only one is spoken of in the other accounts, perhaps because he was the more violent of the two (so Augustine and Calvin).—ἐκ τῶν μνημείων, the precipitous hills on the eastern shore are a limestone formation full of caves, which were doubtless used for burying the dead. There the demoniacs made their congenial home.—χαλεποὶ λίαν, fierce exceedingly; λίαν, one of our evangelist's favourite words. These demoniacs were what one would call dangerous madmen; that, whatever more; no light matter to cure them, say by "moral therapeutics".—ὥστε μὴ ἰσχύειν, again ὥστε with infinitive (with μὴ for negative). The point is not that nobody passed that way, but that the presence of the madmen tended to make it a place to be shunned as dangerous. Nobody cared to go near them. Christ came near their lair by accident, but He would not have been scared though He had known of their presence.

Ver. 29. ἰδοὺ ἔκραξαν: sudden, startling, unearthly cry, fitted to shock weak nerves. But not the cry of men about to make an assault. The madmen, whom all feared and shunned, were subdued by the aspect of the stranger who had arrived in the neighbourhood. To be taken as a fact, however strange and mysterious, partly explained by the fact that Jesus was not afraid of them any more than He had been of the storm. They felt His power in the very look of His eye. τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί: an appropriate speech even in the mouth of one demoniac, for he speaks in the name of the legion of devils (Mk. v. 8) by which he conceives himself possessed. Identifying himself with the demons, he shrinks from the new comer with an instinctive feeling that He is a foe.—υἱὲ τοῦ Θεοῦ: ὁ ἅγιος τ. θ. in the Capernaum Synagogue case; strange, almost incredible divination. Yet "insanity is much nearer the kingdom of God than worldly-mindedness. There was, doubtless, something in the whole aspect and manner of Jesus which was fitted to produce almost instantaneously a deep, spiritual impression to which child-like, simple, ingenuous souls like the Galilean fishermen, sinful, yet honest-hearted men like those who met at Matthew's feast, Θεοῦ; ἦλθες ὧδε [f]πρὸ [f]καιροῦ βασανίσαι ἡμᾶς;" 30. Ἦν δὲ μακρὰν ἀπ᾽ αὐτῶν [g]ἀγέλη χοίρων πολλῶν [h]βοσκομένη. 31. οἱ δὲ δαίμονες παρεκάλουν αὐτόν, λέγοντες, "Εἰ ἐκβάλλεις ἡμᾶς, ἐπίτρεψον ἡμῖν ἀπελθεῖν[1] εἰς τὴν ἀγέλην τῶν χοίρων." 32. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὑπάγετε." Οἱ δὲ ἐξελθόντες ἀπῆλθον εἰς τὴν ἀγέλην τῶν χοίρων[2]· καὶ ἰδού, [i]ὥρμησε πᾶσα ἡ ἀγέλη τῶν χοίρων[3] [j]κατὰ τοῦ [j]κρημνοῦ εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ ἀπέθανον ἐν τοῖς ὕδασιν.

f same phr. 1 Cor. iv. 5 (Sir. xxx. 24).
g here and parall.
h Mk. v. 14. Lk. viii. 32; xv. 15. John xxi. 15, 17.
i parall. and Acts xix. 29 (Acts vii. 57, ἐπί τινα).
j parall.

[1] For the reading επιτρεψον ημιν απελθειν in T. R. ℵB have αποστειλον; adopted by modern editors. The T. R. conforms to Lk. (viii. 32).

[2] For εις την αγελην των χοιρων ℵBC have τους χοιρους (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] ℵBCΔΣ omit των χοιρων.

readily surrendered themselves. Men with shattered reason also felt the spell, while the wise and the strong-minded too often used their intellect, under the bias of passion or prejudice, to resist the force of truth. In this way we may account for the prompt recognition of Jesus by the Gadarene demoniac. All that is necessary to explain it is the Messianic hope prevalent in Gadara as elsewhere, and the sight of Jesus acting on an impressionable spirit" (Bruce, The Miraculous Element in the Gospels p. 187).—πρὸ καιροῦ: before the appointed time of judgment. The article wanting here before κ. as in other phrases in N. T., e.g., ἐν καιρῷ, Matt. xxiv. 45.—βασανίσαι, to torment with pain in Hades, described as a place of torment in Lk. xvi. 28, cf. ver. 23.

Ver. 30. μακρὰν: the Vulgate renders non longe, as if οὐ had stood in the Greek before μακ. But there are no variants here. Mark and Luke have ἐκεῖ, which gives rise to an apparent discrepancy. Only apparent, many contend, because both expressions are relative and elastic: at a distance, yet within view; there, in that neighbourhood, but not quite at hand. Elsner refers to Lk. xv. 20: μακρὰν, "et tamen in conspectu, ut, Luc. xv. 20: Ἔτι δὲ αὐτοῦ μακρὰν ἀπέχοντος, εἶδεν αὐτὸν ὁ πατήρ". On ἐκεῖ he remarks: "docet in ea regione et vicinia fuisse, nec distantiam describit". Weiss against Meyer denies the relativity of μακρὰν, and takes it as meaning "a long way off," while visible. —βοσκομένη: far removed from ἦν, and not to be joined with it as if the feeding were the main point, and not rather the existence of the herd there. The ill attested reading βοσκομένων brings out the meaning better. A herd of swine which were feeding in the hill pastures. The swine, doubtless, belonged to Gentiles, who abounded in Peræa.—Ver. 31. οἱ δαίμονες: unusual designation, commonly δαιμόνια.—παρεκάλουν: the request was made by the possessed in the name of the demons.—ἀπόστειλον: the reading of the T. R. (ἐπίτρεψον ἀπελθεῖν) taken from Luke expresses, in a milder form, Christ's share of responsibility in a transaction of supposed doubtful character. The demoniac would have no scruple on that score. His request was: if you are to cast us out, send us not to hell, but into the swine.—ὑπάγετε: Christ's laconic reply, usually taken to mean: go into the swine, but not necessarily meaning more than "begone". So Weiss, who holds that Jesus had no intention of expressing acquiescence in the demoniac's request. (Matt. Evan. and Weiss-Meyer, "Hinweg mit euch.".) —Ver. 32. οἱ δὲ . . . χοίρους: the entrance of the demons into the swine could not, of course, be a matter of observation, but only of inference from what followed.—ἰδοὺ, introducing a sudden, startling event—ὥρμησεν πᾶσα ἡ ἀγέλη: the mad downrush of the herd over the precipice into the lake. Assuming the full responsibility of Jesus for the catastrophe, expositors have busied themselves in inventing apologies. Euthy. gives four reasons for the transaction, the fourth being that only thereby could it be conclusively shown that the devils had left the demoniacs. Rosenmüller suggests that two men are worth more than ever so many swine. The lowest depth of bathos in this line was touched by Wetstein when he suggested that, by cutting up the drowned swine, salting the meat or making smoke-dried hams (fumosas pernas), and selling them to Gen-

33. οἱ δὲ βόσκοντες ἔφυγον, καὶ ἀπελθόντες εἰς τὴν πόλιν ἀπήγγειλαν πάντα, καὶ τὰ τῶν δαιμονιζομένων. 34. καὶ ἰδού, πᾶσα ἡ πόλις ἐξῆλθεν εἰς συνάντησιν [1] τῷ [2] Ἰησοῦ· καὶ ἰδόντες αὐτόν, παρεκάλεσαν ὅπως [3] [k] μεταβῇ ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων αὐτῶν.

k Ch. xi. 1; xii. 9; xv. 29 (with ἐκεῖθεν).

[1] For συναντησιν (CLΔΣ) ℵB 1, 33, have υπαντησιν (Tisch., W.H.), a preferable word. Vide below.

[2] For τω (B) ℵC have του, adopted by Tisch. and put in margin by W.C.

[3] For οπως B has ινα.

tiles who did not object to eat suffocated animals, the owners would escape loss. But the learned commentator might be jesting, for he throws out the suggestion for the benefit of men whom he describes as neither Jews, Gentiles, nor Christians.

Vv. 33-34. The sequel. ἔφυγον: the swineherds fled. No wonder, in view of such a disaster. If the demoniacs, in the final paroxysm before return to sanity, had anything to do with bringing it about, the superstitious terror with which they were regarded would add to the panic.—ἀπήγγειλαν: they reported what had happened to their masters and to everybody they met in the town.—πάντα, what had befallen the swine.—καὶ τὰ τ. δαιμονιζομένων: they could not know the whole truth about the demoniacs. The reference must be to some visible connection between the behaviour of the madmen and the destruction of the herd. They told the story from their own point of view, not after interviewing Jesus and His company.—Ver. 34. πᾶσα ἡ πόλις: an exaggeration of course, cf. accounts in Mark and Luke.—εἰς ὑπάντησιν . . . Ι., to a meeting with Jesus. The noun occurs again in Matt. xxv. 1, and John xii. 13; in Matt. xxv. 6 ἀπάντησιν is used instead of it. εἰς ἀπαν. occurs in Sept. for לִקְרַאת. The two nouns are little used in Greek authors. The change from one to the other in Matt. xxv. 1, 6 implies a slight difference in meaning; ὑπάντησις = accidental chance, or stealthy meeting; ἀπάντησις: an open designed meeting. The stealthy character of the meeting implied in ὑπὸ is well illustrated in ὑπήντησαν, ver. 28, of this narrative. The statement that the whole city went out to meet Jesus implies a report laying the blame of the occurrence on Him. But Matthew's account is very summary, and must be supplemented by the statements in Mark and Luke, from which it appears that some came from the town to inquire into the matter, "to see what had happened," and that in the course of their inquiries they met Jesus and learned what they had not known before, the change that had come over the demoniac. It was on their giving in their report to their fellow-townsmen, connecting the cure with the catastrophe, that the action reported in ver. 34 took place.—Ver. 34. παρεκάλεσαν: same word as in ver. 31 in reference to the demoniacs. They did not order or drive Him out. They besought in terms respectful and even subdued. They were afraid of this strange man, who could do such wonderful things; and, with all due respect, they would rather He would withdraw from their neighbourhood.

This would be an oft-told tale, in which different versions were sure to arise, wherein fact and explanation of fact would get mixed up together. The very variations in the synoptical accounts witness to its substantial historicity. The apologist's task is easy here, as distinct from that of the harmonist, which is difficult. The essential outline of the story is this. A demoniac, alias a madman, comes from the tombs in the limestone caves to meet Jesus, exhibiting in behaviour and conversation a double consciousness. Asked his name, he calls himself Legion. In the name of the "Legion" he begs that the demons may enter the swine. Jesus orders the demons to leave their victim. Shortly after a herd of swine feeding on the hills rushed down the steep into the sea and were drowned. Tradition connected the rush of the swine with the demons leaving their former victim and entering into them. But, as already remarked, the causal connection could not be a matter of observation but only of inference. The rush might, as Weiss suggests, be caused by the man, in his final paroxysm, chasing them. But that also is matter of conjecture. The

IX. 1. KAI ἐμβὰς εἰς τὸ[1] πλοῖον [a] διεπέρασε καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν [b] ἰδίαν πόλιν. 2. καὶ ἰδού, προσέφερον αὐτῷ παραλυτικὸν ἐπὶ κλίνης βεβλημένον· καὶ ἰδὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὴν πίστιν αὐτῶν εἶπε τῷ παραλυτικῷ, "[c] Θάρσει, τέκνον, ἀφέωνταί[2] σοι αἱ ἁμαρτίαι σου."[3] a Ch. xiv. 34. Mk. v. 21; vi. 53. Lk. xvi. 26.

b Lk. ii. 3 (in various MSS.).
c again ver. 22. Ch. xiv. 27 (plur., to the 12). Mk. x. 49.

[1] το omitted by ℵBLX.

[2] ℵB have the form αφιενται (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] The reading αφεωνται σοι αι αμ. σου in T. R. is from Lk. (v. 20). ℵB have σου αι αμαρ. D has σοι αι αμ.

real cause of the catastrophe is a mystery. Rosenmüller suggests that at a hot season of the year one in a herd of swine might undergo a morbid seizure, begin to run wildly about, and be followed sequaciously by the whole flock. He mentions an occurrence of the kind at Erfurt, recent when he wrote. Lutteroth, no rationalist, suggests "vertigo," permitted by Jesus to befall the swine, that the demoniac might have in their behaviour a sensible sign of deliverance, and so be rid of his fixed idea (vide his Essai D'Interp., 3eme Partie, p. 27, note). On the nature of demoniacal possession, vide my Miraculous Element in the Gospels, pp. 172-190; vide also notes on Mark.

CHAPTER IX. THE HEALING MINISTRY CONTINUED. Vv. 1-8. The palsied man (Mark ii. 1-12; Luke vi. 17-26). Ver. 1. ἐμβὰς: Jesus complied with the request of the men of Gerasa, who had intimated so plainly that they did not want any more of His company. Whatever His purpose in crossing over to the eastern shore may have been, it was frustrated by an event which in some respects was an unexpected disaster. Was it rest only or a new sphere of work He was seeking there? Vide notes on Mark.—εἰς τ. ἰδίαν π.: entering the boat which had been moored to the shore Jesus returned with His disciples to His own city, to distinguish it from Gerasa, the city that shut its gates against Him; so named here only. When precisely the following incident happened cannot be ascertained. Luke's indication of time is the vaguest possible; "on one of the days" Matthew and Mark give it in different sequence, but their narratives have this in common, that they make the incident occur on arrival in Capernaum after an excursion; in either case the first mentioned, though not the same in both. Vide notes on Mark.

Ver. 2. καὶ ἰδοὺ: usual formula for introducing an important incident.—προσέφερον, the imperfect, implying a process, the details of which, extremely interesting, the evangelist does not give. By comparison with Mark and Luke the narrative is meagre, and defective even for the purpose of bringing out the features to which the evangelist attaches importance, e.g., the value set by Jesus on the faith evinced. His eye is fixed on the one outstanding novel feature, the word of Jesus in ver. 6. In view of it he is careful, while omitting much, to mention that the invalid in this instance was brought to Jesus, ἐπὶ κλίνης βεβλημένον, lying on a couch. To the same cause also it is due that a second case of paralysis cured finds a place in this collection, though the two cases have different features: in the one physical torments, in the other mental depression.—πίστιν αὐτῶν, the faith of the men who had brought the sick man to Him. The common assumption that the latter is included in the αὐτῶν is based on dogmatic grounds.—θάρσει, τέκνον: with swift sure diagnosis Jesus sees in the man not faith but deep depression, associated probably with sad memories of misconduct, and uttering first a kindly hope-inspiring word, such as a physician might address to a patient: cheer up, child! He deals first with the disease of the soul.—ἀφίενται: Jesus declares the forgiveness of his sins, not with the authority of an exceptional person, but with sympathy and insight, as the interpreter of God's will and the law of the universe. That law is that past error need not be a doom; that we may take pardon for granted; forgive ourselves, and start anew. The law holds, Jesus believed, both in the physical and in the moral sphere. In combining pardon with healing of bodily disease in this case, He was virtually announcing a general law. "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases," Ps. ciii. 3.

3. Καὶ ἰδού, τινὲς τῶν γραμματέων εἶπον ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, "Οὗτος [d] βλασφημεῖ." 4. Καὶ ἰδὼν[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὰς [e] ἐνθυμήσεις αὐτῶν εἶπεν, "[f] Ἱνατί ὑμεῖς[2] ἐνθυμεῖσθε πονηρὰ ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν; 5. τί γάρ ἐστιν [g] εὐκοπώτερον, εἰπεῖν, Ἀφέωνταί[3] σοι[4] αἱ ἁμαρτίαι· ἢ εἰπεῖν, Ἔγειραι[5] καὶ περιπάτει; 6. ἵνα δὲ εἰδῆτε, ὅτι ἐξουσίαν ἔχει ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἀφιέναι ἁμαρτίας," (τότε λέγει τῷ παραλυτικῷ,) "Ἐγερθεὶς[6] ἆρόν σου τὴν κλίνην, καὶ ὕπαγε εἰς τὸν οἶκόν σου." 7. Καὶ ἐγερθεὶς ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ.

d Ch. xxvi. 65. Mk. ii. 7 (W. H.) used absolutely.
e Ch. xii. 25. Heb. iv. 12.
f Ch. xxvii. 46. Lk. xiii. 7. 1 Cor. x. 29.
g Mk. ii. 9. Lk. v. 23 (with inf.). Mt. xix. 24. Lk. xvi. 17 (with acc. and inf.).

[1] For ιδων (ℵCD, Tisch.) BM have ειδως. The tendency of the scribes would be to use the same word as in ver. 2. W.H. has ειδως in text but bracketed, ιδων in margin.

[2] ℵBCD omit υμεις.

[3] αφιενται ℵ[2]B.

[4] σου in ℵBCDL.

[5] εγειρε ℵBCDLΣ.

[6] εγειρε in B and D with και; the more forcible word.

Ver. 3. τινὲς τ. γραμματέων: some scribes present on this occasion. Ominous fact duly introduced by ἰδού; its significance still more distinctly recognised by Luke, who gives it prominent mention at the beginning of his narrative (ver. 17). Sure sign of the extent, depth, and quality of Christ's influence.—βλασφημεῖ: of course; the prophet always is a scandalous, irreverent blasphemer from the conventional point of view. The scribes regarded forgiveness purely under the aspect of prerogative, and in self-defence Jesus must meet them on their own ground. His answer covers the whole case. There is more than prerogative in the matter; there is the right, duty, privilege, and power of every man to promote faith in pardon by hearty proclamation of the law of the moral world. This is dealt with first.—Ver. 4. ἐνθυμήσεις: Jesus intuitively read their thoughts as He read the mental state of the sick man.—ἵνα τί: elliptical for ἵνα τί γένηται understood = in order that what may happen, do you, etc. (vide Bäumlein, Schul. Gram., § 696, and Goodwin's Syn., § 331). — Ver. 5. εὐκοπώτερον (from εὖ and κόπος, whence εὔκοπος; in N.T. (Gospels) only the comparative neuter is found, as here). The question as to ability, δύναμις, is first disposed of; which is easier.—εἰπεῖν: they are both alike easy to say; the vital matter is saying with effect. Saying here stands for doing. And to do the one thing was to do the other. To heal was to forgive. It is implied that it is easier to forgive than to make a palsied man strong. Christ means that the one is ordinary, the other extraordinary; the one is within the power of any man, the other belongs only to the exceptional man; there is no assumption in declaring pardon, there is pretension in saying "arise and walk".—Ver. 6. ἵνα δὲ εἰδῆτε: transition to the other aspect, that of ἐξουσία, the point raised by the scribes when they looked a charge of blasphemy.—ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀν., ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς: these two phrases point at supposed disabilities for forgiving. "Forgiveness takes place in heaven, and is the exclusive prerogative of God," was the thesis of the scribes. "It may be exercised even on earth, and by the Son of Man," is the counter thesis of Christ. Therefore "Son of Man" must be a title not of dignity but of humiliation. Here = one whom ye think lightly of; even He can forgive.—τότε λέγει. Jesus stops short in His speech to the scribes and turns to the sick man, saying: ἔγειρε, etc., also in ver. 6, intransitive. The reading ἔγειραι in T.R., ver. 6, is a correction of style, the use of the active intransitively being condemned by grammarians. Hence this various reading always occurs. (Vide Suidas, s.v., and Buttman, Gramm., p. 56.)—τὴν κλίνην, a light piece of furniture, easily portable. — ὕπαγε: all three actions, arising, lifting, walking, conclusive evidence of restored power. — Ver.

8. ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ ὄχλοι ἐθαύμασαν,[1] καὶ ἐδόξασαν τὸν Θεόν, τὸν δόντα ἐξουσίαν τοιαύτην τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.

9. Καὶ [h] παράγων ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐκεῖθεν εἶδεν ἄνθρωπον καθήμενον ἐπὶ τὸ [i] τελώνιον, Ματθαῖον λεγόμενον, καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ἀκολούθει μοι." Καὶ [j] ἀναστὰς ἠκολούθησεν[2] αὐτῷ. 10. Καὶ ἐγένετο αὐτοῦ [k] ἀνακειμένου[3] ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, καὶ[4] ἰδού, πολλοὶ τελῶναι καὶ ἁμαρτωλοὶ h ver. 27 (with ἐκεῖθεν). 1 Cor. vii. 31 (= passeth away). i here and in parall. j Mk. ii. 14. Lk. v. 28. (Hebrew idiom; cf. Num. xxii. 20). k Ch. xxii. 10; xxvi. 7, 20. Mk. xiv. 18. Lk. xxii. 27.

[1] εφοβηθησαν in ℵBD (Tisch., W.H.) εθαυμασαν (CLΔ al.) gives a commonplace idea more to the taste of the scribes.

[2] ηκολουθει in ℵD (Tisch.).

[3] ανακειμενου αυτου in ℵ^{c}C, as in text in most MSS.

[4] και omitted in ℵD.

7. Said, done; a convincing argumentum ad hominem. Who would dispute the right to forgive to one who could do that, or persist in the charge of blasphemy against Him? At least those who do will get little sympathy from the mass of spectators.—Ver. 8. ἰδόντες οἱ ὄχλοι. The people are free from the petty jealousies and pedantic theories of the professional class; broad facts settle the matter for them. They probably had no scruples about the forgiving, but if they had the miracle would put an end to them: the manifest authority and power a witness of the non-apparent (ποιεῖται τὴν φανερὰν [ἐξουσίαν] τεκμήριον τῆς ἀφανοῦς. Euthy.).—ἐφοβήθησαν, they feared; may point to a change of mind on the part of some who at first were influenced by the disapproving mood of the scribes. The solemn frown of those who pass for saints and wise men is a formidable thing, making many cowards. But now a new fear takes the place of the old, perhaps not without a touch of superstition.

Vv. 9-13. The publican feast (Mk. ii. 13-17; Lk. v. 27-32). The point of interest for the evangelist in this narrative is not the call of the publican disciple, but the feast which followed, a feast of publicans and "sinners" at which Jesus was present proclaiming by action what He formerly proclaimed by word: a sinful past no doom. The story, though not a miracle-history, finds a place here because it follows the last in Mark, in whose Gospel the incident of the palsied man forms the first of a group serving one aim—to show the beginnings of the conflict between Jesus and the religious leaders. The same remark applies to the next section.

Ver. 9. παράγων ἐκεῖθεν: passing along from the scene of the last incident, Jesus arrives at the custom-house of Capernaum (τελώνιον).—εἶδεν . . . Ματθαῖον λεγ.: there He saw a man named Matthew. (On the identity of Matthew with Levi in Mark and Luke, vide Mark.) Capernaum being near the boundary and on the caravan road between Egypt and Damascus, Matthew would be a busy man, but, doubtless, Christ and he have met before.—Ἀκολούθει μοι: Jesus acted on His own plans, but the recent encounter with the scribes would not be without influence on this new departure—the call of a publican. It was a kind of defiance to the party who cherished hard thoughts not only about pardon but about those who needed pardon. An impolitic step the worldly-wise would say; sure to create prejudice. But those who are too anxious to conciliate the prejudices of the present do nothing for the future.—ἀναστὰς ἠκολούθησεν: prompt compliance, probably with some astonishment at the invitation.

Ver. 10. καὶ ἐγένετο, etc. The narrative of this incident in all three Synoptists is condensed, and the situation not clear. What house is meant (ἐν τῇ οἰκ.), and why so many (πολλοί)? "There were many," Mark remarks, emphatically (ii. 15), and the ἰδοὺ here implies that something important took place. Luke infers (for we need not suppose independent information) that it is a feast (δοχὴν), and, doubtless, he is right. But given by whom? Levi, according to Luke. It may have been so, but not necessarily as the prime mover; possibly, nay, probably, as the agent of his new Master. Our thoughts have been too much biassed by the assumption that the call of Matthew in ἐλθόντες συνανέκειντο τῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ. 11. καὶ ἰδόντες οἱ Φαρισαῖοι εἶπον[1] τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Διατί μετὰ τῶν τελωνῶν καὶ ἁμαρτωλῶν ἐσθίει ὁ διδάσκαλος ὑμῶν;" 12. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[2] ἀκούσας εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[3] "Οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσιν οἱ ἰσχύοντες ἰατροῦ, ἀλλ' οἱ κακῶς ἔχοντες. 13. πορευθέντες δὲ μάθετε τί [l]ἐστιν, '[m]Ἔλεον[4] θέλω, καὶ οὐ θυσίαν·' οὐ γὰρ ἦλθον καλέσαι δικαίους, ἀλλ' ἁμαρτωλοὺς εἰς μετάνοιαν."[5]

l Mk. ix. 10. Lk. viii. 9. Acts x. 17 (=means).
m again in Ch. xii. 7 fr. Hosea vi. 7.

[1] ελεγον ℵBCL (Tisch., W.H.). ειπον in D al.

[2] ℵBD omit Ιησους (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] ℵBCD omit αυτοις (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] ℵBCD have ελεος. ελεον is a gram. cor.

[5] εις μετανοιαν is wanting in ℵBDΔΣ. It is a clear case of harmonising assimilation. Vide on Lk. v. 32 for its effect on the sense.

this section is the main thing, and the feast an accompanying incident, a farewell feast of Matthew's in which Jesus passively partook. The truth, probably, is that the call was a preliminary to the feast, the first step in the working out of a plan. Jesus aims at a mission among the reprobated classes, and His first step is the call of Matthew to discipleship, and His second the gathering together, through him, of a large number of these classes to a social entertainment; the place of meeting being, possibly, not a private house, whether Christ's or Matthew's, but a public hall. If Matthew's house or Simon's (in which Jesus probably had His home, vide Mark) was large enough to have a quadrangular court, the gathering might be there, where, according to Faber, Archæologie der Hebräer, p. 408, meetings of various sorts were held. In any case it was a great affair—scores, possibly hundreds, present, too large for a room in a house, a conventicle meeting, so to speak; a meeting with such people in the Synagogue not being possible. For further remarks vide on Mark.—τελῶναι καὶ ἁμαρτωλοὶ: publicans naturally, if Matthew was the host, but why ἁμαρ.? He was a respectable man; are the ἁμαρ. simply the τελῶναι as viewed from the outside, so named in anticipation of the Pharisaic description of the party? If Jesus was the inviter, they might be a distinct class, and worse, very real sinners, for His aim was a mission among the social Pariahs.

Ver. 11. ἰδόντες οἱ Φαρ. Here was a good chance for the critics, really a scandalous affair!—τοῖς μαθηταῖς. They spoke to the disciples, possibly, as Euthy. Zig. suggests, to alienate them from the Master, possibly lacking courage to attack Him face to face.

Ver. 12. ὁ δὲ ἀ. εἶπεν: to whom? Were the fault-finders present to hear?—οὐ χρείαν, etc.: something similar can be cited from classic authors, vide instances in Grotius, Elsner, and Wetstein. The originality lies in the application = the physician goes where he is needed, therefore, I am here among the people you contemptuously designate publicans and sinners. The first instalment, this, of Christ's noble apology for associating with the reprobates—a great word. Ver. 13. πορευθέντες μάθετε: a common expression among the Rabbis, but they never sent men to learn the particular lesson that God prefers mercy to sacrifice.—καὶ οὐ, does not imply that sacrifice is of no account.—ἔλεος (ἔλεον in T. R., a correction by the scribes), accusative neuter. Masculine nouns of 2nd declension are often neuter 3rd in N. T. and Sept.—ἦλθον: Jesus speaks as one having a mission.—ἁμαρτωλούς: and it is to the sinful, in pursuance of the principle embodied in the prophetic oracle—a mission of mercy. The words ἰσχύοντες, ver. 12, and δικαίους, ver. 13, naturally suggest the Pharisees as the class meant. Weiss, always nervously afraid of allegorising in connection with parabolic utterances, protests, contending that it is indifferent to the sense of the parable whether there be any "whole" or righteous. But the point is blunted if there be no allusion. καλέσαι here has the sense of calling to a feast.

Vv. 14-17. The fast-question (Mk. ii. 18-22; Lk. v. 33-39). Τότε. Our evangelist makes a temporal connection

14. Τότε [n] προσέρχονται αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ Ἰωάννου, λέγοντες, "Διατί ἡμεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι νηστεύομεν πολλά,[1] οἱ δὲ μαθηταί σου οὐ νηστεύουσι;" 15. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Μὴ δύνανται οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ [n] νυμφῶνος πενθεῖν, [o] ἐφ' ὅσον μετ' αὐτῶν ἐστιν ὁ [p] νυμφίος; ἐλεύσονται δὲ ἡμέραι ὅταν [q] ἀπαρθῇ ἀπ' αὐτῶν ὁ νυμφίος, καὶ τότε νηστεύσουσιν. 16. οὐδεὶς δὲ [r] ἐπιβάλλει [s] ἐπίβλημα [t] ῥάκους [t] ἀγνάφου ἐπὶ ἱματίῳ παλαιῷ· [u] αἴρει γὰρ τὸ πλήρωμα n in parall. Vide also Tobit vi. 14, 17.

o 2 Pet. i. 13 (same phrase).
p in parall. and Ch. xxv. 1. John ii. 9; iii. 29. Rev. xviii. 23.
q here and in parall.
r here, in parall., in same sense. Cf. Mk. xi. 7.
s here and in parall.
t same phr. in Mk. ii. 21.
u without object here and in Mk. ii. 21.

[1] πολλα is in a large number of uncials, including ℵ[c]CDLΔΣ. Yet it looks like a gloss and is wanting in ℵ*B 27, 71. Tisch. and W.H. omit.

out of what in Mark is merely topical, another of the group of incidents showing Jesus in conflict with current opinion and practice. Where it happened cannot be determined, but it is brought in appositely after the feast of the publicans, serving with it to illustrate the free unconventional life of the Jesus-circle.—προσέρχονται . . . οἱ μαθ. Ἰωάννου. The interrogants here are John's disciples; in Mark, unknown persons about John's disciples with the Pharisees; in Luke, who treats this incident as a continuation of the last, the fault-finders are the same as before (οἱ δὲ). Mark probably gives the true state of the case. Some persons unknown, at some time or other, when other religious people were fasting, and the Jesus-circle were observed not to be fasting, came and remarked on the dissidence.—διατί: the interrogants wanted to know the reason. But the important thing for us is the fact, that Jesus and His disciples did not conform to the common custom of religious people, including the disciples of the Baptist. It is the first instance of an extensive breach with existing religious usage.—οὐ νηστεύουσι: the broad patent fact; if they did any fasting it was not apparent.

Ver. 15. καὶ εἶπεν: The question drew from Jesus three pregnant parabolic sayings: bright, genial, felicitous impromptus; the first a happy apology for His disciples, the other two the statement of a general principle.—οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος. The mere suggestion of this name for the disciples explains all. Paranymphs, friends of the bridechamber, companions of the bridegroom, who act for him and in his interest, and bring the bride to him. How can they be sad (μὴ δύνανται πενθεῖν)? The point to note is that the figure was apposite. The life of Jesus and His disciples was like a wedding feast—they the principal actors. The disciples took their tone from the Master, so that the ultimate fact was the quality of the personal piety of Jesus. Therein lay the reason of the difference commented on. It was not irreligion, as in the case of the careless; it was a different type of religion with a Father-God, a kingdom of grace open to all, hope for the worst, and spiritual spontaneity.—ἐλεύσονται ἡμέραι. While the Bridegroom is with them life will be a wedding feast; when He is taken from them it will make a great difference; then (τότε) they will grieve, and therefore fast: a hidden allusion to the tragic end foreseen by Jesus of this happy free life, the penalty of breaking with custom.

Vv. 16, 17. The substitution of νηστεύουσιν for πενθεῖν, in the close of ver. 15, implicitly suggested a principle which is now explicitly stated in parabolic form: the great law of congruity; practice must conform to mood; the spirit must determine the form. These sayings, apparently simple, are somewhat abstruse. They must have been over the head of the average Christian of the apostolic age, and Luke's version shows that they were diversely interpreted. Common to both is the idea that it is bootless to mix heterogeneous things, old and new in religion. This cuts two ways. It defends the old as well as the new; the fasting of John's disciples as well as the non-fasting of Christ's. Jesus did not concern Himself about Pharisaic practice, but He was concerned to defend His own disciples without disparagement of John, and also to prevent John's way and the respect in which he was justly held from creating a prejudice against Himself. The double application of the principle was therefore present to His mind.—Ver. 16, οὐδεὶς . . . παλαιῷ. No αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱματίου, καὶ χεῖρον σχίσμα γίνεται. 17. οὐδὲ [v] βάλλουσιν οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς παλαιούς· εἰ δὲ μήγε, ῥήγνυνται οἱ ἀσκοί, καὶ ὁ οἶνος, ἐκχεῖται, καὶ οἱ ἀσκοὶ ἀπολοῦνται[1]· ἀλλὰ βάλλουσιν οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς καινούς, καὶ ἀμφότερα[2] [w] συντηροῦνται.

18. Ταῦτα αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος αὐτοῖς, ἰδού, ἄρχων ἐλθὼν[3] προσεκύνει [w] αὐτῷ, λέγων, "Ὅτι ἡ θυγάτηρ μου ἄρτι ἐτελεύτησεν· ἀλλὰ ἐλθὼν [x] ἐπίθες τὴν χεῖρά σου ἐπ' αὐτήν, καὶ [y] ζήσεται." 19. Καὶ ἐγερθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἠκολούθησεν[4] αὐτῷ καὶ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ.

v here, parall. John xiii. 5 (of liquids). Ch. xxvi. 12 (ἐπί τινος).
w Lk. v. 38 (T. R.).
x Mk. xvi. 15. Acts ix. 17 (same const.).
y Mk. xvi. 11. John v. 25. Acts ix. 41. Rom. xiv. 9.

[1] For the future, in most MSS., ℵB have απολλυνται (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] All uncials have αμφοτεροι.

[3] The reading is in confusion here. B has after αρχων εις προσελθων, probably the true reading out of which all variants arose (τις for εις; εις om.; ελθων for προσ.; εις ελθων, ελθων.).

[4] ℵCD have the imp. B as in text.

one putteth a patch of an unfulled, raw piece of cloth (ῥάκος from ῥήγνυμι) on an old garment.—τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτοῦ, the filling, the patch which fills; of it, i.e., the old garment, not of the unfulled cloth (Euthy., Grotius, De W., etc.).—αἴρει ἀπὸ, taketh from = tears itself away by contraction when wetted, taking a part of the old garment along with it.—καὶ . . . γίνεται, and so a worse rent takes place. This looks in the direction of an apology for John and his disciples (so Weiss) = they and we are in sympathy in the main, but let them not assimilate their practice to ours; better remain as they are; imitation would only spoil a good type of piety. What is to be done with the unfulled cloth is not indicated, but it goes without saying. Let it remain by itself, be fulled, and then turned into a good new garment.

Ver. 17. The new parable of the wine and wine-skins is introduced, not merely because the Speaker is full of matter, but because it enables Him aptly to show both sides of the question, the twofold application of the principle.—οὐδὲ βάλλουσιν: nobody puts new wine into old skins; νέος applied to wine, καινός to skins (ἀσκοὺς καινούς). νέος is new in time, καινός in quality. That which is new in time does not necessarily deteriorate with age; it may even improve. That which is new in quality always deteriorates with age, like skins or cloth, vide Trench's Synonyms, lx.—εἰ δὲ μήγε, vide ad vi. 1: two disastrous consequences ensue: skins burst, wine spilt. The reason not stated, assumed to be known. New wine ferments, old skins have lost their toughness and stretchableness. "They have become hard leather and give no more" (Koetsveld, De Gelijkenissen, p. 99). That is the one side—keep the old to the old.—ἀλλὰ βάλλουσι . . . συντηροῦνται: this is the other—the new to the new; new wine in fresh skins, and both are preserved as suiting one another. With reference to the two parables, Schanz remarks that, in the first, the point of comparison is the distinction between part and whole, in the second form and contents are opposed to each other. So after him, Holtzmann in H.C. Weiss takes both parables as explaining the practice of John's disciples, Holtzmann as giving reasons why Christ's disciples differed from all others. The truth as above indicated lies between.

Vv. 18-26. The daughter of Jairus, with interlude (Mk. v. 21-43; Lk. viii. 40-56). Given by Matthew in immediate connection with the discourse on fasting, but by Mark, and Luke following him, in connection with the return from the eastern shore, after the story of the demoniac. Ver. 18. ἰδοὺ . . . λέγων: exactly the same formula as in viii. 2.—ἄρχων, an important person, a ruler of synagogue, according to Mark.—εἷς: peculiar here, but taken from Mark where it is intelligible, the suppliant being there described as one of the rulers of the synagogue. The word puzzled the scribes, and gave rise to great variation in the text.—ἄρτι ἐτελεύτησεν: This statement of Matthew, compared with those of Mark and Luke, which make the father say his daughter was dying, z here only in N.T. Lev. xv. 33.

a Ch. xiv. 36; xxiii. 5. Mk. vi. 56. Lk. viii. 44 (Num. xv. 37).

20. Καὶ ἰδού, γυνὴ [z] αἱμορροοῦσα δώδεκα ἔτη, προσελθοῦσα ὄπισθεν, ἥψατο τοῦ [a] κρασπέδου τοῦ ἱματίου αὐτοῦ. 21. ἔλεγε γὰρ ἐν ἑαυτῇ, "Ἐὰν μόνον ἅψωμαι τοῦ ἱματίου αὐτοῦ, σωθήσομαι." 22. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἐπιστραφεὶς [1] καὶ ἰδὼν αὐτὴν εἶπε, "Θάρσει, θύγατερ ἡ πίστις σου σέσωκέ σε." Καὶ ἐσώθη ἡ γυνὴ ἀπὸ τῆς ὥρας ἐκείνης.. 23. Καὶ ἐλθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν τοῦ ἄρχοντος, καὶ ἰδὼν τοὺς has created work for the harmonists. The patristic view (Chrys., Theophy., Euthy.), that the statement was an inference from the condition in which he left her, or a natural exaggeration, has been adopted by many. Probably it is an inaccuracy of the evangelist's due to abbreviation. The girl was dead when Jesus arrived; that was all he cared about. The ruler thought Jesus could do anything short of raising from the dead, save even in articulo mortis. But our evangelist gives him credit for more faith; that Jesus can bring back from the dead, at least when death has just taken place.—ζήσεται, not remain living, but revive, come to life again (Fritzsche).—Ver. 19. ἐγερθεὶς apparently refers back to ver. 10, implying close sequence—feasting, fasting, dying; such is life indeed.

[1] στραφεις ℵBDΣ (Tisch., W.H.).

Vv. 20-22. The story is suspended at this point by an interlude.—Ver. 20, καὶ ἰδού, a new applicant for help appears on the scene, on the way to Jairus' house.—γυνὴ . . . ἔτη, a woman who had suffered for twelve years from some kind of bloody flux.—ὄπισθεν: realistic feature; from womanly shame or the morbid shrinking of chronic ill-health, or out of regard to he law concerning uncleanness (Lev. xv.).—κρασπέδου, Hebrew צִיצִת (Num. xv. 38), fringes at the four corners of the outer garment to remind of the commandments. In dress Jesus was not nonconformist. His mantle, ἱμάτιον, had its κράσπεδα like other people's.—ἥψατο, touched one of the tassels; the least possible degree of contact enough to ensure a cure, without notice; faith, superstition and cunning combined. Ver. 21. ἔλεγε γὰρ ἐν ἑαυτῇ: such was her little private scheme. Ver. 22, ὁ δὲ Ἰ. στραφεὶς καὶ ἰδών. Matthew's narrative here is simple as compared with that of Mark and Luke, probably a transcript from Apostolic Document, concerned mainly about the words of Jesus. So far as our evangelist is concerned the turning round of Jesus might be an accident, or due to consciousness of a nervous jerk instinctively understood to mean something.—θάρσει, θύγατερ, again as in ix. 2, a terse, cordial sympathetic address; there child to a man, here daughter to a mature woman.—πίστις, no notice taken of the superstition or the cunning, only of the good side; mark the rhythm: ἡ πίστις σου σέσωκέν σε, again in Lk. vii. 50, where, with πορεύου εἰς εἰρήνην, it forms a couplet.—σέσωκεν, perfect, not future, to convey a feeling of confidence = you are a saved woman.—καὶ ἐσώθη, and so she was from that hour. A true story in the main, say Strauss and Keim, strictly a case of faith-cure.

Vv. 23-26. The narrative returns to the case of Jairus' daughter. Ver. 23, ἐλθὼν . . . καὶ ἰδὼν, circumstantial participles leading up to what Jesus said, the main fact.—τοὺς αὐλητὰς, etc.: the girl was only just dead, yet already a crowd had gathered about the house, brought together by various motives, sympathy, money, desire to share in the meat and drink going at such a time (so Lightfoot, Hor. Heb., ut ederent et biberent), and of course making a confused din.—θορυβούμενον, the part. = a relative with finite verb = the crowd which was making a din. The crowd, besides the αὐλῆται, tibicines, flute-players, would include some hired mourning women (Jerem. ix. 17), præficæ, whose duty it was to sing nænia in praise of the dead. Mourning, like everything else, had been reduced to system, two flutes and one mourning woman at the burial of a wife incumbent on the poorest man (Lightfoot, Hor. Heb.). The practice in Greece and Rome was similar, proofs in Grotius, Elsner, Wetstein. Vide also Marquardt, Handbuch der Röm. Alterthümer, vol. vii., p. 341, where it is stated that by the twelve Tables the number of tibicines was limited to ten, and that before the Punic war, at least, præficæ were employed.—

[b] αὐλητὰς καὶ τὸν ὄχλον [c] θορυβούμενον, λέγει αὐτοῖς,[1] 24. "Ἀναχωρεῖτε· οὐ γὰρ ἀπέθανε τὸ κοράσιον, ἀλλὰ [d] καθεύδει." Καὶ κατεγέλων αὐτοῦ. 25. Ὅτε δὲ [e] ἐξεβλήθη ὁ ὄχλος, εἰσελθὼν [f] ἐκράτησε τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῆς, καὶ ἠγέρθη τὸ κοράσιον. 26. καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ἡ [g] φήμη αὕτη εἰς ὅλην τὴν γῆν ἐκείνην.

27. Καὶ παράγοντι ἐκεῖθεν τῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ δύο τυφλοί, κράζοντες καὶ λέγοντες, "[h] Ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, υἱὲ[2] Δαβίδ." 28. Ἐλθόντι δὲ εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, προσῆλθον αὐτῷ οἱ τυφλοί, καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Πιστεύετε ὅτι δύναμαι τοῦτο ποιῆσαι;" Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Ναί, Κύριε." 29. Τότε ἥψατο τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν, λέγων, "Κατὰ τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν γενηθήτω ὑμῖν." 30. Καὶ ἀνεῴχθησαν[3] αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοί· καὶ [i] ἐνεβριμήσατο[4] αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, λέγων, "Ὁρᾶτε μηδεὶς γινωσκέτω." 31. Οἱ δὲ ἐξελθόντες [j] διεφήμισαν αὐτὸν ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ γῇ ἐκείνῃ.

b Rev. xviii. 22.
c Mk. v. 39. Acts xvii. 5; xx. 10.
d 1 Thess. v. 10 (= to be dead).
e Ch. xxi. 12.
f Mk. i. 31.
g Lk. iv. 14.
h Ch. xv. 22; xx. 30.
i Mk. i. 43.
j Ch. xxviii. 15. Mk. i. 45.

[1] For λεγει αυτοις ℵBD have ελεγεν.
[2] For υιε B has υιος.
[3] ηνεωχ. in BD.
[4] ενεβριμηθη in ℵB, a less usual form avoided by scribes.

Ver. 24. ἀναχωρεῖτε, retire! Hired mourning distasteful to Jesus, who gladly avails Himself of this opportunity of dismissing them.—οὐ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, no need of you yet, for the maid (κοράσιον, dim. for κόρη, but = puella in late Greek) is not dead. A welcome word to naturalistic commentators, giving a plausible basis for the hypothesis of an apparent death or swoon (Schleier., Keim, etc.), not to be taken prosaically as meant to deny death. Yet Carr (C. G. T.) thinks it open to question whether it ought not to be taken literally, and doubtful whether κοιμᾶσθαι is ever used in a metaphorical sense in the N. T. or elsewhere. The derisive laughter of the crowd (κατεγέλων) is good evidence to the contrary.—ἐξεβλήθη: not to be pressed as implying physical force, non vi et manibus, sed voce jussuque (Fritzsche), a tone and manner not to be resisted, the house therefore soon cleared of the noisy crowd.—Ver. 26, ἐξῆλθεν ἡ φ., against the wish of Jesus, who did not desire raising the dead to be regarded as a part of His ordinary work. Perhaps that was why He said: "she sleepeth" (Weiss, L. J., Marcus-Evang.).—τὴν γῆν ἐκείνην: Weiss thinks the expression implies that the evangelist is a stranger to Palestine (Weiss-Meyer).

Vv. 27-31. Two blind men.—This miracle-narrative and the next are comparatively colourless and uninteresting. They bring under notice two new types of disease, blindness and possession accompanied with dumbness. The interest in both cases, however, lies not so much in the cures as in the words spoken.—Ver. 27. τυφλοί, blindness common from limestone dust in the air and changing temperature.—υἱὸς Δ., Messianic appellation, first time addressed to Jesus, a point of interest for the evangelist; not welcome to Jesus, who feared the awakening of false expectations. Therefore He took no notice of them on the way to His house, whither He retired after the last incident.—Ver. 28. ἐλθόντι εἰς τ. ο. προσῆλθον: they follow, and Jesus at last takes notice of them, asking if they have faith in His power. His previous conduct might throw doubt on His willingness, but that is dispelled by speaking to them.—ναί, a prompt glad yes is their answer. Ver. 30.—ἠνεῴχθησαν, a Hebraism. The Jews thought of blind eyes as shut, and of seeing eyes as open.—ἐνεβριμήθη, sternly enjoined (vide Mk. i. 43). The paraphrase of Euthy. Zig. gives a vivid idea of the meaning, "looked severely, contracting His eyebrows, and shaking His head at them, as they are wont to do who wish to make sure that secrets will be kept".—Ver. 31. ἐν ὅλῃ τ. γ. ε. (vide remarks on ver. 26).

k Ch. xii. 22.
l Acts xvii. 31. 1 Cor. vi. 2; xiv. 21 (same use of ἐν, vide also Sir. xiii. 4; xxx. 13).
m Ch. iv. 23, but there intrans., here with accus.

32. Αὐτῶν δὲ ἐξερχομένων, ἰδού, προσήνεγκαν αὐτῷ ἄνθρωπον[1] [k] κωφὸν δαιμονιζόμενον. 33. καὶ ἐκβληθέντος τοῦ δαιμονίου, ἐλάλησεν ὁ κωφός· καὶ ἐθαύμασαν οἱ ὄχλοι, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι[2] οὐδέποτε ἐφάνη οὕτως ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ." 34. Οἱ δὲ Φαρισαῖοι ἔλεγον, "[l] Ἐν τῷ [l] ἄρχοντι τῶν δαιμονίων ἐκβάλλει τὰ δαιμόνια."

35. ΚΑΙ [m] περιῆγεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὰς πόλεις πάσας καὶ τὰς κώμας, διδάσκων ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ κηρύσσων τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς βασιλείας, καὶ θεραπεύων πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν ἐν

[1] ℵB omit ανθρωπον. [2] ℵBCD omit οτι.

Vv. 32-34. The dumb demoniac (Lk. xi. 14). A slight narrative, very meagre in comparison with the story of the Gerasene demoniac, the interest centring in the conflicting comments of spectators which probably secured for it a place in the Logia of Matthew. Ver. 32. Αὐτῶν ἐξερχομένων: while the two blind men are going out they bring another sufferer to the great Healer; an incessant stream of applicants for aid flowing towards His door.—κωφὸν: dumbness the apparent symptom. The word literally means blunt, and in Homer (Il., ii. 390) is applied to a weapon. In N. T. it is used with reference to the senses and faculties, here the faculty of speech (ver. 33, ἐλάλησεν), in xi. 5, that of hearing.—δαιμονιζόμενον, the inferred cause. It was known that the dumbness was not due to any physical defect. Speech seemed to be prevented by some foreign spiritual power; the mental disease, possibly, melancholy.—Ver. 33. ἐλάλησεν: that cured, speech followed.—ἐθαύμασαν: the crowd present wondered, hearing one speak whom they had so long known to be dumb.—οὐδέποτε ἐφάνη, etc.: thus they expressed their surprise; the like was never seen in Israel. ἐφάνη is impersonal, the reference being to the change in the man; the manner of expression is colloquial, and it is idle to discuss the precise meaning of οὕτως, and what nominative is to be supplied to ἐφάνη. It is more to the purpose to inquire why this seemingly minor miracle should make so great an impression. Perhaps we should not isolate it, but take it along with the other marvels that followed in quick succession as joint causes of admiration. The people were worked up into a high measure of astonishment which, at last, found vent in these words. So in effect Euthy., also Rosenmüller ("tot signa, tam admirabilia, tam celeriter, neque contactu tantum, sed et verbo, et in omni morborum genere").—Ver. 34. οἱ δὲ Φαρ. ἔλεγον. The multitude admired, but the Pharisees said. They are watching closely the words and acts of Jesus and forming their theories. They have got one for the cures of demoniacs.—ἐν τῷ ἄρχοντι τ. δ: He casts out demons in the power of the prince of demons. Probably they did not believe it, but it was plausible. How differently men view the same phenomenon (vide on Matt. xii. 22 f.).

Vv. 35-38. These verses look both backwards and forwards, winding up the preceding narrative of words and deeds from chap. v. onwards, and introducing a new aspect of Christ's work and experience. The connection with what follows is strongest, and the verses might, with advantage, have formed the commencement of chap. x. Yet this general statement about Christ's teaching and healing ministry (ver. 35) obviously looks back to iv. 23, 24, and, therefore, fitly ends the story to which the earlier summary description of the ministry in Galilee forms the introduction. It is, at the same time, the prelude to a second act in the grand drama (chap. ix. 35—xiv. 12). In the first act Jesus has appeared as an object of general admiration; in the second He is to appear as an object of doubt, criticism, hostility.

Ver. 36. Ἰδὼν δὲ τοὺς ὄχλους: in the course of His wanderings Jesus had opportunities of observing the condition of the people, and at length arrived at a clear, definite view as to the moral and religious situation. It was very sombre, such as to move His compassion (ἐσπλαγχνίσθη, post classical, in Gospels only). The state of things suggested two pictures to His mind: a neglected flock of sheep, and a harvest going to waste for lack of reapers. Both imply, not only a pitiful plight of the people, but a blameworthy neglect of duty on the τῷ λαῷ.[1] 36. ἰδὼν δὲ τοὺς ὄχλους, [n] ἐσπλαγχνίσθη περὶ αὐτῶν, ὅτι ἦσαν ἐκλελυμένοι[2] καὶ ἐρριμμένοι[3] ὡσεὶ πρόβατα μὴ ἔχοντα ποιμένα. 37. τότε λέγει τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Ὁ μὲν [o] θερισμὸς πολύς, οἱ δὲ ἐργάται ὀλίγοι· 38. δεήθητε οὖν τοῦ κυρίου τοῦ θερισμοῦ, ὅπως [p] ἐκβάλῃ ἐργάτας εἰς τὸν θερισμὸν αὐτοῦ."

n here only with περί; with ἐπί, Ch. xiv. 11. Mk. vi. 34; viii. 2 al.
o Ch. xiii. 30, 39. Mk. iv. 29. John x. 4. Lk. x. 2.
p Lk. x. 2.

[1] εν τω λαω brought in probably from iv. 23. BC[1]DΔΣ omit (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] εκλελυμενοι (T. R.) is a very weakly-supported reading, having only one important uncial, L, on its side. ℵBCDΔΣ al. have εσκυλμενοι, doubtless the true reading.

[3] The variation here is simply a matter of spelling: ερ. in ℵBCL (Tisch., W.H.), ερρ. (T. R.) ΓΔ ρερ. D.

part of their religious guides—the shepherds by profession without the shepherd heart, the spiritual husbandmen without an eye for the whitening fields and skill to handle the sickle. The Pharisaic comments on the Capernaum mission festival (ix. 11) were sufficient to justify the adverse judgment. Their question on that occasion meant much, and would not be forgotten by Jesus.—ἐσκυλμένοι, ἐριμμένοι, graphic words, clear as to general import, though variously understood as to their precise meaning. The former may mean "flayed" (from σκῦλον, Holtz., H. C.), or "hunted" and tired out (Weiss-Meyer), the practical sense is "exhausted by long, aimless wandering, foot-sore and fleece-torn". The other points to the natural sequel—lying down, scattered about (ῥίπτω), here one, there another, on the hill side, just where they found themselves unable to go a step further. A flock can get into such a condition only when it has no shepherd to care for it and guide it to the pastures.

Vv. 37, 38. θερισμὸς: a new figure coming in abruptly in the narrative, but not necessarily so close together in Christ's mind. The one figure suits the mood of passive sympathy; the other, that of the harvest, suits the mood of active purpose to help. It would not be long in the case of Jesus before the one mood passed into the other. He could not be a mere pitying spectator. He must set on foot a mission of help. The Capernaum feast was the first stage; the mission of the twelve the second. The word "harvest" implies spiritual susceptibility. Weiss protests against this inference as allegorising interpretation of a parabolic saying which simply points to the want of suitable labourers (vide L. I., ii. 119). So also Schanz maintains, against Euthy., that not susceptibility but need is pointed to. But, as against Weiss, it is pertinent to ask: what suggested the figure of a harvest if not possibilities of gain to the kingdom of God, given sympathetic workers? This hopeful judgment as to the people of the land, contrasted with Pharisaic despair and contempt, was characteristic of Jesus (vide my Kingdom of God, chap. v.).—ἐργάται ὀλίγοι: professional labourers, men busying themselves with inculcation of moral and religious observances, abundant; but powerless to win the people because without sympathy, hope, and credible acceptable Gospel. Their attempts, if any, only make bad worse—(sub legis onere ægrotam plebem, Hilary). "Few"—as yet only one expert, but He is training others, and He has faith in prayer for better men and times.—Ver. 38. δεήθητε: the first step in all reform—deep, devout desire out of a profound sense of need. The time sick and out of joint—God mend it!—ὅπως ἐκβάλῃ, etc. The prayer, expressed in terms of the parabolic figure, really points to the ushering in of a new era of grace and humanity—Christian as opposed to Pharisaic, legal, Rabbinical. In the old time men thought it enough to care for themselves even in religion; in the new time, the impulse and fashion would be to care for others. ἐκβάλῃ, a strong word (cf. Mk. iv. 29, ἀποστέλλει), even allowing for the weakened force in later Greek, implying Divine sympathy with the urgent need. Men must be raised up who can help the time. Christ had thorough faith in a benignant Providence. Luke gives this logion in connection with the mission of the seventy (x. 2).

a Ch. xii. 43. Mk. i. 23, 26; iii. 11. Lk. iv. 33, 36 al. (in ref. to demons.).
b once only in Mt. and Mk. (vi. 30), often in Lk.

X. 1. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τοὺς δώδεκα μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς ἐξουσίαν πνευμάτων [a] ἀκαθάρτων, ὥστε ἐκβάλλειν, αὐτά, καὶ θεραπεύειν πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν. 2. Τῶν δὲ δώδεκα [b] ἀποστόλων τὰ ὀνόματά ἐστι ταῦτα· πρῶτος Σίμων ὁ λεγόμενος Πέτρος, καὶ Ἀνδρέας ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ· Ἰάκωβος[1] ὁ τοῦ Ζεβεδαίου, καὶ Ἰωάννης ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ· Φίλιππος, καὶ Βαρθολομαῖος· 3. Θωμᾶς, καὶ Ματθαῖος ὁ τελώνης· Ἰάκωβος ὁ τοῦ Ἀλφαίου, καὶ

[1] ℵB have και before Ιακωβος.

Chapter X. The Galilean Mission. The beginnings of the mission to the neglected "lost" sheep of Israel may be found in the Capernaum feast (ix. 10). As time went on Jesus felt increasingly the pressure of the problem and the need for extended effort. Matthew's call was connected with the first stage of the movement, and that disciple was Christ's agent in bringing together the gathering of publicans and sinners. He is now about to employ all the intimate disciples He has collected about Him and through them to spread the movement all over Galilee. They will be a poor substitute for Himself, yet not wholly useless like the scribes, for they have heard His teaching on the hill and imbibed somewhat of His spirit of love.

Vv. 1-15. The Twelve: their names, mission, and relative instructions (Mk. iii. 14-19, vi. 7-13, Lk. ix. 1-6).

Ver. 1. προσκαλεσάμενος: this does not refer to the call to become disciples, but to a call to men already disciples to enter on a special mission.—τοὺς δώδεκα, the Twelve. The article implies that a body of intimate disciples, twelve in number, already existed. The evangelist probably had Mk. iii. 14 in view. He may also reflect in his language the feeling of the apostolic age to which the Twelve were familiar and famous. Hitherto we have made the acquaintance of five of the number (iv. 18-22, ix. 9). Their calls are specially reported to illustrate how the body of twelve grew.—ἐξουσίαν, authority, not to preach, as we might have expected, but to heal. The prominence given to healing in this mission may surprise and disappoint, and even tempt to entertain the suspicion that the exalted ideas concerning the Twelve of after years have been read into the narrative. This element is certainly least prominent in Mark. Yet to some extent it must have had a place in the mission. The people in Galilee had all heard of Jesus and His work, and it was no use sending the Twelve unless they could carry with them something of His power.—πνευμάτων α., genitive objective, as in John xvii. 3, Rom. ix. 21. ὥστε ἐκ . . . καὶ θεραπεύειν, dependent also on ἐξουσίαν (cf. 1 Cor. ix. 5), ὥστε with infinitive indicating tendency of the power. πᾶσαν νόσον, etc., echo of iv. 23.

Ver. 2. τῶν δὲ δώδ. ἀποστόλων: etc., the evangelist finds here a convenient place for giving the names of the Twelve, called here for the first and last time ἀπόστολοι, with reference at once to the immediate minor mission (from ἀποστέλλειν, vide v. 5) and to the later great one. One half of them are for us mere names, and of one or two even the names are doubtful, utterly obscure, yet, doubtless, in their time and sphere faithful witnesses. They are arranged in pairs, as if following the hint of Mark that they were sent out by two and two, each pair connected with a καὶ (so in Luke, not in Mark).—πρῶτος: at the head of the list stands Peter, first not only numerically (Meyer) but in importance, a sure matter of fact, though priestly pretensions based on it are to be disregarded. He is first in all the lists.—ὁ λεγ. Πέτρος: a fact already stated (iv. 18), here repeated probably because the evangelist had his eye on Mark's list (iii. 16) or possibly to distinguish this Simon from another in the list (No. 11). Ver. 3. Βαρθολομαῖος, the 6th, one of the doubtful names, commonly identified with Nathanael (John i. 46).—Ματθαῖος ὁ τελώνης, one of four in the list with epithets: Peter the first, Simon the zealot, Judas the traitor, Matthew the publican; surely not without reason, except as echoing ix. 9 (Meyer). Matthew stands second in his pair here, before Thomas in Mark and Luke. Position and epithet agree, indicative, Euthy. suggests, of modesty and self-abasement.—Ver. 4. Σίμων ὁ Καναναῖος: Luke gives τὸν καλ. Ζηλωτὴν = the zealot, possibly a piece of inc again in ref. to Judas, Ch. xxvi. 15; xxvii. 3, 4 al.

Λεββαῖος ὁ ἐπικληθεὶς Θαδδαῖος[1] 4. Σίμων ὁ Κανανίτης,[2] καὶ Ἰούδας[3] Ἰσκαριώτης ὁ καὶ [c] παραδοὺς αὐτόν.

5. Τούτους τοὺς δώδεκα ἀπέστειλεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, παραγγείλας αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Εἰς ὁδὸν ἐθνῶν μὴ ἀπέλθητε, καὶ εἰς πόλιν Σαμαρειτῶν μὴ εἰσέλθητε· 6. πορεύεσθε δὲ μᾶλλον πρὸς τὰ [d] πρόβατα τὰ [d] ἀπολωλότα [e] οἴκου Ἰσραήλ. 7. πορευόμενοι δὲ κηρύσσετε, λέγοντες, Ὅτι ἤγγικεν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν. 8. ἀσθενοῦντας θεραπεύετε,

d Ch. xv. 24.
e Ch. xv. 24. Acts ii. 36. vii. 42.

[1] D has Λεββαιος (εος) alone. ℵB have Θαδδαιος alone. The reading in T. R. as above is simply a conflate reading combining the two by a connecting phrase, ο επικληθεις.

[2] BCDL have Καναναιος, probably the true form.

[3] ο before Ισκαρ. in ℵBDΔ.

formation based on an independent reliable source, or his interpretation of the Hebrew word קַנְאָנִי. The form Καναναῖος seems to be based on the idea that the word referred to a place. Jerome took it to mean "of Cana," "de vico Chana Galilaeae". Ἰούδας ὁ Ἰσκαριώτης: last in all the lists, as Peter is first. The epithet is generally taken as denoting the place to which he belonged: the man of Issachar (Grotius); but most render: the man of Kerioth (in Judah, Joshua xv. 24, Jer. xlviii, 41); in that case the one non-Galilean disciple. The ending, -ωτης, is Greek; in Mark the Hebrew ending, -ωθ, is given.

Vv. 5-15. Instructions to the missioners. Ver. 5. Τούτους τ. δώδ: These, the Twelve, Jesus sent forth, under the injunctions following (παραγγείλας).—εἰς ὁδὸν ἐθ. μὴ ἀπέλθητε. This prohibition occurs in Matthew only, but there is no reason to doubt its authenticity except indeed that it went without saying. The very prohibition implies a consciousness that one day the Gospel would go the way of the Gentiles just as Mt. v. 17 implies consciousness that fulfilling, in the speaker's sense, would involve annulling.—ὁδὸν ἐθνῶν, the way towards (Meyer), the genitive being a genitive of motion (Fritzsche, Kühner, § 414, 4), or a way within or of, parallel to πόλιν Σαμαρειτῶν in next clause.—εἰς π. Σαμ., not even in Samaria should they carry on their mission. The prohibition is total. πόλιν does not refer to the chief city (Erasmus, Annot., metropolis) or to the towns as distinct from the rural parts through which at least they might pass (Grotius). It means any considerable centre of population. The towns and villages are thought of as the natural sphere of work (ver. 11). The reason of the double prohibition is not given, but doubtless it lay in the grounds of policy which led Christ to confine His own work to Israel, and also in the crude religious state of the disciples.—Ver. 6. ἀπολωλότα, "the lost sheep," an expression consecrated by prophetic use (Jer. l. 6, Sweet's ed., xxvii. 6), the epithet here first introduced, often occurring in Gospels, was used by Jesus not in blame but in pity. "Lost" in His vocabulary meant "neglected" (ix. 36), in danger also of course, but not finally and hopelessly given over to perdition, salvable if much needing salvation. The term is ethical in import, and implies that the mission had moral and religious improvement mainly in view, not mere physical benefit through healing agency; teaching rather than miraculous acts.—Ver. 7. πορευόμενοι κηρύσσετε, as ye go, keep preaching; participle and finite verb, both present. Preaching first in the Master's thoughts, if not in the evangelist's (ver. 1).—ἤγγικεν ἡ βασιλεία τ. ο., the theme is, of course, the kingdom longed for by all, constantly on the lips of Jesus. The message is: It has come nigh to you and is here. Very general, but much more, it may be taken for granted, was said. The apprentice apostles could as yet make no intelligent theoretic statement concerning the Kingdom, but they could tell not a little about the King, the Master who sent them, the chief object of interest doubtless for all receptive souls. It was a house mission (not in synagogue) on which they were sent (ver. 12). They were to live as guests in selected dwellings, two in one, and two in another, for a time, and their preaching would take the form of familiar conversation on what they had seen and f Rom. iii. 24. g Lk. xviii. 12; xxi. 19. Acts i. 18; viii. 20; xxii. 28.

λεπροὺς καθαρίζετε, νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε,[1] δαιμόνια ἐκβάλλετε. [f] δωρεὰν ἐλάβετε, δωρεὰν δότε. 9. Μὴ [g] κτήσησθε χρυσόν, μηδὲ ἄργυρον, μηδὲ χαλκὸν εἰς τὰς ζώνας ὑμῶν, 10. μὴ πήραν εἰς ὁδόν, μηδὲ δύο χιτῶνας, μηδὲ ὑποδήματα, μηδὲ ῥάβδον· ἄξιος γὰρ ὁ ἐργάτης τῆς heard Jesus do and say. They would talk by the hour, healing acts would be very occasional, one or two in a village.

[1] νεκρους εγειρετε is wanting in L, but well attested by ℵBCDΣ. The position varies in MSS., after δαιμ. εκβαλλ. in PΔ, before λεπ. καθαρ. in ℵBCDΣ.

Ver. 8. νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε. This clause is wanting in several Codd., including L, so often associated with ℵB in good readings. It is, however, too well attested to be omitted. It must either have found a place in the autograph, or it must have crept in as a gloss at a very early period. The evangelist's aim seems to be to represent Christ as empowering the disciples to do the works He is reported to have done Himself in chaps. viii., ix. That purpose demands the inclusion of raising the dead as the crowning miracle of the group (raising of daughter of Jairus). Yet it is hard to believe that Jesus would give power to the disciples to do, as an ordinary part of their mission, what He Himself did only on one or two exceptional occasions. The alternatives seem to be either an early gloss introduced into the text, or an inaccuracy on the part of the evangelist. Meyer takes the former view, Weiss apparently the latter. We cannot take the phrase in a spiritual sense, the other clauses all pointing to physical miracles. This clause is not in the accounts of Mark and Luke. The seventy on their return (Luke x. 17) make no mention of raising the dead.

Ver. 9. μὴ κτήσησθε: Vulgate: nolite possidere. But the prohibition is directed not merely against possessing, but against acquiring (κέκτημαι, perfect = possess). The question is as to the scope of the prohibition. Does it refer merely to the way, or also to the mission? In one case it will mean: do not anxiously procure extensive provision for your journey (Meyer); in the other it will mean, more comprehensively: do not procure for the way, or during the mission, the things named. In other words, it will be an injunction to begin and carry on the mission without reward. Though the reference seems to be chiefly to the starting point, it must be in reality to their conduct during the mission. There was no need to say: do not obtain gold before starting, for that was practically impossible. There was need to say: do not take gold or silver from those whom you benefit, for it was likely to be offered, and acceptance of gifts would be morally prejudicial. That, therefore, is what Jesus prohibits, true to His habit of insisting on the supreme value of motive. So Jerome (condemnatio avaritiae), Chrys., Hilary, etc. So also Weiss. Holtz. (H.C.), while concurring in this interpretation, thinks the prohibition suits better the conduct of the Christ-merchants in the Didache than the circumstances of the disciples.—χρυσὸν, ἄργυρον, χαλκὸν: an anticlimax, not gold, not silver, not even a copper.—εἰς τὰς ζώνας, in your girdles, used for this purpose as well as for gathering up the loose mantle, or in purses suspended from the girdle. "It was usual for travellers to carry purses (φασκώλια) suspended from their girdles, in which they carried the pence" (Euthy.).—Ver. 10. πήραν, a wallet for holding provisions, slung over the shoulder (Judith xiii. 10, πήραν τῶν βρωμάτων).—δύο χιτῶνας: not even two under-garments, shirts; one would say very necessary for comfort and cleanliness in a hot climate, and for travellers along dusty roads. In Mark the prohibition seems to be against wearing two at the same time (vi. 8); here against carrying a spare one for a change. Possibly we ought not to take these instructions too literally, but in their spirit.—ὑποδήματα: this does not mean that they were to go barefooted, but either without a spare pair, or without more substantial covering for the feet (shoes) than the light sandals they usually wore—mere soles to keep the feet off the hard road. Lightfoot (Hor. Heb.) distinguishes between the two thus: "usus delicatoris fuerunt calcei, durioris atque utilioris sandalia". He states that there were sandals, whose soles were of wood, and upper part of leather, the two joined by nails, and that they were sometimes made of rushes or the bark of palms.

τροφῆς αὐτοῦ ἐστιν.[1] 11. Εἰς ἣν δ' ἂν πόλιν ἢ κώμην εἰσέλθητε, [h] ἐξετάσατε τίς ἐν αὐτῇ ἄξιός ἐστι· κἀκεῖ μείνατε, ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθητε. 12. εἰσερχόμενοι δὲ εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, ἀσπάσασθε αὐτήν. 13. καὶ ἐὰν μὲν ᾖ ἡ οἰκία ἀξία, ἐλθέτω ἡ εἰρήνη ὑμῶν ἐπ' αὐτήν· ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ᾖ [i] ἀξία, ἡ εἰρήνη ὑμῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς [i] ἐπιστραφήτω. 14. καὶ ὃς ἐὰν[2] μὴ δέξηται ὑμᾶς, μηδὲ ἀκούσῃ τοὺς λόγους ὑμῶν, ἐξερχόμενοι[3] τῆς [j] οἰκίας ἢ τῆς πόλεως ἐκείνης, ἐκτινάξατε τὸν [j] κονιορτὸν[4] τῶν ποδῶν h Ch. ii. 8. John xxi. 12.

i Ch. xii. 44. 1 Pet. ii. 25.
j Lk. ix. 5; x. 11. Acts xiii. 51; xxii. 23.

[1] ℵBCL omit εστιν. [2] αν in ℵBDL. [3] ℵBD add εξω.
[4] ℵC add εκ (Tisch.). BD omit (with T. R.). W.H. have it on margin.

—ῥάβδον: not even a staff! That can hardly be meant. Even from the romantic or picturesque point of view the procession of pilgrim missioners would not be complete without a staff each in their hand. If not a necessity, at least, it was no luxury. Mark allows the staff, creating trouble for the harmonists. Grotius suggests: no second staff besides the one in hand! Glassius, quoted by Fritzsche in scorn, suggests a staff shod with iron (scipio) for defence. Ebrard, with approval of Godet, thinks of two different turns given to the Aramaic original כי אם מטה = either "if you take one staff it is enough," or "if, etc., it is too much". Really the discrepancy is not worth all this trouble. Practically the two versions come to the same thing: take only a staff, take not even a staff; the latter is a little more hyperbolical than the former. Without even a staff, is the ne plus ultra of austere simplicity and self-denial. Men who carry out the spirit of these precepts will not labour in vain. Their life will preach the kingdom better than their words, which may be feeble and helpless. "Nothing," says Euthy., "creates admiration so much as a simple, contented life" (βίος ἄσκευος καὶ ὀλιγαρκής). — ἄξιος . . . τ. τροφῆς: a maxim universally recognised. A labourer of the type described is not only worthy but sure of his meat; need have no concern about that. This is one of the few sayings of our Lord referred to by St. Paul (1 Cor. ix. 14), whose conduct as an apostle well illustrates the spirit of the instructions to the Twelve.

Vv. 11-15. ἐξετάσατε (ἐκ ἐτάζω, from ἐτεός, true; to inquire as to the truth of a matter). A host to be carefully sought out in each place: not to stay with the first who offers.—ἄξιος points to personal moral worth, the deciding consideration to be goodness, not wealth (worth so much). The host to be a man generally respected, that no prejudice be created against the mission (ne praedicationis dignitas suscipientis infamiâ deturpetur, Jerome).—μείνατε: having once secured a host, abide with him, shift not about seeking better quarters and fare, hurting the feelings of the host, and damaging your character, as self-seeking men.—Ver. 12. τὴν οἰκίαν, the house selected after due inquiry.—ἀσπάσασθε, salute it, not as a matter of formal courtesy, but with a serious mind, saying: "peace be with you," thinking the while of what peace the kingdom can bring.—Ver. 13. ἐὰν μὲν ᾖ ἡ ὀ. ἀξία: after all pains have been taken, a mistake may be made; therefore the worthiness of the house is spoken of as uncertain (ᾖ, in an emphatic position, so μὴ ᾖ, in next clause).—ἐλθέτω ἡ εἰρήνη . . . ἐπιστραφήτω. The meaning is: the word of peace will not be spoken in vain; it will bless the speaker if not those addressed. It is always good to wish peace and good for others, however the wish may be received. There is a tacit warning against being provoked by churlish treatment. Ver. 14. ὃς ἐὰν μὴ δέξηται: Christ contemplates an unfavourable result of the mission in the host's house, or in the town or village generally. The construction of the sentence is anacolouthistic, beginning one way, ending another: rhetorical in effect, and suitable to emotional speech; cf. Lk. xxi. 6: "these things ye see—days will come in which not one stone will be left upon another" (vide Winer, § 63, on such constructions).—ἐξερχόμενοι: when an unreceptive attitude has once been decidedly taken up, there is nothing for it but to go away. Such a crisis severely tests the temper and spirit of promoters of good causes.—ἐκτινάξατε τὸν κονιορτὸν: a symbolic act practised by the Pharisees on passing from heathen to Jewish soil, the former being regarded as unclean ὑμῶν. 15. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, [k] ἀνεκτότερον ἔσται γῇ Σοδόμων καὶ Γομόρρων ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως, ἢ τῇ πόλει ἐκείνῃ.

16. "Ἰδού, ἐγὼ [l] ἀποστέλλω ὑμᾶς ὡς πρόβατα ἐν μέσῳ λύκων· γίνεσθε οὖν φρόνιμοι ὡς οἱ ὄφεις, καὶ [m] ἀκέραιοι ὡς αἱ περιστεραί. 17. [n] προσέχετε δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων· παραδώσουσι γὰρ ὑμᾶς εἰς συνέδρια, καὶ ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν [o] μαστιγώσουσιν ὑμᾶς· k Ch. xi. 22, 24. Lk. x. 12, 14.

l Ch. xi. 10; xxiii. 34. Rom. x. 15.
m Rom. xvi. 19. Phil. ii. 15.
n vide at Ch. vii. 15.
o Ch. xx. 19; xxiii. 34. Mk. x. 34. Lk. xviii. 33. John xix. 11. Heb. xii. 6.

(Light., Hor. Heb.): Easy to perform, not easy to perform in a right spirit; too apt to be the outcome of irritation, disappointment, and wounded vanity = they did not appreciate me, I abandon them to their fate. Christ meant the act to symbolise the responsibility of the inhabitants for the result = leave the place, feeling that you have done your duty, not in anger but in sadness. The act, if performed, would be a last word of warning (εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς, Mark and Luke). Grotius and Bleek understand it as meaning: "we have nothing more to do with you".—Ver. 15. γῇ Σ. καὶ Γ.: Sodom and Gomorrah, a byword for great iniquity and awful doom (Is. i. 9), γῇ, land for people.—ἀνεκτότερον: yet the punishment of these wicked cities, tragic though it was, or the punishment still in store, more endurable than that of city or village which rejects the message of the kingdom. This may seem an exaggeration, the utterance of passion rather than of sober judgment, and a dangerous thing to say to raw disciples and apprentice missionaries. But the principle involved is plain: the greater the privilege rejected the greater the criminality. The utterance reveals the high value Jesus set on the good tidings He commissioned the Twelve to preach.

Vv. 16-39. Prophetic picture of future apostolic tribulations. An interpolation of our evangelist after his manner of grouping logia of kindred import. The greater part of the material is given in other connections in Mark, and especially in Luke. No feeling of delicacy should prevent even the preacher from taking this view, as it destroys all sense of the natural reality of the Galilean mission to suppose that this passage formed part of Christ's instructions to the Twelve in connection therewith. Reading into the early event the thoughts and experiences of a later time was inevitable, but to get a true picture of the life of Jesus and His disciples, we must keep the two as distinct as possible. There may be a doubt as to ver. 16. It stands at the beginning of the instructions to the Seventy in Luke (x. 2), which, according to Weiss (Matth. Evang., p. 263), are really the instructions to the Twelve in their most original form. But it is hard to believe that Jesus took and expressed so pessimistic a view of the Galilean villagers to whom He was sending the Twelve, as is implied in the phrase, "sheep among wolves," though He evidently did include occasional unreceptivity among the possible experiences of the mission. He may indeed have said something of the kind with an understood reference to the hostility of Pharisaic religionists, but as it stands unqualified, it seems to bear a colouring imported from a later period.

Ver. 16. ἰδού, something important is going to be said.—ἐγὼ, emphatic, Jesus is conscious that connection with Him will be a source not only of power, but of trouble to the Twelve.—ἐν μέσῳ: not to wolves (πρὸς λύκους, Chrys.). They were not sent for that purpose, which would be a mission to destruction, but on an errand of which that would be an incident. ἐν is used here as often, especially in later Greek writers, with a verb of motion to indicate a subsequent chronic state, "the result of a love of conciseness" (Winer, § 50, 4, a).—γίνεσθε . . . περιστεραί. The serpent, the accepted emblem of wisdom (Gen. iii. 1; Ps. lviii. 5)—wary, sharp-sighted (Grotius); the dove of simplicity (Hos. vii. 11, "silly dove," ἄνους, Sept.).—ἀκέραιοι (α, κεράννυμι), unmixed with evil, purely good. The ideal resulting from the combination is a prudent simplicity; difficult to realise. The proverb seems to have been current among the Jews. "God says: 'with me the Israelites are simple as the dove, but against the heathen cunning as the serpent'" (Wünsche, Beiträge).—Ver. 17. τῶν ἀνθρώπων: Weiss, regarding ver. 17 as the beginning of an interpolation, takes τῶν generically = the whole race of men conceived of as on the whole hostile to the truth =

18. καὶ ἐπὶ ἡγεμόνας δὲ καὶ βασιλεῖς ἀχθήσεσθε ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ, εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς καὶ τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. 19. ὅταν δὲ παραδιδῶσιν[1] ὑμᾶς, μὴ μεριμνήσητε πῶς ἢ τί λαλήσητε· [p] δοθήσεται γὰρ ὑμῖν ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ τί λαλήσετε[2]· 20. οὐ γὰρ ὑμεῖς ἐστε οἱ λαλοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν τὸ λαλοῦν ἐν ὑμῖν. 21. [q] Παραδώσει δὲ ἀδελφὸς ἀδελφὸν [q] εἰς θάνατον, καὶ πατὴρ τέκνον· καὶ [r] ἐπαναστήσονται τέκνα ἐπὶ γονεῖς, καὶ [s] θανατώσουσιν αὐτούς. 22. καὶ ἔσεσθε μισούμενοι ὑπὸ πάντων διὰ τὸ ὄνομά μου· ὁ δὲ [t] ὑπομείνας [u] εἰς

p Ch. xx. 23.
q Mat. xiii. 12. 2 Cor. iv. 11 (same phrase).
r Mk. xiii. 12. (Deut. xix. ii. Micah vii. 6.)
s Ch. xxvi. 59; xxvii. 1. 2 Cor. vi. 9.
t Ch. xxiv. 13. Rom. xii. 12.
u Ch. xxiv. 13. Lk. xviii. 5. John xiii. 1.

[1] ℵB have παραδωσιν (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] ℵBC have λαλησητε = what ye ought to speak. The fut. ind. (T. R.) = what ye will speak. The former is to be preferred. DL omit the whole clause from δοθησεται to λαλησητε, an error of similar ending.

κόσμος in the fourth Gospel (xv. 19; xvii. 14). It seems more natural to find in it a reference to the λύκοι of ver. 16. Beware of the class of men I have in view. So Eras., Elsner, Fritzsche.—συνέδρια, the higher tribunals, selected to represent courts of justice of all grades, to denote the serious nature of the danger.—συναγωγαῖς. The synagogue is referred to here, not merely as a place of worship, but as a juridical assembly exercising discipline and inflicting penalties (Grotius). Among these was scourging (μαστιγώσουσιν, vide Acts xxii. 19; xxvi. 11; 2 Cor. xi. 24).—Ver. 18. ἡγεμόνας, provincial governors, including the three degrees: Propraetors, Proconsuls, and Procurators. From the point of view of the evangelist, who conceives the whole discourse as connected with the Galilean mission confined to Jews, the reference can only be to Roman governors in Palestine. But in Christ's mind they doubtless had a larger scope, and pointed to judicial tribulations in the larger, Gentile world.—εἰς μαρτύριον. The compensation for the incriminated will be that when they stand on their defence, they will have an opportunity of witnessing for the Master (ἕνεκεν ἐμου) and the Cause. Observe the combination καὶ δὲ in first clause of this verse, καὶ before ἐπὶ ἡγεμόνας, δὲ after it. It introduces a further particular under a double point of view, with καὶ so far as similar, with δὲ so far as different (Bäumlein, Schulgram., § 675, also Gr. Partikeln, 188, 9). A more formidable experience.

Vv. 19-22. μὴ μεριμνήσητε, etc.: a second counsel against anxiety (Matt. vi. 25), this time not as to food and raiment, but as to speech at a critical hour. With equal emphasis: trouble not yourselves either as to manner or matter, word or thought (πῶς ἢ τί).—δοθήσεται: thought, word, tone, gesture—everything that tends to impress—all will be given at the critical hour (ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ). In the former instance anxiety was restricted to the day (Matt. vi. 34). Full, absolute inspiration promised for the supreme moment.—οὐ γὰρ ὑμεῖς, etc.: not you but the divine Spirit the speaker. οὐ, ἀλλὰ, non tam quam, interprets Grotius, followed by Pricaeus, Elsner, Fritzsche, etc. = not so much you as; as if it were an affair of division of labour, so much ours, so much, and more, God's. It is, however, all God's, and yet all ours. It is a case of immanent action, τὸ λαλοῦν ἐν ὑμῖν, not of a transcendent power coming in upon us to help our infirmity, eking out our imperfect speech. Note the Spirit is called the Spirit τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν, echo of vi. 32. Some of the greatest, most inspired utterances have been speeches made by men on trial for religious convictions. A good conscience, tranquillity of spirit, and a sense of the greatness of the issue involved, make human speech at such times touch the sublime. Theophy. distinguishes the human and the divine in such utterances thus: ours to confess, God's to make a wise apology (τὸ μὲν ὁμολογεῖν ἡμέτερον, τὸ δὲ σοφῶς ἀπολογεῖσθαι Θεοῦ).—Ver. 22. εἰς τέλος, to the end (of the tribulations) described (vv. 21-22); to the end, and not merely at the beginning (Theophy., Beza, Fritzsche, Weiss, etc.). No easy thing to do, when such inhumanities and barbarities are going on, all natural and family affections outraged. But it helps to know, as is here

[v here only in the sense of going over. Similar phrases in Greek and Latin authors.]

τέλος, οὗτος σωθήσεται. 23. ὅταν δὲ διώκωσιν ὑμᾶς ἐν τῇ πόλει ταύτῃ, φεύγετε εἰς τὴν ἄλλην.[1] ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐ μὴ [v] τελέσητε τὰς πόλεις τοῦ[2] Ἰσραήλ, ἕως ἂν[3] ἔλθῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. 24. Οὐκ ἔστι μαθητὴς ὑπὲρ τὸν διδάσκαλον, οὐδὲ

[1] ετεραν in ℵB (W.H. αλλην in margin).

[2] BD omit the article.

[3] ℵBX omit αν.

ndirectly intimated, that there will be an end, that religious animosities will not last for ever. Even persecutors and guillotineers get weary of their savage work. On εἰς τέλος Beza remarks: declarat neque momentaneam neque perpetuam hanc conditionem fore.—οὗτος σωθήσεται, he, emphatic, he and no other, shall be saved, in the day of final award (James i. 12, "shall receive the crown of life"); also, for the word is pregnant, shall be saved from moral shipwreck. How many characters go miserably down through cowardice and lack of moral fibre in the day of trial!

Ver. 23. ὅταν δὲ: the thought takes a new comforting turn, much needed to reconcile disciples to the grim prospect. With courage and loyalty effort for self-preservation is quite compatible. Therefore, when they persecute here flee there.—ἐν τῇ πόλει ταύτῃ, in this city, pointing to it, this standing for one.—φεύγετε, flee, very unheroic apparently, but the bravest soldier, especially an old campaigner, will avail himself of cover when he can.

εἰς τὴν ἑτέραν: the reading of ℵB is to be preferred to ἄλλην of the T.R., the idea being: flee not merely to another city numerically distinct, but to a city presumably different in spirit (vide vi. 24 and xi. 16), where you may hope to receive better treatment. Thus the flight, from being a mere measure of self-preservation, is raised to the dignity of a policy of prudence in the interest of the cause. Why throw away life here among a hostile people when you may do good work elsewhere?—Ἀμὴν γὰρ: reason for the advice solemnly given; an important declaration, and a perplexing one for interpreters.—οὐ μὴ, have no fear lest, ye will certainly not, have finished—τελέσητε. In what sense? "gone over" (A.V.) in their evangelising tour, or done the work of evangelising thoroughly? (ad fidei et evangelicae virtutis perfectionem—Hilary). The former is the more natural interpretation. And yet the connection of thought seems to demand a mental reference to the quality of the work done. Why tarry at one place as if you were under obligation to convert the whole population to the kingdom? The thing cannot be done. The two views may be combined thus: ye shall not have gone through the towns of Israel evangelising them in even a superficial way, much less in a thorough-going manner. Weiss takes the word τελ. as referring not to mission work but to flight = ye shall not have used all the cities as places of refuge, i.e., there will always be some place to flee to. This is beneath the dignity of the situation, especially in view of what follows.—ἕως ἔλθῃ ὁ υἱὸς τ. ἀ. Here again is the peculiar title Son of Man: impersonal, but used presumably as a synonym for "I". What does it mean in this connection? And what is the coming referred to? The latter question can be best answered at a later stage. It has been suggested that the title Son of Man is here used by Christ in opposition to the title Son of David. The meaning of ver. 23 on that view is this: do not think it necessary to tarry at all hazards in one place. Your work anywhere and everywhere must be very imperfect. Even success will mean failure, for as soon as they have received the tidings of the kingdom they will attach wrong ideas to it, thinking of it as a national kingdom and of me as the "Son of David". No thorough work can be done till the Son of Man has come, i.e., till a universal Gospel for humanity has begun to be preached (Lutteroth). This is a fresh suggestion, not to be despised, on so obscure a subject. We are only feeling our way as to the meaning of some of Christ's sayings. Meantime, all that we can be sure of is that Christ points to some event not far off that will put a period to the apostolic mission.

Vv. 24, 25 point to another source of consolation—companionship with the Master in tribulation. A hard lot, but mine as well as yours; you would not expect to be better off than the Master δοῦλος ὑπὲρ τὸν κύριον αὐτοῦ. 25. [w] ἀρκετὸν τῷ μαθητῇ [x] ἵνα γένηται ὡς ὁ διδάσκαλος αὐτοῦ, καὶ ὁ δοῦλος ὡς ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ. εἰ τὸν [y] οἰκοδεσπότην[1] Βεελζεβοὺλ ἐκάλεσαν,[2] πόσῳ μᾶλλον τοὺς οἰκιακοὺς[3] αὐτοῦ; 26. Μὴ οὖν φοβηθῆτε αὐτούς· οὐδὲν γάρ ἐστι κεκαλυμμένον, ὃ οὐκ ἀποκαλυφθήσεται· καὶ κρυπτόν, ὃ οὐ γνωσθήσεται. 27. ὃ λέγω ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ [z] σκοτίᾳ, εἴπατε ἐν τῷ [z] φωτί· καὶ ὃ [a] εἰς τὸ w vide Ch. vi. 34.

x ἵνα after ἀρκ. Similar phrases in Ch. v. 29, 30; xviii. 6. Lk. xvii. 2 al.
y Ch. xx. 1, 11.
z Lk. xii. 3.
a Lk. i. 44. Acts xi. 22.

[1] B has οικοδεσποτη (dat.). W.H. put this reading in the margin.

[2] επεκαλεσαν in ℵ[c]BCΔΣ al. adopted by most editors. ℵ has the middle voice.

[3] B has the dative here also.

and Lord.—Ver. 25. ἀρκετὸν, not as in vi. 34 a neuter adjective used as a noun, but a predicate qualifying the clause ἵνα γεν., etc., as noun to verb ἐστι understood. ἵνα γένηται instead of the infinitive; ὁ δοῦλος instead of τῷ δούλῳ dependent like τῷ μαθητῇ on ἀρκετὸν, by attraction of the nearer word γένηται (vide Winer, § 66, 5).—οἰκοδεσπότην (-τῃ, B.) points to a more intimate relation between Jesus and the Twelve, that of a head of a house to a family, implying greater honour for the latter, and suggesting an added motive for patient endurance of the common lot.—οἰκοδεσπότης is a late form. Earlier writers said οἰκίας δεσπότης, Lob., Phryn., p. 373.—βεελζεβοὺλ: an opprobrious epithet; exact form of the word and meaning of the name have given more trouble to commentators than it is all worth. Consult Meyer ad loc., Weiss (Meyer) remarks that the name of the Prince of the demons is not yet sufficiently explained. A question of interest is: did the enemies of Jesus call Him Beelzebul (or Beelzebub), or did they merely reproach Him with connection with Beelzebub? Weiss, taking ver. 25 b as an explanatory gloss of the evangelist, based on ix. 3, xii. 24, adopts the latter view; De Wette and Meyer the former. The reading of Codex B, οἰκοδεσπότῃ, favours the second alternative. The dative requires the verb ἐπικάλεσαν to be taken in the sense of to cast up to one. Assuming that the evangelist reports words of Jesus instead of giving a comment of his own, they may quite well contain the information that, among the contemptuous epithets applied to Jesus by His enemies, was this name. It may have been a spiteful pun upon the name, master of the house.—πόσῳ μᾶλλον implies that still worse names will be applied to the Twelve. Dictis respondet eventus, remarks Grotius, citing in proof the epithets γόητας, impostores, applied to the apostles and Christians by Celsus and Ulpian, and the words of Tacitus: convictos in odio humani generis, and the general use of ἄθεοι as a synonym for Christians.—οἰκιακοὺς (again in ver. 36), those belonging to a household or family (from οἰκία, whence also the more common οἰκεῖος bearing a similar meaning).

Vv. 26, 27. μὴ οὖν φοβηθῆτε: "fear not," and again "fear not" in ver. 28, and yet again, 31, says Jesus, knowing well what temptation there would be to fear. οὖν connects with vv. 24, 25; fear not the inevitable for all connected with me as you are, take it calmly. γάρ supplies a reason for fearlessness arising out of their vocation. It is involved in the apostolic calling that those who exercise it should attract public attention. Therefore, fear not what cannot be avoided if you would be of any use. Fear suits not an apostle any more than a soldier or a sailor, who both take coolly the risks of their calling.—κεκαλυμμένον, ἀποκαλυφθήσεται; κρυπτὸν, γνωσθήσεται: the two pairs of words embody a contrast between Master and disciples as to relative publicity. As movements develop they come more under the public eye. Christ's teaching and conduct were not wholly covered and hidden. There was enough publicity to ensure ample criticism and hostility. But, relatively, His ministry was obscure compared to that of the apostles in after years to which the address looks forward. Therefore, more not less, tribulation to be looked for. The futures ἀποκαλ. γνωσ. with the relative virtually express intention; cf. Mk. iv. 22, where ἵνα occurs; the hidden is hidden in order to be revealed. That is the law of the case to which apostles must reconcile themselves.—Ver. 27. σκοτίᾳ, the darkness of the initial stage; the beginοὖς ἀκούετε, κηρύξατε ἐπὶ τῶν [b] δωμάτων. 28. καὶ μὴ [c] φοβηθῆτε[1] ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποκτεινόντων[2] τὸ σῶμα, τὴν δὲ ψυχὴν μὴ δυναμένων ἀποκτεῖναι· φοβήθητε[3] δὲ μᾶλλον τὸν δυνάμενον καὶ ψυχὴν καὶ σῶμα ἀπολέσαι ἐν γεέννῃ. 29. οὐχὶ δύο [d] στρουθία ἀσσαρίου πωλεῖται; καὶ ἓν ἐξ αὐτῶν οὐ πεσεῖται ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν [e] ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν· 30 ὑμῶν δὲ καὶ αἱ τρίχες τῆς κεφαλῆς πᾶσαι [f] ἠριθμημέναι εἰσί. 31. μὴ οὖν φοβηθῆτε[4]· πολλῶν στρουθίων διαb Ch. xxiv. 17. Mk. xiii. 15. Lk. v. 19; xvii. 31.

c with ἀπό. Lk. xii. 4.
d Lk. xii. 6, 7.
e 1 Pet. iii. 1; iv. 9.
f Lk. xii. 7. Rev. vii. 9.

[1] So in BDΣ, adopted by W H. Many MSS. have φοβεισθε.

[2] ℵCDΔΣ have the Alexandrian form αποκτεννοντων.

[3] φοβεισθε here in ℵBC against D.

[4] φοβεισθε in ℵBDL (Tisch., W.H al.).

nings of great epoch-making movements always obscure.—φωτί, the light of publicity when causes begin to make a noise in the wide world.—εἰς τὸ οὖς: a phrase current among Greeks for confidential communications. For such communications to disciples the Rabbis used the term לְחַשׁ, to whisper. λαληθέν may be understood = what ye hear spoken into the ear.—δωμάτων, on the roofs; not a likely platform from our western point of view, but the flat-roofed houses of the East are in view. δῶμα in classics means house; in Sept. and N. T., the flat roof of a house; in modern Greek, terrace. Vide Kennedy, Sources of N. T. Greek, p. 121.—κηρύξατε, proclaim with loud voice, suitable to your commanding position, wide audience, and great theme.

Vv. 28-31. New antidote to fear drawn from a greater fear, and from the paternal providence of God. φοβήθητε ἀπὸ like the Hebrew יָרֵא מִן, but also one of several ways in which the Greeks connected this verb with its object.—τὸ σῶμα: that is all the persecutor as such can injure or destroy He not only cannot injure the soul, but the more he assails the physical side the safer the spiritual.—τὸν δυνάμενον καὶ ψ. καὶ σ. Who is that? God, say most commentators. Not so, I believe. Would Christ present God under this aspect in such close connection with the Father who cares even for the sparrows? What is to be greatly feared is not the final condemnation, but that which leads to it—temptation to forsake the cause of God out of regard to self-interest or self-preservation. Shortly the counsel is: fear not the persecutor, but the tempter, not the man who kills you for your fidelity, but the man who wants to buy you off, and the devil whose agent he is.—Ver. 29 στρουθία, dim. for στρουθός, small birds in general, sparrows in particular.—ἀσσαρίου, a brass coin, Latin as, 1/10 of a δραχμή = about ¾d. The smallness of the price makes it probable that sparrows are meant (Fritzsche). We are apt to wonder that sparrows had a price at all.—ἓν . . . οὐ looks like a Hebraism, but found also in Greek writers, "cannot be called either a Graecism or a Hebraism; in every case the writer aims at greater emphasis than would be conveyed by οὐδείς, which properly means the same thing, but had become weakened by usage" (Winer, § 26).—ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν. Chrys. paraphrases: εἰς παγίδα (Hom. 34), whence Bengel conjectured that the primitive reading was not γῆν but πάγην, the first syllable of a little used word falling out. But Wetstein and Fritzsche have pointed out that ἐπὶ does not suit that reading. The idea is that not a single sparrow dies from any cause on wing or perch, and falls dead to the earth.—ἄνευ τ. πατρὸς υ., Origen (c. Celsum, i. 9) remarks: "nothing useful among men comes into existence without God" (ἀθεεί). Christ expresses a more absolute faith in Providence, "the meanest creature passes not out of existence unobserved of your Father".—Ver. 30. ὑμῶν, emphatic position: your hairs.—τρίχες: of little value all together, can be lost without detriment to life or health.—πᾶσαι, all, every one without exception.—ἠριθμημέναι, counted. Men count only valuable things, gold pieces, sheep, etc. Note the perfect participle. They have been counted once for all, and their number noted; one hair cannot go amissing unobserved.—Ver. 31. π. σ. διαφέρετε: once more, as in vi. 26, a comparison between men and birds as to value: ye of more worth than many φέρετε ὑμεῖς. 32. Πᾶς οὖν ὅστις [g] ὁμολογήσει ἐν ἐμοὶ ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὁμολογήσω κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ πατρός μου τοῦ ἐν[1] οὐρανοῖς. 33. ὅστις δ᾽ ἂν [h] ἀρνήσηταί με ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἀρνήσομαι αὐτὸν κἀγὼ[2] ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ πατρός μου τοῦ ἐν[3] οὐρανοῖς. 34. Μὴ νομίσητε ὅτι ἦλθον [i] βαλεῖν εἰρήνην ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν· οὐκ ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰρήνην, ἀλλὰ μάχαιραν. 35. ἦλθον διχάσαι ἄνθρωπον κατὰ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ θυγατέρα κατὰ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτῆς, καὶ νύμφην κατὰ τῆς πενθερᾶς αὐτῆς· 36. καὶ ἐχθροὶ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου οἱ οἰκιακοὶ αὐτοῦ. 37. Ὁ φιλῶν πατέρα ἢ μητέρα ὑπὲρ ἐμέ, οὐκ ἔστι μου ἄξιος· καὶ ὁ φιλῶν υἱὸν ἢ θυγατέρα ὑπὲρ

g also in Lk. xii. 8 (with εν and dat.).
h Ch. xxvi. 70, 72. Lk. xii. 9.
i John xx. 25. Jas. iii. 3. Rev. xiv. 16, 19.

[1] τοις before ουρανοις in BCΣ. [2] καγω αυτον in ℵBDΔΣ.
[3] τοις before ουρ. in BX (W.H. adopt the art. both in 1 and in 3).

sparrows; one hair of your head as much worth to God as one sparrow. "It is a litotes to say that there is a great difference between many sparrows and a human being" (Holtz., H.C.). There is really no comparison between them. It was by such simple comparisons that Jesus insinuated His doctrine of the absolute worth of man.

Vv. 32, 33. Solemn reference to the final Judgment. οὖν points back to ver. 27, containing injunction to make open proclamation of the truth.—πᾶς ὅστις: nominative absolute at the head of the sentence.—ἐν ἐμοί, ἐν αὐτῷ: observe these phrases after the verb in ver. 32 compared with the use of the accusative με, αὐτὸν in the following verse: "confess in me," "deny me," "confess in him," "deny him". Chrysostom's comment is: we confess by the grace of Christ, we deny destitute of grace. Origen (Cremer, Catenae, i. p. 80) interprets the varying construction as indicating that the profit of the faithful disciple lies in fellowship with Christ and the loss of the unfaithful in the lack of such fellowship. (ὅρα δέ, εἰ μὴ τὸ πλεονέκτημα τοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ ὁμολογοῦντος, ἤδη ὄντως ἐν χριστῷ δηλοῦται, ἐκ τοῦ, "κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ" ὁμολογεῖν· τὸ δὲ κακὸν τοῦ ἀρνουμένου, ἐκ τοῦ μὴ συνῆφθαι τῇ ἀρνήσει τὸ "ἐν ἐμοί," ἢ τὸ "ἐν αὐτῷ".)

Vv. 34-39. The whole foregoing discourse, by its announcements and consolations, implies that dread experiences are in store for the apostles of the faith. To the inexperienced the question might naturally suggest itself, why? Can the new religion not propagate itself quietly and peaceably? Jesus meets the question of the surprised disciple with a decided negative.—Ver. 34. μὴ νομίσητε, do not imagine, as you are very likely to do (cf. v. 17).—ἦλθον βαλεῖν: the use of the infinitive to express aim is common in Matt., but Christ has here in view result rather than purpose, which are not carefully distinguished in Scripture. For βαλεῖν Luke has δοῦναι, possibly with a feeling that the former word does not suit εἰρήνην. It is used specially with reference to μάχαιραν. The aorist points to a sudden single action. Christ came to bring peace on earth, but not in an immediate magical way; peace at last through war (Weiss, Matt. Evang.).—μάχαιραν: Luke substitutes διαμερισμόν. The connecting link may be that the sword divides in two (Heb. iv. 12). Grotius says that by the word there should be understood: "non bellum sed dissidium".—Ver. 35. Description of the discord.—διχάσαι, to divide in two (δίχα), to separate in feeling and interest, here only in N.T.; verifies the truth of Grotius' comment as to the "sword".—ἄνθρωπον κατὰ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ. In this and the following clauses it is the young that are set against the old. "In all great revolutions of thought the change begins from the young" (Carr, Cambridge Gr. T.).—νύμφην, a young wife, here as opposed to πενθερᾶς, a daughter-in-law.—Ver. 36. ἐχθροί: the predicate standing first for emphasis; enemies, not friends as one would expect, the members of one's family (οἰκιακοί, as in ver. 25). The passage reproduces freely Micah vii. 6.—Ver. 37. Such a state of matters imposes the necessity of making a very painful choice between relatives and truth.—φιλῶν: this verb denotes natural affection as distinct from ἀγαπάω, which ἐμέ, οὐκ ἔστι μου ἄξιος· 38. καὶ ὃς οὐ λαμβάνει τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀκολουθεῖ ὀπίσω μου, οὐκ ἔστι μου ἄξιος. 39. ὁ εὑρὼν τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἀπολέσει αὐτήν· καὶ ὁ ἀπολέσας τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ εὑρήσει αὐτήν. 40. Ὁ δεχόμενος ὑμᾶς ἐμὲ δέχεται· καὶ ὁ ἐμὲ δεχόμενος δέχεται τὸν ἀποστείλαντά με. 41. ὁ δεχόμενος προφήτην [j] εἰς ὄνομα προφήτου μισθὸν προφήτου λήψεται· καὶ ὁ δεχόμενος δίκαιον εἰς ὄνομα δικαίου μισθὸν δικαίου λήψεται· 42. καὶ ὃς ἐὰν [1] [k] ποτίσῃ ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν τούτων ποτήριον [l] ψυχροῦ μόνον εἰς ὄνομα μαθητοῦ, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐ μὴ ἀπολέσῃ τὸν μισθὸν αὐτοῦ."

j cf. Ch. xviii. 20.
k Ch xxv. 35, 37, 42; xxvii. 48. Lk. xiii. 15. Rom. xii. 20.
l Rev. iii. 15 (here only = cold water).

[1] ος αν in BD.

points to love of an ethical kind. The distinction corresponds to that between amare and diligere. Vide Trench, Synonyms, and Cremer, s. v., ἀγαπάω.—μου ἄξιος. The Master is peremptory; absolutely demands preference of His cause to all claims of earthly relations.—Ver. 38. σταυρὸν. There is here no necessary allusion to the death of Jesus Himself by crucifixion, though one possessing such insight into the course of events, as this whole discourse indicates, must have known quite well when He uttered the words what awaited Himself, the worst possible probable if not certain. The reference is to the custom of the condemned person carrying his own cross. Death by crucifixion, though not practised among the Jews, would be familiar to them through Roman custom. Vide Grotius for Greek and Roman phrases, containing figurative allusions to the cross. This sentence and the next will occur again in this Gospel (Matt. xvi. 24, 25).—Ver. 39. εὑρὼν . . . ἀπολέσει, ἀπολέσας. . . . εὑρήσει: crucifixion, death ignominious, as a criminal—horrible; but horrible though it be it means salvation. This paradox is one of Christ's great, deep, yet ever true words. It turns on a double sense of the term ψυχή as denoting now the lower now the higher life. Every wise man understands and acts on the maxim, "dying to live".

Vv. 40-42. The following sentences might have been spoken in connection with the early Galilean mission, and are accordingly regarded by Weiss as the conclusion of the instructions then given. Luke gives their gist (x. 16) at the close of the instructions to the seventy. After uttering many awful stern sayings, Jesus takes care to make the last cheering. He promises great rewards to those who receive the missionaries, thereby "opening the houses of the whole world to them," Chrysos.—Ver. 40. ἐμε δέχεται: first the principle is laid down that to receive the messenger is to receive the Master who sent him (Matt. xxv. 40), as to receive the Master is to receive God.—Ver. 41. Then in two distinct forms the law is stated that to befriend the representative of Christ and God ensures the reward belonging to that representative.—εἰς ὄνομα, having regard to the fact that he is a prophet or righteous man. The prophet is the principal object of thought, naturally, in connection with a mission to preach truth. But Christ knows (vii. 15) that there are false prophets as well as true; therefore from vocation He falls back on personal character. Here as everywhere we see how jealously He made the ethical interest supreme. "See," says Chrys., commenting on ver. 8, "how He cares for their morals, not less than for the miracles, showing that the miracles without the morals are nought" (Hom. 32). So here He says in effect: let the prophet be of no account unless he be a just, good man. The fundamental matter is character, and the next best thing is sincere respect for it. To the latter Christ promises the reward of the former.—ὁ δεχόμενος δίκαιον . . . μισθὸν δ. λήψεται: a strong, bold statement made to promote friendly feeling towards the moral heroes of the world in the hearts of ordinary people; not the utterance of a didactic theologian scientifically measuring his words. Yet there is a great principle underlying, essentially the same as that involved in St. Paul's doctrine of justification by faith. The man who has goodness enough to reverence the ideal of goodness approximately or perfectly realised in another,

XI. 1. Καὶ ἐγένετο ὅτε ἐτέλεσεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς διατάσσων τοῖς δώδεκα μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, [a] μετέβη ἐκεῖθεν τοῦ διδάσκειν καὶ κηρύσσειν ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν αὐτῶν.

2. Ὁ ΔΕ Ἰωάννης ἀκούσας ἐν τῷ [b] δεσμωτηρίῳ τὰ ἔργα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, πέμψας δύο [1] τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, εἶπεν αὐτῷ, 3. "Σὺ a Ch. xii. 9; xv. 29 (with ἐκεῖθεν).

b Acts v. 21, 23; xvi. 26.

[1] ℵBCDΔΣ have δια. δυο is a harmonistic assimilation to Lk.

though not in himself, shall, in the moral order of the world, be counted as a good man.—Ver. 42. The last word, and the most beautiful; spoken with deep pathos as an aside; about the disciples rather than to them, though heard by them. "Whosoever shall do the smallest service, were it but to give a drink to one of these little ones (ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν τούτων, cf. Matt. xxv. 40) in the name of a disciple, I declare solemnly even he shall without fail have his appropriate reward."—ψυχροῦ: expressive word for water, indicating the quality valued by the thirsty; literally a cup of the cool, suggesting by contrast the heat of the sun and the fierce thirst of the weary traveller. No small boon that cup in Palestine! "In this hot and dry land, where one can wander for hours without coming on a brook or an accessible cistern, you say 'thank you' for a drink of fresh water with very different feelings than we do at home" (Furrer, Wanderungen durch das Heilige Land, p. 118). — Fritzsche remarks on the paucity of particles in vv. 34-42 as indicating the emotional condition of the speaker.

CHAPTER XI. JESUS JUDGED BY AND JUDGING HIS CONTEMPORARIES. We are not to suppose any close connection in time between the events related in this chapter and the Galilean mission. The reverse is implied in the vague introductory statement, that when Jesus had completed His instructions to the Twelve He went away on a teaching and preaching tour among the towns. The important thing is to realise that all that is related here must have taken place after there had been time for the methods, aims, spirit, and way of life of Jesus to manifest themselves, and so to become the subject of general remark. It was a matter of course that a man of such depth, originality, unconventionality, energy and fearless independence would sooner or latter provoke criticism of all shades; from mild, honest doubt to decided reprobation. However popular at first, He must become at last comparatively isolated. By the time the events here related occurred, the reaction had fully set in, and the narrative shows how extensive it was, embracing within its sphere of influence the best in the land represented by the Baptist; the commercial class represented by three cities named; the professional class—the "wise and understanding"; and the zealots in religion.

Ver. 1. ὅτε ἐτέλεσεν διατάσσων. The participle here with a verb signifying to cease as often with verbs signifying to begin, continue, persevere, etc., vide Goodwin, § 879. ἐκεῖθεν, from that place, the place where the mission was given to the Twelve. Where that was we do not know; probably in some place of retirement (dans la retraite, Lutteroth).—πόλεσιν αὐτῶν: the pronoun does not refer to the disciples (μαθηταῖς) as Fritzsche thinks, but to the people of Galilee. While He sent out the Twelve to preach, He continued preaching Himself, only avoiding the places they visited, "giving room to them and time to do their work, for, with Him present and healing, no one would have cared to go near them," Chrysos., Hom. 36.

Vv. 2-6. Message from the Baptist (Lk. vii. 18-23). Ver. 2. δεσμωτηρίῳ (from δεσμόω, δεσμός, a bond), in prison in the fortress of Machærus by the Dead Sea (Joseph., Antiq., 18, 5, 2), a fact already alluded to in iv. 12. By this time he has been a prisoner a good while, long enough to develop a prison mood.—ἀκούσας: not so close a prisoner but that friends and followers can get access to him (cf. Matt. xxv. 36, 43).—τὰ ἔργα τοῦ χριστοῦ: this the subject in which the Baptist is chiefly interested. What is Jesus doing? But the evangelist does not say the works of Jesus, but of the Christ, i.e., of the man who was believed to be the Christ, the works which were supposed to point Him out as the Christ. In what spirit reported, whether simply as news, with sympathy or with jealousy, not indicated.—πέμψας: the news set John on musing, and led to a message of inquiry—διὰ τ. μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, by his εἶ ὁ [c]ἐρχόμενος, ἢ ἕτερον [d]προσδοκῶμεν; 4. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Πορευθέντες ἀπαγγείλατε Ἰωάννῃ, ἃ ἀκούετε καὶ βλέπετε· 5. τυφλοὶ [e]ἀναβλέπουσι, καὶ[1] χωλοὶ περιπατοῦσι· λεπροὶ καθαρίζονται, καὶ κωφοὶ ἀκούουσι· νεκροὶ ἐγείρονται, καὶ

c John vi. 14. Heb. x. 37.
d Lk. i. 21; vii. 19; viii. 40. Acts x. 24. 2 Pet. iii. 12, 14 (all with accus.).
e Ch. xx. 34. Mk. x. 41. Lk. xviii. 41 (= to recover sight).

[1] The texts show some unimportant variations in ref. to the και in this and the following clauses. In the best MSS. there is a και before νεκροι.

disciples, possibly the same men who brought the news. There would be constant coming and going between Galilee and Machærus. The construction is Hebraistic = sent by the hand of.—Ver. 3. εἶπεν αὐτῷ, said to Jesus by them, of course.—Σὺ εἶ: the question a grave one and emphatically expressed: Thou, art Thou ὁ ἐρχόμενος? Art Thou He whom I spoke of as the One coming after me when I was baptising in the Jordan (iii. 11)? It is a question whether Jesus be indeed the Christ. Lutteroth, basing on the hypothesis that for popular Jewish opinion the Christ and the coming One (a prophet like Moses) were different persons, interprets the question thus: "Art Thou, Jesus, whom I know to be the Christ, also the coming Prophet, or must we expect another to fill that rôle?"—ἢ ἕτερον, not ἄλλον, which would have been more appropriate on Lutteroth's view = a numerically distinct person. ἕτ. suggests a different kind of person.—προσδοκῶμεν: may be present indicative (for future) as Beza and Fritzsche take it, or present subjunctive deliberative = ought we to look? (Meyer-Weiss, Holtz., H.C.), the latter preferable. What was the animus or psychological genesis of the question? Doubt in John's own mind, or doubt, bred of envy or jealousy, in the minds of his disciples, or not doubt on Baptist's part, but rather incipient faith? Alternative (2), universal with the fathers (except Tertullian, vide de præscrip., 8, de baptis., 10); (1) common among modern commentators; (3) favoured by Keim, Weizsäcker, and Holtz., H.C.: "beginnende Disposition zum Glauben an Jesu Messianität". The view of the fathers is based on a sense of decorum and implicit reliance on the exact historical value of the statements in fourth Gospel; No. (3), the budding faith hypothesis, is based on too sceptical a view as to the historic value of even the Synoptical accounts of John's early relations with Jesus; No. (1) has everything in its favour. The effect of confinement on John's prophetic temper, the general tenor of this chapter which obviously aims at exhibiting the moral isolation of Jesus, above all the wide difference between the two men, all make for it. Jesus, it had now become evident, was a very different sort of Messiah from what the Baptist had predicted and desiderated (vide remarks on chap. iii. 11-15). Where were the axe and fan and the holy wind and fire of judgment? Too much patience, tolerance, gentleness, sympathy, geniality, mild wisdom in this Christ for his taste.

Vv. 4-6. Answer of Jesus. Ver. 4. ἀπαγγείλατε Ἰ.: go back and report to John for his satisfaction.—ἃ ἀκ. καὶ βλέπετε, what you are seeing and hearing, not so much at the moment, though Luke gives it that turn (vii. 21), but habitually. They were not to tell their master anything new, but just what they had told him before. The one new element is that the facts are stated in terms fitted to recall prophetic oracles (Isaiah xxxv. 5, lxi. 1), while, in part, a historic recital of recent miracles (Matt. viii., ix.). Probably the precise words of Jesus are not exactly reproduced, but the sense is obvious. Tell John your story over again and remind him of those prophetic texts. Let him study the two together and draw his own conclusion. It was a virtual invitation to John to revise his Messianic idea in hope he would discover that after all love was the chief Messianic charism.—Ver. 5. ἀναβλέπουσιν: used also in classics to express recovery of sight.—κωφοὶ, here taken to mean deaf, though in ix. 32, 33, it means dumb, showing that the prophecy, Isaiah xxxv. 5, is in the speaker's thoughts.—πτωχοὶ: vague word, might mean literal poor (De W.) or spiritual poor, or the whole people in its national misery (Weiss, Matt. Evan.), best defined by such a text as ix. 36, and such facts as that reported in ix. 10-13.—εὐαγγελίζονται: might be middle = the poor preach, and so taken by Euthy. Zig. (also as an alternative by Theophy.), for "what can be poorer than fishing (ἁλιευτικῆς)?" The poor in that case = πτωχοὶ [f] εὐαγγελίζονται · 6. καὶ μακάριός ἐστιν, ὃς ἐὰν[1] μὴ [g] σκανδαλισθῇ ἐν ἐμοί." 7. Τούτων δὲ πορευομένων, ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς λέγειν τοῖς ὄχλοις περὶ Ἰωάννου, "Τί ἐξήλθετε εἰς τὴν ἔρημον θεάσασθαι; 8. [h] κάλαμον ὑπὸ ἀνέμου [i] σαλευόμενον; ἀλλὰ τί ἐξήλθετε ἰδεῖν; ἄνθρωπον ἐν μαλακοῖς ἱματίοις[2] ἠμφιεσμένον; ἰδού, οἱ τὰ μαλακὰ [j] φοροῦντες ἐν τοῖς οἴκοις τῶν βασιλέων εἰσίν[3] 9 ἀλλὰ τί ἐξήλθετε ἰδεῖν; προφήτην[4]; ναί, λέγω ὑμῖν, καὶ περισσότερον προφήτου · 10. οὗτος γάρ[5] ἐστι περὶ οὗ γέγραπται, 'Ἰδού, ἐγὼ ἀποστέλλω τὸν ἄγγελόν μου πρὸ προσώπου σου, ὃς κατα-f Heb. iv. 2 (passive also).

g Ch. xiii. 57; xxvi. 31. Mk. vi. 3. Lk. vii. 23 (all with ἐν).
h Ch. xii. 20 (Is. xlii. 3). Lk. vii. 24.
i Ch. xxiv. 29, parall. Heb. xii. 27.
j John xix. 5. Rom. xiii. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 49. Jas. ii. 3

[1] αν in BD (W.H.).

[2] ℵBDZ omit ιματιοις, which has come in from Lk. (vii 25).

[3] ℵBCD omit εισιν.

[4] ℵBZ have προφητην ιδειν forming the 2nd question So Tisch. and W.H.

[5] ℵBDZ omit γαρ, which has been introduced to clear the sense which it rather obscures.

the Twelve sent out to preach the kingdom. That, too, was characteristic of the movement, though not the characteristic intended, which is that the poor, the socially insignificant and neglected, are evangelised (passive, as in Heb. iv. 2).—Ver. 6. μακάριος (vide v. 3), possessed of rare felicity. The word implies that those who, on some ground or other, did not stumble over Jesus were very few. Even John not among them! On σκανδαλίζω vide ad. v. 29. ἐν ἐμοί, in anything relating to my public ministry, as appearing inconsistent with my Messianic vocation.

Vv. 7-15. Judgment of Jesus concerning the Baptist (Lk. vii. 24-30). Characteristically magnanimous, while letting it be seen that He is aware of John's limits and defects. Ver. 7. τούτων δὲ πορευομένων: while John's messengers were in the act of going, Jesus began at once, without any delay, to make a statement which He deemed necessary to prevent injurious inferences from the message of the Baptist, or the construction He had put on it as implying doubt regarding Himself.—τοῖς ὄχλοις: the interrogation had taken place in presence of many. Jesus was always in a crowd, except when He took special steps to escape. The spectators had watched with interest what Jesus would say about the famous man. Therefore, more must be said; a careful opinion expressed.—τί ἐξήλθετε . . . θεάσασθαι: it might be taken for granted that most of them had been there. The catechetical method of stating His opinion of John lively and impressive to such an audience. They had gone to see as well as hear and be baptised, curiosity plays a great part in popular religious movements.—κάλαμον. Plenty of reeds to be seen. "What a vast space of time lies between the days of the Baptist and us! How have the times changed! Yet the stream flows in the old bed. Still gently blows the wind among the sighing reeds."—Furrer, Wanderungen, 185. Many commentators (Grot., Wet., Fritzsche, De W.) insist on taking καλ. literally = did ye go, etc., to see a reed, or the reeds on the Jordan banks shaken by the wind? This is flat and prosaic. Manifestly the individualised reed is a figure of an inconstant, weak man; just enough in John's present attitude to suggest such a thought, though not to justify it.—Ver. 8. ἀλλὰ assumes the negative answer to the previous question and elegantly connects with it the following = "No; well, then, did you, etc.?"—ἐν μαλακοῖς, neuter, ἱματίοις not necessary, in precious garments of any material, silk, woollen, linen; the fine garments suggestive of refinement, luxury, effeminacy.—ἰδοὺ οἱ τ. μ. φοροῦντες: ἰδοὺ points to a well-known truth, serving the same purpose as δή here; those accustomed to wear, φορ., frequentative, as distinct from φέροντες, which would mean bearing without reference to habit.—οἴκοις τ. βασ., in palaces which courtiers frequent. Jesus knows their flexible, superfine ways well; how different from those of the σκευάσει τὴν ὁδόν σου ἔμπροσθέν σου.' 11. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐκ [k] ἐγήγερται ἐν [l] γεννητοῖς γυναικῶν μείζων Ἰωάννου τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ· ὁ δὲ [m] μικρότερος ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν μείζων αὐτοῦ ἐστιν· k Ch. xxiv. 11, 24. Lk. vii. 16. John vii. 52.

l here and in Lk. vii. 28.
m Ch. xxii. 32. Mk. iv. 31. Lk. vii. 28; ix. 48.

rudely clad and rudely mannered, uncompromising Baptist!—Ver. 9. ἀλλὰ τί ἐξ.: one more question, shorter, abrupt, needing to be supplemented by another (Weiss-Meyer)—why then, seriously, went ye out? προφήτην ἰδεῖν;—to see a Prophet?—ναί, yea! right at last; a prophet, indeed, with all that one expects in a prophet—vigorous moral conviction, integrity, strength of will, fearless zeal for truth and righteousness; utterly free from the feebleness and time-serving of those who bend like reeds to every breath of wind, or bow obsequiously before greatness.—καὶ περισσότερον π., a prophet and more, something above the typical prophet (vide on v. 47). The clause introduced by ναί, as λέγω ὑμῖν shows, expresses Christ's own opinion, not the people's (Weiss). —Ver. 10. οὗτος . . . γέγραπται. The περισσότερον verified and explained by a prophetic citation. The oracle is taken from Malachi iii., altered so as to make the Messianic reference apparent—μου changed into σου. By applying the oracle to John, Jesus identifies him with the messenger whom God was to send to prepare Messiah's way. This is his distinction, περισσότερον, as compared with other prophets. But, after all, this is an external distinction, an accident, so to speak. Some prophet must be the forerunner, if Messiah is to come at all, the last in the series who foretell His coming, and John happens to be that one—a matter of good fortune rather than of merit. Something more is needed to justify the περισσότερον, and make it a proper subject for eulogy. That is forthcoming in the sequel.

Vv. 11-12. This is the further justification of the περισσ. desiderated. Ver. 11. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν. First Christ expresses His personal conviction in solemn terms. What follows refers to John's intrinsic worth, not to his historic position as the forerunner. The latter rests on the prophetic citation. Christ's aim now is to say that the Baptist's character is equal to his position: that he is fit to be the forerunner. For Christ being the forerunner is no matter of luck. God will see that the right man occupies the position; nay, none but the right man can successfully perform the part.—οὐκ ἐγήγερται, there hath not arisen; passive with middle sense, but the arising non sine numine, "surrexit divinitus, quomodo existunt veri Prophetae," Elsner; cf. Mt. xxiv. 11, Lk. vii. 16, vide also Judges ii. 18, iii. 9.—ἐν γεννητοῖς γυναικῶν = among mankind, a solemn way of expressing the idea. The meaning, however, is not that John is the greatest man that ever lived. The comparison moves within the sphere of Hebrew prophecy, and practically means: John the greatest of all the prophets. A bold judgment not easily accepted by the populace, who always think the dead greater than the living. Christ expresses Himself strongly because He means to say something that might appear disparaging. But He is in earnest in His high estimate, only it is not to be understood as asserting John's superiority in all respects, e.g., in authorship. The point of view is capacity to render effective service to the Kingdom of God.—ὁ δὲ μικρότερος. Chrysostom took this as referring to Jesus, and, connecting ἐν τ. β. τ. οὐρ. with μείζων, brought out the sense: He who is the less in age and fame is greater than John in the Kingdom of Heaven. The opinion might be disregarded as an exegetical curiosity, had it not been adopted by so many, not only among the ancients (Hilar., Ambr., Theophy., Euthy.), but also among moderns (Eras., Luth., Fritzsche). In the abstract it is a possible interpretation, and it expresses a true idea, but not one Jesus was likely to utter then. No doubt John's inquiry had raised the question of Christ's standing, and might seem to call for comparison between questioner and questioned. But Christ's main concern was not to get the people to think highly of Himself, but to have high thoughts of the kingdom. What He says, therefore, is that any one in the kingdom, though of comparatively little account, is greater than John. Even the least is; for though μικρότερος, even with the article, does not necessarily mean μικρότατος (so Bengel), it amounts to that. The affirmative holds even in case of the highest degree of inferiority. The implication is that John was not in the kingdom as a historical movement (a n here and in Lk. xvi. 16 (middle there).

12. ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ἡμερῶν Ἰωάννου τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ ἕως ἄρτι, ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν [n] βιάζεται, καὶ βιασταὶ [o] ἁρπάζουσιν αὐτήν. 13. πάντες γὰρ οἱ προφῆται καὶ ὁ νόμος ἕως Ἰωάννου προεφήτευσαν[1]· 14. καὶ

o cf. Phil. ii. 6 (ἁρπαγμός).

[1] ℵBCDZ have the augment at the beginning (επροφ.). Δ has no augment.

simple matter of fact), and the point of comparison is the dominant spirit. The moral sternness of John was his greatness and also his weakness. It made him doubt Jesus, kept him aloof from the kingdom, and placed him below any one who in the least degree understood Christ's gracious spirit, e.g., one of the Twelve called in x. 42 "these little ones".

Ver. 12. The statement just commented on had to be made in the interests of truth and the Kingdom of God, but having made it Jesus reverts with pleasure to a tone of eulogy. This verse has created much diversity of opinion, which it would take long to recount. I find in it two thoughts: one expressed, the other implied. (1) There has been a powerful movement since John's time towards the Kingdom of God. (2) The movement derived its initial impetus from John. The latter thought is latent in ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ἡμ. Ἰωάν. The movement dates from John; he has the credit of starting it. This thought is essential to the connection. It is the ultimate justification of the περισσότερον (ver. 9). The apostle Paul adduced as one argument for his apostleship called in question by Judaists success, which in his view was not an accident but God-given, and due to fitness for the work (2 Cor. ii. 14, iii. 1-18). So Christ here in effect proves John's fitness for the position of forerunner by the success of his ministry. He had actually made the kingdom come. That was the true basis of his title to the honourable appellation, "preparer of the way"; without that it had been an empty title, though based on any number of prophecies. That success proved fitness, adequate endowment with moral force, and power to impress and move men. This being seen to be Christ's meaning, there is no room for doubt as to the animus of the words βιάζεται, βιασταί. They contain a favourable, benignant estimate of the movement going on, not an unfavourable, as, among others, Weiss thinks, taking the words to point to a premature attempt to bring in the kingdom by a false way as a political creation (Weiss-Meyer). Of course there were many defects, obvious, glaring, in the movement, as there always are. Jesus knew them well, but He was not in the mood just then to remark on them, but rather, taking a broad, generous view, to point to the movement as a whole as convincing proof of John's moral force and high prophetic endowment. The two words βιαζ., βιασ. signalise the vigour of the movement. The kingdom was being seized, captured by a storming party. The verb might be middle v., and is so taken by Beng., "sese vi quasi obtrudit," true to fact, but the passive is demanded by the noun following. The kingdom is forcefully taken (βιαίως κρατεῖται, Hesychius) by the βιασταί. There is probably a tacit reference to the kind of people who were storming the kingdom, from the point of view, not so much of Jesus, as of those who deemed themselves the rightful citizens of the kingdom. "Publicans and sinners" (ix. 9-12), the ignorant (xi. 25). What a rabble! thought Scribes and Pharisees. Cause of profound satisfaction to Jesus (ver. 25).

Vv. 13-15. Conclusion of speech about John. Ver. 13. The thought here is hinted rather than fully expressed. It has been suggested that the sense would become clearer if vv. 12 and 13 were made to change places (Maldonatus). This inversion might be justified by reference to Lk. xvi. 16, where the two thoughts are given in the inverse order. Wendt (L. J., i. 75) on this and other grounds arranges the verses 13, 14, 12. But even as they stand the words can be made to yield a fitting sense, harmonising with the general aim, the eulogy of John. The surface idea is that the whole O. T., prophets of course, and even the law in its predictive aspects (by symbolic rites and foreshadowing institutions) pointed forward to a Kingdom of God. The kingdom coming—the burden of O. T. revelation. But what then? To what end make this observation? To explain the impatience of the stormers: their determination to have at last by all means, and in some form, what had so long been foretold? (Weiss). No; but to define by contrast John's εἰ θέλετε δέξασθαι, αὐτός ἐστιν Ἠλίας ὁ μέλλων ἔρχεσθαι. 15. ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν,[1] ἀκουέτω. 16. Τίνι δὲ ὁμοιώσω τὴν γενεὰν ταύτην; ὁμοία ἐστὶ παιδαρίοις[2] ἐν ἀγοραῖς καθημένοις,[3] καὶ προσφωνοῦσι τοῖς ἑταίροις αὐτῶν, καὶ λέγουσιν,[4] 17. Ηὐλήσαμεν ὑμῖν, καὶ οὐκ ὠρχήσασθε· ἐθρηνήσαμεν ὑμῖν,[5] καὶ οὐκ ἐκόψασθε.

[1] BD omit ακουειν, which has come in from Mk. and Lk. where the addition of this word to the phrase is usual.

[2] παιδιοις in all uncials.

[3] καθημενοις before εν in ℵBCDL, etc., with ταις before αγοραις in ℵBZ.

[4] ℵBDZ have α προσφωνουντα . . . λεγουσιν, and for εταιροις BCDLΔΣ al. have ετεροις.

[5] ℵBDZ omit υμιν, which may have been added to assimilate with first clause.

position. Observe ἕως Ι. goes not with the subject, but with the verb. Prophets (and even law) till John prophesied. The suggestion is that he is not a mere continuator of the prophetic line, one more repeating the message: the kingdom will come. His function is peculiar and exceptional. What is it? Ver. 14 explains. He is the Elijah of Malachi, herald of the Great Day, usherer in of the kingdom, the man who says not merely "the kingdom will come," but "the kingdom is here"; says it, and makes good the saying, bringing about a great movement of repentance.—εἰ θέλετε δέξασθαι: the identification of John with Elijah to be taken cum grano, not as a prosaic statement of fact. Here, as always, Christ idealises, seizes the essential truth. John was all the Elijah that would ever come, worthy to represent him in spirit, and performing the function assigned to Elijah redivivus in prophecy. Some of the Fathers distinguished two advents of Elijah, one in spirit in the Baptist, another literally at the second coming of Christ. Servile exegesis of the letter. δέξασθαι has no expressed object: the object is the statement following. Lutteroth supplies "him" = the Baptist. In the θέλετε Weiss finds a tacit allusion to the impenitence of the people: Ye are not willing because ye know that Elijah's coming means a summons to repentance.—Ver. 15. A proverbial form of speech often used by Jesus after important utterances, here for the first time in Matt. The truth demanding attentive and intelligent ears (ears worth having; taking in the words and their import) is that John is Elijah. It implies much—that the kingdom is here and the king, and that the kingdom is moral not political.

Vv. 16-19. Judgment of Jesus on His religious contemporaries (Lk. vii. 31-35). It is advisable not to assume as a matter of course that these words were spoken at the same time as those going before. The discourse certainly appears continuous, and Luke gives this utterance in the same connection as our evangelist, from which we may infer that it stood so in the common source. But even there the connection may have been topical rather than temporal; placed beside what goes before, because containing a reference to John, and because the contents are of a critical nature. Ver. 16. τίνι ὁμοιώσω: the parable is introduced by a question, as if the thought had just struck Him.—τὴν γενεὰν ταύτην. The occasion on which the words following were spoken would make it clear who were referred to. Our guide must be the words themselves. The subjects of remark are not the βιασταὶ of ver. 12, nor the ὄχλοι to whom Jesus had been speaking. Neither are they the whole generation of Jews then living, including Jesus and John (Elsner); or even the bulk of the Jewish people, contemporaries of Jesus. It was not Christ's habit to make severe animadversions on the "people of the land," who formed the large majority of the population. He always spoke of them with sympathy and pity (ix. 37, x. 6). γενεά might mean the whole body of men then living, but it might also mean a particular class of men marked out by certain definite characteristics. It is so used in xii. 39, 41, 42, 45; xvi. 4. The class or "race" there spoken of is in one case the Scribes and Pharisees, and in the other the Pharisees and Sadducees. From internal evidence the reference here also is mainly to the Pharisees. It is a class who spoke of

18. Ἦλθε γὰρ Ἰωάννης μήτε ἐσθίων μήτε πίνων, καὶ λέγουσι, Δαιμόνιον ἔχει. 19. ἦλθεν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων, καὶ λέγουσιν, Ἰδού, ἄνθρωπος [p] φάγος καὶ [q] οἰνοπότης, τελωνῶν φίλος καὶ ἁμαρτωλῶν. καὶ ἐδικαιώθη ἡ σοφία ἀπὸ τῶν τέκνων [1] p Lk. vii. 34.

q Lk. vii. 34.

[1] ℵB have εργων, which Tisch. and W.H. adopt. Though supported by a great array of MSS. (including CDL) τεκνων may be suspected of assimilation to the reading in Lk.

Jesus as reported in ver. 19. Who can they have been but the men who asked: Why does He eat with publicans and sinners (ix. 11)? These vile calumnies are what have come out of that feast, in the same sanctimonious circle. Luke evidently understood the Pharisees and lawyers (νομικοί) to be the class referred to, guided probably by his own impression as to the import of the passage (vide Lk. vii. 30).—παιδίοις . . . ἀγοραῖς: Jesus likens the Pharisaic γενεά to children in the market-place playing at marriages and funerals, as He had doubtless often seen them in Nazareth. The play, as is apt to happen, has ended in a quarrel.—προσφ. τοῖς ἑτέροις . . . λέγουσιν. There are two parties, the musicians and the rest who are expected to dance or mourn according to the tune, and they are at cross purposes, the moods not agreeing: ἑτέροις, the best attested reading, may point to this discrepancy in temper = a set differently inclined.—ηὐλήσαμεν: the flute in this case used for merriment, not, as in x. 23, to express grief.—ἐθρηνήσαμεν: we have expressed grief by singing funeral dirges, like the mourning women hired for the purpose (vide ad ix. 23).—ἐκόψασθε: and ye have not beat your breasts in responsive sorrow. This is the parable to which Jesus adds a commentary. Without the aid of the latter the general import is plain. The γενεά animadverted on are like children, not in a good but in a bad sense: not child-like but childish. They play at religion; with all their seeming earnestness in reality triflers. They are also fickle, fastidious, given to peevish fault-finding, easily offended. These are recognisable features of the Pharisees. They were great zealots and precisians, yet not in earnest, rather haters of earnestness, as seen in different ways in John and Jesus. They were hard to please: equally dissatisfied with John and with Jesus; satisfied with nothing but their own artificial formalism. They were the only men in Israel of whom these things could be said with emphasis, and it may be taken for granted that Christ's animadversions were elicited by pronounced instances of the type.—Ver. 18. The commentary on the parable showing that it was the reception given to John and Himself that suggested it.—μήτε ἐσθ. μήτε πιν.: eating and drinking the two parts of diet; not eating nor drinking = remarkably abstemious, ascetic, that his religious habit; μήτε not οὔτε, to express not merely the fact, but the opinion about John. Vide notes on chap. v. 34.—δαιμόνιον ἔχει: is possessed, mad, with the madness of a gloomy austerity. The Pharisee could wear gloomy airs in fasting (vi. 16), but that was acting. The Baptist was in earnest with his morose, severely abstinent life. Play for them, grim reality for him; and they disliked it and shrank from it as something weird. None but Pharisees would dare to say such a thing about a man like John. They are always so sure, and so ready to judge. Ordinary people would respect the ascetic of the wilderness, though they did not imitate him.—Ver. 19. ὁ υἱὸς τ. α.: obviously Jesus here refers to Himself in third person where we might have expected the first. Again the now familiar title, defining itself as we go along by varied use, pointing Jesus out as an exceptional person, while avoiding all conventional terms to define the exceptional element.—ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων: the "Son of Man" is one who eats and drinks, i.e., non-ascetic and social, one of the marks interpretative of the title = human, fraternal.—καὶ λέγουσι, and they say: what? One is curious to know. Surely this genial, friendly type of manhood will please! — ἰδοὺ, lo! scandalised sanctimoniousness points its finger at Him and utters gross, outrageous calumnies.—φάγος, οἰνοπότης, φίλος, an eater with emphasis = a glutton (a word of late Greek, Lob., Phryn., 434), a wine-bibber; and, worse than either, for φίλος is used in a sinister sense and implies that Jesus was the comrade of the worst characters, and like them in conduct. A malicious nick-name at first, it is now a name of honour: the sinner's lover. The Son of r Mk. xvi. 14 (with accus. of thing). s Lk. x. 13 (long ago). 2 Cor. xii. 19 ("all this time," R.V.).

t Lk. x. 13 (Jonah iii. 6).
u Ch. xviii. 7; xxvi. 39, 64 (frequent in Lk.).

αὐτῆς. 20. Τότε ἤρξατο r ὀνειδίζειν τὰς πόλεις, ἐν αἷς ἐγένοντο αἱ πλεῖσται δυνάμεις αὐτοῦ, ὅτι οὐ μετενόησαν. 21. "Οὐαί σοι, Χοραζίν, οὐαί σοι, βηθσαϊδάν, ὅτι εἰ ἐν Τύρῳ καὶ Σιδῶνι ἐγένοντο αἱ δυνάμεις αἱ γενόμεναι ἐν ὑμῖν, s πάλαι ἂν ἐν t σάκκῳ καὶ t σποδῷ μετενόησαν. 22. u πλὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, Τύρῳ καὶ Σιδῶνι ἀνεκτότερον ἔσται ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως, ἢ ὑμῖν. 23. Καὶ σύ, Καπερναούμ, ἡ [1] ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθεῖσα,[1] ἕως ᾅδου καταβιβασθήσῃ[2]· ὅτι εἰ ἐν Σοδόμοις ἐγένοντο[3] αἱ δυνάμεις αἱ γενόμεναι ἐν σοί, ἔμειναν[4] ἂν

[1] ℵBCDL Syr. Cur. read μη εως ουρανου υψωθηση, which recent editors adopt. Weiss thinks it has no sense, as μη implies a negative answer, and gives as the true reading ἢ ἕως οὐρ. ὑψώθης.

[2] BD have καταβηση (W.H.).

[3] ℵBCD have εγενηθησαν (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] εμεινεν in ℵBC (W.H.).

Man takes these calumnies as a thing of course and goes on His gracious way. It is not necessary to reflect these characteristics of Jesus and John back into the parable, and to identify them with the piping and wailing children. Yet the parable is so constructed as to exhibit them very clearly in their distinctive peculiarities by representing the children not merely employed in play and quarrelling over their games, which would have sufficed as a picture of the religious Jews, but as playing at marriages and funerals, the former symbolising the joy of the Jesus-circle, the latter the sadness of the Baptist-circle (vide my Parabolic Teaching of Christ, p. 420).—καὶ ἐδικαιώθη, etc. This sentence wears a gnomic or proverbial aspect ("verba proverbium redolere videntur," Kuinoel, similarly, Rosenmüller), and the aorist of ἐδικ. may be taken as an instance of the gnomic aorist, expressive of what is usual; a law in the moral sphere, as elsewhere the aorist is employed to express the usual course in the natural sphere, e.g., in James i. 11. Weiss-Meyer strongly denies that there are any instances of such use of the aorist in the N. T. (On this aorist vide Goodwin, Syntax, p. 53, and Bäumlein, § 523, where it is called the aorist of experience, "der Erfahrungswahrheit".)—ἀπὸ, in, in view of (vide Buttmann's Gram., p. 232, on ἀπὸ in N. T.).—ἔργων: the reading of ℵB, and likely to be the true one just because τέκνων is the reading in Luke. It is an appeal to results, to fruit (vii. 20), to the future. Historical in form, the statement is in reality a prophecy. Resch, indeed (Agrapha, p. 142), takes ἐδικ. as the (erroneous) translation of the Hebrew prophetic future used in the Aramaic original = now we are condemned, but wait a while. The καὶ at the beginning of the clause is not = "but". It states a fact as much a matter of course as is the condemnation of the unwise. Wisdom, condemned by the foolish, is always, of course, justified in the long run by her works or by her children.

Vv. 20-24. Reflections by Jesus on the reception given to Him by the towns of Galilee (Lk. x. 13-15). Ver. 20. τότε, then, cannot be pressed. Luke gives the following words in instructions to the Seventy. The real historical occasion is unknown. It may be a reminiscence from the preaching tour in the synagogues of Galilee (Mt. iv. 23). The reflections were made after Jesus had visited many towns and wrought many wonderful works (δυνάμεις).—οὐ μετενόησαν: this the general fact; no deep, permanent change of mind and heart. Christ appearing among them a nine days' wonder, then forgotten by the majority preoccupied with material interests.—Ver. 21. Χοραζίν, Βηθσαϊδάν: the former not again mentioned in Gospels, the latter seldom (vide Mk. vi. 45, viii. 22; Lk. ix. 10), yet scenes of important evangelic incidents, probably connected with the synagogue ministry in Galilee (iv. 23). The Gospels are brief records of a ministry crowded with events. These two towns may be named along with Capernaum because all three were in view where Christ stood when He

[v] μέχρι τῆς σήμερον. 24. πλὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι γῇ Σοδόμων ἀνεκτότερον ἔσται ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως, ἢ σοί." 25. Ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ [w] ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, "[x] Ἐξομολογοῦμαί σοι, πάτερ, κύριε τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τῆς γῆς, ὅτι ἀπέκρυψας[1] ταῦτα ἀπὸ [y] σοφῶν καὶ

v Ch. xxviii 15 (same phrase).
w Ch. xii. 38; xv. 15; xvii. 4 al. (in sense of beginning to speak).
x Lk. x. 21. Rom. xiv. 11; xv. 9.
y Lk. x. 21 (Jewish). Mt. xxiii. 34 (Christian). 1 Cor. i. 26 (Pagan).

[1] ℵBD have the simple εκρυψας.

uttered the reproachful words, say on the top of the hill above Capernaum: Bethsaida on the eastern shore of Jordan, just above where it falls into the lake; Chorazin on the western side on the road to Tyre from Capernaum (Furrer, Wanderungen, p. 370). They may also have been prosperous business centres selected to represent the commercial side of Jewish national life. Hence the reference to Tyre and Sidon, often the subject of prophetic animadversion, yet not so blameworthy in their impenitence as the cities which had seen Christ's works.—ἐν σάκκῳ καὶ σποδῷ: in black sackcloth, and with ashes on the head, or sitting in ashes like Job (iii. 8). — Ver. 22. πλὴν: contracted from πλέον = moreover, for the rest, to put the matter shortly; not adversative here, though sometimes so used. — Ver. 23. The diversity in the reading μὴ or ἡ ἕως, etc., does not affect the sense. In the one case the words addressed to Capernaum contain a statement of fact by Jesus; in the other a reference to a feeling prevailing in Capernaum in regard to the facts. The fact implied in either case is distinction on some ground, probably because Capernaum more than all other places was favoured by Christ's presence and activity. But there may, as some think (Grotius, Rosen., De Wette, etc.), be a reference to trade prosperity. "Florebat C. piscatu mercatu, et quae alia esse solent commoda ad mare sitarum urbium" (Grot.). The reference to Tyre and Sidon, trade centres, makes this not an idle suggestion. And it is not unimportant to keep this aspect in mind, as Capernaum with the other two cities then become representatives of the trading spirit, and show us by sample how that spirit received the Gospel of the kingdom. Capernaum illustrated the common characteristic most signally. Most prosperous, most privileged spiritually, and—most unsympathetic, the population being taken as a whole. Worldliness as unreceptive as counterfeit piety represented by Pharisaism, though not so offensive in temper and language. No calumny, but simply invincible indifference.—ἕως οὐρανοῦ, ἕως ᾅδου: proverbial expressions for the greatest exaltation and deepest degradation. The reference in the latter phrase is not to the future world, but to the judgment day of Israel in which Capernaum would be involved. The prophetic eye of Jesus sees Capernaum in ruins as it afterwards saw the beautiful temple demolished (chap. xxiv. 2).

Vv. 25-27. Jesus worshipping (Lk. x. 21, 22). It is usual to call this golden utterance a prayer, but it is at once prayer, praise, and self-communing in a devout spirit. The occasion is unknown. Matthew gives it in close connection with the complaint against the cities (ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ), but Luke sets it in still closer connection (ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ ὥρᾳ) with the return of the Seventy. According to some modern critics, it had no occasion at all in the life of our Lord, but is simply a composition of Luke's, and borrowed from him by the author of Matthew: a hymn in which the Pauline mission to the heathen as the victory of Christ over Satan's dominion in the world is celebrated, and given in connection with the imaginary mission of the Seventy (vide Pfleiderer, Urchristenthum, p. 445). But Luke's preface justifies the belief that he had here, as throughout, a tradition oral or written to go on, and the probability is that it was taken both by him and by Matthew from a common document. Wendt (L. J., pp. 90, 91) gives it as an extract from the book of Logia, and supposes that it followed a report of the return of the disciples (the Twelve) from their mission.

Ver. 25. ἀποκριθεὶς, answering, not necessarily, to anything said, but to some environment provocative of such thoughts.—ἐξομολογοῦμαί σοι (= לְ הוֹדָה, Gen. xxix. 35, etc.). In iii. 6 this compound means to make full con-z Lk. x. 21. Acts xiii. 7. 1 Cor. i. 19. a 1 Cor. ii. 10. Phil. iii. 15. b Lk. x. 21. Rom. ii. 20. 1 Cor. iii. 1. Heb. v. 13. c Eph. i. 5, 7. Phil. ii. 13. d 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

[z] συνετῶν, καὶ [a] ἀπεκάλυψας αὐτὰ [b] νηπίοις. 26. ναὶ ὁ πατήρ, ὅτι οὕτως ἐγένετο [c] εὐδοκία [1] ἔμπροσθέν σου. 27. Πάντα μοι παρεδόθη ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρός μου· καὶ οὐδεὶς [d] ἐπιγινώσκει τὸν υἱόν, εἰ μὴ ὁ πατήρ· οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα τις ἐπιγινώσκει, εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱός, καὶ ᾧ ἐὰν

[1] ευδοκια εγενετο in ℵB, making ευδοκια more emphatic.

fession (of sin). Here it = to make frank acknowledgment of a situation in a spirit partly of resignation, partly of thanksgiving.—ἔκρυψας. The fact stated is referred to the causality of God, the religious point of view; but it happens according to laws which can be ascertained.—ταῦτα: the exact reference unknown, but the statement holds with reference to Christ's whole teaching and healing ministry, and the revelation of the kingdom they contained.—σοφῶν καὶ συνετῶν: the reference here doubtless is to the Rabbis and scribes, the accepted custodians of the wisdom of Israel. Cf. σοφὸς καὶ ἐπιστήμων in Deut. iv. 6 applied to Israel. The rendering "wise and prudent" in A. V. is misleading; "wise and understanding" in R. V. is better.—νηπίοις (fr. νη and ἔπος, non-speaking) means those who were as ignorant of scribe-lore as babes (cf. John vii. 49 and Heb. v. 13). Their ignorance was their salvation, as thereby they escaped the mental preoccupation with preconceived ideas on moral and religious subjects, which made the scribes inaccessible to Christ's influence (vide my Parabolic Teaching, pp. 333, 334). Jesus gives thanks with all His heart for the receptivity of the babes, not in the same sense or to the same extent for the non-receptive attitude of the wise (with De Wette and Bleek against Meyer and Weiss). No distinction indeed is expressed, but it goes without saying, and the next clause implies it.—Ver. 26. ναί reaffirms with solemn emphasis what might appear doubtful, viz., that Jesus was content with the state of matters (vide Klotz, Devar., i. 140). Cf. ver. 9.—πατήρ: nominative for vocative.—ὅτι, because, introducing the reason for this contentment.—οὕτως, as the actual facts stand, emphatic ("sic maxime non aliter," Fritzsche).—εὐδοκία, a pleasure, an occasion of pleasure; hence a purpose, a state of matters embodying the Divine Will, a Hellenistic word, as is also the verb εὐδοκέω (cf. 1 Cor. i. 21, where the whole thought is similar). Christ resigns Himself to God's will. But His tranquillity is due likewise to insight into the law by which new Divine movements find support among the νήπιοι rather than among the σοφοί.—Ver. 27. πάντα, all things necessary for the realisation of the kingdom (Holtz., H.C.). The πάντα need not be restricted to the hiding and revealing functions (Weiss, Nösgen). Hiding, indeed, was no function of Christ's. He was always and only a revealer. For the present Jesus has only a few babes, but the future is His: Christianity the coming religion.—παρεδόθη, aorist, were given. We might have expected the future. It may be another instance of the aorist used for the Hebrew prophetic future (vide ad ver. 19). In Mt. xxviii. 18 ἐδόθη again to express the same thought. The reference probably is to the eternal purpose of God: on the use of the aorist in N. T., vide note on this passage in Camb. G. T.—ἐπιγινώσκει, thoroughly knows.—τὸν υἱὸν . . . πατήρ, Christ's comfort amid the widespread unbelief and misunderstanding in reference to Himself is that His Father knows Him perfectly. No one else does, not even John. He is utterly alone in the world. Son here has a Godward reference, naturally arising out of the situation. The Son of Man is called an evil liver. He lifts up His heart to heaven and says: God my Father knows me, His Son. The thought in the first clause is connected with this one thus: the future is mine, and for the present my comfort is in the Father's knowledge of me.—οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα . . . ὁ υἱὸς: a reflection naturally suggested by the foregoing statement. It is ignorance of the Father that creates misconception of the Son. Conventional, moral and religious ideals lead to misjudgment of one who by all He says and does is revealing God as He truly is and wills. The men who know least about God are those supposed to know most, and who have been most ready to judge Him, the "wise and understanding". Hence the additional reflection, καὶ ᾧ ἐὰν βούληται ὁ υ. ἀποκαλύψαι. Jesus βούληται [e] ὁ υἱὸς ἀποκαλύψαι. 28. [f] Δεῦτε πρός με πάντες οἱ [g] κοπιῶντες καὶ πεφορτισμένοι, κἀγὼ [h] ἀναπαύσω ὑμᾶς. 29. ἄρατε e ὁ υἱός absolutely here and in Ch. xxiv. 36; xxviii. 19. Mk. xiii. 32. f vide Ch. iv. 19. g here and in John iv. 6. Rev. ii. 3 (with the sense of weariness, cf. Is. xl. 31, οὐ κοπιάσουσι. Sir. li. 27, ἐκοπίασα). h 1 Cor. xvi. 18. Philem. 20 (Sir. li. 27, the noun).

here asserts His importance as the revealer of God, saying in effect: "The wise despise me, but they cannot do without me. Through me alone can they attain that knowledge of God which they profess to desire above all things." This was there and then the simple historic fact. Jesus was the one person in Israel who truly conceived God. The use of βούληται is noticeable: not to whomsoever He reveals Him, but to whomsoever He is pleased to reveal Him. The emphasis seems to lie on the inclination, whereas in Mt. i. 19 θέλων appears to express the wish, and ἐβουλήθη rather the deliberate purpose. Jesus meets the haughty contempt of the "wise" with a dignified assertion that it depends on his inclination whether they are to know God or not. On the distinction between βούλομαι and θέλω, vide Cremer, Wörterbuch, s. v. βούλομαι. According to him the former represents the direction of the will, the latter the will active (Affect. Trieb). Hence βουλ. can always stand for θελ., but not vice versâ.

Vv. 28-30. The gracious invitation. Full of O. T. reminiscences, remarks Holtz., H.C., citing Isaiah xiv. 3; xxviii. 12; lv. 1-3; Jer. vi. 16; xxxi. 2, 25, and especially Sirach vi. 24, 25, 28, 29; li. 23-27. De Wette had long before referred to the last-mentioned passage, and Pfleiderer has recently (Urch., 513) made it the basis of the assertion that this beautiful logion is a composition out of Sirach by the evangelist. The passage in Sirach is as follows: ἐγγίσατε πρός με ἀπαίδευτοι, καὶ αὐλίσθητε ἐν οἴκῳ παιδείας. διότι ὑστερεῖτε ἐν τούτοις, καὶ αἱ ψυχαὶ ὑμῶν διψῶσι σφόδρα. ἤνοιξα τὸ στόμα μου, καὶ ἐλάλησα, κτήσασθε ἑαυτοῖς ἄνευ ἀργυρίου. τὸν τράχηλον ὑμῶν ὑποθετε ὑπὸ ζυγόν, καὶ ἐπιδέξασθω ἡ ψυχὴ ὑμῶν παιδείαν· ἐγγύς ἐστιν εὑρεῖν αὐτήν· ἴδετε ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς ὑμῶν ὅτι ὀλίγον ἐκοπίασα, καὶ εὗρον ἐμαυτῷ πολλὴν ἀνάπαυσιν. There are unquestionably kindred thoughts and corresponding phrases, as even Kypke points out ("Syracides magna similitudine dicit"), and if Sirach had been a recognised Hebrew prophet one could have imagined Matthew giving the gist of this rhetorical passage, prefaced with an "as it is written". It is not even inconceivable that a reader of our Gospel at an early period noted on the margin phrases culled from Sirach as descriptive of the attitude of the one true σοφός towards men to show how willing he was to communicate the knowledge of the Father-God, and that his notes found their way into the text. But why doubt the genuineness of this logion? It seems the natural conclusion of Christ's soliloquy; expressing His intense yearning for receptive scholars at a time when He was painfully conscious of the prevalent unreceptivity. The words do not smell of the lamp. They come straight from a saddened yet tenderly affectionate, unembittered heart; simple, pathetic, sincere. He may have known Sirach from boyhood, and echoes may have unconsciously suggested themselves, and been used with royal freedom quite compatibly with perfect originality of thought and phrase. The reference to wisdom in ver. 19 makes the supposition not gratuitous that Jesus may even have had the passage in Sirach consciously present to His mind, and that He used it, half as a quotation, half as a personal manifesto. The passage is the end of a prayer of Jesus, the Son of Sirach, in which that earlier Jesus, personating wisdom, addresses his fellowmen, inviting them to share the benefits which σοφία has conferred on himself. Why should not Jesus of Nazareth close His prayer with a similar address in the name of wisdom to those who are most likely to become her children—those whose ear sorrow hath opened? This view might meet Martineau's objection to regarding this logion as authentic, that

* Of the above the R.V. gives the following translation: "Draw near unto me, ye unlearned, and lodge in the house of instruction. Say wherefore are ye lacking in these things, and your souls are very thirsty? I opened my mouth and spake. Get her for yourselves without money. Put your neck under the yoke, and let your soul receive instruction. She is hard at hand to find. Behold with your eyes how that I laboured but a little, and found for myself much rest."

i Acts xv. 10. Gal. v. i. τὸν [1] ζυγόν μου ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, καὶ μάθετε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι πρᾷός [1] εἰμι καὶ j Ch. xii. 43. Rev. xiv. 11 (Wisdom iv. 7). ταπεινὸς τῇ καρδίᾳ· καὶ εὑρήσετε [j] ἀνάπαυσιν ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὑμῶν.
k Lk. vi. 35. Rom. ii. 4. 30. ὁ γὰρ ζυγός μου [k] χρηστός, καὶ τὸ φορτίον μου ἐλαφρόν ἐστιν."

[1] πραυς in ℵBCD (Tisch., W.H.).

it is not compatible with the humility of Jesus that He should so speak of Himself (Seat of Authority, p. 583). Why should He not do as another Jesus had done before Him: speak in the name of wisdom, and appropriate her attributes?

Ver. 28. Δεῦτε: vide ad iv. 19, again authoritative but kindly.—κοπιῶντες καὶ πεφορτισμένοι, the fatigued and burdened. This is to be taken metaphorically. The kind of people Jesus expects to become "disciples indeed" are men who have sought long, earnestly, but in vain, for the summum bonum, the knowledge of God. There is no burden so heavy as that of truth sought and not found. Scholars of the Rabbis, like Saul of Tarsus, knew it well. In coming thence to Christ's school they would find rest by passing from letter to spirit, from form to reality, from hearsay to certainty, from traditions of the past to the present voice of God.—κἀγὼ and I emphatic, with side glance at the reputed "wise" who do not give rest (with Meyer against Weiss).—Ver. 29. ζυγόν: current phrase to express the relation of a disciple to a master. The Rabbis spoke of the "yoke of the law". Jesus uses their phrases while drawing men away from their influence.—μάθετε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ: not merely learn from my example (Buttmann, Gram., 324; on, that is, from the case of), but, more comprehensively, get your learning from me; take me as your Master in religion. The thing to be learned is not merely a moral lesson, humility, but the whole truth about God and righteousness. But the mood of Master and scholar must correspond, He meek as they have become by sorrowful experience. Hence ὅτι πραΰς . . . τῇ καρδίᾳ: not that, but for I am, etc. What connection is there between this spirit and knowledge of God? This: a proud man cannot know God. God knoweth the proud afar off (Ps. cxxxviii. 6), and they know God afar off. God giveth the grace of intimate knowledge of Himself to the lowly.—ἀνάπαυσιν: rest, such as comes through finding the true God, or through satisfaction of desire, of the hunger of the soul.—Ver. 30. χρηστός, kindly to wear. Christ's doctrine fits and satisfies our whole spiritual nature—reason, heart, conscience, "the sweet reasonableness of Christ".—φορτίον, the burden of obligation.—ἐλαφρόν: in one respect Christ's burden is the heaviest of all because His moral ideal is the highest. But just on that account it is light. Lofty, noble ideals inspire and attract; vulgar ideals are oppressive. Christ's commandment is difficult, but not like that of the Rabbis, grievous. (Vide With Open Face.)

CHAPTER XII. CONFLICTS WITH THE PHARISEES. This chapter delineates the growing alienation between Jesus and the Pharisees and scribes. The note of time (ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ, ver. 1) points back to the situation in which the prayer xi. 25-30 was uttered (vide ver. 25, where the same expression is used). All the incidents recorded reveal the captious mood of Israel's "saints and sages". They have now formed a thoroughly bad opinion of Jesus and His company. They regard Him as immoral in life (xi. 19); irreligious, capable even of blasphemy (assuming the divine prerogative of forgiving sin, ix. 3); an ally of Satan even in His beneficence (xii. 24). He can do nothing right. The smallest, most innocent action is an offence.

Vv. 1-8. Plucking ears of corn on the Sabbath (Mk. ii. 23-28; Lk. vi. 1-5). Sabbath observance was one of the leading causes of conflict between Jesus and the guardians of religion and morality. This is the first of several encounters reported by the evangelist. According to Weiss he follows Mark, but with sayings taken directly from the Apostolic Source.

Vv. 1, 2. σάββασιν: dative plural, as if from σάββατ-ατος, other cases (genitive, singular and plural, dative, singular, accusative, plural) are formed from σάββατον (vide ver. 2).—διὰ τῶν σπορίμων might mean through fields adapted for growing grain, but the context requires fields actually sown; fields of corn.—ἐπείνασαν: for the form vide iv. 2. This word supplies the motive for the action, which Mark leaves vague.—

XII. 1. ᾿ΕΝ ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ ἐπορεύθη ὁ ᾿Ιησοῦς τοῖς σάββασι διὰ τῶν [a] σπορίμων· οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπείνασαν, καὶ ἤρξαντο [b] τίλλειν [c] στάχυας καὶ ἐσθίειν. 2. οἱ δὲ Φαρισαῖοι ἰδόντες εἶπον αὐτῷ, "᾿Ιδού, οἱ μαθηταί σου ποιοῦσιν, ὃ οὐκ ἔξεστι ποιεῖν ἐν σαββάτῳ." 3. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Οὐκ [d] ἀνέγνωτε τί ἐποίησε Δαβίδ, ὅτε ἐπείνασεν αὐτὸς[1] καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ; 4. πῶς εἰσῆλθεν [e] εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τοὺς ἄρτους [f] τῆς προθέσεως ἔφαγεν,[2] οὓς[3] οὐκ ἐξὸν ἦν αὐτῷ φαγεῖν, οὐδὲ τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι μόνοις; 5. Ἢ οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, ὅτι τοῖς σάββασιν οἱ ἱερεῖς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ τὸ σάββατον [f] βεβηλοῦσι, καὶ [g] ἀναίτιοί εἰσι;

a here and in parall.
b here and in parall.
c here, parall. and Mk. iv. 28.
d Ch. xix. 4; xxi. 16, 42; xxiv. 15 al.
e Heb. ix. 2.
f Acts xxiv. 6 (often in Sept.).
g here and in ver. 7.

[1] The αυτος (LΣ) comes from Mk. (ii. 25); it is omitted in ℵBCDΔ al.

[2] εφαγον in ℵB.

[3] ο in BD. The reading of T. R. (εφαγεν ους) is from Mk.

ἤρξαντο: perhaps emphasis should be laid on this word. No sooner had they begun to pluck ears than fault was found. Pharisees on the outlook for offences. So Carr, Camb. G. T.—Ver. 2. ὃ οὐκ ἔξεστιν π. ἐ. σαββάτῳ. The emphasis here lies on the last word. To help oneself when hungry with the hand was humanely allowed in the Deuteronomic law (Deut. xxiii. 25), only to use the sickle was forbidden as involving waste. But according to the scribes what was lawful on other days was unlawful on Sabbath, because plucking ears was reaping. "Metens Sabbato vel tantillum, reus est" (Lightfoot rendering a passage from the Talmud). Luke adds ψώχοντες, rubbing with the hands. He took the offence to be threshing. Microscopic offence in either case, proving primâ facie malice in the fault-finders. But honest objection is not inconceivable to one who remembers the interdict placed by old Scottish piety on the use of the razor on Sabbath. We must be just even to Pharisees.

Vv. 3-8. Christ's defence. It is twofold. (1) He shields disciples by examples: David and the priests; to both the fault-finders would defer (vv. 3-5); (2) He indicates the principles involved in the examples (vv. 6-8). The case of David was apposite because (a) it was a case of eating, (b) it probably happened on Sabbath, (c) it concerned not only David but, as in the present instance, followers; therefore οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ, ver. 3, carefully added. (b) does not form an element in the defence, but it helps to account for the reference to David's conduct. In that view Jesus must have regarded the act of David as a Sabbatic incident, and that it was may not unnaturally be inferred from 1 Sam. xxi. 6. Vide Lightfoot, ad loc.—This was probably also the current opinion. The same remark applies to the attendants of David. From the history one might gather that David was really alone, and only pretended to have companions. But if, as is probable, it was usually assumed that he was accompanied, Jesus would be justified in proceeding on that assumption, whatever the fact was (vide Schanz, ad loc).—Ver. 4. εἰσῆλθεν, ἔφαγον, he entered, they ate. Mark has ἔφαγεν. Weiss explains the harsh change of subject by combination of apostolic source with Mark. The two verbs point to two offences against the law: entering a holy place, eating holy bread. The sin of the disciples was against a holy time. But the principle involved was the same = ceremonial rules may be overruled by higher considerations.—ὃ οὐκ ἐξὸν ἦν. οὓς in Mark and Luke agreeing with ἄρτους, and here also in T. R., but ὃ doubtless the true reading; again presenting a problem in comparative exegesis (vide Weiss-Meyer). ὃ ought to mean "which thing it was not lawful to do," but it may be rendered "which kind of bread," etc.—εἰ μή, except, absolutely unlawful, except in case of priests.—Ver. 5. This reference to the priests naturally leads on to the second instance taken from their systematic breach of the technical Sabbath law in the discharge of sacerdotal duty.—ἢ οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε, have ye not read? not of course the statement following, but directions on which such a construction could be put, as in Numb. xxviii. 9, concerning the burnt offering of two lambs. They had

6. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι τοῦ ἱεροῦ μείζων[1] ἐστὶν ὧδε. 7. εἰ δὲ ἐγνώκειτε τί [h] ἐστιν, "Ἔλεον[2] θέλω καὶ οὐ θυσίαν," οὐκ ἂν [i] κατεδικάσατε τοὺς ἀναιτίους. 8. κύριος γάρ ἐστι καὶ[3] τοῦ σαββάτου ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου."

h ἐστιν = means, vide Lk. viii. 9, 11.
i Lk. vi. 37. Jas. v. 6 (the pass. in ver. 37).

[1] μειζον in ℵBD al. μειζων (LΔ) is a misjudged attempt at correction.

[2] This is another grammatical correction (vide ix. 13), ελεος in ℵBCD.

[3] και omitted in ℵBCD, etc. It comes in from the parall.

read often enough, but had not understood. As Euthy. Zig. remarks, Jesus reproaches them for their vain labour, as not understanding what they read (μὴ ἐπιγινώσκουσιν ἃ ἀναγινώσκουσι).—βεβηλοῦσι, profane, on the Pharisaic view of the Sabbath law, as an absolute prohibition of work. Perhaps the Pharisees themselves used this word as a technical term, applicable even to permissible Sabbath labour. So Schanz after Schöttgen.

Vv. 6-8. The principles involved. The facts stated raise questions as to the reasons. The Pharisees were men of rules, not accustomed to go back on principles. The passion for minutiæ killed reflection. The reasons have been already hinted in the statement of the cases: ὅτι ἐπείνασεν, ver. 3; ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, ver. 5: hunger, the temple; human needs, higher claims. These are referred to in inverse order in vv. 6-7.—Ver. 6. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν: solemn affirmation, with a certain tone in the voice.—τοῦ ἱεροῦ μεῖζόν. Though they might not have thought of the matter before, the claim of the temple to overrule the Sabbath law would be admitted by the Pharisees. Therefore, Jesus could base on it an argument a fortiori. The Sabbath must give way to the temple and its higher interests, therefore to something higher still. What was that something? Christ Himself, according to the almost unanimous opinion of interpreters, ancient and modern; whence doubtless the μείζων of T. R. But Jesus might be thinking rather of the kingdom than of the king; a greater interest is involved here, that of the kingdom of God. Fritzsche takes μεῖζον as = teaching men, and curing them of vice then going on. It may be asked: How did the interest come in? The disciples were following Jesus, but what was He about? What created the urgency? Whence came it that the disciples needed to pluck ears of standing corn? We do not know. That is one of the many lacunæ in the evangelic history. But it may be assumed that there was something urgent going on in connection with Christ's ministry, whereby He and His companions were overtaken with extreme hunger, so that they were fain to eat unprepared food (ἀκατέργαστον σῖτον, Euthy. Zig. on ver. 7).—Ver. 7. The principle of human need stated in terms of a favourite prophetic oracle (ix. 13).—εἰ δὲ ἐγνώκειτε . . . οὐκ ἂν κατεδικάσατε: the form of expression, a past indicative in protasis, with a past indicative with ἂν in apodosis, implies that the supposition is contrary to fact (Burton, N. T. Moods and Tenses, § 248). The Pharisees did not know what the oracle meant; hence on a previous occasion Jesus bade them go and learn (ix. 13). If their pedantry blinded them to distinctions of higher and lower in institutions, or rather made them reckon the least the greatest command, minutiæ testing obedience, it still more deadened their hearts to the claims of mercy and humanity. Of course this idolatry went on from bad to worse. For the Jews of a later, templeless time, the law was greater than the temple (Holtz., in H.C., quoting Weber).—ἀναιτίους: doubly guiltless: as David was through imperious hunger, as the priests were when subordinating Sabbath, to temple, requirements.—Ver. 8. This weighty logion is best understood when taken along with that in Mark ii. 27 = the Sabbath for man, not man for the Sabbath. The question is: Does it merely state a fact, or does it also contain the rationale of the fact? That depends on the sense we give to the title Son of Man. As a technical name = Messiah, it simply asserts the authority of Him who bears it to determine how the Sabbath is to be observed in the Kingdom of God. As a name of humility, making no obtrusive exceptional claims, like Son of David or Messiah, it suggests a reason for the lordship in sympathy with the ethical principle embodied in the prophetic oracle. The title does not indeed mean mankind, or any man, homo quivis, as Grotius and Kuinoel

9. Καὶ [j] μεταβὰς ἐκεῖθεν, ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν αὐτῶν. 10. καὶ ἰδού, ἄνθρωπος ἦν τὴν[1] χεῖρα ἔχων [k] ξηράν· καὶ ἐπηρώτησαν αὐτόν, λέγοντες, "Εἰ ἔξεστι τοῖς σάββασι θεραπεύειν[2];" ἵνα κατηγορήσωσιν αὐτοῦ. 11. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τίς ἔσται[3] ἐξ ὑμῶν ἄνθρωπος, ὃς ἕξει πρόβατον ἕν, καὶ ἐὰν ἐμπέσῃ τοῦτο τοῖς σάββασιν

j Ch. xi. 1.
k parall. and John v. 3.

[1] ℵBC omit ην την. The text of Mt. as in T. R. has been influenced by that in Mk. (iii. 1).

[2] So in BC (W.H.), θεραπευσαι in ℵDL (Tisch.).

[3] εσται is omitted in CLXΣ, and bracketed in W.H. This is found in XBΔ rel.

think. It points to Jesus, but to Him not as an exceptional man ("der einzigartige," Weiss), but as the representative man, maintaining solidarity with humanity, standing for the human interest, as the Pharisees stood for the supposed divine, the real divine interest being identical with the human. The radical antithesis between Jesus and the Pharisees lay in their respective ideas of God. It is interesting to find a glimpse of the true sense of this logion in Chrysostom: περὶ ἑαυτοῦ λέγων. Ὁ δὲ Μάρκος καὶ περὶ τῆς κοινῆς φύσεως αὐτὸν τοῦτο εἰρηκέναι φησίν. Hom. xxxix.—κύριος, not to the effect of abrogation but of interpretation and restoration to true use. The weekly rest is a beneficent institution, God's holiday to weary men, and the Kingdom of Heaven, whose royal law is love, has no interest in its abolition.

Vv. 9-14. A Sabbath cure (Mk. iii. 1-6; Lk. vi. 6-11): not necessarily happening immediately after. Matthew and Luke follow Mark's order, which is topical, not historical; another instance of collision as to Sabbath observance.—Ver. 9. καὶ μεταβὰς . . . αὐτῶν. The αὐτῶν seems to imply that our evangelist takes the order as one of close temporal sequence (Mark says simply "into a synagogue," iii. 1). In that case the αὐτῶν would refer to the fault-finding Pharisees of the previous narrative, piqued by Christ's defence and bent on further mischief (vide Weiss-Meyer). The narrative comes in happily here as illustrating the scope of the principle of humanity laid down in connection with the previous incident.—Ver. 10. καὶ ἰδού, here, as in viii. 2, ix. 2, introducing in a lively manner the story.—ξηράν, a dry hand, possibly a familiar expression in Hebrew pathology (De Wette); useless, therefore a serious enough affliction for a working man (a mason, according to Hebrew Gospel, Jerome ad loc.), especially if it was the right hand, as Luke states. But the cure was not urgent for a day, could stand over; therefore a good test case as between rival conceptions of Sabbath law.—ἐπηρώτησαν. The Pharisees asked a question suggested by the case, as if eager to provoke Jesus and put Him to the proof. Mark says they observed Him, waiting for Him to take the initiative. The former alternative suits the hypothesis of immediate temporal sequence.—εἰ ἔξεστιν, etc. After λέγοντες we expect, according to classic usage, a direct question without εἰ. The εἰ is in its place in Mark (ver. 2), and the influence of his text may be suspected (Weiss) as explaining the incorrectness in Matthew. But εἰ in direct questions is not unusual in N. T. (Mt. xix. 3; Lk. xiii. 23, xxii. 49), vide Winer, § 57, 2, and Meyer ad loc. In Mark's account Christ, not the Pharisees, puts the question.

Vv. 11, 12. Christ's reply, by two home-thrusting questions and an irresistible conclusion.—τίς . . . ἄνθρωπος. One is tempted here, as in vii. 9, to put emphasis on ἄνθρωπος: who of you not dead to the feelings of a man? Such questions as this and that in Lk. xv. 4 go to the root of the matter. Humanity was what was lacking in the Pharisaic character.—πρόβατον ἕν: one sheep answering to the one working hand, whence perhaps Luke's ἡ δεξιὰ (vi. 6).—ἐὰν ἐμπέσῃ. The case supposed might quite well happen; hence in the protasis ἐὰν with subjunctive, and in the apodosis the future (Burton, N. T. Moods and Tenses, § 250). A solitary sheep might fall into a ditch on a Sabbath, and that is what its owner would do if he were an ordinary average human being, viz., lift it out at once. What would the Pharisee do? It is easy to see what he would be tempted to do if the one sheep were his own. But would he have allowed such action as a general rule? One would εἰς [1] βόθυνον, οὐχὶ κρατήσει αὐτὸ καὶ ἐγερεῖ; 12. πόσῳ οὖν διαφέρει ἄνθρωπος προβάτου; ὥστε ἔξεστι τοῖς σάββασι καλῶς ποιεῖν." 13. Τότε λέγει τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, "Ἔκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου.[1]" Καὶ ἐξέτεινε, καὶ [m] ἀποκατεστάθη [2] ὑγιὴς ὡς ἡ ἄλλη. 14. Οἱ δὲ Φαρισαῖοι [n] συμβούλιον [n] ἔλαβον κατ' αὐτοῦ ἐξελθόντες [3] ὅπως αὐτὸν

l Ch. xv. 14. Lk. vi. 39.
m here and in parall. in same sense. Ch. xvii. 11. Mk. ix. 12 (to restore social state). Heb. xiii. 19 (to friends).
n Ch. xxii. 15; xxvii. 1, 7; xxviii. 12.

[1] ℵBL have σου before την χειρα.

[2] απεκ. in ℵBLΔΣ al. D has αποκ. as in T. R.

[3] ℵBCDΣ place εξελθοντες at the beginning of the sentence (Σ with και before εξελθοντες).

infer so from the fact that Jesus argued on such questions ex concesso. In that case the theory and practice of contemporary Pharisees must have been milder than in the Talmudic period, when the rule was: if there be no danger, leave the animal in the ditch till the morrow (vide Buxtorf, Syn. Jud., c. xvi.). Grotius suggests that later Jewish law was made stricter out of hatred to Christians.—Ver. 12. πόσῳ οὖν διαφέρει, etc. This is another of those simple yet far-reaching utterances by which Christ suggested rather than formulated His doctrine of the infinite worth of man. By how much does a human being differ from a sheep? That is the question which Christian civilisation has not even yet adequately answered. This illustration from common life is not in Mark and Luke. Luke has something similar in the Sabbath cure, reported in xiv. 1-6. Some critics think that Matthew combines the two incidents, drawing from his two sources Mark and the Logia.—ὥστε, therefore, and so introducing here rather an independent sentence than a dependent clause expressive of result.—καλῶς ποιεῖν: in effect, to do good = εὖ ποιεῖν, i.e., in the present case to heal, θεραπεύειν, though in Acts x. 33, 1 Cor. vii. 37, the phrase seems to mean to do the morally right, in which sense Meyer and Weiss take it here also. Elsner, and after him Fritzsche, take it as = præclare agere, pointing to the ensuing miracle. By this brief prophetic utterance, Jesus sweeps away legal pedantries and casuistries, and goes straight to the heart of the matter. Beneficent action never unseasonable, of the essence of the Kingdom of God; therefore as permissible and incumbent on Sabbath as on other days. Spoken out of the depths of His religious consciousness, and a direct corollary from His benignant conception of God (vide Holtz., H. C., p. 91).

Vv. 13, 14. The issue: the hand cured, and Pharisaic ill-will deepened. Ver. 13. τότε λέγει. He heals by a word: sine contactu sola voce, quod ne speciem quidem violati Sabbati habere poterat (Grotius).—Ἔκτεινόν σου τ. χ. Brief authoritative word, possessing both physical and moral power, conveying life to the withered member, and inspiring awe in spectators.—καὶ ἐξέτ. καὶ ἀπεκατ. The double καὶ signifies the quick result ("celeritatem miraculi," Elsner). Grotius takes the second verb as a participle rendering: he stretched out his restored hand, assuming that not till restored could the hand be stretched out. The healing and the outstretching may be conceived of as contemporaneous.—ὑγιὴς ὡς ἡ ἄλλη: the evangelist adds this to ἀπεκατ. to indicate the completeness. We should have expected this addition rather from Luke, who ever aims at making prominent the greatness of the miracle, as well as its benevolence.—Ver. 14. ἐξελθόντες: overawed for the moment, the Pharisaic witnesses of the miracle soon recovered themselves, and went out of the synagogue with hostile intent.—συμβούλιον ἔλαβον, consulted together = συμβουλεύεσθαι.—κατ' αὐτοῦ, against Him. Hitherto they had been content with finding fault; now it is come to plotting against His life—a tribute to His power.—ὅπως, etc.: this clause indicates generally the object of their plotting, viz., that it concerned the life of the obnoxious one. They consulted not how to compass the end, but simply agreed together that it was an end to be steadily kept in view. The murderous will has come to birth, the way will follow in due course. Such is the evil fruit of Sabbath controversies.

ἀπολέσωσιν. 15. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς γνοὺς ἀνεχώρησεν ἐκεῖθεν· καὶ ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ ὄχλοι[1] πολλοί, καὶ ἐθεράπευσεν αὐτοὺς πάντας· 16. καὶ [o] ἐπετίμησεν αὐτοῖς, ἵνα μὴ [p] φανερὸν αὐτὸν [p] ποιήσωσιν· 17. ὅπως[2] πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 18. "Ἰδού, ὁ παῖς μου, ὃν ᾑρέτισα· ὁ ἀγαπητός μου, εἰς ὃν[3] [q] εὐδόκησεν ἡ ψυχή μου· θήσω τὸ πνεῦμά μου ἐπ' αὐτόν, καὶ κρίσιν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ἀπαγγελεῖ· οὐκ [r] ἐρίσει, οὐδὲ [s] κραυγάσει· 19. οὐδὲ ἀκούσει τις ἐν ταῖς πλατείαις τὴν φωνὴν αὐτοῦ. 20. κάλαμον [t] συντετριμμένον οὐ κατεάξει, καὶ λῖνον τυφόμενον οὐ σβέσει· ἕως ἂν [u] ἐκβάλῃ εἰς νῖκος τὴν κρίσιν. 21. καὶ ἐν[4] τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ ἔθνη ἐλπιοῦσι."

o Ch. xvi. 20 (W.H.). Mk. viii. 30 (with ἵνα). Mk. iii. 12 (with ἵνα μη as here).
p here and Mk. iii. 12.
q with accus. as here (W.H.). Heb. x. 6, 18.
r here only.
s John xi. 43. Acts xxii. 23.
t Mk. v. 4; xiv. 3. Lk. ix. 39. John x. 4.
u ver. 35. Ch. xiii. 52.

[1] ℵB omit οχλοι, which is inconsistent with παντας. [2] ℵBCD have ινα.
[3] ℵB have simply ον. [4] Most uncials omit εν, which is found in D it. vg.

Vv. 15-21. Jesus retires; prophetic portraiture of His character. Verses 15 and 16 are abridged from Mk. iii. 7-12, which contains an account of an extensive healing ministry. The sequel of the Sabbatic encounter is very vague. The one fact outstanding and noteworthy is the withdrawal of Jesus, conscious of having given deep offence, but anxious to avoid tragic consequences for the present. It is to that fact mainly that the evangelist attaches his fair picture of Jesus, in prophetic language. It is happily brought in here, where it gains by the contrast between the real Jesus and Jesus as conceived by the Pharisees, a miscreant deserving to die. It is not necessary to suppose that the historical basis of the picture is to be found exclusively in vv. 15, 16, all the more that the statement they contain is but a meagre reproduction of Mk. iii. 7-12, omitting some valuable material, e.g., the demoniac cry: "Thou art the Son of God". The historic features answering to the prophetic outline in the evangelist's mind may be taken from the whole story of Christ's public life as hitherto told, from the baptism onwards. Luke gives his picture of Jesus at the beginning (iv. 16-30) as a frontispiece, Matthew places his at the end of a considerable section of the story, at a critical turning point in the history, and he means the reader to look back over the whole for verification. Thus for the evangelist ver. 18 may point back to the baptism (iii. 13-17), when the voice from heaven called Jesus God's beloved Son; ver. 19 to the teaching on the hill (v.-vii.), when the voice of Jesus was heard not in the street but on the mountain top, remote from the crowd below; ver. 20 to the healing ministry among the sick, physically bruised reeds, poor suffering creatures in whom the flame of life burnt low; ver. 21 to such significant incidents as that of the centurion of Capernaum (viii. 5-13). Broad interpretation here seems best. Some features, e.g., the reference to judgment, ver. 20, second clause, are not to be pressed.

The quotation is a very free reproduction from the Hebrew, with occasional side glances at the Sept. It has been suggested that the evangelist drew neither from the Hebrew nor from the Sept., but from a Chaldee Targum in use in his time (Lutteroth). It is certainly curious that he should have omitted Is. xlii. 4, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged," etc., a most important additional feature in the picture = Messiah shall not only not break the bruised reed, but He shall not be Himself a bruised reed, but shall bravely stand for truth and right till they at length triumph. Admirable historic materials to illustrate that prophetic trait are ready to our hand in Christ's encounters with the Pharisees (ix. 1-17, xii. 1-13). Either Matthew has followed a Targum, or been misled by the similarity of Is. xlii. 3 and 4, or he means ver. 20 to bear a double reference, and read: He shall neither break nor be a bruised reed, nor allow to be quenched either in others or in Himself the feeble flame: a strong, brave, buoyant, ever-victorious hero, helper of the weak, Him-

22. Τότε προσηνέχθη[1] αὐτῷ δαιμονιζόμενος τυφλὸς καὶ κωφός· καὶ ἐθεράπευσεν αὐτόν, ὥστε τὸν τυφλὸν καὶ[2] κωφὸν καὶ λαλεῖν καὶ βλέπειν. 23. καὶ [v] ἐξίσταντο πάντες οἱ ὄχλοι καὶ ἔλεγον, "Μήτι οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς Δαβίδ;" 24. Οἱ δὲ Φαρισαῖοι ἀκούσαντες εἶπον, "Οὗτος οὐκ ἐκβάλλει τὰ δαιμόνια, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῷ Βεελζεβοὺλ ἄρχοντι τῶν δαιμονίων." 25. Εἰδὼς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς[3] τὰς ἐνθυμήσεις αὐτῶν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Πᾶσα βασιλεία [w] μερισθεῖσα καθ' ἑαυτῆς [x] ἐρημοῦται· καὶ πᾶσα πόλις ἢ οἰκία μερισθεῖσα καθ' ἑαυτῆς, οὐ σταθήσεται.

v Mk. ii. 12. Lk. viii. 56. Acts ii. 7, 12 al.
w 1 Cor. i. 13; vii. 33.
x Lk. xi. 17. Rom. xvii. 16; xviii. 16.

[1] B Cur. Syr. Cop. have προσηνεγκαν with δαιμονιζομενον τυφλον και κωφον. Most MSS. as in T. R. W.H. adopt the reading of B, putting T. R. in the margin.

[2] ℵBD and some versions omit τυφλον και, also the και before λαλειν.

[3] ℵBD omit ο Ιησους.

self a stranger to weakness.—ᾑρέτισα (ver. 18), an Ionic form in use in Hellenistic Greek, here only in N. T., often in Sept. = αἱρέομαι. Hesychius under ᾑρετισάμην gives as equivalents ἠγάπησα, ἐπιθύμησα, ἠθέλησα, ἠράσθην.—κραυγάσει (ver. 19), late form for κράζω. Phrynicus, p. 337, condemns as illiterate use of κραυγασμός instead of κεκραγμός. On the words οὐδὲ κρ. Pricaeus remarks: "Sentio clamorem intelligi qui nota est animi commoti et effervescentis". He cites examples from Seneca, Plutarch, Xenophon, etc.—ἀκούσει is late for ἀκούσεται. Verbs expressing organic acts or states have middle forms in the future (vide Rutherford, New Phrynicus, pp. 138, 376-412).—ἕως, ver. 20, followed by subjunctive, with ἄν as in classics, in a clause introduced by ἕως referring to a future contingency.—τῷ ὀνόματι, ver. 21, dative after ἐλπιοῦσιν; in Sept., Is. xlii. 4, with ἐπί. This construction here only in N. T.

Vv. 22-37. Demoniac healed and Pharisaic calumny repelled (Mk. iii. 19-30; Lk. xi. 14-23—cf. Mt. ix. 32-34). The healing of a blind and dumb demoniac has its place here not for its own sake, as a miracle, but simply as the introduction to another conflict between Jesus and the Pharisees. It is a story of wicked calumny repelled. The transition from the fair picture of the true Jesus to this hideous Pharisaic caricature is highly dramatic in its effect.

Vv. 22, 23. τυφλὸς καὶ κωφός, blind as well as dumb. The demoniac in ix. 32 dumb only. But dumbness here also is the main feature; hence in last clause κωφὸν only, and λαλεῖν before βλέπειν.—ὥστε with infinitive, expressing here not merely tendency but result.—Ver. 23. ἐξίσταντο: not implying anything exceptionally remarkable in the cure; a standing phrase (in Mark at least) for the impression made on the people. They never got to be familiar with Christ's wonderful works, so as to take them as matters of course.—μήτι implies a negative answer: they can hardly believe what the fact seems to suggest = can this possibly be, etc.? Not much capacity for faith in the average Israelite, yet honest-hearted compared with the Pharisee.—ὁ υἱὸς Δαβιδ: a popular title for the Messiah.

Ver. 24. Οἱ δὲ φαρισαῖοι. They of course have a very different opinion. In Mark these were men come down from Jerusalem, to watch, not to lay hold of Jesus, Galilee not being under the direct jurisdiction of the Sanhedrim then (vide on Mark).—Οὗτος οὐκ ἐκβάλλει, etc.: theory enunciated for second time, unless ix. 34 be an anticipation by the evangelist, or a spurious reading. What diversity of opinion! Christ's friends, according to Mark, thought Him "beside Himself"—mad, Messiah, in league with Beelzebub! Herod had yet another theory: the marvellous healer was John redivivus, and endowed with the powers of the other world. All this implies that the healing ministry was a great fact.—οὐκ . . . εἰ μή: the negative way of putting it stronger than the positive. The Pharisees had to add εἰ μή. They would gladly have said: "He does not cast out devils at all". But the fact was undeniable; therefore they had to invent a theory to neutralise its significance.—ἄρχοντι, without article, might mean, as prince, therefore able to communicate such power. So Meyer, Weiss, et al. But the article may be omitted after Βεελζεβοὺλ as after βασιλεύς, or on account of the following genitive.

26. καὶ εἰ ὁ Σατανᾶς τον Σατανᾶν ἐκβάλλει, ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν ἐμερίσθη· πῶς οὖν σταθήσεται ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ; 27. καὶ εἰ ἐγὼ ἐν Βεελζεβοὺλ ἐκβάλλω τὰ δαιμόνια, οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν ἐν τίνι ἐκβάλλουσι; διὰ τοῦτο αὐτοὶ ὑμῶν ἔσονται κριταί.[1] 28. εἰ δὲ ἐγὼ ἐν Πνεύματι Θεοῦ[2] ἐκβάλλω τὰ δαιμόνια, ἄρα [y] ἔφθασεν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ.

y Rom. ix. 31. 2 Cor. x. 14. Phil. iii. 16. 1 Thess. ii. 16 (in all = to reach).

[1] ℵBD have κριται εσονται υμων.

[2] Most uncials have εγω after εν Πνευματι θεου, on which the emphasis ought to lie.

So Schanz. Whether the Pharisees believed this theory may be doubted. It was enough that it was plausible. To reason with such men is vain. Yet Jesus did reason for the benefit of disciples.

Vv. 25-30. The theory shown to be absurd.—Ver. 25. εἰδὼς τὰς ἐνθυμήσεις. Jesus not only heard their words, but knew their thoughts, the malicious feelings which prompted their words, and strove so to present the case as to convict them of bad faith and dishonesty.—πᾶσα βασιλεία, etc.: statement of an axiom widely exemplified in human affairs: division fatal to stability in kingdoms and cities.—σταθήσεται: 1st future passive with an intransitive sense, vide Winer, § 38, 1.—Ver. 26 applies the axiom to Satan. εἰ, introduces a simple particular supposition without reference to its truth.—ἐμερίσθη: the aorist has the force of a perfect. Satan casting out Satan means self-stultification; ipso facto, self-division results. Against the argument it might be objected: Kingdoms and cities do become divided against themselves, regardless of fatal consequences, why not also Satan? Why should not that happen to Satan's kingdom which has happened even to the Christian Church? Jesus seems to have credited Satan with more astuteness than is possessed by states, cities, and churches. Satan may be wicked, He says in effect, but he is not a fool. Then it has to be considered that communities commit follies which individuals avoid. Men war against each other to their common undoing, who would be wiser in their own affairs. One Satan might cast out another, but no Satan will cast out himself. And that is the case put by Jesus. Some, e.g., De Wette and Fritzsche, take ὁ Σατανᾶς τ. Σ. ἐκβάλλει as = one Satan casting out another. But that is not Christ's meaning. He so puts the case as to make the absurdity evident. Ex hypothesi He had a right to put it so; for the theory was that Satan directly empowered and enabled Him to deliver men from his (Satan's) power.—Ver 27. To the previous convincing argument Jesus adds an argumentum ad hominem, based on the exorcism then practised among the Jews, with which it would appear the Pharisees found no fault.—οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν, not of course Christ's disciples (so most of the Fathers), for the Pharisaic prejudice against Him would extend to them, but men belonging to the same school or religious type, like-minded. By referring to their performances Jesus put the Pharisees in a dilemma. Either they must condemn both forms of dispossession or explain why they made a difference. What they would have said we do not know, but it is not difficult to suggest reasons. The Jewish exorcists operated in conventional fashion by use of herbs and magical formulæ, and the results were probably insignificant. The practice was sanctioned by custom, and harmless. But in casting out devils, as in all other things, Jesus was original, and His method was too effectual. His power, manifest to all, was His offence.—κριταί. Jesus now makes the fellow-religionists of the Pharisees their judges. On a future occasion He will make John the Baptist their judge (xxi. 21-27). Such home-thrusts were very inconvenient.

Ver. 28. The alternative: if not by Satan then by the Spirit of God, with an inevitable inference as to the worker and His work.—ἐν πνεύματι θεοῦ. Luke has ἐν δακτύλῳ θ. The former seems more in keeping with the connection of thought as defending the ethical character of Christ's work assailed by the Pharisees. If, indeed, the spirit of God were regarded from the charismatic point of view, as the source of miraculous gifts, the two expressions would be synonymous. But there is reason to believe that by the time our Gospel was written the Pauline conception of the Holy Spirit's influence as chiefly ethical and immanent, as distinct from that of the primitive apostolic church, in which it was charismatic and transcendent, had gained currency (vide my St. Paul's

29. ἢ πῶς δύναταί τις εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ καὶ τὰ σκεύη αὐτοῦ διαρπάσαι,[1] ἐὰν μὴ πρῶτον δήσῃ τὸν ἰσχυρόν; καὶ τότε τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ διαρπάσει.[2] 30. ὁ μὴ ὢν μετ' ἐμοῦ, κατ' ἐμοῦ

[1] BCXΣ have the simple αρπασαι. διαρπασαι (ℵDLΔ al.) conforms either to Mk. or to the next clause.

[2] ℵDΣ (Tisch.) have διαρπαση. BCL al. pl. have διαρπασει, as in T. R.

Conception of Christianity, chap. xiii.). A trace of the new Pauline view may be found in Mt. x. 20: "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father speaking in you". The influence is within, and the product is not unintelligible utterance, like that of the speaker with tongues (1 Cor. xii., xiv.), but wise, sincere apology for the faith. But why then did Luke not adopt this Pauline phrase? Because one of his main aims was to bring out the miraculousness of Christ's healing works; that they were done by the very finger of God (Exod. viii. 15).—ἔφθασεν. Fritzsche takes this word strictly as signifying not merely: the kingdom of God has come nigh you (ἤγγικεν, Lk. x. 9), but: has come nigh sooner than you expected. The more general sense, however, seems most suitable, as it is the usual sense in the N. T. The point at issue was: do the events in question mean Satan's kingdom come or God's kingdom come? It must be one or other; make up your minds which.—Ver. 29. To help them to decide Jesus throws out yet another parabolic line of thought.—ἤ, if all that I have said does not convince you consider this. The parable seems based on Is. xlix. 24, 25, and like all Christ's parabolic utterances appeals to common sense. The theme is, spoiling the spoiler, and the argument that the enterprise implies hostile purpose and success in it superior power. The application is: the demoniac is a captive of Satan; in seeking to cure him I show myself Satan's enemy; in actually curing him I show myself Satan's master.—τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ: the article is either generic, or individualising after the manner of parabolic speech. Proverbs and parables assume acquaintance with their characters.—σκεύη, household furniture (Gen. xxxi. 37); ἁρπάσαι, seize (Judges xxi. 22).—διαρπάσει, make a clean sweep of all that is in the house, the owner, bound hand and foot, being utterly helpless. The use of this compound verb points to the thoroughness of the cures wrought on demoniacs, as in the case of the demoniac of Gadara: quiet, clothed, sane (Mk. v. 15).—Ver. 30. One begins at this point to have the feeling that here, as elsewhere, our evangelist groups sayings of kindred character instead of exactly reproducing Christ's words as spoken to the Pharisees. The connection is obscure, and the interpretations therefore conflicting. On first view one would say that the adage seems more appropriate in reference to lukewarm disciples or undecided hearers than to the Pharisees, who made no pretence of being on Christ's side. Some accordingly (e.g., Bleek, after Elwert and Ullmann) have so understood it. Others, including Grotius, Wetstein, De Wette, take the ἐγώ of the adage to be Satan, and render: he who, like myself, is not with Satan is against him. Kypke, Observ. Sac., says: "Prima persona posita est a servatore pro quacunque alia, proverbialiter, hoc sensu: qui socius cujusdam bella cum alio gerentis non est, is pro adversario censeri solet. Cum igitur ego me re ipsa adversarium Satanae esse ostenderim, nulla specie socius ejus potero vocari." This certainly brings the saying into line with the previous train of thought, but if Jesus had meant to say that He surely would have expressed Himself differently. The Fathers (Hilary, Jerome, Chrys.) took the ἐγώ to be Jesus and the ὁ μὴ ὢν to be Satan. So understood the adage contains a fourth concluding argument against the notion of a league between Jesus and Satan. Most modern interpreters refer the ὁ μ. ω. to the Pharisees. Schanz, however, understands the saying as referring to the undecided among the people. The only serious objection to this view is that it makes the saying irrelevant to the situation.—σκορπίζει: late for the earlier σκεδάννυμι, vide Lob., Phryn., p. 218. As to the metaphor of gathering and scattering, its natural basis is not apparent. But in all cases, when one man scatters what another gathers their aims and interests are utterly diverse. Satan is the arch-waster, Christ the collector, Saviour.

Vv. 31, 32. Jesus changes His tone from argument to solemn warning. Ver.

ἐστι. καὶ ὁ μὴ συνάγων μετ' ἐμοῦ, [z] σκορπίζει. 31. Διὰ τοῦτο λέγω ὑμῖν, Πᾶσα ἁμαρτία καὶ [a] βλασφημία ἀφεθήσεται τοῖς ἀνθρώποις· ἡ δὲ τοῦ Πνεύματος βλασφημία οὐκ ἀφεθήσεται τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.[1] 32. καὶ ὃς ἂν[2] εἴπῃ λόγον κατὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ· ὃς δ' ἂν εἴπῃ κατὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Ἁγίου, οὐκ ἀφεθήσεται[3] αὐτῷ, οὔτε ἐν τούτῳ τῷ αἰῶνι οὔτε ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι.

z Lk. xi. 23. John x. 12; xvi. 32. 2 Cor. ix. 9.
a Ch. xv. 19. Mk. iii. 28; vii. 22. Eph. iv. 31 (evil speaking generally). Ch. xxvi. 65. Mk. ii. 7; xiv. 64. John x. 33 (against God).

[1] אB omit τοις ανθρωποις, which seem to be simply an echo of τ. αν. in the previous clause.

[2] ος εαν in most uncials. D has ος αν, as in T. R.

[3] For ουκ αφεθησεται found in most uncials B has ου μη αφεθη, which W.H. place in the margin.

31. διὰ τοῦτο connects not merely with preceding verse, but with the whole foregoing argument. Mark more impressively introduces the blasphemy-logion with a solemn ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν.—πᾶσα ἁμαρτία, etc. A broad preliminary declaration of the pardonableness of human sin of all sorts, and especially of sins of the tongue, worthy and characteristic of Jesus, and making what follows more impressive.—ἡ δὲ τ. Π. βλασ. οὐκ ἀφεθήσεται: pointed, emphatic exception. Evidently the Spirit here is taken ethically. He represents the moral ideal, the absolutely good and holy. Blasphemy against the Spirit so conceived unpardonable—that is our Lord's deliberate judgment.—βλασφημία, injurious speech (from βλάπτω and φήμη), in such a case will mean speaking of the holy One as if He were unholy, or, in the abstract, calling good evil, not by misunderstanding but through antipathy to the good.—Ver. 32. So serious a statement needs to be carefully guarded against misapprehension; therefore Jesus adds an explanatory declaration.—λόγον κατὰ τ. υ. τ. ἀνθρώπου. Jesus distinguishes between a word against the Son of Man and a word against the Holy Ghost. The reference in the former is to Himself, presumably, though Mark at the corresponding place has "the sons of men," and no special mention of a particular son of man. Christ gives the Pharisees to understand that the gravamen of their offence is not that they have spoken evil of Him. Jesus had no exceptional sensitiveness as to personal offences. Nor did He mean to suggest that offences of the kind against Him were more serious or less easily pardonable than such offences against other men, say, the prophets or the Baptist. Many interpreters, indeed, think otherwise, and represent blasphemy against the Son of Man as the higher limit of the forgiveable. A grave mistake, I humbly think. Jesus was as liable to honest misunderstanding as other good men, in some respects more liable than any, because of the exceptional originality of His character and conduct. All new things are liable to be misunderstood and decried, and the best for a while to be treated as the worst. Jesus knew this, and allowed for it. Men might therefore honestly misunderstand Him, and be in no danger of the sin against the Holy Ghost (e.g., Saul of Tarsus). On the other hand, men might dishonestly calumniate any ordinary good man, and be very near the unpardonable sin. It is not the man that makes the difference, but the source of the blasphemy. If the source be ignorance, misconception, ill-informed prejudice, blasphemy against the Son of Man will be equally pardonable with other sins. If the source be malice, rooted dislike of the good, selfish preference of wrong, because of the advantage it brings, to the right which the good seek to establish, then the sin is not against the man but against the cause, and the Divine Spirit who inspires him, and though the agent be but a humble, imperfect man, the sinner is perilously near the unpardonable point. Jesus wished the Pharisees to understand that, in His judgment, that was their position.—οὔτε, οὔτε analyse the negation of pardon, conceived as affecting both worlds, into its parts for sake of emphasis (vide on V. 34-36). Dogmatic inferences, based on the double negation, to possible pardon after death, are precarious. Lightfoot (Hor. Heb.) explains the double negation by reference to the Jewish legal doctrine that, in contrast to other sins, profaning the name of God

33. [a]Ἢ ποιήσατε τὸ δένδρον καλόν, καὶ τὸν καρπὸν αὐτοῦ καλόν, ἢ ποιήσατε τὸ δένδρον σαπρὸν, καὶ τὸν καρπὸν αὐτοῦ σαπρόν· ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ καρποῦ τὸ δένδρον γινώσκεται. 34. Γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, πῶς δύνασθε ἀγαθὰ λαλεῖν, πονηροὶ ὄντες; ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ [b]περισσεύματος τῆς καρδίας τὸ στόμα λαλεῖ. 35. ὁ ἀγαθὸς ἄνθρωπος ἐκ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ θησαυροῦ τῆς καρδίας[1] [c]ἐκβάλλει τὰ[2] ἀγαθά· καὶ ὁ πονηρὸς ἄνθρωπος ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ θησαυροῦ ἐκβάλλει πονηρά. 36. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι πᾶν ῥῆμα ἀργόν, ὃ ἐὰν λαλήσωσιν[3] οἱ ἄνθρωποι, [d]ἀποδώσουσι περὶ αὐτοῦ [d]λόγον ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως. 37. ἐκ γὰρ τῶν λόγων σου δικαιωθήσῃ, καὶ ἐκ τῶν λόγων σου καταδικασθήσῃ."

b Lk. vi. 45. Mk. viii. 8. 2 Cor. viii. 14.
c Ch. xiii. 52. Lk. x. 35 (in same sense).
d Lk. xvi. 2. Acts xix. 40. 1 Pet. iv. 5.

[1] Most uncials omit της καρδιας. It comes from Lk. (vi. 45).

[2] BD al. omit τα, which, however, is found in ℵCLΔΣ and retained by W.H. on the margin.

[3] For ο εαν λαλησωσιν ℵBC have ο λαλησουσιν, D λαλουσιν.

could be expiated only by death, unpardonable in this life. Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, says Jesus, in conscious antithesis, pardonable neither here nor there: "neque ante mortem, neque per mortem".

Vv. 33-37. Kindred Logia. With the word concerning blasphemy the self-defence of Jesus against Pharisaic calumny reached its culmination and probably (as in Mark's report) its close. The sentences following seem to be accretions rather than an organic part of the discourse. They substantially reproduce sayings found in Sermon on Mount (vii. 16-20), there directed against false prophets, here against false religionists.—Ver. 35 is found in Luke's version of the Sermon (vi. 45). They might have been remarks made to the disciples about the Pharisees, as in xvi. 6, though in their present form direct address is implied (vide ver. 34). Their essential import is that the nature or heart of a man determines his speech and action. Given the tree, the fruit follows.—Ver. 33. ποιήσατε = εἴπατε (Euthy. Zig.), judge, pronounce; call both tree and fruit good, or evil; they must both be of one kind, in fact and in thought (vide Kypke, ad loc.). The reference of the adage has been much discussed: to the Pharisees or to Christ? Kypke replies: to Christ if you connect with what goes before, to the Pharisees if with what follows. As an adage the saying admits of either application. The Fathers favoured the reference to Christ, whom Meyer follows.—Ver. 34. Γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, vide iii. 7. John and Jesus agree in thinking the Pharisees a viper-brood. Both conceive them as morally hopeless. The Baptist wonders that they should come to a baptism of repentance. Jesus thinks them far on the way to final impenitence. But the point He makes here is that, being what they are, they cannot but speak evil. The poison of their nature must come out in their words.—Ver. 35. ὁ ἀγαθὸς ἄ.: good in the sense of benignant, gracious, kindly, the extreme moral opposite of the malignant viper-nature.—θησαυροῦ: in ver. 34 the heart is conceived as a fountain, of which speech is the overflow, here as a treasure whose stores of thought and feeling the mouth freely distributes.—ἐκβάλλει suggests speech characterised by energy, passion. There was no lack of emphasis in Pharisaic comments on Jesus. They hissed out their malevolent words at Him, being not heartless but bad-hearted. But cf. texts referred to on margin.—Ver 36. πᾶν ῥ. ἀργὸν: speech being the outcome of the heart, no word is insignificant, not even that which is ἀργόν, ineffectual (α, ἔργον), insipid, "idle". It is an index of thoughtlessness if not of malice. This verse contains an important warning, whether spoken at this time or not.—Ver. 37. ἐκ γὰρ τ. λόγων σου. Judgment by words here taught; in Mt. xxv. 31-46 judgment by the presence or absence of kind deeds. No contradiction, for words are viewed as the index of a good or bad heart: bad positively, like that of the Pharisees, who spoke wickedly; bad negatively, like that of the thoughtless, who speak senselessly. On the teaching of this passage cf. James iii.

38. Τότε ἀπεκρίθησάν[1] τινες τῶν γραμματέων καὶ Φαρισαίων, λέγοντες, "Διδάσκαλε, θέλομεν ἀπὸ σοῦ σημεῖον ἰδεῖν." 39. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Γενεὰ πονηρὰ καὶ [e] μοιχαλὶς σημεῖον [f] ἐπιζητεῖ· καὶ σημεῖον οὐ δοθήσεται αὐτῇ, εἰ μὴ τὸ σημεῖον Ἰωνᾶ τοῦ προφήτου. 40. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἦν Ἰωνᾶς ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ τοῦ κήτους τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ τρεῖς νύκτας, οὕτως ἔσται ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ τῆς γῆς τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ τρεῖς νύκτας. 41. Ἄνδρες Νινευῖται ἀναστήσονται ἐν τῇ κρίσει μετὰ τῆς γενεᾶς ταύτης, καὶ κατακρινοῦσιν αὐτήν· ὅτι μετενόησαν εἰς τὸ κήρυγμα Ἰωνᾶ· καὶ

e Ch. xvi. 4. Mk. viii. 38. Jas. iv. 4.
f vide at Ch. vi. 32.

[1] ℵBCDLΣ insert αυτω before τινες.

Vv. 38-45. A sign asked and refused, with relative discourse (Lk. xi. 16, 29-36). Both Matt.'s and Luke's reports convey the impression that the demand for a sign, and the enunciation of the Satanic theory as to Christ's cures of demoniacs, were synchronous. If they were the demand was impudent, hypocritical, insulting. Think of the men who could so speak of Christ's healing ministry wanting a sign that would satisfy them as to His Messianic claims!—Ver. 38. σημεῖον: what kind of a sign? They thought the cure of demoniacs a sign from hell. Elsewhere we read of their asking a sign from heaven (xvi. 1). From what quarter was the sign now asked to come from? Perhaps those who made the demand had no idea; neither knew nor cared. Their question really meant: these signs won't do; if you want us to believe in you you must do something else than cast out devils. The apparent respect and earnestness of the request are feigned: "teacher, we desire from you (emphatic position) to see a sign". It reminds one of the mock homage of the soldiers at the Passion (xxvii. 27, 31).—Ver. 39. γενεὰ, as in xi. 16, a moral class, "quae in omni malitia et improbitate vivit," Suicer, s. v. γενεά.—μοιχαλίς, unfaithful to God as a wife to a husband, apt description of men professing godliness but ungodly in heart.—ἐπιζητεῖ, hankers after, as in vi. 32; characteristic; men that have no light within crave external evidence, which given would be of no service to them. Therefore: οὐ δοθήσεται: it will not be given either by Jesus or by any one else. He declines, knowing it to be vain. No sign will convince them; why give one?—εἰ μὴ, etc.: except the sign of Jonah the prophet, which was no sign in their sense. What is referred to? But for what follows we should have said: the preaching of repentance by Jonah to the Ninevites. So Lk. xi. 30 seems to take it. Jonah preached repentance to the men of Nineveh as the only way of escape from judgment. Jesus points to that historic instance and says: Beware! Jonah was not the only prophetic preacher of repentance; but, as Nineveh is held up as a reproach to the persons addressed, to single him out was fitting.—Ver. 40 gives an entirely different turn to the reference. The verse cannot be challenged on critical grounds. If it is an interpolation it must have become an accepted part of the text before the date of our earliest copies. If it be genuine then Jesus points to His resurrection as the appropriate sign for an unbelieving generation, saying in effect: you will continue to disbelieve in spite of all I can say or do, and at last you will put me to death. But I will rise again, a sign for your confusion if not for your conversion. For opposite views on this interpretation of the sign of Jonah, vide Meyer ad loc. and Holtzmann in H.C.—Ver. 41. Application of the reference in ver. 39. The men of Nineveh are cited in condemnation of the Jewish contemporaries of Jesus. Cf. similar use of historic parallels in xi. 20-24.—πλεῖον Ἰωνᾶ, more than Jonah, cf. ver. 6; refers either to Jesus personally as compared with Jonah, or to His ministry as compared with Jonah's. In the latter case the meaning is: there is far more in what is now going on around you to shut you up to repentance than in anything Jonah said to the men of Nineveh (so Grotius).—Ver. 41. βασίλισσα νότου is next pressed into the service of putting unbelievers to shame. The form βασίλισσα was condemned by Phryn., but Elsner cites instances from Demosthenes and other ἰδού, πλεῖον Ἰωνᾶ ὧδε. 42. [g] βασίλισσα νότου ἐγερθήσεται ἐν τῇ κρίσει μετὰ τῆς γενεᾶς ταύτης, καὶ κατακρινεῖ αὐτήν· ὅτι ἦλθεν ἐκ τῶν [h] περάτων τῆς γῆς ἀκοῦσαι τὴν σοφίαν Σολομῶντος καὶ ἰδού, πλεῖον Σολομῶντος ὧδε. 43. Ὅταν δὲ τὸ ἀκάθαρτον πνεῦμα ἐξέλθῃ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, διέρχεται δι' [i] ἀνύδρων τόπων, ζητοῦν ἀνάπαυσιν, καὶ οὐχ εὑρίσκει. 44. τότε λέγει, Ἐπιστρέψω εἰς τὸν οἶκόν μου,[1] ὅθεν ἐξῆλθον· καὶ ἐλθὸν εὑρίσκει [j] σχολάζοντα, [k] σεσαρωμένον καὶ g Lk. xi. 31. Acts viii. 27. Rev. xviii. 7.

h Lk. xi. 31. Rom. x. 18. Heb. vi. 16.
i Lk. xi. 24. 2 Pet. ii. 17. Jude 12.
j 1 Cor. vii. 5 (to have leisure).
k Lk. xi. 25; xv. 8.

[1] ℵBDZ read εις τον οικον μου επιστρεψω. The reading in T. R. is assimilated to Lk. (xi. 24).

good writers. J. Alberti also (Observ. Philol.) cites an instance from Athenaus, lib. xiii. 595: βασίλισσ' ἔσει Βαβυλῶνος. The reference is to the story in 1 Kings x. and 2 Chron. ix. concerning the Queen of Sheba visiting Solomon.—ἐκ τῶν περάτων τῆς γῆς. Elsner quotes in illustration the exhortation of Isocrates not to grudge to go a long way to hear those who profess to teach anything useful.—πλεῖον Σ., again a claim of superiority for the present over the great persons and things of the past. On the apparent egotism of these comparisons, vide my Apologetics, p. 367; and remember that Jesus claimed superiority not merely for Himself and His work, but even for the least in the Kingdom of Heaven (xi. 11).

Vv. 43-45. A comparison. Cf. Lk. xi. 24-26. Formerly Jesus had likened the evil race of Pharisaic religionists to children playing in the market-place (xi. 16-19). Now He uses expelled demons to depict their spiritual condition. The similitude moves in the region of popular opinion, and gives a glimpse into the superstitions of the time. We gather from it, first, that the effects of the arts of exorcists were temporary; and, second, the popular theory to explain the facts: the demon returned because he could not find a comfortable home anywhere else. On this vide Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. The parable was naturally suggested by the cure of the demoniac (ver. 22).—Ver. 43. δι' ἀνύδρων τόπων: the haunts of demons, as popularly conceived, were places uninhabited by men, deserts and graveyards. The demon in Tobias viii. 3 flies to the uppermost parts of Egypt; and in Baruch iv. 35 a land desolated by fire is to become tenanted by demons.—διέρχεται ζητοῦν: the spirit keeps moving on in quest of a resting place; like a human being he feels ill at ease in the monotonous waste of sand.—οὐκ εὑρίσκει: in Luke εὑρίσκον. The change from participle to finite verb is expressive. The failure to find a resting place was an important fact, as on it depended the resolve to return to the former abode.—Ver. 44. σχολάζοντα σ. καὶ κ. = untenanted and ready for a tenant, inviting by its clean, ornamented condition. The epithets simply describe in lively pictorial manner the risk of repossession. But naturally commentators seek spiritual equivalents for them. Ornamented how? With grace, say some (Hilary, Chrys., Godet), with sin, others (Orig., Jer., Euthy., Weiss, etc.). The ornamentation must be to the taste of the tenant. And what is that? Neither for sin nor for grace, but for sin counterfeiting grace; a form of godliness without the power; sanctity which is but a mask for iniquity. The house is decorated reputedly for God's occupancy, really for the devil's.—σεσαρωμένον; σαροῦν is condemned by Phryn.; "when you hear one say σάρωσον bid him say παρακόρησον".—Ver. 45. ἑπτὰ ἕτερα πνεύματα, etc. This feature is introduced to make the picture answer to the moral condition of the Pharisees as conceived by Jesus. The parable here passes out of the region of popular imagination and natural probability into a region of deeper psychological insight. Why should the demon want associates in occupancy of the house? Why not rather have it all to himself as before?—οὕτως ἔσται, etc. Ethical application. The general truth implied is: moral and religious reform may be, has been, succeeded by deeper degeneracy. The question naturally suggests itself: what is the historical range of the application? It has been answered variously. From the lawgiving till the present time (Hil., Jer.); from the exile till now (Chrys., Grotius, etc.); from the Baptist till now (Weiss, etc.). Christ gives no hint of l Lk. xi. 25. Ch. xxiii. 29 (of tombs).

[l] κεκοσμημένον. 45. τότε πορεύεται καὶ [m] παραλαμβάνει μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ ἑπτὰ ἕτερα πνεύματα [n] πονηρότερα ἑαυτοῦ, καὶ εἰσελθόντα κατοικεῖ ἐκεῖ· καὶ γίνεται τὰ ἔσχατα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐκείνου χείρονα τῶν πρώτων. οὕτως ἔσται καὶ τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῇ πονηρᾷ." 46. Ἔτι δὲ [1] αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος τοῖς ὄχλοις, ἰδού, ἡ μήτηρ καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ εἱστήκεισαν ἔξω, [o] ζητοῦντες αὐτῷ λαλῆσαι. 47. εἶπε δέ τις αὐτῷ, "Ἰδού, ἡ μήτηρ σου καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί σου ἔξω ἑστήκασι, ζητοῦντές σοι λαλῆσαι." [2] 48. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπε τῷ εἰπόντι [3] αὐτῷ, "Τίς ἐστιν ἡ μήτηρ μου; καὶ τίνες εἰσὶν οἱ ἀδελφοί μου;" 49. Καὶ ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ [4] ἐπὶ τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ εἶπεν, "Ἰδού, ἡ μήτηρ μου καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί μου. 50. ὅστις γὰρ ἂν ποιήσῃ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ πατρός μου τοῦ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, αὐτός μου ἀδελφὸς καὶ ἀδελφὴ καὶ μήτηρ ἐστίν."

m Ch. xvii. 1.
n compar. here and in Lk. xi. 26.
o Ch. xxi. 46. Mk. xii. 12. Lk. v. 18. John v. 18 (with inf. = to endeavour).

[1] ℵB omit δε (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] The whole of ver. 47 is wanting in ℵBL and is omitted by W.H. Tisch. puts it within brackets. It is an explanatory gloss.

[3] λεγοντι in ℵBDZ.

[4] ℵDΣ omit αυτου (Tisch.). BC retain it (W.H. within brackets).

what period was in His thoughts, unless we find one in the epithet μοιχαλὶς (ver. 39), which recalls prophetic charges of unfaithfulness to her Divine Husband against Israel, and points to the exile as the crisis at which she seriously repented of that sin. It is not at all likely that Christ's view was limited to the period dating from John's ministry. Moral laws need large spaces of time for adequate exemplification. The most instructive exemplification of the degeneracy described is supplied by the period from Ezra till Christ's time. With Ezra ended material idolatry. But from that period dates the reign of legalism, which issued in Rabbinism, a more subtle and pernicious idolatry of the letter, the more deadly that it wore the fair aspect of zeal for God and righteousness.

Vv. 46-50. The relatives of Jesus (Mk. iii. 31-35; Lk. viii. 19-21). Matthew and Mark place this incident in connection with the discourse occasioned by Pharisaic calumny. Luke gives it in a quite different connection. The position assigned it by Matthew and Mark is at least fitting, and through it one can understand the motive. Not vanity: a desire to make a parade of their influence over their famous relative on the part of mother and brethren (Chrys., Theophy., etc.), but solicitude on His account and a desire to extricate Him from trouble. This incident should be viewed in connection with the statement in Mk. iii. 21 that friends thought Jesus beside Himself. They wished to rescue Him from Himself and from men whose ill-will He had, imprudently, they probably thought, provoked.—Ver. 46. ἀδελφοὶ, brothers in the natural sense, sons of Mary by Joseph? Presumably, but an unwelcome hypothesis to many on theological grounds.—εἱστήκεισαν, pluperfect, but with sense of imperfect (Fritzsche). They had been standing by while Jesus was speaking.—ἔξω, on the outskirts of the crowd, or outside the house into which Jesus entered (Mk. iii. 19).—Ver. 47 (wanting in ℵBL) states what is implied in ver. 48 (τῷ λέγοντι), that some one reported to Jesus the presence of His relatives.—Ver. 48. τίς ἐστιν ἡ μήτηρ μου. One might have expected Jesus, out of delicacy, to have spoken only of His brethren, leaving the bearing of the question on His mother to be inferred. But the mention of her gave increased emphasis to the truth proclaimed. The question repels a well-meant but ignorant interference of natural affection with the sovereign claims of duty. It reveals a highly strung spirit easily to be mistaken for a morbid enthusiasm.—Ver. 49. ἐκτείνας τ. χ.: an eloquent gesture, making the words following, for those present, superfluous.—ἰδού, etc. There a Ch. xxvii. 62. Mk. iv. 1; vi. 30; vii. 1 (with πρὸς τινα).

XIII. 1. ʼEN δὲ[1] τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ ἐξελθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀπὸ[2] τῆς οἰκίας ἐκάθητο παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν· 2. καὶ a συνήχθησαν πρὸς αὐτὸν ὄχλοι πολλοί, ὥστε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸ[3] πλοῖον ἐμβάντα καθῆσθαι· καὶ

[1] ℵBΣ omit δε, which the ancient revisers seem to have inserted regularly as a transitional particle.

[2] ℵZ have εκ (Tisch.). B has neither εκ nor απο (W.H. omit απο and have εκ in margin).

[3] ℵBCLZΣ omit το.

are idealists, promoters of pet schemes, and religious devotees whom it would cost no effort to speak thus; not an admirable class of people. It did cost Jesus an effort, for He possessed a warm heart and unblighted natural affections. But He sacrificed natural affection on the altar of duty, as He finally sacrificed His life.—Ver. 50. Definition of spiritual kinsmanship. The highest brotherhood based on spiritual affinity.—ὅστις γὰρ ἂν ποιήσῃ: a general present supposition expressed by the subjunctive with ἂν followed by present indicative.—τὸ θέλημα τ. πατρός μ. τ. ἐν οὐρανοῖς: this probably comes nearest to Christ's actual words. In such a solemn utterance He was likely to mention His Father, whose supreme claims His filial heart ever owned. Mark has "the will of God"; Luke "those who hear and do the word of God"; obviously secondary.

CHAPTER XIII. JESUS TEACHING IN PARABLES. The transition from the sultry, sombre atmosphere of chap. xii. into the calm, clear air of Christ's parabolic wisdom would be as welcome to the evangelist as it is to us. Yet even here we do not altogether escape the shadow of unbelief or spiritual insusceptibility. We read of much good seed wasted, bad seed sown among good, fish of all sorts caught in the net. The adoption of the parabolic method of teaching, indeed, had its origin in part in disappointing experiences; truths misapprehended, actions misunderstood, compelling the Teacher to fall back on natural analogies for explanation and self-defence. All the synoptists recognise the importance of this type of teaching by their formal manner of introducing the first of the group of seven parables contained in Matthew's collection. Cf. Mt. xiii. 3; Mk. iv. 2; Lk. viii. 4. Matthew's way of massing matter of the same kind most effectually impresses us with the significance of this feature in Christ's teaching ministry. That Jesus spoke all the seven parables grouped together in this chapter at one time is not certain or even likely. In the corresponding section Mark gives only two of the seven (Sower and Mustard Seed). Luke has the Sower only. The Sower, the Tares, and the Drag net may have formed a single discourse, as very closely connected in structure and import. Perhaps we should rather say had a place in the discourse from the boat, which seems to have been a review of the past ministry of Jesus, expressing chiefly disappointment with the result. Much besides parables would be spoken, the parables being employed to point the moral: much seed, little fruit, and yet a beginning made destined to grow; the situation to be viewed with patience and hope. Just how many of the parables reported by the evangelists were spoken then it is impossible to determine.

Vv. 1-9. The Parable of the Sower (Mk. iv. 1-9; Lk. viii. 4-8). Ver. 1. ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ. The parable stands in the same connection in Mark (not in Luke), but not as following in immediate temporal sequence. No stress should be laid on Matthew's phrase "on that day".—ἐξελθὼν τῆς οἰκίας: the house in which Jesus is supposed to have been when His friends sought for Him, though Matthew makes no mention of it (vide Mk. iii. 19).—ἐκάθητο: as at the teaching on the hill (v. 1), suggestive of lengthened discourse. The Teacher sat, the hearers stood.—Ver. 2. ὄχλοι πολλοί, great numbers of people in all the accounts, compelling the Teacher to withdraw from the shore into the sea, and, sitting in a boat, to address the people standing on the margin. Much interest, popularity of the Teacher still great, and even growing; yet He has formed a very sober estimate of its value, as the parable following shows.—Ver. 3. ἐν παραβολαῖς: this method of teaching was not peculiar to Jesus—it was common among Easterns—but His use of it was unique in felicity and in the πᾶς ὁ ὄχλος ἐπὶ τὸν [b] αἰγιαλὸν εἱστήκει. 3. καὶ ἐλάλησεν αὐτοῖς πολλὰ ἐν [c] παραβολαῖς, λέγων, "Ἰδού, ἐξῆλθεν ὁ σπείρων τοῦ σπείρειν. 4. καὶ ἐν τῷ σπείρειν αὐτόν, ἃ μὲν ἔπεσε παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν· καὶ ἦλθε[1] τὰ πετεινά, καὶ [d] κατέφαγεν αὐτά. 5. ἄλλα δὲ ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὰ [e] πετρώδη, ὅπου οὐκ εἶχε γῆν πολλήν· καὶ εὐθέως ἐξανέτειλε, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν βάθος[2] γῆς· 6. ἡλίου δὲ ἀνατείλαντος [f] ἐκαυματίσθη, καὶ διὰ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν ῥίζαν, [g] ἐξηράνθη. 7. ἄλλα δὲ ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὰς ἀκάνθας, καὶ ἀνέβησαν αἱ ἄκανθαι, καὶ ἀπέπνιξαν[3] αὐτά. 8. ἄλλα δὲ ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν τὴν καλήν, καὶ ἐδίδου καρπόν, ὃ μὲν ἑκατόν, ὃ δὲ ἑξήκοντα, ὃ δὲ τριάκοντα. 9. ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν[4] ἀκουέτω." 10. Καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ εἶπον αὐτῷ, "Διατί ἐν παραβολαῖς

b ver. 48. John xxi. 4. Acts xxi. 5; xxvii. 39, 49.
c frequent in Gospp. and in Heb. ix. 9; xi. 19.
d Lk. xv. 30. John ii. 17.
e ver. 20. Mk. iv. 5, 16.
f Mk. iv. 6. Rev. xvi. 8, 9.
g Ch. xxi. 19, 20. John xv. 6. Jas. i. 11.

[1] B has ελθοντα τα πετεινα κατεφαγεν, which W.H. put in the text, placing ηλθον τ. π. και in the margin.

[2] B has της before γης.

[3] ℵD have επνιξαν (Tisch.). BCZΣ al. and many min. have απεπνιξαν (W.H. with επνιξαν in margin).

[4] ℵBL omit ακουειν, which comes from parall.

importance of the lessons conveyed. Abstract a priori definitions of the word serve little purpose; we learn best what a parable is, in the mouth of Jesus, by studying the parables He spoke. Thence we gather that to speak in parables means to use the familiar in nature or in human life (in the form of a narrative or otherwise) to embody unfamiliar truths of the spiritual world.

Vv. 3-9. The Parable.—Ver. 3. ὁ σπείρων: either ὁ generic, or the Sower of my story.—τοῦ σπείρειν: the infinitive of purpose with the genitive of article, very frequent in N. T. and in late Greek. —Ver. 4. παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν: not the highway, of which there were few, but the footpath, of which there were many through or between the fields.—Ver. 5. ἐπὶ τὰ πετρώδη, upon shallow ground, where the rock was near the surface (οὐκ εἶχεν γῆν πολλήν).—Ver. 6. ἐκαυματίσθη, it was scorched (by the sun) (cf. Rev. xvi. 8), which had made it spring earliest: promptly quickened, soon killed.—Ver. 7. ἐπὶ τὰς ἀκάνθας. Fritzsche prefers the reading εἰς because the seed fell not on thorns already sprung up, but on ground full of thorn seeds or roots. But the latter idea, which is the true one, can be expressed also by ἐπί.—ἀνέβησαν: the thorns sprang up as well as the corn, and growing more vigorously gained the upper hand.—ἔπνιξαν. Euthy. Zig. finds this idea in ἀνέβησαν, for which he gives as synonym ὑπερίσχυσαν.—Ver. 8. καλήν, genuinely good land free from all the faults of the other three: soft, deep, clean.—ἐδίδου, yielded. In other texts (iii. 8, 10; vii. 17) ποιεῖν is used.—ἑκατόν, ἑξήκοντα, τριάκοντα: all satisfactory; 30 good, 60 better, 100 best (Gen. xxvi. 12).—Ver. 9. ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκ. ἀκ. An invitation to think of the hidden meaning, or rather a hint that there was such a meaning. The description of the land in which the sower carried on his operations would present no difficulties to the hearers: the beaten paths, the rocky spots, the thorny patches were all familiar features of the fields in Palestine, and the fate of the seed in each case was in accordance with common experience. But why paint the picture? What is the moral of the story? That Jesus left them to find out.

Vv. 10-17. The disciples ask an explanation. There is some difficulty in forming a clear idea of this interlude. Who asked? The Twelve only, or they and others with them, as Mark states (iv. 10)? And when? Immediately after the parable was spoken, or, as was more likely, after the teaching of the day was over? The one certain point is that an explanation was asked and given.—Ver. 10. διατί ἐν παραβολαῖς: Matthew makes the question refer to the method of teaching, Mark and Luke to the meaning of the parables spoken. The two questions were closely connected, λαλεῖς αὐτοῖς;" 11. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "[g]Ὅτι ὑμῖν δέδοται γνῶναι τὰ μυστήρια τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν, ἐκείνοις δὲ οὐ δέδοται. 12. ὅστις γὰρ ἔχει, δοθήσεται αὐτῷ καὶ περισσευθήσεται· ὅστις δὲ οὐκ ἔχει, καὶ ὃ ἔχει, ἀρθήσεται ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. 13. διὰ τοῦτο ἐν παραβολαῖς αὐτοῖς λαλῶ, ὅτι βλέποντες οὐ βλέπουσι, καὶ ἀκούοντες οὐκ ἀκούουσιν, οὐδὲ συνιοῦσι. 14. καὶ [h]ἀναπληροῦται ἐπ'[1] αὐτοῖς ἡ προφητεία Ἡσαΐου, ἡ λέγουσα, 'Ἀκοῇ ἀκούσετε, καὶ οὐ μὴ συνῆτε· καὶ βλέποντες βλέψετε, καὶ οὐ μὴ ἴδητε. 15. [i]ἐπαχύνθη γὰρ ἡ καρδία τοῦ λαοῦ τούτου, καὶ τοῖς ὠσὶ [j]βαρέως ἤκουσαν, καὶ τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτῶν [k]ἐκάμμυσαν· μήποτε ἴδωσι τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς, καὶ τοῖς ὠσὶν ἀκούσωσι, καὶ τῇ καρδίᾳ συνῶσι, καὶ [l]ἐπιστρέψωσι, καὶ ἰάσωμαι[2] αὐτούς.' 16. Ὑμῶν δὲ μακάριοι οἱ h Gal. vi. 2. Phil. ii. 20.

i Acts xxviii. 27.
j Acts xxviii. 27.
k Acts xxviii. 27.
l Mk. iv. 12. Lk. xxii. 32. Acts iii. 19; xxviii. 27 (absol. = reform).

[1] ℵBC omit επι, which may have been added by the grammarians to make the const. clearer.

[2] ιασομαι in most uncials. Reading of T.R. in XΔ.

and both doubtless in the minds of the disciples. A more serious difficulty arises in connection with Christ's answer to their question, which seems to say that He adopted the parabolic method in order to hide the truths of the kingdom from unspiritual minds. Nothing is more certain than that Jesus neither did nor could adopt any such policy, and if the evangelists ascribed it to Him then we should have no alternative but to agree with those who, like Holtzmann (H. C.) and Jülicher (Die Gleichnisreden Jesu, pp. 131, 149, vide also his Einleitung in das N. T., p. 228), maintain that the evangelists have mistaken His meaning, reading intention in the light of result. It is much better to impute a mistake to them than an inhuman purpose to Christ.

Ver. 11. τὰ μυστήρια: the word, as here used, might suggest the idea of a mysterious esoteric doctrine concerning the Kingdom of God to be taught only to a privileged inner circle. But the term in the N. T. means truths once hidden now revealed, made generally known, and in their own nature perfectly intelligible. So, e.g., in Eph. iii. 9, Col. i. 26. Jesus desired to make the truths of the kingdom of God known to all; by parables if they could not be understood otherwise. His aim was to enlighten, not to mystify.—Ver. 12. This moral apothegm is given only in Matt. It contains a great truth, whether spoken or not on this occasion. For the construction, vide at x. 14.—περισσευθήσεται: again in Mt. xxv. 29, where the saying is repeated. This use of the passive in a neuter sense belongs to late Greek.—Ver. 13. διὰ τοῦτο ὅτι. Mark and Luke have ἵνα, the former assigning a reason, the latter ascribing a purpose. In Matt. Jesus says: I speak in parables because seeing they do not see, etc.; which ought naturally to mean: they are dull of apprehension, therefore I do my best to enlighten them.—Vv. 14, 15. The prophetic citation, given by Matthew only, may be due to him, though put into the mouth of Jesus. It is conceivable, however, that Jesus might use Isaiah's words in Isaiah's spirit, i.e., ironically, expressing the bitter feeling of one conscious that his best efforts to teach his countrymen would often end in failure, and in his bitterness representing himself as sent to stop ears and blind eyes. Such utterances are not to be taken as deliberate dogmatic teaching. If, as some allege, the evangelists so took them, they failed to understand the mind of the Master. The quotation exactly follows the Sept. The verb καμμύω (ver. 15, ἐκάμμυσαν) is condemned by Phryn. as barbarous, the right word being καταμύειν.—Vv. 16, 17. In Mk. (iv. 13) Jesus reproaches the disciples for their ignorance; here He congratulates them on their faculty of seeing and hearing (spiritually).—ὑμῶν: in emphatic position, suggesting contrast between disciples and the multitude.—μακάριοι, vide on chap. v. 3.—ὅτι βλ., because, not for what, they see.—ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω: introducing an important statement.—προφῆται καὶ δίκαιοι, same ὀφθαλμοί, ὅτι βλέπουσι· καὶ τὰ ὦτα ὑμῶν,[1] ὅτι ἀκούει.[2] 17. ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι πολλοὶ προφῆται καὶ δίκαιοι ἐπεθύμησαν ἰδεῖν ἃ βλέπετε, καὶ οὐκ εἶδον· καὶ ἀκοῦσαι ἃ ἀκούετε, καὶ οὐκ ἤκουσαν. 18. Ὑμεῖς οὖν ἀκούσατε τὴν παραβολὴν τοῦ σπείροντος.[3] 19. Παντὸς ἀκούοντος τὸν λόγον τῆς βασιλείας καὶ μὴ συνιέντος, ἔρχεται ὁ πονηρός, καὶ [m] ἁρπάζει τὸ ἐσπαρμένον ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ· οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ παρὰ τὴν ὁδὸν σπαρείς. 20. Ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τὰ πετρώδη σπαρείς, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τὸν λόγον ἀκούων, καὶ εὐθὺς μετὰ χαρᾶς λαμβάνων

m Acts viii. 39.

[1] B omits υμων (bracketed in W.H.).

[2] ακουουσι in ℵBCDXΣ. ακουει a grammatical correction (neut. pl. nom. ωτα).

[3] σπειραντος in ℵBX. σπειροντος conforms to ver. 3.

combination as in x. 41. The felicity now consists in the things seen and heard. The perceiving senses and the things to be perceived imply each other, neither by themselves yield enjoyment. This passage is given by Lk. (x. 23, 24) in a more suitable connection (report on their mission by the Seventy). Here it creates an exaggerated impression as to the extent of the new departure. The parabolic teaching of Jesus, as exemplified in the Sower and other parables here collected, was not an absolutely new feature. He had always been speaking more or less in parables ("Fishers of Men," iv. 19; "Salt of the Earth," "City on a Hill," v. 13, 14; "Two Builders," vii. 24-27; "Whole need not a Physician," ix. 12; "New Garment and New Wine," ix. 16, 17, etc.). Some of the parables in this connection, the Treasure and the Pearl, e.g., may be gems preserved from some otherwise forgotten synagogue discourses, say those delivered in the preaching tour through Galilee.

Vv. 18-23. Interpretation of the Sower (Mk. iv. 14-20; Lk. viii. 11-15). Ver. 18. ὑμεῖς, emphatic, ye privileged ones.—οὖν referring to the happiness on which they have been congratulated.—Ver. 16. ἀκούσατε τ. π.: not, hear it over again, but, what it means.—σπείραντος, aorist, of the man who sowed in the story just told.—Ver. 19. παντὸς ἀκούοντος, in the case of any one who hears, "for the classical ἐάν τις ἀκούσῃ" (Camb. G. T.). It may be a case of interrupted construction, the sentence beginning with the intention to make the genitive dependent on an ἐκ τῆς καρδίας before ἁρπάζει (so Weiss).—τὸν λόγον τῆς βασιλείας: the Sower, unlike the other parables in this chapter, contains no hint that it concerns the kingdom. But in Christ's discourses that almost went without saying.—μὴ συνιέντος: "not taking it in," a phrase which happily combines the physical fact of the parable with the figurative sense.—ὁ πονηρός, the evil one, Satan, represented by the innocent birds of the parable. What a different use of the emblem from that in vi. 26!—ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ: we should hardly say of truth not understood that it had been sown in the heart. But heart is used in Scripture in a wide sense, as the seat of intellect as well as of feeling. The word in the case supposed is in the mind, as the seed is in the ground: on it, if not in it; in it as words, if not as truth.—οὗτός ἐστιν, etc., this is he sown, etc., said of the man, not of the seed. Sign and thing signified identified, cf. "this is my body". Properly, the seed sown, etc., represents the case of such a man. So throughout the interpretation.—Ver. 20. μετὰ χαρᾶς λ.: this is the new feature in the second type added to the hearing of the first; hearing and receiving with joy characteristic of quick emotional shallow natures, but not of them only. Deep earnest natures also have joy in truth found, but with a difference.—οὐκ ἔχει: instead of the participle ἔχων under the influence of Mk.'s text (Weiss).—πρόσκαιρος, temporary, cf. 2 Cor. iv. 18.—Ver. 22. ἀκούων, hearing alone predicated of the third type, but receiving both intellectually and emotionally implied; everything necessary present except purity of heart, singleness of mind. Hearing is to be taken here in a pregnant sense as distinct from the hearing that is no hearing (ver. 13).—μέριμνα τ. α. ἀπάτη τ. π.: together = worldliness. Lust for money and care go together and between them spoil many an earnest religious nature.—ἄκαρπος may refer either to the man αὐτόν· 21. οὐκ ἔχει δὲ ῥίζαν ἐν ἑαυτῷ, ἀλλὰ [n] πρόσκαιρός ἐστι· γενομένης δὲ θλίψεως ἢ διωγμοῦ διὰ τὸν λόγον, εὐθὺς σκανδαλίζεται. 22. Ὁ δὲ εἰς τὰς ἀκάνθας σπαρείς, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τὸν λόγον ἀκούων, καὶ ἡ [o] μέριμνα τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου[1] καὶ ἡ [p] ἀπάτη τοῦ πλούτου συμπνίγει τὸν λόγον, καὶ ἄκαρπος γίνεται. 23. Ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν τὴν καλὴν[2] σπαρείς, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τὸν λόγον ἀκούων καὶ συνιών[3]· ὃς [q] δὴ καρποφορεῖ, καὶ ποιεῖ ὁ[4] μὲν ἑκατόν, ὁ δὲ ἑξήκοντα, ὁ δὲ τριάκοντα."

n Mk. iv. 17. 2 Cor. iv. 18. Heb. xi. 25.
o Lk. viii. 14; xxi. 34. 2 Cor. xi. 28.
p Mk. iv. 19. Eph. iv. 22. Col. ii. 8. 2 Thess. ii. 10. Heb. iii. 13. 2 Pet. ii. 13 (?).
q here and in Lk. ii. 15. Acts xiii. 2; xv. 36. 1 Cor. vi. 20. 2 Cor. xii. 1 (?). Heb. ii. 16 (with πον).

[1] ℵBD omit τουτου, which is an explanatory addition of the scribes.

[2] ℵBCLΔΣ have επι την καλην γην instead of the reading in T.R., which echoes ver. 8.

[3] συνιεις in ℵBD.

[4] Vide below.

(Meyer) or to the word (λόγον just before; Bengel, Weiss); sense the same. There is fruit in this case; the crop does not wither in the blade: it reaches the green ear, but it never ripens.—Ver. 23. ἀκούων καὶ συνιείς. The specific feature of the fourth and alone satisfactory type is not brought out either in Mt. or in Mk. but only in Lk. by his happy phrase: ἐν καρδίᾳ καλῇ καὶ ἀγαθῇ. The third type understands (Mt.) and receives into the heart (Mk.), but the fourth in addition receives into a clean, i.e., a "good and honest," heart.—ὃς δή: δή occurs here for the first time in Mt., and only a few times altogether in the N. T., but always with marked expressiveness. According to Passow and Baümlein (Grammatik, § 669, and Untersuchungen über G. Partikeln, p. 98), connected with δῆλος in origin and meaning, and signifying that the thing stated is clear, specially important, natural in the given circumstances.—ὃς δή here = who, observe, or of course. Given such conditions, fruitfulness certainly results. — καρποφορεῖ, bringeth forth fruit such as is desired: ripe, useful.—ὁ in last clause may be pointed either ὁ μὲν, ὁ δὲ (T. R.) or ὃ μὲν, ὃ δὲ (W. H.). In the former case the meaning is: this man brings forth 100 fold, that man, etc.; in the latter, ὃ is accusative neuter after ποιεῖ, and refers to the fruit. Opinion very much divided, sense the same.

This interpretation of the Sower raises two questions: Was it needed? Does it really explain the parable? which is in effect to ask: Does it proceed from Jesus? As to the former: could not even the general hearer, not to speak of the Twelve, understand the parable well enough? True, no hint that it related to the kingdom was given, but, as already remarked, that might go without saying. Jesus had all along been using similitudes explaining His meaning rather than needing explanation. Then parabolic speech was common even in Rabbinical circles, a source at once of entertainment and of light to hearers. In Mt.'s report the disciples do not even ask an explanation, so that that given comes on us as a surprise (Holtz. in H. C.). Christ's audience might at least carry away the general impression that He was dissatisfied with the result of His ministry, in many cases in which His teaching seemed to Him like seed cast on unproductive places. It might require further reflection, more than the majority were capable of, to comprehend the reasons of failure. Self-knowledge and observation of character were needed for this. As to the interpretation given, it has been objected (Weiss, Jülicher, etc.) that it is allegorical in method, and that, while going into details as to the various persons and things mentioned in the parable and their import, it fails to give the one main lesson which it, like every parable, is designed to teach; in short, that we cannot see the wood for the trees. As to this it may be remarked: (1) There is a tangible difference between allegory and parable. Allegory and interpretation answer to each other part by part; parable and interpretation answer to each other as wholes. (2) Christ's parables are for the most part not allegories. (3) It does not follow that none of them can be. Why should the use of allegory be interdicted to Him?

24. [w]Ἄλλην παραβολὴν [r]παρέθηκεν αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Ὡμοιώθη ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ σπείροντι[1] καλὸν σπέρμα ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ αὐτοῦ· 25. ἐν δὲ τῷ καθεύδειν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, ἦλθεν αὐτοῦ ὁ ἐχθρὸς καὶ ἔσπειρε[2] ζιζάνια [s]ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ σίτου, καὶ ἀπῆλθεν.

r again ver. 31.
s Mk. vii. 31. Rev. vii. 17.

[1] ℵBMXΔΠΣ have σπειραντι.

[2] Bℵ[b] it. vg. several cursives have the compound επεσπειρεν (Tisch., W.H.).

May the Sower not be an exception? That it is has been ably argued by Feine in Jahrbücher für Prot. Theologie, 1888, q. v. (4) The exclusion of so-called allegorising interpretation may be carried to a pedantic extreme in connection with all the parables, as it is, indeed, in my opinion, especially by Weiss. Thus we are told that in the saying "the whole need not a physician," Jesus did not mean to suggest that He was a physician but only to hint the special claims of a class on His attention. But the question may be asked in every case: What was the genesis of the parable? How did it grow in Christ's mind? The Sower, e.g.? Was it not built up of likenesses spontaneously suggesting themselves now and then; of Himself to a sower, and of various classes of hearers to different kinds of soil? In that case the "allegorical" interpretation is simply an analysis of the parable into its genetic elements, which, on that view, have more than the merely descriptive value assigned to them by Weiss. (5) As to missing the main lesson amid details: is it not rather given, Eastern fashion, through the details: the preaching of the kingdom not always successful, failure due to the spiritual condition of hearers? That is how we Westerns, in our abstract generalising way, put it. The Orientals conveyed the general through concrete particulars. Jesus did not give an abstract definition of the Fatherhood of God. He defined it by the connections in which He used the title Father. That Jesus talked to His disciples about the various sorts of hearers, their spiritual state, and what they resembled, I think intrinsically likely. It is another question whether His interpretation has been exactly reproduced by any of the Synoptists.

Vv. 24-30. The Tares. This parable has some elements in common with that in Mk. iv. 26-29, whence the notion of many critics that one of the two has been formed from the other. As to which is the original, opinion is much divided. (Vide Holtz., H. C.) Both, I should say. The resemblance is superficial, the lesson entirely different. The Sower describes past experiences; the Tares is prophetic of a future state of things. But may it not be a creation of apostolic times put into the mouth of Jesus? No, because (1) it is too original and wise, and (2) there were beginnings of the evil described even in Christ's lifetime. Think of a Judas among the Twelve, whom Jesus treated on the principle laid down in the parable, letting him remain among the disciples till the last crisis. It may have been his presence among the Twelve that suggested the parable.

Ver. 24. παρέθηκεν, again in ver. 31, usually of food, here of parable as a mental entertainment; used with reference to laws in Ex. xxi. 1, Deut. iv. 44.—ὡμοιώθη, aorist used proleptically for the future; cf. 1 Cor. vii. 28.—ἀνθρώπῳ, likened to a man, inexactly, for: "to the experience of a man who," etc., natural in a popular style.—σπείραντι, aorist because the seed had been sown when the event of the parable took place.—καλὸν, good, genuine, without mixture of other seeds.—Ver. 25. ἐν τῷ καθεύδειν = during the night.—ὁ. ὁ. ἐχθρὸς, his enemy. Weiss (Matt.-Evang., 347) thinks this feature no part of the original parable, but introduced to correspond with the interpretation (ver. 39), no enemy being needed to account for the appearance of the "tares," which might grow then as now from seed lying dormant in the ground. Christ's parables usually comply with the requirements of natural probability, but sometimes they have to depart from them to make the parable answer to the spiritual fact; e.g., when all the invited are represented as refusing to come to the feast (Lk. xiv. 16-24). The appearance of the "tares" might be made a preternatural phenomenon out of regard to the perfect purity of the seed, and the great abundance of bad men in a holy society. A few scattered stalks might spring up in a natural way, but whence so many?—ἐπέσπειρεν, deliberately sowed over the wheat seed as thickly as if no other seed were there.

t Mk. iv. 27. Heb. ix. 4. Jas. v. 18. 26. ὅτε δὲ ^t^ἐβλάστησεν ὁ χόρτος, καὶ καρπὸν ἐποίησε, τότε ἐφάνη καὶ τὰ ζιζάνια. 27. προσελθόντες δὲ οἱ δοῦλοι τοῦ οἰκοδεσπότου εἶπον αὐτῷ, Κύριε, οὐχὶ καλὸν σπέρμα ἔσπειρας ἐν τῷ σῷ ἀγρῷ; πόθεν οὖν ἔχει τὰ[1] ζιζάνια; 28. Ὁ δὲ ἔφη αὐτοῖς, Ἐχθρὸς ἄνθρωπος τοῦτο ἐποίησεν. οἱ δὲ δοῦλοι εἶπον αὐτῷ,[2] Θέλεις οὖν ἀπελθόντες συλλέξωμεν αὐτά; 29. Ὁ δὲ ἔφη,[3] Οὔ· μήποτε συλλέγοντες τὰ ζιζάνια, ^u^ἐκριζώσητε ἅμα αὐτοῖς τὸν σῖτον. 30. ἄφετε συναυξάνεσθαι ἀμφότερα μέχρι[4] τοῦ θερισμοῦ· καὶ ἐν τῷ[5] καιρῷ τοῦ θερισμοῦ ἐρῶ τοῖς ^v^θερισταῖς, Συλλέξατε πρῶτον τὰ ζιζάνια, καὶ δήσατε αὐτὰ εἰς[6] ^w^δέσμας πρὸς τὸ κατακαῦσαι αὐτά· τὸν δὲ σῖτον συναγάγετε[7] εἰς τὴν ἀποθήκην μου."

u Ch. xv. 13. Lk. xvii. 6. Jude 12.
v here and in ver. 39.
w here and in Exod. xii. 22.

[1] The art. τα in T.R. (ℵLX) is wanting in ℵbBCD al.

[2] B omits δουλοι (W.H.) and BC have αυτω λεγουσιν for ειπον αυτω (T.R.). ℵD have λεγ. αυτω (Tisch.).

[3] φησιν in ℵBC.

[4] BD have εως, which W.H. adopt, putting αχρι and μεχρι in margin.

[5] τω (in ℵCL) is omitted in most uncials.

[6] εις omitted in LXΔ and bracketed in W.H.

[7] B has συναγετε (W.H. with συναγαγετε in margin).

—ζιζάνια = bastard wheat, darnel, lolium temulentum, common in Palestine (Furrer, Wanderungen, p. 293), perhaps a Semitic word. Another name for the plant in Greek is αἶρα (Suidas, Lex.).—Ver. 26. τότε ἐφάνη, not distinguishable in the blade, not till it reached the ear, then easily so by the form, the ear branching out with pickles on each twig (Koetsveld, De Gelijk., p. 25).—Ver. 27. οὐχὶ κ. σ. ἔσπειρας, etc.: the surprise of the work people arises from the extent of the wild growth, which could not be explained by bad seed (with so careful a master) or natural growth out of an unclean soil. The tares were all over the field.—Ver. 28. ἐχθρὸς ἄν.: an inference from the state of the field—fact not otherwise or previously known.—θέλεις . . . συλλέξωμεν, deliberative subjunctive in 1st person with θέλεις, 2nd person; no ἵνα used in such case (Burton, M. and T., § 171). The servants propose to do what was ordinarily done, and is done still (vide Stanley, Sinai and Palestine, p. 426, and Furrer, Wanderungen, 293: "men, women and children were in many fields engaged in pulling the weeds," in which he includes "den Lolch"). — Ver. 29. οὔ, emphatic; laconic "no," for good reason.—μήποτε: the risk is that wheat and "tares" may be uprooted together.—ἅμα, with dative (αὐτοῖς) but not a preposition, the full phrase is ἅμα σὺν: "at the same time with," as in 1 Thess. iv. 17, v. 10. On this word vide Bos, Ellip. Graec., p. 463, and Klotz, Devar., ii. 97. The roots being intertwined, and having a firm hold of the soil, both wheat and tares might be pulled up together. —Ver. 30. Συλλέξατε πρῶτον: before or after cutting down the crop? Not said which; order of procedure immaterial, for now the wheat is ripe.—δήσατε εἰς δέσμας; the εἰς, omitted in some MSS., is not necessary before a noun of same meaning with the verb. Fritzsche thinks the expression without preposition more elegant. Meyer also omits, with appeal to Kühner on verbs with double accusatives.—This parable embodies the great principle of bad men being tolerated for the sake of the good. It relegates to the end the judgment which the contemporaries of Jesus, including the Baptist, expected at the beginning of the Messianic kingdom (Weiss-Meyer).

Vv. 31-35. The Mustard Seed and the Leaven (Lk. xiii. 18-21 (both); Mk. iv. 30-32 (Mustard Seed)). A couplet of brief parables of brighter tone than the two already considered, predicting great extensive and intensive development of the Kingdom of God; from Luke's narrative (xiii. 10), apparently part of a synagogue discourse. It is intrinsically probable that Jesus in all His addresses

31. Ἄλλην παραβολὴν παρέθηκεν αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν [x] κόκκῳ σινάπεως, ὃν λαβὼν ἄνθρωπος ἔσπειρεν ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ αὐτοῦ· 32. ὃ μικρότερον μέν ἐστι πάντων τῶν σπερμάτων· ὅταν δὲ αὐξηθῇ, μεῖζον τῶν [y] λαχάνων ἐστί, καὶ γίνεται δένδρον, ὥστε ἐλθεῖν τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ [z] κατασκηνοῦν[1] ἐν τοῖς κλάδοις αὐτοῦ."

33. Ἄλλην παραβολὴν ἐλάλησεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν [a] ζύμῃ, ἣν [b] λαβοῦσα γυνὴ ἐνέκρυψεν εἰς ἀλεύρου σάτα τρία, ἕως οὗ [c] ἐζυμώθη ὅλον."

34. Ταῦτα πάντα ἐλάλησεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐν παραβολαῖς τοῖς ὄχλοις, καὶ χωρὶς παραβολῆς οὐκ[2] ἐλάλει αὐτοῖς· 35. ὅπως πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, "Ἀνοίξω ἐν παραβολαῖς τὸ στόμα μου· ἐρεύξομαι κεκρυμμένα ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου.[3] x Ch. xvii. 20. Lk. xvii. 6 (same phrase). John xii. 24. 1 Cor. xv. 37 (the word).

y Mk. iv. 32. Lk. xi. 42. Rom. xiv. 2.
z parall. Acts ii. 26 (Ps. ciii. (iv.) 12).
a Ch. xvi. 12. Ch. xvi. 6, 11. Mk. viii. 15. Lk. xii. 1 (fig.). 1 Cor. v. 6. Gal. v. 9 (proverbially).
b same use of word in ver. 31.
c 1 Cor. v. 6. Gal. v. 9.

[1] κατασκηνοιν in BD.

[2] ουδεν in ℵBCΔ; ουκ in Mk. iv. 34, hence here in T.R.

[3] B (and ℵb) omits κοσμου. So Tisch., W.H. al. Weiss suggests that the omission in B is an oversight.

in the synagogue and to the people used more or less the parabolic method. To this extent it may be literally true that "without a parable spake He not unto them" (ver. 34).

Ver. 31. σινάπεως: from σίναπι, late for νάπυ in Attic, which Phryn. recommends to be used instead (Lobeck, 288).—Ver. 32. ὃ, neuter, by attraction of σπερμάτων, instead of ὃν in agreement with κόκκῳ, masculine. — μικρότερον, not less perhaps than all the seeds in the world. An American correspondent sent me a sample of the seeds of the cotton tree, which he thinks Christ would have made the basis of His parable had He spoken it in America.—μεῖζον τῶν λαχάνων, greater than (all) the herbs. The comparison implies that it too is an herb. There would be no point in the statement that a plant of the nature of a tree grew to be greater than all garden herbs. This excludes the mustard tree, called Salvadora Persica, to which some have thought the parable refers.—δένδρον, not in nature but in size; an excusable exaggeration in a popular discourse. Koetsveld remarks on the greatly increased growth attained by a plant springing from a single seed with plenty of room all round it (De Gelijk., p. 50).—ὥστε here indicates at once tendency and result, large enough to make that possible, and it actually happened. The birds haunted the plant like a tree or shrub. Mark refers only to the possibility (iv. 32).—κατασκηνοῦν (cf. κατασκηνώσεις, viii. 20), not nidulari, to make nests (Erasmus), but to "lodge," as in A. V. The mustard plant is after all of humble size, and gives a very modest idea of the growth of the kingdom. But it serves admirably to express the thought of a growth beyond expectation. Who would expect so tiny a seed to produce such a large herb, a monster in the garden?—Ver. 33. ὁμοία . . . ζύμῃ, like in respect of pervasive influence. In Rabbinical theology leaven was used as an emblem of evil desire (Weber, p. 221). Jesus had the courage to use it as an emblem of the best thing in the world, the Kingdom of God coming into the heart of the individual and the community.—ἐνέκρυψεν, hid by the process of kneading.—ἕως οὗ ἐζυμώθη: ἕως with the indicative, referring to an actual past occurrence.

Both these parables show how thoroughly Jesus was aware that great things grow from minute beginnings. How different His idea of the coming of the kingdom from the current one of a glorious, mighty empire coming suddenly, full grown! Instead of that a mustard seed, a little leaven!

Vv. 34, 35 contain a reflection more suitable for the close of the collection of parables in this chapter, brought in here apparently because the evangelist has

36. Τότε ἀφεὶς τοὺς ὄχλους, ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν ὁ Ἰησοῦς[1]· καὶ προσῆλθον αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, λέγοντες, "Φράσον[2] ἡμῖν τὴν παραβολὴν τῶν ζιζανίων τοῦ ἀγροῦ." 37. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[3] "Ὁ σπείρων τὸ καλὸν σπέρμα ἐστὶν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου· 38. ὁ δὲ ἀγρός ἐστιν ὁ κόσμος· τὸ δὲ καλὸν σπέρμα, οὗτοί [d] εἰσιν οἱ υἱοὶ τῆς βασιλείας· τὰ δὲ ζιζάνιά εἰσιν οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ πονηροῦ· 39. ὁ δὲ ἐχθρὸς ὁ σπείρας αὐτά ἐστιν ὁ διάβολος· ὁ δὲ θερισμὸς [e] συντέλεια τοῦ[4] αἰῶνός ἐστιν· οἱ δὲ θερισταὶ ἄγγελοί εἰσιν. 40. ὥσπερ οὖν συλλέγεται τὰ ζιζάνια, καὶ πυρὶ κατακαίεται οὕτως ἔσται ἐν τῇ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου.[5] 41. ἀποστελεῖ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ, καὶ συλλέξουσιν ἐκ τῆς βασιλείας αὐτοῦ πάντα τὰ [f] σκάνδαλα καὶ τοὺς ποιοῦντας τὴν ἀνομίαν, 42. καὶ βαλοῦσιν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὴν [g] κάμινον τοῦ πυρός· ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ

d same phrase in Ch. viii. 12.
e ver. 49. Ch. xxiv. 3; xxviii. 20. Heb. ix. 26
f Ch. xvi. 23; xviii. 7. Rom. xiv. 13.
g Rev. i. 15; ix. 2.

[1] ℵBD omit ο Ι. [2] ℵB have διασαφησον. φρασον probably comes from xv. 15.
[3] ℵBD omit αυτοις. [4] ℵBD omit του. [5] ℵBD omit τουτου.

under his eye Mark's narrative, in which a similar reflection is attached to the parable of the mustard seed (iv. 33-34).—Ver. 34. χωρὶς παραβολῆς, etc.: if this remark apply to Christ's popular preaching generally, then the parables reported, like the healing narratives, are only a small selection from a large number, a fragrant posy culled from the flower garden of Christ's parabolic wisdom.—ἐλάλει: imperfect, pointing to a regular practice, not merely to a single occasion.—Ver. 35. Prophetic citation from Ps. lxxviii. 2, suggested by παραβολαῖς in Sept., second clause, free translation from Hebrew.—ἐρεύξομαι in Sept. for הַבִּיעַ in Ps. xix. 2, etc. (not in lxxviii. 2), a poetic word in Ionic form, bearing strong, coarse meaning; used in softened sense in Hellenistic Greek. Chief value of this citation: a sign that the parabolic teaching of Jesus, like His healing ministry, was sufficiently outstanding to call for recognition in this way.

Vv. 36-43. Interpretation of the Tares. Not in Apostolic Document; style that of evangelist; misses the point of the parable—so Weiss (Matt.-Evang., p. 351). But if there was any private talk between Jesus and the Twelve as to the meaning of His parables, this one was sure to be the subject of conversation. It is more abstruse than the Sower, its lesson deeper, the fact it points to more mysterious. The interpretation given may of course be very freely reproduced.—Ver. 36. φράσον (διασαφησον ℵB) again in xv. 15: observe the unceremonious style of the request, indicative of intimate familiar relations. Hesychius gives as equivalents for φράζει, δεικνύει, σημαίνει, λέγει, etc.—διασαφ. in Deut. i. 5 = make clear, a stronger expression.—Ver. 37. ὁ σπείρων: identified here with the Son of man (not so in interpretation of Sower).—ὁ κόσμος, the wide world; universalism.—Ver. 38. σπέρμα, not the word this time, but the children of the kingdom.—ζιζάνια, the sons of the wicked one (τοῦ πονηροῦ, the devil).—Ver. 39. συντέλεια αἰῶνος, the end of the world; phrase peculiar to this Gospel.—θερισταὶ ἄγγελοι. Weiss thinks this borrowed from Mt. xxiv. 31, and certainly not original. Perhaps not as a dogmatic interpretation, but quite possibly as a poetic suggestion.—Ver. 40. This and the following verses enlarge on the final separation.—Ver. 41. ἀποστελεῖ: cf. chap. xxiv. 31.—συλλέξουσιν, collect, and so separate.—τὰ σκάνδαλα: abstract for concrete; those who create stumbling blocks for others.—καὶ, epexegetical, not introducing a distinct class, but explaining how the class already referred to cause others to stumble.—ποιοῦντας τ. ἀνομίαν: cf. vii. 23, where for ποι. stands ἐργαζόμενοι. Has ἀνομίαν here the technical sense of religious libertinism, or the general sense of moral transgression? Assuming the former alternative, some critics find here the sign-mark of a later apostolic time.—Ver. 42. ἐκεῖ ἔσται, etc.: held to be inappropriate βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων. 43. τότε οἱ δίκαιοι ἐκλάμψουσιν ὡς ὁ ἥλιος ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτῶν. Ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν[1] ἀκουέτω.

44. "Πάλιν[2] ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν θησαυρῷ κεκρυμμένῳ ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ, ὃν εὑρὼν ἄνθρωπος ἔκρυψε, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς χαρᾶς αὐτοῦ ὑπάγει, καὶ πάντα ὅσα ἔχει πωλεῖ,[3] καὶ ἀγοράζει τὸν ἀγρὸν ἐκεῖνον.

45. "Πάλιν ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ[4] [h]ἐμπόρῳ, ζητοῦντι καλοὺς μαργαρίτας· 46. ὃς εὑρὼν[5] ἕνα [i]πολύτιμον μαργαρίτην, ἀπελθὼν πέπρακε πάντα ὅσα εἶχε, καὶ ἠγόρασεν αὐτόν.

[h] Rev. xvii. (4 times).
[i] John xii. 3. 1 Pet. i. 7 (compar.). Cf. Ch. xxvi. 7 (βαρυτ.).

[1] ℵB omit ακουειν.

[2] BD omit παλιν.

[3] πωλει before παντα in ℵD. B gives πωλει the same position but omits παντα. So W.H. with παντα in margin.

[4] ℵB omit. W.H. relegate to margin.

[5] ευρων δε in ℵBDL verss. (Tisch., W.H.).

here, because the gnashing of teeth is caused by cold, not by fire (Holtz., H. C.); appropriate in viii. 12, where the doom is rejection into the outer darkness.—Ver. 43. ἐκλάμψουσι: vide Dan. xii. 2, which seems to be in view; an expressive word suggestive of the sun emerging from behind a cloud. The mixture of good and evil men in this world hides the characters of both.

Vv. 44-53. Three other parables: the Treasure, the Pearl, the Net. Ver. 36 would seem to imply that the evangelist took these as spoken only to disciples in the house. But as the Net is closely connected in meaning with the Tares, it is more probable that these parables also are extracts from popular discourses of Jesus, which, like all the others, would gain greatly if seen in their original setting. The Treasure and the Pearl would have their fitting place in a discourse on the kingdom of God as the highest good (Mt. vi. 33).—Ver. 44. ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ: the article may be generic, indicating the field as the locality, as distinct from other places where treasures were deposited.—ἔκρυψε, he hid once more what some one had previously hidden; the occurrence common, the occasions various.—χαρᾶς αὐτοῦ, in his joy rather than through joy over it, as many take the genitive, though both are admissible. The joy natural in a poor peasant; not less so the cunning procedure it inspired; ethically questionable, but parables are not responsible for the morality of their characters.—ὑπάγει, πωλεῖ, etc., four historic presents one after the other, in sympathy with the finder, and with lively effect.—πάντα ὅσα all required for the purpose, yet the all might not amount to much: the field minus the treasure of no great value. Worth while, the treasure being a pure gain. The point of the parable is that the kingdom of heaven outweighs in value all else, and that the man who understands this will with pleasure part with all. It helps to show the reasonableness of the sacrifice for the kingdom Jesus demanded.

Ver. 45. ἐμπόρῳ ζ. κ. μ. A pearl merchant who went to the pearl fisheries to purchase from the divers, of course selecting the best; a connoisseur in valuables.—Ver. 46. πολύτιμον: precious because exceptionally large, well-shaped, and pure; such rare, but met with now and then.—ἀπελθὼν: he is taken by surprise, has not as much with him as will purchase it on the spot, sees it is worth his whole stock, agrees to buy and promises to return with the price.—πέπρακε, ἠγόρασεν, a perfect with an aorist. Not to be disposed of by saying that the former is an "aoristic" perfect (Burton, § 88).—πέπρακε points to a momentous step, taken once for all and having lasting effects. A great venture, a risky speculation. The treasure in the field was a sure gain for the finder, but it remained to be seen what the pearl merchant would get for his one pearl. After the sale of his stock the purchase of the one pearl was a matter of course. In the former of

j here only in N.T.

k here only. Vide Lk. x. 34 (επιβιβ.).

l here only (ἀγγεῖον. Ch. xxv. 4), vide critical note 1.

m vide below and at Ch. xxvii. 57.

47. "Πάλιν ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν σαγήνῃ βληθείσῃ εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ ἐκ παντὸς γένους συναγαγούσῃ· 48. ἥν, ὅτε ἐπληρώθη, [k] ἀναβιβάσαντες ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλόν, καὶ καθίσαντες, συνέλεξαν τὰ καλὰ εἰς [l] ἀγγεῖα,[1] τὰ δὲ σαπρὰ ἔξω ἔβαλον· 49. οὕτως ἔσται ἐν τῇ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος· ἐξελεύσονται οἱ ἄγγελοι, καὶ ἀφοριοῦσι τοὺς πονηροὺς ἐκ μέσου τῶν δικαίων, 50. καὶ βαλοῦσιν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὴν κάμινον τοῦ πυρός· ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων." 51. Λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[2] "Συνήκατε ταῦτα πάντα;" 52. Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Ναί, κύριε."[2] Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Διὰ τοῦτο πᾶς γραμματεὺς [m] μαθητευθεὶς εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν[3] τῶν οὐρανῶν ὅμοιός ἐστιν ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδεσπότῃ, ὅστις ἐκβάλλει ἐκ τοῦ θησαυροῦ αὐτοῦ καινὰ καὶ παλαιά."

[1] αγγη in ℵBC. [2] ℵBD omit λεγει α. ο. Ι., also κυριε after ναι.
[3] ℵBCΣ have τη βασιλεια. The reading in T.R. is a grammatical correction.

these two parables the Kingdom of Heaven appears as the object of a glad though accidental finding of a sure possession; in the latter as the object of systematic quest and venturesome faith. The difference between seekers and finders must not be exaggerated. The pearl merchant was also a finder. No one would set out on a journey to seek one unique pearl (Koetsveld). The spiritual class he represents are seekers after God and wisdom, finders of the Kingdom of God, of a good beyond their hope. Such seekers, however, are on the sure way to find.

Vv. 47-50. The Net. σαγήνῃ, vide on iv. 21.—ἐκ παντὸς γένους συν.: a matter of course, not intended but inevitable; large movements influence all sorts of people.—Ver. 48. καθίσαντες συνέλεξαν: equally a matter of course; a thing to be done deliberately, of which the sitting attitude is an emblem. There is a time for everything; the time for sorting is at the end of the fishing.—σαπρὰ, vide on vii. 17. Vv. 49, 50 contain the interpretation in much the same terms as in 41, 42.

Vv. 51, 52. Conclusion of the parabolic collection.—Ver. 52 contains an important logion of Jesus preserved by Matthew only, and connected by him with the parabolic teaching of Jesus. In this connection καινὰ καὶ παλαιά of course points to the use of the old familiar facts of nature to illustrate newly revealed truths of the kingdom. But we should not bind ourselves too strictly to this connection, keeping in mind Matthew's habit of grouping; all the more that, as Wendt has pointed out (Die Lehre Jesu, ii. 349), the idea expressed by γραμματεὺς does not get justice. It naturally points to acquaintance with the O. T., and combined with μαθητευθεὶς ε. τ. β. teaches that that knowledge may be usefully united with discipleship in the lore of the kingdom. In Wendt's words: "One remains in possession of the old, recognised as of permanent value, yet is not restricted to it, but along with it possesses a precious new element".—μαθητεύειν is here used transitively as in xxviii. 19, Acts xiv. 21.—ἐκβάλλει points to free distribution of treasures by the householder. He gives out new or old according to the nature of the article. The mere scribe, Rabbinical in spirit, produces only the old and stale. The disciple of the kingdom, like the Master, is always fresh-minded, yet knows how to value all old spiritual treasures of Holy Writ or Christian tradition.

Vv. 53-58. Visit to Nazareth (Mk. vi. 1-6, cf. Lk. iv. 16-30). In Mk. this is the next section after the parables, deducting what had previously been reported in Mt. (chaps. viii. and ix.), a pretty sure sign that our evangelist has Mk. under his eye. We can here see how he handles his source—substantial reproduction of the contents, no slavish copying of style, editorial discretion in reporting certain details. No attempt should be made to connect with the foregoing passage, except perhaps by n here and in Mk. parall. Lk. iv. 23, 24. John iv. 44. Heb. xi. 14.

53. Καὶ ἐγένετο ὅτε ἐτέλεσεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὰς παραβολὰς ταύτας, μετῆρεν ἐκεῖθεν· 54. καὶ ἐλθὼν εἰς τὴν [a] πατρίδα αὐτοῦ, ἐδίδασκεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ αὐτῶν, ὥστε ἐκπλήττεσθαι[1] αὐτοὺς καὶ λέγειν, "Πόθεν τούτῳ ἡ σοφία αὕτη καὶ αἱ δυνάμεις; 55. οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τοῦ τέκτονος υἱός; οὐχὶ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ λέγεται Μαριάμ, καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ Ἰάκωβος καὶ Ἰωσῆς[2] καὶ Σίμων καὶ Ἰούδας; 56. καὶ αἱ ἀδελφαὶ αὐτοῦ οὐχὶ πᾶσαι πρὸς ἡμᾶς εἰσι; πόθεν οὖν τούτῳ ταῦτα πάντα; 57. Καὶ ἐσκανδαλίζοντο ἐν αὐτῷ. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Οὐκ ἔστι προφήτης [o] ἄτιμος, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῇ πατρίδι αὐτοῦ[3] καὶ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ αὐτοῦ." 58. Καὶ οὐκ ἐποίησεν ἐκεῖ δυνάμεις πολλάς, διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν.

o Mk. vi. 4. 1 Cor. iv. 10; xii. 23.

[1] εκπλησσ. in most uncials.

[2] Ιωσηφ in BCΣ. Ιωσης is probably from Mk.

[3] BD omit αυτου. ℵZ have ιδια before πατριδι, which Tisch. and W.H. place in margin.

the general category of prevalent unreceptivity to which also the following narrative (xiv. 1-12) may be relegated.—Ver. 53. μετῆρεν: in classics to transfer something from one place to another. Hellenistic, intransitive = to remove oneself; one of Matthew's words (xix. 1).—Ver. 54. πατρίδα, in classics fatherland. Here and in parallels evidently = native town, home. Vide ver. 56 and Lk. iv. 16.—συναγωγῇ, singular, not plural, as in Vulgate. One syn. index of size of town (Grotius).—ὥστε, with infinitive: tendency and actual result. They were astonished and said: πόθεν . . . δυνάμεις, wisdom and marvellous works; of the latter they had heard, of the former they had had a sample. Whence? that is the question; not from schools, parentage, family, social environment, or mere surroundings and circumstances of any kind.—Ver. 55. ὁ τ. τέκτονος υἱός: Mk. has ὁ τέκτων, which our evangelist avoids; the son of the carpenter, one only in the town, well known to all.—Μαριὰμ . . . Ἰάκωβος, etc., names given of mother and brothers, to show how well they know the whole family. And this other man just come back is simply another of the family whose name happens to be Jesus. Why should He be so different? It is an absurdity, an offence, not to be commonplace. The irritation of the Nazareans is satisfactory evidence of the extraordinary in Jesus.—Ver. 57. Proverb, not Jewish merely, but common property of mankind; examples from Greek and Roman authors in Pricaeus and Wetstein, including one from Pindar about fame fading at the family hearth (Olymp. Ode, xii. 3).—Ver. 58. Here also editorial discretion is at work. Mark states that Jesus was not able to work miracles in Nazareth, and that He marvelled at their unbelief. Matthew changes this into a statement that He did few miracles there because of their unbelief, and passes over the marvelling in silence.

Chapter XIV. Death of the Baptist: Commencement of a New Division of the Evangelic History.

Vv. 1-12. Death of the Baptist (Mk. vi. 14-29, Lk. ix. 7-9). This section might with advantage have been given as a short chapter by itself, and a new start made with the feeding of the thousands which forms the first of a series of narratives together giving the story of the later Galilean ministry (xiv. 13—xx. 16). In this section (1-12) Matthew still has his eye on Mark, the story of the fate of the Baptist being there the next after the section in reference to mother and brethren, excepting the mission of the Twelve (Mk. vi. 7-13) already related in Mt. (x. 5-15). Indeed from this point onwards Matthew follows Mark's order. In the foregoing part of this Gospel the parallelism between it and Mark has been disturbed by the desire of the evangelist to draw largely on his other source, the Logia, and introduce teaching materials bearing on all the topics suggested in his introductory sketch of Christ's early Galilean ministry: Didache, chaps. v.-vii.; apostolic mission (iv. 18-a vide iv. 24.

b Ch. xxvii. 64; xxviii. 7 (with ἀπό).
c Mk. vi. 14. Gal. v. 6. Jas. v. 16.
d Ch. xxii. 28. Mk. vi. 18. 1 Cor. v. 1; vii. 2, 29.
e Ch. xxi. 26. 46. Phil. ii. 2, 9. Philem. 17.

XIV. 1. ἘΝ ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ ἤκουσεν Ἡρώδης ὁ τετράρχης[1] τὴν a ἀκοὴν Ἰησοῦ, καὶ εἶπε τοῖς παισὶν αὐτοῦ, 2. "Οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰωάννης ὁ Βαπτιστής· αὐτὸς b ἠγέρθη ἀπὸ τῶν νεκρῶν, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο αἱ δυνάμεις c ἐνεργοῦσιν ἐν αὐτῷ." 3. Ὁ γὰρ Ἡρώδης κρατήσας τὸν Ἰωάννην ἔδησεν αὐτὸν[2] καὶ ἔθετο ἐν φυλακῇ,[3] διὰ Ἡρωδιάδα τὴν γυναῖκα Φιλίππου τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ. 4. ἔλεγε γὰρ αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰωάννης,[4] "Οὐκ ἔξεστί σοι d ἔχειν d αὐτήν." 5. Καὶ θέλων αὐτὸν ἀποκτεῖναι, ἐφοβήθη τὸν ὄχλον, ὅτι ὡς e προφήτην αὐτὸν εἶχον.

[1] τετρααρχης in ℵCZΔ. So Tisch. and W.H., though BD spell as in T.R.

[2] ℵB omit αυτον, which is an undisputed reading in Mk., whence it may have been imported.

[3] ℵB read εν φυλακη απεθετο, which Tisch. and W.H. adopt.

[4] ℵD omit art. before I. and BZ place αυτω after I.

22), chap. x.; Baptist (chap. iii.), chap. xi.; Pharisees (chap. iii. 7-9), chap. xii.; popular preaching (iv. 23), chap. xiii. Chaps. viii., ix. disturb the order by grouping incidents illustrating the healing ministry.

Ver. 1. ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ. Mk. connects with return of Twelve from their mission (vi. 14), Mt. apparently with immediately preceding section. But the phrase recalls xi. 25, xii. 1, and it may be the evangelist is thinking generally of a time of prevailing insusceptibility (Weiss-Meyer).—Ἡρώδης: Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee and Peraea for many years (4-39 A.D.), married to the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia; like his father Herod the Great in cunning, ambition, and love of splendour in building and otherwise, whereof the new city of Tiberias was a monument (Schürer, Gesch., i. 359).—ἀκοὴν, vide iv. 24. The fame of Jesus penetrated at last even into the royal palace, where very different matters occupied the attention, ordinarily.—Ver. 2. παισὶν αὐτοῦ: not his sons, but his servants, i.e., the courtiers, great men in their way, not the menials in the palace. The king would propound his odd theory in familiar talk, not in solemn conclave.—οὗτός ἐστιν, etc. It is this theory we have to thank for the narrative following, which in itself has no special connection with the evangelic history, though doubtless Christians would naturally read with interest the fate of the forerunner of Jesus. The king has the Baptist on the brain; and remarkable occurrences in the religious world recall him at once to mind. It is John! he (αὐτὸς) is risen; theory begotten of remorse; odd enough, but better than Pharisaic one begotten of malevolence; both witnessing to the extraordinary in Christ's career.—διὰ τοῦτο: the living John did no miracles, but no saying what a dead one redivivus can do?—ἐνεργοῦσιν, not: he does the mighty works, but: the powers (δυνάμεις) work in him, the powers of the invisible world, vast and vague in the king's imagination.

Ver. 3. γὰρ implies that the following story is introduced to make the king's theory intelligible. "Risen" implies previous death, and how that came about must be told to show the psychological genesis of the theory. It is the superstitious idea of a man who has murder on his conscience.—κρατήσας, etc.: fact referred to already in iv. 12, xi. 2; here the reason given. Of course Herod seized, bound, and imprisoned John through his agents.—διὰ Ἡρωδιάδα: a woman here, as so often, the cause of the tragedy.—γυναῖκα Φ.: vide on Mk.—Ver. 4. ἔλεγε γὰρ ὁ I. The progressive imperfect, with force of a pluperfect. John had been saying just before he was apprehended (Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 29).—οὐκ ἔξεστιν: doubly unlawful; as adultery, and as marriage within prohibited degrees (Lev. xviii. 16, xx. 21).—Ver. 5. θέλων: cf. i. 19. Mark gives a fuller statement as to Herod's feelings towards John. No injustice is done Herod here by ascribing to him a wish to get rid of John. There are always mixed feelings in such cases. Compare the relations of Alcibiades to Socrates as described by Plato (Συμπόσιον).—ἐφοβήθη τ. ὄ.: that for one

6. [f] γενεσίων δὲ ἀγομένων[1] τοῦ Ἡρώδου, ὠρχήσατο ἡ θυγάτηρ τῆς Ἡρωδιάδος ἐν τῷ μέσῳ, καὶ ἤρεσε τῷ Ἡρώδῃ· 7. ὅθεν μεθ᾽ ὅρκου ὡμολόγησεν αὐτῇ δοῦναι ὃ ἐὰν[2] αἰτήσηται. 8. Ἡ δὲ [g] προβιβασθεῖσα ὑπὸ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτῆς, "Δός μοι," φησίν, "ὧδε ἐπὶ [h] πίνακι τὴν κεφαλὴν Ἰωάννου τοῦ Βαπτιστοῦ." 9. Καὶ ἐλυπήθη[3] ὁ βασιλεύς, διὰ δὲ[3] τοὺς ὅρκους καὶ τοὺς συνανακειμένους ἐκέλευσε δοθῆναι· 10. καὶ πέμψας [i] ἀπεκεφάλισε τὸν[4] Ἰωάννην ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ. 11. καὶ ἠνέχθη ἡ κεφαλὴ αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ πίνακι, καὶ ἐδόθη τῷ κορασίῳ· καὶ ἤνεγκε τῇ μητρὶ αὐτῆς. 12. καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἦραν τὸ σῶμα,[5] καὶ ἔθαψαν αὐτό[6]· καὶ ἐλθόντες ἀπήγγειλαν f Cf. Gen. xl. 20, ἡμέρα γενέσεως.

g Acts xix. 33 (συν- in W.H.).
h Lk. xi. 39.
i Mk. vi. 16, 27. Lk. ix. 9.

[1] ℵBDLZ have the dat. γενεσιοις and γενομενοις for αγομενων; the reading in T.R. is a grammatical correction.

[2] αν in BD.

[3] BD have λυπηθεις and omit δε. The reading of the T.R. is an attempt by resolution of the construction to make the meaning clear.

[4] ℵBZ omit τον.

[5] ℵBCDLΣ several cursives have πτωμα, for which σωμα has been substituted as more delicate.

[6] ℵB have αυτον. αυτο in Mk. (vi. 29).

thing; also feared God and his conscience a little, not enough. It is well when lawless men in power fear anything.—ὅτι . . . εἶχον: they took John to be, regarded him as, a prophet.—εἶχον does not by itself mean to hold in high esteem (in pretio habere, Kypke). The point is that John for the people passed for a prophet, belonged to a class commanding religious respect (so Fritzsche, Meyer, etc.). Vide xxi. 46.

Ver. 6. γενεσίοις γενομένοις: one expects the genitive absolute as in T.R., which just on that account is to be suspected. The dative of time. But cf. Mk. vi. 21, where we have γενομένης and γενεσίοις occurring together, and vide Weiss, Mk.-Evang., p. 221, on the literary connection between the two texts. Most commentators take γενεσίοις as referring to Herod's birthday. Some, e.g., Grotius, think of the anniversary of the accession to the throne = birthday of his reign. In classic Greek it means a feast in honour of the dead on their birthday, γενέθλια being the word for a birthday feast, vide Lobeck, Phryn., 103. Loesner, Observ. ad N. T. e. Phil. Alex., cites instances from Phil. of the use of both words in the sense of a birthday feast.—ἡ θυγάτηρ τ. Ἡρῳδ.: Salome by name.—ἐν τῷ μέσῳ, implies a festive assembly, as fully described in Mk.—Ver. 7. ὡμολόγησεν, confessed by oath; obligation to keep a promise previously given. Cf. Mk. vi. 22, where the fact is more fully stated. The account in Matt. seems throughout secondary.—Ver. 8. προβιβασθεῖσα: not "before instructed," as in A. V., but "brought to this point"; urged on. It should require a good deal of "educating" to bring a young girl to make such a grim request. But she had learnt her lesson well, and asked the Baptist's head, as if she had been asking a favourite dish (ὡς περί τινος ἐδέσματος διαλεγομένη, Chrys., Hom. xlviii.). Kypke cites two instances of the rare use of the word in the sense of instruction.—ὧδε here and now, on the spot, ἐξαυτῆς in Mk. That was an essential part of the request. No time must be left for repentance. If not done at once under the influence of wine and the momentary gratification given by the voluptuous dance, it might never be done at all. This implies that the Baptist was at hand, therefore that the feast was at Machaerus, where there was a palace as well as a fortress.—Ver. 9. λυπηθεὶς: participle used concessively, though grieved he granted the request; the grief quite compatible with the truculent wish in ver. 5.—βασιλεύς: only by courtesy.—ὅρκους, plural, singular in ver. 7; spoken in passion, more like profane swearing than deliberate utterance once for all of a solemn oath. —Ver. 10. ἀπεκεφάλισε: expressive word, all too clear in meaning, though not found in Attic usage, or apparently τῷ Ἰησοῦ. 13. καὶ ἀκούσας[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνεχώρησεν ἐκεῖθεν ἐν πλοίῳ εἰς ἔρημον τόπον κατ' ἰδίαν. καὶ ἀκούσαντες οἱ ὄχλοι ἠκολούθησαν

j Mk. vi. 33. αὐτῷ [j] πεζῇ[2] ἀπὸ τῶν πόλεων.

14. Καὶ ἐξελθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς[3] εἶδε πολὺν ὄχλον, καὶ ἐσπλαγχνίσθη k Mk. vi. 5, 13; xvi. 18. 1 Cor. xi. 30.

l Acts xxvii. 9 (same sense).

ἐπ' αὐτούς,[4] καὶ ἐθεράπευσε τοὺς [k] ἀρρώστους αὐτῶν. 15. Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης, προσῆλθον αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ[5] λέγοντες, "Ἔρημός ἐστιν ὁ τόπος, καὶ ἡ ὥρα ἤδη [l] παρῆλθεν· ἀπόλυσον[6] τοὺς ὄχλους, ἵνα ἀπελθόντες εἰς τὰς κώμας ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς βρώματα." 16. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσιν ἀπελθεῖν· δότε much used at all; a plebeian word according to Salmasius, cited by Kypke, who gives instances from late authors.—Ver. 11. ἠνέχθη, not expressly said "there and then," but all points to immediate production of the head on a platter in the banqueting hall before the guests; gruesome sight!—ἐδόθη, ἤνεγκε: what a nerve the girl must have had! her mother's nature in her; the dancing and the cool acceptance of the horrible gift well matched.—κορασίῳ: not to be taken strictly; a young unmarried woman, say, of twenty (Holtz., H. C.). The dancing of a mere girl would have been no entertainment to the sensual revellers. The treat lay in the indecency.—Ver. 12. πτῶμα: carcase, used absolutely in this sense only in late writers. Earlier writers would say πτῶμα νεκροῦ. Lobeck, Phryn., 375.

[1] ακουσας δε ℵBDLZ. [2] πεζοι ℵJLZ. [3] ℵBD omit ο Ι.
[4] αυτοις in most uncials; επ αυτους only in minus.; from Mk.
[5] ℵBZ omit αυτου. [6] ℵCZ add ουν, which W.H. place in margin.

Vv. 13-21. Jesus retires; feeding of thousands (Mk. vi. 30-44; Lk. ix. 10-17).—Ver. 13. ἀκούσας, having heard of the fate of John from John's disciples (ver. 12). —ἀνεχώρησεν ἐκεῖθεν: withdrew from where He was when the report reached Him; locality not indicated. Mark connects the retirement with the return of the Twelve from their mission, and the report they gave, and assigns as motive rest for the missionaries. The two events might synchronise, and escape from Herod's dangerous neighbourhood might be a joint motive for retirement. But against this is the speedy return (ver. 34).—ἐν πλοίῳ: naturally suggests a place near the sea as starting-point. But it may be rather intended to indicate in what direction they were going—to the eastern side of the lake.—εἰς ἐ. τ. κατ' ἰδίαν. These phrases have certainly more point in Mk. as referring to a multitude from which they wished to escape.—οἱ ὄχλοι: no previous mention of the crowds, and no hint that Jesus wished to get away from them; looks like a digest of a fuller narrative, such as that in Mk.—πεζῇ (or πεζοί), on foot, but not implying that all literally walked; there were sick among them who could not. The contrast is between going by sea and going by land. Cf. Acts xx. 13. Classical instances in philological commentaries (Wetstein, Kypke, Elsner, etc.).—Ver. 14. ἐξελθὼν, in this place, naturally means going forth from His retreat, in Mk. (vi. 34) going out of the ship, the crowd having arrived on the spot before Him. To escape from the people always difficult, now apparently more than ever. Evidently a time of special excitement, popularity at its height, though according to Fourth Gospel about to undergo a speedy decline.—ἐσπλαγχνίσθη, deponent passive, pitied; Hellenistic, and based on the Hebrew idea of the bowels as the seat of compassion; used by Symmachus in translation of Deut. xiii. 9.—ἐθεράπευσε: Mark gives prominence to the element of instruction; healing alone mentioned here.

Vv. 15-21. The feeding.—Ver. 15. ὀψίας γενομένης: might mean sunset as in viii. 16, but from the nature of the case must mean afternoon from 3 to 6, the first of the "two evenings".—ἔρημος, comparatively uninhabited, no towns near.—ἡ ὥρα ἤδη παρῆλθεν, the meaning not clear. Mk. has: ἤδη ὥρας πολλῆς = already the hour is advanced. Various suggestions have been made: eating time (Grot.), healing and teaching time (Fritzsche), daytime (Meyer) is past. Weiss, with most probability, takes ὥρα αὐτοῖς ὑμεῖς φαγεῖν." 17. Οἱ δὲ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Οὐκ ἔχομεν ὧδε εἰ μὴ πέντε ἄρτους καὶ δύο ἰχθύας." 18. Ὁ δὲ εἶπε, "Φέρετέ μοι αὐτοὺς ὧδε."[1] 19. Καὶ κελεύσας τοὺς ὄχλους ἀνακλιθῆναι ἐπὶ τοὺς χόρτους,[2] καὶ[3] λαβὼν τοὺς πέντε ἄρτους καὶ τοὺς δύο ἰχθύας, ἀναβλέψας εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, [m] εὐλόγησε· καὶ [n] κλάσας ἔδωκε τοῖς μαθηταῖς τοὺς ἄρτους, οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ τοῖς ὄχλοις. 20. καὶ ἔφαγον πάντες, καὶ ἐχορτάσθησαν· καὶ ἦραν τὸ περισσεῦον τῶν κλασμάτων, δώδεκα κοφίνους πλήρεις. 21. οἱ δὲ ἐσθίοντες ἦσαν ἄνδρες ὡσεὶ πεντακισχίλιοι, χωρὶς γυναικῶν καὶ παιδίων. 22. Καὶ εὐθέως [o] ἠνάγκασεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς[4] τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ[5] ἐμβῆναι εἰς τὸ[6] πλοῖον, καὶ [p] προάγειν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸ πέραν, ἕως οὗ ἀπολύσῃ τοὺς ὄχλους. 23. καὶ ἀπολύσας τοὺς ὄχλους, ἀνέβη εἰς τὸ ὄρος κατ' ἰδίαν

m Ch. xxvi. 26. 1 Cor. x. 16.
n Ch. xxvi. 26. Acts ii. 46 al.
o Acts xxvi. 11. Gal. ii. 3, 14.
p Ch. xxi. 31; xxvi. 32. Mk. x. 32.

[1] ωδε αυτους in ℵBZ. [2] ℵBC have επι του χορτου; D the sing. also, but accus.
[3] BLΔΣ omit και. [4] ο I. wanting in ℵBCDΔΣ.
[5] Most uncials omit, but BXΣ retain αυτου.
[6] B and several cursives (1, 33, 124) omit το. W.H. place in margin.

= time for sending them away to get food.—ἀπόλυσον: though late for the purpose, not too late; dismiss them forthwith.—Ver. 16. οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσιν ἀπελθεῖν, etc.: even if, as some think, what happened was that under the moral influence of Jesus the people present generously made the provisions they had brought with them available for the company at large, the character of Jesus appears here in a commanding light. No situation appears to Him desperate, no crisis unmanageable. No need to go. Give ye them to eat, resources will be forthcoming (cf. Exod. xiv. 15). And they were, how we cannot tell. The story is a fact supported by the testimony of all four evangelists, not a baseless legend, or a religious allegory.—Ver. 17. πέντε ἄρτους κ. δ. ἰχ. A very modest supply even for the disciple circle. They seem, under the influence of Jesus, to have been a care-free company, letting to-morrow look after itself. "Learn the philosophy of the Twelve, and how they despised food. Being twelve they had only so much, and they readily gave up these" (Chrysos., H. xlix.). Five loaves and two fishes, all that was known to be in that vast gathering.—Ver. 18. φέρετε, etc.: Christ's imperial way in critical situations often arrests attention. "Stretch forth thine hand" (xii. 13). "Bring them hither to me."—Ver. 19. κελεύσας, λαβὼν, ἀναβλέψας, participles without copula all leading up to εὐλόγησεν, the central chief action: rapid, condensed narrative, briefly, simply, recounting an amazing event.—εὐλόγησεν with accusative (ἄρτους) understood. He blessed the loaves and fishes.—καὶ κλάσας ἔδωκεν, then dividing them gave them to the disciples, who in turn gave to the multitude.—τῷ λόγῳ καὶ τῇ εὐλογίᾳ αὔξων καὶ πληθύνων αὐτούς, Origen.—Ver. 20. δώδεκα κοφ. πλ. is in appos. with τὸ περισσεῦον τ. κ. They took the surplus of the broken pieces to the extent of twelve baskets.—κοφίνους, answering to the Rabbinical קופא, a basket of considerable size ("ein grosses Behältniss," Wünsche). Each of the Twelve had one. The word recalls the well-known line of Juvenal (Sat. iii. 14): "Judaeis, quorum cophinus foenumque suppellex," on which and its bearing on this place vide Schöttgen (Hor. Tal.) and Elsner.—Ver. 21. πεντακισχίλιοι, 5000 men, not counting women and children. This helps us to attach some definite meaning to the elastic words, ὄχλος ὄχλοι, so frequently occurring in the Gospels. Doubtless this was an exceptionally great gathering, yet the inference seems legitimate that ὄχλος meant hundreds, and πολὺς ὄχλος thousands.

Vv. 22-36. The return voyage (Mk. vi. 45-56).—Ver. 22. ἠνάγκασεν: a strong word needing an explanation not here given, supplied in John vi. 15. Of course there was no physical compulsion, but there must have been urgency on Christ's part, and unwillingness on the part of disciples. Fritzsche objects to special προσεύξασθαι. Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης, μόνος ἦν ἐκεῖ. 24. τὸ δὲ πλοῖον ἤδη μέσον τῆς θαλάσσης ἦν[1] [q] βασανιζόμενον ὑπὸ τῶν κυμάτων· ἦν γὰρ ἐναντίος ὁ ἄνεμος. 25. Τετάρτῃ δὲ φυλακῇ τῆς νυκτὸς ἀπῆλθε[2] πρὸς αὐτοὺς ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[3] περιπατῶν ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης.[4] 26. καὶ ἰδόντες αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ[5] ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν[6] περιπατοῦντα ἐταράχθησαν, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι [r] φάντασμά ἐστι." καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ φόβου ἔκραξαν. 27. εὐθέως[7] δὲ ἐλάλησεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[8] λέγων, "Θαρσεῖτε· ἐγώ εἰμι, μὴ φοβεῖσθε." 28. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ αὐτῷ ὁ Πέτρος εἶπε[9] "Κύριε, εἰ σὺ εἶ, κέλευσόν με πρός σε ἐλθεῖν[10] ἐπὶ τὰ ὕδατα." 29. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν, "Ἐλθέ." Καὶ καταβὰς ἀπὸ τοῦ πλοίου ὁ[11] Πέτρος περιεπάτησεν ἐπὶ τὰ ὕδατα, ἐλθεῖν[12] πρὸς q Mk. vi. 48 (there of the men, here of the ship).

r Mk. vi. 49 (Wisdom xvii. 14 (15)).

[1] For μεσον . . . ην B. some verss. and minuss. have here σταδιους πολλους απο της γης απειχεν, which W.H. adopt, putting the reading of T.R. in margin. It is the undisputed reading in Mk.

[2] ηλθεν in ℵBΣ verss.

[3] Omit ο Ι. ℵBCD.

[4] ℵBΔΘ several cursives have the accus. here.

[5] οι δε μαθ. ιδοντες α. in BD.

[6] της θαλασσης in ℵBCD.

[7] ευθυς in ℵBD here as always in Mk., whence it may have come. In Mk. this is a standing variation. It need not be again referred to.

[8] ο Ι. before αυτοις in B, omitted in ℵD, bracketed in W.H.

[9] The order of words varies here. W.H., after B, have αποκ. δε ο Π. ειπεν α.

[10] ℵBCDΔΣ many cursives have ελθειν προς σε.

[11] Art. omitted in ℵBD.

[12] και ηλθεν in BD.

emphasis, and renders: "auctor fuit discipulis, ut navem conscenderent".—ἕως οὗ ἀπολύσῃ, subjunctive, here used where optative would be used in classic Greek. Cf. xviii. 30, and vide Burton, § 324.—Ver. 23. ἀνέβη εἰς τὸ ὄρος. After dismissing the crowd Jesus retired into the mountainous country back from the shore, glad to be alone—κατ' ἰδίαν, even to be rid of the Twelve for a season.—προσεύξασθαι: "Good for prayer the mountain, and the night, and the solitude (μόνωσις), affording quiet, freedom from distraction (τὸ ἀπερίσπαστον), and calm" (Euthy. Zig.).—ὀψίας γεν. refers, of course, to a later hour than in ver. 15.—Ver. 24. μέσον, an adjective agreeing with πλοῖον (Winer, § 54, 6), signifies not merely in the middle strictly, but any appreciable distance from shore. Pricaeus gives examples of such use. But the reading of B, probably to be preferred, implies that the boat was many stadii (25 or 30, John vi. 19 = 3 to 4 miles) from the eastern shore.—ὑπὸ τῶν κυμάτων: not in Mk., and goes without saying; when there are winds there will be waves.—ἐναντίος ὁ ἄνεμος: what wind? From what quarter blowing? What was the starting-point, and the destination? Holtz. (H. C.) suggests that the voyage was either from Bethsaida Julias at the mouth of the upper Jordan to the north-western shore, or from the south end of the plain el-Batiha towards Bethsaida Julias, at the north end, citing Furrer in support of the second alternative, vide in Mk.—Ver. 25. τετάρτῃ φυλ. = 3 to 6, in the early morning, πρωΐ.—ἐπὶ τ. θ.: the readings in this and the next verse vary between genitive and accusative. The sense is much the same. The evangelist means to represent Jesus as really walking on the sea, not on the land above the sea level (Paulus, Schenkel). Holtz. (H. C.), regarding it as a legend, refers to O. T. texts in which God walks on the sea.—Ver. 26. φάντασμα: a little touch of sailor superstition natural in the circumstances; presupposes the impression that they saw something walking on the sea.—Ver. 27. ἐλάλησεν, Jesus spoke; the words given (θαρσεῖτε, etc.), but the mere sound of His voice would be enough.

Vv. 28-32. Peter-episode, peculiar to Mt. The story is true to the character τὸν Ἰησοῦν. 30. βλέπων δὲ τὸν ἄνεμον ἰσχυρὸν[1] ἐφοβήθη· καὶ ἀρξάμενος [s] καταποντίζεσθαι ἔκραξε, λέγων, "Κύριε, σῶσόν με." 31. Εὐθέως δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα ἐπελάβετο αὐτοῦ, καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ὀλιγόπιστε, εἰς τί [t] ἐδίστασας;" 32. Καὶ ἐμβάντων[2] αὐτῶν εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, [u] ἐκόπασεν ὁ ἄνεμος· 33. οἱ δὲ ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ ἐλθόντες[3] προσεκύνησαν αὐτῷ λέγοντες, "Ἀληθῶς Θεοῦ υἱὸς εἶ."

34. Καὶ διαπεράσαντες ἦλθον εἰς τὴν γῆν[4] Γεννησαρέτ. 35. καὶ ἐπιγνόντες αὐτὸν οἱ ἄνδρες τοῦ τόπου ἐκείνου ἀπέστειλαν εἰς ὅλην τὴν περίχωρον ἐκείνην, καὶ προσήνεγκαν αὐτῷ πάντας τοὺς κακῶς ἔχοντας· 36. καὶ παρεκάλουν αὐτόν, ἵνα μόνον ἅψωνται τοῦ κρασπέδου τοῦ ἱματίου αὐτοῦ· καὶ ὅσοι ἥψαντο, [v] διεσώθησαν.

s Ch. xviii. 6 only.
t Ch. xxviii. 17 only.
u Mk. iv. 39; vi. 51.
v Lk. vii. 8. Acts xxiii. 24; xxvii. 43, 44; xxviii. 1, 4. 1 Pet. iii. 20.

[1] Omitted in ℵB. [2] αναβαντων in ℵBD. [3] Wanting in ℵBΣ.
[4] ℵBD al. have επι instead of εις and omit την γην.

of Peter.—Ver. 30. βλέπων τὸν ἄνεμον, seeing the wind, that is, the effects of it. It is one thing to see a storm from the deck of a stout ship, another to see it in midst of the waves.—καταποντίζεσθαι: he walked at first, now he begins to sink; so at the final crisis, so at Antioch (Gal. ii. 11), so probably all through. A strange mixture of strength and weakness, bravery and cowardice; a man of generous impulses rather than of constant firm will. "Peter walked on the water but feared the wind: such is human nature, often achieving great things, and at fault in little things."—(πολλάκις τὰ μεγάλα κατορθοῦσα, ἐν τοῖς ἐλάττοσι ἐλέγχεται, Chrys., H. l.).—Ver. 32. ἐδίστασας: again in xxviii. 17, nowhere else in N. T., from δίς, double, hence to be of two minds, to doubt (cf. δίψυχος, James i. 8).—ἀναβάντων αὐτῶν: Jesus and Peter.—ἐκόπασεν: used in narrative of first sea-anecdote by Mk., iv. 39 = exhausted itself (from κόπος).—Ver. 33. οἱ ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ: cf. οἱ ἄνθρωποι in viii. 27; presumably the disciples alone referred to.—ἀληθῶς θ. υ. εἶ, a great advance on ποταπός (viii. 27). The question it implies now settled: Son of God.

Vv. 34-36. Safe arrival.—διαπεράσαντες, having covered the distance between the place where Jesus joined them and the shore.—ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν: they got to land; the general fact important after the storm.—εἰς Γεννησαρέτ, more definite indication of locality, yet not very definite; a district, not a town, the rich plain of Gennesaret, four miles long and two broad.—Ver. 35. καὶ ἐπιγνόντες, etc.: again popular excitement with its usual concomitants. The men of the place, when they recognised who had landed from the boat, sent round the word: Jesus has come! They bring their sick to Him to be healed.—Ver. 36. παρεκάλουν, etc.: they have now unbounded confidence in Christ's curative powers; think it enough to touch (μόνον ἅψωνται) the hem of His mantle.—διεσώθησαν: they are not disappointed; the touch brings a complete cure (διὰ in composition). The expression, ὅσοι ἥψαντο, implies that all who were cured touched: that was the uniform means. Mk.'s expression, ὅσοι ἂν ἥ., leaves that open.

CHAPTER XV. WASHING OF HANDS; SYROPHENICIAN WOMAN; SECOND FEEDING. The scene changes with dramatic effect from phenomenal popularity on the eastern shore, and in Gennesaret, to embittered ominous conflict with the jealous guardians of Jewish orthodoxy and orthopraxy. The relations between Jesus and the religious virtuosi are becoming more and more strained and the crisis cannot be far off. That becomes clear to Jesus now, if it was not before (xvi. 21).

Vv. 1-20. Washing of hands (Mk. vii. 1-23).—Ver. 1. τότε connects naturally with immediately preceding narrative concerning the people of Gennesaret with unbounded faith in Jesus seeking healing by mere touch of His garment. Probably the one scene led to the other: growing popular enthusiasm deepening Pharisaic hostility.—προσέρχονται (οἱ) ἀ. Ι. If οἱ be omitted, the sense is that certain persons came to Jesus from Jerusalem. If it be retained, the sense is: certain persons belonging to Jerusalem came from it, the preposition ἐν being a Acts i. 25 (with ἀπό). b Mk. vii. 3, 5, 9, 13. 1 Cor. xi. 2. Gal. i. 14. Col. ii. 8. 2 Thess. ii. 15; iii. 6. c Mk. vii. 10; ix. 39. Acts xix. 9. d Ch. xvi. 26; xxvii. 24. Mk. v. 26; Heb. xiii. 9 al.

XV. 1. TOTE προσέρχονται τῷ Ἰησοῦ οἱ[1] ἀπὸ Ἱεροσολύμων γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι,[2] λέγοντες, 2. "Διατί οἱ μαθηταί σου [a]παραβαίνουσι τὴν [b]παράδοσιν τῶν πρεσβυτέρων; οὐ γὰρ νίπτονται τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν,[3] ὅταν ἄρτον ἐσθίωσιν." 3. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Διατί καὶ ὑμεῖς παραβαίνετε τὴν ἐντολὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ διὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ὑμῶν; 4. Ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς ἐνετείλατο, λέγων,[4] 'Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σοῦ,[5] καὶ τὴν μητέρα·' καί, 'Ὁ [c]κακολογῶν πατέρα ἢ μητέρα θανάτῳ τελευτάτω·' ὑμεῖς δὲ λέγετε, 5. Ὃς ἂν εἴπῃ τῷ πατρὶ ἢ τῇ μητρί, Δῶρον, ὃ ἐὰν ἐξ ἐμοῦ [d]ὠφεληθῇς, καὶ[6] οὐ μὴ changed into ἀπὸ by attraction of the verb.—φαρ. καὶ γρ., usually named in inverse order, as in T.R. Our evangelist makes the whole party come from Jerusalem; Mk., with more probability, the scribes only. The guardians of tradition in the Capital have their evil eye on Jesus and co-operate with the provincial rigorists.—Ver. 2. διατί οἱ μαθ. σου παραβ.: no instance of offence specified in this case, as in ix. 10 and xii. 1. The zealots must have been making inquiries or playing the spy into the private habits of the disciple circle, seeking for grounds of fault-finding (cf. Mk. vii. 2).—παραβαίνουσι: strong word (Mk.'s milder), putting breach of Rabbinical rules on a level with breaking the greatest moral laws, as if the former were of equal importance with the latter. That they were was deliberately maintained by the scribes (vide Lightfoot).—τὴν παράδοσιν τ. π.: not merely the opinion, dogma, placitum, of the elders (Grotius), but opinion expressed ex cathedra, custom originated with authority by the ancients. The "elders" here are not the living rulers of the people, but the past bearers of religious authority, the more remote the more venerable. The "tradition" was unwritten (ἄγραφος διδασκαλία, Hesych.), the "law upon the lip" reaching back, like the written law (so it was pretended), to Moses. Baseless assertion, but believed; therefore to attack the παράδοσις a Herculean, dangerous task. The assailants regard the act imputed as an unheard-of monstrous impiety. That is why they make a general charge before specifying the particular form under which the offence is committed, so giving the latter as serious an aspect as possible.—οὐ γὰρ νίπτονται, etc.: granting the fact it did not necessarily mean deliberate disregard of the tradition. It might be an occasional carelessness on the part of some of the disciples (τινάς, Mk. vii. 2) which even the offenders would not care to defend. A time-server might easily have evaded discussion by putting the matter on this ground. The Pharisees eagerly put the worst construction on the act, and Jesus was incapable of time-serving insincerity, thus conflict was inevitable.—νίπτεσθαι, the proper word before meat, ἀπονίπτεσθαι, after, Elsner, citing Athenaeus, lib. ix., cap. 18.—ἄρτον ἐσθίωσιν, Hebrew idiom for taking food. The neglect charged was not that of ordinary cleanliness, but of the technical rules for securing ceremonial cleanness. These were innumerable and ridiculously minute. Lightfoot, referring to certain Rabbinical tracts, says: "lege, si vacat, et si per taedium et nauseam potes".

[1] ℵBD omit οι. [2] Φαρ. και γραμ. in ℵBD. [3] ℵBΔ Orig. omit αυτων.
[4] For ενετειλατο λεγων BD have simply ειπεν. [5] ℵBCD omit σου.
[6] ℵBCD omit και, which affects the construction; vide below.

Vv. 3-6. Christ's reply; consists of a counter charge and a prophetic citation (vv. 7-9) in the inverse order to that of Mk.—Ver. 3. καὶ ὑμεῖς: the retort, if justifiable, the best defence possible of neglect charged = "we transgress the tradition because we want to keep the commands of God: choice lies between these; you make the wrong choice". Grave issue raised; no compromise possible here.—διὰ τ. π. ὑμῶν: not rules made by the parties addressed (Weiss-Meyer), but the tradition which ye idolise, your precious paradosis.—Ver. 4. ὁ γὰρ θεὸς: counter charge substantiated. The question being the validity of the tradition and its value, its evil tendency might be illustrated at will in connection with any moral interest. It might have been illustrated directly in connection τιμήσῃ[1] τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ ἢ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ· 6. καὶ [e] ἠκυρώσατε τὴν ἐντολὴν[2] τοῦ Θεοῦ διὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ὑμῶν. 7. Ὑποκριταί, [f] καλῶς προεφήτευσε[3] περὶ ὑμῶν Ἡσαΐας, λέγων, 8. ‘Ἐγγίζει μοι ὁ λαὸς οὗτος τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν, καὶ τοῖς χείλεσί με τιμᾷ[4] ἡ δὲ καρδία αὐτῶν πόρρω ἀπέχει ἀπ᾽ ἐμοῦ. 9. [g] μάτην δὲ σέβονταί με, e Mk. vii. 13. Gal. iii. 17.

f Mk. vii. 6; xii. 28. Lk. xx. 39. John iv. 17. Ironically in Mk. vii. 9. 2 Cor. xi. 4.
g here and in Mk. vii. 7 (from Is. xxix. 13).

[1] ℵBCDΔΣ have τιμησει. τιμηση answers to ειπῃ, and being made dependent on ος αν by και is part of the protasis.

[2] τον λογον in BD (W.H.); τον νομον in ℵC (Tisch., W.H. marg.).

[3] Augment at beg., επροφ, in ℵBCDL.

[4] The T.R. gives the quotation in full. ℵBDL have ο λαος ουτος τοις χειλεσι με τιμα. Tisch., W.H. (ουτος ο λαος and αγαπη for τιμα in margin).

with moral purity versus ceremonial. The actual selection characteristic of Jesus as humane, and felicitous as exceptionally clear.—τίμα . . . τελευτάτω: fifth commandment (Ex. xx. 12), with its penal sanction (Ex. xxi. 16).—Ver. 5 shows how that great law is compromised.—ὑμεῖς δὲ λέγ.: the emphatic antithesis of ὑμεῖς to Θεὸς, a pointed rebuke of their presumption. The scribes rivals to the Almighty in legislation. "Ye say": the words following give not the ipsissima verba of scribe-teaching or what they would acknowledge to be the drift of their teaching, but that drift as Jesus Himself understood it = "This is what it comes to."—"Δῶρον" = let it be a gift or offering devoted to God, to the temple, to religious purposes, i.e., a Corban (Mk. vii. 11); magic word releasing from obligation to show honour to parents in the practical way of contributing to their support. Of evil omen even when the "gift" was bonâ fide, as involving an artificial divorce between religion and morality; easily sliding into disingenuous pretexts of vows to evade filial responsibilities; reaching the lowest depth of immorality when lawmakers and unfilial sons were in league for common pecuniary profit from the nefarious transaction. Were the fault-finders in this case chargeable with receiving a commission for trafficking in iniquitous legislation, letting sons off for a percentage on what they would have to give their parents? Origen, Jerome, Theophy., Lutteroth favour this view, but there is nothing in the text to justify it. Christ's charge is based on the practice specified even at its best: honest pleading of previous obligation to God as a ground for neglecting duty to parents. Lightfoot (Hor. Heb.) understands the law as meaning that the word Corban, even though profanely and heartlessly spoken, bound not to help parents, but did not bind really to give the property to sacred uses. "Ad dicanda sua in sacros usus per haec verba nullatenus tenebatur ad non juvandum patrem tenebatur inviolabiliter."—οὐ μὴ τιμήσει, he shall not honour = he is exempt from obligation to: such the rule in effect if not in words of the scribes in the case. The future here has the force of the imperative as often in the Sept. (vide Burton, M. and T., § 67). If the imperative meaning be denied, then οὐ μὴ τ. must be taken as a comment of Christ's. Ye say, "whosoever," etc.; in these circumstances of course he will not, etc. As the passage stands in T.R. the clause καὶ οὐ μὴ τιμήσῃ, etc., belongs to the protasis, and the apodosis remains unexpressed = he shall be free, or guiltless, as in A. V.—Ver. 6. ἠκυρώσατε, ye invalidated, by making such a rule, the aorist pointing to the time when the rule was made. Or it may be a gnomic aorist: so ye are wont to, etc. The verb ἀκυρόω belongs to later Greek, though Elsner calls the phrase "bene Graeca".—διὰ . . . ὑμῶν: an account of your tradition, again to mark it as their idol, and as theirs alone, God having no part in it, though the Rabbis taught that it was given orally by God to Moses.—Ver. 7. ὑποκριταί: no thought of conciliation; open war at all hazards. "Actors," in their zeal for God, as illustrated in the case previously cited. God first, parents second, yet God not in all their thoughts.—καλῶς, appositely, to the purpose. Isaiah might not be thinking of the Pharisees, but certainly the quotation is very felicitous in reference to them, exactly describing their religious character. Mt. follows Mk. in quoting;

h here and in parall. in Gospp. frequent in Paul.
i Mk. vii. 7. Col. ii. 22 (not in profane authors).
j here only in N.T.
k Ch. xxiii. 16, 24. Acts i. 16. Rom. ii. 19.
l here only (in Ch. xiii. 36, T.R.).

διδάσκοντες [h] διδασκαλίας, [i] ἐντάλματα ἀνθρώπων.'" 10. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τὸν ὄχλον, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἀκούετε καὶ συνίετε. 11. οὐ τὸ εἰσερχόμενον εἰς τὸ στόμα κοινοῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον· ἀλλὰ τὸ ἐκπορευόμενον ἐκ τοῦ στόματος, τοῦτο κοινοῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον." 12. Τότε προσελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ [1] εἶπον [2] αὐτῷ, "Οἶδας ὅτι οἱ Φαρισαῖοι ἀκούσαντες τὸν λόγον ἐσκανδαλίσθησαν;" 13. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπε, "Πᾶσα [j] φυτεία, ἣν οὐκ ἐφύτευσεν ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ οὐράνιος, ἐκριζωθήσεται. 14. ἄφετε αὐτούς [k] ὁδηγοί εἰσι τυφλοὶ τυφλῶν [3]· τυφλὸς δὲ τυφλὸν ἐὰν ὁδηγῇ, ἀμφότεροι εἰς βόθυνον πεσοῦνται." 15. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πέτρος εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "[l] Φράσον neither follows closely the Sept. (Is. xxix. 13).—Ver. 8. ἡ δὲ καρδία, etc.: at this point the citation is particularly apposite. They were far from the true God in their thoughts who imagined that He could be pleased with gifts made at the expense of filial piety. Christ's God abhorred such homage, still more the hypocritical pretence of it.

[1] ℵBD and several cursives omit αυτου. [2] λεγουσιν in BD.

[3] Instead of οδηγοι . . . τυφλων BDLZ have τυφλοι εισι οδηγοι (W.H.). ℵ has the same inverted, οδ. εισι τυφ.

Vv. 10, 11. Appeal to the people: a mortal offence to the Pharisees and scribes, but made inevitable by publicity of attack, the multitude being in the background and overhearing all.—ἀκούετε καὶ συνίετε: abrupt, laconic address; a fearless, resolute tone audible.—Ver. 11. Simple direct appeal to the moral sense of mankind; one of those emancipating words which sweep away the cobwebs of artificial systems; better than elaborate argument. It is called a parable in ver. 15, but it is not a parable in the strict sense here whatever it may be in Mk. (vide notes there). Parables are used to illustrate the ethical by the natural. This saying is itself ethical: τὸ ἐκπορευόμενον ἐκ τοῦ στόματος refers to words as expressing thoughts and desires (ver. 19).—οὐ τὸ ἐρ. εἰς τὸ στόμα: refers to food of all sorts; clean food taken with unclean hands, and food in itself unclean. The drift of the saying therefore is: ceremonial uncleanness, however caused, a small matter, moral uncleanness the one thing to be dreaded. This goes beyond the tradition of the elders, and virtually abrogates the Levitical distinctions between clean and unclean. A sentiment worthy of Jesus and suitable to an occasion when He was compelled to emphasise the supreme importance of the ethical in the law—the ethical emphatically the law of God (τὴν ἐντολὴν τοῦ θεοῦ, ver. 3).

Vv. 12-14. Disciples report impression made on Pharisees by the word spoken to the people. Not in Mark.—Ver. 12. ἐσκανδαλίσθησαν: double offence—(1) appealing to the people at all; (2) uttering such a word revolutionary in character.—Ver. 13. ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς, etc.: the disciples were afraid, but Jesus was indignant, and took up high ground.—φυτεία for φύτευμα, a plant, "not a wild flower but a cultivated plant" (Camb. G. T.), refers to the Rabbinical tradition; natural figure for doctrine, and so used both by Jesus and Greeks (vide Schöttgen and Kypke). Kypke remarks: "pertinet huc parabola περὶ τοῦ σπείροντος".—ὁ πατήρ μου: the statement in the relative clause is really the main point, that the tradition in question was a thing with which God as Jesus conceived Him had nothing to do. This is an important text for Christ's doctrine of the Fatherhood as taught by discriminating use of the term πατήρ. The idea of God implied in the Corban tradition was that His interest was antagonistic to that of humanity. In Christ's idea of God the two interests are coincident. This text should be set beside xii. 50, which might easily be misunderstood as teaching an opposite view.—ἐκριζωθήσεται. This is what will be, and what Jesus wishes and works for: uprooting, destruction, root and branch, no compromise, the thing wholly evil. The response of the traditionalists was crucifixion.—Ver. 14. ἄφετε: the case hopeless, no reform possible; on the road to ruin.—τυφλοί εἰσιν ὁδηγοί: the reading in B is very laconic = blind men ἡμῖν τὴν παραβολὴν ταύτην."[1] 16. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[1] εἶπεν, "[m] Ἀκμὴν καὶ ὑμεῖς [n] ἀσύνετοί ἐστε; 17. οὔπω[2] νοεῖτε, ὅτι πᾶν τὸ εἰσπορευόμενον εἰς τὸ στόμα εἰς τὴν κοιλίαν χωρεῖ, καὶ εἰς [o] ἀφεδρῶνα ἐκβάλλεται; 18. τὰ δὲ ἐκπορευόμενα ἐκ τοῦ στόματος ἐκ τῆς καρδίας ἐξέρχεται, κἀκεῖνα κοινοῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον. 19. ἐκ γὰρ τῆς καρδίας ἐξέρχονται [o] διαλογισμοὶ πονηροί, [p] φόνοι, [p] μοιχεῖαι, πορνεῖαι, κλοπαί, ψευδομαρτυρίαι, βλασφημίαι. 20. ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ κοινοῦντα τὸν ἄνθρωπον· τὸ δὲ ἀνίπτοις χερσὶ φαγεῖν οὐ κοινοῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον."

21. Καὶ ἐξελθὼν ἐκεῖθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς τὰ μέρη Τύρου

m here only.
n Rom. i. 21, 31; x. 19.
o Mk. vii. 21. Lk. ii. 35; ix. 47; xxiv. 38. 1 Cor. iii. 20. Jas. ii. 4.
p These are the only words common to this list with that in Gal. v. 19; both doubtful there.

[1] ℵBZ omit ταυτην and Ιησους (D also omits Ι.). [2] ου in BDZ.

are the leaders, the suggestion being: we know what happens in that case. The point is the inevitableness of ruin. What follows expresses what has been already hinted.—τυφλὸς δὲ τ. ἐ. ὁδ.: if blind blind lead; ὁδηγῇ, subjunctive, with ἐὰν as usual in a present general supposition.—ἀμφότεροι, both: Rabbis or scribes and their disciples. Christ despaired of the teachers, but He tried to rescue the people; hence vv. 10, 11.

Vv. 15-20. Interpretation of saying in ver. 11.—Ver. 15. Πέτρος, spokesman as usual (ὁ θερμὸς καὶ πανταχοῦ προφθάνων, Chrys., Hom. li.).—παραβολήν, here at least, whatever may be the case in Mk., can mean only a dark saying, σκοτεινὸς λόγος (Theophy. in Mk.), "oratio obscura" (Suicer). The saying, ver. 11, was above the understanding of the disciples, or rather in advance of their religious attainments; for men often deem thoughts difficult when, though easy to understand, they are hard to receive. The Twelve had been a little scandalised by the saying as well as the Pharisees, though they did not like to say so (καὶ αὐτοὶ ἠρέμα θορυβούμενοι, Chrys.).—Ver. 16. ἀκμὴν, accusative of ἀκμή, the point (of a weapon, etc.) = κατ' ἀκμὴν χρόνου, at this point of time, still; late Greek, and condemned by Phryn., p. 123 (ἀντὶ τοῦ ἔτι).—ἀσύνετοί ἐστε. Christ chides the Twelve for making a mystery of a plain matter ("quare parabolice dictum putet quod perspicue locutus est," Jerome). Very simple and axiomatic to the Master, but was it ever quite clear to the disciples? In such matters all depends on possessing the requisite spiritual sense. Easy to see when you have eyes.—Ver. 17. ἀφεδρῶνα: here only, probably a Macedonian word = privy; a vulgar word and a vulgar subject which Jesus would gladly have avoided, but He forces Himself to speak of it for the sake of His disciples. The idea is: from food no moral defilement comes to the soul; such defilement as there is purely physical, passing through the bowels into the place of discharge. Doubtless Jesus said this, otherwise no one would have put it into His mouth. Were the Twelve any the wiser? Probably the very rudeness of the speech led them to think.—Ver. 18. ἐκπορευόμενα: words representing thoughts and desires, morally defiling, or rather revealing defilement already existing in the heart, seat of thought and passion.—Ver. 19. φόνοι, etc.: breaches of Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Commandments in succession.—Ver. 20. Emphatic final reassertion of the doctrine.

Vv. 21-28. Woman of Canaan (Mk. vii. 24-30). This excursion to the north is the result of a passionate longing to escape at once from the fever of popularity and from the odium theologicum of Pharisees, and to be alone for a while with the Twelve, with nature, and with God. One could wish that fuller details had been given as to its duration, extent, etc. From Mk. we infer that it had a wide sweep, lasted for a considerable time, and was not confined to Jewish territory. Vide notes there.

Ver. 21. ἀνεχώρησεν, cf. xii. 15.—εἰς τὰ μέρη Τ. καὶ Σ.: towards or into? Opinion is much divided. De Wette cites in favour of the latter, Mt. ii. 22, xvi. 23, and disposes of the argument against it based on ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων ἐκείνων (ver. 22) by the remark that it has force only if ὅρια, contrary to the usage of the evangelist, be taken as = boundaries instead of territories. On the whole, the conclusion must be that the narrative leaves the point uncertain. On psychological καὶ Σιδῶνος. 22. καὶ ἰδού, γυνὴ Χαναναία ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων ἐκείνων ἐξελθοῦσα ἐκραύγασεν[1] αὐτῷ,[2] λέγουσα, "Ἐλέησόν με, κύριε, υἱὲ[3] Δαβίδ· ἡ θυγάτηρ μου κακῶς δαιμονίζεται." 23. Ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῇ λόγον. καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἠρώτων[4] αὐτόν, λέγοντες, "Ἀπόλυσον αὐτήν, ὅτι κράζει [q] ὄπισθεν ἡμῶν." 24. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, "Οὐκ ἀπεστάλην εἰ μὴ εἰς τὰ πρόβατα τὰ ἀπολωλότα οἴκου Ἰσραήλ." 25. Ἡ δὲ ἐλθοῦσα προσεκύνει αὐτῷ, λέγουσα, "Κύριε, [r] βοήθει μοι." 26. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, "Οὐκ ἔστι καλὸν[5] λαβεῖν τὸν ἄρτον τῶν τέκνων, καὶ βαλεῖν τοῖς κυναρίοις."

q Lk. xxiii. 26 (with gen. as here).

r Mk. ix. 22, 24. Acts xvi. 9; xxi. 28. 2 Cor. vi. 2. Heb. ii. 18.

[1] εκραζεν in BDΣ (W.H.). The aor. εκραξεν in ℵZ (Tisch. and W.H. marg.). The imperfect is truer to life.

[2] ℵBCZΣ omit αυτω. [3] υιος in BD. [4] ηρωτουν in ℵBCDX.

[5] ουκ εστι καλον is so weightily supported (all the great uncials with exception of D) that one can hardly refuse to accept it as the true reading. Yet the reading of D, ουκ εξεστι, has strong claims, just on account of the severity it implies and because the other reading is that of Mk.

grounds the presumption is in favour of the view that Jesus crossed the border into heathen territory. After that interview with sanctimonious Pharisees who thought the whole world outside Judea unclean, it would be a refreshment to Christ's spirit to cross over the line and feel that He was still in God's world, with blue sky overhead and the sea on this hand and mountains on that, all showing the glory of their Maker. He would breathe a freer, less stifling atmosphere there.—Ver. 22. Χαναναία: the Phoenicians were descended from a colony of Canaanites, the original inhabitants of Palestine, Gen. x. 15 (vide Benziger, Heb. Arch., p. 63). Vide notes on Mk.—ἐλ. με, pity me, the mother's heart speaks.—υἱὲ Δ. The title and the request imply some knowledge of Jesus. Whence got? Was she a proselyte? (De Wette.) Or had the fame of Jesus spread thus far, the report of a wonderful healer who passed among the Jews for a descendant of David? The latter every way likely, cf. Mt. iv. 24. There would be some intercourse between the borderers, though doubtless also prejudices and enmities —Ver. 23. ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἀπ.: a new style of behaviour on the part of Jesus. The rôle of indifference would cost Him an effort.—ἠρώτων (ουν W. and H. as if contracted from ἐρωτέω), besought; in classics the verb means to inquire. In N. T. the two senses are combined after analogy of שָׁאַל. The disciples were probably surprised at their Master's unusual behaviour; a reason for it would not occur to them. They change places with the Master here, the larger-hearted appearing by comparison the narrow-hearted.—ἀπόλυσον, get rid of her by granting her request.—ὅτι κράζει: they were moved not so much by pity as by dread of a sensation. There was far more sympathy (though hidden) in Christ's heart than in theirs. Deep natures are often misjudged, and shallow men praised at their expense.—Ver. 24. οὐκ ἀπεστάλην: Jesus is compelled to explain Himself, and His explanation is bonâ fide, and to be taken in earnest as meaning that He considered it His duty to restrict His ministry to Israel, to be a shepherd exclusively to the lost sheep of Israel (τὰ πρόβατα τ. ἀ., cf. ix. 36), as He was wont to call them with affectionate pity. There was probably a mixture of feelings in Christ's mind at this time; an aversion to recommence just then a healing ministry at all—a craving for rest and retirement; a disinclination to be drawn into a ministry among a heathen people, which would mar the unity of His career as a prophet of God to Israel (the drama of His life to serve its purpose must respect the limits of time and place); a secret inclination to do this woman a kindness if it could in any way be made exceptional; and last but not least, a feeling that her request was really not isolated but representative = the Gentile world in her inviting Him, a fugitive from His own land, to come over and help them, an omen of the transference of the kingdom from Jewish to Pagan soil.

27. Ἡ δὲ εἶπε, "Ναί, κύριε· καὶ γὰρ[1] τὰ κυνάρια ἐσθίει ἀπὸ τῶν [s]ψιχίων τῶν [t]πιπτόντων ἀπὸ τῆς [t]τραπέζης τῶν κυρίων αὐτῶν." 28. Τότε ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Ὦ γύναι, μεγάλη σου ἡ πίστις· γενηθήτω σοι ὡς θέλεις." Καὶ ἰάθη ἡ θυγάτηρ αὐτῆς ἀπὸ τῆς ὥρας ἐκείνης.

s Mk. vii. 28. Lk. xvi. 21.
t same phr. in Lk. xvi. 21.

29. Καὶ μεταβὰς ἐκεῖθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἦλθε παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν τῆς Γαλιλαίας· καὶ ἀναβὰς εἰς τὸ ὄρος, ἐκάθητο ἐκεῖ. 30. καὶ προσῆλθον αὐτῷ ὄχλοι πολλοί, ἔχοντες μεθ' ἑαυτῶν χωλούς, τυφλούς, κωφούς, [u]κυλλούς,[2] καὶ ἑτέρους πολλούς, καὶ ἔρριψαν αὐτοὺς παρὰ τοὺς πόδας τοῦ Ἰησοῦ[3] καὶ ἐθεράπευσεν αὐτούς· 31. ὥστε τοὺς ὄχλους[4] θαυμάσαι, βλέποντας κωφοὺς λαλοῦντας,[5] κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς,[6] χωλοὺς περιπατοῦντας, καὶ τυφλοὺς βλέποντας· καὶ u Ch. xviii. 8. Mk. ix. 42.

[1] B omits γαρ, which therefore W H. bracket. As Weiss suggests it may have fallen out per incuriam. It seems needed. Vide below.

[2] The order in which these four words (χωλους, etc.) are given varies. B has κυλλους before τυφλους, which W.H. adopt. The order of T.R. is supported only by late MSS.

[3] αυτου for του Ι. in ℵBDL.

[4] τον οχλον in ℵCDΔ.

[5] B has ακουοντας.

[6] ℵ omits this clause.

Vv. 25-28. Entreaty renewed at close quarters with success.—Ver. 25. ἡ δὲ ἐλθοῦσα, etc. Probably the mother read conflict and irresolution in Christ's face, and thence drew encouragement.—Ver. 26. οὐκ ἔστιν καλὸν, etc.: seemingly a hard word, but not so hard as it seems. First, it is not a simple monosyllabic negative, leaving no room for parley, but an argument inviting further discussion. Next, it is playful, humorous, bantering in tone, a parable to be taken cum grano. Third, its harshest word, κυναρίοις, contains a loophole. κυνάρια does not compare Gentiles to the dogs without, in the street, but to the household dogs belonging to the family, which got their portion though not the children's.—Ver. 27. ναί, κύριε· καὶ γὰρ, etc.: eager assent, not dissent, with a gleam in the eye on perceiving the advantage given by the comparison = Yes, indeed, Lord, for even, etc. Kypke cites an instance from Xenophon of the combination ναί καὶ γὰρ in the same sense.—ψιχίων, dimin. from ψίξ, a bit, crumb, found only in N. T. (here and in Mk. vii. 28, Lk. xvi. 21), another diminutive answering to κυνάρια = the little pet dogs, eat of the minute morsels. Curiously felicitous combination of ready wit, humility and faith: wit in seizing on the playful κυνάρια and improving on it by adding ψίχια, humility in being content with the smallest crumbs, faith in conceiving of the healing asked as only such a crumb for Jesus to give.—Ver. 28. Immediate compliance with her request with intense delight in her faith, which may have recalled to mind that of another Gentile (Mt. viii. 10).—ὦ γύναι: exclamation in a tone enriched by the harmonies of manifold emotions. What a refreshment to Christ's heart to pass from that dreary pestilential traditionalism to this utterance of a simple unsophisticated moral nature on Pagan soil. The transition from the one scene to the other unconsciously serves the purposes of consummate dramatic art.

Vv. 29 31. Return to the Sea of Galilee (Mk. vii. 31-37).—Ver. 29. παρὰ τ. θ. τ. Γαλ., to the neighbourhood of the Sea of Galilee; on which side? According to Mk., the eastern, approached by a circuitous journey through Sidon and Decapolis. Weiss contends that Mt. means the western shore. The truth seems to be that he leaves it vague. His account is a meagre colourless reproduction of Mk.'s. He takes no interest in the route but only in the incidents at the two termini. He takes Jesus north to the borders of Tyre to met the woman of Canaan, and back to Galilee to feed the multitude a second time.—εἰς τὸ ὄρος, as in v. 1, and apparently for the same purpose: ἐκάθητο ε., sat down there to teach. This ascent of the hill bordering the lake is not in Mk.—Ver.

v Mk. viii. 2 (ἡμέραι, true reading as here). Cf. Lk. ix. 28, Acts v. 7 for const.
w Mk. viii. 2. Acts xi. 23; xiii. 43. 1 Tim. v. 5.
x Mk. viii. 3.
y Mk. viii. 7.
z Mk. vi. 40 (absol.); viii. 6 (ἐπὶ τῆς γ.). Lk. xi. 37 (=ἀνακλίνομαι). John xxi. 20 al.

ἐδόξασαν τὸν Θεὸν Ἰσραήλ. 32. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς προσκαλεσάμενος τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ εἶπε, "Σπλαγχνίζομαι ἐπὶ τὸν ὄχλον, ὅτι ἤδη v ἡμέρας [1] τρεῖς w προσμένουσί μοι, καὶ οὐκ ἔχουσι τί φάγωσι. καὶ ἀπολῦσαι αὐτοὺς x νήστεις οὐ θέλω, μήποτε ἐκλυθῶσιν ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ." 33. Καὶ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ,[2] "Πόθεν ἡμῖν ἐν ἐρημίᾳ ἄρτοι τοσοῦτοι, ὥστε χορτάσαι ὄχλον τοσοῦτον;" 34. Καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Πόσους ἄρτους ἔχετε;" Οἱ δὲ εἶπον, "Ἑπτά, καὶ ὀλίγα y ἰχθύδια." 35. Καὶ ἐκέλευσε τοῖς ὄχλοις [3] z ἀναπεσεῖν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν· 36. καὶ λαβὼν [4] τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἄρτους καὶ τοὺς ἰχθύας,[5] εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασε, καὶ ἔδωκε [6] τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ,[7] οἱ δὲ

[1] ημεραι in most uncials. ℵ and Origen have the accus. (ημερας T.R.), obviously a grammatical correction.

[2] ℵB omit.

[3] For εκελ. τοις οχ. ℵBD have παραγγειλας τω οχλω.

[4] For και λαβων ℵBD have ελαβε.

[5] ℵBD insert και before ευχαριστησας.

[6] εδιδου in ℵBD.

[7] ℵBD omit αυτου.

30. χωλούς, etc.: the people wanted healing, not teaching, and so brought their sick and suffering to Jesus.—ἔρριψαν: they threw them at His feet either in care-free confidence, or in haste, because of the greatness of the number. Among those brought were certain classed as κυλλούς, which is usually interpreted "bent," as with rheumatism. But in xviii. 8 it seems to mean "mutilated". Euthy. takes κυλλοὶ = οἱ ἄχειρες, and Grotius argues for this sense, and infers that among Christ's works of healing were restorations of lost limbs, though we do not read of such anywhere else. On this view ὑγιεῖς, ver. 31, will mean ἀρτίους, integros.—Ver. 31. λαλοῦντας: this and the following participles are used substantively as objects of the verb βλέποντας, the action denoted by the participles being that which was seen.—ἐδόξασαν τ. θ. Ἰσραήλ. The expression suggests a non-Israelite crowd and seems to hint that after all for our evangelist Jesus is on the east side and in heathen territory. But it may point back to ver. 24 and mean the God who conferred such favours on Israel as distinct from the heathen (Weiss-Meyer).

Vv. 32-38. Second feeding (Mk. viii. 1-9).—Ver. 32. σπλαγχνίζομαι, with ἐπὶ as in Mk. viii. 2, with περὶ in ix. 36, xiv. 14. In the first feeding Christ's compassion is moved by the sickness among the multitude, here by their hunger.—ἡμέραι τρεῖς: that this is the true reading is guaranteed by the unusual construction, the accusative being what one expects. The reading of D adopted by Fritzsche, which inserts εἰσι καὶ after τρεῖς, though not to be accepted as the true reading, may be viewed as a solution of the problem presented by the true reading, vide Winer, § 62, 2.—νήστεις, fasting (νη, ἐσθίω similar to νήπιος from νη, ἔπος), here and in parallel text in Mk. only. The motive of the miracle is not the distance from supplies but the exhausted condition of the people after staying three days with Jesus with quite inadequate provision of food. Mk. states that some were far from home (viii. 3), implying that most were not. But even those whose homes were near might faint (ἐκλυθῶσι, Gal. vi. 9) by the way through long fasting.—Ver. 33. τοσοῦτοι, ὥστε χορτάσαι. ὥστε with infinitive may be used to express a consequence involved in the essence or quality of an object or action, therefore after τοσοῦτος and similar words; vide Kühner, § 584, 2, aa.—Ver. 34. πόσους ἄρτους: the disciples have larger supplies this time than the first after three days, and when the supplies of the multitude are exhausted: seven loaves and several small fishes.—Ver. 36. εὐχαριστήσας, a late Greek word ("does not occur before Polybius in the sense of gratias agere"—Camb. N. T.), condemned by Phryn., who enjoins χάριν εἰδέναι instead (Lobeck, p. 18). Elsner dissents from the judgment of the ancient grammarians, citing instances from Demosthenes, etc.—Ver. 37. ἑπτά σπυρίδας: baskets different in number and in name. Hesychius μαθηταὶ τῷ ὄχλῳ.[1] 37. Καὶ ἔφαγον πάντες, καὶ ἐχορτάσθησαν· καὶ ἦραν[2] τὸ περισσεῦον τῶν κλασμάτων, ἑπτὰ [a] σπυρίδας πλήρεις. 38. οἱ δὲ ἐσθίοντες ἦσαν τετρακισχίλιοι ἄνδρες, χωρὶς γυναικῶν καὶ παιδίων.

[a] Ch. xvi. 10. Mk. viii. 8, 20. Acts ix. 25.

39. Καὶ ἀπολύσας τοὺς ὄχλους ἐνέβη εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὰ ὅρια Μαγδαλά.[3]

XVI. 1. Καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ Φαρισαῖοι καὶ Σαδδουκαῖοι πειράζοντες ἐπηρώτησαν[4] αὐτὸν σημεῖον ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐπιδεῖξαι αὐτοῖς.

[1] τοις οχλοις in ℵBL al. [2] ηραν after κλασματων in BD.

[3] Μαγαδαν in ℵBD, adopted in Tisch., W.H., etc., and doubtless the true reading. Μαγδαλα is a known substituted for an unknown.

[4] επηρωτων in ℵ (Tisch. and W.H. marg.).

defines σπυρίς: τὸ τῶν πυρῶν ἄγγος = wheat-basket; perhaps connected with σπεῖρα, suggesting a basket made of rope-net; probably larger than κόφινος, for longer journeys (Grotius). Or does the different kind of basket point to different nationality; Gentiles? Hilary contends for Gentile recipients of the second blessing, with whom Westcott (Characteristics of Gospel Miracles, p. 13) agrees.—Ver. 39. Μαγαδάν: the true reading, place wholly unknown, whence probably the variants.

CHAPTER XVI. SIGN SEEKERS: CAESAREA PHILIPPI. Again a dramatically impressive juxtaposition of events. First an ominous encounter with ill-affected men professedly in quest of a sign, then in a place of retreat a first announcement in startlingly plain terms of an approaching tragic crisis.

Vv. 1-12. Demand for a sign (Mk. viii. 11-21).—Ver. 1. προσελθόντες: one of Mt.'s oft-recurring descriptive words.—φαρ. καὶ Σαδδ., a new combination, with sinister purpose, of classes of the community not accustomed to act together; wide apart, indeed, in social position and religious tendency, but made allies pro tem. by common dislike to the movement identified with Jesus. Already scribes by themselves had asked a sign (xii. 38). Now they are joined by a party representing the priestly and governing classes among whom the "Sadducees" were to be found (Wellhausen, Die Pharisäer und die Sadducäer). Mk. mentions only the Pharisees (ver. 11), but he makes Jesus refer to the leaven of Herod in the subsequent conversation with the disciples, whence might legitimately be inferred the presence of representatives of that leaven. These Mt. calls "Sadducees," probably the better-known name, and practically identical with the Herod leaven. The "Herodians" were, I imagine, people for whom Herod the Great was a hero, a kind of Messiah, all the Messiah they cared for or believed in, one who could help worldly-minded Israelites to be proud of their country (vide Grotius on Mt. xvi. 6). It was among Sadducees that such hero-worshippers were likely to be found.—ἐπηρώτησαν: here like the simple verb (xv. 23) = requested, with infinitive, ἐπιδεῖξαι, completing the object of desire.—σημεῖον ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ: before (xii. 38) only a sign. Now a sign from heaven. What might that be? Chrys. (Hom. liii.) suggests: to stop the course of the sun, to bridle the moon, to produce thunder, or to change the air, or something of that sort. These suggestions will do as well as any. Probably the interrogators had no definite idea what they wanted, beyond desiring to embarrass or nonplus Christ.

Vv. 2-4. Reply of Jesus.—Vv. 2 and 3, though not in B and bracketed by W. H., may be regarded as part of the text. Somewhat similar is Lk. xii. 54-56. On some occasion Jesus must have contrasted the shrewd observation of His contemporaries in the natural sphere with their spiritual obtuseness.—Ver 2. εὐδία, fine weather! (εὐ, Διός genitive of Ζεύς).—πυρράζει γὰρ ὁ ὁ.: that the sign = a ruddy sky in the evening (πυῤῥίζειν in Lev. xiii. 19, 24).—Ver. 3. χειμών, a storm to-day; sign the same, a ruddy sky in the morning.—στυγνάζων, late but expressive = triste coelum. No special meteorological skill indicated thereby, only the average power of observation based on experience, which is common to mankind. Lightfoot credits the Jews with a Sir. iii. 15. 2. ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὀψίας[1] γενομένης λέγετε, [a]Εὐδία· b Acts xxvii. 20 (same sense). Ch. xxiv. 20 (winter) al. c Mk. x. 22. πυρράζει γὰρ ὁ οὐρανός. 3. καὶ πρωΐ, Σήμερον [b]χειμών· πυρράζει γὰρ [c]στυγνάζων ὁ οὐρανος. ὑποκριταί,[2] τὸ μὲν πρόσωπον τοῦ οὐρανοῦ γινώσκετε διακρίνειν, τὰ δὲ σημεῖα τῶν καιρῶν οὐ δύνασθε;[1] 4. γενεὰ πονηρὰ καὶ μοιχαλὶς σημεῖον ἐπιζητεῖ· καὶ σημεῖον οὐ δοθήσεται αὐτῇ, εἰ μὴ τὸ σημεῖον Ἰωνᾶ τοῦ προφήτου."[3] Καὶ d Mk. viii. 14 (with inf.). Heb. vi. 10; xiii. 2, 16 (with gen.). Phil. iii. 13 (accus.). καταλιπὼν αὐτούς, ἀπῆλθε.

5. Καὶ ἐλθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ[4] εἰς τὸ πέραν [d]ἐπελάθοντο ἄρτους λαβεῖν. 6. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὁρᾶτε καὶ προσέχετε ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ Σαδδουκαίων." 7. Οἱ δὲ διελογί-

[1] From οψιας to δυνασθε, end of ver. 3, is bracketed as doubtful by modern editors. The passage is wanting in ℵBVXΓ, Syr. Cur., and Syr. Sin. Orig., etc.

[2] DLΔ omit. [3] ℵBDL omit του προφητου. [4] ℵBCD omit αυτου.

special interest in such observations, and Christ was willing to give them full credit for skill in that sphere. His complaint was that they showed no such skill in the ethical sphere; they could not discern the signs of the times (τῶν καιρῶν: the reference being, of course, chiefly to their own time). Neither Pharisees nor Sadducees had any idea that the end of the Jewish state was so near. They said εὐδία when they should have said χειμών. They mistook the time of day; thought it was the eve of a good time coming when it was the morning of the judgment day. For a historical parallel, vide Carlyle's French Revolution, book ii., chap. i., Astraea Redux.—Ver. 4. Vide chap. xii. 39.

Vv. 5-12. The one important thing in this section is the reflection of Jesus on what had just taken place. The historical setting is not clear. Jesus left the sign seekers after giving them their answer. The disciples cross the lake; in which direction? With or without their Master? They forget to take bread. When? On setting out or after arrival at the other side? ἐλθόντες εἰς τ. π., ver. 5, naturally suggests the latter, but, as Grotius remarks, the verb ἔρχεσθαι in the Gospels sometimes means ire not venire (vide, e.g., Lk. xv. 20). Suffice it to say that either in the boat or after arrival at the opposite side Jesus uttered a memorable word.—Ver. 6. ὁρᾶτε καὶ προσέχετε: an abrupt, urgent admonition to look out for, in order to take heed of, a phenomenon of very sinister import; in Scottish idiom "see and beware of". More impressive still in Mk.: ὁρᾶτε, βλέπετε, a duality giving emphasis to the command (ἀναδίπλωσις, ἐμφαίνουσα ἐπίτασιν τῆς παραγγελίας, Euthy.).—ζύμης: leaven, here conceived as an evil influence, working, however, after the same manneras the leaven in the parable (xiii. 33). It is a spirit, a zeitgeist, insinuating itself everywhere, and spreading more and more in society, which Jesus instinctively shrank from in horror, and from which He wished to guard His disciples.—τῶν φαρ. καὶ Σαδ.: one leaven, of two parties viewed as one, hence no article before Σαδ. Two leavens separately named in Mk., but even there juxtaposition in the warning implies affinity. The leaven of Pharisaism is made thoroughly known to us in the Gospels by detailed characterisation. Sadducaism very seldom appears on the stage, and few words of Jesus concerning it are recorded; yet enough to indicate its character as secular or "worldly". The two classes, antagonistic at many points of belief and practice, would be at one in dislike of single-hearted devotion to truth and righteousness, whether in the Baptist (iii. 7) or in Jesus. This common action in reference to either might not be a matter of arrangement, and each might come with its own characteristic mood: the Pharisee with bitter animosity, the Sadducee with good-natured scepticism and in quest of amusement, as when they propounded the riddle about the woman married to seven brothers. Both moods revealed utter lack of appreciation, no friendship to be looked for in either quarter, both to be dreaded.—Ver. 7. ἐν ἑαυτοῖς: either each man in his own ζοντο ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι ἄρτους οὐκ ἐλάβομεν." 8. Γνοὺς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[1] "Τί διαλογίζεσθε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ὀλιγόπιστοι ὅτι ἄρτους οὐκ ἐλάβετε[2]; 9. οὔπω νοεῖτε, οὐδὲ [e] μνημονεύετε τοὺς πέντε ἄρτους τῶν πεντακισχιλίων, καὶ πόσους κοφίνους ἐλάβετε; 10. οὐδὲ τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἄρτους τῶν τετρακισχιλίων, καὶ πόσας σπυρίδας[3] ἐλάβετε; 11. πῶς οὐ νοεῖτε, ὅτι οὐ περὶ ἄρτου[4] εἶπον ὑμῖν προσέχειν[5] ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ Σαδδουκαίων; 12. Τότε συνῆκαν, ὅτι οὐκ εἶπε προσέχειν ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τοῦ ἄρτου,[6] ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῆς διδαχῆς τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ Σαδδουκαίων.

e 1 Thess. ii. 9. 2 Tim. ii. 8. Rev. xviii. 5 (with accus.). Gal. ii. 10. Col. iv. 18. Heb. xi. 15; xiii. 7 (with gen.).

[1] ℵBDLΔΣ al. omit αυτοις.
[2] ℵBD have εχετε (W.H.).
[3] σφυριδας in BD.
[4] αρτων in ℵBCL.
[5] For προσεχειν ℵBCL have προσεχετε δε.
[6] των αρτων in BL.

mind (Weiss), or among themselves, apart from the Master (Meyer).—ὅτι may be recitative or = "because". He gives this warning because, etc.; sense the same. They take the Master to mean: don't buy bread from persons belonging to the obnoxious sects! or rather perhaps: don't take your directions as to the leaven to be used in baking from that quarter. Vide Lightfoot ad loc. Stupid mistake, yet pardonable when we remember the abruptness of the warning and the wide gulf between Master and disciples: He a prophet with prescient eye, seeing the forces of evil at work and what they were leading to; they very commonplace persons lacking insight and foresight. Note the solitariness of Christ.—Ver. 8. ὀλιγόπιστοι: always thinking about bread, bread instead of the kingdom and its fortunes, with which alone the Master was occupied.—Vv. 9, 10. And with so little excuse in view of quite recent experiences, of which the vivid details are given as if to heighten the reproach.—Ver. 11. προσέχετε, etc.: warning repeated without further explanation, as the meaning would now be self-evident.—Ver. 12. συνῆκαν, they now understood, at least to the extent of seeing that it was a question not of loaves but of something spiritual. One could wish that they had understood that from the first, and that they had asked their Master to explain more precisely the nature of the evil influences for their and our benefit. Thereby we might have had in a sentence a photograph of Sadducaism, e.g.—διδαχῆς, "doctrine"; that was in a general way the import of the ζύμη. But if Jesus had explained Himself He would have had more to say. The dogmas and opinions of the two parties in question were not the worst of them, but the spirit of their life: their dislike of real godliness.

Vv. 13-28. At Caesarea Philippi (Mk. viii. 27—ix. 1; Lk. ix. 18-27). The crossing of the lake (ver. 5) proved to be the prelude to a second long excursion northwards, similar to that mentioned in xv. 21; like it following close on an encounter with ill-affected persons, and originating in a kindred mood and motive. For those who regard the two feedings as duplicate accounts of the same event these two excursions are of course one. "The idea of two journeys on which Jesus oversteps the boundaries of Galilee is only the result of the assumption of a twofold feeding. The two journeys are, in truth, only parts of one great journey, on which Jesus, coming out of heathen territory, first touches again the soil of the holy land, in the neighbourhood of Caesarea Philippi." Weiss, Leben Jesu, ii. 256. Be this as it may, this visit to that region was an eventful one, marking a crisis or turning-point in the career of Jesus. We are at the beginning of the fifth act in the tragic drama: the shadow of the cross now falls across the path. Practically the ministry in Galilee is ended, and Jesus is here to collect His thoughts and to devote Himself to the disciplining of His disciples. Place and time invite to reflection and forecast, and afford leisure for a calm survey of the whole situation. Note that at this point Lk. again joins his fellow-evangelists in his narrative. We have missed him from xiv. 23 onwards (vide notes on Lk.).

Ver. 13. Ἐλθὼν: here again this verb

13. Ἐλθὼν δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὰ μέρη Καισαρείας τῆς Φιλίππου ἠρώτα τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, λέγων, "Τίνα με[1] λέγουσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι εἶναι, τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου;" 14. Οἱ δὲ εἶπον, "Οἱ μὲν Ἰωάννην τὸν Βαπτιστήν· ἄλλοι δὲ Ἠλίαν· ἕτεροι δὲ Ἱερεμίαν, ἢ ἕνα τῶν may mean not arriving at, but setting out for, or on the way: unterwegs, Schanz. So Grotius: cum proficisceretur, non cum venisset. Fritzsche dissents and renders: postquam venerat. Mk. has ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ to indicate where the conversation began. On the whole both expressions are elastic, and leave us free to locate the ensuing scene at any point on the road to Caesarea Philippi, say at the spot where the city and its surroundings came into view.—Καισαρείας τ. φ.: a notable city, romantically situated at the foot of the Lebanon range, near the main sources of the Jordan, in a limestone cave, in the province of Gaulonitis, ruled over by the Tetrarch Philip, enlarged and beautified by him with the Herodian passion for building, and furnished with a new name (Paneas before, changed into Caesarea of Philip to distinguish from Caesarea on the sea). "A place of exceedingly beautiful, picturesque surroundings, with which few spots in the holy land can be compared. What a rush of many waters; what a wealth and variety of vegetation!" Furrer, Wanderungen, 414. Vide also the description in Stanley's Sinai and Palestine, and in Professor G. A. Smith's Historical Geography of the Holy Land.—τίνα λέγουσιν, etc.: with this grand natural scene possibly or even probably (why else name it?) in view, Jesus asked His disciples a significant question meant to lead on to important disclosures. The question is variously reported by the synoptists, and it is not easy to decide between the forms. It would seem simpler and more natural to ask, "whom do, etc., that I am?" (με εἶναι, Mk. and Lk.). But, on the other hand, at a solemn moment Jesus might prefer to speak impersonally, and ask: "whom . . . that the Son of Man is?" (Mt.). That title, as hitherto employed by Him, would not prejudge the question. It had served rather to keep the question who He was, how His vocation was to be defined, in suspense till men had learned to attach new senses to old words. It is intrinsically unlikely that He would combine the two forms of the question, and ask: "whom, etc., that I, the Son of Man, am?" as in the T. R. That consideration does not settle what Mt. wrote, but it is satisfactory that the best MSS. leave out the με. The question shows that Jesus had been thinking of His past ministry and its results, and it may be taken for granted that He had formed His own estimate, and did not need to learn from the Twelve how He stood. He had come to the conclusion that He was practically without reliable following outside the disciple circle, and that conviction is the key to all that follows in this memorable scene. How the influential classes, the Pharisees, and the priests and political men = Sadducees, were affected was apparent. Nothing but hostility was to be looked for there. With the common people on the other hand He had to the last been popular. They liked His preaching, and they took eager advantage of His healing ministry. But had they got a definite faith about Him, as well as a kindly feeling towards Him; an idea well-rooted, likely to be lasting, epoch-making, the starting-point of a new religious movement? He did not believe they had, and He expected to have that impression confirmed by the answer of the Twelve, as indeed it was.

[1] ℵB and most versions omit με, which has probably come in from the parallels. The omission of με requires the , after εἶναι to be deleted.

Ver. 14. Reply of disciples: the general effect being: opinions of the people, favourable but crude, without religious definiteness and depth, with no promise of future outcome.—Ἰωάν., Ἠλίαν., Ἱερεμ. Historic characters, recent or more ancient, redivivi—that the utmost possible: unable to rise to the idea of a wholly new departure, or a greater than any character in past history; conservatism natural to the common mind. All three personages whose return might be expected; the Baptist to continue his work cut short by Herod, Elijah to prepare the way and day of the Lord (Mal. iv. 5), Jeremiah to bring back the ark, etc., which (2 Maccab. ii. 1-12) he had hid in a cave. Jeremiah is classed with the other well-known prophets (ἢ ἕνα τ. π.), and the supporters of that hypothesis are called ἕτεροι, as if to distinguish them not merely numeriπροφητῶν." 15. Λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ὑμεῖς δὲ τίνα με λέγετε εἶναι;" 16. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ Σίμων Πέτρος εἶπε, "Σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστός, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ [f] ζῶντος." 17. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Μακάριος εἶ, Σίμων Βὰρ Ἰωνᾶ, ὅτι [g] σὰρξ καὶ [g] αἷμα οὐκ [h] ἀπεκάλυψέ f Ch. xxvi. 63. Heb. iii. 12; ix. 14; x. 31 (an attribute of God).

g 1 Cor. xv. 50. Gal. i. 16. Eph. vi. 12. Heb. ii. 14 (the same phrase in all).
h Ch. xi. 25. Gal. i. 15.

[1] αποκριθεις δε in ℵBD, cursives.

cally (ἄλλοι) but generically: a lower type who did not connect Jesus with Messiah in any way, even as forerunner, but simply thought of Him as one in whom the old prophetic charism had been revived.

Vv. 15, 16. New question and answer.—Ver. 15. ὑμεῖς δὲ, and you? might have stood alone, perhaps did originally. Jesus invites the Twelve to give Him their own view. The first question was really only introductory to this. Jesus desires to make sure that He, otherwise without reliable following, has in His disciples at least the nucleus of a community with a definite religious conviction as to the meaning of His ministry and mission.—Ver. 16. Σίμων Πέτρος: now as always spokesman for the Twelve. There may be deeper natures among them (John?), but he is the most energetic and outspoken, though withal emotional rather than intellectual, strong, as passionate character is, rather than with the strength of thought, or of a will steadily controlled by a firm grasp of great principles: not a rock in the sense in which St. Paul was one.—σὺ εἶ . . . τοῦ ζῶντος: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," in Mk. simply "Thou art the Christ," in Lk. "the Christ of God". One's first thought is that Mk. gives the original form of the reply; and yet in view of Peter's vehement temperament one cannot be perfectly sure of that. The form in Mt. certainly answers best to the reply of Jesus, vide on ver. 17. In any case the emphasis lies on that which is common to the three reports: the affirmation of the Christhood of Jesus. That was what differentiated the disciples from the favourably disposed multitude. The latter said in effect: at most a forerunner of Messiah, probably not even that, only a prophet worthy to be named alongside of the well-known prophets of Israel. The Twelve through Peter said: not merely a prophet or a forerunner of the Messiah, but the Messiah Himself. The remainder of the reply in Mt., whether spoken by Peter, or added by the evangelist (to correspond, as it were, to Son of Man in ver. 13), is simply expansion or epexegesis. If spoken by Peter it serves to show that he spoke with emotion, and with a sense of the gravity of the declaration. The precise theological value of the added clause cannot be determined.

Vv. 17-19. Solemn address of Jesus to Peter, peculiar to Mt., and of doubtful authenticity in the view of many modern critics, including Wendt (Die Lehre Jesu, i., p. 181), either an addendum by the evangelist or introduced at a later date by a reviser. This question cannot be fully discussed here. It must suffice to say that psychological reasons are in favour of something of the kind having been said by Jesus. It was a great critical moment in His career, at which His spirit was doubtless in a state of high tension. The firm tone of conviction in Peter's reply would give Him a thrill of satisfaction demanding expression. One feels that there is a hiatus in the narratives of Mk. and Lk.: no comment on the part of Jesus, as if Peter had delivered himself of a mere trite commonplace. We may be sure the fact was not so. The terms in which Jesus speaks of Peter are characteristic—warm, generous, unstinted. The style is not that of an ecclesiastical editor laying the foundation for Church power, and prelatic pretensions, but of a noble-minded Master eulogising in impassioned terms a loyal disciple. Even the reference to the "Church" is not unseasonable. What more natural than that Jesus, conscious that His labours, outside the disciple circle, have been fruitless, so far as permanent result is concerned, should fix His hopes on that circle, and look on it as the nucleus of a new regenerate Israel, having for its raison d'être that it accepts Him as the Christ? And the name for the new Israel, ἐκκλησία, in His mouth is not an anachronism. It is an old familiar name for the congregation of Israel, found in Deut. (xviii. 26; xxiii. 2) and Psalms (xxii. 36), both books well known to i here and in xviii. 17 in Gospels.

j Lk. xxi. 36 (W.H.); xxiii. 23.
k Lk. xi. 52. Rev. i. 18; iii. 7; ix. 1; xx. 1.
l Ch. xviii. 18.

σοι, ἀλλ' ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ ἐν τοῖς [1] οὐρανοῖς. 18. Κἀγὼ δέ σοι λέγω, ὅτι σὺ εἶ Πέτρος, καὶ ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ πέτρᾳ οἰκοδομήσω μου τὴν [i] ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ πύλαι ᾅδου οὐ [j] κατισχύσουσιν αὐτῆς, 19. καὶ [2] δώσω σοὶ τὰς [k] κλεῖς [3] τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν· καὶ ὃ ἐὰν [4] [l] δήσῃς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἔσται δεδεμένον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· καὶ ὃ ἐὰν [5] [l] λύσῃς ἐπὶ

[1] B omits τοις, which W.H. bracket. [2] ℵBD omit και. (W.H.). [3] κλειδας in ℵBL (W.H.). [4] ο αν in BD. [5] ο αν in D.

Jesus.—Ver. 17. μακαρίος: weighty word chosen to express a rare and high condition, virtue, or experience ("hoc vocabulo non solum beata, sed etiam rara simul conditio significatur," Beng.). It implies satisfaction with the quality of Peter's faith. Jesus was not easily satisfied as to that. He wanted no man to call Him Christ under a misapprehension; hence the prohibition in ver. 20. He congratulated Peter not merely on believing Him to be the Messiah, but on having an essentially right conception of what the title meant.—Σ. βαριωνᾶ: full designation, name, and patronymic, suiting the emotional state of the speaker, and the solemn character of the utterance, echo of an Aramaic source, or of the Aramaic dialect used then, if not always, by Jesus.—σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα: synonym in current Jewish speech for "man". "Infinitâ frequentiâ hanc formulam loquendi adhibent Scriptores Judaici, eaque homines Deo opponunt." Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. Vide ver. 23. There is a tacit contrast between Peter's faith, and the opinions of the people just recited, as to source. Flesh and blood was the source of these opinions, and the fact is a clue to the meaning of the phrase. The contrast between the two sources of inspiration is not the very general abstract one between creaturely weakness and Divine power (Wendt, Die Begriffe Fleisch und Geist, p. 60). "Flesh and blood" covers all that can contribute to the formation of religious opinion of little intrinsic value—tradition, custom, fashion, education, authority, regard to outward appearance. Hilary, and after him Lutteroth, takes the reference to be to Christ's flesh and blood, and finds in the words the idea: if you had looked to my flesh you would have called me Christ, the Son of David, but higher guidance has taught you to call me Son of God.—ὁ πατήρ μου: this is to be taken not in a merely ontological sense, but, ethically, so as to account for the quality of Peter's faith. The true conception of Christhood was inseparable from the true conception of God. Jesus had been steadily working for the transformation of both ideas, and He counted on the two finding entrance into the mind together. No one could truly conceive the Christ who had not learned to think of God as the Father and as His Father. There were thus two revelations in one: of God as Father, and of Christ by the Father. Peter had become a Christian.

Ver. 18. κἀγὼ: emphatic, something very important about to be said to Peter and about him.—πέτρος, πέτρᾳ, a happy play of words. Both are appellatives to be translated "thou art a rock and on this rock," the two being represented by the same word in Aramaean (כֵּיפָא). Elsewhere in the Gospels Πέτρος is a proper name, and πέτρα only is used in the sense of rock (vii. 24). What follows is in form a promise to Peter as reward of his faith. It is as personal as the most zealous advocates of Papal supremacy could desire. Yet it is as remote as the poles from what they mean. It is a case of extremes meeting. Christ did not fight to death against one form of spiritual despotism to put another, if possible worse, in its room. Personal in form, the sense of this famous logion can be expressed in abstract terms without reference to Peter's personality. And that sense, if Christ really spoke the word, must be simple, elementary, suitable to the initial stage; withal religious and ethical rather than ecclesiastical. The more ecclesiastical we make it the more we play into the hands of those who maintain that the passage is an interpolation. I find in it three ideas: (1) The ἐκκλησία is to consist of men confessing Jesus to be the Christ. This is the import of ἐπὶ τ. τ. π. οἰκοδομήσω μου τ. ἐκ. Peter, believing that truth, is the foundation, τῆς γῆς, ἔσται λελυμένον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς." 20. Τότε διεστείλατο[1] τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ[2] ἵνα μηδενὶ εἴπωσιν, ὅτι αὐτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς[3] ὁ Χριστός.

21. [m]Ἀπὸ τότε ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς[4] δεικνύειν τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν ἀπελθεῖν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα,[5] καὶ πολλὰ παθεῖν ἀπὸ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ ἀρχιερέων καὶ γραμματέων, καὶ ἀποκτανθῆναι, καὶ

m Ch. iv. 17; xxvi. 16. Lk. xvi. 16.

[1] επετιμησεν in BD. W.H. place it in text with διεστειλατο in margin. Mk. has επετιμησεν in the corresponding place.

[2] ℵBCD omit αυτου, which so often stands in T. R. where the best texts want it.

[3] ℵBLXΓΔ omit Ιησους.

[4] For ο Ιησους ℵB, Cop. have Ιησους Χριστος; D Ιησους without the art. Vide below.

[5] εις I. before απελθειν in ℵBD cursives.

and the building is to be of a piece with the foundation. Observe the emphatic position of μου. The ἐκκλησία is Christ's; confessing Him as Christ in Peter's sense and spirit = being Christian. (2) The new society is to be = the kingdom realised on earth. This is the import of ver. 19, clause 1. The keys are the symbol of this identity. They are the keys of the gate without, not of the doors within. Peter is the gate-keeper, not the οἰκονόμος with a bunch of keys that open all doors in his hands (against Weiss).—κλειδούχου ἔργον τὸ εἰσάγειν, Euthy. Observe it is not the keys of the church but of the kingdom. The meaning is: Peter-like faith in Jesus as the Christ admits into the Kingdom of Heaven. A society of men so believing = the kingdom realised. (3) In the new society the righteousness of the kingdom will find approximate embodiment. This is the import of ver. 19, second clause. Binding and loosing, in Rabbinical dialect, meant forbidding and permitting to be done. The judgment of the Rabbis was mostly wrong: the reverse of the righteousness of the kingdom. The judgment of the new society as to conduct would be in accordance with the truth of things, therefore valid in heaven. That is what Jesus meant to say. Note the perfect participles δεδεμένον, λελυμένον = shall be a thing bound or loosed once for all. The truth of all three statements is conditional on the Christ spirit continuing to rule in the new society. Only on that condition is the statement about the πύλαι ᾅδου, ver. 18, clause 2, valid. What precisely the verbal meaning of the statement is—whether that the gates of Hades shall not prevail in conflict against it, as ordinarily understood; or merely that the gates, etc., shall not be stronger than it, without thought of a conflict (Weiss), is of minor moment; the point is that it is not an absolute promise. The ἐκκλησία will be strong, enduring, only so long as the faith in the Father and in Christ the Son, and the spirit of the Father and the Son, reign in it. When the Christ spirit is weak the Church will be weak, and neither creeds nor governments, nor keys, nor ecclesiastical dignities will be of much help to her.

Ver. 20. διεστείλατο (T. R.), "charged" (A. V.) not necessarily with any special emphasis = graviter interdicere, but = monuit (Loesner and Fritzsche). Cf. Heb. xii. 20, where a stronger sense seems required. For ἐπετίμησε in BD here and in Mk. Euthy. gives κατησφαλίσατο = to make sure by injunction.—τοῖς μαθηταῖς: all the disciples are supposed to say amen to Peter's confession, thinking of God and of Jesus as he thought, though possibly not with equal emphasis of conviction.—ἵνα . . . ὁ Χριστός: no desire to multiply hastily recruits for the new community, supreme regard to quality. Jesus wanted no man to call Him Christ till he knew what he was saying: no hearsay or echoed confession of any value in His eyes.—αὐτός, the same concerning whom current opinions have just been reported (ver. 14). It was hardly necessary to take pains to prevent the faith in His Messiahship from spreading prematurely in a crude form. Few would call such an one as Jesus Christ, save by the Holy Ghost. The one temptation thereto lay in the generous beneficence of Jesus.

Vv. 21-28. Announcement of the n Mk. viii. 32. Cf. Acts xvii. 5; xviii. 26.

o Cf. Heb. viii. 12.
p Mk. viii. 33. Rom. viii. 5. Phil. ii. 5; iii. 19.

τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐγερθῆναι. 22. καὶ ⁿ προσλαβόμενος αὐτὸν ὁ Πέτρος ἤρξατο ἐπιτιμᾷν αὐτῷ λέγων,[1] "ᵒἽλεώς σοι, κύριε· οὐ μὴ ἔσται σοι τοῦτο." 23. Ὁ δὲ στραφεὶς εἶπε τῷ Πέτρῳ, "Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ, σκάνδαλόν μου εἶ[2]· ὅτι οὐ ᵖ φρονεῖς τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὰ

[1] For ηρ. επιτιμαν α. λεγων, which conforms to Mk., B has λεγει α. επιτιμων (W.H. marg.).

[2] ει εμου in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.).

Passion with relative conversation (Mk. viii. 31—ix. 1; Lk. ix. 22-27).—Ver. 21. ἀπὸ τότε ἤρξατο (vide iv. 17) marks pointedly a new departure in the form of explicit intimation of an approaching final and fatal crisis. Time suitable. Disciples could now bear it, it could not be much longer delayed. Jesus could now face the crisis with composure, having been satisfied by Peter's confession that His labour was not going to be in vain. He then began to show, etc., for this was only the first of several communications of the same kind.—Χριστὸς after Ἰησοῦς in ℵB is an intrinsically probable reading, as suiting the solemnity of the occasion and greatly enhancing the impressiveness of the announcement. Jesus, the Christ, to be crucified! But one would have expected the article before Χρ.—πολλὰ παθεῖν, the general fact.—ἀπὸ . . . γραμματέων, the three constituent parts of the Sanhedrim—elders, priests, scribes.—ἀποκτανθῆναι: one hard special fact, be killed.—ἐγερθῆναι: this added to make the other fact not altogether intolerable.

Ver. 22. Peter here appears in a new character; a minute ago speaking under inspiration from heaven, now under inspiration from the opposite quarter.—ἤρξατο, began to chide or admonish. He did not get far. As soon as his meaning became apparent he encountered prompt, abrupt, peremptory contradiction.—Ἵλεώς σοι: Elsner renders sis bono placidoque animo, but most (Erasmus, Grotius, Kypke, Fritzsche, etc.) take it = absit! God avert it! Vehement utterance of a man confounded and horrified. Perfectly honest and in one sense thoroughly creditable, but suggesting the question: Did Peter after all call Jesus Christ in the true sense? The answer must be: Yes, ethically. He understood what kind of man was fit to be a Christ. But he did not yet understand what kind of treatment such a man might expect from the world. A noble, benignant, really righteous man Messiah must be, said Peter; but why a man of sorrow he had yet to learn.—οὐ μὴ ἔσται, future of perfect assurance: it will not, cannot be.—Ver. 23. ὕπαγε ὀ. μ. Σ.: tremendous crushing reply of the Master, showing how much He felt the temptation; calm on the surface, deep down in the soul a very real struggle. Some of the Fathers (Origen, Jerome) strive to soften the severity of the utterance by taking Satanas as an appellative = ἀντικείμενος, adversarius, contrarius, and pointing out that in the Temptation in the wilderness Jesus says to Satan simply ὕπαγε = depart, but to Peter ὕπ. ὀπίσω μου = take thy place behind me and be follower, not leader. But these refinements only weaken the effect of a word which shows that Jesus recognises here His old enemy in a new and even more dangerous form. For none are more formidable instruments of temptation than well-meaning friends, who care more for our comfort than for our character.—σκάνδαλον: not "offensive to me," but "a temptation to me to offend," to do wrong; a virtual apology for using the strong word Σατανᾶ.—οὐ φρονεῖς τὰ, etc., indicates the point of temptation = non stas a Dei partibus (Wolf), or φρονεῖν, etc. = studere rebus, etc. (Kypke), to be on God's side, or to study the Divine interest instead of the human. The important question is: What precisely are the two interests? They must be so conceived as not entirely to cancel the eulogium on Peter's faith, which was declared to be not of man but of God. Meyer's comment on τὰ τ. ἀ.—concerned about having for Messiah a mere earthly hero and prince (so Weiss also)—is too wide. We must restrict the phrase to the instinct of self-preservation = save your life at all hazards. From Christ's point of view that was the import of Peter's suggestion; preference of natural life to duty = God's interest. Peter himself did not see that these were the alternatives; he thought τῶν ἀνθρώπων." 24. Τότε ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Εἴ τις θέλει ὀπίσω μου ἐλθεῖν, [q] ἀπαρνησάσθω ἑαυτόν, καὶ ἀράτω τὸν [r] σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀκολουθείτω μοι. 25. ὃς γὰρ ἂν[1] θέλῃ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ σῶσαι, ἀπολέσει αὐτήν· ὃς δ' ἂν [s] ἀπολέσῃ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ, εὑρήσει αὐτήν· 26. τί γὰρ ὠφελεῖται[2] ἄνθρωπος, ἐὰν τὸν [t] κόσμον [t] ὅλον κερδήσῃ, τὴν δὲ ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ [u] ζημιωθῇ; ἢ τί δώσει ἄνθρωπος ἀντάλλαγμα τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ; 27. μέλλει γὰρ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἔρχεσθαι ἐν τῇ δόξῃ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀγγέλων αὐτοῦ· καὶ τότε ἀποδώσει ἑκάστῳ κατὰ τὴν [v] πρᾶξιν αὐτοῦ. 28. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, εἰσί τινες τῶν ὧδε ἑστηκότων,[3] οἵτινες οὐ μὴ [w] γεύσωνται θανάτου, ἕως ἂν ἴδωσι τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου [x] ἐρχόμενον ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ αὐτοῦ."

q Mk. viii. 34. Ch. xxvi. 34 (of Peter's denial).
r Ch. x. 38. Mk. viii. 34 (x. 21, T.R.). Lk. ix. 23; xiv. 27.
s Ch. x. 39. Mk. viii. 35. Lk. xvii. 33.
t Ch. xxvi. 13. Rom. i. 8.
u Mk. viii. 36. Lk. ix. 25 (ἑαυτόν).
v Lk. xxiii. 51. Acts xix. 18. Rom. viii. 13.
w John viii. 52. Heb. ii. 9.
x Lk. xxiii. 42.

[1] εαν in ℵBC. [2] ωφεληθησεται in ℵBL cursives. [3] εστωτων in ℵBCDLΣ.

the two opposite interests compatible, and both attainable.

Vv. 24-28. General instruction on the subject of the two interests.—Ver. 24. εἶπε τοῖς μαθ.: in calm, self-collected, didactic tone Jesus proceeds to give the disciples, in a body, a lesson arising out of the situation.—εἴ τις θέλει: wishes, no compulsion; οὐ βιάζομαι, Chrys., who remarks on the wisdom of Jesus in leaving every man free, and trusting to the attraction of the life: αὐτὴ τοῦ πράγματος ἡ φύσις ἱκανὴ ἐφελκύσασθαι.—ἀπαρνησάσθω ἑαυτὸν: here only, intimates that discipleship will call for self-denial, or self-subordination. Chrys. illustrates the meaning by considering what it is to deny another = not to assist him, bewail him or suffer on his account when he is in distress.—τὸν σταυρὸν looks like a trait introduced after Christ's passion. It need not be, however. Punishment by crucifixion was known to the Jews through the Romans, and it might be used by Jesus as the symbol of extreme torment and disgrace, even though He did not then know certainly that He Himself should meet death in that particular form. It became a common expression, but the phrase ἀράτω τ. σ. would sound harsh and startling when first used. Vide on Mt. x. 38.—Ver. 25. Vide x. 39. The Caesarea crisis was the most appropriate occasion for the first promulgation of this great ethical principle. It was Christ's first contribution towards unfolding the significance of His suffering, setting it forth as the result of a fidelity to righteousness incumbent on all.

Ver. 26. This and the following verses suggest aids to practice of the philosophy of dying to live. The statement in this verse is self-evident in the sphere of the lower life. It profits not to gain the whole world if you lose your life, for you cannot enjoy your possession; a life lost cannot be recovered at any price. Jesus wishes His disciples to understand that the same law obtains in the higher life: that the soul, the spiritual life, is incommensurable with any outward possession however great, and if forfeited the loss is irrevocable. This is one of the chief texts containing Christ's doctrine of the absolute worth of man as a moral subject. For the man who grasps it it is easy to be a hero and face any experience. To Jesus Christ it was a self-evident truth.—ζημιωθῇ, not suffer injury to, but forfeit. Grotius says that the verb in classics has only the dative after it = mulctare morte, but Kypke and Elsner cite instances from Herod., Dion., Hal., Themis., etc., of its use with accusative.—ἀντάλλαγμα: something given in exchange. Cf. 1 Kings xx. 2, Job xxviii. 15 (Sept.), a price to buy back the life lower or higher; both impossible.—Ver. 27. μέλλει points to something near and certain; note the emphatic position.—ἔρχεσθαι ἐν τ. δ., the counterpart experience to the passion; stated objectively in reference to the Son of Man, the passion spoken of in the second person (ver. 21). In Mk. both are objectively put; but the disciples understood the reference to be personal (Mk. viii. 32). This belongs to a third group of texts to be taken into account in an attempt a Mk. ix. 2. Lk. xxiv. 51 (T.R.). b Mk. ix. 2. Rom. xii. 2. 2 Cor. iii. 18.

XVII. 1. ΚΑΙ μεθ' ἡμέρας ἓξ παραλαμβάνει ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὸν Πέτρον καὶ Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, καὶ [a] ἀναφέρει αὐτοὺς εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν κατ' ἰδίαν. 2. καὶ [b] μετεμορφώθη ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἔλαμψε τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ ὡς ὁ ἥλιος, τὰ δὲ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ to fix the import of the title—those which refer to apocalyptic glory in terms drawn from Daniel vii. 13.—τότε ἀποδώσει: the Son of Man comes to make final awards. The reference to judgment comes in to brace up disciples to a heroic part. It is an aid to spirits not equal to this part in virtue of its intrinsic nobleness; yet not much of an aid to those to whom the heroic life is not in itself an attraction. The absolute worth of the true life is Christ's first and chief line of argument; this is merely subsidiary.—Ver. 28. A crux interpretum, supposed by some to refer to the Transfiguration (Hilary, Chrys., Euthy., Theophy., etc.); by others to the destruction of Jerusalem (Wetstein, etc.); by others again to the origins of the Church (Calvin, Grotius, etc.). The general meaning can be inferred with certainty from the purpose to furnish an additional incentive to fidelity. It is: Be of good courage, there will be ample compensation for trial soon; for some of you even before you die. This sense excludes the Transfiguration, which came too soon to be compensatory. The uncertainty comes in in connection with the form in which the general truth is stated. As to that, Christ's speech was controlled not merely by His own thoughts but by the hopes of the future entertained by His disciples. He had to promise the advent of the Son of Man in His Kingdom or of the Kingdom of God in power (Mk.) within a generation, whatever His own forecast as to the future might be. That might postulate a wider range of time than some of His words indicate, just as some of His utterances and His general spirit postulate a wide range in space for the Gospel (universalism) though He conceived of His own mission as limited to Israel. If the logion concerning the Church (ver. 18) be genuine, Jesus must have conceived a Christian era to be at least a possibility, for why trouble about founding a Church if the wind-up was to come in a few years? The words of Jesus about the future provide for two possible alternatives: for a near advent and for an indefinitely postponed advent. His promises naturally contemplate the former; much of His teaching about the kingdom easily fits into the latter.—γεύσωνται θ.: a Hebrew idiom, but not exclusively so. For examples of the figure of tasting applied to experiences, vide Elsner in Mk. For Rabbinical use, vide Schöttgen and Wetstein.—ἕως ἂν ἴδωσι, subjunctive after ἑ. ἂν as usual in classics and N. T. in a clause referring to a future contingency depending on a verb referring to future time.

CHAPTER XVII. THE TRANSFIGURATION; THE EPILEPTIC BOY; THE TEMPLE TRIBUTE. Three impressive tableaux connected by proximity in time, a common preternatural aspect, and deep moral pathos.

Vv. 1-13. The Transfiguration (Mk. ix. 2-13, Lk. ix. 28-36).—Ver. 1. μεθ' ἡμέρας ἕξ. This precise note of time looks like exact recollection of a strictly historical incident. Yet Holtzmann (H. C.) finds even in this a mythical element, based on Exodus xxiv. 16: the six days of Mt. and Mk. and the eight days of Lk., various expressions of the thought that between the confession of the one disciple and the experience of the three a sacred week intervened. Of these days we have no particulars, but on the principle that in preternatural experiences the subjective and the objective correspond, we may learn the psychological antecedents of the Transfiguration from the Transfiguration itself. The thoughts and talk of the company of Jesus were the prelude of the vision. A thing in itself intrinsically likely, for after such solemn communications as those at Caesarea Philippi it was not to be expected that matters would go on in the Jesus-circle as if nothing had happened. In those days Jesus sought to explain from the O.T. the δεῖ of xvi. 21, showing from Moses, Prophets, and Psalms (Lk. xxiv. 44) the large place occupied by suffering in the experience of the righteous. This would be quite as helpful to disciples summoned to bear the cross as any of the thoughts in xvi. 25-28.—Πέτ., Ἰάκ., Ἰωάν.: Jesus takes with Him the three disciples found most capable to understand and sympathise. So in Gethsemane. Such differences exist in all disciple-circles, and they cannot be ignored by the teacher.—ἀναφέρει, leadeth up; in this sense not usual; of sacrifice in Jas. ii. 21 and in ἐγένετο λευκὰ ὡς τὸ φῶς. 3. καὶ ἰδού, ὤφθησαν[1] αὐτοῖς Μωσῆς καὶ Ἠλίας, μετ' αὐτοῦ [c] συλλαλοῦντες.[2] 4. ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πέτρος εἶπε τῷ Ἰησοῦ, "Κύριε, [d] καλόν ἐστιν ἡμᾶς ὧδε εἶναι· εἰ θέλεις, ποιήσωμεν[3] ὧδε τρεῖς σκηνάς, σοὶ μίαν, καὶ Μωσῇ μίαν, καὶ μίαν Ἠλίᾳ." 5. Ἔτι αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, ἰδού, νεφέλη φωτεινὴ ἐπεσκίασεν αὐτούς· καὶ ἰδού, φωνὴ ἐκ τῆς νεφέλης, λέγουσα, "Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱός μου ὁ ἀγαπητός, ἐν ᾧ εὐδόκησα· αὐτοῦ ἀκούετε."[4] 6. Καὶ

c Acts xxv. 12 (μετά τινος). Mk. ix. 4. Lk. ix. 30; xxii. 4 (dat.). Lk. iv. 36 (πρὸς ἀλλήλους).
d Ch. xviii. 8 parall.; xxvi. 24. Rom. xiv. 21. 1 Cor. vii. 8; ix. 15.

[1] ωφθη ℵBD, which, the verb coming before the two nom., is legitimate. The T. R. is a grammatical correction of ancient revisers.

[2] ℵB place μετ' αυτου after συλλαλουντες.

[3] ποιησω in ℵBC. Vide below.

[4] ακουετε αυτου in ℵBD.

Heb. vii. 27, xiii. 15.—ὄρος ὑψηλὸν: Tabor the traditional mountain, a tradition originating in fourth century with Cyril of Jerusalem and Jerome. Recent opinion favours Hermon. All depends on whether the six days were spent near Caesarea Philippi or in continuous journeying. Six days would take them far. "The Mount of Transfiguration does not concern geography"—Holtz. (H. C.).—Ver. 2. μετεμορφώθη, transfiguratus est, Vulgate; became altered in appearance. Such transformation in exalted states of mind is predicated of others, e.g., of Iamblichus (Eunapius in I. Vitâ 22, cited by Elsner), and of Adam when naming the beasts (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V. T., p. 10).—ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῶν, so as to be visible to them, vide vi. 1. Luke's narrative seems to imply that the three disciples were asleep at the beginning of the scene, but wakened up before its close.—καὶ ἔλαμψε . . . φῶς: these words describe the aspect of the transformed person; face sun-bright, raiment pure white.—Ver. 3. καὶ ἰδοὺ introduces a leading and remarkable feature in the scene: ὤφθη αὐτοῖς, there appeared to the three disciples, not necessarily an absolutely real, objective presence of Moses and Elias. All purposes would be served by an appearance in vision. Sufficient objectivity is guaranteed by the vision being enjoyed by all the three, which would have been improbable if purely subjective. Recognition of Moses and Elias was of course involved in the vision. For a realistic view of the occurrence the question arises, how was recognition possible? Euthy. Zig. says the disciples had read descriptions of famous men, including Moses and Elias, in old Hebrew books. Another suggestion is that Moses appeared with the law in his hand, and Elias in his fiery chariot.—συλλαλοῦντες μ. ἀ., conversing with Jesus, and, it goes without saying (Lk. does say it), on the theme uppermost in all minds, the main topic of recent conversations, the cross; the vision, in its dramatis personæ and their talk, reflecting the state of mind of the seers.—Ver. 4. ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Π. Peter to the front again, but not greatly to his credit.—καλόν ἐστιν, etc., either it is good for us to be here = the place is pleasant—so usually; or it is well that we are here—we the disciples to serve you and your visitants—Weiss and Holtzmann (H. C.). Pricaeus, in illustration of the former, cites Anacreon:

Παρὰ τὴν σκιὴν Βάθυλλε
Κάθισον· καλὸν τὸ δένδρον.
Τίς ἂν οὖν ὁρῶν παρέλθοι Καταγώγιον τοιοῦτον.

—Ode 22.

This sense—amaenus est, in quo commoremur, locus, Fritzsche—is certainly the more poetical, but not necessarily on that account the truer to the thought of the speaker, in view of the remark of Lk. omitted in Mt., that Peter did not know what he was saying.—ποιήσω, deliberative substantive with θέλεις preceding and without ἵνα; the singular—shall I make?—suits the forwardness of the man; it is his idea, and he will carry it out himself.—τρεῖς σκηνάς: material at hand, branches of trees, shrubs, etc. Why three? One better for persons in converse. The whole scheme a stupidity. Peter imagined that Moses and Elias had come to stay. Chrys. suggests that Peter here indirectly renews the policy of resistance to going up to Jerusalem (Hom. lvi.).

Vv. 5-8. νεφέλη φωτεινή, a luminous ἀκούσαντες οἱ μαθηταὶ ἔπεσον ἐπὶ πρόσωπον αὐτῶν, καὶ [f]ἐφοβήθησαν σφόδρα. 7. καὶ προσελθὼν[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἥψατο αὐτῶν, καὶ εἶπεν, "Ἐγέρθητε καὶ [g]μὴ φοβεῖσθε." 8. Ἐπάραντες δὲ τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτῶν, οὐδένα εἶδον, εἰ μὴ τὸν Ἰησοῦν μόνον.

9. Καὶ [h]καταβαινόντων αὐτῶν ἀπὸ[2] τοῦ ὄρους, ἐνετείλατο αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, λέγων, "Μηδενὶ εἴπητε τὸ [i]ὅραμα, ἕως οὗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῇ."[3] 10. Καὶ ἐπηρώτησαν αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ,[4] λέγοντες, "Τί οὖν οἱ γραμματεῖς λέγουσιν, ὅτι e Ch. xxvi. 39. Lk. v. 12; xvii. 16 (same const.).

f Ch. xxvii. 54.
g Ch. xxviii. 5, 10.
h Ch. viii. 1 (with ἀπὸ, more commonly with ἐκ, as here in W.H.). i here only in Gospels and in Acts (vii. 31, etc.).

[1] προσηλθεν ο Ι. και in ℵBD; αψαμενος αυτων ειπεν in ℵB.

[2] εκ in ℵBCD al.; απο in Σ.

[3] εγερθη in BD; αναστη in ℵC. W.H. place the former in the text and the latter in margin.

[4] αυτου in BCD but wanting in ALZ.

cloud, still a cloud capable of casting a shadow, though a faint one ("non admodum atram," Fritzsche). Some, thinking a shadow incompatible with the light, render ἐπεσκίασεν tegebat, circumdabat. Loesner cites passages from Philo in support of this meaning.—αὐτούς. Whom? the disciples? Jesus, Moses, and Elias? all the six? or the two celestial visitants alone? All these views have been held. The second the more probable, but impossible to be certain.—καὶ ἰδού, again introducing a main feature: first the visitants, now the voice from heaven. Relation of the ear to the voice the same as that of the eye to the visitants.—οὗτος: the voice spoken this time about Jesus; at the baptism to Him (Mk. i. 11), meant for the ear of the three disciples. The voice to be taken in connection with the announcement of the coming passion. Jesus God's well-beloved as self-sacrificing.—ἀκούετε αὐτοῦ: to be taken in the same connection = hear Him when He speaks to you of the cross. Hunc audite, nempe solum, plena fide, perfectissimo obsequio, universi apostoli et pastores praesertim, Elsner.—Ver. 6. καὶ ἀκούσαντες, etc.: divine voices terrify poor mortals, especially when they echo and reinforce deep moving thoughts within.—Ver. 7. ἁψάμενος . . . εἶπεν: a touch and a word, human and kindly, from Jesus, restore strength and composure.—Ver. 8. And so ends the vision.—ἐπάραντες τ. ὀ., etc., raising their eyes they see no one but Jesus. Moses and Elias gone and Jesus in His familiar aspect; the dazzling brightness about face and garments vanished.

Vv. 9-13. Conversation while descending the hill.—Ver. 9. μηδενὶ εἴπητε: injunction of secrecy. The reason of the injunction lies in the nature of the experience. Visions are for those who are prepared for them. It boots not to relate them to those who are not fit to receive them. Even the three were only partially fit; witness their terror (ver. 6).—τὸ ὅραμα, the vision, justifying the view above given of the experience held, among others, by Elsner, Herder, Bleek and Weiss. Herder has some fine remarks on the analogy between the experiences of Jesus at His baptism and on the Mount, six days after the announcement at Caesarea Philippi, and those of other men at the time of moral decisions in youth and in the near presence of death (vide his Vom Erlöser der Menschen, §§ 18, 19).—ἕως οὗ, followed by subjunctive without ἄν; in this case (cf. xvi. 28) one of future contingency at a past time. The optative is used in classics (vide Burton, § 324). Not till the resurrection. It is not implied that Jesus was very desirous that they should then begin to speak, but only that they could then speak of the vision intelligently and intelligibly. Christ's tone seems to have been that of one making light of the recent experience (as in Lk. x. 20).—Ver. 10. τί οὖν, etc.: does the οὖν refer to the prohibition in ver. 9 (Meyer), or to the appearance of Moses and Elias, still in the minds of the three disciples, and the lateness of their coming (Euthy., Weiss), or to the shortness of their stay? (Grotius, Fritzsche, Olsh., Bleek, etc.). Difficult to decide, owing to fragmentariness of report; but it is Ἠλίαν δεῖ ἐλθεῖν πρῶτον;" 11. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[1] ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[2] "Ἠλίας μὲν ἔρχεται πρῶτον,[3] καὶ ʲ ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα· 12. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι Ἠλίας ἤδη ἦλθε, καὶ οὐκ ἐπέγνωσαν αὐτόν, ἀλλ' ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ ὅσα ἠθέλησαν· οὕτω καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου μέλλει πάσχειν ὑπ' αὐτῶν." 13. Τότε συνῆκαν οἱ μαθηταί, ὅτι περὶ Ἰωάννου τοῦ Βαπτιστοῦ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς.

j vide at Ch. xii. 13.

14. Καὶ ἐλθόντων αὐτῶν[4] πρὸς τὸν ὄχλον, προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ ἄνθρω-

[1] ℵBDLZ omit Ιησους. [2] BD omit αυτοις.

[3] ℵBD omit πρωτον, which probably has come in from ver. 10.

[4] ℵBZ sah. omit αυτων.

most natural to take οὖν in connection with preceding verse, only not as referring to the prohibition of speech pro tem., but to the apparent slighting tone in which Jesus spoke. If the recent occurrence is not of vital importance, why then do the scribes say so? To lay the emphasis (with Weiss) on πρῶτον, as if the disciples were surprised that Moses and Elias had not come sooner, before the Christ, is a mistake. The advent would appear to them soon enough to satisfy the requirements of the scribes—just at the right time, after they had recognised in Jesus the Christ = Thou art the Christ we know, and lo! Elias is here to prepare the way for Thy public recognition and actual entry into Messianic power and glory. The sudden disappearance of the celestials would tend to deepen the disappointment created by the Master's chilling tone, so that there is some ground for finding in οὖν a reference to that also.—Ver 11. ἔρχεται: present, as in ii. 4, praesens pro futuro, Raphel (Annotationes in S.S.), who cites instances of this enallage temporis from Xenophon. Wolf (Curae Phil.), referring to Raphel, prefers to find in the present here no note of time, but only of the order of coming as between Elias and Christ. It is a didactic, timeless present. So Weiss.—ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα. This word occurs in Sept., Mal. iv. 5, for which stands in Lk. i. 17: ἐπιστρέψαι; the reference is to restitution of right moral relations between fathers and children, etc. Raphel cites instances of similar use from Polyb. The function of Elias, as conceived by the scribes, was to lead Israel to the Great Repentance. Vide on this, Weber, Die Lehren des T., pp. 337-8.—Ver. 12. λέγω δὲ: Jesus finds the prophecy as to the advent of Elias fulfilled in John the Baptist, so still further reducing the significance of the late vision. The contrast between the mechanical literalism of the scribes and the free spiritual interpretation of Jesus comes out here. Our Lord expected no literal coming of Elijah, such as the Patristic interpreters (Hilary, Chrys., Theophy., Euthy., etc.) supposed Him to refer to in ver. 11. The Baptist was all the Elijah He looked for.—οὐκ ἐπέγνωσαν: they did not recognise him as Elijah, especially those who professionally taught that Elijah must come, the scribes.—ἀλλ' ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ, etc. Far from recognising in him Elijah, and complying with his summons to repentance, they murdered him in resentment of the earnestness of his efforts towards a moral ἀποκατάστασις (Herod, as representing the Zeitgeist.).—ἐν αὐτῷ: literally, in him, not classical, but similar construction found in Gen. xl. 14, and elsewhere (Sept.).—οὕτως: Jesus reads His own fate in the Baptist's. How thoroughly He understood His time, and how free He was from illusions!—Ver. 13. τότε συνῆκαν: the parallel drawn let the three disciples see who the Elijah was alluded to by their Master. What a disenchantment: not the glorified visitant of the night vision, but the beheaded preacher of the wilderness, the true Elijah!

Vv. 14-21. The epileptic boy (Mk. ix. 14-29; Lk. ix. 37-43).—Very brief report compared with Mk.—Ver. 14. ἐλθόντων: the αὐτῶν of T. R. might easily be omitted as understood from the connection.—γονυπετῶν, literally, to fall upon the knees, in which sense it would naturally take the dative (T. R., αὐτῷ); here used actively with accusative = to beknee him (Schanz, Weiss).—Ver. 15. σεληνιάζεται, he is moonstruck; the symptoms as described are those of epilepsy, which were supposed to become aggravated with the phases of πος [k] γονυπετῶν αὐτῷ,[1] καὶ λέγων, 15. "Κύριε, ἐλέησόν μου τὸν υἱόν, ὅτι σεληνιάζεται καὶ κακῶς πάσχει[2]· πολλάκις γὰρ πίπτει εἰς τὸ πῦρ, καὶ πολλάκις εἰς τὸ ὕδωρ. 16. καὶ προσήνεγκα αὐτὸν τοῖς μαθηταῖς σου, καὶ οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν αὐτὸν θεραπεῦσαι." 17. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, "Ὦ γενεὰ ἄπιστος καὶ [l] διεστραμμένη, ἕως πότε ἔσομαι μεθ' ὑμῶν[3]; ἕως πότε [m] ἀνέξομαι ὑμῶν; φέρετέ μοι αὐτὸν ὧδε." 18. Καὶ ἐπετίμησεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ τὸ δαιμόνιον, καὶ ἐθεραπεύθη ὁ παῖς ἀπὸ τῆς ὥρας ἐκείνης. 19. Τότε προσελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ τῷ Ἰησοῦ κατ' ἰδίαν εἶπον, "Διατί ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἠδυνήθημεν ἐκβαλεῖν αὐτό;" 20. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[4] εἶπεν[5] αὐτοῖς, "Διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν[6] ὑμῶν. ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω ὑμῖν, k with τινα here (W. H.) and in Mk. x. 17; with ἔμπροσθέν τινος, Ch. xxvii. 29.

l Phil. ii. 15. (Deut. xxxii. 5).
m Mk. ix. 19. Lk. ix. 41. 2 Cor. xi. 19. Eph. iv. 2. Col. iii. 13 (all with gen., accus. more common in classics).

[1] αυτον in nearly all uncials. αυτω is a "mechanical repetition" (Weiss) of the previous αυτω.

[2] εχει in ℵBLZ; as the more usual word it is to be suspected. W.H. introduce it with hesitation.

[3] μεθ υμων εσομαι in ℵBCDZ.

[4] ℵBD omit Ιησους.

[5] ℵBD 33, etc., have λεγει.

[6] ολιγοπιστιαν in ℵB cursives, and adopted by most editors, though απιστιαν in CD and other uncials as involving a severer reflection has much to recommend it. The tendency would be to tone down.

the moon (cf. iv. 25).—κακῶς πάσχει (ἔχει W. H. text), good Greek. Raphel (Annot.) gives examples from Poly. = suffers badly.—Ver. 16. τοῖς μαθηταῖς: the nine left behind when Jesus and the three ascended the Mount. The fame of Jesus and His disciples as healers had reached the neighbourhood, wherever it was.—οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν: the case baffled the men of the Galilean mission.—Ver. 17. ὦ γενεὰ: exclamation of impatience and disappointment, as if of one weary in well-doing, or averse to such work just then. Who are referred to we can only conjecture, and the guesses are various. Probably more or less all present: parent, disciples, scribes (Mk. ix. 14). Jesus was far away in spirit from all, lonely, worn out, and longing for the end, as the question following (ἕως πότε, etc.) shows. It is the utterance of a fine-strung nature, weary of the dulness, stupidity, spiritual insusceptibility (ἄπιστος), not to speak of the moral perversity (διεστραμμένη) all around Him. But we must be careful not to read into it peevishness or ungraciousness. Jesus had not really grown tired of doing good, or lost patience with the bruised reed and smoking taper. The tone of His voice, gently reproachful, would show that. Perhaps the complaint was spoken in an undertone, just audible to those near, and then, aloud: φέρετέ μοι: bring him to me, said to the crowd generally, therefore plural.—Ver. 18. τὸ δαιμόνιον: the first intimation in the narrative that it is a case of possession, and a hint as to the genesis of the theory of possession. Epilepsy presents to the eye the aspect of the body being in the possession of a foreign will, and all diseases with which the notion of demoniacal possession was associated have this feature in common. "Judaeis usitatissimum erat morbos quosdam graviores, eos praesertim, quibus vel distortum est corpus vel mens turbata et agitata phrenesi, malis spiritibus attribuere." Lightfoot, Hor. Heb., ad loc. The αὐτῷ after ἐπετίμησεν naturally refers to the demon. This reference to an as yet unmentioned subject Weiss explains by the influence of Mk.

Ver. 19. κατ' ἰδίαν: the disciples have some private talk with the Master as to what has just happened.—διατί οὐκ ἠδυνήθημεν: the question implies that the experience was exceptional; in other words that on their Galilean mission, and, perhaps, at other times, they had possessed and exercised healing power.—Ver. 20. διὰ τὴν ὀλιγοπιστίαν, here only, and just on that account to be preferred to ἀπιστίαν (T. R.); a word coined to express the fact exactly: too little faith for the occasion (cf. xiv. 31).

ἐὰν ἔχητε πίστιν ὡς κόκκον σινάπεως, ἐρεῖτε τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ Μετάβηθι [n] ἐντεῦθεν [1] [o] ἐκεῖ, καὶ μεταβήσεται· καὶ οὐδὲν [p] ἀδυνατήσει ὑμῖν. 21. τοῦτο δὲ τὸ γένος οὐκ ἐκπορεύεται, εἰ μὴ ἐν προσευχῇ καὶ νηστείᾳ." [2]

22. ἈΝΑΣΤΡΕΦΟΜΕΝΩΝ [3] δὲ αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Μέλλει ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοσθαι εἰς χεῖρας ἀνθρώπων, 23. καὶ ἀποκτενοῦσιν αὐτόν, καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐγερθήσεται." [4] Καὶ ἐλυπήθησαν σφόδρα.

n ἔνθεν (W. H.) here and in Lk. xvi. 26 (vide critical note there).
o vide Ch. ii. 22 for similar use.
p Lk. i. 37 (Gen. xviii. 14).

[1] μεταβα in ℵB; ενθεν in ℵBD.

[2] This whole verse is wanting in ℵB 33, some Latin verss., Syrr. verss. (Cur. Hier. Sin.). CDLΔΣ and many other uncials have it. It is doubtless a gloss foisted into the text.

[3] ℵB 1 it. vg. have συστρεφομενων changed into the more easily understood αναστρ. (T. R.).

[4] B has αναστησεται (W.H. margin).

That was a part of the truth at least, and the part it became them to lay to heart.—ἀμὴν, introducing, as usual, a weighty saying.—ἐὰν ἔχητε, if ye have, a present general supposition.—κόκκον σινάπεως proverbial for a small quantity (xiii. 31), a minimum of faith. The purpose is to exalt the power of faith, not to insinuate that the disciples have not even the minimum. Schanz says they had no miracle faith ("fides miraculorum").—τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ, the Mount of Transfiguration visible and pointed to.—μετάβα (-βηθι T. R.), a poetical form of imperative like ἀνάβα in Rev. iv. 1. Vide Schmiedel's Winer, p. 115.—ἔνθεν ἐκεῖ for ἐντεῦθεν ἐκεῖσε.—μεταβήσεται: said, done. Jesus here in effect calls faith an "uprooter of mountains," a phrase current in the Jewish schools for a Rabbi distinguished by legal lore or personal excellence (Lightfoot, Hor. Heb., ad Mt. xxi. 21, Wünsche).—ἀδυνατήσει used in the third person singular only in N. T. with dative = to be impossible; a reminiscence of Mk. ix. 23 (Weiss).—Ver. 21. Vide on Mk. ix. 29.

Vv. 22-23. Second announcement of the Passion (Mk. ix. 30, 31; Lk. ix. 44, 45).—Ver. 22. συστρεφομένων α., while they were moving about a reunited band.—ἐν τ. Γ.: they had got back to Galilee when the second announcement was made. Mk. states that though returned to familiar scenes Jesus did not wish to be recognised, that He might carry on undisturbed the instruction of the Twelve.—μέλλει, etc.: the great engrossing subject of instruction was the doctrine of the cross.—παραδίδοσθαι: a new feature not in the first announcement. Grotius, in view of the words εἰς χεῖρας ἀνθρώπων, thinks the reference is to God the Father delivering up the Son. It is rather to recent revelations of disaffection within the disciple-circle. For if there were three disciples who showed some receptivity to the doctrine of the cross, there was one to whom it would be very unwelcome, and who doubtless had felt very uncomfortable since the Caesarea announcement.—παραδ. contains a covert allusion to the part He is to play.—Ver. 23. ἐλυπήθησαν σφόδρα, they were all greatly distressed; but no one this time ventured to remonstrate or even to ask a question (Mk. ix. 32). The prediction of resurrection seems to have counted for nothing.

Vv. 24-27. The temple tax.—In Mt. only, but unmistakably a genuine historic reminiscence in the main. Even Holtzmann (H. C.) regards it as history, only half developed into legend.—Ver. 24. εἰς Καπ.: home again after lengthened wandering with the satisfaction home gives even after the most exhilarating holiday excursions.—Ver. 24. προσῆλθον οἱ, etc.: home-coming often means return to care. Here are the receivers of custom, as soon as they hear of the arrival, demanding tribute. From the Mount of Transfiguration to money demands which one is too poor to meet, what a descent! The experience has been often repeated in the lives of saints, sons of God, men of genius.—τὰ δίδραχμα: a δίδραχμον was a coin equal to two Attic drachmae, and to the Jewish half shekel

q here only in N.T. Frequent in Sept. for שֶׁקֶל
r Rom. xiii. 6.
s Ch. xxii. 17. Mk. xii. 14.
t John x. 5. Acts vii. 6. Heb. xi. 9, 34.

24. Ἐλθόντων δὲ αὐτῶν εἰς Καπερναούμ, προσῆλθον οἱ τὰ [q] δίδραχμα λαμβάνοντες τῷ Πέτρῳ, καὶ εἶπον, "Ὁ διδάσκαλος ὑμῶν οὐ [r] τελεῖ τὰ[1] δίδραχμα;" 25. Λέγει, "Ναί." Καὶ ὅτε εἰσῆλθεν[2] εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, προέφθασεν αὐτὸν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, λέγων, "Τί σοι δοκεῖ, Σίμων; οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς ἀπὸ τίνων[3] λαμβάνουσι τέλη ἢ [s] κῆνσον; ἀπὸ τῶν υἱῶν αὐτῶν, ἢ ἀπὸ τῶν [t] ἀλλοτρίων;" 26. Λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Πέτρος,[4] "Ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων." Ἔφη αὐτῷ ὁ

[1] אD omit τα here (Tisch.); BCL retain it (W.H.).

[2] εισελθοντα in א (-τι D); ελθοντα in B. Tisch. adopts the former; W.H. the latter, with εισελθοντα in margin.

[3] B has τινος, which W.H. place in the margin.

[4] For λεγει . . . Π. אBCL have ειποντος δε (Tisch., W.H.). The T. R. is a grammatical correction. The adoption of ειποντος requires a comma before εφη instead of a full stop as in T. R.

= about fifteen pence; payable annually by every Jew above twenty as a tribute to the temple. It was a tribute of the post-exilic time based on Exodus xxx. 13-16. After the destruction of the Temple the tax continued to be paid to the Capitol (Joseph. Bel. I. vii. 6, 7). The time of collection was in the month Adar (March).—τῷ Π. Peter evidently the principal man of the Jesus-circle for outsiders as well as internally.—οὐ τελεῖ. The receivers are feeling their way. Respect for the Master (διδάσκαλος) makes them go to the disciples for information, and possibly the question was simply a roundabout hint that the tax was overdue.—Ver. 25. ναί: this prompt, confident answer may be either an inference from Christ's general bearing, as Peter understood it, or a statement of fact implying past payment.—ἐλθόντα ε. τ. ο. The meeting of the tax collectors with Peter had taken place outside; it had been noticed by Jesus, and the drift of the interview instinctively understood by Him.—προέφθασεν, anticipated him, here only in N. T. Peter meant to report, but Jesus spoke first, having something special to say, and a good reason for saying it. In other circumstances He would probably have taken no notice, but left Peter to manage the matter as he pleased. But the Master is aware of something that took place among His disciples on the way home, not yet mentioned by the evangelist but about to be (xviii. 1), and to be regarded as the key to the meaning of this incident. The story of what Jesus said to Peter about the temple dues is really the prelude to the discourse following on humility, and that discourse in turn reflects light on the prelude.—τί σοι δοκεῖ; phrase often found in Mt. (xviii. 12, xxi. 28, etc.) with lively colloquial effect: what think you?—τέλη ἢ κῆνσον, customs or tribute; the former taxes on wares, the latter a tax on persons = indirect and direct taxation. The question refers specially to the latter.—ἀλλοτρίων, foreigners, in reference not to the nation, but to the royal family, who have the privilege of exemption.—Ver. 26. ἄραγε on the force of this particle vide at vii. 20. The γε lends emphasis to the exemption of the υἱοί. It virtually replies to Peter's ναί = then you must admit, what your answer to the collectors seemed to deny, that the children are free. The reply is a jeu d'esprit. Christ's purpose is not seriously to argue for exemption, but to prepare the way for a moral lesson.

Ver. 27. ἵνα μὴ σκανδαλ., that we may not create misunderstanding as to our attitude by asking exemption or refusing to pay. Nösgen, with a singular lack of exegetical insight, thinks the scandal dreaded is an appearance of disagreement between Master and disciple! It is rather creating the impression that Jesus and His followers despise the temple, and disallow its claims. And the aim of Jesus was to fix Peter's attention on the fact that He was anxious to avoid giving offence thereby, and in that view abstained from insisting on personal claims. Over against the spirit of ambition, which has begun to show itself among His disciples, He

Ἰησοῦς, "Ἄραγε ἐλεύθεροί εἰσιν οἱ υἱοί. 27. ἵνα δὲ μὴ σκανδαλίσωμεν[1] αὐτούς, πορευθεὶς εἰς τὴν[2] θάλασσαν, βάλε [u] ἄγκιστρον, καὶ τὸν ἀναβάντα πρῶτον ἰχθὺν ἆρον· καὶ ἀνοίξας τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ, εὑρήσεις [v] στατῆρα· ἐκεῖνον λαβὼν δὸς αὐτοῖς [w] ἀντὶ ἐμοῦ καὶ σοῦ."

u here only in N.T. v here only in N.T.
w Cf. ἀντὶ πολλῶν, Ch. xx. 28.

[1] σκανδαλιζωμεν in ℵLX, adopted by Tisch. and placed in marg. by W.H.

[2] Many uncials (ℵBLΔ al.) omit την.

sets His own spirit of self-effacement and desire as far as possible to live peaceably with all men, even with those with whom He has no religious affinity.—πορευθεὶς ἐ. θ. Generally the instruction given is: go and fish for the money needful to pay the tax.—ἄγκιστρον, a hook, not a net, because very little would suffice; one or two fish at most.—πρῶτον ἰχθὺν: the very first fish that comes up will be enough, for a reason given in the following clause.—ἀνοίξας . . . στατῆρα: the words point to something marvellous, a fish with a stater, the sum wanted, in its mouth. Paulus sought to eliminate the marvellous by rendering εὑρήσεις not "find" but "obtain," i.e., by sale. Beyschlag (Das Leben Jesu, p. 304) suggests that the use of an ambiguous word created the impression that Jesus directed Peter to catch a fish with a coin in its mouth. Ewald (Geschichte Christus, p. 467) thinks Jesus spoke very much as reported, but from the fact that it is not stated that a fish with a coin in its mouth was actually found, he infers that the words were not meant seriously as a practical direction, but were a spirited proverbial utterance, based on rare examples of money found in fishes. Weiss is of opinion that a simple direction to go and fish for the means of payment was in the course of oral tradition changed into a form of language implying a miraculous element. This view assumes that the report in Mt. was derived from oral tradition (vide Weiss, Das Leben Jesu, ii. 47, and my Miraculous Element in the Gospel, pp. 231-5). In any case the miracle, not being reported as having happened, cannot have been the important point for the evangelist. What he is chiefly concerned about is to report the behaviour of Jesus on the occasion, and the words He spoke revealing its motive.—ἀντὶ ἐμοῦ καὶ σοῦ: various questions occur to one here. Did the collectors expect Jesus only to pay (for Himself and His whole company), or did their question mean, does He also, even He, pay? And why pay only for Peter along with Himself? Were all the disciples not liable: Andrew, James and John there, in Capernaum, not less than Peter? Was the tax strictly collected, or for lack of power to enforce it had it become practically a voluntary contribution, paid by many, neglected by not a few? In that case it would be a surprise to many that Jesus, while so uncompromising on other matters, was so accommodating in regard to money questions. He would not conform to custom in fasting, Sabbath keeping, washing, etc., but He would pay the temple tax, though refusal would have had no more serious result than slightly to increase already existing ill-will. This view sets the generosity and nobility of Christ's spirit in a clearer light.

CHAPTER XVIII. MORAL TRAINING OF THE DISCIPLES. In this and the next two chapters the centre of interest is the spiritual condition of the Twelve, and the necessity thereby imposed on their Master to subject them to a stern moral discipline. The day of Caesarea had inaugurated a spiritual crisis in the disciple-circle, which searched them through and through, and revealed in them all in one form or another, and in a greater or less degree, moral weakness: disloyalty to the Master (xvii. 22), vain ambition, jealousy, party spirit. The disloyal disciple seems to have taken to heart more than the others the gloomy side of the Master's predictions, the announcement of the Passion; his more honest-hearted companions let their minds rest on the more pleasing side of the prophetic picture, the near approach of the kingdom in power and glory, so that while remaining true to the Master their hearts became fired with ambitious passions.

Vv. 1-14. Ambition rebuked (Mk. ix. 33-50; Lk. ix. 46-50, xv. 3-7, xvii. 1-4).—Ver. 1. ἐν ἐκ. τ. ὥρᾳ: in that hour; the expression connects what follows very closely with the tax incident, and shows that the two things were intimately associated in the mind of the evangelist.—

a Ch. xi. 11; xxiii. 11. Mk. ix. 34. Lk. ix. 46.
b John xii. 40 (επιστ. T.R.). Acts vii. 39.
c Ch. xxiii. 12. Lk. xiv. 11; xviii. 14.
d Ch. xxiv. 5 parall.

XVIII. 1. ʼΕΝ ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ προσῆλθον οἱ μαθηταὶ τῷ ʼΙησοῦ, λέγοντες, "Τίς ἄρα [a] μείζων ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν; 2. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος ὁ ʼΙησοῦς [1] παιδίον ἔστησεν αὐτὸ ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῶν, 3. καὶ εἶπεν, "ʼΑμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ [b] στραφῆτε καὶ γένησθε ὡς τὰ παιδία, οὐ μὴ εἰσέλθητε εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν. 4. ὅστις οὖν [c] ταπεινώσῃ [2] ἑαυτὸν ὡς τὸ παιδίον τοῦτο, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ μείζων ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν. 5. καὶ ὃς ἐὰν δέξηται παιδίον τοιοῦτον ἓν [3] [d] ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματί μου, ἐμὲ δέχεται· τίς ἄρα μείζων: who then is greater, etc.? The ἄρα may be taken as pointing back to the tax incident as suggesting the question, but not to it alone, rather to it as the last of a series of circumstances tending to force the question to the front: address to Peter at Caesarea Philippi; three disciples selected to be with the Master on the Hill of Transfiguration. From Mk. we learn that they had been discussing it on the way home.—ἐν τ. βασ. τ. οὐ., in the Kingdom of Heaven; this is wanting in Mk., where the question is a purely personal one; who is the greater (among us, now, in your esteem)? In Mk. the question, though referring to the present, who is, etc., points to the future, and presents a more general aspect, but though it wears an abstract look it too is personal in reality = which of us now is the greater for you, and shall therefore have the higher place in the kingdom when it comes? It is not necessary to conceive every one of the Twelve fancying it possible he might be the first man. The question for the majority may have been one as to the respective claims of the more prominent men, Peter, James, John, each of whom may have had his partisans in the little band.—Ver. 2. παιδίον: the task of Jesus is not merely to communicate instruction but to rebuke and exorcise an evil spirit, therefore He does not trust to words alone, but for the greater impressiveness uses a child who happens to be present as a vehicle of instruction. The legendary spirit which dearly loves certainty in detail identified the child with Ignatius, as if that would make the lesson any the more valuable!—Ver. 3. ἐὰν μὴ στραφῆτε: unless ye turn round so as to go in an opposite direction. "Conversion" needed and demanded, even in the case of these men who have left all to follow Jesus! How many who pass for converted, regenerate persons have need to be converted over again, more radically! Chrys. remarks: "We are not able to reach even the faults of the Twelve; we ask not who is the greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven, but who is the greater in the Kingdom of Earth: the richer the more powerful" (Hom. lviii.). The remark is not true to the spirit of Christ. In His eyes vanity and ambition in the sphere of religion were graver offences than the sins of the worldly. His tone at this time is markedly severe, as much so as when He denounced the vices of the Pharisees. It was indeed Pharisaism in the bud He had to deal with. Resch suggests that στραφῆτε here simply represents the idea of becoming again children, corresponding to the Hebrew idiom which uses שׁוּב = πάλιν (Aussercanonische Paralleltexte zu Mt. and Mk., p. 213).—ὡς τὰ παιδία, like the children, in unpretentiousness. A king's child has no more thought of greatness than a beggar's.—οὐ μὴ εἰσέλθητε, ye shall not enter the kingdom, not to speak of being great there. Just what He said to the Pharisees (vide on chap. v. 17-20).—Ver. 4. ταπεινώσει ἑαυτὸν: the most difficult thing in the world for saint as for sinner. Raphel (Annot. in S. S.) distinguishes three forms of self-humiliation: in mind (Phil. ii. 3), by words, and by acts, giving classical examples of the latter two. It is easy to humble oneself by self-disparaging words, or by symbolic acts, as when the Egyptian monks wore hoods, like children's caps (Elsner), but to be humble in spirit, and so child-like!—ὁ μείζων. The really humble man is as great in the moral world as he is rare.

[1] ℵBL al. omit ο Ι.

[2] ταπεινωσει in all uncials.

[3] εν before παιδιον in BDLZ; τοιουτο in ℵBLΔ for the more usual τοιουτον in T. R. (εν παιδιον τοιουτο in Tisch. and W.H.).

6. ὃς δ᾿ ἂν σκανδαλίσῃ ἕνα τῶν [e] μικρῶν τούτων τῶν πιστευόντων εἰς ἐμέ, [f] συμφέρει αὐτῷ, ἵνα κρεμασθῇ μύλος ὀνικὸς ἐπὶ[1] τὸν τράχηλον αὐτοῦ, καὶ [g] καταποντισθῇ ἐν τῷ [h] πελάγει τῆς θαλάσσης. 7. Οὐαὶ τῷ κόσμῳ ἀπὸ τῶν σκανδάλων· ἀνάγκη γάρ ἐστιν[2] ἐλθεῖν τὰ σκάνδαλα. πλὴν οὐαὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ,[3] δι᾿ οὗ τὸ σκάνδαλον e Cf. ἐλαχίστων in Ch. xxv. 40.

f Ch. v. 29, 30.
g here and in Ch. xiv. 30.
h here and Acts xxvii. 5. The phrase ἐν τ. π. τ. θαλάσσης here only [1] For επι ℵBLZ have περι.

[2] Omitted in BL (W.H.); found in ℵD (Tisch.).

[3] εκεινω wanting in ℵDFLΣ; found in B but not adopted by W.H. It looks like an echo of xxvi. 24, yet it answers well to the solemn tone of our Lord's utterance on this occasion.

Vv. 5-7.—Ver. 5. δέξηται: the discourse passes at this point from being child-like to gracious treatment of a child and what it represents.—ἓν παιδίον τοιοῦτο: the real child present in the room passes into an ideal child, representing all that the spirit of ambition in its struggle for place and power is apt to trample under foot. So in effect the majority of commentators; a few, including Bengel, De Wette, Bleek, Weiss, hold that the reference is still to a real child. In favour of this view is Luke's version: "Whoso receiveth this child," etc. (ix. 48). But the clause ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματί μου raises the child into the ideal sphere. The reception required does not mean natural kindness to children (though that also Christ valued), but esteeming them as fellow-disciples in spite of their insignificance. A child may be such a disciple, but it may also represent such disciples, and it is its representative function that is to be emphasised.—Ver. 6. σκανδαλίσῃ: the opposite of receiving; treating harshly and contemptuously, so as to tempt to unbelief and apostasy. The pride and selfish ambition of those who pass for eminent Christians make many infidels. —ἕνα τ. μ. τ.: one of the large class of little ones; not merely child believers surely, but all of whom a child is the emblem, as regards social or ecclesiastical importance. Those who are caused to stumble are always little ones: "majores enim scandala non recipiunt," Jerome. One of them: "frequens unius in hoc capite mentio," Bengel. This is the one text in which Jesus speaks of Himself as the object of faith (vide The Kingdom of God, p. 263).—συμφέρει . . . ἵνα: vide on v. 29. Fritzsche finds here an instance of attraction similar to that in x. 25, καὶ ὁ δοῦλος, ὡς ὁ κ. ἀ. Instead of saying συμφέρει α. κρεμασθῆναι . . . ἵνα καταποντισθῇ, the writer puts both verbs in the subjunctive after ἵνα.—μύλος ὀνικὸς. The Greeks called the upper millstone ὄνος the ass (ὁ ἀνώτερος λίθος, Hesychius), but they did not use the adjective ὀνικὸς. The meaning therefore is a millstone driven by an ass, i.e., a large one, as distinct from smaller sized ones driven by the hand, commonly used in Hebrew houses in ancient times. "Let such a large stone be hung about the neck of the offender to make sure that he sink to the bottom to rise no more"—such is the thought of Jesus; strong in conception and expression, revealing intense abhorrence.—ἐν τῷ πελάγει τ. θ.: in the deep part of the sea. So Kypke, who gives examples; another significantly strong phrase. Both these expressions have been toned down by Luke.—καταποντισθῇ: drowning was not a form of capital punishment in use among the Jews. The idea may have been suggested by the word denoting the offence, σκανδαλίσῃ. Bengel remarks: "apposita locutio in sermone de scandalo, nam ad lapidem offensio est" = "let the man who puts a stone in the path of a brother have a stone hung about his neck," etc. Lightfoot suggests as the place of drowning the Dead Sea, in whose waters nothing would sink without a weight attached to it, and in which to be drowned was a mark of execration.—Ver. 7. οὐαὶ τῷ κοσμῳ: woe to the world, an exclamation of pity at thought of the miseries that come upon mankind through ambitious passions. Some (Bleek, Weiss, etc.) take κόσμος in the sense of the ungodly world, as in later apostolic usage, and therefore as causing, not suffering from, the offences deplored. This interpretation is legitimate but not inevitable, and it seems better to take the word in the ἔρχεται. 8. Εἰ δὲ ἡ χείρ σου ἢ ὁ πούς σου σκανδαλίζει σε, ἔκκοψον αὐτὰ[1] καὶ βάλε ἀπὸ σοῦ· καλόν σοι ἐστὶν εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν ζωὴν χωλὸν ἢ κυλλόν,[2] ἢ δύο χεῖρας ἢ δύο πόδας ἔχοντα βληθῆναι εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ αἰώνιον. 9. καὶ εἰ ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου σκανδαλίζει σε, ἔξελε αὐτὸν καὶ βάλε ἀπὸ σοῦ· καλόν σοι ἐστὶ [i] μονόφθαλμον εἰς τὴν ζωὴν εἰσελθεῖν, ἢ δύο ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχοντα βληθῆναι εἰς τὴν γέενναν τοῦ πυρός. 10. Ὁρᾶτε μὴ καταφρονήσητε ἑνὸς τῶν μικρῶν τούτων· λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν, ὅτι οἱ ἄγγελοι αὐτῶν ἐν οὐρανοῖς [j] διὰ [j] παντὸς i here and in Mk. ix. 47.

j Mk. v. 5. Lk. xxiv. 53. Acts ii. 25. Rom. xi. 10 al.

[1] αυτον in ℵBDLΣ. αυτα a grammatical correction.

[2] κυλλον η χωλον in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.).

more general sense of humanity conceived of as grievously afflicted with "scandals" without reference to who is to blame. They are a great fact in the history of mankind, by whomsoever caused.—ἀπὸ τ. σ.: by reason of; points to the ultimate source of the misery.—τῶν σκανδάλων: the scandals; a general category, and a black one.—ἀνάγκη γάρ: they are inevitable; a fatality as well as a fact, on the wide scale of the world; they cannot be prevented, only deplored. No shallow optimism in Christ's view of life.—πλὴν: adversative here, setting the woe that overtakes the cause of offences, over against that of those who suffer from them. Weiss contends that it is not adversative here any more than in xi. 23, but simply conducts from the general culpability of the world to the guilt of every particular cause of scandal, even when he does not belong to the world.

Vv. 8, 9. These verses are one of Mt.'s dualities, being found with some variations in the Sermon on the Mount (chap. 29-30). Repetition perhaps due to use of two sources, but in sympathy with the connection of thought in both places. Since the offender is the greater loser in the end, it is worth his while to take precautions against being an offender.—Ver. 8. χείρ, πούς: mentioned together as instruments of violence.—καλόν . . . ἢ: the positive for the comparative, or ἢ used in sense of magis quam. Raphel and Kypke cite instances of this use from classics. It may be an imitation of Hebrew usage, in which the comparative is expressed by the positive, followed by the preposition min. "A rare classical usage tends to become frequent in Hellenistic Greek if it be found to correspond to a common Hebrew idiom" (Carr, in Camb. N. T.).—κυλλὸν: with reference to hand, mutilated; wanting one or both hands.—χωλόν: in a similar condition regarding the feet (cf. xi. 5; xv. 30).—Ver. 9. ὀφθαλμός, the eye, referred to as the means of expressing contempt; in chap. v. 29 as inciting to lust.—μονόφθαλμον, properly should mean having only one eye by nature, but here = wanting an eye, for which the more exact term is ἑτερόφθαλμος, vide Lobeck, Phryn., p. 136.

Vv. 10-14. Still the subject is the child as the ideal representative of the insignificant, apt to be despised by the ambitious. From this point onwards Mt. goes pretty much his own way, giving logia of Jesus in general sympathy with the preceding discourse, serving the purpose of moral discipline for disciples aspiring to places of distinction.—Ver. 10. ὁρᾶτε μὴ καταφ.: μὴ with the subj. in an object clause after a verb meaning to take heed; common N. T. usage; vide Matt. xxiv. 4; Acts xiii. 40, etc.—ἑνὸς, one, again.—λέγω γὰρ: something solemn to be said.—οἱ ἄγγελοι αὐτῶν, etc. In general abstract language, the truth Jesus solemnly declares is that God, His Father, takes a special interest in the little ones in all senses of the word. This truth is expressed in terms of the current Jewish belief in guardian angels. In the later books of O. T. (Daniel), there are guardian angels of nations; the extension of the privilege to individuals was a further development. Christ's words are not to be taken as a dogmatic endorsement of this post-exilian belief exemplified in the story of Tobit (chap. v.). The same remark applies to the passages in which the law is spoken of as given through angelic mediation (Acts vii. 53; Gal. iii. 19; Heb. ii. 2). The λέγω γὰρ does not mean "this belief is true," but "the idea it embodies, God's special care for k this phrase here only.

[k] βλέπουσι τὸ [k] πρόσωπον τοῦ πατρός μου τοῦ ἐν οὐρανοῖς.[1] 11. ἦλθε γὰρ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου σῶσαι τὸ ἀπολωλός.[2] 12. Τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ; ἐὰν γένηταί τινι ἀνθρώπῳ ἑκατὸν πρόβατα, καὶ πλανηθῇ ἓν ἐξ αὐτῶν· οὐχὶ ἀφεὶς[3] τὰ ἐννενηκονταεννέα, ἐπὶ τὰ ὄρη[4] πορευθεὶς ζητεῖ τὸ πλανώμενον; 13. καὶ ἐὰν [l] γένηται εὑρεῖν αὐτό, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι χαίρει ἐπ' αὐτῷ μᾶλλον, ἢ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐννενηκονταεννέα τοῖς μὴ πεπλανημένοις. 14. οὕτως οὐκ ἔστι θέλημα [m] ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν[5] τοῦ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, ἵνα ἀπόληται εἷς[6] τῶν μικρῶν τούτων. 15. Ἐὰν δὲ ἁμαρτήσῃ εἰς σὲ[7] ὁ ἀδελφός σου, ὕπαγε καὶ[8] [n] ἔλεγξον αὐτὸν μεταξὺ σοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ μόνου. ἐάν σου ἀκούσῃ, [o] ἐκέρδησας τὸν ἀδελφόν σου· 16. ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ἀκούσῃ, παράλαβε μετὰ σοῦ ἔτι ἕνα

l Acts xx. 16. Gal. vi. 14 (same const. with inf. as here, cf. in ver. 12).
m Ch. xi. 26. Lk. x. 21.
n Lk. iii. 19. 1 Tim. v. 20.
o 1 Cor. ix. 19-22. 1 Pet. iii. 1.

[1] B has εν τω ουρανω (W.H. margin, bracketed).

[2] Ver. 11 is wanting in ℵBL, 1, 13, 33, Egyptian verss., Syrr. Jerus. Sin., Orig., etc.; doubtless imported from Lk. xix. 10.

[3] αφησει in BL (Tisch., W.H.); D has αφιησιν. [4] και after ορη in BL.

[5] μου in B al. [6] εν in ℵBDL. εις is a grammatical correction.

[7] ℵB omit εις σε. [8] ℵBD omit και.

the little, is true". This is an important text for Christ's doctrine of the Fatherhood. It teaches that, contrary to the spirit of the world, which values only the great, the Father-God cares specially for that which is apt to be despised.—βλέπουσι τ. πρ. In Eastern courts it is the confidential servants who see the face of the king. The figure is not to be pressed to the extent of making God like an Eastern despot.—Ver. 11 an interpolation from Lk. xix. 10, q. v.

Vv. 12-14. Parable of straying sheep (Lk. xv. 4-7); may seem less appropriate here than in Lk., but has even here a good setting, amounting to a climax = God cares not only for the lowly and little but even for the low—the morally erring. In both places the parable teaches the precious characteristically Christian doctrine of the worth of the individual at the worst to God.—Ver. 12. τί ὑ. δοκεῖ as in xvii. 25.—ἐὰν γένηταί τ. ἀ. ἑ. πρόβατα: if a man happen to have as large a number, yet, etc.—καὶ π. ἓν: only one wanderer, out of so many.—πορευθεὶς ζητεῖ: does he not go and seek the one?—Ver. 13. καὶ . . . αὐτό: if it happen that he finds it. In Lk. he searches till he finds it. — ἀμὴν λέγω: specially solemn, with a view to the application to the moral sphere of what in the natural sphere is self-evident.—Ver. 14, application of the parable less emphatic than in Lk.—θέλημα, a will, for an object of will.—ἔμπροσθεν τ. π. μ.: before the face of = for, etc.

Vv. 15-17. How to deal with an erring brother.—The transition here is easy from warning against giving, to counsel how to receive, offences. The terms are changed: μίκρος becomes ἀδελφός, giving offence not suiting the idea of the former, and for σκανδαλίζειν we have the more general ἁμαρτάνειν.—Vv. 16 and 17 have something answering to them in Lk. xvii. 3, coming in there after the group of parables in chaps. xv. and xvi., in which that of the Shepherd has its place; whence Wendt recognises these verses as an authentic logion probably closely connected with the parable in the common source. Ver. 17 he regards as an addition by the evangelist or a later hand. Holtzmann (H. C.) regards the whole section (15-17) as a piece of Church order in the form of a logion of the Lord.

Ver. 15. ἁμαρτήσῃ: apart from the doubtful εἰς σὲ following, the reference appears to be to private personal offences, not to sin against the Christian name, which every brother in the community has a right to challenge, especially those closely connected with the offender. Yet perhaps we ought not too rigidly to draw a line between the two in an ideal community of love.—μεταξὺ σ. κ. ἀ. μ.: the phrase implies that some one has the right and duty of taking the initiative. So far it is a personal affair to begin with. The simpler and more classical expression would be μόνος μόνον.—ἀκούσῃ, hear, in the sense of ἢ δύο, ἵνα ἐπὶ στόματος δύο μαρτύρων ἢ τριῶν σταθῇ πᾶν ῥῆμα. 17. ἐὰν δὲ [p] παρακούσῃ αὐτῶν, εἰπὲ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ· ἐὰν δὲ καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας παρακούσῃ, ἔστω σοι ὥσπερ ὁ ἐθνικὸς καὶ ὁ τελώνης. 18. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅσα ἐὰν δήσητε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἔσται δεδεμένα ἐν τῷ [1] οὐρανῷ· καὶ ὅσα ἐὰν λύσητε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἔσται λελυμένα ἐν τῷ [1] οὐρανῷ. 19. πάλιν [2] λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἐὰν δύο ὑμῶν [q] συμφωνήσωσιν [3] ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς περὶ παντὸς πράγματος οὗ ἐὰν αἰτήσωνται, p here only (Esther iii. 3, 8).

q Ch. xx. 2, 13. Lk. v. 36. Acts v. 9; xv. 15.

[1] B omits τῳ first time and ℵB second time.

[2] B and many other uncials add αμην after παλιν (W.H. in brackets).

[3] συμφωνησουσιν in ℵBDLΔ (Tisch.).

submitting to admonition.—ἐκέρδησας: gained as a friend, as a fellow-member of the Kingdom of God, or as a man = saved him from moral ruin? All three alternatives find support. Is it necessary or possible to decide peremptorily between them?—Ver. 16. ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ἀ. After a first failure try again, with added influence.—παράλαβε . . . ἵνα ἢ δύο. This bears a juridical aspect (Schanz), but it does not really pass out of the moral sphere: ethical influence alone contemplated; consensus in moral judgment carries weight with the conscience. —ἵνα ἐπὶ στόματος, etc.: reference to the legal provision in Deut. xix. 15 in a literary rather than in a legal spirit.—Ver. 17. ἐὰν δὲ π. ἀ. Try first a minimum of social pressure and publicity, and if that fail have recourse to the maximum. —εἰπὲ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ: speak to the "Church"—the brotherhood of believers in the Christ. This to be the widest limit for the ultimate sphere of moral influence, as ex hypothesi the judgment of this new community will count for more to its members than that of all the world beyond.—ἔστω σοι, etc.: this failing, the offender puts himself outside the society, and there is nothing for it but to treat him as a heathen or a publican; which does not mean with indifference or abhorrence, but carefully avoiding fellowship with him in sin, and seeking his good only as one without. There is no reference in this passage to ecclesiastical discipline and Church censures. The older interpreters, in a theologico-polemical interest, were very anxious to find in it support for their developed ideas on these topics. The chief interest of historic exegesis is to divest it of an ecclesiastical aspect as much as possible, for only so can it suit the initial period, and be with any probability regarded as an utterance of Jesus. As such it may be accepted, when interpreted, as above. If, as we have tried to show, it was natural for Jesus to speak of a new community of faith at Caesarea, it was equally natural that He should return upon the idea in the Capernaum lesson on humility and kindred virtues, and refer to it as an instrument for promoting right feeling and conduct among professed disciples.—Ver. 18. Renewed promise of power to bind and loose, this time not to Peter alone, as in xvi. 19, but to all the Twelve, not qua apostles, with ecclesiastical authority, but qua disciples, with the ethical power of morally disciplined men. The Twelve for the moment are for Jesus = the ecclesia: they were the nucleus of it. The binding and loosing generically = exercising judgment on conduct; here specifically = treating sin as pardonable or the reverse—a particular exercise of the function of judging.

Vv. 19, 20. Promise of the power and presence of God to encourage concord.—Ver. 19. πάλιν ἀμὴν: a second amen, introducing a new thought of parallel importance to the former, in ver. 18. —ἐὰν δύο: two; not the measure of Christ's expectation of agreement among His disciples, but of the moral power that lies in the sincere consent of even two minds. It outweighs the nominal agreement of thousands who have no real bond of union.—συμφωνήσωσιν: agree, about what? not necessarily only the matters referred to in previous context, but anything concerning the Kingdom of God.—περὶ παντὸς πράγματος: concerning every or any matter, offences committed by brethren included of course.—γενήσεται: it shall be; what absolute confidence in the laws of the moral world!—παρὰ τ. π. μ.: from my Father. The Father-God of Jesus is here defined as a lover of peace and γενήσεται αὐτοῖς παρὰ τοῦ πατρός μου τοῦ ἐν οὐρανοῖς. 20. οὗ γάρ εἰσι δύο ἢ τρεῖς συνηγμένοι [r] εἰς τὸ ἐμὸν ὄνομα, ἐκεῖ εἰμὶ ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῶν."[1]

21. Τότε προσελθὼν αὐτῷ ὁ Πέτρος εἶπε,[2] "Κύριε, [s] ποσάκις ἁμαρτήσει εἰς ἐμὲ ὁ ἀδελφός μου, καὶ ἀφήσω αὐτῷ; ἕως [t] ἑπτάκις;" 22. Λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Οὐ λέγω σοι ἕως ἑπτάκις, ἀλλ' ἕως r Ch. xxviii 19. Acts viii. 16; xix. 5. 1 Cor. i. 13 (all of baptism into —εἰς—a name).

s Ch. xxiii. 37. Lk. xiii. 34.
t Lk. xvii. 4.

[1] This verse in Codex Bezae runs "for there are not (ουκ εισιν γαρ), etc., with whom (παρ' οις) I am not in the midst of them". Syr. Sin. has a similar reading.

[2] αυτω after ειπε in BD (Tisch., W.H., bracketed). ℵ omits αυτω.

fraternal concord. In this verse we have a case of attraction, of the main subject into the conditional clause. Resolved the sentence would run: πᾶν πρᾶγμα, ὃ ἐὰν αἰτήσωσιν, ἐὰν συμφωνήσουσιν περὶ αὐτοῦ, γενήσεται αὐτοῖς.—Ver. 20. δύο ἢ τρεῖς. Jesus deals in small numbers, not from modesty in His anticipations, but because they suit the present condition, and in jealousy for the moral quality of the new society.—συνηγμένοι εἰς, etc., not gathered to confess or worship my name, but gathered as believers in me. It is a synonym for the new society. The ecclesia is a body of men gathered together by a common relation to the name of the Christ: a Christian synagogue as yet consisting of the Twelve, or as many of them as were really one in heart.—ἐκεῖ εἰμὶ ἐν, etc.: there am I, now, with as many of you, my disciples, as are one in faith and brotherly love; not with any more even of you: far away from the man of ambitious, not to say traitorous, mind. There am I in reference to the future. His presence axiomatically certain, therefore expressed as a present fact, even with reference to a future time—a promise natural from One looking forward to an early death. Similar in import to Mt. xxviii. 20. For similar sayings of the Rabbis concerning the presence of the Divine Majesty, or the Shechinah, among two or three sitting in judgment or studying the law, vide Lightfoot and Schöttgen.

Vv. 21, 22. Peter's question about forgiving.—The second of two interpellations in the course of Christ's discourse (vide Mk. ix. 38-41; Lk. ix. 49, 50). Such words touch sensitive consciences, and the interruptions would be welcomed by Jesus as proof that He had not spoken in vain.—Ver. 21. ποσάκις, etc.: the question naturally arose out of the directions for dealing with an offending brother, which could only be carried out by one of placable disposition. Their presupposition is that a fault confessed is to be forgiven. But how far is this to go? In Lk. xvii. 3 the case is put of seven offences in a day, each in turn repented of and confessed. Is there not reason for doubting the sincerity of repentance in such a case? Or is this not at least the extreme limit? Such is Peter's feeling.—ἁμαρτήσει, ἀφήσω: two futures instead of ποσ. ἁμαρτήσαντι ἀφήσω: Hebrew idiom instead of Greek.—ἕως ἑπτάκις: Peter meant to be generous, and he went considerably beyond the Rabbinical measure, which was three times (Amos i. 6): "quicunque remissionem petit a proximo, ne ultra quam ter petat," Schöttgen.—Ver. 22. οὐ: emphatic "no" to be connected with ἕως ἑπτάκις. Its force may be brought out by translating: no, I tell you, not till, etc.—ἀλλὰ ἕ. ἑ. ἑ.: Christ's reply lifts the subject out of the legal sphere, where even Peter's suggestion left it (seven times and no more—a hard rule), into the evangelic, and means: times without number, infinite placability. This alone decides between the two renderings of ἑβδομηκοντάκις ἑπτά: seventy-seven times and seventy times seven, in favour of the latter as giving a number (490) practically equal to infinitude. Bengel leans to the former, taking the termination κις as covering the whole number seventy-seven, and referring to Gen. iv. 24 as the probable source of the expression. Similarly some of the Fathers (Orig., Aug.), De Wette and Meyer. The majority adopt the opposite view, among whom may be named Grotius and Fritzsche, who cite the Syriac version in support. On either view there is inexactness in the expression. Seventy times seven requires the termination κις at both words. Seventy-seven times requires the κις at u here only (Gen iv. 24).

[u] ἑβδομηκοντάκις ἑπτά. 23. Διὰ τοῦτο ὡμοιώθη ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ βασιλεῖ, ὃς ἠθέλησε [v] συνᾶραι λόγον μετὰ τῶν δούλων αὐτοῦ. 24. ἀρξαμένου δὲ αὐτοῦ συναίρειν, προσηνέχθη[1] αὐτῷ εἷς[2] ὀφειλέτης μυρίων [w] ταλάντων. 25. μὴ ἔχοντος δὲ αὐτοῦ ἀποδοῦναι, ἐκέλευσεν αὐτὸν ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ[3] πραθῆναι, καὶ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ[4] καὶ τὰ τέκνα, καὶ πάντα ὅσα εἶχε[5] καὶ ἀποδοθῆναι. 26. πεσὼν οὖν ὁ δοῦλος προσεκύνει αὐτῷ, λέγων, Κύριε,[6] [x] μακροθύμησον ἐπ' ἐμοί,[7] καὶ πάντα σοι[8] ἀποδώσω. 27. σπλαγχνισθεὶς δὲ

v here and in Ch. xxv. 19 (same const.).
w here and in Ch. xxv. 15.
x Lk. xviii. 7. 1 Cor. xiii. 4. James v. 7.

[1] προσηχθη in BD (W.H.); as in T. R., ℵLΔ al. (Tisch.).

[2] εις αυτω in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] ℵBDL omit αυτου.

[4] ℵB omit this αυτου also (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] B has εχει, which, just because of its singularity as a present among preterites, is to be preferred to ειχε, though found in most uncials.

[6] BD omit.

[7] DL have επ' εμε.

[8] σοι before αποδωσω in ℵBL.

the end of the second word rather than at end of first: either ἑπτὰ καὶ εβδο . . . κις, or εβδομ . . . τα ἑπτάκις.

Vv. 23-35. Parable of unmerciful servant.—Ver. 23. διὰ τοῦτο suggests that the aim of the parable is to justify the apparently unreasonable demand in ver. 22: unlimited forgiveness of injuries. After all, says Jesus, suppose ye comply with the demand, what do your remissions amount to compared to what has been remitted to you by God?—ἀνθρώπῳ βασιλεῖ: a man, a king; king an afterthought demanded by the nature of the case. Only a great monarch can have such debtors, and opportunity to forgive such debts.—συνᾶραι λογον (found again in xxv. 19), to hold a reckoning.—δούλων: all alike servants or slaves in relation to the king. So human distinctions are dwarfed into insignificance by the distance between all men and God.—Ver. 24. εἷς: one stood out above all the rest for the magnitude of his debt, who, therefore, becomes the subject of the story.—ὀφειλέτης μ. τ.: a debtor of, or to the extent of, a thousand talents—an immense sum, say millions sterling; payment hopeless; that the point; exact calculations idle or pedantic. It may seem to violate natural probability that time was allowed to incur such a debt, which speaks to malversation for years. But the indolence of an Eastern monarch must be taken into account, and the absence of system in the management of finance. As Koetsveld (De Gelijk., p. 286) remarks: "A regular control is not in the spirit of the Eastern. He trusts utterly when he does trust, and when he loses confidence it is for ever."—Ver. 25. πραθῆναι . . . ἔχει: the order is given that the debtor be sold, with all he had, including his wife and children; hard lines, but according to ancient law, in the view of which wife and children were simply property. Think of their fate in those barbarous times! But parables are not scrupulous on the score of morality.—καὶ ἀποδοθῆναι: the proceeds of sale to be applied in payment of the debt.—Ver. 26. μακροθύμησον: a Hellenistic word, sometimes used in the sense of deferring anger (Prov. xix. 11 (Sept.), the corresponding adjective in Ps. lxxxvi. 15; cf. 1 Cor. xiii. 4; 1 Thess. v. 14). That sense is suitable here, but the prominent idea is: give me time; wrath comes in at a later stage (ver. 34).—πάντα ἀποδώσω: easy to promise; his plea: better wait and get all than take hasty measures and get only a part.—Ver. 27. σπλαγχνισθεὶς: touched with pity, not unmixed perhaps with contempt, and associated possibly with rapid reflection as to the best course, the king decides on a magnanimous policy.—ἀπέλυσεν, τὸ δάνειον ἀφῆκεν: two benefits conferred; set free from imprisonment, debt absolutely cancelled, not merely time given for payment. A third benefit implied, continuance in office. The policy adopted in hope that it will ensure good behaviour in time to come (Ps. cxxx. 4); perfectly credible even in an Eastern monarch.

Vv. 28-34. The other side of the picture.—Ver. 28. ἕνα τ. συνδούλων α.: a fellow-slave though a humble one, which he should have remembered, but did not.

ὁ κύριος τοῦ δούλου ἐκείνου [1] ἀπέλυσεν αὐτόν, καὶ τὸ [y] δάνειον ἀφῆκεν αὐτῷ. 28. Ἐξελθὼν δὲ ὁ δοῦλος ἐκεῖνος [1] εὗρεν ἕνα τῶν συνδούλων αὐτοῦ, ὃς ὤφειλεν αὐτῷ ἑκατὸν δηνάρια, καὶ κρατήσας αὐτὸν [z] ἔπνιγε, λέγων, Ἀπόδος μοι [2] ὅ τι [3] ὀφείλεις. 29. πεσὼν οὖν ὁ σύνδουλος αὐτοῦ εἰς τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ [4] παρεκάλει αὐτόν, λέγων, Μακροθύμησον ἐπ' ἐμοί,[5] καὶ πάντα [6] ἀποδώσω σοι. 30. ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἤθελεν, ἀλλὰ ἀπελθὼν ἔβαλεν αὐτὸν εἰς φυλακήν, ἕως οὗ [7] ἀποδῷ τὸ ὀφειλόμενον. 31. ἰδόντες δὲ [8] οἱ σύνδουλοι αὐτοῦ τὰ γενόμενα ἐλυπήθησαν σφόδρα·

y here only (Deut. xv. 8; xxiv. 11).
z here and in Mk. v. 13 (of drowning).

[1] B omits εκεινου here (W.H. in brackets) and εκεινος in ver. 28.

[2] ℵBDL omit μοι.

[3] ℵBCD and other uncials have ει τι. ο τι (T. R.) only in minus., rejected by modern editors.

[4] εις τ. π. αυτου omitted in ℵBCDL and by modern editors.

[5] So in ℵB and many uncials. CDL have επ' εμε.

[6] παντα is feebly attested and unsuitable to the case.

[7] εως in ℵBCL. [8] ουν in ℵBD.

—ἑκατὸν δηνάρια: some fifty shillings; an utterly insignificant debt, which, coming out from the presence of a king, who had remitted so much to him, he should not even have remembered, far less been in the mood to exact.—κρατήσας α. ἔπνιγε: seizing, he choked, throttled him, after the brutal manner allowed by ancient custom, and even by Roman law. The act foretokens merciless treatment: no remission of debt to be looked for in this quarter.—ἀπόδος εἴ τι ὀφ. In the εἴ τι some ingenious commentators (Fritzsche, e.g.) have discovered Greek urbanity! ("Non sine urbanitate Graeci a conditionis vinculo aptarunt, quod a nulla conditione suspensum sit.") Weiss comes nearer the truth when he sees in it an expression of "merciless logic". He will have payment of whatever is due, were it only a penny.—Ver. 29. μακροθύμησον, etc.: the identical words he used himself just a few minutes ago, reminding him surely of his position as a pardoned debtor, and moving him to like conduct. —Ver. 30. οὐκ ἤθελεν: no pity awakened by the words which echoed his own petition. "He would not." Is such conduct credible? Two remarks may be made on this. In parabolic narrations the improbable has sometimes to be resorted to to illustrate the unnatural behaviour of men in the spiritual sphere, e.g., in the parable of the feast (Lk. xiv. 16-24) all refuse; how unlikely! But the action of the pardoned debtor is not so improbable as it seems. He acts on the instinct of a base nature, and also doubtless in accordance with long habits of harsh tyrannical behaviour towards men in his power. Every way a bad man: greedy, grasping in acquisition of wealth, prodigal in spending it, unscrupulous in using what is not his own. —Ver. 31. ἰδόντες οἱ σ. ἐλυπήθησαν: the other fellow-servants were greatly vexed or grieved. At what? the fate of the poor debtor? Why then not pay the debt? (Koetsveld). Not sympathy so much as annoyance at the unbecoming conduct of the merciless one who had obtained mercy was the feeling.—διεσάφησαν: reported the facts (narraverunt, Vulg.), and so threw light on the character of the man (cf. Mt. xiii. 36, W. and H.).—τῷ κ. ἑαυτῶν, to their own master, to whom therefore they might speak on a matter affecting his interest.—Ver. 32. δ. πονηρέ: the king could understand and overlook dishonesty in money matters, but not such inhumanity and villainy.—π. τ. ὀφειλὴν. ἐ.: huge, uncountable.—ἐπεὶ παρεκάλεσάς με, when you entreated me. In point of fact he had not, at least in words, asked remission but only time to pay. Ungenerous himself, he was incapable of conceiving, and therefore of appreciating such magnificent generosity.—Ver. 33. οὐκ ἔδει; was it not your duty? an appeal to the sense of decency and gratitude.—καὶ σὲ . . . ἠλέησα. There was condescension in putting the two cases together as parallel. Ten thousand acts of forgiveness such as the culprit was asked to καὶ ἐλθόντες διεσάφησαν τῷ κυρίῳ αὐτῶν[1] πάντα τὰ γενόμενα. 32. Τότε προσκαλεσάμενος αὐτὸν ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ λέγει αὐτῷ, Δοῦλε πονηρέ, πᾶσαν τὴν [a] ὀφειλὴν ἐκείνην ἀφῆκά σοι, ἐπεὶ παρεκάλεσάς με· 33. οὐκ ἔδει καὶ σὲ ἐλεῆσαι τὸν σύνδουλόν σου, ὡς καὶ ἐγώ σε ἠλέησα; 34. καὶ ὀργισθεὶς ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ παρέδωκεν αὐτὸν τοῖς [b] βασανισταῖς, ἕως οὗ ἀποδῷ πᾶν τὸ ὀφειλόμενον αὐτῷ.[2] 35. Οὕτω καὶ ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ ἐπουράνιος[3] ποιήσει ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ ἀφῆτε ἕκαστος τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τῶν καρδιῶν ὑμῶν τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν."[4] a Rom. xiii. 7. 1 Cor. vii. 3.

b here only.

[1] εαυτων in ℵBC. D has αυτων as in T. R. Vide below.

[2] αυτω omitted in BD (W.H.).

[3] ουρανιος in ℵBDL. επουρανιος is not found elsewhere in Mt.

[4] τα παρ. αυτων are wanting in ℵBDLΣ and most editors omit them.

perform would not have equalled in amount one act such as he had got the benefit of. The fact in the spiritual sphere corresponds to this.—Ver. 34. ὀργισθεὶς: roused to just and extreme anger.—βασανισταῖς: not merely to the gaolers, but to the tormentors, with instructions not merely to keep him safe in prison till the debt was paid, but still more to make the life of the wretch as miserable as possible, by place of imprisonment, position of body, diet, bed, etc., if not by instruments of pain. The word, chosen to suit the king's mood, represents a subjective feeling rather than an objective fact.

Ver. 35. Application. — οὕτως: so, mutatis mutandis, for feelings, motives, methods rise in the moral scale when we pass to the spiritual sphere. So in general, not in all details, on the same principle; merciless to the merciless.—ὁ πατήρ μ. ὁ οὐρ.: Jesus is not afraid to bring the Father in in such a connection. Rather He is here again defining the Father by discriminating use of the name, as One who above all things abhors mercilessness.—μου: Christ is in full sympathy with the Father in this.—ὑμῖν: to you, my own chosen disciples. —ἕκαστος: every man of you.—ἀπὸ τῶν καρδιῶν: from your hearts, no sham or lip pardon; real, unreserved, thorough-going, and in consequence again and again, times without number, because the heart inclines that way.

CHAPTER XIX. FAREWELL TO GALILEE. In Mt.'s narrative the journey of Jesus to the south, reported in ver. 1, marks the close of the Galilean ministry. Not so obviously so in Mk.'s (see notes there), though no hint is given of a return to Galilee. It is not perfectly clear whether the incidents reported are to be conceived as occurring at the southern end of the journey, or on the way within Galilee or without. The latter alternative is possible (vide Holtz., H. C., p. 214). The incidents bring under our notice a variety of interesting characters: Pharisees with captious questions, mothers with their children, a man in quest of the summum bonum, with words and acts of Jesus corresponding. But the disciplining of the Twelve still holds the central place of interest. Last chapter showed them at school in the house, this shows them at school on the way.

Vv. 1, 2. Introductory, cf. Mk. x. 1.—Ver. 1. καὶ ἐγένετο . . . λόγους τούτους: similar formulae after important groups of logia in xii. 28, xi. 1, xiii. 53.—μετῆρεν: also in xiii. 53, vide notes there; points to a change of scene worthy of note, as to Nazareth, which Jesus rarely visited, or to Judaea, as here. —ἀπὸ τ. Γαλιλαίας. The visit to Nazareth was a movement within Galilee. This is a journey out of it not necessarily final, but so thought of to all appearance by the evangelist.—εἰς τὰ ὅρια τ. Ἰ. π. τ. Ἰ.: indicates either the destination = to the coasts of Judaea beyond the Jordan; or the end and the way = to the Judaea territory by the way of Peraea, i.e., along the eastern shore of Jordan. It is not likely that the writer would describe Southern Peraea as a part of Judaea, therefore the second alternative is to be preferred. Mk.'s statement is that Jesus went to the coasts of Judaea and (καὶ, approved reading, instead of διὰ τοῦ in T. R.) beyond Jordan. Weiss thinks that Mt.'s version arose from misunderstanding of Mk. But his understanding may have been a

XIX. 1. ΚΑΙ ἐγένετο ὅτε ἐτέλεσεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοὺς λόγους τούτους, [a] μετῆρεν ἀπὸ τῆς Γαλιλαίας, καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὰ ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας [b] πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου. 2. καὶ ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ ὄχλοι πολλοί, καὶ ἐθεράπευσεν αὐτοὺς ἐκεῖ. 3. Καὶ προσῆλθον αὐτῷ οἱ[1] Φαρισαῖοι πειράζοντες αὐτόν, καὶ λέγοντες αὐτῷ,[2] "Εἰ ἔξεστιν ἀνθρώπῳ[3] ἀπολῦσαι τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν;" 4. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[4] "Οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε ὅτι ὁ ποιήσας[5] ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ ἐποίησεν αὐτούς, 5. καὶ εἶπεν, 'Ἕνεκεν τούτου [c] καταλείψει ἄνθρωπος τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὴν μητέρα· καὶ προσκολληθήσεται[6] τῇ γυναικὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔσονται οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα a Ch. xiii. 53.

b Ch. iv. 15.
c Mk. x. 7. Eph. v. 31, fr. Gen. ii. 24.

[1] οι omitted in BCLΔ al.
[2] αυτω omitted in ℵBCLΣ al. D has it.
[3] ℵBL omit ανθρωπω.
[4] ℵBDL omit αυτοις.
[5] κτισας in B, 1, 22, 33, 124, sah. cop. (W.H.).
[6] The simple κολληθησεται in BD al. (modern editors). The compound (T. R.) is from the Sept.

true one, for Mk.'s statement may mean that Peraea was the first reached station (Holtz., H. C.), implying a journey on the eastern side. The suggestion that the writer of the first Gospel lived on the eastern side, and means by πέραν the western side (Delitsch and others), has met with little favour.—Ver. 2. ἠκολούθησαν: the crowds follow as if there had been no interruption, in Mt.; in Mk., who knows of a time of hiding (ix. 30), they reassemble (x. 1).—ἐθεράπευσεν α. ἐκεῖ: a healing ministry commences in the south; in Mk. a teaching ministry (x. 1).

Vv. 3-9. The marriage question (Mk. x. 2-9).—Ver. 3. Φ. πειράζοντες: Pharisees again, tempting of course; could not ask a question at Jesus without sinister motives.—εἰ ἔξεστιν: direct question in indirect form, vide on xii. 10.—ἀπολῦσαι . . . κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν: the question is differently formulated in the two accounts, and the answer differently arranged. In Mk. the question is absolute = may a man put away his wife at all? in Mt. relative = may, etc. . . . for every reason? Under the latter form the question was an attempt to draw Jesus into an internal controversy of the Jewish schools as to the meaning of Deut. xxiv. 1, and put Him in the dilemma of either having to choose the unpopular side of the school of Shummai, who interpreted עֶרְוַת דָּבָר strictly, or exposing Himself to a charge of laxity by siding with the school of Hillel. It was a petty scheme, but characteristic. Whether the interrogants knew what Jesus had taught on the subject of marriage and divorce in the Sermon on the Mount is uncertain, but in any case all scribes and Pharisees knew by this time what to expect from Him. For κατὰ in the sense of propter, vide instances in Hermann's Viger, 632, and Kypke.—Ver. 4. οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε: the words quoted are to be found in Gen. i. 27, ii. 24.—ὁ κτίσας: the participle with article used substantively = the Creator.—ἀπ' ἀρχῆς goes along with what follows, Christ's purpose being to emphasise the primitive state of things. From the beginning God made man, male and female; suited to each other, needing each other.—ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ: "one male and one female, so that the one should have the one; for if He had wished that the male should dismiss one and marry another He would have made more females at the first," Euthy.—Ver. 5. καὶ εἶπεν: God said, though the words as they stand in Gen. may be a continuation of Adam's reflections, or a remark of the writer.—ἕνεκεν τούτου: connected in Gen. with the story of the woman made from the rib of the man, here with the origin of sex. The sex principle imperiously demands that all other relations and ties, however intimate and strong, shall yield to it. The cohesion this force creates is the greatest possible.—οἱ δύο: these words in the Sept. have nothing answering to them in the Hebrew, but they are true to the spirit of the original.—εἰς σάρκα μίαν: the reference is primarily to the physical μίαν;" 6. ὥστε οὐκέτι εἰσὶ δύο, ἀλλὰ σὰρξ μία· ὃ οὖν ὁ Θεὸς [d] συνέζευξεν, ἄνθρωπος μὴ χωριζέτω." 7. Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Τί οὖν Μωσῆς ἐνετείλατο δοῦναι βιβλίον ἀποστασίου, καὶ ἀπολῦσαι αὐτήν[1];" 8. Λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ὅτι Μωσῆς πρὸς τὴν [e] σκληροκαρδίαν ὑμῶν ἐπέτρεψεν ὑμῖν ἀπολῦσαι τὰς γυναῖκας ὑμῶν· ἀπ' ἀρχῆς δὲ οὐ γέγονεν οὕτω. 9. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι[2] ὃς ἂν ἀπολύσῃ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, εἰ [f] μὴ ἐπὶ πορνείᾳ,[3] καὶ γαμήσῃ ἄλλην, μοιχᾶται· καὶ ὁ ἀπολελυμένην γαμήσας μοιχᾶται."[4] 10. Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ,[5] "Εἰ οὕτως ἐστὶν ἡ αἰτία τοῦ ἀνθρώπου μετὰ τῆς γυναικός, οὐ [f] συμφέρει

d here and in Mk. x. 9.
e Mk. x. 5; xvi. 14. (Deut. x. 16. Sir. xvi. 10.)
f John xviii. 14 (accus. and inf.). 2 Cor. xii. 1 (inf. as here).

[1] ℵDLZ omit αυτην.
[2] BDZ old Lat. verss. omit οτι.
[3] μη for ει μη in most uncials. The explanatory ει (T. R.) is only in minus. BD have παρεκτος λογου πορνειας, followed by ποιει αυτην μοιχευθηναι in B.
[4] The clause και ο απολ. γαμησας μοιχαται is omitted in ℵDLΣ but found in BCΔZ. The true reading is doubtful and the passage has puzzled editors.
[5] ℵB omit αυτου, found in the greater number of uncials.

fleshly unity. But flesh in Hebrew thought represents the entire man, and the ideal unity of marriage covers the whole nature. It is a unity of soul as well as of body: of sympathy, interest, purpose.—Ver. 6. ὥστε with indicative, expressing actual result as Christ views the matter. They are no longer two, but one flesh, one spirit, one person.—ὃ οὖν: inference from God's will to man's duty. The creation of sex, and the high doctrine as to the cohesion it produces between man and woman, laid down in Gen., interdict separation. Let the Divine Syzygy be held sacred! How small the Pharisaic disputants must have felt in presence of such holy teaching, which soars above the partisan views of contemporary controversialists into the serene region of ideal, universal, eternal truth!

Vv. 7-9. τί οὖν, etc.: such doctrine could not be directly gainsaid, but a difficulty might be raised by an appeal to Moses and his enactment about a bill of divorce (Deut. xxiv. 1). The Pharisees seem to have regarded Moses as a patron of the practice of putting away, rather than as one bent on mitigating its evil results. Jesus corrects this false impression.—Ver. 8. πρὸς τ., with reference to.—σκληροκαρδίαν: a word found here and in several places in O. T. (Sept.), not in profane writers; points to a state of heart which cannot submit to the restraints of a high and holy law, literally uncircumcisedness of heart (Deut. x. 16; Jer. iv. 4).—ἐπέτρεψεν, permitted, not enjoined. Moses is respectfully spoken of as one who would gladly have welcomed a better state of things; no blame imputed except to the people who compelled or welcomed such imperfect legislation (ὑμῶν twice in ver. 8).—ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, etc.: the state of things which made the Mosaic rule necessary was a declension from the primitive ideal.—Ver. 9, vide notes on Mt. v. 31, 32.

Vv. 10-12. Subsequent conversation with the disciples.—Christ's doctrine on marriage not only separated Him toto cœlo from Pharisaic opinions of all shades, but was too high even for the Twelve. It was indeed far in advance of all previous or contemporary theory and practice in Israel. Probably no one before Him had found as much in what is said on the subject in Gen. It was a new reading of old texts by one who brought to them a new view of man's worth, and still more of woman's. The Jews had very low views of woman, and therefore of marriage. A wife was bought, regarded as property, used as a household drudge, and dismissed at pleasure—vide Benzinger, Heb. Arch., pp. 138-146.—Ver. 10. αἰτία: a vague word. We should say: if such be the state of matters as between husband and wife, and that is doubtless what is meant. So interpreted, αἰτία would = res, conditio. (So Grotius.) Fritzsche regards the phrase ἡ αἰτία τ. ἀ. μ. τ. γ. as in a negligent way expressing the idea: if the reason compelling a man to live with a wife be so stringent (no separation save for adultery). If we interpret αἰτία in the light of ver. 3 (κατὰ π. αἰτίαν) the word will mean cause of separation. The sense is the same, but γαμῆσαι." 11. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Οὐ πάντες [g] χωροῦσι τὸν λόγον τοῦτον,[1] ἀλλʼ οἷς δέδοται. 12. εἰσὶ γὰρ [h] εὐνοῦχοι, οἵτινες ἐκ κοιλίας μητρὸς ἐγεννήθησαν οὕτω· καί εἰσιν εὐνοῦχοι, οἵτινες εὐνουχίσθησαν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων· καί εἰσιν εὐνοῦχοι, οἵτινες εὐνούχισαν ἑαυτοὺς διὰ τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν. ὁ δυνάμενος χωρεῖν χωρείτω."

13. Τότε προσηνέχθη [2] αὐτῷ παιδία, ἵνα τὰς χεῖρας ἐπιθῇ αὐτοῖς, καὶ προσεύξηται· οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ ἐπετίμησαν αὐτοῖς· 14. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν,[3] "Ἄφετε τὰ παιδία, καὶ μὴ [i] κωλύετε αὐτὰ ἐλθεῖν

g 2 Cor. vii. 2 (ἡμᾶς).
h Acts viii. 27.
i Lk. xxiii. 2 Acts xvi. 6; xxiv. 23. Heb. vii. 23 (same const., acc. and inf.).

[1] B Orig. omit τουτον (W.H.).

[2] ℵBCDL and most other uncials have the pl. προσηνεχθησαν. The sing. (T. R. after late uncials) is a gram. cor. to correspond with neut. pl. nom. (παιδία).

[3] ℵCDL add αυτοις.

in any view the manner of expression is somewhat helpless, as was not unnatural in the circumstances. Euthy. gives both meanings = αἰτία συζυγίας and αἰτία διαζευγνύουσα, with a preference for the former.—ἀνθρώπου here = vir, maritus; instances of this use in Kypke, Palairet, etc.

Ver. 11. ὁ δὲ εἶπεν. Jesus catches up the remark of the disciples, and attaches to it a deeper sense than they thought of. Their idea was that marriage was not worth having if a man must put up with all the faults and caprices of a woman, without possibility of escape, except by gross misconduct. He thinks of the celibate state as in certain cases desirable or preferable, irrespective of the drawbacks of married life, and taking it even at the best.—τὸν λόγον thus will mean: what you have said, the suggestion that the unmarried condition is preferable.—χωροῦσι = capere, receive, intellectually and morally, for in such a case the two are inseparable. No man can understand as a matter of theory the preferableness of celibacy under certain circumstances, unless he be capable morally of appreciating the force of the circumstances.—ἀλλʼ οἷς δέδοται: this phrase points chiefly to the moral capacity. It is not a question of intelligence, nor of a merely natural power of continence, but of attaining to such a spiritual state that the reasons for remaining free from married ties shall prevail over all forces urging on to marriage. Jesus lifts the whole subject up out of the low region of mere personal taste, pleasure, or convenience, into the high region of the Kingdom of God and its claims.—Ver. 12 is an explanatory commentary on δέδοται.—εὐνοῦχος: keeper of the bedchamber in an Oriental harem (from εὐνή, bed, and ἔχω), a jealous office, which could be entrusted only to such as were incapable of abusing their trust; hence one who has been emasculated. Jesus distinguishes three sorts, two physical and one ethical: (1) those born with a defect (ἐγεννήθησαν οὕτως); (2) those made such by art (εὐνουχίσθησαν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων); (3) those who make themselves eunuchs (εὐνούχισαν ἑαυτοὺς).—διὰ τὴν β. τ. ὀ., for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake. This explains the motive and the nature of ethical eunuchism. Here, as in xv. 17, Jesus touches on a delicate subject to teach His disciples a very important lesson, viz., that the claims of the Kingdom of God are paramount; that when necessary even the powerful impulses leading to marriage must be resisted out of regard to them.—ὁ δυνάμενος χωρεῖν χωρείτω: by this final word Jesus recognises the severity of the demand as going beyond the capacity of all but a select number. We may take it also as an appeal to the spiritual intelligence of His followers = see that ye do not misconceive my meaning. Is not monasticism, based on vows of life-long celibacy, a vast baleful misconception, turning a military requirement to subordinate personal to imperial interests, as occasion demands, into an elaborate ascetic system?

Vv. 13-15. Children brought for a blessing (Mk. x. 13-16; Lk. xviii. 15-17).—Ver. 13. τότε: if the order of the narrative reflect the order of events, this invasion by the children was a happy coincidence after those words about the sacred and indissoluble tie of j for const. cf. 1 Cor. iii. 21; vi. 19.

k here and in ver. 29 and parall. Ch. xxv. 46. Lk. x. 25, for the summum bonum in Synop. Gospels.

πρός με[1]· ʲτῶν γὰρ τοιούτων ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν." 15. Καὶ ἐπιθεὶς αὐτοῖς τὰς χεῖρας,[2] ἐπορεύθη ἐκεῖθεν.

16. ΚΑΙ ἰδού, εἷς προσελθὼν εἶπεν αὐτῷ,[3] "Διδάσκαλε ἀγαθέ,[4] τί ἀγαθὸν ποιήσω, ἵνα ἔχω[5] ᵏζωὴν ᵏαἰώνιον;" 17. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτῷ,

[1] με in BCD; εμε in ℵLΔ.

[2] ℵBDLΔ place αυτοις after χειρας (Tisch., W.H.). [3] ℵB have αυτω ειπεν.

[4] ℵBDL Orig. Hil. omit αγαθε, which probably comes in from the parall., to which, indeed, Mt.'s version has been assimilated throughout (ver. 17) in T. R.

[5] σχω in BD Orig. (W. H.).

marriage and the duty of subordinating even it to the claims of the kingdom.—προσηνέχθησαν, passive, by whom brought not said, the point of the story being how Jesus treated the children.—ἵνα τ. χ. ἐπιθῇ, that He may lay His hands on them: the action being conceived of as present (Klotz ad Devar, p. 618).—καὶ προσεύξηται: the imposition of hands was a symbol of prayer and blessing, possibly in the minds of those who brought the children it was also a protection from evil spirits (Orig.).—ἐπετίμησαν αὐτοῖς: the αὐτοῖς ought in strict grammar to mean the children, but it doubtless refers to those who brought them. The action of the disciples was not necessarily mere officiousness. It may have been a Galilean incident, mothers in large numbers bringing their little ones to get a parting blessing from the good, wise man who is leaving their country, unceremoniously crowding around Him, affectionately mobbing Him in a way that seemed to call for interference. This act of the mothers of Galilee revealed how much they thought of Jesus.—Ver. 14. ἄφετε, μὴ κωλύετε: visits of the children never unseasonable; Jesus ever delighted to look on the living emblems of the true citizen of the Kingdom of God; pleased with them for what they were naturally, and for what they signified.—τοιούτων, of such, i.e., the child-like; repetition of an old lesson (xviii. 3).—Ver. 15. ἐπορεύθη ἐκεῖθεν; He departed thence, no indication whence or whither. The results of this meeting are conceivable. Christians may have come out of that company. Mothers would not forget Him who blessed their children on the way to His cross, or fail to speak of the event to them when they were older.

Vv. 16-22.—A man in quest of the "summum bonum" (Mk. x. 17-22; Lk. xviii. 18-23).—A phenomenon as welcome to Jesus as the visit of the mothers with their children: a man not belonging to the class of self-satisfied religionists of whom He had had ample experience; with moral ingenuousness, an open mind, and a good, honest heart; a malcontent probably with the teaching and practice of the Rabbis and scribes coming to the anti-Rabbinical Teacher in hope of hearing from Him something more satisfying. The main interest of the story for us lies in the revelation it makes of Christ's method of dealing with inquirers, and in the subsequent conversation with the disciples.

Ver. 16. ἰδού, lo! introduces a story worth telling.—εἷς: one, singled out from the crowd by his approach towards Jesus, and, as the narrative shows, by his spiritual state.—Διδάσκαλε: this reading, which omits the epithet ἀγαθέ, doubtless gives us the true text of Mt., but in all probability not the exact terms in which the man addressed Jesus. Such a man was likely to accost Jesus courteously as "good Master," as Mk. and Lk. both report. The omission of the epithet eliminates from the story the basis for a very important and characteristic element in Christ's dealing with this inquirer contained in the question: "Why callest thou me good?" which means not "the epithet is not applicable to me, but to God only," but "do not make ascriptions of goodness a matter of mere courtesy or politeness". The case is parallel to the unwillingness of Jesus to be called Christ indiscriminately. He wished no man to give Him any title of honour till he knew what he was doing. He wished this man in particular to think carefully on what is good, and who, all the more that there were competing types of goodness to choose from, that of the Pharisees, and that exhibited in His own teaching.—τί ἀγαθὸν ποιήσω: the ἀγαθὸν is omitted in the parallels,

"Τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; οὐδεὶς ἀγαθός, εἰ μὴ εἷς, ὁ Θεός.[1] εἰ δὲ θέλεις εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν ζωήν,[2] [l]τήρησον[3] τὰς ἐντολάς." 18. Λέγει αὐτῷ, "[m]Ποίας;" Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε, "Τό, οὐ φονεύσεις· οὐ μοιχεύσεις· οὐ κλέψεις· οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις· 19. τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου[4] καὶ τὴν μητέρα· καί, ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς σεαυτόν." 20. Λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ νεανίσκος, "Πάντα ταῦτα[5] ἐφυλαξά-l Ch. xxiii. 3; xxviii. 20 (in sense of observe).

m Ch. xxii. 36.

[1] For the clause τι με λεγεις . . . θεος in T. R., ℵBDL, many verss. (including Syr. Cur. and Sin.) Orig. read τι με ερωτας περι του αγαθου; εις εστιν ο αγαθος, which the R. V. and most modern editors adopt. Harmonistic assimilation is probably responsible for the T. R.

[2] ℵBCDL place εισελθειν after ζωην.

[3] τηρει in BD. [4] ℵBCD omit σου. [5] ταυτα παντα in BD.

but it is implied; of course it was something good that would have to be done in order to obtain eternal life. What good shall I do? Fritzsche takes this as not = quid boni faciam? but = quid, quod bonum sit, faciam? that is, not = what particular good action shall, etc., but = what in the name of good, etc. This is probably right. The man wants to know what the good really is . . . that by doing it he may attain eternal life. It was a natural question for a thoughtful man in those days when the teaching and practice of the religious guides made it the hardest thing possible to know what the good really was. It is a mistake to conceive of this man as asking what specially good thing he might do in the spirit of the type of Pharisee who was always asking, What is my duty and I will do it? (Schöttgen). Would Jesus have loved such a man, or would such a man have left His presence sorrowful?—ζωὴν αἰώνιον: an alternative name for the summum bonum in Christ's teaching, and also in current Jewish speech (Wünsche, Beiträge). The Kingdom of God is the more common in the Synoptics, the other in the fourth Gospel.—Ver. 17. τί με ἐρωτᾷς, etc.: it seems as if Jesus thought the question superfluous (so Weiss and Meyer), but this was only a teacher's way of leading on a pupil = "of course there is only one answer to that: God is the one good being, and His revealed will shows us the good He would have us do". A familiar old truth, yet new as Christ meant it. How opposed to current teaching we know from Mt. xv. 4-9.—εἰ δὲ θέλεις, etc., but, to answer your question directly, if, etc.—τήρει (ησον) τ. ἐν.: a vaguer direction then than it seems to us now. We now think only of the Ten Words. Then there were many commands of God besides these; and many more still of the scribes, hence most naturally the following question.—Ver. 18. ποίας; not = τίνας (Grotius), but what sort of commands: out of the multitude of commands divine and human, which do you mean? He had a shrewd guess doubtless, but wanted to be sure. Christ's reply follows in this and subsequent verse, quoting in direct form prefaced with τό the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and fifth commands of the Decalogue with that to love a neighbour as ourselves from Lev. xix. 18. This last Origen regarded as an interpolation, and Weiss thinks that the evangelist has introduced it from xxii. 39 as one that could not be left out. If it be omitted the list ends with the fifth, a significantly emphatic position, reminding us of Mt. xv. 4, and giving to the whole list an antithetic reference to the teaching of the scribes. In sending the inquirer to the second table of the Decalogue as the sum of duty, Jesus gave an instruction anything but commonplace, though it seem so to us. He was proclaiming the supremacy of the ethical, a most important second lesson for the inquirer, the first being the necessity of using moral epithets carefully and sincerely. From the answer given to this second lesson it will appear whereabouts the inquirer is, a point Jesus desired to ascertain.

Vv. 20-22. ὁ νεανίσκος, the youth; whence known? from a special tradition (Meyer); an inference from the expression ἐκ νεότητός μου in Mk. x. 20 (Weiss).—ἐφύλαξα (-άμην). Kypke and Elsner take pains to show that the use of this verb (and of τηρεῖν, ver. 17) in the sense of obeying commands is good Greek. More μην ἐκ νεότητός μου[1]· τί ἔτι ὑστερῶ;" 21. Ἔφη αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Εἰ θέλεις [n] τέλειος εἶναι, ὕπαγε, [o] πώλησόν σου τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, καὶ δὸς πτωχοῖς· καὶ ἕξεις θησαυρὸν ἐν οὐρανῷ[2]· καὶ [p] δεῦρο, ἀκολούθει μοι." 22. Ἀκούσας δὲ ὁ νεανίσκος τὸν λόγον,[3] ἀπῆλθε λυπούμενος· ἦν γὰρ ἔχων κτήματα[4] πολλά.

n vide Ch. v. 48.
o Ch. xiii. 44.
p Ch. iv. 19; xi. 28 (pl. form δεῦτε).

23. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι [q] δυσκόλως πλούσιος[5] εἰσελεύσεται εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν

q here and in parall.

[1] For εφυλαξαμην εκ νεοτητος μου (from the parall.) ℵBL have simply εφυλαξα.
[2] εν ουρανοις in BCD.
[3] τον λογον (as in T. R.) in CD; τον λογον τουτον in B (W.H. in brackets).
[4] B has χρηματα, which even W.H. have disregarded.
[5] πλουσιος δυσκολως in ℵBCDLZ.

important is it to note the declaration the verb contains: all these I have kept from youth. To be taken as a simple fact, not stated in a self-righteous spirit (Weiss-Meyer), rather sadly as by one conscious that he has not thereby reached the desired goal, real rest in the highest good found. The exemplary life plus the dissatisfaction meant much: that he was not a morally commonplace man, but one with affinities for the noble and the heroic. No wonder Jesus felt interested in him, "loved him" (Mk. x. 21), and tried to win him completely. It may be assumed that the man appreciated the supreme importance of the ethical, and was not in sympathy with the tendency of the scribes to subordinate the moral to the ritual, the commands of God to the traditions of the elders.—τί ἔτι ὑστερῶ: the question interesting first of all as revealing a felt want: a good symptom; next as betraying perplexity = I am on the right road, according to your teaching; why then do I not attain the rest of the true godly life? The question, not in Mk., is implied in the tone of the previous statement, whether uttered or not.—Ver. 21. εἰ θέλεις τέλειος εἶναι (on τέλειος vide v. 48): if you wish to reach your end, the true life and the rest it brings.—ὕπαγε, etc.: go, sell off, distribute to the poor, and then come, follow me—such is the advice Christ gives: His final lesson for this inquirer. It is a subjective counsel relative to the individual. Jesus sees he is well-to-do, and divines where the evil lies. It is doubtful if he cares passionately, supremely for the true life; doubtful if he be τέλειος in the sense of single-mindedness. It is not a question of one more thing to do, but of the state of the heart, which the suggestion to sell off will test. The invitation to become a disciple is seriously meant. Jesus, who repelled some offering themselves, thinks so well of this man as to desire him for a disciple. He makes the proposal hopefully. Why should so noble a man not be equal to the sacrifice? He makes it with the firm belief that in no other way can this man become happy. Noblesse oblige. The nobler the man the more imperative that the heroic element in him have full scope. A potential apostle, a possible Paul even, cannot be happy as a mere wealthy merchant or landowner. It is "a counsel of perfection," but not in the ascetic sense, as if poverty were the sure way to the higher Christian life; rather in the sense of the adage: of him to whom much is given shall much be required.—Ver. 22. ἀπῆλθεν: he would have to go away in any case, even if he meant to comply with the advice in order to carry it into effect. But he went away λυπούμενος, in genuine distress, because placed in a dilemma between parting with wealth and social position, and forfeiting the joy of discipleship under an admired Master. What was the final issue? Did "the thorns of avarice defile the rich soil of his soul" (Euthy.), and render him permanently unfruitful, or did he at last decide for the disciple life? At the worst see here the miscarriage of a really noble nature, and take care not to fall into the vulgar mistake of seeing in this man a Pharisee who came to tempt Jesus, and who in professing to have kept the commandments was simply a boastful liar. (So Jerome: "Non voto discentis sed tentantis interrogat . . . mentitur adolescens".)

Vv. 23-27. Conversation ensuing (Mk. x. 23-27; Lk. xviii. 24-27).—Ver. 23.

οὐρανῶν. 24. πάλιν δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν, εὐκοπώτερόν ἐστι [r] κάμηλον διὰ τρυπήματος[1] ῥαφίδος διελθεῖν,[2] ἢ πλούσιον εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰσελθεῖν." 25. Ἀκούσαντες δὲ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ[3] ἐξεπλήσσοντο σφόδρα, λέγοντες, "Τίς ἄρα δύναται σωθῆναι;" 26. Ἐμβλέψας δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "[s] Παρὰ ἀνθρώποις τοῦτο ἀδύνατόν ἐστι, [s] παρὰ δὲ Θεῷ πάντα δυνατά ἐστι."[4]

27. Τότε ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Πέτρος εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ἰδού, ἡμεῖς ἀφήκαμεν

[r] Ch. iii. 4; xxiii. 24.

[s] Rom. ii. 13 (Gen. xviii. 14).

[1] τρηματος in ℵB.

[2] The majority of uncials have εισελθειν (Tisch.), but BDX have διελθειν as in T. R. This reading requires εισελθειν in the next clause (so in BD).

[3] αυτου wanting in ℵBCDLZΔ.

[4] εστι is omitted in BCΔ al. Though found in parall. (Lk.), from which it has probably been imported, the sentence is more impressive without it.

ἀμὴν, introduces as usual a solemn utterance.—πλούσιος: the rich man is brought on the stage, not as an object of envy or admiration, which he is to the worldly-minded, but as an object of commiseration.—δυσκόλως εἰσελεύσεται, etc.: because with difficulty shall he enter the Kingdom of Heaven. This is stated as a matter of observation, not without sympathy, and not with any intention to pronounce dogmatically on the case of the inquirer who had just departed, as if he were an absolutely lost soul. His case suggested the topic of wealth as a hindrance in the divine life.—δυσκόλως: the adjective δύσκολος means difficult to please as to food (δυς, κόλον), hence morose; here used of things, occurs only in this saying in N. T.—Ver. 24. πάλιν δὲ λέγω: reiteration with greater emphasis. The strange language of Jesus here reveals a keen sense of disappointment at the loss of so promising a man to the ranks of discipleship. He sees so clearly what he might be, were it not for that miserable money.—εὐκοπώτερον, etc.: a comparison to express the idea of the impossible. The figure of a camel going through a needle-eye savours of Eastern exaggeration. It has been remarked that the variation in the parallel accounts in respect to the words for a needle and its eye shows that no corresponding proverb existed in the Greek tongue (Camb. G. T.). The figure is to be taken as it stands, and not to be "civilised" (vide H. C.) by taking κάμηλος (or κάμιλος, Suidas) = a cable, or the wicket of an Oriental house. It may be more legitimate to try to explain how so grotesque a figure could become current even in Palestine. Furrer suggests a camel driver leaning against his camel and trying to put a coarse thread through the eye of a needle with which he sews his sacks, and, failing, saying with comical exaggeration: I might put the camel through the eye easier than this thread (Tscht., für M. und R.).—τρήματος from τιτράω, to pierce.—ῥαφίδος, a word disapproved by Phryn., who gives βελόνη as the correct term. But vide Lobeck's note, p. 90. It is noticeable that Christ's tone is much more severe in reference to wealth than to wedlock. Eunuchism for the kingdom is optional; possession of wealth on the other hand seems to be viewed as all but incompatible with citizenship in the kingdom.

Ver. 25. ἐξεπλήσσοντο σφόδρα: the severity of the Master's doctrine on wealth as on divorce (ver. 10) was more than the disciples could bear. It took their breath away, so to speak.—τίς ἄρα, etc.: it seemed to them to raise the question as to the possibility of salvation generally. The question may represent the cumulative effect of the austere teaching of the Master since the day of Caesarea. The imperfect tense of ἐξεπλήσσοντο may point to a continuous mood, culminating at that moment.—Ver. 26. ἐμβλέψας denotes a look of observation and sympathy. Jesus sees that He has made too deep an impression, depressing in effect, and hastens to qualify what He had said: "with mild, meek eye soothing their scared mind, and relieving their distress" (Chrys., Hom. lxiii.).—παρὰ ἀνθρώποις, etc.: practically this reflection amounted to saying that the previous remark was to be taken cum grano, as referring to tendency rather than to fact. He did not mean that it was as impossible for a rich man to be saved as for a camel to pass through a πάντα, καὶ ἠκολουθήσαμέν σοι· τί ἄρα ἔσται ἡμῖν;" 28. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ὑμεῖς οἱ ἀκολουθήσαντές μοι, ἐν τῇ ᵗ παλιγγενεσίᾳ, ὅταν καθίσῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ θρόνου δόξης αὐτοῦ, καθίσεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς[1] ἐπὶ δώδεκα θρόνους, ᵘ κρίνοντες τὰς δώδεκα φυλὰς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ. 29. καὶ πᾶς ὅς[2] ἀφῆκεν οἰκίας, ἢ ἀδελφούς, ἢ ἀδελφάς, ἢ πατέρα, ἢ μητέρα, ἢ γυναῖκα,[3] ἢ τέκνα, ἢ ἀγρούς, ᵛ ἕνεκεν τοῦ ὀνόματός μου,[4] ἑκατονταπλασίονα[5] λήψεται. καὶ ζωὴν αἰώνιον κληρονομήσει. 30. πολλοὶ δὲ ἔσονται πρῶτοι ἔσχατοι, καὶ ἔσχατοι πρῶτοι.

t Titus iii. 5.
u Lk. xxii. 30. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3.
v Lk. xxi. 12.

[1] ℵDLZ have και αυτοι (Tisch.), και υμεις in BCX, which Weiss thinks a mechanical conformation to υμεις in first clause. W.H. retain υμεις, but in brackets.

[2] οστις in most uncials.

[3] BD omit η γυναικα—a most probable omission.

[4] του εμου ονοματος in ℵB.

[5] πολλαπλασιονα in BL.

needle-eye, but that the tendency of wealth was to act powerfully as an obstructive to the spiritual life.

Vv. 27-30. A reaction (Mk. x. 27-31; Lk. xviii. 28-30).—Ver. 28. εἶπεν δὲ Π.: from depression the disciples, represented by Peter, pass to self-complacent buoyancy—their natural mood.—ἰδοὺ points to a fact deserving special notice in view of the recent incident.—ἡμεῖς, we, have done what that man failed to do: left all and followed Thee.—τί ἄρα, etc.: a question not given in Mk. and Lk., but implied in Peter's remark and the tone in which it was uttered: what shall be to us by way of recompense? Surely we shall attain what seems so hard for some to reach.—Ver. 28. ἀμὴν: introducing a solemn statement.—ὑμεῖς οἱ ἀκ.: not a nominative absolute (Palairet, Observ.), but being far from the verb, ὑμεῖς is repeated (with καὶ) after καθίσεσθε.—ἐν τ. παλιγγενεσίᾳ to be connected with καθίσεσθε following. This is a new word in the Gospel vocabulary, and points to the general renewal —"re-genesis (nova erit genesis cui praeerit Adamus ii., Beng.)"—in the end of the days, which occupied a prominent place in Jewish apocalyptic hopes. The colouring in this verse is so strongly apocalyptic as to have suggested the hypothesis of interpolation (Weizsäcker), or of a Jewish Christian source (Hilgenfeld). It is not in the parallels, but something similar occurs in Lk. xxii. 30. Commentators translate this promise, so strongly Jewish in form, into Christian ideas, according to their taste, reading into it what was not there for the disciples when it was spoken.—Ver. 29. General promise for all faithful ones.—ἀδελφούς, etc.: detailed specification of the things renounced for Christ.—πολλαπλασίονα λήψεται: shall receive manifoldly the things renounced, i.e., in the final order of things, in the new-born world, as nothing is said to the contrary. Mk. and Lk. make the compensation present.—καὶ ζωὴν αἰώνιον: this higher boon, the summum bonum, over and above the compensation in kind. Here the latter comes first; in chap. vi. 33 the order is reversed.—Ver. 30. πολλοὶ δὲ ἔσονται, etc., but many first ones shall be last, and last ones first. Fritzsche reverses the meaning = many being last shall be first, so making it accord with xx. 16. The words are so arranged as to suggest taking πρῶτ. ἔσχ. and ἔσχ. πρῶτ. as composite ideas, and rendering: many shall be first-lasts, and last-firsts = there shall be many reversals of position both ways. This aphorism admits of many applications. There are not only many instances under the same category but many categories: e.g., first in this world, last in the Kingdom of God (e.g., the wealthy inquirer and the Twelve); first in time, last in power and fame (the Twelve and Paul); first in privilege, last in Christian faith (Jews and Gentiles); first in zeal and self-sacrifice, last in quality of service through vitiating influence of low motive (legal and evangelic piety). The aphorism is adapted to frequent use in various connections, and may have been uttered on different occasions by Jesus (cf. Lk. xiii. 30: Jew and Gentile), and the sphere of its application can only be determined by the context. Here it is the last of those above indicated, not the first, as Weiss holds; also Holtzmann (H. C.),

XX. 1. Ὁμοία γάρ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδεσπότῃ, ὅστις ἐξῆλθεν ἅμα πρωῒ μισθώσασθαι ἐργάτας εἰς τὸν ἀμπελῶνα αὐτοῦ. 2. συμφωνήσας δὲ μετὰ τῶν ἐργατῶν [a] ἐκ [a] δηναρίου τὴν ἡμέραν, ἀπέστειλεν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸν ἀμπελῶνα αὐτοῦ. 3. Καὶ ἐξελθὼν [b] περὶ τὴν[1] τρίτην ὥραν, εἶδεν ἄλλους ἑστῶτας ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ [c] ἀργούς· 4. κἀκείνοις[2] εἶπεν, Ὑπάγετε καὶ ὑμεῖς εἰς τὸν ἀμπελῶνα, καὶ ὃ ἐὰν ᾖ δίκαιον δώσω ὑμῖν. οἱ δὲ ἀπῆλθον. 5. Πάλιν[3] ἐξελθὼν περὶ ἕκτην καὶ ἐννάτην ὥραν ἐποίησεν ὡσαύτως. 6. Περὶ δὲ τὴν ἑνδεκάτην ὥραν[4] ἐξελθών, εὗρεν ἄλλους ἑστῶτας ἀργούς,[5] καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, Τί ὧδε ἑστήκατε [d] ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν ἀργοί;

a Cf. Ch. xxvii. 7. Lk. xvi. 9. Acts i. 18.
b Ch. xxvii. 46. Acts x. 9.
c Ch. xii. 36. 1 Tim. v. 13. Titus i. 12.
d Rom. viii. 36; x. 21.

[1] την (T. R.), found in Δ, is omitted in ℵBCD.
[2] So in CDLΣ; και εκεινοις in ℵB and many others.
[3] δε after παλιν in ℵCDL. BX omit δε (W.H. in brackets).
[4] ℵBDL omit ωραν (Tisch., W.H.). [5] ℵBDL omit αργους (Tisch., W.H.).

though admitting that there may be reference also to the self-complacent mood of Peter. The δὲ after πολλοὶ implies that this is the reference. It does not introduce a new subject, but a contrasted view of the same subject. The connection of thought is: self-sacrifice such as yours, Peter, has a great reward, but beware of self-complacency, which may so vitiate the quality of service as to make one first in sacrifice last in the esteem of God.

CHAPTER XX. PARABLE OF THE HOURS; TWO SONS OF ZEBEDEE; BLIND MAN AT JERICHO.

Vv. 1-16. Parable of the hours, peculiar to Mt., and, whatever its real connection as spoken by Jesus, to be interpreted in relation to its setting as here given, which is not impossible. The parable is brought in as illustrating the aphorism in xix. 30.—Ver. 1. ὁμοία γὰρ etc.: γὰρ points back to previous sentence about first-lasts and last-firsts. —ἀνθ. οἰκοδ.: vide xiii. 52.—ἅμα πρωῒ: at early dawn (similar use of ἅμα in classics), at the beginning of the day, which was reckoned from six to six.—μισθώσασθαι: hiring has a prominent place in this parable, at the first, third, sixth, ninth, eleventh hour. Why so many servants wanted that day? This feature obtains natural probability by conceiving that it is the season of grape-gathering, which must be done at the proper time and promptly; the more hands the better (Koetsveld, De Gelijk.).—Ver. 2. ἐκ δηναρίου: on the basis of a penny; the agreement sprang out of the offer, and acceptance, of a denarius as a day's wage (so Meyer, Weiss, etc.).—τὴν ἡμέραν = per diem, only a single day is contemplated in the parable.—Ver. 3. τρίτην ὥ.: the article τὴν before τρίτην in T. R., omitted in W. H., is not necessary before an ordinal.—ἑστῶτας ἐ. τ. ἀγ.: the market-place there as here, the place where masters and men met.—ἀργοὺς (α and ἔργον), not = idle in habit, but unemployed and looking for work.—Ver. 4. καὶ ὑμεῖς: he had got a fair number of workers in the morning, but he is pleased to have more for an urgent piece of work. The expression has reference to the Master's mood rather than to the men's knowledge of what had taken place at the first hour.—ὃ ἐὰν δίκαιον: no bargain this time, only a promise of fair equitable dealing, will be just at least, give in proportion to length of service; privately intends to do more, or at least is that way inclined.—Ver. 5. ἐποίησεν ὡσαύτως: repetition of the action at sixth and ninth hours; more men still on similar footing.—Ver. 6. περὶ δὲ τὴν ἑνδεκ.: the δὲ marks this final procedure as noteworthy. We begin to wonder at all this hiring, when we see it going on even at the last hour. Is the master a humorist hiring out of benevolence rather than from regard to the exigencies of the work? Some have thought so (Olshausen, Goebel, Koetsveld), and there seems good ground for the suggestion, though even this unusual procedure may be made to appear probable by conceiving the master as anxious to finish the work on hand that day, in which case even an hour's work from a sufficient number of willing hands

7. λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, Ὅτι οὐδεὶς ἡμᾶς ἐμισθώσατο. λέγει αὐτοῖς, Ὑπάγετε καὶ ὑμεῖς εἰς τὸν ἀμπελῶνα, καὶ ὃ ἐὰν ᾖ δίκαιον λήψεσθε.[1] 8. Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης λέγει ὁ κύριος τοῦ ἀμπελῶνος τῷ [e] ἐπιτρόπῳ αὐτοῦ, Κάλεσον τοὺς ἐργάτας, καὶ ἀπόδος αὐτοῖς[2] τὸν μισθόν, [f] ἀρξάμενος [f] ἀπὸ τῶν ἐσχάτων ἕως τῶν πρώτων. 9. καὶ ἐλθόντες[3] οἱ περὶ τὴν ἑνδεκάτην ὥραν ἔλαβον [g] ἀνὰ [g] δηνάριον. 10. ἐλθόντες δὲ[4] οἱ πρῶτοι ἐνόμισαν ὅτι πλείονα[5] λήψονται· καὶ ἔλαβον καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀνὰ δηνάριον.[6] 11. λαβόντες δὲ [h] ἐγόγγυζον κατὰ τοῦ οἰκοδεσπότου, 12. λέγοντες, Ὅτι[7] οὗτοι οἱ ἔσχατοι μίαν ὥραν [i] ἐποίησαν, καὶ ἴσους ἡμῖν αὐτοὺς[8] ἐποίησας, τοῖς βαστάσασι τὸ βάρος τῆς ἡμέρας

e Lk. viii. 3. Gal. iv. 2.
f Lk. xxiii. 5; xxiv. 27, 47. Acts i. 22, etc.
g Lk. ix. 3; x. 1. John iv. 6. Rev. iv. 8; xxi. 21.
h Lk. v. 30 (πρός τινα). John vi. 41, 61 (περί τινος); vi. 43 (μετ' ἀλλήλων). 1 Cor. x. 10 (absol.).
i Acts xv. 33. 2 Cor. xi. 25. James iv. 13.

[1] The words και ο εαν . . . ληψεσθε come in from ver. 4, and are wanting in ℵBDLZ.

[2] αυτοις wanting in ℵCLZ, but found in BD and many other uncials (W.H. in margin).

[3] So in ℵCL and many other uncials; ελθοντες δε in BD (W.H.).

[4] και ελθοντες in BCD (W.H.).

[5] πλειον in BCNZΣ.

[6] ανα δην. καὶ αυτοι in ℵBLZ.

[7] ℵBD omit οτι.

[8] αυτους ημιν in ℵDLZ. BCN as in text. W.H., former in text, latter in margin.

may be of value.—τί ὧδε ἑστήκατε, etc., why stand ye here (ἑστήκ., perfect active, neuter in sense, and used as a present) all the day idle? The question answers itself: no man would stand all the day in the market-place idle unless because he wanted work and could not get it.—Ver. 7. ὑπάγετε καὶ ὑμεῖς: these words said this time with marked emphasis = you too go, though it be so late. This employer would probably be talked of among the workers as a man who had a hobby—a character; they might even laugh at his peculiar ways. The clause about payment in T. R. is obviously out of place in this case. The pay the last gang were entitled to was not worth speaking about.

Vv. 8-12. The evening settlement.—Ver. 8. ἀρξάμενος: a pregnant word, including not only the commencement of the process of paying but its progress. There is an ellipsis, καὶ ἐλθὼν being understood before ἕως (Kypke). Grotius thinks this does not really mean beginning with the last comers, but without regard to order of coming in, so that no one should be overlooked. He fails to see that the idiosyncrasy of the master is a leading point, indeed the key to the meaning of the parable. This beginning with the last is an eccentricity from an ordinary everyday-life point of view. The master chooses to do so: to begin with those who have no claims.—Ver. 9. ἀνὰ δηνάριον, a denarius each; ἀνὰ is distributive = "accipiebant singuli denar.". For this use of ἀνὰ vide Herrmann's Viger, p. 576.—Ver. 10. οἱ πρῶτοι: the intermediates passed over, as non-essential to the didactic purpose, we arrive at the first, the men hired on a regular bargain in the morning.—ἐνόμισαν: they had noticed the paying of the last first, and had curiously watched to see or hear what they got, and they come with great expectations: twelve hours' work, therefore twelve times the sum given to the one-hour men.—καὶ αὐτοί: surprising! only a penny! What a strange, eccentric master! He had seen expectation in their faces, and anticipated with amusement their chagrin. The money was paid by the overseer, but he was standing by enjoying the scene.—Ver. 11. ἐγόγγυζον: imperfect; the grumbling went on from man to man as they were being paid; to the overseer, but at (κατὰ) the master, and so that he could overhear.—Ver. 12. Their grievous complaint.—οὗτοι, these, with a workman's contempt for a sham-worker.—ἐποίησαν. Some (Wetstein, Meyer, Goebel, etc.) render, spent = they put in their one hour: without doing any work to speak of. The verb καὶ τὸν ʲ καύσωνα. 13. ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν ἑνὶ αὐτῶν, Ἑταῖρε, οὐκ ἀδικῶ σε· οὐχὶ δηναρίου συνεφώνησάς μοι; 14. ἆρον τὸ σὸν καὶ ὕπαγε. θέλω δὲ[1] τούτῳ τῷ ἐσχάτῳ δοῦναι ὡς καὶ σοί· 15. ἢ[2] οὐκ ἔξεστί μοι ποιῆσαι ὃ θέλω[3] ἐν τοῖς ἐμοῖς; εἰ[4] ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου πονηρός ἐστιν, ὅτι ἐγὼ ἀγαθός εἰμι; 16. οὕτως ἔσονται οἱ ἔσχατοι πρῶτοι, καὶ οἱ πρῶτοι ἔσχατοι· πολλοὶ γάρ εἰσι κλητοί, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἐκλεκτοί."[5] j Lk. xii. 51. Jas. i. 11.

[1] θελω εγω in B (W.H. in margin). [2] BDLZ omit η.

[3] ο θελω ποιησαι in ℵBDLZ, so giving to ο θελω due emphasis (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] η in ℵBCDNΣ (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] πολλοι γαρ . . . εκλεκτοι wanting in ℵBLZ; brought in from chap. xxii. 14.

is used in this sense (e.g., Acts xv. 33), and one is strongly tempted to adopt this rendering as true to the contemptuous feeling of the twelve-hour men for the one-hour men. Kypke remarks against it that if ἐποίησαν had been meant in this sense = "commorati sunt," the word ὧδε = ἐν τῷ ἀμπελῶνι would have been added. Perhaps the strongest reason against it is that the one-hour men had worked with such good will (that goes without saying) that even prejudiced fellow-workers could not ignore the fact. So we must take ἐποίησαν = worked.—τὸ βάρος, τὸν καύσωνα: these the points of their case: not that they had worked hard while the others had not, but that they had borne the burden of a whole day's work, and worked through the heat of the day, and now came to be paid, weary and sweat-stained. (Some take καύσωνα as referring to the sirocco or south-east wind; hot, dry and dust-laden. On the winds of Palestine, vide Benzinger, Heb. Arch., p. 30.) What was one hour in the late afternoon, however hard the last comers worked, to that! And yet they are made equal (ἴσους)! Surely good ground for complaint!

Vv. 13-15. The master's reply.—Ver. 13. ἑνί, to one of them. It would have been undignified to make a speech in self-defence to the whole gang. That would have been to take the matter too seriously. The master selects a man, and quietly speaks his mind to him.—ἑταῖρε, friend, comrade; familiar and kindly. Cf. Lk. xv. 31.—Ver. 14. ἆρον τὸ σόν, take thine, thy stipulated denarius. It looks as if this particular worker had refused the penny, or was saucily handing it back.—θέλω, I choose, it is my pleasure; emphatically spoken. Summa hujus verbi potestas, Beng.—τούτῳ τ. ἐσχ.: one of the eleventh-hour men singled out and pointed to.—Ver. 15. οὐκ ἔξεστι: right asserted to act as he chooses in the matter.—ἐν τοῖς ἐμοῖς: in matters within my own discretion—a truism; the question is: what belongs to that category? Fritzsche and De Wette render: in my own affairs; Meyer: in the matter of my own property.—ἢ (W.H.) introduces an alternative mode of putting the case, which explains how the complainants and the master see the matter so differently, they seeing in it an injustice, he a legitimate exercise of his discretion.—πονηρός, vide on vi. 22-24.—ἀγαθός, generous; doing more than justice demands. So Bengel. Cf. Rom. v. 7 for the distinction between δίκαιος and ἀγαθός.

Ver. 16. Christ here points the moral of the parable = xix. 30, the terms ἔσχατοι πρῶτοι changing places, the better to suit the story. The meaning is not: the last as the first, and the first as the last, all treated alike. True, all get the same sum; at least the last and first do, nothing being said of those between; but the point of the parable is not that the reward is the same. The denarius given to all is not the central feature of the story, but the will of the master, whose character from a commercial point of view is distinctly eccentric, and is so represented to make it serve the didactic purpose. The method of this master is commercially unworkable; combination of the two systems of legal contract and benevolence must lead to perpetual trouble. All must be dealt with on one footing. And that is what it will come to with a master of the type indicated. He will abolish contract, and engage all on the footing of generously rewarding generous service. The parable does not bring

17. ΚΑΙ ἀναβαίνων ὁ Ἰησοῦς[1] εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα παρέλαβε τοὺς δώδεκα μαθητὰς κατ᾽ ἰδίαν ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, καὶ[2] εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, 18. "Ἰδού, ἀναβαίνομεν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδοθήσεται τοῖς ἀρχιερεῦσι καὶ γραμματεῦσι· καὶ κατακρινοῦσιν αὐτὸν θανάτῳ,[3] 19. καὶ παραδώσουσιν αὐτὸν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν εἰς τὸ ἐμπαῖξαι καὶ μαστιγῶσαι καὶ σταυρῶσαι· καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἀναστήσεται."

20. Τότε προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ ἡ μήτηρ τῶν υἱῶν Ζεβεδαίου μετὰ τῶν

[1] B begins this section thus: μελλων δε αναβαινειν I., which W.H. adopt and Tr. places on margin, Weiss approving, viewing the reading in T. R. as a reminiscence of Mk.

[2] και εν τη οδω in ℵBLZ (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] εις θανατον in ℵ (Tisch.). B omits (W.H. θανατω within brackets).

this out fully, as it gives the story only of a single day. It suggests rather than adequately illustrates its own moral, which is that God does not love a legal spirit. In the parable the men who worked on contract, and, as it came out at the end, in a legal temper, got their penny, but what awaits them in future is not to be employed at all. Work done in a legal spirit does not count in the Kingdom of God. In reward it is last, or even nowhere. This is the trend of the parable, and so viewed it has a manifest connection with Peter's self-complacent question. On this parable vide my Parabolic Teaching of Christ.

Vv. 17-19. Third prediction of the passion (Mk. x. 32-34; Lk. xviii. 31-34).—The first in xvi. 21; the second in xvii. 22. In the first it was stated generally that Jesus was about πολλὰ παθεῖν. Here the πολλὰ are detailed. In the second mention was made of betrayal (παραδίδοται, xvii. 31) into the hands of men. Here the "men" resolve into priests, scribes, and Gentiles.—Ver. 17. ἀναβαίνων: going up from Peraea to the ridge on which the Holy City stood. The reading μέλλων ἀναβ. may indicate that they are already on the west side of the Jordan, and about to commence the ascent (Weiss-Meyer).—εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα: face being now turned directly towards Jerusalem, thought naturally turns to what is going to happen there.—κατ᾽ ἰδίαν: there is a crowd of pilgrims going the same way, so Jesus must take aside His disciples to speak on the solemn theme what is specially meant for their ear.—ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, in the way, vide Mk.'s description, which is very graphic.—Ver. 18. ἰδοὺ ἀναβαίνομεν! a memorable fateful anabasis! It excites lively expectation in the whole company, but how different the thoughts of the Master from those of His followers!—κατακρινοῦσι, they shall sentence Him to death; a new feature.—Ver. 19. ἐμπαῖξαι, μαστιγῶσαι, σταυρῶσαι, mock, scourge, crucify; all new features, the details of the πολλὰ παθεῖν. Note the parts assigned to the various actors: the Jews condemn, the Gentiles scourge and crucify.

Vv. 20-28. The two sons of Zebedee (Mk. x. 35-45).—Ver. 20. τότε (in Mk. the vaguer καί), then; let us hope not quite immediately after, but it need not have been long after. How soon children forget doleful news and return to their play; a beneficent provision of nature in their case, that grief should be but a summer shower. Or did James and John with their mother not hear the sad announcement, plotting perhaps when the Master was predicting?—ἡ μήτηρ: in Mk. the two brothers speak for themselves, but this representation is true to life. Mothers can be very bold in their children's interest.—αἰτοῦσα, begging; the petitioner a woman and a near relative, not easy to resist.—τι: vague; no verbal indication as yet what is wanted; her attitude showed she had a request to make, the manner revealing that it is something important, and also perhaps that it is something that should not be asked.—Ver. 21. εἰπὲ ἵνα: vide on iv. 3.—καθίσωσιν, etc. = let them have the first places in the kingdom, sitting on Thy right and left hand respectively. After ἐκ δεξιῶν, ἐξ εὐωνύμων, μερῶν is understood = on the right and left parts. Vide Bos, Ellipses Graecae, p. 184, who cites an instance of the latter phrase from Diod. Sic. So this was all that came out of the discourse on child-likeness! (xviii. 3 ff.). But Jesus had also υἱῶν αὐτῆς, προσκυνοῦσα καὶ αἰτοῦσά τι παρ[1] αὐτοῦ. 21. ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Τί θέλεις;" Λέγει αὐτῷ,[2] "Εἰπὲ ἵνα καθίσωσιν οὗτοι οἱ δύο υἱοί μου, εἷς [k] ἐκ δεξιῶν σου,[3] καὶ εἷς ἐξ εὐωνύμων,[4] ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ σου." 22. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, "Οὐκ οἴδατε τί αἰτεῖσθε. δύνασθε πιεῖν τὸ ποτήριον, ὃ ἐγὼ μέλλω πίνειν, καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα, ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι, βαπτισθῆναι;"[5] Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Δυνάμεθα." 23. Καὶ[6] λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Τὸ μὲν ποτήριόν μου πίεσθε, καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα, ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι, βαπτισθήσεσθε· τὸ δὲ καθίσαι ἐκ δεξιῶν μου καὶ[7] ἐξ εὐωνύμων μου,[8] οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν[9] δοῦναι, ἀλλ' οἷς [l] ἡτοίμασται ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρός μου." 24. Καὶ k Ch. xxii. 44; xxvi. 64. Heb. i. 13.

l Ch. xxv. 34, 41. 1 Cor. ii. 9.

[1] παρ' in ℵCNXZ al. (Tisch.). απ' in BD (W.H. text, παρ margin).

[2] η δε ειπεν in B.

[3] σου wanting in ℵB.

[4] σου added in ℵBCNZ al. Wanting n D.

[5] The clause και το βαπτισμα . . . βαπτισθηναι in this and the next verse is omitted in ℵBDLZ. It has doubtless been mported from Mk.

[6] ℵBDZ omit και.

[7] και in ℵCDZ (Tisch.), η in BL, Lat. verss. 1, 33 (W.H. margin).

[8] μου omitted in ℵBCDL al.

[9] CDΔ insert τουτο before δουναι.

spoken of thrones in the new Genesis, and that seems to have fired their imagination and stimulated their ambition. And "the gentle and humble" John was in this plot! Conventional ideas of apostolic character need revision.

Ver. 22. Jesus meets this bold petition as He met the scribe's offer of discipleship (viii. 19), aiming at disenchantment by pointing out what it involved: throne and suffering going together. — τὸ ποτήριον: the cup, emblem of both good and evil fortune in Hebrew speech (Ps. xi. 6; xxiii. 5); here of suffering. —δυνάμεθα, we are able; the prompt, decided answer of the two brothers to whom Jesus had addressed His question. Had they then laid to heart what Jesus had said shortly before concerning His passion, and subsequent resurrection, and made up their minds to share His sufferings that they might so gain a high place in the kingdom? Had they already caught the martyr spirit? It is possible. But it is also possible that they spoke without thinking, like Peter on the hill.—Ver. 23. τὸ μὲν π. μ. πίεσθε, as for my cup, ye shall drink of it: predictive of the future fact, and also conferring a privilege = I have no objection to grant you companionship in my sufferings; that favour may be granted without risk of abuse.—τὸ δὲ καθίσαι, etc., but as for sitting on right and left hand, that is another affair.—οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν δοῦναι = is not a matter of mere personal favour: favouritism has no place here; it depends on fitness. That is the meaning of the last clause, οἷς ἡτοίμασται ὑ. τ. π. μ. = it is not an affair of arbitrary favour on the part of the father any more than on my part. Thrones are for those who are fit to sit on them, and prepared by moral trial and discipline to bear the honour worthily: τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων δυναμένοις γενέσθαι λαμπροῖς—Chrys., Hom. lxv. The same Father illustrates by supposing an ἀγωνοθέτης to be asked by two athletes to assign to them the crowns of victory, and replying: "it is not mine to give, but they belong to those for whom they are prepared by struggle and sweat" (ἀπὸ τῶν πόνων καὶ τῶν ἱδρώτων).

Vv. 24-28. Commotion in the disciple-circle.—Ver. 24. οἱ δέκα: the Twelve were all on one moral level, not one superior to ambitious passion, or jealousy of it in another. Therefore the conduct of the two greatly provoked the ten.—ἠγανάκτησαν Passow derives from ἄγαν and ἄγω, and gives as original sense to be in a state of violent excitement like new wine fermenting. The ten were "mad" at the two; pitiful exhibition in the circumstances, fitted to make Jesus doubt His choice of such men. But better were not to be found.—Ver. 25. προσκαλεσάμενος: Jesus had to call them to Him, therefore they had had ἀκούσαντες οἱ δέκα [m] ἠγανάκτησαν περὶ τῶν δύο ἀδελφῶν. 25. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς προσκαλεσάμενος αὐτοὺς εἶπεν, "Οἴδατε ὅτι οἱ ἄρχοντες τῶν ἐθνῶν [n] κατακυριεύουσιν αὐτῶν, καὶ οἱ μεγάλοι [o] κατεξουσιάζουσιν αὐτῶν. 26. οὐχ οὕτως δὲ[1] ἔσται[2] ἐν ὑμῖν· ἀλλ' ὃς ἐὰν θέλῃ ἐν ὑμῖν μέγας γενέσθαι, ἔστω[3] ὑμῶν διάκονος· 27. καὶ ὃς ἐὰν θέλῃ ἐν ὑμῖν εἶναι πρῶτος, ἔστω[3] ὑμῶν δοῦλος· 28. ὥσπερ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἦλθε διακονηθῆναι, ἀλλὰ διακονῆσαι καὶ δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ [p] λύτρον ἀντὶ [q] πολλῶν."

m Ch. xxi. 15; xxvi. 8. Mk. x. 14, 41; xiv. 4. Lk. xiii. 14.
n Mk. x. 42. 1 Pet. v. 3 (Acts xix. 16 = to gain the mastery, overpower). o Mk. x. 42.
p Mk. x. 45 (Ex. xxi. 30. Levit. xix. 20. Num. xxxv. 31).
q Rom. viii. 29. Heb. ii. 10; ix. 28.

[1] ℵBDZΣ omit δε. [2] εστιν in BDZ (W.H.).
[3] Some MSS. have εσται, which is adopted by W.H. in both places.

the decency not to quarrel in His presence. Magistro non praesente, Beng.—κατακυριεύουσιν: in the Sept. used in the sense of rule, Gen. i. 28, Ps. lxxii. 8; here the connection requires the idea of "lording it over," the κατὰ having intensive force; so also in the apax. leg. κατεξουσιάζουσιν, following = play the tyrant.—τῶν ἐθνῶν: from these occasional references to the outside peoples we get Christ's idea of the Pagan world; they seek material good (vi. 32), use repetition in prayer (vi. 7), are subject to despotic rule.—οἱ μεγάλοι, the grandees.—αὐτῶν after the two verbs in both cases refers to the ἐθνῶν. Grotius takes the second as referring to the ἄρχοντες, and finds in the passage this sense: the rulers, monarchs, lord it over the people, and their grandees lord it over them, the rulers, in turn; a picture certainly often true to life. Perhaps the intention is to suggest that the rule of the magnates is more oppressive than that of their royal masters: they strain their authority. "Ipsis saepe dominis imperantiores," Beng.—Ver. 26. οὐχ οὕτως ἐστὶν ἐ. ὑ. It is not so among you. The ἔσται of T.R. is probably conformed to the two following ἔσται, but it is true to the meaning. Jesus speaks of a state of matters He desires, but which does not yet exist. The present spirit of the Twelve is essentially secular and pagan.—μέγας, διάκονος: greatness by service the law of the Kingdom of God, whereby greatness becomes another thing, not self-asserted or arrogated, but freely conceded by others.—Ver. 27. πρῶτος may be a synonym for μέγας = μέγιστος (De W.) and δοῦλος for διάκονος; or in both cases increased emphasis may be intended, πρῶτος pointing to a higher place of dignity, δοῦλος to a lower depth of servitude. Burton (M. and T. in N.T., § 68) finds in the two ἔσται in vv. 26 and 27 probable instances of the third person future used imperatively.

Ver. 28. ὥσπερ, καὶ γὰρ in Mk.; both phrases introducing reference to the summum exemplum (Bengel) in an emphatic way.—περ lends force to ὡς = even as, observe.—ὁ υ. τ. ἀνθρώπου: an important instance of the use of the title. On the principle of defining by discriminating use it means: the man who makes no pretensions, asserts no claims.—οὐκ ἦλθε points to the chief end of His mission, the general character of His public life: not that of a Pretender but that of a Servant.—δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν, to give His life, to that extent does the service go. Cf. Phil. ii. 8: μέχρι θανάτου, there also in illustration of the humility of Christ. It is implied that in some way the death of the Son of Man will be serviceable to others. It enters into the life plan of the Great Servant.—λύτρον, a ransom, characterises the service, another new term in the evangelic vocabulary, suggesting rather than solving a theological problem as to the significance of Christ's death, and admitting of great variety of interpretation, from the view of Origen and other Fathers, who regarded Christ's death as a price paid to the devil to ransom men from bondage to him, to that of Wendt, who finds in the word simply the idea that the example of Jesus in carrying the principle of service as far as to die tends by way of moral influence to deliver men's minds from every form of spiritual bondage (Die Lehre Jesu, ii. 510-517). It is an interesting question, What clue can be found in Christ's own words, as hitherto reported, to the use by Him on this occasion of the term λύτρον, and to r Ch. xxvi. 63. Mk. iii. 4; ix. 34; x. 48; xiv. 61. Lk. xix. 40. Acts xviii. 9.

29. ΚΑΙ ἐκπορευομένων αὐτῶν ἀπὸ Ἱεριχώ, ἠκολούθησεν αὐτῷ ʳ ὄχλος πολύς. 30. καὶ ἰδού, δύο τυφλοὶ καθήμενοι παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν, ἀκούσαντες ὅτι Ἰησοῦς παράγει, ἔκραξαν, λέγοντες, "Ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, κύριε,[1] υἱὸς[2] Δαβίδ." 31. Ὁ δὲ ὄχλος ἐπετίμησεν αὐτοῖς ἵνα ʳ σιωπήσωσιν. οἱ δὲ μεῖζον ἔκραζον, λέγοντες, "Ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, ˢ κύριε, υἱὸς Δαβίδ." 32. Καὶ στὰς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ˢ ἐφώνησεν αὐτούς, καὶ εἶπε, "Τί θέλετε ποιήσω ὑμῖν;" 33. Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Κύριε, ἵνα ἀνοιχθῶσιν[3] ἡμῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοί."[4] 34. Σπλαγχνισθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἥψατο τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν[5] αὐτῶν· καὶ εὐθέως ἀνέβλεψαν αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοί,[6] καὶ ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ.

s Ch. xxvi. 24, 74 parall. (intrans. to emit a sound); here and in Ch. xxvii. 47. Mk. ix. 35; x. 49, etc. (to call to oneself, with acc.). Lk. xiv. 12 (to invite). John xiii. 13 (to call by a name).

[1] κυριε ελεησον ημας in BLZ. ℵD omit κυριε (Tisch.). Same order in ver. 31 in ℵBDLZ.

[2] υιε in ℵCDLΣ (Tisch., W.H. margin).

[3] ανοιγωσιν in ℵBDLZ. [4] οι οφ. ημων in ℵBDLZ.

[5] ομματων in BDLZ. T. R. follows ℵCN in using the more common word οφθαλμων.

[6] αυτων οι οφθαλμοι wanting in ℵBDLZ and omitted by modern editors.

the sense in which He uses it? Wendt contends that this is the best method of getting at the meaning, and suggests as the most congenial text Mt. xi. 28-30. I agree with him as to method, but think a better clue may be found in Mt. xvii. 27, the word spoken by Jesus in reference to the Temple Tax. That word began the striking course of instruction on humility, as this word (xx. 28) ends it, and the end and the beginning touch in thought and language. The didrachmon was a λύτρον (Exodus xxx. 12), as the life of the Son of Man is represented to be. The tax was paid ἀντὶ ἐμοῦ καὶ σοῦ. The life is to be given ἀντὶ πολλῶν. Is it too much to suppose that the Capernaum incident was present to Christ's mind when He uttered this striking saying, and that in the earlier utterance we have the key to the psychological history of the term λύτρον? On this subject vide my book The Kingdom of God, pp. 238-241.

Vv. 29-34. Blind men (man) at Jericho (Mk. x. 46-52, Lk. xviii. 35-43). The harmonistic problems as to the locality of this incident (leaving Jericho Mt. and Mk., entering, Lk.) and the number of persons healed (one Mk. and Lk., two Mt.) may be left on one side, as also the modern critical attempts to account for the origin of the discrepancies. Those interested may consult for the former Keil and Nösgen, for the latter Holtz., H.C., and Weiss-Meyer.—Ver. 29. ἀπὸ Ἱεριχὼ from Jericho, an important town every way; "the key—the 'Chiavenna'—of Palestine to any invader from this quarter" (Stanley, Sinai and Palestine, p. 305; the whole account there given should be read), situated in an oasis in the Judaean desert, caused by streams from the mountains above and springs in the valley; with a flourishing trade and fine buildings, Herod's palace included; two hours distant from the Jordan; from thence to the summit a steep climb through a rocky ravine, haunt of robbers.—ὄχλος πολύς, a great crowd going to the feast in Jerusalem.—Ver. 30. ἀκούσαντες, etc. Luke explains that the blind man learnt that Jesus was passing in answer to inquiry suggested by the noise of a crowd. He knew who Jesus was: the fame of Jesus the Nazarene (Mk. and Lk.), the great Healer, had reached his ear.—υἱὸς Δ.: popular Messianic title (ix. 28, xv. 22).—Ver. 31. ἐπετίμησεν: same word as in xix. 13, and denoting similar action to that of the disciples in reference to the children, due to similar motives. Officious reverence has played a large part in the history of the Church and of theology.—μεῖζον ἔκραζον, they cried out the more; of course, repression ever defeats itself; μεῖζον, adverb, here only.—Ver. 32, ἐφώνησεν might mean "addressed them" (Fritzsche), but "called them" seems to

XXI. 1. ΚΑΙ ὅτε ἤγγισαν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, καὶ ἦλθον εἰς Βηθφαγὴ πρὸς[1] τὸ ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν, τότε ὁ[2] Ἰησοῦς ἀπέστειλε δύο μαθητάς, 2. λέγων αὐτοῖς, "Πορεύθητε[3] εἰς τὴν κώμην τὴν ἀπέναντι[4] ὑμῶν· καὶ εὐθέως εὑρήσετε ὄνον δεδεμένην, καὶ πῶλον μετ' αὐτῆς· λύσαντες ἀγάγετέ[5] μοι. 3. καὶ ἐάν τις ὑμῖν εἴπῃ τι, ἐρεῖτε, Ὅτι ὁ Κύριος

[1] B has εις for προς, which Weiss thinks has come from the parall.
[2] ο is wanting in BD (Tisch., W.H.).
[3] πορευεσθε in ℵBDLZ Orig.
[4] κατεναντι in ℵBCDLZ (Tisch., Trg., W.H.).
[5] αγετε in BD (W.H. in margin).

suit the situation better; cf. the parallels.—τί θέλετε, etc., what do you wish me to do for you? Not a superfluous question; they were beggars as well as blind; they might want alms (vide Mk. x. 46). Mt. says nothing about their being beggars, but the question of Jesus implies it.—Ver. 33. ἵνα ἀνοιγῶσιν οἱ ὀφ. They desire the greater benefit, opening of their eyes, which shows that the eyes of their mind were open as to Christ's power and will.—ἀνοιγῶσιν, 2nd aorist subjunctive, for which the T. R. has the more common 1st aorist. — Ver. 34. σπλαγχνισθεὶς. Note the frequent reference to Christ's pity in this gospel (ix. 36, xiv. 14, xv. 32, and here).—τῶν ὀμμάτων, a synonym for ὀφθαλμῶν, as if with some regard to style which the scribes might have been expected to appreciate, but have not, witness the threefold use of the same word in T. R.—ἠκολούθησαν, they followed Him, like the rest, without guide (sine hodego, Beng.), so showing at once that their eyes were opened and their hearts grateful.

Chapter XXI. Entry into Jerusalem, etc.—Vv. 1-11. The entry (Mk. xi. 1-11, Lk. xix. 29-44).—Ver. 1, ὅτε ἤγγισαν ε. Ἱ., when, etc. The evangelist does not, like a modern tourist, make formal announcement of the arrival at a point near Jerusalem when the Holy City came first into view, but refers to the fact in a subordinate clause. The manner of entry is the more important matter for him.—εἰς Βηθφαγὴ, to Bethphage = the house of figs, mentioned here and in the synoptical parallels, nowhere else in O. or N. T., but from Talmudic sources appears to have been a better known and more important place than Bethany (Buxtorf, Talm. Lex., p. 1691). No trace of it now.—εἰς τ. Ὄ. τ. Ἐλαιῶν, to the Mount of Olives; the εἰς, in all the three phrases used to define the position, means near to, towards, not into.—τότε, then, introducing what for the evangelist is the main event. Bengel's comment is: vectura mysterii plena innuitur. It is possible to import too much mystery into the incident following.—Ver. 2. εἰς τὴν κώμην, that is, naturally, the one named, though if we take εἰς before Βηθφαγὴ as = into, it might be Bethany, on the other side of the valley. Some think the two villages were practically one (Porter, Handbook for Syria and Palestine, p. 180).—ὄνον δ. καὶ πῶλον, a she-ass with her foal, the latter alone mentioned in parall.; both named here for a reason which will appear.—λύσαντες ἀγάγετε, loose and bring; without asking leave, as if they were their own.—Ver. 3. ἐάν τις, etc. Of course it was to be expected that the act would be challenged.—ἐρεῖτε, ye shall say, future with imperative force.—ὅτι, recitative, introducing in direct form the words of the Master.—ὁ Κύριος, the Lord or Master; not surely = Jehovah (Alford, G. T.), but rather to be taken in same sense as in Mt. viii. 25, or in ver. 30 of this chap.—αὐτῶν χρείαν ἔχει, hath need of them; in what sense? Looking to the synop. narratives alone, one might naturally infer that the need was physical, due to the fatigue of a toilsome, tedious ascent. But according to the narrative in 4th Gospel the starting point of the day's journey was Bethany (xii. 1, 12). The prophetic reference in ver. 4 suggests a wholly different view, viz., that the animals were needed to enable Jesus to enter Jerusalem in a manner conformable to prophetic requirements, and worthy of the Messianic King. One is conscious of a certain reluctance to accept this as the exclusive sense of the χρεία. Lutteroth suggests that Jesus did not wish to mix among the crowd of pilgrims on foot lest His arrival should be concealed and αὐτῶν χρείαν ἔχει· εὐθέως δὲ ἀποστελεῖ αὐτούς." 4. Τοῦτο δὲ ὅλον[1] γέγονεν, ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 5. 'Εἴπατε τῇ θυγατρὶ Σιών, Ἰδού, ὁ βασιλεύς σου ἔρχεταί σοι, πραῢς καὶ [a] ἐπιβεβηκὼς ἐπὶ ὄνον καὶ[2] πῶλον υἱὸν [b] ὑποζυγίου.' 6. Πορευθέντες δὲ οἱ μαθηταί, καὶ ποιήσαντες καθὼς προσέταξεν[3] αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, 7. ἤγαγον τὴν ὄνον καὶ τὸν πῶλον, καὶ ἐπέθηκαν ἐπάνω[4] αὐτῶν τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν,[5] καὶ ἐπεκάθισεν επάνω αὐτῶν. 8. ὁ δὲ [c] πλεῖστος ὄχλος [d] ἔστρωσαν ἑαυτῶν τὰ ἱμάτια ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ· ἄλλοι δὲ ἔκοπτον κλάδους ἀπὸ τῶν δένδρων, καὶ ἐστρώννυον ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ.

a here only in sense of mounting (cf. ἐπιβιβάζω in Lk. x. 34; xix. 35. Acts xxiii. 24).
b here and in 2 Pet. ii. 16.
c here only (= greatest part of). Mk. iv. 1 (W.H.) (= very great). 1 Cor. xiv. 27 (= at most, adv.).
d Mk. xiv. 15. Lk. xxii. 12. Acts ix. 34.

[1] ℵCDLZ omit ολον, which is found in BNΣ. It is probably an echo of Ch. i. 22 (Weiss) (W.H. omit).

[2] και επι in ℵBLN. CD with many others omit the επι as in T. R. (ἐπὶ ὑποζύγιον καὶ πῶλον νέον in Zech. ix. 9, Sept.).

[3] συνεταξεν in BCD. [4] επ αυτων in ℵBDLZ. [5] ℵBD omit αυτων.

the interest awakened by His presence lessened.—Ver. 4. ἵνα πληρωθῇ: ἵνα is to be taken here as always in this Gospel, in its strictly final sense. Such is the view of the evangelist and the view he wishes his readers to take. But it does not follow from this that Christ's whole action proceeded from a conscious intention to fulfil a prophecy. On the contrary, the less intention on His part the greater the apologetic value of the correspondence between prophecy and fact. Action with intention might show that He claimed to be, not that He was, the Messiah. On the other hand, His right to be regarded as the Messiah would have stood where it was though He had entered Jerusalem on foot. That right cannot stand or fall with any such purely external circumstance, which can at best possess only the value of a symbol of those spiritual qualities which constitute intrinsic fitness for Messiahship. But Jesus, while fully aware of its entirely subordinate importance, might quite conceivably be in the mood to give it the place of a symbol, all the more that the act was in harmony with His whole policy of avoiding display and discouraging vulgar Messianic ideas and hopes. There was no pretentiousness in riding into Jerusalem on the foal of an ass. It was rather the meek and lowly One entering in character, and in a character not welcome to the proud worldly-minded Jerusalemites. The symbolic act was of a piece with the use of the title "Son of Man," shunning Messianic pretensions, yet making them in a deeper way.—Ver. 5. The prophetic quotation, from Zech. ix. 9, prefaced by a phrase from Isaiah lxii. 11, with some words omitted, and with some alteration in expression as compared with Sept.

Vv. 7-11. τὴν ὄνον καὶ τὸν πῶλον: that both were brought is carefully specified in view of the prophetic oracle as understood by the evangelist to refer to two animals, not to one under two parallel names.—ἐπέθηκαν: the two disciples spread their upper garments on the two beasts, to make a seat for their Master.—καὶ ἐπεκάθισεν ἐπ. αὐτῶν: if the second αὐτῶν be taken to have the same reference as the first the meaning will be that Jesus sat upon both beasts (alternately). But this would require the imperfect of the verb instead of the aorist. It seems best, with many ancient and modern interpreters, to refer the second αὐτῶν to the garments, though on this view there is a certain looseness in the expression, as, strictly speaking, Jesus would sit on only one of the mantles, if He rode only on one animal. Fritzsche, while taking the second α. as referring to ἱμάτια, thinks the evangelist means to represent Jesus as riding on both alternately.—Ver. 8. ὁ δὲ πλεῖστος ὄχλος, etc., the most part of the crowd, follow the example of the two disciples, and spread their upper garments on the way, as it were to make a carpet for the object of their enthusiasm, after the manner of the peoples honouring their kings (vide Wetstein, ad loc.).—ἄλλοι δὲ ἔκοπτον: others, a small number comparatively, took to cutting down branches

e here, parall. and Lk. ii. 14. f Ch. xxviii. 4 (metaph. as here). Ch. xxvii. 51. Heb. xii. 26 (literally). g Mk. xi. 15. John ii. 15. h Mk. xi. 15 (Hag. ii. 22. Job ix. 5). i Ch. xxiii. 2.

9. οἱ δὲ ὄχλοι οἱ προάγοντες[1] καὶ οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες ἔκραζον, λέγοντες, "᾿Ωσαννὰ τῷ υἱῷ Δαβίδ· εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου· ᾿Ωσαννὰ ᵉἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις." 10. Καὶ εἰσελθόντος αὐτοῦ εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, ᶠἐσείσθη πᾶσα ἡ πόλις, λέγουσα, "Τίς ἐστιν οὗτος;" 11. Οἱ δὲ ὄχλοι ἔλεγον, "Οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ προφήτης,[2] ὁ ἀπὸ Ναζαρὲτ τῆς Γαλιλαίας." 12. ΚΑΙ εἰσῆλθεν ὁ[3] Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ,[4] καὶ ἐξέβαλε πάντας τοὺς πωλοῦντας καὶ ἀγοράζοντας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, καὶ τὰς τραπέζας τῶν ᵍκολλυβιστῶν ʰκατέστρεψε, καὶ τὰς ⁱκαθέδρας τῶν πωλούντων

[1] ℵBCDL add αυτου.
[2] ο προφητης Ιησους in ℵBD sah. cop.
[3] ο omitted in ℵBCΔ.
[4] του θεου omitted in ℵBL verss. (W.H. omit in text).

of trees and scattering them about on the way. Had they no upper garments, or did they not care to use them in that way? The branches, if of any size, would not improve the road, neither indeed would the garments. Lightfoot, perceiving this—"hoc forsan equitantem prosterneret"—thinks they used garments and branches to make booths, as at the feast of tabernacles. It was well meant but embarrassing homage.—Ver. 9. οἱ ὄχλοι, the crowd divided into two, one in front, one in rear, Jesus between. —ἔκραζον: lip homage followed the carpeting of the way, in words borrowed from the Psalter (Ps. cxviii. 25, 26), and variously interpreted by commentators. —᾿Ωσαννὰ τῷ υἱῷ Δ. Hosanna (we sing) to the son of David (Bengel).—εὐλογημένος, etc. (and we say), "Blessed, etc.," repeating words from the Hallel used at the passover season.—᾿Ωσαννὰ ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις = may our Hosanna on earth be echoed and ratified in heaven! All this homage by deed and word speaks to a great enthusiasm, the outcome of the Galilean ministry; for the crowd consists of Galileans. Perhaps the incident at Jericho, the healing of the blind men, and the vociferated title Son of David with which they saluted the Healer, gave the keynote. A little matter moves a crowd when it happens at the right moment. The mood of a festive season was on them.—Ver. 10. ἐσείσθη: even Jerusalem, frozen with religious formalism and socially undemonstrative, was stirred by the popular enthusiasm as by a mighty wind or by an earthquake (σεισμός), and asked (ver. 11), τίς οὗτος;—ὁ προφήτης, etc.: a circumstantial answer specifying name, locality, and vocation; not a low-pitched answer as Chrys. (and after him Schanz) thought (χαμαίζηλος ἦν αὐτῶν ἡ γνώμη, καὶ ταπεινὴ καὶ σεσυρμένη, Hom. lxvi.), as if they were ashamed of their recent outburst of enthusiasm. Rather spoken with pride = the man to whom we have accorded Messianic honours is a countryman of ours, Jesus, etc.

Vv. 12-17. Jesus visits the Temple (Mk. xi. 11, 15-19, Lk. xix. 45-48).—Ver. 12. εἰσῆλθεν, etc. He entered the Temple. When? Nothing to show that it was not the same day (vide Mk.). —ἐξέβαλεν. The fourth Gospel (ii. 14 f.) reports a similar clearing at the beginning of Christ's ministry. Two questions have been much discussed. Were there one or two acts of this kind? and if only one was it at the beginning or at the end as reported by the Synop.? However these questions may be decided it may be regarded as one of the historic certainties that Jesus did once at least and at some time sweep the Temple clear of the unholy traffic carried on there. The consent of the evangelists and the moral originality of the act vouch for the fact.—πάντας τοὺς πωλ. καὶ ἀγ., the article not repeated after καὶ. Sellers and buyers viewed as one company. Kindred in occupation and spirit, to be cleared out wholesale.—τὰς τραπέζας, etc.: these tables were in the court of the Gentiles, in the booths (tabernae) where all things needed for sacrifice were sold, and the money changers sat ready to give to all comers the didrachma for the temple tax in exchange for ordinary money at a small profit.—κολλυβιστῶν, from κόλλυβος, a small coin, change money, hence agio; hence our word to denote those who traded in exchange, condemned by Phryn., p. 440, while approving κόλλυβος. Theophy.

τὰς περιστεράς. 13. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Γέγραπται, 'Ὁ οἶκός μου οἶκος προσευχῆς κληθήσεται·' ὑμεῖς δὲ αὐτὸν ἐποιήσατε[1] [j]σπήλαιον λῃστῶν." 14. Καὶ προσῆλθον αὐτῷ τυφλοὶ καὶ χωλοὶ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ· καὶ ἐθεράπευσεν αὐτούς. 15. Ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς τὰ θαυμάσια ἃ ἐποίησε, καὶ τοὺς παῖδας[2] κράζοντας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, καὶ λέγοντας, "Ὡσαννὰ τῷ υἱῷ Δαβίδ," ἠγανάκτησαν, 16. καὶ εἶπον αὐτῷ, "Ἀκούεις τί οὗτοι λέγουσιν;" Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ναί· οὐδέποτε ἀνέγνωτε, 'Ὅτι ἐκ στόματος νηπίων καὶ [k]θηλαζόντων κατηρτίσω αἶνον;'" 17. καὶ καταλιπὼν αὐτοὺς ἐξῆλθεν ἔξω τῆς πόλεως εἰς Βηθανίαν, καὶ ηὐλίσθη ἐκεῖ.

j John xi. 38. Heb. xi. 38. Rev. vi. 15.

k here intrans. Lk. xi. 27 (with μαστούς). Ch. xxiv. 19. Mk. xiii. 17. Lk. xxi. 23 (to suckle).

[1] ποιειτε in ℵBL (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] τους after παιδας as well as before in ℵBDLN.

says: κολλυβισταί εἰσιν οἱ παρ' ἡμῖν λεγόμενοι τραπεζῖται· κόλλυβος γὰρ εἶδός ἐστι νομίσματος εὐτελῆς, ὥσπερ ἔχομεν τυχὸν ἡμεῖς τοὺς ὀβολοὺς ἢ τὰ ἀργύρια (vide Hesychius and Suicer).—τὰς περιστεράς, doves, the poor man's offering. The traffic was necessary, and might have been innocent; but the trading spirit soon develops abuses which were doubtless rampant at that period, making passover time a Jewish "Holy Fair," a grotesque and offensive combination of religion with shady morality.—Ver. 13. γέγραπται, it stands written, in Isaiah lvi. 7; from the Sept. but with omission of πᾶσιν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, retained in Mk., and a peculiarly appropriate expression in the circumstances, the abuse condemned having for its scene the court of the Gentiles.—σπήλαιον λῃστῶν, a den of robbers, a strong expression borrowed from another prophet (Jer. vii. 11), pointing probably to the avarice and fraud of the traders (τὸ γὰρ φιλοκερδὲς λῃστρικὸν πάθος ἐστι, Theophy.), taking advantage of simple provincials. This act of Jesus has been justified by the supposed right of the zealot (Num. xxv. 6-13), which is an imaginary right: "ein unfindbar Artikel" (Holtz., H. C.), or by the reforming energy befitting the Messiah (Meyer). It needed no other justification than the indignation of a noble soul at sight of shameless deeds. Jesus was the only person in Israel who could do such a thing. All others had got accustomed to the evil.

Vv. 14-17, peculiar to Mt.—Ver. 14. τυφλοὶ καὶ χωλοί: that the blind and lame in the city should seek out Jesus is perfectly credible, though reported only by Mt. They would hear of the recent healing at Jericho, and of many other acts of healing, and desire to get a benefit for themselves.—Ver. 15. τὰ θαυμάσια: here only in N.T., the wonderful things, a comprehensive phrase apparently chosen to include all the notable things done by Jesus (Meyer), among which may be reckoned not only the cures, and the cleansing of the temple, but the enthusiasm which He had awakened in the crowd, to the priests and scribes perhaps the most offensive feature of the situation.—τοὺς παῖδας, etc.: the boys and girls of the city, true to the spirit of youth, caught up and echoed the cry of the pilgrim crowd and shouted in the temple precincts: "Hosanna, etc.". ἠγανάκτησαν, they were piqued, like the ten (xx. 24).—Ver. 16. ἀκούεις, etc., the holy men attack the least objectionable phenomenon because they could do so safely; not the enthusiasm of the crowd, the Messianic homage, the act of zeal, all deeply offensive to them, but the innocent shouts of children echoing the cry of seniors. They were forsooth unseemly in such a place! Hypocrites and cowards! No fault found with the desecration of the sacred precincts by an unhallowed traffic.—ναί, yes, of course: cheery, hearty, yea, not without enjoyment of the ridiculous distress of the sanctimonious guardians of the temple.—οὐδ. ἀνέγνωτε as in xix. 4: felicitous citation from Ps. viii. 3, not to be prosaically interpreted as if children in arms three or four years old, still being suckled according to the custom of Hebrew mothers, were among the shouting juniors. These prompt happy citations show how familiar Jesus was with the O. T.—Ver. 17. Βηθανίαν, Bethany, 15 stadia from Jerusalem (John xi. 18), resting place of Jesus in the Passion week—

18. Πρωΐας [1] δὲ ἐπανάγων [2] εἰς τὴν πόλιν, ἐπείνασε· 19. καὶ ἰδὼν συκῆν μίαν ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ, ἦλθεν ἐπ᾽ αὐτήν, καὶ οὐδὲν εὗρεν ἐν αὐτῇ εἰ μὴ φύλλα μόνον· καὶ λέγει αὐτῇ, [3] "Μηκέτι ἐκ σοῦ καρπὸς γένηται εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα." Καὶ ἐξηράνθη [l] παραχρῆμα ἡ συκῆ. 20. Καὶ ἰδόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ ἐθαύμασαν, λέγοντες, "Πῶς παραχρῆμα ἐξηράνθη ἡ συκῆ;" 21. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν ἔχητε πίστιν, καὶ μὴ [m] διακριθῆτε, οὐ μόνον τὸ τῆς συκῆς ποιήσετε, ἀλλὰ κἂν τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ εἴπητε, Ἄρθητι καὶ βλήθητι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, γενήσεται· 22. καὶ πάντα ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσητε ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ, πιστεύοντες, λήψεσθε."

l here twice, frequently in Lk. and Acts.

m Acts x. 20. Rom. iv. 20; xiv. 23. James i. 6.

23. ΚΑΙ ἐλθόντι αὐτῷ [4] εἰς τὸ ἱερόν, προσῆλθον αὐτῷ διδάσκοντι οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τοῦ λαοῦ, λέγοντες, "Ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ταῦτα ποιεῖς; καὶ τίς σοι ἔδωκε τὴν ἐξουσίαν ταύτην;"

[1] πρωι in ℵBD. [2] επαναγαγων in ℵBL.

[3] ου before μηκετι in BL. Wanting in ℵCD.

[4] ελθοντος αυτου in ℵBCDL. The reading in T. R. (dat.) is a grammatical correction.

true friends there (vide Stanley, S. and P.).—ηὐλίσθη, passed the night; surely not in the open air, as Wetstein and Grotius think. At passover time quarters could not easily be got in the city, but the house of Martha and Mary would be open to Jesus (cf. Lk. xxi. 57).

Vv. 18-22. The barren fig tree (Mk. xi. 12-14, 19-26).—The story of two morning journeys from Bethany to Jerusalem (vide Mk.) is here compressed into one.—Ver. 18. ἐπείνασε, He felt hungry. The fact seems to favour the hypothesis of a bivouac under the sky overnight. Why should one be hungry leaving the hospitable house of friends? This was no difficulty for the Fathers who regarded the hunger as assumed (σχηματίζεται πεινᾶν, Euthy.).—Ver. 19. συκῆν μίαν: εἷς in late Greek was often used for τις, but the meaning here probably is that Jesus looking around saw a solitary fig tree.—ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ, by the wayside, not necessarily above (Meyer).—ἦλθεν ἐπ᾽ αὐτήν, came close to it, not climbed it (Fritzsche).—εἰ μὴ φύλλα, leaves only, no fruit. Jesus expected to find fruit. Perhaps judging from Galilean experience, where by the lake-shore the fig time was ten months long (Joseph., Bell. J., iii. 108. Vide Holtz., H. C.), but vide on Mk. xi. 13.—οὐ μηκέτι, etc.: according to some writers this was a prediction based on the observation that the tree was diseased, put in the form of a doom. So Bleek, and Furrer, who remarks: "Then said He, who knew nature and the human heart, 'This tree will soon wither'; for a fig tree with full leaf in early spring without fruit is a diseased tree" (Wanderungen, p. 172).—καὶ ἐξ. παραχρῆμα, cf. Mk.'s account.—Ver. 20. οἱ μαθηταὶ, etc.: the disciples wondered at the immediate withering of the tree. Did they expect it to die, as a diseased tree, gradually?—Ver. 21 contains a thought similar to that in xvii. 20, q.v.—τὸ τῆς συκῆς, the matter of the fig tree, as if it were a small affair, not worth speaking about. The question of the disciples did not draw from Jesus explanations as to the motive of the malediction. The cursing of the fig tree has always been regarded as of symbolic import, the tree being in Christ's mind an emblem of the Jewish people, with a great show of religion and no fruit of real godliness. This hypothesis is very credible.

Vv. 23-27. Interrogation as to authority (Mk. xi. 27-33, Lk. xx. 18), wherewith suitably opens the inevitable final conflict between Jesus and the religious leaders of the people.—Ver. 23. ἐλθόντος αὐτοῦ ἐ. τ. ἱ.: coming on the second day to the temple, the place of concourse, where He was sure to meet His foes, nothing loath to speak His mind to them.—διδάσκοντι: yet He came to teach, to do good, not merely to fight.—ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ, by what sort of authority? the question ever asked by the representa-

24. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἐρωτήσω ὑμᾶς κἀγὼ λόγον ἕνα, ὃν ἐὰν εἴπητέ μοι, κἀγὼ ὑμῖν ἐρῶ ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ταῦτα ποιῶ. 25. τὸ βάπτισμα[2] Ἰωάννου πόθεν ἦν; ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, ἢ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων;" Οἱ δὲ διελογίζοντο παρ'[3] ἑαυτοῖς, λέγοντες, "Ἐὰν εἴπωμεν, ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, ἐρεῖ ἡμῖν, Διατί οὖν οὐκ ἐπιστεύσατε αὐτῷ; 26. ἐὰν δὲ εἴπωμεν, ἐξ ἀνθρώπων, φοβούμεθα τὸν ὄχλον· πάντες γὰρ [a] ἔχουσι τὸν Ἰωάννην ὡς προφήτην."[4] 27. Καὶ ἀποκριθέντες τῷ Ἰησοῦ εἶπον, "Οὐκ οἴδαμεν." Ἔφη αὐτοῖς καὶ αὐτός, "Οὐδὲ ἐγὼ λέγω ὑμῖν ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ταῦτα ποιῶ. 28. Τί δὲ ὑμῖν δοκεῖ; ἄνθρωπος εἶχε τέκνα δύο,[5] καὶ[6] προσελθὼν τῷ πρώτῳ εἶπε, Τέκνον,

[a] vide Ch. xiv. 5.

[1] Some copies omit δε. ℵBCD have it.

[2] το before Ιωαννου in ℵBCZ.

[3] BL have εν (W.H. in brackets).

[4] ως προφητην before εχουσι in ℵBCLZ (so in modern editions).

[5] So in ℵCDL al. δυο τεκνα in B (W.H. in margin).

[6] και is found in BCD and other uncials but wanting in ℵLZ. Tisch. omits and W.H. relegate to the margin.

tives of established order and custom at epoch-making initiators. So the Judaists interrogated St. Paul as to his right to be an apostle.—ταῦτα, vague (cf. xi, 25) and comprehensive. They have in view all the offences of which Jesus had been guilty, throughout His ministry —all well known to them—whatever He had done in the spirit of unconventional freedom which He had exhibited since His arrival in Jerusalem.—καὶ τίς: the second question is but an echo of the first: the quality of the authority (ποίᾳ) depends on its source.—ταύτην, this authority, which you arrogate, and which so many unhappily acknowledge. It was a question as to the legitimacy of an undeniable influence. That spiritual power accredits itself was beyond the comprehension of these legalists.—Ver. 24. Jesus replies by an embarrassing counter-question as to the ministry of the Baptist. —λόγον ἕνα, hardly: one question for your many (Beng.) rather: a question, or thing, one and the same (cf. for εἷς in this sense Gen. xli. 25, 26; 1 Cor. iii. 8, xi. 5), an analogous question as we should say; one answer would do for theirs and for His.—Ver. 25. τὸ βάπτισμα τὸ Ἰ., the baptism as representing John's whole ministry.—ἐξ οὐρ. ἢ ἐξ ἀνθ., from heaven or from men? The antithesis is foreign to legitimist modes of thought, which would combine the two: from heaven but through men; if not through men not from heaven. The most gigantic and baleful instance of this fetish in modern times is the notion of church sacraments and orders depending on ordination. On the same principle St. Paul was no apostle, because his orders came to him "not from men nor by man," Gal. i. 1.—ἐὰν εἴπωμεν, etc. The audible and formal answer of the scribes was οὐκ οἴδαμεν, in ver. 27. All that goes before from ἐὰν to προφήτην is the reasoning on which it was based, either unspoken (παρ' or ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, Mt.) or spoken to each other (πρός, Mk. xi. 31); not likely to have been overheard, guessed rather from the puzzled expression on their faces.—οὐκ ἐπιστεύσατε: the reference here may be to John's witness to Jesus, or it may be general = why did ye not receive his message as a whole?—Ver. 26. ἐὰν δὲ, etc.: the mode of expression here is awkward. Meyer finds in the sentence an aposiopesis = "if we say of men—we fear the people". What they mean is: we must not say of men, because we fear, etc. (cf. Mk.).—Ver. 27. οὐδὲ ἐγὼ, etc.: Jesus was not afraid to answer their question, but He felt it was not worth while giving an answer to opportunists.

Vv. 28-32. Parable of the two sons, in Mt. only, introduced by the familiar formula, τί δὲ ὑμῖν δοκεῖ (xvii. 25, xviii. 12), and having for its aim to contrast the conduct of the Pharisees towards the Baptist with that of the publicans. And as the publicans are simply used as a foil to bring out more clearly the Pharisaic character, the main subject of remark, it is highly probable that the son who represents the Pharisee was mentioned first, and the son who represents the ὕπαγε, σήμερον ° ἐργάζου ἐν τῷ ἀμπελῶνί μου.[1] 29. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν,[2] Οὐ θέλω· ὕστερον δὲ [p] μεταμεληθείς, ἀπῆλθε. 30. Καὶ προσελθὼν τῷ δευτέρῳ εἶπεν ὡσαύτως. ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, Ἐγώ, κύριε· καὶ οὐκ ἀπῆλθε. 31. Τίς ἐκ τῶν δύο ἐποίησε τὸ θέλημα τοῦ πατρός;" Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ,[3] "Ὁ πρῶτος."[4] Λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι οἱ τελῶναι καὶ αἱ πόρναι προάγουσιν ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. 32. ἦλθε γὰρ πρὸς ὑμᾶς Ἰωάννης[5] ἐν [q] ὁδῷ δικαιοσύνης, καὶ οὐκ ἐπιστεύσατε αὐτῷ, οἱ δὲ τελῶναι καὶ αἱ πόρναι ἐπίστευσαν αὐτῷ· ὑμεῖς δὲ ἰδόντες οὐ[6] μετεμελήθητε ὕστερον τοῦ πιστεῦσαι αὐτῷ.

o Lk. xiii. 14. John v. 17; ix. 4. 2 Thess. iii. 10.
p Ch. xxvii. 3. 2 Cor. vii. 8. Heb. vii. 21.
q Cf. 2 Pet. ii. 2 (ὁδὸς τῆς ἀληθείας).

[1] μου is wanting in ℵCDLΔΣ. Tisch., Trg., omit, W.H. relegate to margin.

[2] B inverts the order of the two answers, so that verses 29, 30 stand thus: εγω, κυριε, και ουκ απηλθεν. προσελθων δε τω δευτερω ειπεν ωσαυτως. ο δε αποκριθεις ειπεν. ου θελω· υστερον μεταμεληθεις απηλθε. Though supported only by some cursives and versions this reading of B commends itself as the true one, and it has been adopted by W.H. and Weiss. Vide below. Syr. Sin. is not on the side of B.

[3] ℵBDL omit αυτω.

[4] Of course this should be ὁ ὕστερος on B's reading of vv. 29, 30. So in B.

[5] Ιωαννης before προς υ. in ℵBCL. [6] ουδε in B. Some cursives and versions.

publican second; the order in which they stand in B, and adopted by W. and H. The parable, therefore, should read thus: "A certain man had two sons. He said to one, Go work, etc. He replied, Yes, sir, and went not. To the other he said the same. He replied, I will not, and afterwards went."—Ver. 28. τῷ ἀμπελῶνι: constant need of work in a vineyard, and of superintendence of workers.—Ver. 29. ἐγώ: laconic and emphatic as if eager to obey—κύριε, with all due politeness, and most filial recognition of paternal authority, the two words = our "Yes, sir".—Ver. 30. οὐ θέλω, I will not, I am not inclined; rude, sulky, unmannerly, disobedient, and making no pretence to filial loyalty.—Ver. 31. To the question, Who did the will of the father? the answer, when the parable is arranged as above, must, of course, be ὁ ὕστερος; the nay-sayer, not the yea-sayer. It is a wonder any answer was given at all when the purport of the parable was so transparent.—ἀμὴν λέγω ὑ.: introducing here, as always, a very important assertion. The statement following would give deadly offence to the Pharisees.—τελῶναι, πόρναι, the publicans and the harlots, the two socially lowest classes. Jesus speaks here from definite knowledge, not only of what had happened in connection with the Baptist ministry, but of facts connected with His own. He has doubtless reminiscences of the "Capernaum mission" (chap. viii. 9-13) to go upon.—προάγουσιν, go before, anticipate (προλαμβάνουσιν, Euthy.), present tense: they are going before you now; last first, first last. Chrysostom, in Hom. lxvii., gives an interesting story of a courtesan of his time in illustration of this.—Ver. 32. ἐν ὁδῷ δικαιοσύνης: not merely in the sense of being a good pious man with whose life no fault could be found (Meyer; the Fathers, Chrys., Euthy., Theophy.), but in the specific sense of following their own legal way. John was a conservative in religion not less than the Pharisees. He differed from them only by being thoroughly sincere and earnest. They could not, therefore, excuse themselves for not being sympathetic towards him on the ground of his being an innovator, as they could with plausibility in the case of Jesus. The meaning thus is: He cultivated legal piety like yourselves, yet, etc.—ὑμεῖς δὲ ἰδόντες, when ye saw how the sinful took John's summons to repent ye did not even late in the day follow their example and change your attitude. They were too proud to take an example from publicans and harlots.—τοῦ πιστεῦσαι, inf. of result with τοῦ.

Vv. 33-46. Parable of the rebellious vine-dressers (Mk. xii. 1-12, Lk. xx. 9-19).—Ver. 33. ἄλλην π. ἀ., hear another parable; spoken at the same time, and

33. "ʳἌλλην παραβολὴν ἀκούσατε. ἄνθρωπός τις[1] ἦν οἰκοδεσπότης, ὅστις ἐφύτευσεν ἀμπελῶνα, καὶ ʳφραγμὸν αὐτῷ περιέθηκε, καὶ ˢὤρυξεν ἐν αὐτῷ ᵗληνόν, καὶ ᾠκοδόμησε ᵘπύργον, καὶ ἐξέδοτο[2] αὐτὸν γεωργοῖς, καὶ ἀπεδήμησεν. 34. ὅτε δὲ ἤγγισεν ὁ καιρὸς τῶν καρπῶν, ἀπέστειλε τοὺς δούλους αὐτοῦ πρὸς τοὺς γεωργούς, λαβεῖν τοὺς καρποὺς αὐτοῦ· 35. καὶ λαβόντες οἱ γεωργοὶ τοὺς δούλους αὐτοῦ, ὃν μὲν ἔδειραν, ὃν δὲ ἀπέκτειναν, ὃν δὲ ᵛἐλιθοβόλησαν. 36. πάλιν ἀπέστειλεν ἄλλους δούλους πλείονας τῶν πρώτων· καὶ ἐποίησαν αὐτοῖς ὡσαύτως. 37. ὕστερον δὲ ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτοὺς τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ, λέγων, ʷἘντραπήσονται τὸν υἱόν μου. 38. Οἱ δὲ γεωργοὶ ἰδόντες τὸν υἱὸν εἶπον ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ κληρονόμος· δεῦτε, ἀποκτείνωμεν αὐτόν, καὶ κατάσχωμεν[3] τὴν κληρονομίαν αὐτοῦ.

r Mk. xii. 1. Lk. xiv. 23. Eph. ii. 14.
s Ch. xxv. 18. Mk. xii. 1.
t Rev. xiv. 19, 20; xix. 15.
u Mk. xii. 1. Lk. xiii. 4; xiv. 28.
v Ch. xxiii. 37. Lk. xiii. 34. Acts vii. 58.
w Lk. xviii. 3, 4. Heb. xii. 9.

[1] τις wanting in many uncials.

[2] εξεδετο in ℵBCL. εξεδοτο is a grammatical correction.

[3] ισχωμεν in ℵBDLZ.

of kindred import. The abrupt introduction betrays emotion. Jesus is aware that He has given mortal offence, and here shows His knowledge by foreshadowing His own doom. The former parable has exposed the insincerity of the leaders of Israel, this exposes their open revolt against even divine authority.—ἀμπελῶνα: it is another vineyard parable. They were both probably extemporised, the one suggesting the other, the picture of *non*doing calling up the companion picture of *mis*doing.—φραγμὸν ἀ. περιέθηκε, etc.: detailed description of the pains taken by the landlord in the construction of the vineyard, based on Isaiah's song of the vineyard (chap. v. 2), all with a view to fruitfulness, and to fruit of the best kind; for the owner, at least, is very much in earnest: a hedge to protect against wild beasts, a press and vat that the grapes may be squeezed and the juice preserved, a tower that the ripe fruit may not be stolen.—ἐξέδετο, let it out on hire; on what terms—whether for a rent in money or on the metayer system, produce divided between owner and workers—does not here appear. The latter seems to be implied in the parallels (Mk. xii. 2, ἀπὸ τῶν καρπῶν, Lk. xx. 10, ἀπὸ τοῦ καρποῦ).—ἀπεδήμησεν, went abroad, to leave them freedom, and also to give them time; for the newly planted vines would not bear fruit for two or three years. No unreasonableness in this landlord.—Ver. 34. καιρὸς: not merely the season of the year, but the time at which the new vines might be expected to bear.—τοὺς καρποὺς: the whole, apparently implying a money rent. The mode of tenure probably not thought of by this evangelist.—αὐτοῦ should probably be referred to the owner, not to the vineyard = "his fruits," as in A. V.—Ver. 35. λαβόντες οἱ γ., etc. The husbandmen treat the messengers in the most barbarous and truculent manner: beating, killing, stoning to death; highly improbable in the natural sphere, but another instance in which parables have to violate natural probability in order to describe truly men's conduct in the spiritual sphere. On ἔδειραν Kypke remarks: the verb δέρειν for verberare is so rare in profane writers that some have thought that for ἔδειραν should be read ἔδηραν, from δαίρω.—Ver. 36. πλείονας τ. π., more than the first. Some take πλ. as referring to quality rather than number: better than the former (Bengel, Goebel, etc.), which is a legitimate but not likely rendering. The intention is to emphasise the number of persons sent (prophets).—ὡσαύτως: no difference in the treatment; savage mood chronic.—Ver. 37. ὕστερον, not afterwards merely, but finally, the last step was now to be taken, the mission of the son and heir; excuses conceivable hitherto: doubt as to credentials, a provoking manner in those sent, etc.; not yet conclusively proved that deliberate defiance is intended. The patient master will make that clear before taking further steps.—ἐντραπήσονται (pass. for mid.), they will show respect to. It is assumed that they will have no difficulty in knowing him.—Ver. 38. ἰδόντες: neither have they; they

39. καὶ λαβόντες αὐτὸν ἐξέβαλον ἔξω τοῦ ἀμπελῶνος καὶ ἀπέκτειναν. 40. ὅταν οὖν ἔλθῃ ὁ κύριος τοῦ ἀμπελῶνος, τί ποιήσει τοῖς γεωργοῖς ἐκείνοις;" 41. Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Κακοὺς κακῶς ἀπολέσει αὐτούς· καὶ τὸν ἀμπελῶνα ἐκδόσεται[1] ἄλλοις γεωργοῖς, οἵτινες ἀποδώσουσιν αὐτῷ τοὺς καρποὺς ἐν τοῖς καιροῖς αὐτῶν." 42. Λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Οὐδέποτε ἀνέγνωτε ἐν ταῖς [x] γραφαῖς, 'Λίθον ὃν [y] ἀπεδοκίμασαν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν γωνίας· παρὰ Κυρίου ἐγένετο αὕτη, καὶ ἔστι θαυμαστὴ ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς ἡμῶν;'

x Ch. xxvi. 54. Mk. xiv. 49. Lk. xxiv. 27. John v. 39.
y Mk. viii. 31; xii. 10. Lk. ix. 22. Heb. xii. 17 al.

[1] εκδωσεται in all uncials nearly. εκδοσεται in minus. only.

recognise at once the son and heir, and resolve forthwith on desperate courses, which are at once carried out. They eject the son, kill him, and seize the inheritance. The action of the parable is confined to a single season, the messengers following close on each other. But Jesus obviously has in His eye the whole history of Israel, from the settlement in Canaan till His own time, and sees in it God's care about fruit (a holy nation), the mission of the successive prophets to insist that fruit be forthcoming, and the persistent neglect and disloyalty of the people. Neglect, for there was no fruit to give to the messengers, though that does not come out in the parable. The picture is a very sombre one, but it is broadly true. Israel, on the whole, had not only not done God's will, but had badly treated those who urged her to do it. She killed her prophets (Mt. xxiii. 37).

Vv. 40-46. Application.—ὅταν οὖν ἔλθῃ ὁ κ., etc.: what would you expect the owner to do after such ongoings have been reported to him? Observe the subjunctive after ὅταν compared with the indicative ἤγγισεν after ὅτε, ver. 34. ὅτε points to a definite time past, ὅταν is indefinite (vide Hermann, Viger, p. 437).—Ver. 41. λέγουσι, they say: who? the men incriminated, though they could not but see through the thin veil of the allegory. In Mk. and Lk. the words appear to be put into Christ's mouth.—κακοὺς κακῶς ἀπολέσει: a solemn fact classically expressed ("en Graeci sermonis peritiam in Matthaeo"—Raphel, Annot.) = He will badly destroy bad men.—οἵτινες, such as; he will give out the vineyard to husbandmen of a different stamp.—τ. κ. ἐν τοῖς καιροῖς αὐτῶν: the fruits in their (the fruits') seasons, regularly year by year.—Ver. 42. οὐδέποτε ἀνέγνωτε, etc.: another of Christ's impromptu felicitous quotations; from Ps. cxviii. 22, 23 (Sept.). This quotation contains, in germ, another parable, in which the ejected and murdered heir of the former parable becomes the rejected stone of the builders of the theocratic edifice; only, however, to become eventually the accepted honoured stone of God. It is an apposite citation, because probably regarded as Messianic by those in whose hearing it was made (it was so regarded by the Rabbis—Schöttgen, ad loc.), and because it intimated to them that by killing Jesus they would not be done with Him.—Ver. 43. διὰ τοῦτο, introducing the application of the oracle, and implying that the parties addressed are the builders = therefore.—ἡ βασιλεία τ. θ.: the doom is forfeiture of privilege, the kingdom taken from them and given to others.—ἔθνει, to a nation; previously, as Paul calls it, a no nation (οὐκ ἔθνει, Rom. x. 19), the reference being, plainly, to the heathen world.—ποιοῦντι τ. κ. α.: cf. iii. 8, 10; vii. 17, bringing forth the fruits of it (the kingdom). The hope that the new nation will bring forth the fruit is the ground of the transference. God elects with a view to usefulness; a useless elect people has no prescriptive rights.—Ver. 44. This verse, bracketed by W.H., found in the same connection in Lk. (xx. 18), looks rather like an interpolation, yet it suits the situation, serving as a solemn warning to men meditating evil intentions against the Speaker.—ὁ πεσὼν: he who falls on the stone, as if stumbling against it (Is. viii. 14).—συνθλασθήσεται, shall be broken in pieces, like an earthen vessel falling on a rock. This compound is found only in late Greek authors.—ἐφ' ὃν δ' ἂν πέσῃ, on whom it shall fall, in judgment. The distinction is between men who believe not in the Christ through misunderstanding and those who reject Him through an evil heart of unbelief. Both suffer in 43. Διὰ τοῦτο λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἀρθήσεται ἀφ' ὑμῶν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ δοθήσεται ἔθνει ποιοῦντι τοὺς καρποὺς αὐτῆς. 44. καὶ ὁ πεσὼν ἐπὶ τὸν λίθον τοῦτον [z]συνθλασθήσεται· ἐφ' ὃν δ' ἂν πέσῃ, [a]λικμήσει αὐτόν"[1] 45. Καὶ ἀκούσαντες οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι τὰς παραβολὰς αὐτοῦ ἔγνωσαν ὅτι περὶ αὐτῶν λέγει· 46. καὶ ζητοῦντες αὐτὸν κρατῆσαι, ἐφοβήθησαν τοὺς ὄχλους, ἐπειδὴ[2] ὡς[3] προφήτην αὐτὸν εἶχον.

z Lk. xx. 18.
a Lk. xx. 18.

[1] This whole ver. (44) is omitted in D, 33, old Latin versions, Orig., etc. Tisch. omits and W.H. bracket. Weiss regards it as genuine, and thinks that if it had come in from Lk. it would have stood after ver. 42.

[2] επει in ℵBDL. [3] εις in ℵBL.

consequence, but not in the same way, or to the same extent. The one is broken, hurt in limb; the other crushed to powder, which the winds blow away.—λικμήσει, from λικμός, a winnowing fork, to winnow, to scatter to the winds, implying reduction to dust capable of being so scattered = grinding to powder (conteret, Vulg.). For the distinction taken in this verse, cf. chaps. xi. 6; xii. 31, 32.—Ver. 45. The priests and Pharisees of course perceived the drift of these parabolic speeches about the two sons, the vine-dressers, and the rejected stone, and (ver. 46) would have apprehended Him on the spot (Lk. xx. 19) had they not feared the people.—ἐπεὶ, since, introducing the reason of the fear, same as in ver. 26.—εἰς προφήτην = ὡς π., ver. 26, and in xiv. 5, also in reference to John. On this use of εἰς vide Winer, § 32, 4, b.

CHAPTER XXII. PARABLE OF THE WEDDING FEAST AND ENCOUNTERS WITH OPPONENTS. — Vv. 1-14. The royal wedding.—This parable is peculiar to Mt., and while in some respects very suitable to the situation, may not unreasonably be suspected to owe its place here to the evangelist's habit of grouping kindred matter. The second part of the parable referring to the man without a wedding robe has no connection with the present situation, or with the Pharisees who are supposed to be addressed. Another question has been much discussed, viz., whether this parable was spoken by Jesus at all on any occasion, the idea of many critics being that it is a parable of Christ's reconstructed by the evangelist or some other person, so as to make it cover the sin and fate of the Jews, the calling of the Gentiles, and the Divine demand for righteousness in all recipients of His grace. The resemblance between this parable and that of the Supper, in Lk. xiv. 16-24, is obvious. Assuming that Jesus uttered a parable of this type, the question arises: which of the two forms given by Mt. and Lk. comes nearer to the original? The general verdict is in favour of Luke's. As to the question of the authenticity of Mt.'s parable, the mere fact that the two parables have a common theme and many features similar is no proof that both could not proceed from Jesus. Why should not the later parable be the same theme handled by the same Artist with variations so as to make it serve a different while connected purpose, the earlier being a parable of Grace, the later a parable of Judgment upon grace despised or abused? If the didactic aim of the two parables was as just indicated, the method of variation was preferable to the use of two parables totally unconnected. "What is common gives emphasis to what is peculiar, and bids us mark what it is that is judged" (The Parabolic Teaching of Christ, p. 463). The main objections to the authenticity of the parable are its allegorical character, and its too distinct anticipation of history. The former objection rests on the assumption that Jesus uttered no parables of the allegorical type. On this, vide remarks on the parable of the Sower, chap. xiii.

Ver. 1. ἐν παραβολαῖς, the plural does not imply more than one parable, but merely indicates the style of address = parabolically.—Ver. 2. γάμους, a wedding feast; plural, because the festivities lasted for days, seven in Judges xiv. 17. The suggestion that the feast is connected with the handing over of the kingdom to the son ("quem pater successorem declarare volebat," Kuinoel) is not to be despised. The marriage

XXII. 1. ΚΑΙ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς πάλιν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ἐν παραβολαῖς,[1] λέγων, 2. "Ὡμοιώθη ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ βασιλεῖ, ὅστις ἐποίησε [a] γάμους τῷ υἱῷ αὐτοῦ· 3. καὶ ἀπέστειλε τοὺς δούλους αὐτοῦ [b] καλέσαι τοὺς κεκλημένους εἰς τοὺς γάμους, καὶ οὐκ ἤθελον ἐλθεῖν. 4. Πάλιν ἀπέστειλεν ἄλλους δούλους, λέγων, Εἴπατε τοῖς κεκλημένοις, Ἰδού, τὸ [c] ἄριστόν μου ἡτοίμασα,[2] οἱ [d] ταῦροί μου καὶ τὰ [e] σιτιστὰ τεθυμένα, καὶ πάντα ἕτοιμα· δεῦτε εἰς τοὺς γάμους. 5. Οἱ δὲ ἀμελήσαντες ἀπῆλθον, ὁ μὲν[3] εἰς τὸν ἴδιον ἀγρόν, ὁ δὲ[3] εἰς[4] τὴν ἐμπορίαν αὐτοῦ· 6. οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ κρατήσαντες a here several times; xxv. 10. Lk. xii. 36; xiv. 8 (in all plural).

b vide Ch. ix. 13. 1 Cor. x. 27.
c Lk. xi. 38; xiv. 12.
d Acts xiv. 13. Heb. ix. 13; x. 4.
e here only in N. T. (Joseph, Ant., viii. 2, 4. Cf. σιτευτός in Lk. xv. 23, 27, 30).

[1] αυτοις after παραβολαις in ℵBDL (modern editors).

[2] ητοιμακα in ℵBCDLΣ and adopted by modern editors.

[3] οσ μεν, ος δε in ℵBCLΣ, several cursives.

[4] επι in ℵBCD, 13, 33, 69, etc.

and recognition of the son as heir to the throne might be combined, which would give to the occasion a political significance, and make appearance at the marriage a test of loyalty. Eastern monarchs had often many sons by different wives, and heirship to the throne did not go by primogeniture, but by the pleasure of the sovereign, determined in many cases by affection for a favourite wife, as in the case of Solomon (Koetsveld, de Gelijk.)—Ver. 3. καλέσαι τοὺς κεκλημένους, to invite the already invited. This second invitation seems to accord with Eastern custom (Esther vi. 14). The first invitation was given to the people of Israel by the prophets in the Messianic pictures of a good time coming. This aspect of the prophetic ministry was welcomed. Israel never responded to the prophetic demand for righteousness, as shown in the parable of the vine-dressers, but they were pleased to hear of God's gracious visitation in the latter days, to be invited to a feast in the indefinite future time. How they would act when the feast was due remained to be seen.—τοὺς δούλους, the servants, are John the Baptist and Jesus Himself, whose joint message to their generation was: the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, feast time at length arrived.—οὐκ ἤθελον ἐλθεῖν. Israel in all her generations had been willing in a general way, quite intending to come; and the generation of John and Jesus were also willing in a general way, if it had only been the right son who was going to be married. How could they be expected to accept the obscure Nazarene for Bridegroom and Heir?—Ver. 4. ἄλλους δούλους refers to the apostles whose ministry gave to the same generation a second chance.—εἴπατε: the second set of messengers are instructed what to say; they are expected not merely to invite to but to commend the feast, to provoke desire.—ἰδού, to arrest attention.—ἄριστόν μου, the midday meal, as distinct from δεῖπνον, which came later in the day (vide Lk. xiv. 12, where both are named = early dinner and supper). With the ἄριστον the festivities begin.—ἡτοίμακα, perfect, I have in readiness.—ταῦροι, σιτιστὰ, bulls, or oxen, and fed beasts: speak to a feast on a vast scale.—τεθυμένα, slain, and therefore must be eaten without delay. The word is often used in connection with the slaying of sacrificial victims, and the idea of sacrifice may be in view here (Koetsveld).—πάντα, etc.: all things ready, come to the feast. This message put into the mouths of the second set of servants happily describes the ministry of the apostles compared with that of our Lord, as more urgent or aggressive, and proclaiming a more developed gospel. "They talked as it were of oxen and fed beasts and the other accompaniments of a feast, with an eloquence less dignified, but more fitted to impress the million with a sense of the riches of Divine grace" (The Parabolic Teaching of Christ).

Vv. 5-7. οἱ δὲ ἀμελήσαντες ἀπῆλθον. The Vulgate resolves the participle and translates: "neglexerunt et abierunt," so also the A.V. and R.V.; justly, for the participle points out the state of mind τοὺς δούλους αὐτοῦ [f] ὕβρισαν καὶ ἀπέκτειναν. 7. Ἀκούσας δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς [1] ὠργίσθη, καὶ πέμψας τὰ [g] στρατεύματα [2] αὐτοῦ ἀπώλεσε τοὺς φονεῖς ἐκείνους, καὶ τὴν πόλιν αὐτῶν [h] ἐνέπρησε. 8. Τότε λέγει τοῖς δούλοις αὐτοῦ, Ὁ μὲν γάμος ἕτοιμός ἐστιν, οἱ δὲ κεκλημένοι οὐκ ἦσαν ἄξιοι. 9. πορεύεσθε οὖν ἐπὶ τὰς [i] διεξόδους τῶν ὁδῶν, καὶ ὅσους ἂν εὕρητε, καλέσατε εἰς τοὺς γάμους. 10. Καὶ ἐξελθόντες οἱ δοῦλοι ἐκεῖνοι εἰς τὰς ὁδοὺς συνήγαγον πάντας ὅσους [3] εὗρον, πονηρούς [j] τε καὶ ἀγαθούς· καὶ ἐπλήσθη ὁ γάμος [4] ἀνακειμένων.

f Lk. xi. 45; xviii. 32. Acts xiv. 5.
g Lk. xxiii. 11. Acts xxiii. 10, 27. Rev. ix. 16; xix. 14, 19.
h here only in N. T.
i here only in N. T. (Ps. i. 3; cxix. 136).
j This part. is rare in Mt.; here, Ch. xxvii. 47, xxviii. 12. Often in Acts and Heb.

[1] For ακουσας δε ο βασ. ℵBL have ο δε βασιλευς.

[2] D has το στρατευμα (Trg. in margin).

[3] ους in ℵD (W.H).

[4] νυμφων in ℵBL (Tisch., W.H.).

which gave rise to the conduct specified. They treated the pressing invitations and glowing descriptions of the servants with indifference.—ὃς μὲν, ὃς δὲ: this one to his own (ἴδιον for αὐτοῦ = proprius for suus) field, that one to his trading (ἐμπορίαν here only in N. T. Cf. Lk. at this point).—Ver. 6. λοιποὶ, the rest, as if οἱ ἀμελήσαντες were only a part, the greater part, of the invited, while the expression by itself naturally covers the whole. Weiss finds in λοιποὶ a trace of patching: the parable originally referred to the people of Israel as a whole, but Mt. introduced a reference to the Synedrists and here has them specially in view as the λοιποί. Koetsveld remarks on the improbability of the story at this point: men at a distance—rulers of provinces—could not be invited in the morning with the expectation of their being present at the palace by midday. So far this makes for the hypothesis of remodelling by a second hand. But even in Christ's acknowledged parables improbabilities are sometimes introduced to meet the requirements of the case; e.g., in Lk.'s version of the parable all refuse.—κρατήσαντες . . . ὕβ. καὶ ἀπέκτειναν: acts of open rebellion inevitably leading to war. This feature, according to Weiss, lies outside the picture. Not so, if the marriage feast was to be the occasion for recognising the son as heir. Then refusal to come meant withholding homage, rebellion in the bud, and acts of violence were but the next step.—Ver. 7. τὰ στρατεύματα: the plural appears surprising, but the meaning seems to be, not separate armies sent one after another, but forces. —ἀπώλεσε, ἐνέπρησεν: the allegory here evidently refers to the destruction of Jerusalem; no argument against authenticity, if xxiv. 2 be a word of Jesus. Note that the destruction of Jerusalem is represented as taking place before the calling of those without = the Gentiles. This is not according to the historic fact. This makes for authenticity, as a later allegorist would have been likely to observe the historical order (vide Schanz).

Vv. 8-10. τότε: after the second set of servants, as many as survived, had returned and reported their ill-success.—λέγει, he says to them.—ἕτοιμος, ready, and more.—Ver. 9. ἐπὶ τὰς διεξόδους, variously interpreted: at the crossing-places of the country roads (Fritzsche, De Wette, Meyer, Goebel); or at the places in the city whence the great roads leading into the country start (Kypke, Loesner, Kuinoel, Trench, Weiss). "According as we emphasise one or other prep. in the compound word, either: the places whence the roads run out, or Oriental roads passing into the city through gates" (Holtz, H. C.). The second view is the more likely were it only because, the time pressing, the place where new guests are to be found must be near at hand. In the open spaces of the city, strangers from the country as well as the lower population of the town could be met with; the foreign element = Gentiles, mainly in view.—Ver. 10. πονηρούς τε καὶ ἀγαθούς: not in the mood to make distinctions. τε connects πον. and ἀγαθ. together as one company = all they found, of all sorts, bad or good, the market-place swept clean.—ἐπλήσθη, was filled; satisfactory after the trouble in getting guests at all.—νυμφὼν, the marriage dining-hall; in ix. 15 the bridechamber.

k Lk. xxiii. 55. 11. εἰσελθὼν δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς [k] θεάσασθαι τοὺς ἀνακειμένους εἶδεν ἐκεῖ ἄνθρωπον οὐκ ἐνδεδυμένον ἔνδυμα γάμου· 12. καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, Ἑταῖρε, πῶς εἰσῆλθες ὧδε μὴ ἔχων ἔνδυμα γάμου; Ὁ δὲ [1] ἐφιμώθη.

l ver. 34. Mk. i. 25; iv. 39. Lk. iv. 35. 1 Tim. v. 18. 13. τότε εἶπεν ὁ βασιλεὺς [1] τοῖς διακόνοις, Δήσαντες αὐτοῦ πόδας καὶ χεῖρας, ἄρατε αὐτὸν καὶ ἐκβάλετε [2] εἰς τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον· ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων. 14. πολλοὶ γάρ εἰσι κλητοί, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἐκλεκτοί."

[1] ειπεν after βασιλευς in ℵBL, cursives.

[2] For αρατε α. και εκβ. ℵBL have simply εκβαλετε αυτον (W.H.).

Vv. 11-14. The man without a wedding garment.—Though this feature has no connection with the polemic against the Sanhedrists, it does not follow, as even Weiss (Matthäus-Evang.) admits, that it was not an authentic part of a parable spoken by Jesus. It would form a suitable pendant to any parable of grace, as showing that, while the door of the kingdom is open to all, personal holiness cannot be dispensed with.—Ver. 11. θεάσασθαι: we are not to suppose that the king came in to look out for offenders, but rather to show his countenance to his guests and make them welcome.—ἄνθρωπον, etc.: while he was going round among the guests smiling welcome and speaking here and there a gracious word, his eye lighted on a man without a wedding robe. Only one? More might have been expected in such a company, but one suffices to illustrate the principle. —οὐκ ἐνδεδ., we have here an example of occasional departure from the rule that participles in the N. T. take μή as the negative in all relations.—Ver. 12. ἑταῖρε, as in xx. 13.—πῶς εἰσῆλθες ὧδε: the question might mean, By what way did you come in? the logic of the question being, had you entered by the door you would have received a wedding robe like the rest, therefore you must have come over a wall or through a window, or somehow slipped in unobserved (Koetsveld). This assumes that the guests were supplied with robes by the king's servants, which in the circumstances is intrinsically probable. All had to come in a hurry as they were, and some would have no suitable raiment, even had there been time to put it on. What the custom was is not very clear. The parable leaves this point in the background, and simply indicates that a suitable robe was necessary, however obtained. The king's question probably means, how dared you come hither without, etc.?—μὴ ἔχων: μὴ this time, not οὐ, as in ver. 11, implying blame. Euthymius includes the question as to how the man got in among the things not to be inquired into, διὰ τὴν αὐτονομίαν (freedom) τῆς παραβολῆς.—ὁ δὲ ἐφιμώθη, he was dumb, not so much from a sense of guilt as from confusion in presence of the great king finding fault, and from fear of punishment.—Ver. 13. τοῖς διακόνοις, the servants waiting on the guests, cf. Lk. xxii. 27, John ii. 5.—δήσαντες, ἐκβάλετε: disproportionate fuss, we are apt to think, about the rude act of an unmannerly clown. Enough surely simply to turn him out, instead of binding him hand and foot as a criminal preparatory to some fearful doom. But matters of etiquette are seriously viewed at courts, especially in the East, and the king's temper is already ruffled by previous insults, which make him jealous for his honour. And the anger of the king serves the didactic aim of the parable, which is to enforce the lesson: sin not because grace abounds. After all the doom of the offender is simply to be turned out of the festive chamber into the darkness of night outside.—ἐκεῖ ἔσται, etc.: stock-phrase descriptive of the misery of one cast out into the darkness, possibly no part of the parable. On this expression Furrer remarks: "How weird and frightful, for the wanderer who has lost his way, the night, when clouds cover the heavens, and through the deep darkness the howling and teeth-grinding of hungry wolves strike the ear of the lonely one! Truly no figure could more impressively describe the anguish of the God-forsaken" (Wanderungen, p. 181).—Ver. 14. πολλοὶ γὰρ: if, as γὰρ might suggest, the concluding aphorism referred exclusively to the fate of the unrobed guest, we should be obliged to conclude that the story did not supply a good illustration of its truth, only one

15. Τότε πορευθέντες οἱ Φαρισαῖοι συμβούλιον ἔλαβον ὅπως αὐτὸν [m] παγιδεύσωσιν ἐν λόγῳ. 16. καὶ ἀποστέλλουσιν αὐτῷ τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτῶν μετὰ τῶν Ἡρωδιανῶν, λέγοντες,[1] "Διδάσκαλε, [n] οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἀληθὴς εἶ, καὶ τὴν ὁδὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ διδάσκεις, καὶ οὐ [n] μέλει σοι περὶ οὐδενός, οὐ γὰρ [o] βλέπεις εἰς πρόσωπον ἀνθρώπων.

m here only in N. T., vide below.
n Mk. xii. 14. John x. 13; xii. 6. 1 Pet. v. 7 (with περί τινος).
o 2 Cor. x. 7 (τὰ κατὰ πρόσωπον).

[1] λεγοντας in ℵBL in agreement with μαθητας. The reading λεγοντες has CDΔΣ al. in its favour, but modern editors prefer the other.

out of many guests called being rejected. But the gnome really expresses the didactic drift of the whole parable. From first to last many were called, but comparatively few took part in the feast, either from lack of will to be there or from coming thither irreverently.

Vv. 15-22. The tribute question (Mk. xii. 13-17, Lk. xx. 20-26).—In this astute scheme the Synedrists, according to Mk., were the prime movers, using other parties as their agents. Here the Pharisees act on their own motion.—Ver. 15. τότε, then, with reference to xxi. 46, when the Synedrists were at a loss how to get Jesus into their power.—συμβούλιον ἔλαβον may refer either to process: consulting together; or to result: formed a plan.—ὅπως, either how (quomodo, Beza, wie, H. C.), which, however, would more naturally take the future indicative (Fritzsche), or, better, in order that.—παγιδεύσωσιν, they might ensnare, an Alexandrine word, not in classics, here and in Sept. (vide Eccl. ix. 12).—ἐν λόγῳ, by a word, either the question they were to ask (δι' ἐρωτήσεως, Euthy.), or the answer they hoped He would give (Meyer). For the idea, cf. Is. xxix. 21.—Ver. 16. ἀποστέλλουσιν, as in Mk. xii. 13; there intelligible, here one wonders why the sent of Mk. should be senders of others instead of acting themselves. The explanation may be that the leading plotters felt themselves to be discredited with Jesus by their notorious attitude, and, therefore, used others more likely to succeed. More than fault-finding is now intended—even to draw Jesus into a compromising utterance.—τοὺς μαθητὰς α., disciples, apparently meant to be emphasised; i.e., scholars, not masters; young men, presumably not incapable of appreciating Jesus, in whose case a friendly feeling towards Him was not incredible, as in the case of older members of the party.—μετὰ τ. Ἡρῳδιανῶν, with Herodians, named here only in Mat., associated with Sadducees in Mk. viii. 15; why so called is a matter of conjecture, and the guesses are many: soldiers of Herod (Jerome); courtiers of Herod (Fritzsche, following Syr. ver.); Jews belonging to the northern tetrarchies governed by members of the Herod family (Lutteroth); favourers of the Roman dominion (Orig., De W., etc.); sympathisers with the desire for a national kingdom so far gratified or stimulated by the rule of the Herod family. The last the most probable, and adopted by many: Wetstein, Meyer, Weiss, Keil, Schanz, etc. The best clue to the spirit of the party is their association with the Pharisees here. It presumably means sympathy with the Pharisees in the matter at issue; i.e., nationalism versus willing submission to a foreign yoke; only not religious or theocratic, as in case of Pharisees, but secular, as suited men of Sadducaic proclivities. The object aimed at implies such sympathy. To succeed the snare must be hidden. Had the two parties been on opposite sides Jesus would have been put on His guard. The name of this party probably originated in a kind of hero-worship for Herod the Great. Vide on xvi. 1.—λέγοντας, etc., the snare set with much astuteness, and well baited with flattery, the bait coming first.—διδάσκαλε, teacher, an appropriate address from scholars in search of knowledge, or desiring the solution of a knotty question.—οἴδαμεν, we know, everybody knows. Even Pharisees understood so far the character of Jesus, as here appears; for their disciples say what they have been instructed to say. Therefore their infamous theory of a league with Beelzebub (xii. 24) was a sin against light; i.e., against the Holy Ghost. Pharisaic scholars might even feel a sentimental, half-sincere admiration for the character described, nature not yet dead in them as in their teachers. The points in the character specified are—p here only in N. T. 17. εἰπὲ[1] οὖν ἡμῖν, τί σοι δοκεῖ; ἔξεστι δοῦναι κῆνσον Καίσαρι, ἢ οὔ;" 18. Γνοὺς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὴν πονηρίαν αὐτῶν εἶπε, "Τί με πειράζετε, ὑποκριταί; 19. ἐπιδείξατέ μοι τὸ [p] νόμισμα τοῦ κήνσου." Οἱ δὲ προσήνεγκαν αὐτῷ δηνάριον. 20. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς,[2] "Τίνος ἡ [q] εἰκὼν αὕτη καὶ ἡ [r] ἐπιγραφή;" 21. Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ,[3] "Καίσαρος." Τότε λέγει αὐτοῖς, "[s] Ἀπόδοτε οὖν τὰ Καίσαρος Καίσαρι· καὶ τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ τῷ Θεῷ." 22. Καὶ ἀκούσαντες ἐθαύμασαν· καὶ ἀφέντες αὐτὸν ἀπῆλθον.

q here, parall., Rom. i. 23; viii. 29 al. Heb. x. 1.
r Mk. xii. 16. Lk. xx. 24. Mk. xv. 26. Lk. xxiii. 38.
s parall. and Rom. xiii. 7 in same sense.

[1] ειπον in LZ, and adopted by Tisch. and W.H., though ειπε is found in ℵBC.

[2] DLZ add ο Ιησους after αυτοις and W.H. put it in margin.

[3] ℵB omit αυτω.

(1) sincerity—ἀληθής; (2) fidelity, as a religious teacher—καὶ τ. ὁ τ. θ. ἐν ἀληθείᾳ διδάσκεις; (3) fearlessness—οὐ μέλει, etc.; (4) no respecter of persons—οὐ βλέπεις, etc. = will speak the truth to all and about all impartially. The compliment, besides being treacherous, was insulting, implying that Jesus was a reckless simpleton who would give Himself away, and a vain man who could be flattered. But, in reality, they sinned in ignorance. Such men could not understand the character of Jesus thoroughly: e.g., His humility, His wisdom, and His superiority to partisan points of view.—Ver. 17. εἰπὸν οὖν, etc.: the snare, a question as to the lawfulness in a religious point of view (ἔξεστι—fas est, Grotius) of paying tribute to Caesar. The question implies a possible antagonism between such payment and duty to God as theocratic Head of the nation. Vide Deut. xvii. 15.—ἢ οὔ: yes or no? they expect or desire a negative answer, and they demand a plain one—responsum rotundum, Bengel; for an obvious reason indicated by Lk. (xx. 20). They demanded more than they were ready to give, whatever their secret leanings; no fear of them playing a heroic part.

Vv. 18-22. Christ's reply and its effect.—Ver. 18. πονηρίαν, ὑποκριταί, wickedness, hypocrites; the former the evangelist's word, the latter Christ's, both thoroughly deserved. It was a wicked plot against His life veiled under apparently sincere compliments of young inquirers, and men of the world who posed as admirers of straightforwardness.—Ver. 19. τὸ νόμισμα (Latin numisma, here only in N. T.) τοῦ κήνσου, the current coin of the tribute, i.e., in which the tribute was paid, a roundabout name for a denarius (Mark).—δηνάριον, a Roman coin, silver, in which metal tribute was paid (Pliny, N. H., 33, 3, 15; Marquardt, Röm. Alt., 3, 2, 147).—Ver. 20. ἡ εἰκὼν: the coin produced bore an image; perhaps not necessarily, though Roman, as the Roman rulers were very considerate of Jewish prejudices in this as in other matters (Holtzmann, H. C.), but at passover time there would be plenty of coins bearing Caesar's image and inscription to be had even in the pockets of would-be zealots.—Ver. 21. ἀπόδοτε, the ordinary word for paying dues (Meyer), yet there is point in Chrysostom's remark: οὐ γάρ ἐστι τοῦτο δοῦναι, ἀλλ' ἀποδοῦναι· καὶ τοῦτο καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς εἰκόνος, καὶ ἀπο τῆς ἐπιγραφῆς δείκνυται (H. lxx.). The image and inscription showed that giving (ver. 17) tribute to Caesar was only giving back to him his own. This was an unanswerable argumentum ad hominem as addressed to men who had no scruple about using Caesar's coin for ordinary purposes, but of course it did not settle the question. The previous question might be raised, Had Caesar a right to coin money for Palestine, i.e., to rule over it? The coin showed that he was ruler de facto, but not necessarily de jure, unless on the doctrine that might is right. The really important point in Christ's answer is, not what is said but what is implied, viz., that national independence is not an ultimate good, nor the patriotism that fights for it an ultimate virtue. This doctrine Jesus held in common with the prophets. He virtually asserted it by distinguishing between the things of Caesar and the things of God. To have treated these as one, the latter category absorbing the former, would have been to say: The kingdom of God means the kingdom restored to Israel. By treating t here only in N. T. (Gen. xxxiv. 9; xxxviii. 8).

23. Ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ προσῆλθον αὐτῷ Σαδδουκαῖοι, οἱ[1] λέγοντες μὴ εἶναι ἀνάστασιν, καὶ ἐπηρώτησαν αὐτόν, λέγοντες, 24. "Διδάσκαλε, Μωσῆς εἶπεν, ''Ἐάν τις ἀποθάνῃ μὴ ἔχων τέκνα, [t] ἐπιγαμβρεύσει ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀναστήσει σπέρμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ.' 25. Ἦσαν δὲ παρ' ἡμῖν ἑπτὰ ἀδελφοί· καὶ ὁ πρῶτος γαμήσας[2] ἐτελεύτησε· καὶ μὴ ἔχων σπέρμα, ἀφῆκε τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ. 26. ὁμοίως καὶ ὁ δεύτερος, καὶ ὁ τρίτος, ἕως τῶν ἑπτά. 27. ὕστερον δὲ πάντων ἀπέθανε καὶ[3] ἡ γυνή. 28. ἐν τῇ οὖν ἀναστάσει,[4] τίνος τῶν ἑπτὰ ἔσται γυνή; πάντες γὰρ ἔσχον αὐτήν." 29. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "[u] Πλα-

u Mk xii. 24, 27. 1 Cor. vi. 9; xv. 33. Gal. vi. 7. Heb. v. 2. James i. 16 (all intrans.).

[1] ℵBDZ omit οι (Tisch., W.H.). It might fall out by similar ending of previous word. Vide below.

[2] γημας in ℵBLΣ, several cursives. γαμησας has probably been substituted as the more usual word.

[3] και omitted in ℵBLΔ, found in D; may have come in from Mk.

[4] ουν after αναστασει in ℵBDL.

them as distinct Jesus said in effect: The kingdom of God is not of this world, it is possible to be a true citizen of the kingdom and yet quietly submit to the civil rule of a foreign potentate. This is the permanent didactic significance of the shrewd reply, safe and true (tutum et verum, Bengel), by which Jesus outwitted His crafty foes.—Ver. 22. ἐθαύμασαν, wondered; the reply a genuine surprise, they had not thought it possible that He could slip out of their hands so completely and so easily.

Vv. 23-33. The Sadducaic puzzle (Mk. xii. 18-27, Lk. xx. 27-38).—Ver. 23. προσῆλθον, approached, but with different intent, aiming at amusement rather than deadly mischief. Jesus was of no party, and the butt of all the parties.—λέγοντες, with οἱ, introduces the creed of the Sadducees; without it, what they said to Jesus. They came and said: We do not believe in the resurrection, and we will prove to you its absurdity. This is probably Mt.'s meaning. He would not think it necessary to explain the tenets of the Sadducees to Jewish readers. —Ver. 24. Μωσῆς εἶπεν, what is put into the mouth of all is a free combination of Deut. xxv. 5, 6, with Gen. xxxviii. 8. In the latter text the Sept. has ἐπιγαμβρεύσαι for the Heb. יַבֵּם = to perform the part of a levir (Latin for brother-in-law) by marrying a deceased brother's widow having no children. An ancient custom not confined to Israel, but practised by Arabians and other peoples (vide Ewald, Alterthümer, p. 278; Benzinger, H. A., p. 345).—Ver. 25. παρ' ἡμῖν: this phrase "with us," in Matthew only, seems to turn an imaginary case into a fact (Holtz., H. C.). A fact it could hardly be. As Chrys. humorously remarks after the second the brothers would shun the woman as a thing of evil omen (οἰωνίσαντο ἂν τὴν γυναῖκα, H. lxx.).—Ver. 26. ἕως τῶν ἑπτά till the seven, i.e., till the number was exhausted by death. "Usque eo dum illi septem extincti essent" (Fritzsche).—Ver. 28. οὖν, introducing the puzzling question based on the case stated.—γυνή either subject = whose will the woman be? or better, the article being wanting, predicate = whose wife will she be? Cf. Luke, where γυνή is used twice.—πάντες γὰρ ἔ. α., all had her, and therefore (such is the implied thought) all had equal rights. Very clever puzzle, but not insuperably difficult even for Talmudists cherishing materialistic ideas of the resurrection life, who gave the first husband the prior claim (Schöttgen).

Vv. 29-33. Christ's answer.—One at first wonders that He deigned to answer such triflers; but He was willing meekly to instruct even the perverse, and He never forgot that there might be receptive earnest people within hearing. The Sadducees drew from Him one of His great words.—Ver. 29. πλανᾶσθε, ye err, passionless unprovocative statement, as if speaking indulgently to ignorant men.—

νᾶσθε, μὴ εἰδότες τὰς γραφάς, μηδὲ τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ Θεοῦ. 30. ἐν γὰρ τῇ ἀναστάσει οὔτε γαμοῦσιν, οὔτε ἐκγαμίζονται,[1] ἀλλ' ὡς ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν[2] οὐρανῷ εἰσι. 31. περὶ δὲ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῶν νεκρῶν, οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑμῖν ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, λέγοντος, 32. 'Ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ Θεὸς Ἀβραάμ, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς Ἰσαάκ, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς Ἰακώβ;' Οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ[3] Θεὸς Θεὸς[4] νεκρῶν, ἀλλὰ ζώντων." 33. Καὶ ἀκούσαντες οἱ ὄχλοι ἐξεπλήσσοντο ἐπὶ τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ.

34. Οἱ δὲ Φαρισαῖοι, ἀκούσαντες ὅτι ἐφίμωσε τοὺς Σαδδουκαίους, συνήχθησαν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, 35. καὶ ἐπηρώτησεν εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν [v] νομικός, πειράζων αὐτόν, καὶ λέγων,[5] 36. "Διδάσκαλε, ποία ἐντολὴ μεγάλη v Lk. vii. 30; x. 25; xi. 45; xiv. 3. Tit. iii. 13.

[1] γαμιζονται in ℵBDL; the compound in many uncials.

[2] ℵBL have τω before ουρανω. DΔΣ omit.

[3] ℵD (Tisch.) omit ο. W.H. in brackets.

[4] The second θεος is wanting in ℵBDLΔ al. It has been added to make the meaning clear.

[5] και λεγων is probably a mechanical addition. It is wanting in ℵBL 33, Egypt. verss.; found in DΔΣ. Tisch. and W.H. omit.

μὴ εἰδότες, etc.: doubly ignorant; of the Scriptures and of God's power, the latter form of ignorance being dealt with first.—Ver. 30. ἐν γὰρ τ. ἀναστάσει might be rendered, with Fritzsche, in the resurrection life or state, though in strictness the phrase should be taken as in ver. 28.—ὡς ἄγγελοι, as angels, so far as marriage is concerned, not necessarily implying sexlessness as the Fathers supposed.—ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ refers to the resurrected dead (Weiss), not to angels (Meyer) = they live an angelic life in heaven; by the transforming power of God.—Ver. 31. Thus far of the mode, now of the fact of resurrection.—οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε, have ye not read? Many times, but not with Christ's eyes. We find what we bring.—τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑμῖν, that said to you; to Moses first, but a word in season for the Sadducaic state of mind.—Ver. 32. Ἐγώ εἰμι, etc., quoted from Ex. iii. 6. The stress does not lie on εἰμι, to which there is nothing corresponding in the Hebrew, but on the relation implied in the title: God of Abraham. Note in this connection the repetition of the Divine name before each of the patriarchal names, and here the article ὁ before θεὸς each time (not so in Sept.). The idea is that the Eternal could not stand in such intimate connection with the merely temporal. The argument holds a fortiori in reference to Christ's name for God, Father, which compels belief in human immortality, and in the immortality of all, for God is Father of all men, whereas the text quoted might avail in proof only of the immortality of the great ones, the heroes of the race.—οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ θεὸς, with the article θεὸς is subject, and the idea: God does not belong to the dead; without, it would be predicate = He is not a God of the dead. On second θεὸς vide critical notes.

Vv. 34-40. The great commandments (Mk. xii. 34).—In a still more marked degree than in the case of the man in quest of eternal life, Mk.'s account presents the subject of this incident in a more favourable light than that of Mt. The difference must be allowed to stand. Mk.'s version is welcome as showing a good side even in the scribe or Pharisee world.—Ver. 34. ἀκούσαντες, hearing; not without pleasure, if also with annoyance, at the uniform success of Jesus.—ἐφίμωσεν: silenced, muzzled, from φιμός, a muzzle (ver. 12, used in literal sense in Deut. xxv. 4).—Ver. 35. εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν, one of the men who met together to consult, after witnessing the discomfiture of the scribes, acting in concert with them, and hoping to do better.—νομικὸς: here only in Mt., several times in Lk. for the scribe class = a man well up in the law.—Ver. 36. ποία ἐντολὴ: what sort of a commandment? it is a question not about an individual commandment, but about the qualities that determine greatness in the legal region. This was a question of the schools. The dis-

ἐν τῷ νόμῳ;" 37. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν[1] αὐτῷ, "Ἀγαπήσεις Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου, ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ καρδίᾳ σου, καὶ ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ ψυχῇ σου, καὶ ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ διανοίᾳ σου. 38. αὕτη ἐστὶ πρώτη καὶ μεγάλη[2] ἐντολή. 39. δευτέρα δὲ[3] ὁμοία αὐτῇ,[4] Ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς σεαυτόν. 40. ἐν ταύταις ταῖς δυσὶν ἐντολαῖς ὅλος ὁ νόμος καὶ οἱ προφῆται ʷ κρέμανται."[5]

41. Συνηγμένων δὲ τῶν Φαρισαίων, ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτοὺς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, λέγων, 42. "Τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ περὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ; τίνος υἱός ἐστι;"

w with ἐν τινι here only; with ἐκ and gen. in Acts xxviii. 4; with ἐπι and gen., Gal. iii. 13 (of one hanging on a cross).

[1] For ο δε Ιησους ειπεν ℵBL, Egypt. verss., have ο δε εφη. So Trg., Tisch., W.H., Ws.

[2] μεγαλη και πρωτη in ℵBDLZ. The scribes would be apt to introduce the inverted order (as in T. R.) as the more natural.

[3] ℵB omit δε.

[4] For ομοια αυτη B has simply ομοιως, which W.H. place in the margin. Perhaps it is the true reading.

[5] In ℵBDLZΣ the verb comes before οι προφηται and is singular; doubtless the true reading.

tinction between little and great was recognised (vide chap. v. 19), and the grounds of the distinction debated (vide Schöttgen, ad loc., who goes into the matter at length). Jesus had already made a contribution to the discussion by setting the ethical above the ritual (xv. 1-20, cf. xix. 18-22).—Ver. 37. ἀγαπήσεις, etc. Jesus replies by citing Deut. vi. 5, which inculcates supreme, devoted love to God, and pronouncing this the great (μεγάλη) and greatest, first (πρώτη) commandment. The clauses referring to heart, soul, and mind are to be taken cumulatively, as meaning love to the uttermost degree; with "all that is within" us (πάντα τὰ ἐντός μου, Ps. ciii. 1). This commandment is cited not merely as an individual precept, but as indicating the spirit that gives value to all obedience.—Ver. 39. δευτέρα: a second commandment is added from Lev. xix. 18, enjoining loving a neighbour as ourselves. According to T. R., this second is declared like to the first (ὁμοία αὐτῇ). The laconic reading of B (δευτ. ὁμοίως) amounts to the same thing = the second is also a great, first commandment, being, though formally subordinate to the first, really the first in another form: love to God and love to man one. Euthy. Zig. suggests that Jesus added the second commandment in tacit rebuke of their lack of love to Himself.—Ver. 40. ὁ. ὁ νόμος κρέμαται. Jesus winds up by declaring that on these two hangs, is suspended, the whole law, also the prophets = the moral drift of the whole O. T. is love; no law or performance of law of any value save as love is the soul of it. So Jesus soars away far above the petty disputes of the schools about the relative worth of isolated precepts; teaching the organic unity of duty.

Vv. 41-46. Counter question of Jesus (Mk. xii. 35-37; Lk. xx. 41-44).—Not meant merely to puzzle or silence foes, or even to hint a mysterious doctrine as to the Speaker's person, but to make Pharisees and scribes, and Synedrists generally, revise their whole ideas of the Messiah and the Messianic kingdom, which had led them to reject Him.—Ver. 42. τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ; what think you? first generally of the Christ (περὶ τ. Χ.); second more particularly as to His descent (τίνος υἱός ἐστι).—τοῦ Δαβίδ, David's, the answer expected. Messiah must be David's son: that was the great idea of the scribes, carrying along with it hopes of royal dignity and a restored kingdom.—Ver. 43. πῶς οὖν, etc.: the question is meant to bring out another side of Messiah's relation to David, based on an admittedly Messianic oracle (Ps. cx. 1), and overlooked by the scribes. The object of the question is not, as some have supposed, to deny in toto the Sonship, but to hint doubt as to the importance attached to it. Think out the idea of Lordship and see where λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Τοῦ Δαβίδ." 43. Λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Πῶς οὖν Δαβὶδ [x] ἐν [x] πνεύματι κύριον αὐτὸν καλεῖ[1]; 44. λέγων, 'Εἶπεν ὁ[2] Κύριος τῷ κυρίῳ μου, Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, ἕως ἂν θῶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς σου ὑποπόδιον[3] τῶν ποδῶν σου.' 45. Εἰ οὖν Δαβὶδ καλεῖ αὐτὸν κύριον, πῶς υἱὸς αὐτοῦ ἐστι;" 46. Καὶ οὐδεὶς ἐδύνατο αὐτῷ ἀποκριθῆναι[4] λόγον· οὐδὲ [y] ἐτόλμησέ τις ἀπ' ἐκείνης τῆς ἡμέρας ἐπερωτῆσαι αὐτὸν οὐκέτι.

x Cf. πνεύματι in Gal. v. 5.

y here, parall., John xxi. 12 al. (with inf.).

[1] ℵBDLZ put καλει first, but differ in the order of κυριον αυτον.

[2] ο omitted in ℵBDZ.

[3] υποκατω in ℵBDL al.

[4] αποκ. αυτω in ℵBDLZΔΣ.

it will lead you, said Jesus in effect. The scribes began at the wrong end: at the physical and material, and it landed them in secularity. If they had begun with Lordship it would have led them into the spiritual sphere, and made them ready to accept as Christ one greater than David in the spiritual order, though totally lacking the conventional grandeur of royal persons, only an unpretending Son of Man.

CHAPTER XXIII. THE GREAT ANTI-PHARISAIC DISCOURSE. This is one of the great discourses peculiar to the first Gospel. That some such words were spoken by Jesus in Jerusalem in the Passion week may be inferred from Mk. xii. 38-40, Lk. xx. 45-47. The few sentences there reported look like a fragment, just enough to show that there must have been more—too meagre (gar zu dürftig., De W.) to have been all that Jesus said on such a large topic at such a solemn time. A weighty, deliberate, full, final statement, in the form of a dying testimony, was to be expected from One who had so often criticised the prevailing religious system in an occasional manner in His Galilean ministry—a summing up in the head-quarters of scribism of past prophetic censures uttered in the provinces. In such a final protest repetitions might be looked for (Nösgen). In any case, whether all the words here brought together were spoken at this time or not, the evangelist did well to collect them into one body, and he could not have introduced the collection at a more appropriate place.

Vv. 1-12. Introduction to the discourse.—Ver. 1. τοῖς ὄχλοις καὶ τ. μαθηταῖς: the discourse is about scribes and Pharisees, but the audience is conceived to consist of the disciples and the people. Meyer describes the situation thus: in the foreground Jesus and His disciples; a little further off the ὄχλος; in the background the Pharisees.—Ver. 2. ἐπὶ τ. M. καθέδρας, on the seat of Moses, short for, on the seat of a teacher whose function it was to interpret the Mosaic Law. The Jews spoke of the teacher's seat as we speak of a professor's chair.—ἐκάθισαν, in effect, a gnomic aorist = solent sedere (Fritzsche), not a case of the aorist used as a perfect = have taken and now occupy, etc. (Erasmus). Burton (Syntax) sees in this and other aorists in N. T. a tendency towards use of aorist for perfect not yet realised: "rhetorical figure on the way to become grammatical idiom, but not yet become such," § 55.—οἱ Φαρ. Wendt (L. J., i., 186) thinks this an addition by the evangelist, the statement strictly applying only to the scribes.—Ver. 3. εἴπωσιν, say, in the sense of enjoining; no need therefore of τηρεῖν as in T. R.—ποιήσατε καὶ τηρεῖτε: The natural order if the previous τηρεῖν be omitted. The diverse tenses are significant, the former pointing to detailed performance, the latter to habitual observance. Christ here recognises the legitimacy of the scribal function of interpretation in a broad way, which may appear too unqualified and incompatible with His teaching at other times (Mt. xv. 1-20) (so Holtz., H. C.). Allowance must be made for Christ's habit of unqualified statement, especially here when He is going to attack in an uncompromising manner the conduct of the Jewish doctors. He means: as teachers they have their place, but beware of following their example.—Ver. 4 illustrates the previous statement.—δεσμεύουσι, etc., they bind together, like sheaves, heavy backloads of rules. Think, e.g., of the innumerable rules for Sabbath observance similar to that prohibiting rubbing ears of corn as work—threshing. — δυσβάστακτα may be a

XXIII. 1. ΤΟΤΕ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐλάλησε τοῖς ὄχλοις καὶ τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, λέγων, 2. "Ἐπὶ τῆς Μωσέως καθέδρας ἐκάθισαν[a] οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι· 3. πάντα οὖν ὅσα ἂν[1] εἴπωσιν ὑμῖν τηρεῖν,[2] τηρεῖτε καὶ ποιεῖτε[3]· κατὰ δὲ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν μὴ ποιεῖτε· λέγουσι γὰρ καὶ οὐ ποιοῦσι. 4. [a] δεσμεύουσι γὰρ[4] φορτία βαρέα καὶ δυσβάστακτα,[5] καὶ ἐπιτιθέασιν ἐπὶ τοὺς [b] ὤμους τῶν ἀνθρώπων· τῷ δὲ δακτύλῳ[6] αὐτῶν οὐ θέλουσι [c] κινῆσαι αὐτά. 5. πάντα δὲ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν ποιοῦσι πρὸς τὸ θεαθῆναι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. [d] πλατύνουσι δὲ[7] τὰ [e] φυλακτήρια αὐτῶν, καὶ μεγαλύνουσι τὰ κράσπεδα τῶν ἱματίων αὐτῶν[8]· 6. φιλοῦσί τε[9] τὴν [f] πρωτοκλισίαν ἐν τοῖς δείπνοις, καὶ a here only in this sense (Gen. xxxvii. 7. Judith viii. 3, δράγματα). Lk. viii. 29. Acts xxii. 4 (to put in chains).

b here and in Lk. xv. 5.
c Ch. xxvii. 39. Mk. xv. 29 (to move the head to and fro). Acts xxiv. 5 (to excite, metaph.).
d 2 Cor. vi. 11, 13 (of the broadening or enlarging of the heart).
e here only in N. T.
f Lk. xiv. 7, 8.

[1] εαν in ℵLZΔΣ; αν in BD (Tisch., W.H. have εαν).

[2] ℵBDLZ omit τηρειν.

[3] ℵBDLZ invert the order of the two verbs. D has ποιειτε, the rest ποιησατε.

[4] δε in ℵBDLΔΣ.

[5] ℵL omit και δυσβαστακτα (Tisch.). BDΔΣ have the words, which may have come in from Lk. (xi. 46), but may also be a genuine reading (W.H. in margin).

[6] For τω δε δακτυλω ℵBDL read αυτοι δε τω δακ.

[7] γαρ in ℵBDL, curs. verss.

[8] ℵBD omit των ιματιων αυτων.

[9] δε in ℵBDLΔΣ.

spurious reading imported from Lk. xi. 46, but it states a fact, and was doubtless used by Jesus on some occasion. It shows by the way that He had no thought of unqualified approval of the teaching of the scribes.—ἐπὶ τ. ὤμους, on the shoulders, that they may feel the full weight, demanding punctual compliance.—αὐτοὶ δὲ τ. δακτύλῳ, etc., they are not willing to move or touch them with a finger; proverbial (Elsner) for will not take the smallest trouble to keep their own rules. A strong statement pointing to the subtle ways of evading strict rules invented by the scribes. "The picture is of the merciless camel or ass driver who makes up burdens not only heavy, but unwieldy and so difficult to carry, and then placing them on the animal's shoulders, stands by indifferent, raising no finger to lighten or even adjust the burden" (Carr, C. G. T.).

Vv. 5-7. The foregoing statement is of course to be taken cum grano. Teachers who absolutely disregarded their own laws would soon forfeit all respect. In point of fact they made a great show of zeal in doing. Jesus therefore goes on to tax them with acting from low motives.—Ver. 5. πάντα δὲ, etc., in so far as they comply with their rules they act with a view to be seen of men. This is a repetition of an old charge (Mt. vi.).—πλατύνουσι γὰρ, etc.: illustrative instances drawn from the phylacteries and the tassels attached to the upper garment, the former being broadened, the latter lengthened to attract notice. The phylacteries (φυλακτήρια) were an admirable symbol at once of Pharisaic ostentation and Pharisaic make-believe. They were little boxes attached to the forehead and the left arm near the heart, containing pieces of parchment with certain texts written on them (Ex. xiii. 1-10, 11-17; Deut. vi. 4-10; xi. 13-22) containing figurative injunctions to keep in memory God's laws and dealings, afterwards mechanically interpreted, whence these visible symbols of obedience on forehead and arm. The size of the phylacteries indexed the measure of zeal, and the wearing of large ones was apt to take the place of obedience. It was with the Pharisees as with Carlyle's advertising hatter, who sent a cart through the street with a huge hat in it instead of making good hats. For details on phylacteries and fringes consult works on Jewish antiquities. Lund, Jüdischen Heiligthümer (1701), has a chapter (p. 796) on the dress of the Pharisees with pictorial illustrations. It has been discussed whether the name g parall. and Lk. xi. 43. τὰς g πρωτοκαθεδρίας ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς, 7. καὶ τοὺς ἀσπασμοὺς ἐν ταῖς ἀγοραῖς, καὶ καλεῖσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ῥαββί, ῥαββί[1]· 8. ὑμεῖς δὲ μὴ κληθῆτε, ῥαββί· εἷς γάρ ἐστιν ὑμῶν ὁ καθηγητής, ὁ Χριστός[2]· πάντες δὲ ὑμεῖς ἀδελφοί ἐστε. 9. καὶ πατέρα μὴ καλέσητε ὑμῶν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· εἷς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν,[3] ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.[4] 10. μηδὲ κληθῆτε, h καθηγηταί· εἷς γὰρ ὑμῶν ἐστιν ὁ καθηγητής,[5] ὁ Χριστός. 11. ὁ δὲ μείζων ὑμῶν ἔσται ὑμῶν διάκονος. 12. ὅστις δὲ ὑψώσει ἑαυτόν, ταπεινωθήσεται· καὶ ὅστις ταπεινώσει ἑαυτόν, ὑψωθήσεται.

h here only in N. T.

13. "Οὐαὶ δὲ ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι κατεσθίετε τὰς οἰκίας τῶν χηρῶν, καὶ προφάσει μακρὰ προσευχό-

[1] ℵBLΔΣ omit the second ραββι.

[2] BU, several cursives, have ο διδασκαλος instead of ο καθ. ο Χριστος, which seems a gloss from ver. 10.

[3] υμων before ο πατηρ in ℵBZ.

[4] ο ουρανιος for ο εν τ. ουρανοις in ℵBL.

[5] οτι καθηγ. υμ. εστιν εις in BDL.

φυλ. points to the keeping of the law or to the use of these things as amulets to ward off harm. The former was doubtless originally in view, but the superstitious abuse would soon creep in. The word is the equivalent in Hellenistic Greek for the Chaldee תְּפִלִּין, prayers. —Ver. 6. πρωτοκλισίαν: with religious ostentation goes social vanity, love of the first place at feasts, and first seats (πρωτοκαθεδρίας) in synagogues; an insatiable hunger for prominence.—Ver. 7. τοὺς ἀσπασμοὺς, the (usual) salutations, in themselves innocent courtesies, but coveted because offered in public places, and as demonstrations of respect. —ῥαββί, literally, my great one, like the French monsieur; in Christ's time a new title of honour for the Jewish doctors (vide Lightfoot, Ewald. Gesch. Christi, p. 305; Schürer, ii., p. 315, who says the title came into use after the time of Christ).—Ver. 8. ὑμεῖς, you, emphatic: the Twelve, an earnest aside to them in especial (an interpolation by the evangelist, Weiss-Meyer), be not ye called Rabbi.—μὴ κληθῆτε, "Do not seek to be called, if others call you this it will not be your fault". Euthy. Zig.—Ver. 9. πατέρα = abba, another title of honour for the Rabbis (Schöttgen). The clause is to be translated: a father of you call not upon earth = do not pronounce this sacred name with reference to men. Vide Winer, § 64, 4, and cf. Heb. iii. 13. —Ver. 10. καθηγηταί, kindred with ὁδηγοὶ (ver. 16), guides, leaders in thought, desiring abject discipleship from followers. Gradatio: Rabbi, pater, ductor, Beng. The threefold counsel shows the intensely anti-prelatic spirit of Jesus. In spite of this earnest warning the love of pre-eminence and leadership has prevailed in the Church to the detriment of independence, the sense of responsibility, and loyalty to God.—ὁ Χριστός: in this place though not in ver. 8 a part of the true text, but possibly an addition by the evangelist ("a proof that Matthew here speaks, not Jesus," H. C.).—Vv. 11, 12, repeat in substance the teaching of xx. 26: xviii. 4, worth repeating and by no means out of place here.

Vv. 13-31. The seven woes.—There are eight, if we count that in ver. 13 of T. R., but as this ver. is omitted in the best MSS. and appears to be a gloss from Mk. and Lk. I do not count it. Vide notes on Mk. xii. 40. These woes seem to be spoken directly to the scribes and Pharisees. Weiss regards this as a rhetorical apostrophe, the disciples being the real audience throughout.—Ver. 14. ὑποκριταί. Vide at vi. 2. This epithet is applied to the scribes and Pharisees in each of the woes with terrific iteration. —κλείετε, ye shut the gates or the doors of the Kingdom of God, conceived as a city or palace. This the real effect of their action, not the ostensible. They μενοι· διὰ τοῦτο λήψεσθε περισσότερον κρίμα.[1] 14. Οὐαὶ[2] ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι κλείετε τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων· ὑμεῖς γὰρ οὐκ εἰσέρχεσθε, οὐδὲ τοὺς εἰσερχομένους ἀφίετε εἰσελθεῖν. 15. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι περιάγετε τὴν θάλασσαν καὶ τὴν [i] ξηρὰν ποιῆσαι ἕνα [j] προσήλυτον, καὶ ὅταν γένηται, ποιεῖτε αὐτὸν υἱὸν γεέννης διπλότερον ὑμῶν. 16. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, ὁδηγοὶ τυφλοί, οἱ λέγοντες, Ὃς ἂν ὀμόσῃ ἐν τῷ ναῷ, οὐδέν ἐστιν· ὃς δ' ἂν ὀμόσῃ ἐν

i Heb. xi. 29 (without γῆς in T. R., with in W.H.).
j Acts ii. 10; vi. 5; xiii. 43.

[1] Ver. 13 omitted in ℵBDLZ, some cursives, versions (including Syr. Sin.), Fathers, and by modern editors.

[2] δὲ must be supplied here if ver. 13 be omitted.

claimed to be opening the Kingdom while really shutting it, and therein lay their hypocrisy.—ἔμπροσθεν τ. ἀ.: as it were in men's faces, when they are in the act of entering.—ὑμεῖς γὰρ, etc. Cf. v. 20. They thought themselves certainly within, but in the judgment of Jesus, with all their parade of piety, they were without.—τ. εἰσερχομένους, those in the mood to enter, in the act of entering; the reference is to sincere seekers after God, and the statement is that the scribes were the worst advisers such persons could go to: the effect of their teaching would be to keep them out. This is the position implied throughout the Sermon on the Mount and in xi. 28-30.—Ver. 15. The second woe is the complement of the first: it represents the false guides, as, while utterly incompetent for the function, extremely eager to exercise it.—περιάγετε, ye move about, intransitive, the accusative following being governed by περὶ.—τ. ξηρὰν, the dry (land), sometimes ὑγρὰ is similarly used for the sea (examples in Elsner). Cf. ψυχρόν for cold water in x. 42. To compass sea and land is proverbial for doing anything with great zeal.—π. ἕνα προσήλυτον, to make a single proselyte. The zeal here ascribed to the Pharisees seems in one sense alien to their character as described in Lk. xviii. 11. One would expect them rather to be pleased to be a select few superior to all others than to be animated with a burning desire to gain recruits whether from Jews or from Gentiles. For an elaborate discussion of the question as to the existence of the proselytising spirit among the Jews vide Danz's treatise in Meuschen, Nov. Test. ex Tal. illustratum, p. 649. Vide also Wetstein, ad loc. Wünsche (Beiträge, p. 285) cites passages from the Talmud to prove that the Pharisees, far from being addicted to proselytising, were rather reserved in this respect. He concludes that Mt. xxiii. 15 must refer not to making proselytes to Judaism from Gentiles, but to making additions to their sect from among Jews (Sectirerei). This, however, is against the meaning of προσήλυτος. Assuming the fact to have been as stated, the point to be noted is that the Pharisees and scribes aimed chiefly, not at bringing men into the Kingdom of God, but into their own coterie.—διπλότερον ὑ., twofold more, duplo quam, Vulgate. Kypke, while aware that the comparative of διπλοῦς (διπλότερος) does not occur in profane writers, thinks it is used here in the sense of deceitful, and renders, ye make him a son of gehenna, more fraudulent, more hypocritical than yourselves. Briefly the idea is: the more converted the more perverted, "je bekehrter desto verkehrter" (Holtz., H. C.).

Vv. 16-22. The third woe refers to the Jesuitry of the scribes in the matter of oaths; the point emphasised, however, is their stupidity in this part of their teaching (cf. Mt. v. 33 f.), where Christ's teaching is directed against the use of oaths at all.—Ver. 16. ὁδηγ. τυφλοί, blind guides, not only deceivers but deceived themselves, lacking spiritual insight even in the simplest matters. Three instances of their blindness in reference to oaths are directly or indirectly indicated: oaths by the temple and the gold of the temple, by the altar and the offerings on it, by heaven and the throne of God therein. The principle underlying Rabbinical judgments as to the relative value of oaths seems to have been: the special form more binding than the general; therefore gold of the temple more than the temple, sacrifice on τῷ χρυσῷ τοῦ ναοῦ, [k] ὀφείλει. 17. μωροὶ καὶ τυφλοί· τίς γὰρ μείζων ἐστίν, ὁ χρυσός, ἢ ὁ ναὸς ὁ ἁγιάζων [1] τὸν χρυσόν; 18. καί, Ὃς ἐὰν ὀμόσῃ ἐν τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ, οὐδέν ἐστιν· ὃς δ' ἂν ὀμόσῃ ἐν τῷ δώρῳ τῷ ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ, ὀφείλει. 19. μωροὶ καὶ [2] τυφλοί· τί γὰρ μεῖζον, τὸ δῶρον, ἢ τὸ θυσιαστήριον τὸ ἁγιάζον τὸ δῶρον; 20. ὁ οὖν ὀμόσας ἐν τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ ὀμνύει ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ· 21. καὶ ὁ ὀμόσας ἐν τῷ ναῷ ὀμνύει ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐν τῷ [l] κατοικοῦντι [3] αὐτόν· 22. καὶ ὁ ὀμόσας ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὀμνύει ἐν τῷ θρόνῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐν τῷ [m] καθημένῳ ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ.

k absol. here and in ver. 18 only.

l Lk. xiii. 4 (W.H.). Acts i. 19; ii. 9, 14, and other places (with acc. of place).

m Ch. xxviii. 2, with επανω and gen.

[1] αγιασας in ℵBDZ.

[2] μωραι και omitted in ℵDLZ. BCΔΣ as in T. R.; Tisch. omits; W.H. relegate to margin.

[3] κατοικησαντι in CDLZΔΣ al. κατοικουντι in ℵB it. vul. Tisch., W.H., with κατοικησαντι in margin.

altar more than altar, throne of God in heaven more than heaven. Specialising indicated greater earnestness. Whether these forms of oath were actually used or current, and what precisely they meant, e.g., gold of the temple: was it ornament, utensil, or treasure? is immaterial. They may have been only hypothetical forms devised to illustrate an argument in the schools.—οὐδέν ἐστι, ὀφείλει: the formulae for non-binding and binding oaths; it is nothing (the oath, viz.); he is indebted, bound to performance = חייב.—Ver. 17. τίς γὰρ μεῖζον: Jesus answers this question by asserting the opposite principle to that laid down by the Rabbis: the general includes and is more important than the particular, which He applies to all the three cases (vv. 17, 19, 22). This is the more logical position, but the main point of difference is moral. The tendency of the Rabbis was to enlarge the sphere of insincere, idle, meaningless speech. Christ's aim was to inculcate absolute sincerity = always mean what you say; let none of your utterances be merely conventional generalities. Be as much in earnest when you say "by the temple" as when you say "by the gold of the temple"; rather be so truthful that you shall not need to say either.

Vv. 23-24. The fourth woe refers to tithe-paying (Lk. xi. 42).—ἀποδεκατοῦτε: a Hellenistic word = ye pay tithes, as in Gen. xxviii. 22; to take tithes from in Heb. vii. 5, 6.—ἡδύοσμον, ἄνηθον, κύμινον: garden herbs—mint (literally, sweet smelling), dill, also aromatic, cumin (Kümmel, German) with aromatic seeds. All marketable commodities, used as condiments, or for medicinal purposes, presumably all tithable, the point being not that the Pharisees were wilful in tithe-paying, but that they were extremely scrupulous. Vide articles in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible. The Talmud itself, however, in a sentence quoted by Lightfoot ("decimatio oleorum est a Rabbinis") represents tithing of herbs as a refinement of the Rabbis.—τὰ βαρύτερα: either, the weightier, in the sense of xxii. 36 (Meyer), or the more difficult to do, in the sense of ver. 14 (Weiss after Fritzsche). The idea seems to be: they made a great show of zeal in doing what was easy, and shirked the serious and more arduous requirements of duty.—τ. κρίσιν, righteous judgment, implying and = the love of righteousness, a passion for justice.—τὸ ἔλεος, neuter, after the fashion of later Greek, not τὸν ἔλεον, as in T. R.: mercy; sadly neglected by Pharisees, much insisted on by Jesus.—τ. πίστιν, faith, in the sense of fidelity, true-heartedness. As a curiosity in the history of exegesis may be cited the use of this text by Schortinghuis, a Dutch pietist of the eighteenth century, in support of the duty of judging the spiritual state of others (κρίσιν)! Vide Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus, i., 329.—ταῦτα the greater things last mentioned.—ἔδει, it was your duty to do.—κἀκεῖνα, and those things, the tithings, etc.: this the secondary duty; its subordinate place might be brought out by rendering: "while not neglecting to pay tithes as scrupulously as you please". Bengel thinks ταῦτα and ἐκεῖνα here refer not to the order of the words but to the relative import-

23. "Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι [n] ἀποδεκατοῦτε τὸ ἡδύοσμον καὶ τὸ ἄνηθον καὶ τὸ κύμινον, καὶ ἀφήκατε τὰ βαρύτερα τοῦ νόμου, τὴν κρίσιν καὶ τὸν ἔλεον [1] καὶ τὴν πίστιν· ταῦτα [2] ἔδει ποιῆσαι, κἀκεῖνα μὴ ἀφιέναι.[3] 24. ὁδηγοὶ τυφλοί, οἱ [4] [o] διϋλίζοντες τὸν [p] κώνωπα, τὴν δὲ κάμηλον [q] καταπίνοντες. 25. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι καθαρίζετε τὸ ἔξωθεν τοῦ ποτηρίου καὶ τῆς παροψίδος, ἔσωθεν δὲ γέμουσιν ἐξ [5] [r] ἁρπαγῆς καὶ [s] ἀκρασίας. 26. Φαρισαῖε τυφλέ, καθάρισον πρῶτον τὸ ἐντὸς τοῦ ποτηρίου καὶ τῆς παροψίδος,[6] ἵνα γένηται καὶ τὸ ἐκτὸς αὐτῶν [7] καθαρόν.

n Lk. xi. 42; xviii. 12. Heb. vii. 5.
o here only in N. T. (Amos vi. 6).
p here only in N. T.
q Rev. xii. 16 (same sense). 1 Cor. xv. 54. 2 Cor. v. 4. Heb. xi. 29 (to swallow up).
r Lk. xi. 39. Heb. x. 34.
s 1 Cor. vii. 5.

[1] το ελεος in ℵBDL. τον ελεον a grammatical correction.

[2] δε after ταυτα in BCLΔΣ.

[3] αφειναι in ℵBL. αφιεναι in CDΔΣ al.

[4] οι omitted in ℵBL, by oversight, Weiss thinks. Tisch. retains, W.H. omit.

[5] CD omit εξ, which, however, is in ℵBLΔΣ, and is retained by Tisch., W.H., and other editors.

[6] και της παροψιδος is in ℵBCLΔΣ al., but is omitted by D, and may be a mechanical repetition from ver. 25 (Tisch. omits, W.H. bracket).

[7] αυτου in BD and several cursives, the natural reading if και της παροψ. be omitted.

ance of the things ("non pro serie verborum, sed pro ratione rerum"). On this view "these" means tithe-paying.—Ver. 24. διυλίζοντες (διά and ὕλη, Passow), a little used word, for which Hesychius gives as a synonym, διηθέω, to strain through.—τὸν κώνωπα, τὴν κάμηλον, the gnat, the camel: article as usual in proverbial sayings. The proper object of the former part. is οἶνον: straining the wine so as to remove the unclean midge. Swallowing the camel is a monstrous supposition, but relevant, the camel being unclean, chewing the cud but not parting the hoof (Lev. xi. 4). The proverb clinches the lesson of the previous verse.

Vv. 25-26. Fifth woe, directed against externalism (Lk. xi. 39-41).—τῆς παροψίδος, the dish, on which viands were served. In classics it meant the meat, not the dish (τὸ ὄψον οὐχὶ δὲ τὸ ἀγγεῖον, Phryn., p. 176). Rutherford (New Phryn., p. 265) remarks that our word "dish" has the same ambiguity.—ἔσωθεν δὲ γέμουσιν ἐξ: within both cup and plate are full of, or from. ἐκ is either redundant or it points to the fulness as resulting from the things following: filled with wine and meat purchased by the wages of unrighteousness: luxuries acquired by plunder and licence. The verb γέμουσι occurs again in ver. 27 without ἐκ, and this is in favour of the second view. But on the other hand in ver. 26 the vessels are conceived of as defiled by ἁρπαγή and ἀκρασία, therefore presumably as filled with them. Here as in vi. 22, 23, the physical and ethical are mixed in the figure.—Ver. 26. φαρισαῖε τυφλέ: change from plural to singular with increased earnestness, and a certain friendliness of tone, as of one who would gladly induce the party addressed to mend his ways.—καθάρισον: if ἐκ, ver. 35, is taken = by, then this verb will mean: see that the wine in the cup be no more the product of robbery and unbridled desire for other people's property (Weiss and Meyer). On the other view, that the cup is filled with these vices, the meaning will be, get rid of them.—ἵνα γένηται, etc., in order that the outside may become clean. The ethical cleanness is conceived of as ensuring the ceremonial. Or, in other words, ethical purity gives all the cleanness you need ("all things are clean unto you," Lk. xi. 41). Practically this amounts to treating ceremonial cleanness as of little account. Christ's way of thinking and the Pharisaic were really incompatible.

Vv. 27-28. Sixth woe, referring to no special Pharisaic vice, but giving a graphic picture of their hypocrisy in

27. "Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι παρομοιάζετε[1] ᵗτάφοις ᵘκεκονιαμένοις, οἵτινες ἔξωθεν μὲν φαίνονται ᵛὡραῖοι, ἔσωθεν δὲ γέμουσιν ὀστέων νεκρῶν καὶ πάσης ἀκαθαρσίας. 28. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ἔξωθεν μὲν φαίνεσθε τοῖς ἀνθρώποις δίκαιοι, ἔσωθεν δὲ μεστοί ἐστε[2] ὑποκρίσεως καὶ ἀνομίας. 29. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, γραμματεῖς καὶ Φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί, ὅτι οἰκοδομεῖτε τοὺς τάφους τῶν προφητῶν, καὶ κοσμεῖτε τὰ μνημεῖα τῶν δικαίων, καὶ λέγετε, 30. Εἰ ἦμεν[3] ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν, οὐκ ἂν ἦμεν[3] ʷκοινωνοὶ αὐτῶν[4] ἐν τῷ αἵματι τῶν προφητῶν. 31. ὥστε μαρτυρεῖτε ἑαυτοῖς, ὅτι υἱοί ἐστε τῶν φονευσάντων τοὺς προφήτας· 32. καὶ ὑμεῖς πληρώσατε[5] τὸ μέτρον τῶν πατέρων ὑμῶν. 33. ὄφεις, γεννήματα t Ch. xxvii. 61, 64, 66; xxviii. 1. Rom. iii. 13.

u Acts xxiii. 3.
v Acts iii. 2, 10. Rom. x. 15.
w Lk. v. 10. 1 Cor. x. 18, 20. Heb. x. 33.

[1] B 1 have the simple ομοιαζετε, which W.H. place in the margin.

[2] εστε μεστοι in ℵBCDL 13, 33, 69 al.

[3] ημεθα in both places in most uncials, including ℵBCDL.

[4] αυτων before κοινωνοι in BD (W.H.).

[5] πληρωσετε in B 60, επληρωσατε in D; both, according to Weiss, arising from inability to understand the sense of the imperative (W.H. have B's reading in margin).

general (cf. Lk. xi. 44).—Ver. 27. παρομοιάζετε, in B ὁμοιάζετε, under either form an apax leg.—κεκονιαμένοις (from κονία, dust, slaked lime), whitewashed, referring to the practice of whitewashing the sepulchres in the month Adar, before passover time, to make them conspicuous, inadvertent approach involving uncleanness. They would be wearing their fresh coat just then, so that the comparison was seasonable (vide Wetstein, ad loc.).—ἔξωθεν, ἔσωθεν, again a contrast between without and within, which may have suggested the comparison.—ὡραῖοι, fair, without; the result but not the intention in the natural sphere, the aim in the spiritual, the Pharisee being concerned about appearance (chap. vi.).—ὀστέων, etc., revolting contrast: without, quite an attractive feature in the landscape; within, only death-fraught loathsomeness.—Ver. 28. οὕτω, etc.: the figure apposite on both sides; the Pharisaic character apparently saintly; really inwardly, full of godlessness and immorality (ἀνομίας), the result being gross systematic hypocrisy.

Vv. 29-33. Final woe (Lk. xi. 47-48), dealing with yet another phase of hypocrisy and a new form of the contrast between without and within; apparent zeal for the honour of deceased prophets, real affinity with their murderers.—Ver. 29. οἰκοδομεῖτε, may point to repair or extension of old buildings, or to new edifices, like some modern monuments, the outcome of dilettante hero-worship.—τάφους, μνημεῖα, probably synonyms, though there may have been monuments to the dead apart from burying places, to which the former word points.—προφητῶν and δικαίων are also practically synonymous, though the latter is a wider category.—κοσμεῖτε points to decoration as distinct from building operations. Fürrer (Wanderungen, p. 77) suggests that Jesus had in view the tomb of Zechariah, the prophet named in the sequel, in the valley of Jehoshaphat, which he describes as a lovely little temple with ornamental half and quarter pillars of the Ionic order.—λέγετε: they not merely thought, or said by deed, but actually so pointed the moral of their action, not trusting to others to draw the inference.—Ver. 30. ἤμεθα, not in classics, ἤμην the usual form of sing. in N. T. being also rare; the imperfect, but must be translated in our tongue, "if we had been". For the imperfect, used when we should use a pluperfect, vide Mt. xiv. 4, and consult Burton, § 29.—οὐκ ἂν ἤμεθα, the indicative with ἂν, as usual in suppositions contrary to fact, vide Burton, § 248.—Ver. 31. ὥστε, with indicative expressing result = therefore.—ἑαυτοῖς, to and against yourselves. Jesus reads more meaning into their words than they intended: "our fathers"; yes! they are your fathers, in spirit as well as in blood.—Ver. 32. καί, and, as ye have called yourselves their sons, ἐχιδνῶν, πῶς φύγητε ἀπὸ τῆς κρίσεως τῆς γεέννης; 34. Διὰ τοῦτο, ἰδού, ἐγὼ ἀποστέλλω πρὸς ὑμᾶς προφήτας καὶ σοφοὺς καὶ [x] γραμματεῖς· καὶ[1] ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀποκτενεῖτε καὶ σταυρώσετε, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῶν μαστιγώσετε ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς ὑμῶν, καὶ διώξετε ἀπὸ πόλεως εἰς πόλιν· 35. ὅπως ἔλθῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς πᾶν αἷμα δίκαιον ἐκχυνόμενον[2] ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος Ἄβελ τοῦ δικαίου, ἕως τοῦ αἵματος Ζαχαρίου υἱοῦ Βαραχίου, ὃν ἐφονεύσατε μεταξὺ τοῦ ναοῦ καὶ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου. 36. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἥξει ταῦτα πάντα[3] ἐπὶ τὴν

[x] vide Ch. xiii. 52.

[1] ℵBΔΣ 1, 13, 33, 69 al. omit και, found in CDL.

[2] εκχυννομενον in ℵBCDΔΣ al., 1, 33 al.

[3] παντα ταυτα in BXΔΣ (W.H. in margin); as in T. R., in ℵCDL, Vul. Cop. (Tisch., W.H. in text).

so show yourselves to be such indeed (Weiss).—πληρώσατε. The reading πληρώσετε is due to shrinking from the idea conveyed by the imperative. To the same cause is due the permissive (Grotius al.) or ironical (De W.) senses put upon the imperative. Christ means what He says: "Fill up the measure of your fathers; crown their misdeeds by killing the prophet God has sent to you. Do at last what has long been in your hearts. The hour is come."—Ver. 33. Awful ending to a terrific charge, indicating that the men who are predestined to superlative wickedness are appropriately doomed to the uttermost penalty.—ὄφεις, γεν. ἐχιδνῶν; already stigmatised as false, fools, blind, they are now described as venomous, murderous in thought and deed. Cf. iii. 7.—πῶς φύγητε, the deliberative conjunctive. "The verb of a deliberative question is most frequently in the first person, but occasionally in the second or third. Mt. xxiii. 33, Rom. x. 14."—Burton, § 170.

Vv. 34-36. Peroration (Lk. xi. 49-51). —Ver. 34. διὰ τοῦτο. The sense requires that this be connected with both vv. 32 and 33. The idea is that all God's dealings with Israel have been arranged from the first so as to ensure that the generation addressed shall fill up the measure of Israel's guilt and penalty. The reference of ἀποστέλλω is not confined to what had been done for that generation. It covers all the generations from Abel downwards. The form in which the thought is expressed at first creates a contrary impression: Ἐγὼ ἀποστέλλω. But either the ἐγὼ is used in a suprahistorical sense, or it must be regarded as a somewhat unsuitable word, and the correct expression of the source found in Luke's ἡ σοφία τοῦ θεοῦ εἶπεν, what follows becoming thus a quotation, either in reality from some unknown writing, as many think, or in the conception of the speaker. I see no insuperable difficulty in taking Mt.'s form as the original. Olshausen conceives of Jesus as speaking, not as a personality involved in the limits of temporal life, but as the Son of God, as the essential wisdom of God. The ἐγὼ might be justified without this high reference to the Divinity of Jesus, as proceeding from His prophetic consciousness in an exalted state of mind. The prophet habitually spoke in the name of God. Jesus also at such a great moment might speak, as it were impersonally, in the name of God, or of wisdom. Resch, Agrapha, p. 274 ff., endeavours to show that "the wisdom of God" was, like "the Son of Man," one of the self-designations of Jesus. Whether that be so or not, I think it is clear from this passage, and also from Mt. xi. 28-30 (vide remarks there), that He did sometimes, as it were, personate wisdom. The present ἀποστέλλω, regards the history of Israel sub specie aeternitatis, for which the distinction of present and past does not exist.—προφήτας, etc.: these names for the Sent clearly show that past and present are both in view. It is not merely the apostles, γραμματεῖς (cf. xiii. 52) = ἀποστόλους, Lk. xi. 49, that are in view.—σταυρώσετε, a hint at the impending tragic event, the Speaker one of the Sent.—καὶ ἐξ αὐτῶν, etc.: a glance at the fortunes of the Twelve. Cf. chap. x. 16-23.—Ver. 35. ὅπως ἔλθῃ: divine intention read in the light of result. God sent messengers that they might be killed, and that Israel by killing them might deserve to suffer in the final generation wrath to the uttermost. Vide on Mt. xxii. 10.—αἷμα, thrice named: "ter γενεὰν ταύτην. 37. Ἱερουσαλήμ, Ἱερουσαλήμ, ἡ ἀποκτείνουσα τοὺς προφήτας καὶ λιθοβολοῦσα τοὺς ἀπεσταλμένους πρὸς αὐτήν, ποσάκις ἠθέλησα [y] ἐπισυναγαγεῖν τὰ τέκνα σου, [z] ὃν [z] τρόπον ἐπισυνάγει [a] ὄρνις [1] τὰ [b] νοσσία ἑαυτῆς [2] ὑπὸ τὰς [c] πτέρυγας, καὶ οὐκ ἠθελήσατε; 38. ἰδού, ἀφίεται ὑμῖν ὁ οἶκος ὑμῶν ἔρημος [3]. 39. λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν, Οὐ μή με ἴδητε ἀπ' ἄρτι, ἕως ἂν εἴπητε, Εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου."

y Ch. xxiv. 31. Mk. xiii. 27. Lk. xiii. 34; pass. Mk. i. 33. Lk. xii. 1; xvii. 37.
z same phrase in Lk. xiii. 34. Acts i. 11; vii. 28. 2 Tim. iii. 8.
a here and in Lk. xiii. 34. b here in N. T. (Ps. lxxxiv. 3). c Lk. xiii. 34. Rev. iv. 8; ix. 9; xii. 14.

[1] ορνις before επισυναγει in ℵBDL 1, 33, 69 al.

[2] αυτης in ℵDΔΣ 33 (Tisch.). B has neither αυτης nor εαυτης (W.H. have αυτης, but within brackets).

[3] BL omit ερημος, found in very many uncials (ℵCDΔΣ al.) and versions. The omission might be an assimilation to Lk. (xiii. 35), where the word is wanting in many of the best MSS., but it is more likely to be an explanatory gloss. Vide below.

hoc dicitur uno hoc versu magna vi," Bengel.—ἀπὸ τ. ἁ., etc., from the blood of Abel, the first martyr, mentioned in the first book of the Hebrew Bible, to the blood of Zechariah, the prophet named in the last book (2 Chron. xxiv. 20-22).—υἱοῦ Βαραχίου, the designation of the last but one of the minor prophets, applied here to the other Zechariah, by inadvertence either of the evangelist or of an early copyist.—ὃν ἐφονεύσατε, whom ye (through your spiritual ancestors) slew; fact as stated in 2 Chron. xxiv. 21.—Ver. 36. ἀμὴν: solemn introduction of a statement terrible to think of: sins of countless generations accumulating for ages, and punished in a final representative generation; true, however terrible.

Vv. 37-39. Apostrophe to the Holy City (Lk. xiii. 34).—Εἶτα πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἀποστρέφει τὸν λόγον. Chrys., H. lxxiv. —Ver. 37. Ἱερουσαλήμ, the Hebrew form of the name, exceptional in Mt., very appropriate to the solemn situation. Twice spoken; why? "It is the fashion of one pitying, bewailing, and greatly loving," Chrys. —ἀποκτείνουσα, λιθοβολοῦσα: present participles, denoting habit and repute, now and always behaving so—killing, stoning.—πρὸς αὐτήν, to her, not to thee, because the participles are in the nominative, while Ἱερουσαλήμ is vocative: "exemplum compellationis per vocativum ad quam deinceps non amplius spectatur" (Fritzsche). Grotius regards the transition from second to third person as an Orientalism.—ποσάκις, how often; on this word has been based the inference of frequent visits to Jerusalem not mentioned in the Synoptics. But the allusion may be to the whole history of Israel (so Orig., Hil., Jer.,) and to the whole people, as the children of the metropolis, the Speaker still continuing to speak in the name of God, as in ver. 34, and including Himself among God's agents.—ὄρνις, a bird or fowl; after Plato, a hen; so here, the emblem of anxious love. θερμὸν τὸ ζῶον περὶ τὰ ἔκγονα, Chrys. She gathers her chickens under her wings for protection against impending danger. This Jesus and all the prophets desired to do; a truth to be set over against the statement in vv. 34-35, which seems to suggest that God's aim was Israel's damnation.—τὰ νοσσία (Attic, νεοσσία: form disapproved by Phryn., p. 206), her brood of young birds. Cf. Ps. lxxxiv. 4, where, as here, a pathetic use is made of the emblem.—οὐκ ἠθελήσατε, ye would not, though I would (ἠθέλησα). Man's consent necessary.—Ver. 38. ἰδοὺ, etc., solemn, sorrowful abandonment of the city to its fate.—ἀφίεται ὑμῖν, spoken to the inhabitants of Israel.—ὁ οἶκος ὑ., your house, i.e., the city, not the temple; the people are conceived of as one family.—ἔρημος, wanting in BL, and omitted by W.H., is not necessary to the sense. The sentence is, indeed, more impressive without it: "Behold your house is abandoned to your care: those who would have saved you giving up further effort". What will happen left to be imagined; just what ἔρημος expresses—desolation.—Ver. 39. ἀπ' ἄρτι, from this moment, Christ's prophetic work

XXIV. 1. ΚΑΙ ἐξελθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐπορεύετο ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ[1] καὶ [a]προσῆλθον οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπιδεῖξαι αὐτῷ τὰς οἰκοδομὰς τοῦ ἱεροῦ. 2. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[2] εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Οὐ βλέπετε πάντα ταῦτα[3]; ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐ μὴ ἀφεθῇ ὧδε λίθος ἐπὶ λίθον, ὃς οὐ μὴ[4] [a]καταλυθήσεται." 3. Καθημένου δὲ αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τοῦ ὄρους τῶν ἐλαιῶν, προσῆλθον αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ κατ' ἰδίαν, λέγοντες, "Εἰπὲ ἡμῖν, πότε ταῦτα ἔσται; καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον τῆς σῆς [b]παρουσίας, καὶ τῆς[5] [c]συντελείας a parall. Ch. xxvi. 61. Acts vi. 14. 2 Cor. v. 1. Gal. ii. 18.

b again vv. 27, 37, 39, nowhere else in Gospp., frequent in Epistles.
c vide Ch. xiii. 39.

[1] απο του ιερου επορευετο in ℵBDLΔΣ (so modern editors).

[2] For ο δε Ιησους ℵBDL al. versions have ο δε αποκριθεις without Ιησους.

[3] ταυτα παντα in ℵBCLX al. D has the words in same order as T. R.

[4] μη is wanting ℵBCDLXΔΣ al.

[5] της omitted in ℵBCL 1, 33 al.

done now: it remains only to die.—ἕως ἂν εἴπητε: a future contingency on which it depends whether they shall ever see Him again (Weiss in Meyer). He will not trouble them any more till their mood change and they be ready to receive Him with a Messianic salutation.

The exquisite finish of this discourse, in the case of ordinary orators, would suggest premeditation and even writing. We have no means of knowing to what extent Jesus had considered beforehand what He was to say on this momentous occasion. The references to the whited sepulchres and the tombs of the prophets show that the speech was in part at least an extempore utterance.

CHAPTER XXIV. THE APOCALYPTIC DISCOURSE. This chapter and its synoptical parallels (Mk. xiii., Lk. xxi.) present, in many respects, the most difficult problem in the evangelic records. Many questions may be, have been, asked concerning this discourse on things to come. Which of the three versions comes nearest to what Jesus said? Did He say all that is here reported on this occasion, or have we in all the versions, more or less, a combination of words spoken at different times? Were the words here collected, all of them, or even the greater number of them, ever spoken by Jesus at any time; have the evangelists not worked up into the discourse a Jewish, or Jewish-Christian, apocalypse, or given us a composition of their own, consisting of certain logia of the Master, as the nucleus, with additions, modifications, and comments in the light of subsequent events? Finally, what is the didactic significance of the discourse, what did Jesus mean to teach His disciples respecting the themes treated: the Ruin of the Holy City, the Coming of the Son of Man, and the End of the Age, and the connection between these things? A history of opinion on these topics cannot here be given; a confident attempt at answering the questions propounded I am not prepared to make; perhaps a final satisfactory solution of the problem is not attainable. I offer only a few general considerations which may, at least, help readers to assume a right attitude towards the problem, and to bring to the study of the discourse a sympathetic spirit.

1. The time was suitable for some such utterance. The situation was this: Jesus expecting death in a few days; convinced that the moral and religious condition of the Jewish people is hopelessly bad, and that it must ere long end in disaster and ruin; surrounded by friends who are to be, after the decease of their Master, the missionaries of a new faith in a troublous time, when an old world is going down and a new world is coming into being. Here surely is an occasion to provoke the prophetic mood! At such supreme crises prophetic utterances, apocalyptic forecasts, are inevitable. Here they are, whomsoever we have to thank for them. From whom are they more likely to have proceeded than from Him who had such clear insight into the moral forces at work, and into the spiritual phenomenology of the time?

2. The aim of any prophetic discourse Jesus might deliver at this crisis, like that of all true prophecy, would be ethical; not to foretell, like a soothsayer, but to forewarn and forearm the representatives of a new faith, so that they might not lose their heads or their hearts in an evil perplexing time—not to gratify curiosity but to fortify against coming trial.

τοῦ αἰῶνος;" 4. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "[d] Βλέπετε, μή τις ὑμᾶς πλανήσῃ. 5. πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐλεύσονται ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματί μου, λέγοντες, Ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ Χριστός· καὶ πολλοὺς πλανήσουσι.

d with μὴ and aor. sub. Mk. xiii. 5. Lk. xxi. 8. Acts xiii. 40. 1 Cor. viii. 9; x. 12. Gal. v. 15. Heb. xii. 25; with μὴ and fut. ind. Col. ii. 8. Heb. iii. 12.

3. Prophetic utterance with such an aim would not need to be exact in statements as to dates and details, but only to be true as to the sequence and general character of events. From all we know of Hebrew prophecy it was to be expected that the prophesying of Jesus would possess only this latter kind of truth, instead of being like a "history of events before they come to pass". The version of the evangelic apocalypse that least resembles the description of prophecy now quoted from Butler's Analogy (part ii., chap. vii.) will come nearest to the original utterance. This consideration tells in favour of Mt. and Mk.

4. All prophetic or apocalyptic utterances have much in common; phraseology and imagery tending to become stereotyped. The prophetic literature of the O. T. had indeed provided a vocabulary, which by the Christian era had become normative for all speech concerning the future. Hence Jewish, Jewish-Christian, and Pauline utterances of this kind would in many particulars resemble one another, and it might be difficult to decide by mere internal evidence from what circle any particular utterance emanated. But it is not probable that the evangelists would introduce into a professed report of a discourse by Jesus a current apocalypse of known Jewish origin unless they had reason to believe that Jesus had adopted it, or endorsed its forecast of the future (vide Weizsäcker, Untersuchungen über die Evang. Gesch., pp. 126, 551).

5. As we have seen reason to believe that in previous reports of our Lord's Discourses (e.g., of the Sermon on the Mount and of the Mission Discourse, chap. x.) grouping of kindred material irrespective of historical occasion has taken place, so we cannot be surprised if traces of a similar procedure present themselves here. The remark applies especially to the latter part of the chapter, vv. 37-51, which contain logia given by Lk. in other connections (chaps. xii. and xvii.).

Vv. 1-3. Introduction (cf. Mk. xiii. 1-4; Lk. xxi. 5-7).—Ver. 1. ἐξελθὼν, going out from the temple, within whose precincts the foregoing anti-Pharisaic manifesto had been spoken. The position assigned to ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ before the verb, ἐπορ. in the best MSS., suggests connection with ἐξελθὼν. Some, however (Weiss, Schanz, etc.), insist that the words must be taken with ἐπορ. to give to the latter a definite sense. In reality they go along with both, the full meaning being: going out from the temple. He was going away from it, when, etc.—ἐπορεύετο: the imperfect, indicating an action in progress when something else happened. There is an emphasis on the idea of the verb. He was going away, like one who did not mean to return. Hence the action of the disciples next reported.—ἐπιδεῖξαι: they came to their Master, going before in a deeply preoccupied mood, and tried to change the gloomy current of His thoughts by inviting Him to look back at the sacred structure; innocent, woman-like but vain attempt.—τὰς οἰκοδομὰς: the whole group of buildings belonging to the holy house; magnificent, splendid, as described by Josephus (B. J., v., 5, 6), appearing to one approaching from a distance like a snow mountain (ὄρει χιόνος πλήρει) topped with golden pinnacles, which for forty years, in his Napoleonic passion for architecture, Herod the Great had been building to the glory of God and of himself.—Ver. 2. ὁ δὲ ἀποκ., but, adversatively. He answered, in a mood entirely different from theirs.—οὐ βλέπετε; do you not see all these things? = you ask me to look at them, let me ask you in turn to take a good look at them.—ταῦτα: these things, not buildings, implying indifference to the splendours admired by the disciples.—οὐ μὴ ἀφεθῇ, etc.: not an exact description ex eventu, but a strong statement of coming destruction (by fire) in prophetically coloured language (Micah iii. 12; Jer. xxvi. 18). So Holtz., H.C.—Ver. 3. An interval of silence would naturally follow so stern a speech. This verse accordingly shows us Jesus with His disciples now on the other side of the Kidron, and sitting on the slope of Olivet, with face turned towards Jerusalem; Master and disciples sitting apart, and thinking their own thoughts. Satisfied that the Master means what He has said, and not daring to dispute His prophetic insight, they accept the

6. Μελλήσετε δὲ ἀκούειν πολέμους καὶ [e]ἀκοὰς πολέμων. ὁρᾶτε, μὴ [f]θροεῖσθε· δεῖ γὰρ πάντα[1] γενέσθαι. ἀλλ' οὔπω ἐστὶ τὸ τέλος. 7. Ἐγερθήσεται γὰρ ἔθνος ἐπὶ ἔθνος, καὶ βασιλεία ἐπὶ βασιλείαν· καὶ ἔσονται λιμοὶ καὶ λοιμοί,[2] καὶ σεισμοὶ [g]κατὰ [g]τόπους.

e vide Ch. iv. 24.
f Mk. xiii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 2.
g same phrase in Mk. xiii. 8.

[1] παντα omitted in ℵDBL 1, 33, 209. The sentence is more impressive without.

[2] ℵBD a b e ff[2] omit και λοιμοι possibly by similar ending (Weiss). The words are in CΔΣ al. Mod. editions omit (Trg. in margin).

fate predicted for Jerusalem, and now desire to know the when and how.—κατ' ἰδίαν looks like a borrow from Mk., where it refers to four of the disciples coming apart from the rest. It goes without saying that none but the Twelve were there.—τί τὸ σημεῖον τ. σ. π., etc. The questioners took for granted that all three things went together: destruction of temple, advent of Son of Man, end of the current age. Perhaps the association of the three helped them to accept the first as a fact. Weizsäcker (Untersuchungen, p. 549, note 1) suggests that the second and third questions are filled in by the evangelist to correspond with the answer. So also Weiss in Meyer. The main subject of interrogation is the predicted ruin: when will it happen, and how shall it be known when it is at hand, so as to be prepared for it? Cf. Mk. and Lk., where this alone is the subject of question.—παρουσία (literally presence, second presence) and συντέλεια τοῦ αἰῶνος are the technical terms of the apostolic age, for the second advent of Christ and the close of the present order of things, and they occur in Mt., only so far as the Gospels are concerned. Do not the ideas also belong to that age, and are not the questions here put into the mouth of the Twelve too advanced for disciples?

Vv. 4-14. Signs prelusive of the end. (Mk. xiii. 5-13, Lk. xxi. 8-19).—Ver 4. βλέπετε: again (vide ver. 2), but here = see to it, take heed. Cf. Heb. iii. 12.—πλανήσῃ, lest any one deceive you; striking the practical ethical keynote of the whole discourse: its aim not to gratify curiosity, but to guard against deception and terror (μὴ θροεῖσθε, ver. 6)—heads cool, hearts brave, in a tragic epoch.—Ver. 5. πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐλεύσονται, etc., the first omen the advent of pseudo-Messiahs. This first mentioned, quite naturally. Ruin of Jerusalem and the nation will come through revolt against Rome, and the deepest cause of revolt will be the Messianic hope as popularly understood. Volcanic outbursts of Messianic fanaticism inevitable, all the more that they have rejected the true spiritual Christ. Josephus testifies that this was the chief incentive to war against Rome (B. J., vi. 54). The aim of the popular Messianic hope was independence, and all leaders of movements having that goal in view came in the name of "Christs," whether they formally assumed that name or not. It is doubtful if any did before the destruction of Jerusalem, but that does not falsify Christ's prediction, which is expressed in terms of an idea rather than in technical terms suggested by fact. It is not a vaticinium ex eventu; yet strictly true, if we understand by one coming in the name of Christ a leader of the fight for liberty (vindicem libertatis, Grotius).—πολλοὺς πλανήσουσιν. The political Christs, leaders of the war against Rome, deceived the bulk of the people. Jesus wished His followers to hold entirely aloof from the movement. To warn them against sympathising with it was by no means superfluous (vide Lk. xxiv. 21, Acts i. 6).—Ver. 6. Second sign: wars.—πολέμους καὶ ἀκοὰς π.: vague phrase suitable to the prophetic style, not ex eventu; well rendered in A. V. "wars and rumours of wars" = wars near and remote (Bengel, Meyer), or better: "actual and threatened" (Speaker's Com.). The reference is not to wars anywhere in the world, but to those in the Holy Land, arising, as they were sure sooner or later to do, out of Messianic fanaticisms. Christ speaks not out of foreknowledge of the actual facts as reported by contemporary historians and collected by modern commentators (Grotius, etc.), but by prophetic logic: given Messianic hopes misdirected, hence wars, hence ruin.—μελλήσετε, future of a verb, whose very meaning points to the future: ye will be about to hear, by-and-by, not for a while; often delusive times of peace before tragic times of war. Vide Carlyle's French Revolution, book i.—ὁρᾶτε, μὴ θροεῖσθε, see, be not scared

b Mk. xiii. 8. Acts ii. 24. 1 Thess. v. 3.

8. πάντα δὲ ταῦτα ἀρχὴ [b] ὠδίνων. 9. Τότε παραδώσουσιν ὑμᾶς εἰς θλίψιν, καὶ ἀποκτενοῦσιν ὑμᾶς· καὶ ἔσεσθε μισούμενοι ὑπὸ πάντων τῶν ἐθνῶν διὰ τὸ ὄνομά μου. 10. καὶ τότε σκανδαλισθήσονται πολλοί, καὶ ἀλλήλους παραδώσουσι, καὶ μισήσουσιν ἀλλήλους· out of your wits (θροέω, originally = cry aloud; later use = to terrify, as if with a scream; here passive in neuter sense). This reference to coming wars of liberation was natural, and necessary if the aim was to fortify disciples against future events. Nevertheless at this point, in the opinion of many critics, begins the so-called "Jewish apocalypse," which Mk. and after him Mt. and Lk. have interwoven with the genuine utterance of Jesus. The latter embraces all about false Christs and apostolic tribulations (4-5, 9-14, 22-23), the former all about war, flight, and the coming of the Son of Man with awful accompaniments (7-8, 15-22, 29-31). Vide Wendt, L. J., i., p. 10 f., where the two series are given separately, from Mk., following in the main Weiffenbach. This critical analysis is ingenious but not convincing. Pseudo-Christs in the sense explained and wars of liberation went together in fact, and it was natural they should go together in prophetic thought. The political Messiahs divorced from the politics become mere ghosts, which nobody need fear.—δεῖ γὰρ γ. Their eventual coming is a divine necessity, let even that consideration act as a sedative; and for the rest remember that the beginning of the tragedy is not the end.—ἀλλ' οὔπω τ. τ.: the end being the thing inquired about—the destruction of the temple and all that went along with it.—Ver. 7. Further development of the war-portent, possibly here the prophetic range of vision widens beyond the bounds of Palestine, yet not necessarily. In support of limiting the reference to Palestine Kypke quotes from Josephus words describing the zealots as causing strife between people and people, city and city, and involving the nation in civil war (B. J., iv., 6).—λιμοὶ καὶ λοιμοί, famines and pestilences, the usual accompaniments of war, every way likely to be named together as in T. R.—καὶ σεισμοί, and earthquakes, representing all sorts of unusual physical phenomena having no necessary connection with the political, but appealing to the imagination at such times, so heightening the gloom. Several such specified in commentaries (vide, e.g., Speaker's C., and Alford, from whom the particulars are quoted), but no stress should be laid on them.—κατὰ τόπους: most take this as meaning not earthquakes passing from place to place (Meyer) but here and there, passim. Vide Elsner and Raphel, who cite classic examples. Grotius enumerates the places where they occurred.—Ver. 8. πάντα δὲ: yet all these but a beginning of pains. It is not necessary to find here an allusion to the Rabbinical idea of the birth pangs of Messiah, but simply the use of a natural and frequent Biblical emblem for distress of any sort. As to the date of the Rabbinical idea vide Keil. The beginning: such an accumulation of horrors might well appear to the inexperienced the end, hence the remark to prevent panic.

Vv. 9-14. Third sign, drawn from apostolic experiences. This passage Weiss regards as an interpolation into the prophetic discourse by Matthew following Mark. It certainly resembles Mt. x. 17-22 (much less, however, than the corresponding passage in Mk.), and individual phrases may be interpolations: but something of the kind was to be expected here. The disciples were not to be mere spectators of the tragedy of the Jewish nation destroying itself. They were to be active the while, preaching the gospel of the kingdom, propagating the new faith, bringing in a new world. Jesus would have them go on with their work undistracted by false enthusiasms, or warlike terrors, and to this end assures them that they will have both to do and to suffer a great deal before the final crisis of Jerusalem comes. The ground of this prophetic forecast as to their experience is faith that God will not allow the work He (Jesus) has inaugurated to perish. The gospel will be preached widely, with whatever tribulations to the preachers.—Ver. 9. θλίψιν, from θλίβω, originally pressure (στένωσις, Hesychius), in N. T. tropical, pressure from the evils of life, affliction. Again in ver. 29, in reference to the Jewish people. The apostles also are to have their thlipsis.—ἀποκτενοῦσιν ὑμᾶς, they will kill you. Lk. xxi. 16 has "some of you" (ἐξ ὑμῶν). Some qualification of the blunt statement is needed; such as: they will be in the mood to kill you (cf.

11. καὶ πολλοὶ ψευδοπροφῆται ἐγερθήσονται, καὶ πλανήσουσι πολλούς· 12. καὶ διὰ τὸ [i] πληθυνθῆναι τὴν ἀνομίαν [j] ψυγήσεται ἡ ἀγάπη τῶν πολλῶν· 13. ὁ δὲ ὑπομείνας εἰς τέλος, οὗτος σωθήσεται. 14. καὶ κηρυχθήσεται τοῦτο τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς βασιλείας ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ, εἰς μαρτύριον πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσι. καὶ τότε ἥξει [k] τὸ τέλος. 15. Ὅταν οὖν ἴδητε τὸ [l] βδέλυγμα τῆς [m] ἐρημώσεως, τὸ ῥηθὲν

i here and in Acts vi. 7; vii. 17; ix. 31; xii. 24.
j here only in N. T.
k Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 24 (τὸ τέλος absolutely).
l Mk. xiii. 14. Lk. xvi. 15. Rev. xvii. 4, 5; xxi. 27.
m Mk. xiii. 14. Lk. xxi. 20.

John xvi. 2).—τῶν ἐθνῶν, not in Mark, universalising the statement = hated by all the nations, not Jews only.—Ver. 10. σκανδαλισθήσονται: natural sequel of apostolic tribulation, many weak Christians made to stumble (vide xiii. 21); this followed in turn by mutual treachery and hatred (καὶ ἀλλήλους, etc.).—Ver. 11. ψευδοπροφῆται, false prophets. The connection requires that these should be within the Christian community (otherwise in ver. 24), giving false presentations of the faith with corrupt motives. A common feature in connection with new religious movements (vide on vii. 15).—Ver. 12. ἀνομίαν. Weiss and Holtzmann (H. C.) take this in the specific sense of antinomianism, a libertine type of Christianity preached by the false prophets or apostles, the word in that sense of course to be credited to the evangelist. The word as used by Christ would naturally bear the general sense of godlessness or iniquity. We may wonder at the use of such a word in connection with nascent Christianity. It would require a considerable time to make room for such degeneracy. But the very point Jesus wishes to impress is that there will be room for that before the final crisis of Israel comes.—ψυγήσεται, etc., will cool the love of many. ψ. is an apax leg. 2nd future passive of ψύχω, to breathe. One of the sad features of a degenerate time is that even the good loose their fervour.—ἀγάπη, love of the brotherhood, here only in this sense in Synoptical Gospels, the distinctive virtue of the Christian, with a new name for a new thing.—Ver. 13. ὁ ὑπομείνας, he that endureth; the verb used absolutely without object. The noun ὑπομονή is another of the great words of the N. T., Love and Patience, primary virtues of the Christian: doing good, bearing ill. The endurance called for is not merely in love (Fritzsche), but in the faith and life of a Christian in face of all the evils enumerated.—εἰς τέλος, to the end, i.e., of the θλίψις, as long as there are trials to endure.—σωθήσεται, shall be saved in the sense of xvi. 25. The implied truth underlying this test is that there will be ample time for a full curriculum of trial testing character and sifting the true from the false or temporary Christian.—Ver. 14 asserts the same thing with regard to the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom: time for preaching it in the whole world, to all nations, before the end. Assuming that the terminus is the same this statement seems inconsistent with that in x. 23. But the aim is different in the two cases. On the earlier occasion Jesus wished to ensure that all Israel should hear the gospel before the end came; therefore He emphasised the shortness of the time. Here He wishes to impress on the disciples that the end will not be for a good while, therefore He emphasises the amount of preaching that can be done. Just on this account we must not strain the phrases ἐν ὅλῃ τ. οἰκ., πᾶσιν τοῖς ἔθ. They simply mean: extensively even in the heathen world. But they have the merit of setting before the disciples a large programme to occupy their minds and keep them from thinking too much of the coming catastrophe.

Vv. 15-22. The end at last (Mk. xiii. 14-20, Lk. xxi. 20-24).—ὅταν οὖν, when therefore, referring partly to the preceding mention of the end, partly to the effect of the whole preceding statement: "This I have said to prevent premature alarm, not, however, as if the end will never come; it will, when therefore, etc."; the sequel pointing out the sign of the end now near, and what to do when it appears.—τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως: this the awful portent; what? The phrase is taken from Daniel as expressly stated in following clause (τὸ ῥηθὲν, etc.), vide Dan. ix. 27, xi. 31, xii. 11. There and in 1 Macc. i. 54 it seems to refer to some outrage on Jewish religious feeling in connection with the temple (ᾠκοδόμησαν β. ἐρ. ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον are the words in 1 Macc. i. 54, similarly in vi. 7). In a Jewish apoca-

n Acts vi. 13 (of the temple); cf. John xi. 48 (τόπος, of the land). διὰ Δανιὴλ τοῦ προφήτου, ἑστὸς ἐν [n] τόπῳ ἁγίῳ· (ὁ ἀναγινώσκων νοείτω·) 16. τότε οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ φευγέτωσαν ἐπὶ[1] τὰ ὄρη· 17. ὁ ἐπὶ τοῦ δώματος μὴ καταβαινέτω[2] ἆραί τι[3] ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας αὐτοῦ· 18. καὶ ὁ ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ μὴ ἐπιστρεψάτω ὀπίσω ἆραι τὰ ἱμάτια[4] αὐτοῦ. 19. οὐαὶ δὲ ταῖς ἐν γαστρὶ ἐχούσαις καὶ ταῖς θηλαζούσαις ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις. 20. προσεύχεσθε δὲ ἵνα μὴ γένηται ἡ

[1] εις in BDΔΣ al. The parall. have εις, and just on that account επι (ℵLZ) may be the true reading.

[2] καταβατω in ℵBDLZΣ al. (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] τα in BLZΔΣ al. τι in D.

[4] το ιματιον in ℵBDLZΣ al. The plural is pointless.

lypse, which this passage is by some supposed to form a part of, it might be expected to bear a similar meaning, a technical sense for a stereotyped expression. Not so on the lips of Jesus, who was not the slave of phrases but their master, using them freely. Then as employed by Him it must point to some broad, easily recognisable fact, which His followers could at once see and regard as a signal for flight; a fact not merely shocking religious feeling but threatening life, which He would have no disciple sacrifice in a cause with which they could have no sympathy. Then finally, true to the prophetic as distinct from the apocalyptic style, it must point to something revealing prophetic insight rather than a miraculous foresight of some very special circumstance connected with the end. This consideration shuts out the statue of Titus or Caligula or Hadrian (Jerome), the erection of a heathen altar, the atrocities perpetrated in the temple by the Zealots, etc. Luke gives the clue (ver. 20). The horror is the Roman army, and the thing to be dreaded and fled from is not any religious outrage it may perpetrate, but the desolation it will inevitably bring. That is the emphatic word in the prophetic phrase.—ἐρημώσεως is genitive of apposition = the horror which consists in desolation of the land. The appearance of the Romans in Palestine would at once become known to all. And it would be the signal for flight, for it would mean the end near, inevitable and terrible.—ἐν τόπῳ ἁγίῳ, one naturally thinks of the temple or the holy city and its environs, but a "holy place" in the prophetic style might mean the holy land. And Jesus can hardly have meant that disciples were to wait till the fatal hour had come.—ὁ ἀναγινώσκων, etc.: this is most likely an interpolated remark of the evangelist bidding his readers note the correspondence between Christ's warning word and the fact. In Christ's own mouth it would imply too much stress laid on Daniel's words as a guide, which indeed they are not. In Mark there is no reference to Daniel, therefore the reference there must be to the gospel (on this verse consult Weiss-Meyer).

Ver. 16. οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἰ., those in Judaea who have no part in the struggle, with special reference to disciples of Jesus. There would naturally be some in the city, therefore the counsel to fly must refer to a point of time antecedent to the commencement of the siege.—ἐπὶ τὰ ὄρη, to the mountains outside of Judaea, i.e., east of the Jordan; general as befits prophetic speech. The actual place of refuge was Pella, as we learn from Eusebius, H. E., iii., 5, 3.—Vv. 17, 18 vividly express the urgency of the flight.—ὁ ἐπὶ τ. δ., etc., the man on the house top must fly without stopping to get articles of value in the house down the outside stair and off.—τὰ ἐκ τ. οἰκ., elliptical = the things in his house, from his house.—ὁ ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ, let the man in the field, on hearing the fatal report, fly in his tunic, not returning home for his upper robe. "No man works in his mantle, the peasant leaves it at home, now as in Christ's time" (Furrer, Wanderungen, p. 117).—Vv. 19, 20 describe the pathos of the situation: woe to women with child, they cannot get rid of their burden; and to women nursing, they cannot abandon their children as men can their money or their clothes (διὰ τὸν δεσμὸν τῆς φύσεως, Euthy. Cf. Chrys. and Theophy.). A touch this worthy of Jesus, sign mark of genuineness.—Ver. 20. προσεύχεσθε, φυγὴ ὑμῶν [o] χειμῶνος, μηδὲ ἐν[1] σαββάτῳ. 21. Ἔσται γὰρ τότε θλίψις μεγάλη, οἵα οὐ γέγονεν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου ἕως τοῦ νῦν, οὐδ' οὐ μὴ γένηται. 22. καὶ εἰ μὴ [p] ἐκολοβώθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι ἐκεῖναι οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σάρξ· διὰ δὲ τοὺς [q] ἐκλεκτοὺς κολοβωθήσονται αἱ ἡμέραι ἐκεῖναι. 23. Τότε ἐάν τις ὑμῖν εἴπῃ, Ἰδού, ὧδε ὁ Χριστός, ἢ ὧδε, μὴ πιστεύσητε. 24. Ἐγερθήσονται γὰρ ψευδόχριστοι καὶ ψευδοπροφῆται, καὶ [r] δώσουσι [r] σημεῖα μεγάλα καὶ [s] τέρατα, ὥστε πλανῆσαι,[2] εἰ δυνατόν, καὶ τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς. 25. ἰδού, προείρηκα o vide Ch. xvi. 3.

p here and in Mk. xiii. 20 in N.T., vide below.
q vv. 24, 31. Mk. xiii. 20, 22. Lk. xviii. 7 (all apparently with a special sense).
r Acts ii. 19 (Deut. xiii. 1).
s always plural and coupled with σημεῖα (John iv. 48. Acts ii. 19, 43, etc.).

[1] ℵBΔΣ al. omit εν.

[2] πλανησαι is the reading of BXΔΣ al., and probably the true one. ℵD have πλανηθηναι (Tisch.). LZ have πλανασθαι (W.H. with πλανησαι in margin).

etc. (ἵνα μὴ with subjunctive instead of infinitive as often in N. T. after verbs of exhorting, etc.), pray that your flight be not in winter (χειμῶνος, genitive of time) or on the Sabbath (σαββάτῳ, dative of time). The Sabbatarianism of this sentence is a sure sign that it was not uttered by Jesus, but emanated from a Jewish source, say many, e.g., Weizsäcker (Untersuchungen, p. 124), Weiffenbach (Wiederkunftsgedanke, i., p. 103) approving. But Jesus could feel even for Sabbatarians, if they were honest, as for those who, like John's disciples, fasted.—Vv. 21, 22. The extremity of the distress.—Ver. 21 represents it as unparalleled before or after, in terms recalling those of Daniel xii. 1; ver. 22 as intolerable but for the shortness of the agony.—ἐκολοβώθησαν (from κολοβός, κόλος, mutilated) literally to cut off, e.g., hands or feet, as in 2 Sam. iv. 12; here figuratively to cut short the time: nisi breviati fuissent (Vulgate). The aorist here, as in next clause (ἐσώθη), is used proleptically, as if the future were past, in accordance with the genius of prophecy.—οὐκ ἂν, etc.: the οὐκ must be joined to the verb, and the meaning is: all flesh would be not saved; joined to πᾶσα the sense would be not all flesh, i.e., only some, would be saved.—ἐσώθη refers to escape from physical death; in ver. 13 the reference is to salvation in a higher sense. This is one of the reasons why this part of the discourse is regarded as not genuine. But surely Jesus cared for the safety both of body and soul (vide x. 22, 30). The epistle of Barnabas (iv.) contains a passage about shortening of the days, ascribed to Enoch. Weizsäcker (Untersuchungen, p. 125) presses this into the service of the Jewish apocalypse hypothesis.—διὰ δὲ τ. ἐκλεκτοὺς: the use of this term is not foreign to the vocabulary of Jesus (vide xxii. 14), yet it sounds strange to our ears as a designation for Christians. It occurs often in the Book of Enoch, especially in the Similitudes. The Book begins: "The words of the blessing of Enoch, wherewith he blessed the elect and righteous who will be living in the day of tribulation when all the wicked and godless are removed" (vide Charles, The Book of Enoch, p. 58). The idea attaching to the word here seems to be: those selected for deliverance in a time of general destruction = the preserved. And the thought expressed in the clause is that the preserved are to be preservers. Out of regard to their intercessions away amid the mountains, the days of horror will be shortened. A thought worthy of Jesus.

Vv. 23-28. False Christs again (Mk. xiii. 21-23, Lk. xvii. 23, 24, 37).—Ver. 24. ψευδόχριστοι, in the same sense as in ver. 5; there referred to as the cause of all the trouble, here as promising deliverance from the trouble they, or their like, have created. What would one not give for a Deliverer, a Messiah at such a dire crisis! The demand would create the supply, men offering themselves as Saviours from Rome's power, with prophets (ψευδοπροφῆται) preaching smooth things, and assuring a despairing people of deliverance at the last hour.—μὴ πιστεύσητε, says Jesus (ver. 23), do not believe them: no salvation possible; listen not, but flee.—καὶ δώσουσιν, etc., and will give great signs and wonders. The words recall Deut. xiii. 1. Desperate situations require a full use of all possible powers of persua-ὑμῖν. 26. ἐὰν οὖν εἴπωσιν ὑμῖν, Ἰδού, ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ ἐστί, μὴ ἐξέλθητε· Ἰδού, ἐν τοῖς ταμείοις, μὴ πιστεύσητε. 27. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ [t] ἀστραπὴ ἐξέρχεται ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν καὶ φαίνεται ἕως δυσμῶν, οὕτως ἔσται καὶ[1] ἡ παρουσία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. 28. ὅπου γὰρ[2] ἐὰν ᾖ τὸ πτῶμα, ἐκεῖ συναχθήσονται οἱ [u] ἀετοί. 29. Εὐθέως δὲ μετὰ τὴν θλίψιν τῶν ἡμερῶν ἐκείνων, ὁ ἥλιος σκοτισθήσεται, καὶ t Ch. xxviii. 3. Lk. x. 18; xi. 36 (of the gleam of a lamp); xvii. 24; several times in Rev. (pl.). u Lk. xvii. 37. Rev. iv. 7; viii. 13 (W.H.); xii. 14.

[1] Most uncials (ℵBD, etc.) omit και.

[2] ℵBDL omit γαρ.

sion: signs and wonders, or the pretence of them: easily accepted as such by a fanaticised multitude, and sometimes so clever and plausible as to tempt the wise to credence.—ὥστε, with infinitive to express tendency; often inclusive of result, but not here.—εἰ δυνατὸν, if possible, the implication being that it is not. If it were the consequence would be fatal. The "elect" (τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς)—selected by Providence for safety in the evil day—would be involved in the general calamity. Christians, at Israel's great crisis, were to be saved by unbelief in pseudo-messiahs and pseudo-prophets. —Ver. 25. ἰδοὺ π. ὑ., emphatic nota bene, showing that there will be real danger of misplaced fatal confidences. Hence further expatiation on the topic in vv. 26-28 in graphic, pithy, laconic speech. —Ver. 26. ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, a likely place for a Christ to be (Moses, Israel's first deliverer).—μὴ ἐξέλθητε, go not out (cf. xi. 7, 8, 9).—ἐν τοῖς ταμείοις (vide vi. 6), in the secret chambers, the plural indicating the kind of place, not any particular place. Both expressions—in the desert, in the secret recesses—point to non-visibility. The false prophets bid the people put their faith in a Messiah not in evidence, the Great Unseen = "The hour is come, and the man is somewhere, out of view, not far away, take my word for it". Interpreters who seek for exact historical fulfilments point to Simon son of Gioras, and John of Giscala: the former the Messiah in the desert of Tekoah, gathering a confiding multitude about him; the latter the Messiah in the secret places, taking possession of the interior part of the temple with its belongings in the final struggle (vide Josephus, B. J., iv., 9, 5 and 7; v. 6, 1, and Lutteroth, ad loc.).—Ver. 27. ὥσπερ γὰρ, etc.: the coming of the true Messiah, identified with the Son of Man, compared to the lightning, to suggest a contrast between Him and the false Christs as to visibility, and enforce the counsel to pay no heed to those who say: He is here, or He is there.—Ver. 28. πτῶμα, carcase, as in xiv. 12, q.v.—ἀετοί, eagles, doubtless the carrion vultures are meant. The reference of this proverbial saying, as old as the book of Job (xxxix. 30), in this place is not clear. In the best text it comes in without connecting particle, the γὰρ of T. R. being wanting. If we connect it with ver. 27 the idea will be that Messiah's judicial function will be as universal as His appearance (Meyer and Weiss). But does not ver. 28 as well as ver. 27 refer to what is said about the false Christs, and mean: heed not these pretended Saviours; Israel cannot be saved: she is dead and must become the prey of the vultures? (So Lutteroth.) In this view the Jewish people are the carcase and the Roman army the eagles.

Vv. 29-31. The coming of the Son of Man (Mk. xiii. 24-27, Lk. xxi. 25-28).—Thus far the eschatological discourse has been found to bear on the predicted tragic end of Jerusalem. At this point the παρουσία, which, according to the evangelist, was one of the subjects on which the disciples desired information, becomes the theme of discourse. What is said thereon is so perplexing as to tempt a modern expositor to wish it had not been there, or to have recourse to critical expedients to eliminate it from the text. But nothing would be gained by that unless we got rid, at the same time, of other sayings of kindred character ascribed to Jesus in the Gospels. And there seems to be no reason to doubt that some such utterance would form a part of the eschatological discourse, even if the disciples did not ask instruction on the subject. The revelation as to the last days of Israel naturally led up to it, and the best clue to the meaning of the Parusia-logion may be to regard it as a pendant to that revelation.

Ver. 29. εὐθέως. Each evangelist expresses himself here in his own way, ἡ σελήνη οὐ δώσει τὸ ᵛφέγγος αὐτῆς, καὶ οἱ ἀστέρες πεσοῦνται ἀπὸ[1] τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν οὐρανῶν σαλευθήσονται. 30. καὶ τότε φανήσεται τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῷ[2] οὐρανῷ· καὶ τότε κόψονται πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς, καὶ ὄψονται τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ἐρχόμενον ἐπὶ τῶν νεφελῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ μετὰ δυνάμεως καὶ δόξης πολλῆς. 31. καὶ ἀποστελεῖ τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ μετὰ ʷσάλπιγγος φωνῆς[3] μεγάλης, καὶ ἐπισυνάξουσι τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων ἀνέμων, ἀπ' ἄκρων οὐρανῶν ἕως[4] ἄκρων αὐτῶν.

v Mk. xiii. 24. Lk. xi. 33 (T. R.).

w 1 Cor. xv. 52. 1 Thess. iv. 16. Heb. xii. 19, etc.

[1] ℵD have εκ (Tisch.). απο in BLXΔΣ (W.H.). [2] ℵBL omit τω.

[3] ℵLΔ omit φωνης (Tisch., W.H. relegate to the margin). BD (και φωνης) XΣ al have it and it is doubtless genuine.

[4] B 1, 13, 69 add των after εως (W.H. insert, but bracketed).

Lk. most obviously adapting his words to suit the fact of a delayed parusia. Mt.'s word naturally means: immediately, following close on the events going before, the thlipsis of Jerusalem. One of the ways by which those to whom εὐθέως is a stumbling block strive to evade the difficulty is to look on it as an inaccurate translation by the Greek Matthew of פִּתְאֹם, supposed to be in Hebrew original. So Schott, Comm. Ex. Dog.—ὁ ἥλιος . . . σαλευθήσονται: a description in stock prophetic phrases (Is. xiii. 9, xxxix. 4, Joel iii. 15, etc.) of what seems to be a general collapse of the physical universe. Is that really what is meant? I doubt it. It seems to me that in true prophetic Oriental style the colossal imagery of the physical universe is used to describe the political and social consequences of the great Jewish catastrophe: national ruin, breaking up of religious institutions and social order. The physical stands for the social, the shaking of heaven for the shaking of earth (Haggai ii. 6); or in the prophetic imagination the two are indissolubly blended: stars, thrones, city walls, temples, effete religions tumbling down into one vast mass of ruin. If this be the meaning εὐθέως is to be strictly taken.—φέγγος, applicable to both sun and moon, but oftener applied to the moon or stars; φῶς oftenest to the sun, but also to the moon. Vide Trench, Syn., p. 163.—Ver. 30. καὶ τότε. Amid the general crash what longing would arise in Christian hearts for the presence of the Christ! To this longing the announcement introduced by these words "and then" responds.—τὸ σημεῖον τ. υἱ. τ. ἀ. The question what is this sign has greatly perplexed commentators, who make becoming confessions of ignorance. "We must not be positive in conjecturing," Morrison. "What this shall be it is vain to conjecture," Cambridge N. T. Is the reference not to Daniel vii. 13, "one like the Son of Man," and the meaning: the sign which is the Son of Man, τ. υ. τ. ἀ. being genitive of appos.? So Weiss after Storr and Wolf.—("σημεῖον υἱοῦ, similis est illis quibus profani passim utuntur quando dicunt βία Ἡρακλέος," i.e., "vis Herculis seu ipse Hercules," Wolf, Curae Phil.) Christ His own sign, like the lightning or the sun, self-evidencing.—καὶ τότε κόψονται, etc.: a clause not in Mk. and obscure in meaning; why mourn? because they recognise in the Coming One their Judge? or because they see in Him one who had been despised and rejected of men, and penitently (taking the sin home to themselves) acknowledge His claims? ("believed on in the world," 1 Tim. iii. 16).—ἐρχόμενον . . . πολλῆς, description of the coming, here as in xvi. 27, xxvi. 64, in terms drawn from Daniel vii. 13.—Ver. 31. μετὰ σάλπιγγος φ. μ., with a trumpet of mighty sound, another stock phrase of prophetic imagery (Is. xxvii. 13).—καὶ ἐπισυνάξουσι τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς α., and they (the angels or messengers) shall collect the elect (as in vv. 22, 24), showing that the advent is described in terms suited to the situation previously depicted. The Christ comes for the comfort of those preserved from the general ruin.—ἐκ τῶν τ. ἀνέμων: not merely from the mountains east of the Jordan, but from every quarter of the

32. "Ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς συκῆς μάθετε τὴν παραβολήν· ὅταν ἤδη ὁ κλάδος αὐτῆς γένηται [x] ἁπαλός, καὶ τὰ φύλλα ἐκφύῃ, γινώσκετε ὅτι ἐγγὺς τὸ [y] θέρος· 33. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ὅταν ἴδητε πάντα ταῦτα, γινώσκετε ὅτι ἐγγύς ἐστιν ἐπὶ θύραις. 34. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν,[1] οὐ μὴ παρέλθῃ ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη, ἕως ἂν πάντα ταῦτα γένηται. 35. Ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ παρελεύσονται,[2] οἱ δὲ λόγοι μου οὐ μὴ παρέλθωσι. 36. Περὶ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης καὶ τῆς[3] ὥρας οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, οὐδὲ οἱ ἄγγελοι τῶν οὐρανῶν,[4] εἰ μὴ ὁ πατήρ μου[5] μόνος. 37. Ὥσπερ δὲ[6] αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ Νῶε, οὕτως ἔσται καὶ[7] ἡ παρουσία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ x here and in Mk. xiii. 28.

y here and in Mk. xiii. 28. Lk. xxi. 30 (Gen. viii. 22. Prov. vi. 8).

[1] BDL add οτι after υμιν (W.H.).

[2] BDL read παρελευσεται. The plural (T. R.) is a grammatical correction.

[3] ℵBDΔ al. omit της before ωρας.

[4] After ουρανων ℵBD, old Latin vers., and some cursives add ουδε ο υιος, which is adopted by most modern editors.

[5] ℵBDLΔΣ omit μου. [6] γαρ in BD. [7] ℵBL omit και.

earth where faithful souls are found; echo of Is. xxvii. 13 again audible here.—ἀπ' ἄκρων, etc., echo of phrases in Deut. xxx. 4, Ps. xix. 7. This Parusia-logion is not to be regarded as a didactic statement, but simply as a λόγος παρακλήσεως for the comfort of anxious spirits. With that aim it naturally places the Parusia within the reach of those it is designed to comfort. After the ruin of Israel there is no history; only the wind-up. Jerusalem destroyed, the curtain falls. Christ's didactic words suggest another aspect, a delayed Parusia, vide on xvi. 28. From the foregoing exposition it appears that the coming of the Son of Man is not to be identified with the judgment of Jerusalem, but rather forms its preternatural background.

Vv. 32-36. Parabolic close (Mk. xiii. 28-32, Lk. xxi. 29-33).—Ver. 32. ἀπὸ τῆς συκῆς, etc., from the fig tree learn its parable, rapid condensed speech befitting the tense state of mind; learn from that kind of tree (article generic) the lesson it can teach with regard to the moral order: Tender branch, young leaf = summer nigh. Schott, Comm. Ex. Dog., p. 125, renders ἀπὸ τ. σ. ope ficus = ficum contemplando. On the form εκφυη vide notes on Mk.—Ver. 33. οὕτως κ. ὑ, so do ye also when ye see all these things, recognise that it is nigh, at the doors. What are "these things"? what "it"? The former are the things mentioned in vv. 15-21 (ὅταν οὖν ἴδητε, ver. 15), the latter is the παρουσία.—Ver. 34. Solemn assurance that the predicted will come to pass.—πάντα ταῦτα is most naturally taken to mean the same things as in ver. 33, the main subject of the discourse, the impending destruction of the Jewish state. Jesus was quite certain that they would happen within the then living generation (ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη), not merely through miraculous foresight but through clear insight into the moral forces at work.—Ver. 35. Declaration similar to that in chap. v. 18 concerning the validity of the law.—Ver. 36. περὶ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης καὶ τῆς ὥρας, of that day and hour. The reference is to the coming of the Son of Man, the expression throughout the N. T. having the value of an "indisputable fixed terminus technicus," Weiffenbach, Wiederkunftsgedanke, p. 157.—οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, no one knows, a statement made more emphatic by application to the angels of heaven, and even to the Son (οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός). The meaning is not that Jesus disclaims even for Himself knowledge of the precise day, month, or year of what in ver. 34 He has declared will happen within the present generation; whether, e.g., the crisis of the war would be in 69 or 70 A.D. That is too trivial a matter to be the subject of so solemn a declaration. It is an intimation that all statements as to the time of the παρουσία must be taken in a qualified sense as referring to a subject on which certain knowledge is not attainable or even desirable. It looks like Jesus correcting Himself, or using two ways of speaking, one for comfort (it will be soon), and one for caution (it ἀνθρώπου. 38. ὥσπερ[1] γὰρ ἦσαν ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ταῖς πρὸ τοῦ ᵃκατακλυσμοῦ, ᵃτρώγοντες καὶ πίνοντες, γαμοῦντες καὶ ἐκγαμίζοντες,[2] ἄχρι ἧς ἡμέρας εἰσῆλθε Νῶε εἰς τὴν ᵇκιβωτόν, 39. καὶ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, ἕως ἦλθεν ὁ κατακλυσμὸς καὶ ἦρεν ἅπαντας, οὕτως ἔσται καὶ[3] ἡ παρουσία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου.

40. "Τότε δύο ἔσονται[4] ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ· ὁ[5] εἷς παραλαμβάνεται, καὶ ὁ[5] εἷς ἀφίεται. 41. δύο ᶜἀλήθουσαι ἐν τῷ μύλωνι[6]· μία παραλαμβάνεται, καὶ μία ἀφίεται.

42. "Γρηγορεῖτε οὖν, ὅτι οὐκ οἴδατε ποίᾳ ὥρᾳ[7] ὁ κύριος ὑμῶν ἔρχεται· 43. ἐκεῖνο δὲ γινώσκετε, ὅτι εἰ ᾔδει ὁ οἰκοδεσπότης ποίᾳ φυλακῇ ὁ κλέπτης ἔρχεται, ἐγρηγόρησεν ἄν, καὶ οὐκ ἂν ᵈεἴασε z Lk. xvii. 27. 2 Pet. iii. 6.

a here and in John, vide reff. below and remarks.
b Lk. xvii. 27. Heb. ix. 4; xi. 7. 1 Pet. iii. 20. Rev. xi. 19.
c Lk. xvii. 35.
d Lk. iv. 41. Acts xiv. 16 al. 1 Cor. x. 13 (with acc. of person and inf.).

[1] ως in ℵBL. [2] ℵD have the simple γαμιζοντες (Tisch., W.H.).
[3] BD omit και. [4] εσονται δυο in ℵB. [5] ο in both places omitted in ℵBDL.
[6] μυλω in ℵBLΔΣ. D has μυλωνι. [7] ημερα in ℵBDΔΣ, cursives.

may not be so soon as even I think or you expect). His whole manner of speaking concerning the second advent seems to have two faces; providing on the one hand for the possibility of a Christian era, and on the other for an accelerated Parusia.

Vv. 37-42. Watch therefore (cf. Lk. xvii. 26-30, 34-36).—Ver. 37. αἱ ἡμέραι τ. Νῶε, the history of Noah used to illustrate the uncertainty of the Parusia.—Ver. 38. ἦσαν with the following participles is not an instance of the periphrastic imperfect. It rather stands by itself, and the particles are descriptive predicates. Some charge these with sinister meaning: τρώγοντες, hinting at gluttony because often used of beasts, though also, in the sense of eating, of men (John vi. 58, xiii. 18). So Beza and Grotius; γαμοῦντες καὶ γαμίζοντες, euphemistically pointing at sexual licences on both sides (Wolf, "omnia vagis libidinibus miscebantur"). The idea rather seems to be that all things went on as usual, as if nothing were going to happen. In the N. T., and especially in the fourth Gospel, τρώγω seems to be used simply as a synonym for ἐσθίω. In like manner all distinction between ἐσθίειν and χορτάζεσθαι (= to feed cattle in classics) has disappeared. Vide Mk. vii. 27, 28, and consult Kennedy, Sources of New Testament Greek, p. 82.—Ver. 39. οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, they did not know, scil., that the flood was coming till it was on them.—Ver. 40, 41 graphically illustrate the suddenness of the Parusia.—εἷς εἷς (ver. 40) instead of εἷς ἕτερος, so μία μία in ver. 41. Of these idioms Herrmann in Viger (p. 6) remarks: "Sapiunt Ebraismum".—παραλαμβάνεται, ἀφίεται, one is taken, one left. The reference may either be to the action of the angels, ver. 31 (Meyer), or to the judicial action of the Son of Man seizing some, leaving free others (Weiss-Meyer). The sentences are probably proverbial (Schott), and the terms may admit of diverse application. However applied, they point to opposite destinies.—ἀλήθουσαι, grinding: ἀλήθω, late for ἀλέω, condemned by Phryn., p. 151.—ἐν τῷ μύλωνι (T. R.), in the mill house.—ἐ. τ. μύλῳ (W.H.), in or with the millstone. The reference is to a handmill, which required two to work it when grinding was carried on for a considerable time—women's work (vide Robinson, i., 485; Furrer, Wand., p. 97; Benzinger, p. 85, where a figure is given).—Ver. 42. γρηγορεῖτε, watch, a frequently recurring exhortation, implying not merely an uncertain but a delayed Parusia, tempting to be off guard, and so making such repeated exhortations necessary.—ποίᾳ ἡμέρᾳ, on what sort of a day, early or late; so again in ver. 43, at what sort of a watch, seasonable or unseasonable.

Vv. 43-51. Two parables: the Thief and the Two Servants, enforcing the lesson: Watch!—Ver. 43. γινώσκετε, observe, nota bene.—εἰ ᾔδει: supposition contrary to fact, therefore verbs in prot. and apod. indicative.—ὁ κλέπτης, admirably selected character. It is the thief's business to keep people in the dark as to the time of his coming, or as to his coming at all.—οἰκοδεσπότης suggests the idea of a great man, but in reality it διορυγῆναι[1] τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ. 44. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὑμεῖς γίνεσθε ἕτοιμοι· ὅτι ᾗ ὥρᾳ οὐ δοκεῖτε,[2] ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἔρχεται. 45. Τίς ἄρα ἐστὶν ὁ πιστὸς δοῦλος καὶ φρόνιμος, ὃν κατέστησεν ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ[3] ἐπὶ τῆς θεραπείας[4] αὐτοῦ, τοῦ διδόναι[5] αὐτοῖς τὴν τροφὴν [e]ἐν [e]καιρῷ; 46. μακάριος ὁ δοῦλος ἐκεῖνος, ὃν ἐλθὼν ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ εὑρήσει ποιοῦντα οὕτως.[6] 47. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἐπὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ὑπάρχουσιν αὐτοῦ καταστήσει αὐτόν. 48. Ἐὰν δὲ εἴπῃ ὁ κακὸς δοῦλος ἐκεῖνος ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ, Χρονίζει ὁ κύριός μου[7] ἐλθεῖν,[8] 49. καὶ ἄρξηται τύπτειν τοὺς συνδούλους,[9] ἐσθίειν δὲ καὶ πίνειν[10] μετὰ τῶν μεθυόντων, 50. ἥξει ὁ κύριος τοῦ δούλου ἐκείνου ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ᾗ οὐ προσδοκᾷ, καὶ ἐν ὥρᾳ ᾗ οὐ γινώσκει, 51. καὶ [g]διχοτομήσει αὐτόν, καὶ τὸ [h]μέρος αὐτοῦ μετὰ τῶν ὑποκριτῶν [h]θήσει· ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων.

e Lk. xii. 42. 1 Pet. v. 6.
f Ch. xxv. 5. Lk. i. 21 (to tarry, with ἐν); xii. 45. Heb. x. 37.
g here and in Lk. xii. 46.
h same phrase in Lk. xii. 46.

[1] διορυχθηναι ℵDIL; as in T. R. in BΔΣ.
[2] η ου δοκειτε ωρα in ℵBDI.
[3] ℵBDIL 1, 33 al. omit αυτου.
[4] οικετειας in BILΔΣ (W.H.). θεραπειας in D al.
[5] δουναι in ℵBCDLΔΣ. διδοναι is from Lk.
[6] ουτως ποιουντα in ℵBCDL.
[7] μου before ο κυριος in ℵBCDL al.
[8] ℵB 33 omit ελθειν.
[9] ℵBCDL add αυτου.
[10] εσθιη δε και πινη in ℵBCDL.

is a poor peasant who is in view. He lives in a clay house, which can be dug through (sun-dried bricks), vide διορυχθῆναι in last clause. Yet he is the master in his humble dwelling (cf. on vi. 19).—Ver. 45. τίς, who, taken by Grotius, Kuinoel, Schott, etc. = εἴ τις, si quis, supposing a case. But, as Fritzsche points out, the article before π. δοῦλος is inconsistent with this sense.—πιστὸς, φρόνιμος: two indispensable qualities in an upper servant, trusty and judicious.—θεραπείας (T. R.), service = body of servants, οἰκετείας (B., W.H.), household = domestics.—Ver. 46 answers the question by felicitation.—μακάριος, implying that the virtue described is rare (vide on chap. v. 3): a rare servant, who is not demoralised by delay, but keeps steadfastly doing his duty.—ἐπὶ π. τ. ὑπάρχουσι, this one among a thousand is fit to be put in charge of the whole of his master's estate.—Ver. 48. The other side of the picture—ἐὰν δὲ . . . ἐκεῖνος: not the same individual, but a man placed in the same post ("cui eadem provincia sit demandata," Schott).—χρονίζει (again in xxv. 8): the servant begins to reflect on the fact that his lord is late in coming, and is demoralised.—ἄρξηται, he (now) begins to play the tyrant (τύπτειν) and to indulge in excess (ἐσθίῃ καὶ πίνῃ, etc.). Long delay is necessary to produce such complete demoralisation.—Ver. 50. ἥξει: the master comes at last, and of course he will come unexpected. The delay has been so long that the unworthy servant goes on his bad way as if the master would never come at all.—Ver. 51. διχοτομήσει, he will cut him in sunder as with a saw, an actual mode of punishment in ancient times, and many commentators think that this barbarous penalty is seriously meant here. But this can hardly be, especially as in the following clause the man is supposed to be still alive. The probable meaning is: will cut him in two (so to speak) with a whip = thrash him, the base slave, unmercifully. It is a strong word, selected in sympathy with the master's rage. So Schott: "verberbus multis eam castigavit". Koetsveld, De Gelijk., p. 246, and Grimm (Thayer) but ith whesitancy. Beza and Grotius interpret: will divide him from the family = dismiss him.—μετὰ τῶν ὑποκριτῶν, with the hypocrites, i.e., eye-servants, who make a great show of zeal under the master's eye, but are utterly negligent behind his back. In Lk. the corresponding phrase is τῶν ἀπίστων, the unfaithful.

XXV. 1. "ΤΟΤΕ ὁμοιωθήσεται ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν δέκα παρθένοις, αἵτινες λαβοῦσαι τὰς [a] λαμπάδας αὐτῶν[1] ἐξῆλθον εἰς ἀπάντησιν[2] τοῦ νυμφίου.[2] 2. πέντε δὲ ἦσαν ἐξ αὐτῶν[3] φρόνιμοι,[4] καὶ αἱ[5] πέντε μωραί.[4] 3. αἵτινες[6] μωραί, λαβοῦσαι τὰς λαμπάδας ἑαυτῶν,[7] οὐκ ἔλαβον μεθ' ἑαυτῶν [b] ἔλαιον· 4. αἱ δὲ φρόνιμοι ἔλαβον ἔλαιον ἐν τοῖς ἀγγείοις αὐτῶν[8] μετὰ τῶν λαμπάδων αὐτῶν.[8] 5. χρονίζοντος δὲ τοῦ νυμφίου, [c] ἐνύσταξαν πᾶσαι καὶ ἐκάθευδον.

a John xviii. 3. Acts xx. 8. Rev. iv. 5; viii. 10.
b Mk. vi. 13. Lk. x. 34. Jas. v. 14 (for healing). Lk. vii. 46. Heb. i. 9 (used at feasts for anointing). Lk. xvi. 6. Rev. vi. 6; xviii. 13 (commerce).
c 2 Pet. ii. 3 (Ps. lxxvi. 7).

[1] εαυτων in BDL (W.H.).

[2] υπαντησιν in ℵBC (Tisch., W.H.). After νυμφιου is added και της νυμφης in DΣ it. vul. Syr. Sin., Or., Hil., W.H. place this reading in margin, and it calls for further discussion. Vide below for Resch's view.

[3] εξ αυτων ησαν in ℵBCDLZΔΣ.

[4] μωραι, φρονιμοι in ℵBCDLZΣ, several cursives.

[5] αι omitted in ℵBCDLZΣ, 33 al.

[6] αι γαρ for αιτινες in ℵBCLΣ 33.

[7] αυτων in BCDΔ. ℵL have neither αυτ. nor εαυτ. (Tisch.).

[8] First αυτων omit ℵBDLZ. For second ℵB have εαυτων.

Chapter XXV. Three Eschatological Parables. These parables (especially the first and third) are appropriately introduced by Mt. at this place, whether actually uttered in immediate connection with the Olivet discourse, or during the Passion week, or otherwise. In his reproduction of the book of Logia, Wendt gives the group of parables inculcating constant preparedness for the Parusia, including the Waiting Servants (Lk. xii. 35-38); the Thief (Mt. xxiv. 43, 44; Lk. xii. 39, 40); the Upper Servant (Mt. xxiv. 45-51; Lk. xii. 42, 48), and the Ten Virgins (Mt. xxv. 1-12; Lk. xiii. 25), a somewhat earlier place (L. J., i., pp. 118-122).

Vv. 1-13. Parable of the Ten Virgins, in Mt. only.—Ver. 1. τότε, then, connecting what follows in the evangelist's mind with the time referred to in the previous parable, i.e., with the Parusia. —δέκα παρθένοις: ten virgins, not as the usual number—as to that no information is available—but as one coming readily to the mind of a Jew, as we might in a similar case say a dozen.—αἵτινες, such as; αἱ might have been used, but the tendency in N. T. and late Greek is to prefer ὅστις to ὅς.—τὰς λαμπάδας α., their torches consisting of a wooden staff held in the hand, with a dish at the top, in which was a piece of cloth or rope dipped in oil or pitch (vide Lightfoot, Hor. Heb.). Rutherford (New Phrynicus, p. 131) says that λαμπάδας is here used in the sense of oil lamps, and that in the common dialect λαμπάς became equivalent to λύχνος.—εἰς ὑπ(ἀπ-)άντησιν: vide at viii. 34.—τοῦ νυμφίου: the bridegroom, who is conceived of as coming with his party to the house of the bride, where the marriage feast is to take place, contrary to the usual though possibly not the invariable custom (Judges xiv. 10). The parable at this point seems to be adapted to the spiritual situation—the Son of Man coming again. Resch thinks καὶ τῆς νύμφης a true part of the original parable, without which it cannot be understood (Aussercanonische Paralleltexte zu Mt. und Mk., p. 300).—Ver. 2. πέντε μωραί, πέντε φρόνιμοι: equal numbers of both, not intended to represent the proportion in the spiritual sphere; foolish, wise, not bad and good, but imprudent and prudent, thoughtless and thoughtful. Even the "foolish" might be very attractive, lovable girls; perhaps might have been the favourites at the feast: for wisdom is apt to be cold; foolish first named in best MSS., and properly, for they play the chief rôle in the story, and are first characterised in the sequel.—Ver. 3. ἔλαιον: the statement about the foolish, indicating the nature or proof of their folly, is that they took their lamps but did not take oil. None? or only not a supply sufficient for an emergency—possible delay? Goebel (Die Parabeln Jesu) decides for d here only in sense of trim.

e Ch. iii. 9; xvi. 8; xxiii. 34. Rom. viii. 23. 1 Cor. xi. 31 (all instances of the reflex. pron. used in ref. to 1st and 2nd pers.).

6. μέσης δὲ νυκτὸς κραυγὴ γέγονεν, Ἰδού, ὁ νυμφίος ἔρχεται,[1] ἐξέρχεσθε εἰς ἀπάντησιν αὐτοῦ.[2] 7. Τότε ἠγέρθησαν πᾶσαι αἱ παρθένοι ἐκεῖναι, καὶ [d] ἐκόσμησαν τὰς λαμπάδας αὐτῶν.[3] 8. αἱ δὲ μωραὶ ταῖς φρονίμοις εἶπον, Δότε ἡμῖν ἐκ τοῦ ἐλαίου ὑμῶν, ὅτι αἱ λαμπάδες ἡμῶν σβέννυνται. 9. Ἀπεκρίθησαν δὲ αἱ φρόνιμοι, λέγουσαι, Μήποτε οὐκ[4] ἀρκέσῃ ἡμῖν καὶ ὑμῖν· πορεύεσθε δὲ[5] μᾶλλον πρὸς τοὺς πωλοῦντας, καὶ ἀγοράσατε [e] ἑαυταῖς. 10. ἀπερ-

[1] ερχεται omit ℵBCDLZ (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] Omit αυτου ℵB (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] εαυτων in ℵABLZΣ.

[4] ου μη in BCDXΔΣ (W.H.), ουκ in ℵALZ (Tisch., W.H., in margin).

[5] The best authorities omit δε.

the former view. His idea of the whole situation is this: the virgins meet at the bride's house, there wait the announcement of the bridegroom's approach, then for the first time proceed to light their lamps, whereupon the foolish find that there is nothing in the dish except a dry wick, which goes out shortly after being lighted. In favour of this view he adduces the consideration that the other alternative makes the wise too wise providing for a rare occurrence. Perhaps, but on the other hand Goebel's view makes the foolish too foolish, and also irrelevantly foolish, for in the case supposed they would have been at fault even if the bridegroom had not tarried. But the very point of the parable is to illustrate the effect of delay. On the various ways of conceiving the situation, vide The Parabolic Teaching of Christ.—Ver. 4. ἐν τοῖς ἀγγείοις: the wise took oil in the vessels, i.e., in vessels, with an extra supply, distinct from the cups at the top of the torches containing oil.—Ver. 5. χρονίζοντος τ. ν.: no reason given for delay, a possibility in natural life, the point on which the spiritual lesson, be ready, hinges. —ἐνύσταξαν, they nodded, aorist, because a transient state; ἐκάθευδον, and remained for some time in slumber, imperfect, because the state continuous. Carr (Camb. N. T.) cites Plato, Apol. Socr., as illustrating the discriminating use of the two verbs in reference to the two stages of sleep.—πᾶσαι, all, sleep in the circumstances perfectly natural and, everything being ready, perfectly harmless.—Ver. 6. ἰδοὺ ὁ νυμφίος: at length at midnight a cry is raised by some one not asleep—lo! the bridegroom; laconic, rousing, heard by all sleepers.—ἐξέρχεσθε εἰς. ἀπάντησιν, go forth to meeting: no words that can be dispensed with here either. Go forth whence? from the bride's house (Goebel); from some inn, or private dwelling on the way, whither they have turned in on finding that the bridegroom tarried (Bleek, Meyer, Weiss). On this point Goebel's view is to be preferred.—Ver. 7. ἐκόσμησαν: trimmed, or proceeded to trim, for which the imperfect would have been more suitable. In the case of the five foolish it was an action attempted rather than performed, begun rather than completed.—Ver. 8. σβέννυνται: are going out, as in R. V.—Ver. 9. μήποτε: lest, implying, and giving a reason for, an unexpressed declinature. Kypke renders, perhaps, fortasse, citing examples from classics, also Loesner, giving examples from Philo. Elsner suggests that ὁρᾶτε or βλέπετε is understood before μήποτε. Schott, putting a comma after ὑμῖν, and omitting δὲ after πορεύεσθε, translates thus: lest perchance there be not enough for us and you, go rather to them that sell, etc. ("ne forte oleum neque nobis neque vobis sufficiat, abite potius," etc.).—πορεύεσθε, etc.: this seems a cold, ungenerous suggestion on the part of the wise, and apparently untrue to what was likely to occur among girls at such a time. Could the oil really be got at such a time of night? and, supposing it could, would going not throw them out of the festivities? Augustine says: "non consulentium sed irridentium est ista responsio" (Serm. xc., iii., 8). More humanely, in the modern spirit, Koetsveld suggests that the marriage procession to music and song was very slow, and that there was a fair chance of overtaking it after the purchase (De Gelijk., p. 220). Let us hope so; but I fear we must fall back on the fact that "sudden emergencies bring χομένων δὲ αὐτῶν ἀγοράσαι, ἦλθεν ὁ νυμφίος· καὶ αἱ ἕτοιμοι εἰσῆλθον μετ' αὐτοῦ εἰς τοὺς γάμους, καὶ ἐκλείσθη ἡ θύρα. 11. ὕστερον δὲ ἔρχονται καὶ αἱ λοιπαὶ παρθένοι, λέγουσαι, Κύριε, κύριε, ἄνοιξον ἡμῖν. 12. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐκ οἶδα ὑμᾶς. 13. Γρηγορεῖτε οὖν, ὅτι οὐκ οἴδατε τὴν ἡμέραν οὐδὲ τὴν ὥραν, ἐν ᾗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἔρχεται.[1]

14. "Ὥσπερ γὰρ ἄνθρωπος [f] ἀποδημῶν ἐκάλεσε τοὺς ἰδίους δούλους, καὶ παρέδωκεν αὐτοῖς τὰ ὑπάρχοντα αὐτοῦ· 15. καὶ ᾧ μὲν ἔδωκε πέντε τάλαντα, ᾧ δὲ δύο, ᾧ δὲ ἕν, ἑκάστῳ [g] κατὰ τὴν ἰδίαν

[f] Ch. xxi. 33. Mk. xiii. 1. Lk. xv. 13; xx. 9.
[g] 2 Cor. viii. 3.

[1] The words εν η ο υιος τ. α. ερ. are omitted in ℵABCDLXΔΣ 33 al. plur., and by modern editors.

into play a certain element of selfishness," and take the advice of the wise as simply a refusal to be burdened with their neighbours' affairs.

Ver. 10. ἀπερχομένων, etc., the foolish took the advice and went to buy, and in so doing acted in character; foolish in that as in not having a good supply of oil. They should have gone on without oil, the great matter being to be in time. By reckoning this as a point in their folly we bring the foolish virgins into analogy with the foolish builder in chap. vii. 26. Vide notes there, and also The Parabolic Teaching of Christ, p. 505 f. Of course, on this view the oil has no significance in the spiritual sphere. It plays a great part in the history of interpretation. For Chrys. and Euthy., the lamp = virginity, and the oil = pity, and the moral is: continence without charity worthless; a good lesson. "Nothing," says the former, "is blinder than virginity without pity; thus the people are used to call the merciless dark (σκοτεινούς)," Hom. lxxviii.—ἐκλείσθη ἡ θύρα, the door was shut, because all the guests were supposed to be within; no hint given by the wise virgins that more were coming. This improbable in the natural sphere.—Ver. 11. κύριε, κύριε, etc., master, master, open to us; a last, urgent, desperate appeal, knocking having preceded (Lk. xiii. 25) without result. The fear that they are not going to be admitted has seized their hearts.—Ver. 12. οὐκ οἶδα ὑμᾶς, I do not know you, in the natural sphere not a judicial penalty for arriving too late, but an inference from the late arrival that those without cannot belong to the bridal party. The solemn tone, however (ἀμὴν λ. ὑ.), shows that the spiritual here invades the natural. Pricaeus refers to Lk. xi. 7 as helping to understand the temper of the speech from within = do not trouble me, the door is shut.—Ver. 13. The moral, γρηγορεῖτε, watch; not directed against sleep (ver. 5) but against lack of forethought. The reference of the parable to the Parusia, according to Weiss (Meyer), is imposed upon it by the evangelist.

Vv. 14-30. Parable of the Talents (cf. Lk. xix. 11-28), according to Weiss (Mt.-Ev., 535) and Wendt (L. J., i., 145) not a Parusia-parable originally, but spoken at some other time, and inculcating, like the parable of the unjust steward, skill and fidelity in the use of earthly goods.—Ver. 14. ὥσπερ: suggests a comparison between the parabolic history and the course of things in the kingdom, but the apodosis carrying out the comparison is omitted.—γὰρ implies that the point of comparison is in the view of the evangelist the same as in the preceding parable.—ἀποδημῶν, about to go abroad.—ἐκάλεσε, etc., called his own servants and delivered to them his means; not an unnatural or unusual proceeding introduced against probability for the sake of the moral lesson; rather the best thing he could do with his money in his absence, dividing it among carefully selected slaves, and leaving them to do their best with it. Investments could not then be made as now (vide Koetsveld, p. 254).—Ver. 15. πέντε, δύο, ἕν: the number of talents given in each case corresponded to the master's judgment of the capacity (δύναμιν) of each man. All were supposed to be trustworthy and more or less capable. Even one talent represented a considerable sum, especially for that period when a denarius was a day's wage.—καὶ ἀπεδήμησεν, and then he went away. So ends the account of the master's action.—εὐθέως should be connected with πορευθεὶς, whereby it gains δύναμιν· καὶ ἀπεδήμησεν εὐθέως. 16. πορευθεὶς δὲ[1] ὁ τὰ πέντε τάλαντα λαβὼν εἰργάσατο[2] ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐποίησεν[3] ἄλλα πέντε τάλαντα.[4] 17. ὡσαύτως καὶ[5] ὁ τὰ δύο ἐκέρδησε καὶ αὐτὸς[6] ἄλλα δύο. 18. ὁ δὲ τὸ ἓν λαβὼν ἀπελθὼν ὤρυξεν ἐν τῇ γῇ,[7] καὶ ἀπέκρυψε[8] τὸ ἀργύριον τοῦ κυρίου αὐτοῦ. 19. Μετὰ δὲ χρόνον πολὺν[9] ἔρχεται ὁ κύριος τῶν δούλων ἐκείνων, καὶ συναίρει μετ' αὐτῶν λόγον.[10] 20. καὶ προσελθὼν ὁ τὰ πέντε τάλαντα λαβὼν προσήνεγκεν ἄλλα πέντε τάλαντα, λέγων, Κύριε, πέντε τάλαντά μοι παρέδωκας· ἴδε, ἄλλα πέντε τάλαντα ἐκέρδησα ἐπ' αὐτοῖς.[11] 21. Ἔφη δὲ[12] αὐτῷ

[1] ℵB omit δε, the insertion of which is due to the ευθεως being taken as belonging to απεδημησεν. It should be taken with πορευθεις (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] ηργασατο in ℵBDL.

[3] εκερδησεν in BCDLΣ (W.H.). ℵ has εποιησεν (Tisch.).

[4] BL omit this second ταλαντα (W.H.).

[5] και omitted in ℵCL (Tisch., W.H., in text, insert in margin).

[6] καί αυτος omit ℵBCL.

[7] γην in ℵBL (Tisch., W.H.).

[8] εκρυψεν in ℵABCDL 33.

[9] πολυν χρονον in ℵBCDL.

[10] λογον before μετ αυτων in ℵBCDLΣ.

[11] επ αυτοις omit ℵBDL.

[12] δε omitted in ℵBCDLΣ, also in ver. 22 after προσελθων in ℵB.

significance as indicating the temper of the servant. He lost no time in setting about plans for trading, with the talents entrusted to him (so Fritzsche, Weiss, Schanz, and Holtz., H. C.).—Ver. 16. εἰργάσατο ἐν αὐτοῖς, traded in or with them, used in classics also in this sense but without any preposition before the dative of the material.—ἄλλα πέντε, other five, which speaks to a considerable period in the ordinary course of trade.—Ver. 17. ὡσαύτως, in like manner; that absolutely the same proportion between capital and gain should be maintained in the two cases was not likely but possible, and the supposition is convenient for the application.—Ver. 18. ὤρυξεν ἐν, etc., dug up the earth, and hid the silver of his master. Not dishonest—the master had not misjudged as to that—but indolent, unenterprising, timid. What he did was often done for safety. The master might have done it himself, but he wanted increase as well as safety. In Lk.'s parable the same type of man buries his pound in a napkin. A talent was too large to be put up that way.

Vv. 19-23.—Ver. 19. πολὺν χρόνον, the master returns after a long time, an important expression in a parable relating to the Parusia, as implying long delay.—συναίρει λόγον, maketh a reckoning, as in xviii. 23.—Ver. 20. The first servant gives his report: bringing five and five, he presents them to his master, and says: ἴδε, as if inviting him to satisfy himself by counting.—Ver. 21. εὖ, well done! excellent! = εὖγε in classics, which is the approved reading in Lk. xix. 17. Meyer takes it as an adverb, qualifying πιστός, but standing in so emphatic a position at the head of the sentence and so far from the word it is supposed to qualify it inevitably has the force of an interjection—ἀγαθὲ καὶ πιστέ, devoted and faithful: two prime virtues in the circumstances. On the sense of ἀγαθός, vide xx. 15.—ἐπὶ π. σε καταστήσω, I will set thee over many things. The master means to make extensive use of the talents and energy of one who had shown himself so enthusiastic and trustworthy in a limited sphere.—εἴσελθε ε. τ. χαρὰν τ. κ. σ. This clause seems to be epexegetical of the previous one, or to express the same idea under a different form. χαρά has often been taken as referring to a feast given on the occasion of the master's return (so De Wette, Trench, etc.). Others (Reuss, Meyer, Weiss, Speaker's Com.) take it more generally as denoting the master's state of joy. Thus viewed, the word takes us into the spiritual sphere, the joy of the Lord having nothing in common with the affairs of the bank (Reuss, Hist. Ev.). Weiss thinks this second description of the reward proὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ, [h] Εὖ, δοῦλε ἀγαθὲ καὶ πιστέ, ἐπὶ ὀλίγα ἦς πιστός, ἐπὶ πολλῶν σε καταστήσω· εἴσελθε εἰς τὴν χαρὰν τοῦ κυρίου σου. 22. Προσελθὼν δὲ καὶ ὁ τὰ δύο τάλαντα λαβὼν[1] εἶπε, Κύριε, δύο τάλαντά μοι παρέδωκας· ἴδε, ἄλλα δύο τάλαντα ἐκέρδησα ἐπ᾽ αὐτοῖς.[1] 23. Ἔφη αὐτῷ ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ, Εὖ, δοῦλε ἀγαθὲ καὶ πιστέ, ἐπὶ ὀλίγα ἦς πιστός, ἐπὶ πολλῶν σε καταστήσω· εἴσελθε εἰς τὴν χαρὰν τοῦ κυρίου σου. 24. Προσελθὼν δὲ καὶ ὁ τὸ ἓν τάλαντον εἰληφὼς εἶπε, Κύριε, ἔγνων σε ὅτι [i] σκληρὸς εἶ ἄνθρωπος, θερίζων ὅπου οὐκ ἔσπειρας, καὶ συνάγων ὅθεν οὐ [j] διεσκόρπισας· 25. καὶ φοβηθεὶς, ἀπελθὼν ἔκρυψα τὸ τάλαντόν σου ἐν τῇ γῇ· ἴδε, ἔχεις τὸ σόν. 26. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, Πονηρὲ δοῦλε καὶ [k] ὀκνηρέ, ᾔδεις ὅτι θερίζω ὅπου οὐκ ἔσπειρα, καὶ συνάγω, ὅθεν οὐ διεσκόρπισα· 27. ἔδει οὖν σε[2] βαλεῖν τὸ ἀργύριον[3] μου τοῖς [l] τραπεζίταις· καὶ ἐλθὼν ἐγὼ [m] ἐκομισάμην ἂν τὸ ἐμὸν σὺν [n] τόκῳ. 28. ἄρατε οὖν ἀπ᾽ h here and in ver. 23 only.

i here only of a man. John vi. 60 (of a word). Jas. iii. 4 (of the wind).
j Ch. xxvi. 31. Mk. xiv. 27 (of a flock). Lk. xv. 13; xvi. 1 (of property).
k here and in Rom. xii. 11.
l here only.
m Heb. xi. 19 (in same sense).
n Lk. xix. 23.

[1] ABCLΔΣ omit λαβων. ℵD have it. Probably a gloss, as is also επ αυτοις (wanting in ℵBDL) at the end of ver. 22.

[2] σε ουν in ℵBCL 33.

[3] τα αργυρια in ℵB.

ceeds from the evangelist interpreting the parable allegorically of Messiah's return. But we escape this inference if we take the phrase "the joy of thy lord" as = the joy of lordship (herilis gaudii, Grotius, and Elsner after him). The faithful slave is to be rewarded by admission to fellowship in possession, partnership. Cf. μέτοχοι τοῦ χριστοῦ in Heb. iii. 14 = sharers ("fellows") with Christ, not merely "partakers of Christ".—Ver. 23. Praise and recompense awarded to the second servant in identical terms: reward the same in recognition of equal devotion and fidelity with unequal ability a just law of the Kingdom of God, the second bearing on "Work and Wages" there. For the first, vide on xx. 1-16. Euthymius remarks ἴση ἡ τιμὴ διότι καὶ ἴση ἡ σπουδή.

Vv. 24-30.—Ver. 24. εἰληφώς, the perfect participle, instead of λαβὼν in ver. 20, because the one fact as to him is that he is the man who has received a talent of which he has made no use. (So Weiss in Meyer.)—ἔγνων σε ὅτι for ἔγνων ὅτι συ, by attraction.—σκληρὸς, "hard": grasping, ungenerous, taking all to himself, offering no inducements to his servants, as explained in the proverbial expressions following: θερίζων, etc., reaping where you do not sow, and gathering where (ὅθεν instead of ὅπου, a word signifying de loco, instead of a word signifying in loco; vide Kypke for other examples) you did not scatter with the fan = appropriating everything produced on his land by the labour of his servants, without giving them any share—no inducement to work for such a curmudgeon of a master: all toil, no pay. Compare this with the real character as revealed in: "Enter thou into the joy of lordship".—Ver. 25. φοβηθεὶς, etc., fearing: loss of the talent by trade; he thought the one thing to make sure of, in the case of such a master, was that what he had got might be safe.—ἐν τῇ γῇ: the primitive bank of security. Vide xiii. 44.—ἴδε ἔχεις τὸ σόν: see you have what belongs to you; no idea that the master was entitled not only to the talent, but to what it might earn.—Ver. 26. πονηρὲ (vide on vi. 23), "wicked" is too general a meaning: mean-spirited or grudging would suit the connection better.—πονηρὸς is the fitting reply to σκληρὸς, and the opposite of ἀγαθὸς. You call me hard, I call you a churl: with no heart for your work, unlike your fellow-servant who put his whole heart into his work.—ὀκνηρέ, slothful; a poor creature altogether: suspicious, timid, heartless, spiritless, idle.—ᾔδεις, etc.: a question, neither making an admission nor expressing surprise or anger, but leading up to a charge of inconsistency = If that was your idea of me, why then, etc.—Ver. 27. ἔδει, etc., you ought in that case to have cast my silver to the money-changers, or bankers. That could have been done without αὐτοῦ τὸ τάλαντον, καὶ δότε τῷ ἔχοντι τὰ δέκα τάλαντα. 29. Τῷ γὰρ ἔχοντι παντὶ δοθήσεται, καὶ περισσευθήσεται· ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ[1] μὴ ἔχοντος, καὶ ὃ ἔχει, ἀρθήσεται ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ. 30. Καὶ τὸν ° ἀχρεῖον δοῦλον ἐκβάλλετε[2] εἰς τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον. ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων.

o Lk. xvii. 10.

31. "Ὅταν δὲ ἔλθῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, καὶ πάντες οἱ ἅγιοι[3] ἄγγελοι μετ᾽ αὐτοῦ, 32. τότε καθίσει ἐπὶ θρόνου δόξης αὐτοῦ, καὶ συναχθήσεται[4] ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, καὶ ἀφοριεῖ[5] αὐτοὺς ἀπ᾽ ἀλλήλων, ὥσπερ ὁ ποιμὴν ἀφορίζει τὰ

[1] For απο δε του ℵBDL have του δε (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] εκβαλετε in ℵABCLXΔΣ.

[3] ℵBDL omit αγιοι.

[4] συναχθησονται in ℵBDLΣ. The singular is a grammatical correction.

[5] αφορισει in ℵLΔ (Tisch., W.H.). BD have αφοριει as in T. R. (Weiss).

trouble or risk, and with profit to the master.—ἐγὼ, apparently intended to be emphatic, suggesting a distribution of offices between servant and master = yours to put it into the bank, mine to take it out. So Field (Otium Nor.), who, following a hint of Chrys., translates: "And I should have gone (ἐλθὼν) to the bank and received back mine own (or demanded it) with interest".—σὺν τόκῳ, literally, with offspring: a figurative name for interest on money.—Ver. 28. ἄρατε, etc., take the one talent from the man who made no use of it, and give it to the man who will make most use of it.—Ver. 29. General principle on which the direction rests pointing to a law of life, hard but inexorable.—Ver. 30. ἀχρεῖον, useless. Palairet renders injuriosum; Kypke, improbum. Being useless, he was both injurious and unjust. The useless man does wrong all round, and there is no place for him either in this world or in the Kingdom of God. His place is in the outer darkness.

Difference of opinion prevails as to whether this parable refers to the use of material goods for the Kingdom of God, or to the use of spiritual gifts. It is not, perhaps, possible to decide in ignorance of the historical occasion of the parable, nor is it necessary, as the same law applies.

Vv. 31-46. The Judgment programme.—Much diversity of opinion has prevailed in reference to this remarkable passage; as to the subjects of the judgment, and the authenticity of this judgment programme as a professed logion of Jesus. Are the judged all mankind, Christian and non-Christian, or Christians only, or non-Christian peoples, including unbelieving Jews, or the Jewish people excluded? Even as early as Origen it was felt that there was room for doubt on such points. He says (Comm. in Ev. M.): "Utrum segregabuntur gentes omnes ab omnibus qui in omnibus generationibus fuerint, an illae tantum quae in consummatione fuerint derelictae, aut illae tantum quae crediderunt in Deum per Christum, et ipsae utrum omnes, an non omnes, non satis est manifestum. Tamen quibusdam videtur de differentiâ eorum, quae crediderunt haec esse dicta." Recent opinion inclines to the view that the programme refers to heathen people only, and sets forth the principle on which they shall be judged. As to the authenticity of the logion critics hold widely discrepant views. Some regard it as a composition of the evangelists. So Pfleiderer, e.g., who sees in it simply the literary expression of a genial humane way of regarding the heathen on the part of the evangelist, an unknown Christian author of the second century, who had charity enough to accept Christlike love on the part of the heathen as an equivalent for Christian faith (Urchristenthum, p. 532). Holtzmann, H. C., also sees in it a second-hand composition, based on 4 Esdras vii. 33-35, Apoc. Bar. lxxxiii. 12. Weiss, on the other hand, recognises as basis an authentic logion of Jesus, setting forth love as the test of true discipleship, which has been worked over by the evangelist and altered into a judgment programme for heathendom. Wendt (L. J., p. 186) thinks that the logion in its original form was such a programme. This seems to be the most probable opinion.

πρόβατα ἀπὸ τῶν [p] ἐρίφων, 33. καὶ στήσει τὰ μὲν πρόβατα ἐκ δεξιῶν αὐτοῦ, τὰ δὲ ἐρίφια ἐξ εὐωνύμων.

34. "Τότε ἐρεῖ ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῖς ἐκ δεξιῶν αὐτοῦ, Δεῦτε, οἱ εὐλογημένοι τοῦ πατρός μου, κληρονομήσατε τὴν ἡτοιμασμένην ὑμῖν βασιλείαν ἀπὸ [q] καταβολῆς [q] κόσμου. 35. ἐπείνασα γάρ, καὶ ἐδώκατέ μοι φαγεῖν· ἐδίψησα, καὶ ἐποτίσατέ με· [r] ξένος ἤμην, καὶ [s] συνηγάγετέ με· 36. γυμνός, καὶ περιεβάλετέ με· ἠσθένησα, καὶ [t] ἐπεσκέψασθέ με· ἐν φυλακῇ ἤμην, καὶ ἤλθετε πρός με. 37. Τότε ἀποκριθήσονται αὐτῷ οἱ δίκαιοι, λέγοντες, Κύριε, πότε σὲ εἴδομεν πεινῶντα, καὶ ἐθρέψαμεν; ἢ διψῶντα, καὶ ἐποτίσαμεν· 38. πότε δέ σε εἴδομεν ξένον, καὶ συνηγάγομεν; ἢ γυμνόν, καὶ περιεβάλομεν;

p Lk. xv. 29.
q Lk. xi. 50. John xvii. 24. Heb. iv. 3; ix. 26 al.
r Ch. xxvii. 7. Acts xvii. 21. Eph. ii. 19. Heb. xi. 13.
s here and in vv. 38, 43 (Deut. xxii. 2. Josh. ii. 18. Judges xix. 18).
t Lk. i. 68, 78; vii. 16. Acts vii. 23. Jas. i. 27.

Ver. 31. ὅταν δὲ, the description following recalls xxiv. 30, to which the ὅταν seems to refer.—Ver. 32. πάντα τὰ ἔθνη naturally suggests the heathen peoples as distinct from Jews, though the latter may be included, notwithstanding the fact that in one respect their judgment day had already come (xxiv. 15-22).—ἀφοριεῖ: first a process of separation as in the interpretation of the parable of the tares (xiii. 49).—τά πρόβατα ἀπὸ τῶν ἐρίφων, the sheep from the young goats. Sheep and goats, though feeding together under the care of the same shepherd, seem of their own accord to separate into two companies. Tristram and Furrer bear witness to this.—Ver. 33. καὶ στήσει, etc., the bare placing of the parties already judges, the good on the right, the evil on the left; sheep emblems of the former, goats of the latter. Why? No profit from goats, much from sheep; from their wool, milk, lambs, says Chrys., Hom. lxxix. Lust and evil odour secure for the goat its unenviable emblematic significance say others: "id animal et libidinosum et olidum" (Grotius). Lange suggests stubbornness as the sinister quality. More important is the point made by Weiss that the very fact that a separation is necessary implies that all were one flock, i.e., that the judged in the view of Jesus are all professing Christians, disciples true or false.

Vv. 34-40. οἱ εὐλογημένοι τοῦ πατρός μου, my Father's blessed ones, the participle being in effect a substantive.—κληρονομήσατε, etc.: this clause Weiss regards as a proof that the parable originally referred to disciples, as for them only could the kingdom be said to be prepared from the foundation of the world. Wendt, holding the original reference to have been to the heathen, brackets the words from οἱ εὐλογ. to κόσμου as of doubtful authenticity.—Ver. 35. ἐπείνασα, ἐδίψησα, ξένος ἤμην, hungry, thirsty, a stranger. The claims created by these situations are universally recognised though often neglected; to respond to them is a duty of "common humanity".—συνηγάγετέ με, ye received me (into your house) (cf. Judges xix. 18.—οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνὴρ συνάγων με εἰς οἰκίαν). Meyer, Weiss, and others, with stricter adherence to the literal meaning of the word, render: ye gathered me into the bosom of your family; Fritzsche: ye admitted me to your table ("simul convivio adhibuistis").—Ver. 36. γυμνὸς, ἠσθένησα, ἐν φυλακῇ, deeper degrees of misery demanding higher degrees of charity; naked = ill clad, relief more costly than in case of hunger or thirst; sick, calling for sympathy prompting to visits of succour or consolation; in prison, a situation at once discreditable and repulsive, demanding the highest measure of love in one who visits the prisoner, the temptation being strong to be ashamed of one viewed as a criminal, and to shrink from his cell, too often dark and loathsome.—ἐπεσκέψασθέ με, this verb is often used in the O. T. and N. T. in the sense of gracious visitation on the part of God (for פָּקַד in Sept.) (vide Lk. i. 78, and the noun ἐπισκοπή in Lk. xix. 44).—Ver. 37. κύριε, not necessarily spoken by disciples supposed to know or believe in Jesus (Weiss). The title fits the judicial dignity of the person addressed by whomsoever used. In disclaiming the praise accorded those who call the Judge κύριος virtually deny personal acquaintance with Him.—Ver. 40. ἐφ' ὅσον, in so far as = καθ' ὅσον

39. πότε δέ σε εἴδομεν ἀσθενῆ,[1] ἢ ἐν φυλακῇ, καὶ ἤλθομεν πρός σε; 40. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐρεῖ αὐτοῖς, Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐφʼ ὅσον ἐποιήσατε ἑνὶ τούτων τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου[2] τῶν ἐλαχίστων, ἐμοὶ ἐποιήσατε.

41. "Τότε ἐρεῖ καὶ τοῖς ἐξ εὐωνύμων, Πορεύεσθε ἀπʼ ἐμοῦ, οἱ[3] [u] κατηραμένοι, εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ αἰώνιον, τὸ ἡτοιμασμένον τῷ διαβόλῳ καὶ τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ. 42. ἐπείνασα γάρ, καὶ οὐκ ἐδώκατέ μοι φαγεῖν· ἐδίψησα, καὶ οὐκ ἐποτίσατέ με· 43. ξένος ἤμην, καὶ οὐ συνηγάγετέ με· γυμνός, καὶ οὐ περιεβάλετέ με· ἀσθενής, καὶ ἐν φυλακῇ, καὶ οὐκ ἐπεσκέψασθέ με. 44. Τότε ἀποκριθήσονται αὐτῷ[4] καὶ αὐτοί, λέγοντες, Κύριε, πότε σὲ εἴδομεν πεινῶντα, ἢ διψῶντα, ἢ ξένον, ἢ γυμνόν, ἢ ἀσθενῆ, ἢ ἐν φυλακῇ, καὶ οὐ διηκονήσαμέν σοι; 45. Τότε ἀποκριθήσεται αὐτοῖς, λέγων, Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐφʼ ὅσον οὐκ ἐποιήσατε ἑνὶ τούτων τῶν ἐλαχίστων, οὐδὲ ἐμοὶ ἐποιήσατε. 46. Καὶ ἀπελεύσονται οὗτοι εἰς [v] κόλασιν αἰώνιον· οἱ δὲ δίκαιοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον."

u Mk. xi. 21. Lk. vi. 28. Rom. xii. 14. Jas. iii. 9.

v here and in 1 John iv. 18 in N. T. (Ezek. xiv. 3. Wisdom xi. 14; xvi. 24 al. in Sept.).

[1] BD have ασθενουντα (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] B omits των αδελφων μου, probably an error of similar ending.

[3] ℵBL 33 omit οι, a significant omission. Vide below.

[4] αυτω has only minus. to support it.

(Heb. vii. 20, used of time in Mt. ix. 15).—ἑνὶ . . . ἐλαχίστων, the Judge's brethren spoken of as a body apart, not subjects, but rather instruments, of judgment. This makes for the non-Christian position of the judged. The brethren are the Christian poor and needy and suffering, in the first place, but ultimately and inferentially any suffering people anywhere. Christian sufferers represent Christ, and human sufferers represent Christians.—τῶν ἐλαχίστων seems to be in apposition with ἀδελφῶν, suggesting the idea that the brethren of the Son of Man are the insignificant of mankind, those likely to be overlooked, despised, neglected (cf. x. 42, xviii. 5).

Vv. 41-46. κατηραμένοι, cursed, not the cursed (οἱ wanting), and without τοῦ πατρός μου. God has no cursed ones.—εἰς τὸ πῦρ, etc., the eternal fire is represented as prepared not for the condemned men, but for the devil and his angels. Wendt brackets the clause κατηραμένοι . . . ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ to suggest that as Jesus spoke it the passage ran: go away from me, for I was hungry, etc.—Vv. 42, 43, simply negative all the statements contained in vv. 35, 36.—Ver. 44 repeats in summary form the reply of the δίκαιοι, mutatis mutandis, rapidly enumerating the states of need, and disclaiming, with reference to all, neglect of service, οὐ διηκονήσαμέν σοι; ver. 45 repeats ver. 40 with the omission of τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου and the addition of οὐκ before ἐποιήσατε.—Ver. 46. κόλασιν, here and in 1 John iv. 18 (ὁ φόβος κόλασιν ἔχει), from κολάζω = mutilation or pruning, hence suggestive of corrective rather than of vindictive punishment as its tropical meaning. The use of this term in this place is one of the exegetical grounds rested on by those who advocate the "larger hope". Another is the strict meaning of αἰώνιος: agelong, not everlasting. From the combination results the phrase: agelong, pruning, or discipline, leaving room for the hope of ultimate salvation. But the doctrine of the future states must ultimately rest on deeper considerations than those supplied by verbal interpretation. Weiss (Mt.-Evang.) and Wendt (L. J.) regard ver. 46 as an interpolation by the evangelist.

The doctrine of this passage is that love is the essence of true religion and the ultimate test of character for all men Christian or non-Christian. All who truly love are implicit Christians. For such everywhere the kingdom is prepared. They are its true citizens and God is their Father. In calling those

XXVI. 1. ΚΑΙ ἐγένετο ὅτε ἐτέλεσεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς πάντας τοὺς λόγους τούτους, εἶπε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, 2. "Οἴδατε ὅτι μετὰ δύο ἡμέρας [a] τὸ πάσχα γίνεται, καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται εἰς τὸ σταυρωθῆναι." 3. Τότε συνήχθησαν οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς[1] καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τοῦ λαοῦ εἰς τὴν [a] αὐλὴν τοῦ ἀρχιερέως τοῦ λεγομένου Καϊάφα, 4. καὶ συνεβουλεύσαντο ἵνα τὸν Ἰησοῦν κρατήa vv. 58, 69. Mk. xiv. 54, 66; xv. 16. Lk. xi. 21; xxii. 55. John xviii. 15. Vide below.

[1] και οι γραμματεις omitted in ℵABDL (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

who love the Father's blessed ones Jesus made an important contribution to the doctrine of the Fatherhood, defining by discriminating use the title "Father".

Chapters XXVI.-XXVII. The Passion History. These chapters give with exceptional fulness and minuteness of detail the story of Christ's last sufferings and relative incidents. The story finds a place in all four Gospels (Mk. xiv., xv.; Lk. xxii., xxiii.; John xviii., xix.), showing the intense interest felt by Christians of the apostolic age in all that related to the Passion of their Lord. Of the three strata of evangelic tradition relating respectively to what Jesus taught, what He did, and what He suffered, the last-named probably came first in origin. Men could wait for the words and deeds, but not for the awful tale of suffering. Even Holtzmann, who puts the teaching first, recognises the Passion drama as the nucleus of the tradition as to memorable facts and experiences. In the formation of the Passion chronicle the main facts would naturally come first; around this nucleus would gather gradually accretions of minor incidents, till by the time the written records began to be compiled the collection of memorabilia had assumed the form it bears, say, in the Gospel of Mark; the historic truth on the solemn subject, at least as far as it could be ascertained. The passionless tone of the narrative in all four Gospels is remarkable; the story is told in subdued accent, in few simple words, as if the narrator had no interest in the matter save that of the historian: ἀπαθῶς ἅπαντα διηγοῦνται, καὶ μόνης τῆς ἀληθείας φροντίζουσι. Euthy. Zig. ad v. 67.

Chapter xxvi. and parallels contain the anointing, the betrayal, the Holy Supper, the agony, the apprehension, the trial, the denial by Peter.

Vv. 1-5. Introductory (Mk. xiv. 1, 2, Lk. xxii. 1, 2).—Vv. 1-2 contain a prediction by Jesus two days before Passover of His approaching death; vv. 3-5 a notice of a consultation by the authorities as to how they might compass His death. In the parallels the former item appears as a mere date for the latter, the prediction being eliminated.—Ver. 1. πάντας τ. λόγους τούτους, all these sayings, most naturally taken as referring to the contents of chaps. xxiv., xxv., though a backward glance at the whole of Christ's teaching is conceivable. Yet in case of such a comprehensive retrospect why refer only to words? Why not to both dicta et facta?—Ver. 2. τὸ πάσχα, used both of festival, as here, and of victim, as in ver. 17. The Passover began on the 14th of Nisan; it is referred to here for the first time in our Gospel.—παραδίδοται, present, either used to describe vividly a future event (Burton, M. T., § 15) or to associate it with the feast day as a fixture (γίνεται), "calendar day and divine decree of death fixed beyond recall" (Holtz., H. C.), or to imply that the betrayal process is already begun in the thought of the false-hearted disciple.—Ver. 3. τότε, two days before Passover.—συνήχθησαν points to a meeting of the Sanhedrim.—εἰς τὴν αὐλὴν denotes the meeting place, either the palace of the high priest in accordance with the use of αὐλή in later Greek (Weiss), or the court around which the palatial buildings were ranged (Meyer) = atrium in Vulgate, followed by Calvin. In the latter case the meeting would be informal. In any case it was at the high priest's quarters they met: whereupon Chrys. remarks: "See the inexpressible corruption of Jewish affairs. Having lawless proceedings on hand they come to the high priest seeking authority where they should encounter hindrance" (Hom. lxxix.).—Καϊάφα, Caiaphas, surname, Joseph his name, seventeen years high priest (vide Joseph, Ant., 18, 2, 2; 4, 3).—Ver. 4. ἵνα with subjunctive after a verb of effort or plan; in classic Greek oftener ὅπως with future indicative (Burton, § 205).—δόλῳ by, σωσι δόλῳ,[1] καὶ ἀποκτείνωσιν. 5. ἔλεγον δέ, "Μὴ ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, ἵνα μὴ θόρυβος γένηται ἐν τῷ λαῷ."

6. Τοῦ δὲ Ἰησοῦ γενομένου ἐν Βηθανίᾳ ἐν οἰκίᾳ Σίμωνος τοῦ λεπροῦ, 7. προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ γυνὴ [b]ἀλάβαστρον [b]μύρου ἔχουσα[2] βαρυτίμου,[3] καὶ [c]κατέχεεν ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν[4] αὐτοῦ ἀνακειμένου· 8. ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ[5] ἠγανάκτησαν, λέγοντες, "Εἰς τί ἡ ἀπώλεια αὕτη; 9. ἠδύνατο[6] γὰρ τοῦτο τὸ μύρον[7] πραθῆναι

b Mk. xiv. 3. Lk. vii. 37 (gender doubtful).
c Mk. xiv. 3 (cf. const.).

[1] δολω κρατησωσι in ℵABDLΔΣ (Tisch., W.H., Ws.). T. R. supported only by minus.

[2] εχουσα before αλαβαστρον μυρου in ℵBDL 13, 33, 69, etc.

[3] πολυτιμου in ℵADL (Tisch.) as in T. R. in BΓΔΣ (W.H.). πολυτιμου probably comes from John xii. 3.

[4] επι της κεφαλης in ℵBD 1, 13, 69 al. (Tisch., W.H.). [5] ℵBDL omit αυτου.

[6] εδυνατο in ℵBLΔ. [7] ℵABDL al. omit το μυρον (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

craft, a method characteristic of clerics; indigna consultatio (Bengel); cowardly and merciless.—Ver. 5. ἔλεγον δέ: δὲ points back to ver. 1, which fixes the passion in Passover time, while the Synedrists thought it prudent to keep off the holy season for reason given.—μή, etc., to avoid uproar apt to happen at Passover time, Josephus teste (B. J., i., 4, 3).

Vv. 6-13. Anointing in Bethany (Mk. xiv. 3-9, cf. John xii. 1-11). Six days before Passover in John; no time fixed in Mt. and Mk. Certainly within Passion week. The thing chiefly to be noted is the setting of this pathetic scene, between priestly plotting and false discipleship. "Hatred and baseness on either hand and true love in the midst" (Training of the Twelve).—Ver. 6. τοῦ δὲ Ἰησοῦ, etc.: indicates the scene, in Bethany, and in the house of Simon known as the leper (the one spoken of in viii. 2?). The host of Lk. vii. 36 ff. was a Simon. On the other hand, the host of John xii. 1 f., or at least a prominent guest, was Lazarus, brother of Martha and Mary. This and other points of resemblance and difference raise the question: do all the four evangelists tell the same story in different ways? On this question endless diversity of opinion has prevailed. The probability is that there were two anointings, the one reported with variations by Mt., Mk., and John, the other by Lk.; and that the two got somewhat mixed in the tradition, so that the precise details of each cannot now be ascertained. Happily the ethical or religious import of the two beautiful stories is clear.—Ver. 7. ἀλάβαστρον, an "alabaster" (vase), the term, originally denoting the material, being transferred to the vessel made of it, like our word "glass" (Speaker's Com.), in common use for preserving ointments (Pliny, N.H., iii., 3). An alabaster of nard (μύρου) was a present for a king. Among five precious articles sent by Cambyses to the King of Ethiopia was included α μύρου ἀλάβ. (Herod., iii., 20). On this ointment and its source vide Tristram, Natural History of the Bible, p. 484 (quoted in notes on Mk.).—βαρυτίμου (here only in N. T.), of great price; this noted to explain the sequel.—κεφαλῆς: she broke the vase and poured the contents on the head of Jesus, feet in John; both possible; must be combined, say the Harmonists.—Ver. 8. ἠγανάκτησαν, as in xx. 24. The disciple-circle experienced various annoyances from first to last: Syrophenician woman, mothers and children, ambition of James and John, Mary of Bethany. The last the most singular of all. Probably all the disciples disapproved more or less. It was a woman's act, and they were men. She was a poet and they were somewhat prosaic.—ἀπώλεια, waste, a precious thing thrown away. To how many things the term might be applied on similar grounds! The lives of the martyrs, e.g., cui bono? That is the question; not so easily answered as vulgar utilitarians think. Beside this criticism of Mary place Peter's revolt against the death of Jesus (xvi. 22).—Ver. 9. δοθῆναι, etc., to be given (the proceeds, subject easily understood) to the poor. How much better a use than πολλοῦ, καὶ δοθῆναι πτωχοῖς." 10. Γνοὺς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τί [d] κόπους [d] παρέχετε τῇ γυναικί; ἔργον γὰρ καλὸν εἰργάσατο [1] εἰς ἐμέ. 11. πάντοτε γὰρ τοὺς πτωχοὺς ἔχετε μεθ' ἑαυτῶν· ἐμὲ δὲ οὐ πάντοτε ἔχετε. 12. βαλοῦσα γὰρ αὕτη το μύρον τοῦτο ἐπὶ τοῦ σώματός μου πρὸς τὸ [e] ἐνταφιάσαι με ἐποίησεν. 13. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅπου ἐὰν κηρυχθῇ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦτο ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ, λαληθήσεται καὶ ὃ ἐποίησεν αὕτη, εἰς [f] μνημόσυνον αὐτῆς."

14. Τότε πορευθεὶς εἷς τῶν δώδεκα, ὁ λεγόμενος Ἰούδας Ἰσκαριώτης, πρὸς τοὺς ἀρχιερεῖς, 15. εἶπε, "Τί θέλετέ μοι δοῦναι, κἀγὼ d Lk. xi. 7; xviii. 5. Gal. vi. 17.

e John xix. 40 (Gen. l. 2).

f Mk. xiv. 9. Acts x. 4 (Sir. xlv. 16 al.).

[1] ηργασατο in ℵD (Tisch., W.H.). ειρ. in BL.

to waste it in the expression of a sentiment!—Ver. 10. γνοὺς, perceiving though not hearing. We have many mean thoughts we would be ashamed to speak plainly out.—τί κόπους παρέχετε, etc., why trouble ye the woman? a phrase not frequent in classic authors, though similar ones occur, and even this occasionally (vide Kypke); found not only here but in Lk. xi. 7, xviii. 5, Gal. vi. 17, the last place worthy to be associated with this; St. Paul and the heroine of Bethany kindred spirits, liable to "troubles" from the same sort of people and for similar reasons.—καλὸν, noble, heroic: a deed done under inspiration of uncalculating love.—Ver. 11 suggests a distinction between general ethical categories and duties arising out of special circumstances. Common men recognise the former. It takes a genius or a passionate lover to see and swiftly do the latter. Mary saw and did the rare thing, and so achieved an ἔργον καλὸν.—ἐμὲ δὲ οὐ π., "a melancholy litotes" (Meyer).—Ver. 12. πρὸς τὸ ἐνταφ., to prepare for burial by embalming; so near is my death, though ye thought not of it: effect of the woman's act, not her conscious purpose. The Syriac version introduces a quasi. She meant nothing but to show her love, quickened possibly by instinctive foreboding of ill. But an act done in that spirit was the best embalming of Christ's body, or rather of His act in dying, for the two acts were kindred. Hence naturally the solemn declaration following, an essential part of the story, of indubitable authenticity.—Ver. 13. τὸ εὐ. τοῦτο, this gospel, the gospel of my death of love.—ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ: after ὅπου ἐὰν might seem superfluous; not so, however: it serves to indicate the range of the "wheresoever": wide as the world, universality predicted for Christianity, and also for the heroine of the anointing. Chrysostom, illustrating Christ's words, remarks: Even those dwelling in the British Isles (Βρεττανικὰς νήσους) speak of the deed done in a house in Judaea by a harlot (Hom. lxxx.: Chrys. identifies the anointing here with that in Lk. vii.).

Vv. 14-16. Judas offers to betray Jesus (Mk. xiv. 10, 11, Lk. xxii. 3-6).—Ver. 14. τότε, then, the roots of the betrayal go much further back than the Bethany scene—vide on xvii. 22, 23—but that scene would help to precipitate the fatal step. Death at last at hand, according to the Master's words. Then a base nature would feel uncomfortable in so unworldly company, and would be glad to escape to a more congenial atmosphere. Judas could not breathe freely amid the odours of the ointment and all it emblemed.—εἷς τ. δ., one of the Twelve (!).—Ver. 15. τί θέλετε, etc., what are ye willing to give me? Mary and Judas extreme opposites: she freely spending in love, he willing to sell his Master for money. What contrasts in the world and in the same small circle! The mercenary spirit of Judas is not so apparent in Mk. and Lk.—κἀγὼ, etc.: καὶ introducing a co-ordinate clause, instead of a subordinate clause, introduced by ὥστε or ἵνα; a colloquialism or a Hebraism: the traitor mean in style as in spirit.—ἔστησαν, they placed (in the balance) = weighed out. Many interpret: they agreed = συνεφώνησαν. So Theophy.: "Not as many think, instead of ἐζυγοστάτησαν". This corresponds with Mk. and Lk., and the likelihood is that the money would not be paid till the work was done (Fritzsche). But Mt. has the prophecies ever in view, and uses here a prophetic word (Zech. xi. 12, ἔστησαν τὸν μισθόν μου τρι. ἀργ., Sept.), indifferent as to the time when g here only in this sense. ὑμῖν παραδώσω αὐτόν;" Οἱ δὲ ᵍἔστησαν αὐτῷ τριάκοντα ἀργύρια· 16. καὶ ἀπὸ τότε ἐζήτει ʰεὐκαιρίαν ἵνα αὐτὸν παραδῷ.

h Lk. xxii. 6.

17. ΤΗι δὲ πρώτῃ τῶν ἀζύμων προσῆλθον οἱ μαθηταὶ τῷ Ἰησοῦ, λέγοντες αὐτῷ,[1] "Ποῦ θέλεις ἑτοιμάσωμέν σοι φαγεῖν τὸ πάσχα;" 18. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν, "Ὑπάγετε εἰς τὴν πόλιν πρὸς τὸν ⁱδεῖνα, καὶ εἴπατε αὐτῷ, Ὁ διδάσκαλος λέγει, Ὁ καιρός μου ἐγγύς ἐστι· πρὸς σὲ ʲποιῶ τὸ ʲπάσχα μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν μου." 19. Καὶ ἐποίησαν οἱ μαθηταὶ ὡς συνέταξεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, καὶ ἡτοίμασαν τὸ πάσχα.

i here only.

j Heb. xi. 28.

20. Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης ἀνέκειτο μετὰ τῶν δώδεκα. 21. καὶ ἐσθιόντων αὐτῶν εἶπεν, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι εἷς ἐξ ὑμῶν παραδώσει με." 22. Καὶ λυπούμενοι σφόδρα ἤρξαντο λέγειν αὐτῷ ἕκαστος payment was made. Coined money was in use, but the shekels may have been weighed out in antique fashion by men careful to do an iniquitous thing in the most orthodox way. Or there may have been no weighing in the case, but only the use of an ancient form of speech after the practice had become obsolete (Field, Ot. Nor.). The amount = about three or four pounds sterling, a small sum for such a service; too small thinks Meyer, who suggests that the real amount was not known, and that the sum was fixed in the tradition to suit prophecy.—Ver. 16. εὐκαιρίαν, a good occasion, the verb, εὐκαιρέω (Mk. vi. 31), belongs to late Greek (Lobeck, Phryn., p. 125).

[1] ℵBDLΔ omit αυτω.

Vv. 17-19. Arrangements for Paschal Feast (Mk. xiv. 12-16, Lk. xxii. 7-13).—Ver. 17. τῇ δὲ πρώτῃ τ. ἀ. The sacred season which began on the 14th Nisan and lasted for seven days, was two feasts rolled into one, the Feast of the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread, and it was called by either name indifferently.—ποῦ, where? A much more perplexing question is: when? Was it on the evening of the 13th (beginning of 14th), as the Fourth Gospel seems to say, or on the evening of the following day, as the synoptical accounts seem to imply, that Jesus kept the Paschal Feast? This is one of many harmonistic problems arising out of the Gospel narratives from this point onwards, on which an immense amount of learned labour has been spent. The discussions are irksome, and their results uncertain; and they are apt to take the attention off far more important matters: the essentials of the moving tale, common to all the evangelists. We must be content to remain in doubt as to many points.—θέλεις ἑτοιμάσωμεν, the deliberative subjunctive, without ἵνα after θέλεις.—Ver. 18. ὑπάγετε, go ye into the city, i.e., Jerusalem.—πρὸς τὸν δεῖνα, to such a one, evidently no sufficient direction. Mk. and Lk. are more explicit. Mt. here, as often, abbreviates. Doubtless a previous understanding had been come to between Jesus and an unknown friend in Jerusalem. Euthy. suggests that a roundabout direction was given to keep Judas in ignorance as to the rendezvous.—ὁ καιρός μου, my time (of death). Some (Grotius, Speaker's Com., Carr, Camb. N.T.) find in the words a reason for anticipating the time of the Paschal Feast, and so one of the indications, even in the Synoptics, that John's date of the Passion is the true one.—ποιῶ τ. π., I make or keep (present, not future), a usual expression in such a connection. Examples in Raphel.—μετὰ τ. μ.: making thirteen with the Master, a suitable number (justa φρατρία, Grotius), between the prescribed limits of ten and twenty. The lamb had to be entirely consumed (Ex. xii. 4, 43). Did Jesus and the Twelve eat the Paschal lamb?

Vv. 20-25. The presence of a traitor announced (Mk. xiv. 18-21, Lk. xxii. 21-23).—Vv. 20, 21. ὀψίας δὲ γ. It is evening, and the company are at supper, and during the meal (ἐσθιόντων αὐ., ver. 21) Jesus made a startling announcement. At what stage is not indicated. Elsner suggests a late stage: "Cum fere comedissent; vergente ad finem coenâ," because an early announcement would have killed appetite.—Ver. 21. παραδώσει με, shall betray me. General announcement, without any clue to the individual, as in Mk. ver. 18.—Ver. 22.

αὐτῶν,[1] "Μήτι ἐγώ εἰμι, κύριε;" 23. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, "Ὁ ἐμβάψας μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν τῷ [k] τρυβλίῳ τὴν χεῖρα,[2] οὗτός με παραδώσει. 24. ὁ μὲν υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου [l] ὑπάγει, καθὼς γέγραπται περὶ αὐτοῦ· οὐαὶ δὲ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ, δι' οὗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται· καλὸν ἦν αὐτῷ, εἰ οὐκ ἐγεννήθη ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος." 25. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ Ἰούδας ὁ παραδιδοὺς αὐτὸν εἶπε, "Μήτι ἐγώ εἰμι, ῥαββί;" Λέγει αὐτῷ, "[m] Σὺ [m] εἶπας."

26. Ἐσθιόντων δὲ αὐτῶν, λαβὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὸν[3] ἄρτον, καὶ εὐλογήσας, ἔκλασε καὶ ἐδίδου[4] τοῖς μαθηταῖς, καὶ[4] εἶπε, "Λάβετε, φάγετε· k here and in parall.

l here and in Mk. xiv. 21 in sense of dying.

m ver. 64.

[1] εις εκαστος without αυτων in ℵBCLZ 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] την χειρα before εν τω τρυβλιω in ℵABLZ.

[3] ℵBCDLZ omit τον.

[4] For εδιδου τ. μ. και ειπε ℵBDLZ, cursives, have δους τ. μ. ειπεν.

λυπούμενοι seems a weak word, and the addition of the evangelist's pet word σφόδρα does not make it strong. None of the accounts realistically express the effect which must have been produced.—ἤρξαντο helps to bring out the situation: they began to inquire after some moments of mute astonishment.—μήτι ἐγώ, etc., can it be I? expecting or hoping for a negative answer; yet not too sure: probably many of them were conscious of fear; even Peter might be, quite compatibly with his boldness a little later.—Ver. 23. ὁ ἐμβάψας, he who dipped, dips, or shall have dipped. The aorist participle decides nothing as to time, but merely points to a single act, as distinct from a process (cf. the present in Mk.). The expression in Mt. does not necessarily identify the man unless we render: who has just dipped, and conceive of Jesus as dipping immediately after. (So Weiss.) In favour of this view it may be said that there was no sense in referring to a single act of dipping, when there would be many in the course of the meal, unless the circumstances were such as to make it indicate the individual disciple. The mere dipping in the same dish would not identify the traitor, because there would be several, three or four, doing the same thing, the company being divided into perhaps three groups, each having a separate dish.—τὴν χεῖρα. The ancients used their hands, not knives and forks. So still in the East.—τρυβλίῳ. Hesychius gives for this word ὀξοβάφιον = acetabulum, a vessel for vinegar. Hence Elsner thinks the reference is to a vessel full of bitter herbs steeped in vinegar, a dish partaken of at the beginning of the meal. More probably the words point to a dish containing a mixture of fruit—dates, figs, etc.—vinegar and spices, in which bread was dipped, the colour of bricks or mud, to remind them of the Egyptian bondage (vide Buxtorf, Lex. Talm., p. 831). The custom of dipping here referred to is illustrated by the following from Furrer (Wanderungen, p. 133): "Before us stood two plates, one with strongly spiced macaroni, the other with a dish of fine cut leeks and onions. Spoons there were none. There were four of us who dipped into the same dish."—Ver. 24. ὑπάγει, goeth, a euphemism for death. Cf. John xiii. 33.—καλὸν ἦν without the ἄν, not unusual in conditional sentences of this sort: supposition contrary to fact (vide Burton, M. T., §§ 248-9).

Vv. 26-29. The Lord's Supper (Mk. xiv. 22-25; Lk. xxii. 19, 20).—Ver. 26. ἐσθ. δὲ αὐτῶν: same phrase as in ver. 21, with δὲ added to introduce another memorable incident of the paschal supper. No details are given regarding that meal, so that we do not know how far our Lord followed the usual routine, for which consult Lightfoot, Hor. Heb., or Smith's Dictionary, article Passover. Neither can we with certainty fix the place of the Holy Supper in the paschal meal, or in relation to the announcement of the traitor. The evangelists did not concern themselves about such subordinate matters.—λαβὼν, etc., having taken a cake of bread and given thanks He broke it. The benediction may have been an old form put to a new use, or original.—εὐλογήσας has not ἄρτον for its object, which would in that case have been placed after it.—δοὺς, etc., giving τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ σῶμά μου." 27. Καὶ λαβὼν τὸ[1] ποτήριον, καὶ[2] εὐχαριστήσας, ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Πίετε ἐξ αὐτοῦ πάντες· 28. τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι τὸ αἷμά μου, τὸ τῆς καινῆς[3] διαθήκης, τὸ περὶ πολλῶν ἐκχυνόμενον εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν. 29. λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν, ὅτι[4] οὐ μὴ πίω ἀπ' ἄρτι ἐκ τούτου τοῦ γεννήματος[5] τῆς ἀμπέλου, ἕως τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης, ὅταν αὐτὸ πίνω μεθ' ὑμῶν καινὸν ἐν [n]τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ [n]πατρός μου."

n Ch. xiii. 43 (similar exp.).

[1] ℵBLZΔΣ omit το (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

[2] και is in ℵBD, but wanting in CLZΔΣ 1, 33. W.H. put it in brackets.

[3] For μου, το της καινης ℵBLZ have μου της, omitting καινης. D has the same with καινης.

[4] ℵBDZΣ omit οτι (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

[5] γενηματος in ℵABCDL al. pl.

to the disciples; the cake broken into as many morsels, either in the act of giving or before the distribution began.—λάβετε φάγετε, take, eat.—λάβετε only in Mk. (W. and H.).—φάγετε probably an interpretative addition, true but unnecessary, by our evangelist.—τοῦτό ἐστιν τὸ σῶμά μου, this is my body. The ἐστι is the copula of symbolic significance. Jesus at this sacred moment uses a beautifully simple, pathetic, and poetic symbol of His death. But this symbol has had the fate of all religious symbolism, which is to run into fetish worship; in view of which the question is raising itself in some thoughtful minds whether discontinuance, at least for a time, of the use of sacraments would not be a benefit to the religion of the spirit and more in harmony with the mind of Christ than their obligatory observance.—Ver. 27. ποτήριον, a cup, the article being omitted in best MSS. It is idle, and in spirit Rabbinical, to inquire which of the four cups drunk at the paschal feast. The evangelist had no interest in such a question.—εὐχαριστήσας: a different word from that used in reference to the bread, but similar in import = having given thanks to God. Observe, Jesus was in the mood, and able, at that hour, to thank and praise, confident that good would come out of evil. In Gethsemane He was able only to submit.—λέγων, etc.: Mk.'s statement that all drank of the cup, Mt. turns into a direction by Jesus to do so, liturgical practice influencing the report here as in φάγετε. Jesus would use the fewest words possible at such an hour.—Ver. 28. τὸ αἷμά μου: the very colour of the wine suggestive; hence called αἷμα σταφυλῆς in Deut. xxxii. 14; my blood, pointing to the passion, like the breaking of the bread.—τῆς διαθήκης (for the two gen. μου τ. δ. dependent on αἷμα, vide Winer, 30, 3, 3), the blood of me, of the covenant. The introduction of the idea appropriate to the circumstances: dying men make wills (διατίθενται οἱ ἀποθνήσκοντες, Euthy.). The epithet καινῆς in T. R. is superfluous, because involved in the idea. The covenant of course is new. It is Jeremiah's new covenant come at last. The blood of the covenant suggests an analogy between it and the covenant with Israel ratified by sacrifice (Ex. xxiv. 8).—τὸ περὶ πολλῶν ἐκχυνόμενον: the shedding for many suggests sacrificial analogies; the present participle vividly conceives that which is about to happen as now happening; περὶ πολλῶν is an echo of ἀντὶ πολλῶν in xx. 28.—εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν: not in Mk., and may be a comment on Christ's words, supplied by Mt.; but it is a true comment. For what else could the blood be shed according to Levitical analogies and even Jeremiah's new covenant, which includes among its blessings the complete forgiveness of sin?—Ver. 29 contains an express statement of the fact implied in the preceding actions, viz., that death is near. It is the last time I will drink paschal (τούτου τ. γ., etc.) wine with you. I am to die at this passover. The second half of the sentence is not to be taken prosaically. It is the thought of meeting again, brought in to brighten the gloom of the leave-taking ("so tritt zu dem Lebewohl ein Gedanke an das Wiedersehen," Holtz., H.C.). To disentangle figure from fact in this poetic utterance about the new

30. Καὶ ° ὑμνήσαντες ἐξῆλθον εἰς τὸ ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν. 31. τότε λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Πάντες ὑμεῖς σκανδαλισθήσεσθε ἐν ἐμοὶ ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ. γέγραπται γάρ, 'Πατάξω τὸν ποιμένα, καὶ διασκορπισθήσεται[1] τὰ πρόβατα τῆς ποίμνης.' 32. μετὰ δὲ τὸ ἐγερθῆναί με, προάξω ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν." 33. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πέτρος εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Εἰ καὶ[2] πάντες σκανδαλισθήσονται ἐν σοί, ἐγὼ οὐδέποτε σκανδαλισθήσομαι." 34. Ἔφη αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω σοι, ὅτι ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ νυκτί, πρὶν ᵖ ἀλέκτορα φωνῆσαι, τρὶς ἀπαρνήσῃ με." 35. Λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Πέτρος, "Κἂν δέῃ με σὺν σοὶ ἀποθανεῖν, οὐ μή σε ἀπαρνήσομαι." Ὁμοίως καὶ πάντες οἱ μαθηταὶ εἶπον.

o Mk. xiv. 26 (absol. as here).

p ver. 74. Mk. xiv. 30, 68. Lk. xxii. 34, 60. John xiii. 38; xviii. 27.

[1] διασκορπισθησονται in ℵABCLΣ. The sing. a correction.

[2] και omitted in most uncials.

wine is impossible. Hence such comments as those of Bengel and Meyer, to the effect that καινὸν points to a new kind of wine ("novitatem dicit plane singularem," Beng.), serve no purpose. They turn poetry into prose, and pathos into bathos.

The remarkable transaction narrated in vv. 26-29 was an acted parable proclaiming at once the fact and the epoch-making significance of the approaching passion. It sets in a striking light the personality of Jesus; His originality, His tenderness, His mastery of the situation, His consciousness of being through His life and His death the inaugurator of a new era.—Was Judas present? Who can tell? Lk.'s narrative seems to imply that he was. Mt. and Mk. give no sign. They cannot have regarded his absence as of vital importance.

Vv. 30-46. Gethsemane (Mk. xiv. 26-42, Lk. xxii. 39-46).—Ver. 30. ὑμνήσαντες. With this participle, referring to the last act within the supper chamber—the singing of the paschal hymn (the Hallel, part 2, Ps. 115-118, or possibly a new song, Grotius)—we pass without, and after talk between Jesus and the disciples, arising out of the situation, arrive at the scene of another sacred memory of the passion eve. If, as is said (Lightfoot, Hor. Heb.), it was required of Jews that they should spend passover night in Jerusalem, the spirit of Jesus led Him elsewhere—towards the Mount of Olives, to the garden of the agony.—Ver. 31. τότε, then, on the way through the valley between the city and Olivet, the valley of Jehoshaphat (Kedron), suggestive of prophetic memories (Joel iii., Zech. xiii., xiv.), leading up, as well as the present situation, to the topic.—πάντες, all; one false-hearted, all without exception weak.—ἐν ἐμοὶ, in what is to befal me.—ἐν τῇ ν. τ. So near is the crisis, a matter of hours. The shadow of Gethsemane is beginning to fall on Christ's own spirit, and He knows how it must fare with men unprepared for what is coming.—γέγραπται γάρ: in Zech. xiii. 7, freely reproduced from the Hebrew.—Ver. 32 predicts a brighter future to alleviate the gloom. The Shepherd will yet again go before His flock (προάξω, pastoris more, Grotius), leading them.—εἰς τ. Γαλιλαίαν, the place of reunion. This verse is wanting in the Fayum Fragment, which Harnack regards as a sign of its great antiquity. Resch, Agrapha, p. 495.—Ver. 33. εἰ πάντες σκανδαλισθήσονται, if, or although, all shall be offended; the future implies great probability of the case supposed; Peter is willing to concede the likelihood of the assertion in reference to all the rest.—ἐγὼ οὐδέποτε, I, never, vehemently spoken and truly, so far as he knows himself; sincere in feeling, but weaker than he is aware of.—Ver. 34. ἐν. τ. τ. ν., repetition of statement in ver. 31, with added emphasis (ἀμὴν, etc.), and = never? this night I tell you.—πρὶν ἀλέκτορα φωνῆσαι: more exact specification of the time to make the statement more impressive = before the dawn.—ἀλέκτωρ, poetic form for ἀλεκτρυών. This fowl not mentioned in O. T.; probably introduced into Palestine after the exile, possibly from Babylon (Benzinger, pp. 38, 94). Not allowed to be kept in Jerusalem according to Lightfoot, but this is contradicted by others (Schöttgen, Wünsche). In any case the prohibition would not apply to the Romans. Though no hens had been in Jerusalem, Jesus might have spoken the words to mark q Mk. xiv. 32. John iv. 5. Acts i. 18, 19; iv. 34 (pl. lands); v. 3, 8; xxviii. 7 (pl.).

r Mk. xiv. 33. Phil. ii. 26.
s parall. Mk. vi. 2, 26. Lk. xviii. 23, 24.
t here and in Mk. xiv. 35.

36. ΤΟΤΕ ἔρχεται μετ' αὐτῶν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς [q] χωρίον λεγόμενον Γεθσημανῆ, καὶ λέγει τοῖς μαθηταῖς, "Καθίσατε αὐτοῦ, ἕως οὗ[1] ἀπελθὼν προσεύξωμαι ἐκεῖ."[2] 37. Καὶ παραλαβὼν τὸν Πέτρον καὶ τοὺς δύο υἱοὺς Ζεβεδαίου, ἤρξατο λυπεῖσθαι καὶ [r] ἀδημονεῖν. 38. τότε λέγει αὐτοῖς, "[s] Περίλυπός ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου ἕως θανάτου· μείνατε ὧδε καὶ γρηγορεῖτε μετ' ἐμοῦ." 39. Καὶ προελθὼν[3] μικρόν, ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ προσευχόμενος, καὶ λέγων, "Πάτερ μου, εἰ δυνατόν ἐστι, [t] παρελθέτω ἀπ' ἐμοῦ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο· πλὴν οὐχ ὡς ἐγὼ θέλω, ἀλλ' ὡς σύ." 40. Καὶ ἔρχεται πρὸς τοὺς μαθητάς, καὶ εὑρίσκει αὐτοὺς καθεύδοντας, καὶ λέγει τῷ Πέτρῳ, "Οὕτως οὐκ

[1] The reading varies here, some MSS. having εως ου (B, etc.), some εως αν (DLΔ), some εως ου αν (ℵCM).

[2] εκει προσευξωμαι in ℵBDL 33 al.

[3] So in BΣ (W.H. in text). Most uncials read προσελθων (Tisch., W.H., in margin). Weiss thinks this an assimilation to Mt.'s usual expression, and προελθων the true reading.

the time of night.—τρὶς, thrice, suggestive of denial in aggravated form; on which, not on the precise number of times, as an instance of miraculous prediction, stress should be laid.—Ver. 35. Intensified protestation of fidelity—καὶ before ἐάν (κἂν) intensive, introducing an extreme case, death for the Master.—οὐ μή, making the predictive future emphatically negative = I certainly will not.—ὁμοίως, similarly, weaker than Mk.'s ὡσαύτως. Very improbable, thinks De Wette. But the disciples were placed in a delicate position by Peter's protestations, and would have to say something, however faint-heartedly.

Vv. 36-46. The agony (so called from the word ἀγωνία in Lk. xxii. 44, a ἅπαξ λεγ.).—Ver. 36. χωρίον, a place in the sense of a property or farm = villa in Vulgate, ager, Hilary, Grundstück, Weizsäcker's translation.—Γεθσημανῆ, probably = גַּת שְׁמָן, an oil press. Descriptions of the place now identified with it in Robinson's Researches, Furrer's Wanderungen, and Stanley's Sinai and Palestine. — καθίσατε αὐτοῦ: Jesus arranges that a good distance shall be between Himself and the body of the disciples when He enters the valley of the shadow of death. He expects no help from them.—ἐκεῖ, there! pointing to the place visible in the moonlight.—Ver. 37. παραλαβὼν: He takes the same three as at the transfiguration along with Him that they may be near enough to prevent a feeling of utter isolation.—ἤρξατο, He began. This beginning refers to the appearance of distress; the inward beginning came earlier. He hid His feelings till He had reduced His following to three; then allowed them to appear to those who, He hoped, could bear the revelation and give Him a little sympathy.—ἀδημονεῖν, of uncertain derivation. Euthy. gives as its equivalent βαρυθυμεῖν, to be dejected or heavy-hearted.—Ver. 38. τοτὲ λέγει αὐτ.: He confides to the three His state of mind without reserve, as if He wished it to be known. Cf. the use made in the epistle to the Hebrews of this frank manifestation of weakness as showing that Christ could not have usurped the priestly office, but rather simply submitted to be made a priest (chap. v. 7, 8).—περίλυπος, overwhelmed with distress, "über und über traurig" (Weiss).—ἕως θανάτου, mortally = death by anticipation, showing that it was the Passion with all its horrors vividly realised that was causing the distress. Hilary, true to his docetic tendency, represents Christ as distressed on account of the three, fearing they might altogether lose their faith in God.—ὧδε: the three stationed nearer the scene of agony to keep watch there.—Ver. 39. μικρὸν, a little space, presumably near enough for them to hear (cf. Lk. xxii. 41).—ἐπὶ πρόσωπον, on His face, not on knees, summa demissio (Beng.).—πάτερ, Father! Weiss in Markus-Evang. seems to think that the one word Abba was all the three heard, the rest of the prayer being an ἰσχύσατε μίαν ὥραν γρηγορῆσαι μετ' ἐμοῦ; 41. γρηγορεῖτε καὶ προσεύχεσθε, ἵνα μὴ εἰσέλθητε εἰς πειρασμόν. τὸ μὲν πνεῦμα πρόθυμον, ἡ δὲ σὰρξ ἀσθενής." 42. Πάλιν [u] ἐκ [u] δευτέρου ἀπελθὼν προσηύξατο, λέγων, "Πάτερ μου, εἰ οὐ δύναται τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον[1] παρελθεῖν ἀπ' ἐμοῦ,[2] ἐὰν μὴ αὐτὸ πίω, γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου." 43. Καὶ ἐλθὼν εὑρίσκει αὐτοὺς πάλιν[3] καθεύδοντας· ἦσαν γὰρ αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ [v] βεβαρημένοι. 44. Καὶ ἀφεὶς αὐτούς, ἀπελθὼν πάλιν,[4] προσηύξατο ἐκ τρίτου, τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον εἰπών.[5] 45. τότε ἔρχεται πρὸς τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ,[6] καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Καθεύδετε τὸ[7] λοιπὸν καὶ ἀναπαύεσθε· ἰδού, ἤγγικεν ἡ ὥρα, καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται εἰς χεῖρας ἁμαρτωλῶν. 46. ἐγείρεσθε, ἄγωμεν. ἰδού, ἤγγικεν ὁ παραδιδούς με."

u Mk. xiv. 72. John ix. 24. Acts xi. 9. Heb. ix. 28.

v Mk. xiv. 40 (T. R.). Lk. ix. 32; xxi. 34. [2] Cor. i. 8; v. 14.

[1] ℵABCLΔ omit το ποτηριον (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] ℵBDL omit απ εμου (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] παλιν ευρεν αυτους in ℵBCDLΣ.

[4] παλιν απελθων in ℵBCDL.

[5] ℵBL have a second παλιν after ειπων.

[6] Most uncials omit αυτου.

[7] το omitted in BCL.

expansion and interpretation by the evangelist. But if they heard one word they could hear more. The prayer uttered in such a state of distress would be a loud outburst (cf. μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχυρᾶς, Heb. v. 7), at once, therefore before the disciples had time to fall asleep or even get drowsy.—τὸ ποτήριον τ., this cup (of death).—πλὴν, etc., howbeit not as I wish, but as Thou, expressively elliptical; no doubt spoken in a calmer tone, the subdued accent suggestive of a change of mood even if the very words did not distinctly reach the ear of the three. Grotius, from theological solicitudes, takes θέλω = θέλοιμι, "vellem" ("more Hebraeorum, qui neque potentialem neque optativum modum habent").—Ver. 40. ἔρχεται: not necessarily immediately after uttering the foregoing prayer. Jesus may have lain on the ground for a considerable time silent.—τῷ Πέτρῳ: all three were asleep, but the reproach was most fitly addressed to Peter, the would-be valiant and loyal disciple.—οὕτως: Euthy. puts a mark of interrogation after this word, whereby we get this sense: So? Is this what it has come to? You were not able to watch with me one hour! A spirited rendering in consonance with Mark's version.

Vv. 42-46. Further progress of the agony.—That Jesus had not yet reached final victory is apparent from His complaint against the disciples. He came craving, needing a sympathy He had not got. When the moment of triumph comes He will be independent of them.—Ver. 42. λέγων, saying; whereupon follow the words. Mark simply states that Jesus prayed to the same effect.—οὐ δύναται: οὐ not μὴ. He knows that it is not possible, yet the voice of nature says strongly: would that it were!—Ver. 43. καθεύδοντας: again! surprising, one would say incredible on first thoughts, but not on second. It was late and they were sad, and sadness is soporific.—Ver. 44. Jesus leaves them sleeping and goes away again for the final struggle, praying as before.—Ver. 45. καθεύδετε λ. κ. ἀναπαύεσθε, sleep now and rest, not ironical or reproachful; nor yet seriously meant, but concessive = ye may sleep and rest indefinitely so far as I am concerned; I need no longer your watchful interest. The Master's time of weakness is past; He is prepared to face the worst.—ἡ ὥρα: He expects the worst to begin forthwith; the cup, which He prayed might pass, to be put immediately into His hands.—παραδίδοται, betrayal the first step, on the point of being taken.—ἁμαρτωλῶν, the Synedrists, with whom Judas has been bargaining.—ἐγείρ. ἄγωμ., sudden change of mood, on signs of a hostile approach: arise, let us go; spoken as if by a general to his army.—ὁ παραδιδούς, the traitor is seen to be coming. It is noticeable that throughout the narrative, in speaking of the action of Judas, the verb παραδίδωμι is used instead of προδίδωμι: the former expresses the idea of delivering to death,

47. Καὶ ἔτι αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, ἰδού, Ἰούδας εἷς τῶν δώδεκα ἦλθε, καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄχλος πολὺς μετὰ μαχαιρῶν καὶ [w] ξύλων, ἀπὸ τῶν ἀρχιερέων καὶ πρεσβυτέρων τοῦ λαοῦ. 48. ὁ δὲ παραδιδοὺς αὐτὸν ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς σημεῖον, λέγων, "Ὃν ἂν φιλήσω, αὐτός ἐστι· κρατήσατε αὐτόν." 49. Καὶ εὐθέως, προσελθὼν τῷ Ἰησοῦ εἶπε, "Χαῖρε, ῥαββί," καὶ κατεφίλησεν αὐτόν. 50. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ἑταῖρε, ἐφ' ᾧ [1] πάρει;" Τότε προσελθόντες ἐπέβαλον τὰς χεῖρας the latter of delivering into the hands of those who sought His life (Euthy. on ver. 21).

[w] here and in parall. = cudgels.

[1] εφ ο in ℵABCDLΔ, etc. (modern editors).

The scene in the garden is intrinsically probable and without doubt historical. The temptation was to suppress rather than to invent in regard both to the behaviour of Jesus and to that of His disciples. It is not the creation of theology, though theology has made its own use of it. It is recorded simply because it was known to have happened.

Vv. 47-56. The apprehension (Mk. xiv. 43-52, Lk. xxii. 47-53).—εἷς τ. δώδεκα, as in ver. 14, repeated not for information, but as the literary reflection of the chronic horror of the apostolic church that such a thing should be possible. That it was not only possible but a fact is one of the almost undisputed certainties of the passion history. Even Brandt, who treats that history very sceptically, accepts it as fact (Die Evangelische Geschichte, p. 18).—μετ' αὐτοῦ, etc.: the description of the company to whom Judas acted as guide is vague; ὄχ. πολ. is elastic, and might mean scores, hundreds, thousands, according to the standard of comparison.—ὄχλος does not suggest soldiery as its constituents, neither does the description of the arms borne—swords and staves. Lk. (xxii. 52, στρατηγοὺς τ. ἱεροῦ) seems to have in his mind the temple police, consisting of priests and Levites with assistants, and this view appears intrinsically probable, though Brandt (E. G., p. 4) scouts it. The Jewish authorities would make arrangements to ensure their purpose; the temple police was at their command, and they would send a sufficiently large number to overpower the followers of their victim, however desperate their resistance.—Ver. 48. ἔδωκεν: the traitor, as he approached the place where he shrewdly guessed Jesus would be, gave (dedit, Vulg.), not had given. His plan was not cut and dry from the first. It flashed upon him as he drew near and began to think how he would meet his Master. The old charm of the Master reasserts itself in his soul, and he feels he must salute Him affectionately. At the same instant it flashes upon him that the kiss which both smouldering love and cowardice compel may be utilised as a sign. Inconsistent motives? Yes, but such is human nature, especially in the Judas type: two-souled men, drawn opposite ways by the good and evil in them; betraying loved ones, then hanging themselves.—Ver. 48. αὐτός ἐστιν, He and no other is the man.—Ver. 49. κατεφίλησεν, kissed Him heartily. In late Greek there was a tendency to use compounds with the force of the simple verb, and this has been supposed to be a case in point (De Wette). But coming after φιλήσω, ver. 48, the compound verb is plainly used with intention. It occurs again in Lk. vii. 38, 45, xv. 20, obviously with intensive force. What a tremendous contrast between the woman in Simon's house (Lk. vii.) and Judas! Both kissed Jesus fervently: with strong emotion; yet the one could have died for Him, the other betrays Him to death. Did Jesus remember the woman at that moment?—Ver. 50. ἑταῖρε: so might a master salute a disciple, and disciple or companion is, I think, the sense of the word here (so Elsner, Palairet, Wolf, Schanz, Carr, Camb. N. T.). It answers to ῥαββί in the salute of Judas.—ἐφ' ὃ πάρει, usually taken as a question: "ad quid venisti?" Vulg. Wherefore art thou come? A.V. "Wozu bist du da?" Weizsäcker. Against this is the grammatical objection that instead of ὃ should have been τί. Winer, § 24, 4, maintains that ὃς might be used instead of τίς in a direct question in late Greek. To get over the difficulty various suggestions have been made: Fritzsche renders: friend, for what work you are come! taking ὃ = οἷον. Others treat the sentence as elliptical, and supply words before or after: e.g., say for what you are come (Morison), or what you have come for, that do, R. V., Meyer, Weiss. The last is least satisfactory, for Judas had already done it, as Jesus instinctively ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰησοῦν, καὶ ἐκράτησαν αὐτόν. 51. Καὶ ἰδού, εἷς τῶν μετὰ Ἰησοῦ, ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα, [x] ἀπέσπασε τὴν μάχαιραν αὐτοῦ, καὶ πατάξας τὸν δοῦλον τοῦ ἀρχιερέως ἀφεῖλεν αὐτοῦ τὸ [y] ὠτίον. 52. τότε λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ἀπόστρεψόν σου τὴν μάχαιραν[1] εἰς τὸν τόπον αὐτῆς· πάντες γὰρ οἱ λαβόντες μάχαιραν ἐν μαχαίρᾳ ἀπολοῦνται. 53. ἢ δοκεῖς ὅτι οὐ δύναμαι ἄρτι[2] παρακαλέσαι τὸν πατέρα μου, καὶ παραστήσει μοι πλείους ἢ[3] δώδεκα λεγεῶνας ἀγγέλων; 54. πῶς οὖν πληρωθῶσιν αἱ γραφαί, ὅτι οὕτω δεῖ γενέσθαι;"

55. Ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοῖς ὄχλοις, "Ὡς ἐπὶ λῃστὴν ἐξήλθετε μετὰ μαχαιρῶν καὶ ξύλων [z] συλλαβεῖν με; καθ'

[x] here only in same sense. (Mk. simple verb). Cf. Lk. xxii. 41. Acts xx. 30; xxi. 1.

[y] Mk. xiv. 47 (T. R.). Lk. xxii. 51. John xviii. 10 (T. R.).

[z] parall. Acts i. 16; xii. 3; xxiii. 27.

[1] σου after την μαχαιραν in ℵBDL.

[2] αρτι after παραστησει μοι in ℵBL 33 al. (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] For πλειους η ℵBD have πλειω. The reading in T. R. is a grammatical correction uncalled for, as the construction in πλειω δ. λεγεωνας is good Greek.

knew. Fritzsche's suggestion is ingenious, and puts a worthy thought into Christ's mouth. Perhaps the best solution is to take the words as a question in effect, though not in form. Disciple, for which, or as which you are present? Comrade, and as a comrade here? So Judas pretended, and by the laconic phrase Jesus at once states and exposes the pretence, possibly pointing to the crowd behind in proof of the contrary. So in effect Beng.: "hoccine illud est cujus causa ad es"; also Schanz. The point is that the Master gives the false disciple to understand that He does not believe in his paraded affection.

Vv. 51-54. Blood drawn.—ἰδού, introducing a second scene connected with the apprehension (cf. ver. 47); the use of a weapon by one of Christ's disciples. A quite likely occurrence if any of them happened to have weapons in their hands, though we may wonder at that. It might be a large knife used in connection with the Paschal feast. Who used the weapon is not said by the Synop. Did they know? The article before μάχαιραν might suggest that the whole party were armed, each disciple having his sword. The fear that they might be explains the largeness of the band following Judas.—Ver. 52. ἀπόστρεψον: Jesus could not encourage the use of arms by His disciples, and the order to sheathe the weapon He was sure to give. The accompanying word, containing a general legal maxim: draw the sword, perish with the sword (the subsequent history of the Jewish people a tragic exemplification of its truth), suitably enforces the order. Weiss thinks that this word recorded here was spoken by Jesus at some other time, if at all, for it appears to be only a free reproduction of Rev. xiii. 10 (Meyer, ed. Weiss). This and the next two verses are wanting in Mk. and Lk.—Ver. 53 gives another reason for not using the sword: if it were God's will that His Son should be rescued it could be done in a different way. The way suggested is described in military language, the verbs παρακαλεῖν and παριστάναι being both used in classics in connection with military matters, and the word λεγεῶνας suggesting the battalions of the Roman army.—δώδεκα, twelve legions, one for each of the twelve disciples.—πλείω, even more than that vast number, Divine resources boundless. The free play of imagination displayed in this conception of a great army of angels evinces the elasticity of Christ's spirit and His perfect self-possession at a critical moment.—Ver. 54. πῶς οὖν: refers to both forms of aid, that of the sword and that of angels (Grotius, Fritzsche); rescue in any form inconsistent with the predicted destiny of Messiah to be a sufferer.—ὅτι οὕτω, etc., the purport of all prophetic scripture is that thus it should be: apprehension and all that is to follow.

Vv. 55, 56. Jesus complains of the manner of His apprehension.—ἐν ἐκ. τ. ὥρᾳ, connects with ἐκράτησαν αὐτόν in ver. 50. Having said what was necessary to the bellicose disciple, Jesus turns to the party who had come to arrest Him, ἡμέραν πρὸς ὑμᾶς[1] ἐκαθεζόμην διδάσκων ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ,[2] καὶ οὐκ ἐκρατήσατέ με. 56. τοῦτο δὲ ὅλον γέγονεν, ἵνα πληρωθῶσιν αἱ γραφαὶ τῶν προφητῶν." Τότε οἱ μαθηταὶ[3] πάντες ἀφέντες αὐτὸν ἔφυγον.

57. ΟΙ δὲ κρατήσαντες τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἀπήγαγον πρὸς Καϊάφαν τὸν ἀρχιερέα, ὅπου οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι συνήχθησαν. 58. Ὁ δὲ Πέτρος ἠκολούθει αὐτῷ ἀπὸ[4] μακρόθεν, ἕως τῆς αὐλῆς τοῦ ἀρχιερέως· καὶ εἰσελθὼν ἔσω ἐκάθητο μετὰ τῶν ὑπηρετῶν, ἰδεῖν

[1] ℵBL 33 omit προς υμας (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] εν τω ιερω before εκαθεζομην in ℵBL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] B has αυτου after μαθηται (W.H. in margin).

[4] BD have απο (W.H. in brackets). ℵCLΔ omit (Tisch.).

here called τοῖς ὄχλοις.—ὡς ἐπὶ λῃστὴν, etc.: the words may be taken either as a question or as a statement of fact. In either case Jesus complains that they have arrested Him as if He were a robber or other criminal. A robber as distinct from a thief (vide Trench, Synonyms) is one who uses violence to possess himself of others' property, and Christ's complaint is in the first place that they have treated Him as one who meant to offer resistance. But the reference to His past habit in the sequel seems to show that He has another complaint in His mind, viz., that they have regarded Him as one hiding from justice. The allusion is to the invasion of His privacy in the garden, and the implied suggestion that they have put a false construction on His presence there. They think He has been seeking escape from His fate when in fact He has been bracing Himself up for it! To what misconstruction the holiest and noblest actions are liable, and how humiliating to the heroic soul! It was thoroughly characteristic of Jesus that He should feel the humiliation, and that He should at once give expression to the feeling. This against Brandt (p. 6), who thinks this utterance in no respect appropriate to the situation.—καθ' ἡμέραν, etc.: Jesus asks in effect why they did not apprehend Him while, for several days in succession, He sat in the temple precincts teaching. To this it might be replied that that was easier said than done, in midst of a miscellaneous crowd containing not a few friends of the obnoxious teacher (so Brandt). But what Jesus is concerned to point out is, not the practicability of arrest in the temple, but that His behaviour had been fearless. How could they imagine that a man who spoke His mind so openly could slink away into hiding-places like an evil-doer? Brandt remarks that the complaint is addressed to the wrong persons: to the underlings rather than to the hierarchs. It is addressed to those who actually apprehended Jesus, whoever they were. Who composed that crowd it would not be easy in the dark to know.—Ver. 56. τοῦτο δὲ: a formula of the evangelist, introducing another reference by Jesus to the prophecies in these terms, ἵνα πληρωθῶσιν, etc. Jesus reconciles Himself to the indignity in the manner of His arrest, as to the arrest itself, and all that it involved, by the thought that it was in His "cup" as described by the prophets. The prophetic picture of Messiah's experience acted as a sedative to His spirit.—τότε, then, when the apprehension had been effected, and meekly submitted to by Jesus.—πάντες, Peter included.—ἔφυγον, fled, to save themselves, since their Master could not be saved. This another bitter drop in the cup: absolute loneliness.

Vv. 57-68. Before Caiaphas (Mk. xiv. 53-65; Lk. xxii. 54, 66-71).—πρὸς Καιάφαν, to Caiaphas, who sent them forth, and who expects their return with their victim.—ὅπου: where, i.e., in the palace of Caiaphas.—γρ. καὶ πρ.: scribes and presbyters, priests and presbyters in ver. 3. Mk. names all the three; doubtless true to the fact.—συνήχθησαν, were assembled, waiting for the arrival of the party sent out to arrest Jesus. In Mk. the coming together of the Sanhedrim appears to be synchronous with the arrival of Jesus. This meeting happens when the world is asleep, and when τὸ τέλος. 59. Οἱ δὲ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι[1] καὶ τὸ συνέδριον ὅλον ἐζήτουν [a] ψευδομαρτυρίαν κατὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ὅπως αὐτὸν θανατώσωσι, 60. καὶ[2] οὐχ [b] εὗρον· καὶ πολλῶν [c] ψευδομαρτύρων προσελθόντων, οὐχ εὗρον.[2] ὕστερον δὲ προσελθόντες δύο ψευδομάρτυρες[3] 61. εἶπον, "Οὗτος ἔφη, Δύναμαι καταλῦσαι τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ [d] διὰ τριῶν [d] ἡμερῶν οἰκοδομῆσαι αὐτόν."[4] 62. Καὶ ἀναστὰς ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Οὐδὲν ἀποκρίνῃ; τί οὗτοί σου [e] καταμαρτυροῦσιν;"

a Ch. xv. 19.
b Ch. xii. 43.
c 1 Cor. xv. 15.
d parall. Mk. ii. 1. Acts xxiv. 17. Gal. ii. 1.
e Ch. xxvii. 13. Mk. xiv. 60.

[1] ℵBDL 69 it. vg., Egypt. verss., omit οι πρεσβυτεροι, which comes in from ver. 57.

[2] For the passage και ουκ ευρον . . . ουκ ευρον ℵBCL verss. have και ουκ ευρον πολλων ψευδομαρτυρων προσελθοντων (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

[3] ℵBL omit ψευδομαρτυρες.

[4] B omits αυτον (W.H.).

judicial iniquity can be perpetrated quietly.—Ver. 58 is the prelude to the story of Peter's denial, which is resumed at ver. 69 after the account of the trial. Similarly in Mk. Lk. gives the story without interruption.—μακρόθεν, from afar: Peter followed his Master, having after a while recovered from the general panic; more courageous than the rest, yet not courageous enough; just enough of the hero in him to bring him into the region of temptation.—ἕως τ. αὐ. Cf. Mk., ver. 54.—ἰδεῖν τὸ τέλος: to see the end; a good Greek phrase. Motives: curiosity and honest interest in the fate of his loved Master. Jerome puts these alternatively: "vel amore discipuli vel humana curiositate".

Vv. 59-68. The trial.—Ver. 59. τ. συν. ὅλον, the whole Sanhedrim, cf. πάντες in Heb. iii. 16, the statement in both cases admitting of a few exceptions. — ψευδομαρτυρίαν, false evidence, of course in the first place from the evangelist's point of view (μαρτυρίαν in Mk.), but substantially true to the fact. They wanted evidence for a foregone conclusion; no matter though it was false if it only looked true and hung fairly well together. Jesus was apprehended to be put to death, and the trial was only a blind, a form rendered necessary by the fact that there was a Procurator to be satisfied.—Ver. 60. οὐκ εὗρον: they found not false witness that looked plausible and justified capital punishment.—πολλῶν π. ψ.: it was not for want of witnesses of a kind; many offered themselves and made statements, but they did not serve the purpose: either trivial or inconsistent; conceivable in the circumstances: coming forward on the spur of the moment from the crowd in answer to an invitation from prejudiced judges eager for damnatory evidence. Those who responded deserved to be stigmatised as false. None but base, mean creatures would have borne evidence in such a case.—δύο, only two had anything to say worth serious attention.—Ver. 61. οὗτος ἔφη, this person said: then follows a version of a word really spoken by Jesus, of a startling character, concerning destroying and rebuilding the temple. An inaccurate report of so remarkable a saying might easily go abroad, and the version given by the two witnesses seems from xxvii. 40 to have been current. They might, therefore, have borne wrong evidence without being false in intention.—δύναμαι, in an emphatic position, makes Jesus appear as one boasting of preternatural power, and τὸν ναὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, as irreverently parading His power in connection with a sacred object.—διὰ τ. ἡ., literally through three days = after: for similar use of the preposition, vide Gal. ii. 1. The meaning is: after three days I will complete the rebuilding, so that διὰ in effect is = ἐν in John ii. 19.—Ver. 62. ἀναστὰς ὁ ἀρ.: the high priest rose up not because he felt the evidence just led to be very serious, rather in irritation because the most damaging statements amounted to nothing more serious. A man could not be sentenced to death for a boastful word (Grotius).—οὐδὲν ἀποκρίνῃ . . . καταμαρτυροῦσιν: either one question as in Vulg.: "nihil respondes ad ea quae isti adversum te testificantur?" or two as in A. V. and R. V., so also Weizsäcker: answerest Thou nothing? what do these witness against Thee? It is an attempt of a baffled man to draw Jesus into explanations about the saying which will make it more damaging as evidence against Him. What about this pretentious word

63. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἐσιώπα. καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς [1] ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "[f] Ἐξορκίζω σε κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ζῶντος, ἵνα ἡμῖν εἴπῃς, εἰ σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστός, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ." 64. Λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Σὺ εἶπας. πλὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἀπ' ἄρτι ὄψεσθε τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου καθήμενον ἐκ δεξιῶν τῆς δυνάμεως καὶ ἐρχόμενον ἐπὶ τῶν νεφελῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ." 65. Τότε ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς [g] διέρρηξε τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ, λέγων, "Ὅτι [2] ἐβλασφήμησε· τί ἔτι χρείαν ἔχομεν μαρτύρων; ἴδε, νῦν ἠκούσατε τὴν βλασφημίαν αὐτοῦ.[3] 66. τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ;" Οἱ δὲ ἀποκριθέντες εἶπον, "[h] Ἔνοχος θανάτου ἐστί." 67. Τότε ἐνέπτυσαν εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ, καὶ [i] ἐκολάφισαν αὐτόν· οἱ δὲ ἐρράπισαν, λέγοντες, 68. "Προφήτευσον ἡμῖν, Χριστέ, τίς ἐστιν ὁ παίσας σε;"

f here only.
g Mk. xiv. 63. Acts xiv. 14.
h Mk. xiv. 64. Mk. iii. 29 (T. R.), with gen. of penalty (Gen. xxvi. 11).
i Mk. xiv. 65. 1 Cor. iv. 11. 2 Cor. xii. 7. 1 Pet. ii. 20.

[1] BLZ vul. Copt. al. omit αποκριθεις.

[2] ℵBDLZΣ 33 omit οτι.

[3] ℵBDLZ omit αυτου.

of yours; is it true that you said it, and what does it mean?—Ver. 63. ἐσιώπα: Jesus seeing the drift of the questions gave the high priest no assistance, but continued silent.—ἐξορκίζω (ἐξορκόω more common in classics). The high priest now takes a new line, seeing that there is no chance of conviction any other way. He puts Jesus on His oath as to the cardinal question of Messiahship.—εἰ σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστὸς, etc.: not two questions but one, Son of God being exegetical of the title Christ. If He was the one He was the other ipso facto.—Ver. 64. σὺ εἶπας: in current phrase = I am. Was Jesus morally bound to answer? Why not continue silent? First, the whole ministry of Jesus had made the question inevitable. Second, the high priest was the proper person to ask it. Third, it was an important opportunity for giving expression to His Messianic self-consciousness. Fourth, silence would, in the cirumstances, have amounted to denial.—πλὴν not = "nevertheless," but rather = nay more: I have something more startling to tell you. What follows describes the future of the Son of Man in apocalyptic terms, and is meant to suggest the thought: "the time is coming when you and I shall change places; I then the Judge, you the prisoners at the bar".

Vv. 65-68. τότε: At last they have, or think they have, Him at their mercy.—διέρρηξεν, etc.: a very imposing act as the expression of true emotion; in reality a theatrical action demanded by custom and performed in accordance with rule: length and locality of rent, the garments to be rent (the nether; all of them, even if there were ten, said the Rabbinical rule: note the plural here, τὰ ἱμάτια), all fixed. A common custom among Eastern peoples. It was highly proper that holy men should seem shocked immeasurably by "blasphemy". — ἐβλασφήμησεν: Was it blasphemy for a man to call Himself Messiah in a country where a Messiah was expected? Obviously not. It might be to call oneself Messiah falsely. But that was a point for careful and deliberate examination, not to be taken for granted. The judgment of the high priest and the obsequious vote of the Sanhedrim were manifestly premature. But it does not follow from this that the evangelist's account of the trial is unhistorical (Brandt, p. 62). The Sanhedrists, as reported, behave suo more.—Ver. 66. ἔνοχος θανάτου: death the penalty of blasphemy, Lev. xxiv. 15, and of being a false prophet, Deut. xviii. 20.—Vv. 67-68: to judicial injustice succeed personal indignities: spitting in the face (ἐνέπτυσαν), smiting with the fist (ἐκολάφισαν, not Attic, κονδυλίζω used instead), or with the open hand (ἐρράπισαν, originally to beat with rods). Euthy. Zig. distinguishes the two last words thus: κολαφισμὸς is a stroke on the neck with the hollow of the hand so as to make a noise, ῥαπισμὸς a stroke on the face. The perpetrators of these outrages in Mk. are τινὲς and οἱ ὑπηρέται, the former word presumably pointing to some Sanhedrists. In Mt. the connection suggests Sanhedrists alone. Incredible that they should condescend to so unworthy proceedings, one is inclined to say. Yet it was night, there was intense dislike, and they might feel

69. Ὁ δὲ Πέτρος ἔξω ἐκάθητο[1] ἐν τῇ αὐλῇ, καὶ προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ μία [j] παιδίσκη, λέγουσα, "Καὶ σὺ ἦσθα μετὰ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Γαλιλαίου." 70. Ὁ δὲ ἠρνήσατο ἔμπροσθεν πάντων, λέγων, "Οὐκ οἶδα τί λέγεις." 71. Ἐξελθόντα δὲ αὐτὸν[2] εἰς τὸν [k] πυλῶνα, εἶδεν αὐτὸν ἄλλη, καὶ λέγει τοῖς ἐκεῖ, "Καὶ[3] οὗτος ἦν μετὰ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Ναζωραίου." 72. Καὶ πάλιν ἠρνήσατο [l] μεθ' ὅρκου, "Ὅτι οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον." 73. Μετὰ μικρὸν δὲ προσελθόντες οἱ ἑστῶτες εἶπον τῷ Πέτρῳ, "Ἀληθῶς καὶ σὺ ἐξ αὐτῶν εἶ· καὶ γὰρ ἡ [m] λαλιά σου [n] δῆλόν σε ποιεῖ." 74. Τότε ἤρξατο καταναθεματίζειν[4] καὶ ὀμνύειν, "Ὅτι οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον." Καὶ εὐθέως ἀλέκτωρ ἐφώνησε. 75. καὶ ἐμνήσθη ὁ Πέτρος τοῦ ῥήματος τοῦ[5] Ἰησοῦ εἰρηκότος αὐτῷ,[6] "Ὅτι πρὶν ἀλέκτορα φωνῆσαι, τρὶς ἀπαρνήσῃ με." καὶ ἐξελθὼν ἔξω [o] ἔκλαυσε πικρῶς.

j parall. Lk. xii. 45. Acts xii. 13. Gal. iv. 22.
k Lk. xvi. 20. Acts x. 17; xiv. 13.
l Ch. xiv. 7 (same phrase).
m John iv. 42; viii. 43.
n 1 Cor. xv. 27. Gal. iii. 11.
o Ch. ii. 18. Mk. v. 38, 39. Lk. vi. 21, 25.

[1] εκαθητο εξω in ℵBDLZ.
[2] ℵBLZ omit this αυτον.
[3] ℵBD omit και before ουτος.
[4] The mass of uncials have καταθεματιζειν.
[5] The article is wanting in most uncials.
[6] ℵBDL omit αυτω.

they did God service by disgracing a pretender. Hence the invitation to the would-be christ to prophesy (προφήτευσον) who smote him when he was struck behind the back or blindfolded (Mk. xiv. 65). Thus did they fill up the early hours of the morning on that miserable night. Sceptical critics, e.g., Brandt, p. 69, also Holtz., H. C., suggest that the colouring of this passage is drawn from O. T. texts, such as Micah iv. 14 (Sept. v. 1, A. V.), Is. l. 6, liii. 3-5, 1 Kings xxii. 24, and that probably the texts created the "facts". That of course is abstractly possible, but the statement of the evangelist is intrinsically probable, and it is to be noted that not even in Mt. is there a "that it might be fulfilled".

Vv. 69-75. Peter's denial (Mk. xiv. 66-72, Lk. xxii. 54-62). The discrepancies of the four accounts here are perplexing but not surprising. It would be difficult for any one present in the confused throng gathered within the palace gate that night to tell exactly what happened. Peter himself, the hero of the tale, had probably only hazy recollections of some particulars, and might not always relate the incident in the same way. Harmonistic efforts are wasted time. Comparative exegesis may partly explain how one narrative, say Mt.'s, arose out of another, e.g., Mk.'s (Weiss, Marcus-Evang.). But on the whole it is best to take each version by itself, as one way of telling a story, which in the main is accepted even by writers like Brandt as one of the certainties of the Passion history.

Ver. 69. ὁ δὲ Π.: δὲ resumes the Peter-episode introduced at ver. 58.—ἐκάθητο, was sitting, while the judicial proceedings were going on.—αὐλῇ, here means the court, atrium; the trial would take place in a chamber within the buildings surrounding the court.—μία π., one servant girl, to distinguish from another referred to in ver. 71 (ἄλλη).—καὶ σὺ, you too, as if she had seen Jesus in company with His disciples, Peter one of them, recognisable again, perhaps during the last few days.—Γαλιλαίου: He a Galilean; you, too, by your tongue.—Ver. 70. οὐκ οἶδα, etc.: affectation of extreme ignorance. So far from knowing the man I don't even know what you are talking about. This said before all (ἔμπ. πάντων). First denial, entailing others to follow.—Ver. 71. εἰς τ. πυλῶνα, to or towards the gateway, away from the crowd in the court.—ἄλλη (παιδίσκη), another saw him, and said, not to him, but to others there (not easy to escape!).—οὗτος, etc., this person, pointing to him, was, etc.—Ver. 72. μεθ' ὅρκου: second denial, more emphatic, with an oath, and more direct: I know not the man (τὸν ἄν.).—Ver. 73. οἱ ἑστῶτες, loungers; seeing Peter's confusion, and amusing themselves by tormenting him. — ἀληθῶς, beyond doubt, you, too, are one of them; of the notorious gang.—ἡ λαλιά: They had XXVII. 1. ΠΡΩΙΑΣ δὲ γενομένης, συμβούλιον ἔλαβον πάντες οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τοῦ λαοῦ κατὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ὥστε θανατῶσαι αὐτόν· 2. καὶ δήσαντες αὐτὸν ἀπήγαγον, καὶ παρέδωκαν αὐτὸν Ποντίῳ[1] Πιλάτῳ τῷ ἡγεμόνι.

3. Τότε ἰδὼν Ἰούδας ὁ παραδιδοὺς[2] αὐτόν, ὅτι κατεκρίθη, μεταμεληθεὶς ἀπέστρεψε[3] τὰ τριάκοντα ἀργύρια τοῖς ἀρχιερεῦσι καὶ

[1] αυτον Ποντιω omitted in ℵBLΣ; C omits αυτον. The words are an explanatory gloss.

[2] παραδους in BL 33. [3] εστρεψε in ℵBL (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

heard him speak in his second denial, which so leads up to a third. Galilean speech was defective in pronouncing the gutturals, and making שׁ = ת.—Ver. 74. καταθεματίζειν (here only καταναθ. in T. R., probably belonging to vulgar speech, Meyer), to call down curses on himself, sign of irritation and desperation; has lost self-control completely. —καὶ εὐθὺς: just after this passionate outburst a cock crew.—"Magna circumstantia," Beng.—Ver. 75. καὶ ἐμνήσθη: The cock crowing caused a sudden revulsion of feeling, and flashed in on Peter's mind the light of a vivid recollection: the word his Master had spoken.—πρὶν, etc., repeated as in ver. 34.—ἐξελθὼν, going out, neither in fear of apprehension (Chrys., Euthy.) nor from shame (Orig., Jer.), but that he might give free rein to penitent feeling.—ἔκλαυσεν, wept loudly, as distinct from δακρύειν (John xi. 35), to shed tears.

CHAPTER XXVII. THE PASSION HISTORY CONTINUED.—Vv. 1, 2. Morning meeting of the Sanhedrim (Mk. xv. 1, Lk. xxii. 66, xxiii. 1).—Ver. 1. συμβούλιον ἔλαβον: this consultation took place at a meeting of Sanhedrim, which was probably only a continuation of the night meeting, though regarded as formally a second meeting, to keep right with the law which humanely required, at least, two sittings in a grave criminal case; the Sanhedrists in this, as in all things, careful to observe the letter, while sinning against the spirit of the law. Those who were present at the night meeting would scarcely have time to go home, as the hearing of many witnesses (xxvi. 59) would take hours. Absent members might be summoned to the morning meeting (Elsner), or might come, knowing that they were expected. —πάντες points to a full meeting, as does also τοῦ λαοῦ after πρεσβύτεροι. The meeting was supremely important, though in one respect pro formâ. The law or custom required a death sentence to be pronounced during day-time. Therefore, the vote of the night meeting had to be formally confirmed. Then they had to consider in what shape the case was to be put so as to ensure the consent of Pilate to the execution of their sentence; a most vital matter.—ὥστε θανατῶσαι αὐτόν, so that they might compass His death; the phrase seems meant to cover both aspects of the business on hand: the formal sentence of death, and the adoption of means for securing that it might be carried into effect.—ὥστε, with infinitive, here expresses tendency: that He should die the drift of all done. The result as yet remained uncertain.—Ver. 2. δήσαντες: no mention of binding before in Mt.'s narrative. If Jesus was bound at His apprehension the fetters must have been taken off during the trial.—ἀπήγαγον, etc., they led Him away and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate. No mention at this point what they had resolved to say to Pilate. That comes out in Pilate's questioning. Pilate was a very undesirable judge to come to with such a cause, a poor representative of Roman authority; as described by Philo. and Josephus, as destitute of fear of God or respect for justice, as the unjust judge of the parable; but, like him, accessible on the side of self-interest, as, no doubt, the Sanhedrists knew very well.—τῷ ἡγεμόνι, the governor; a general title for one exercising supreme authority as representing the emperor. The more specific title was ἐπίτροπος, procurator. The ordinary residence of procurators was Caesarea, on the sea coast, but it was their custom to be in Jerusalem at passover time, with a detachment of soldiers, to watch over the public peace.

Vv. 3-10. The despair of Judas.—Peculiar to Matthew; interesting to the evangelist as a testimony even from the τοῖς[1] πρεσβυτέροις, 4. λέγων, "Ἥμαρτον παραδοὺς αἷμα [a] ἀθῷον." Οἱ δὲ εἶπον, "Τί πρὸς ἡμᾶς; σὺ ὄψει."[2] 5. Καὶ ῥίψας τὰ ἀργύρια ἐν τῷ ναῷ,[3] ἀνεχώρησε· καὶ ἀπελθὼν [b] ἀπήγξατο. 6. Οἱ δὲ ἀρχιερεῖς λαβόντες τὰ ἀργύρια εἶπον, "Οὐκ ἔξεστι βαλεῖν αὐτὰ εἰς τὸν [c] κορβανᾶν, ἐπεὶ [d] τιμὴ αἵματός ἐστι." 7. Συμβούλιον δὲ λαβόντες, ἠγόρασαν ἐξ αὐτῶν τὸν ἀγρὸν τοῦ [e] κεραμέως, εἰς [f] ταφὴν τοῖς ξένοις. 8. διὸ ἐκλήθη ὁ ἀγρὸς ἐκεῖνος ἀγρὸς αἵματος, ἕως τῆς σήμερον. 9. τότε ἐπληρώθη τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ Ἱερεμίου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος, 'Καὶ ἔλαβον τὰ τριάκοντα ἀργύρια, τὴν τιμὴν τοῦ τετιμημένου, ὃν ἐτιμήσαντο ἀπὸ υἱῶν Ἰσραήλ· 10. καὶ ἔδωκαν αὐτὰ εἰς τὸν ἀγρὸν τοῦ κεραμέως, καθὰ συνέταξέ μοι Κύριος.'

a here and in ver. 24.
b here only in N. T. (Tobit iii. 10).
c here only.
d here, ver. 9. Acts iv. 34. 1 Cor. vi. 20 al.
e Rom. ix. 21.
f here only.

[1] ℵBCL 33 omit τοις. [2] οψη in the most important uncials.
[3] εις τον ναον in ℵBL 33, 69 al. (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

false disciple to the innocence of Jesus, and the wickedness of His enemies, and as a curious instance of prophecy fulfilled.—Ver. 3. τότε connects the repentance of Judas with the leading of Jesus away to Pilate which he regarded as sealing his fate. What happened was but the natural result of the apprehension which he himself had brought about, and he doubtless had the natural issue in view at the moment of apprehension. But reaction had set in, partly as a matter of course in a "two-souled" man, partly at sight of the grim reality: his Master led to death by his assistance (ὅτι κατεκρίθη).—μεταμεληθεὶς, regretting, rueing what he had done: wishing it were undone.—ἀπέστρεψε (ἔστρεψε W.H. as in Is. xxxviii. 8), returned the thirty pieces of silver, a sign in such a nature that the repentance as far as it went was very real.—ἥμαρτον, I sinned, I did wrong.—παραδοὺς ἁ. ἀ. explains how. The sinning and the betraying are one, therefore the participle does not point to an act antecedent to that of the main verb.—αἷμα ἀθῷον, innocent blood, for the blood of an innocent person. So in Deut. xxvii. 25. Palairet cites examples to prove that Greek writers used αἷμα as = ἄνθρωπος.—τί πρὸς ἡμᾶς; that is not our concern.—σὺ ὄψει, look thou to that = "tu videris," a Latinism. The sentiment itself a Cainism. "Ad modum Caini loquuntur vera progenies Caini" (Grotius).—Ver. 5. εἰς τὸν ναόν, not in that part of the temple where the Sanhedrim met (Grotius), or in the temple at large, in a place accessible to laymen (Fritzsche, Bleek), or near the temple (Kypke), but in the holy place itself (Meyer, Weiss, Schanz, Carr, Morison); the act of a desperate man determined they should get the money, and perhaps hoping it might be a kind of atonement for his sin.—ἀπήγξατο, strangled himself; usually reconciled with Acts i. 18 by the supposition that the rope broke. The suggestion of Grotius that the verb points to death from grief ("non laqueo sed moestitiâ") has met with little favour.—Ver. 6. κορβανᾶν, the treasury, referred to by this name by Joseph. (B. J. ii. 9, 4).—τιμὴ αἵματός ἐστι: exclusion of blood money from the treasury, an extension of the law against the wages of harlotry (Deut. xxiii. 18).—Ver. 7. τὸν ἀγρὸν τ. κεραμέως, the field of the potter. The smallness of the price has suggested to some (Grotius, e.g.) that it was a field for potter's clay got cheap because worked out. But in that case it would naturally be called the field of the potters.—ξένοις most take as referring to Jews from other lands dying at Jerusalem at passover time.—Ver. 8. ἀγρὸς αἵματος = aceldama, Acts i. 18, name otherwise explained there.—ἕως τῆς σήμερον: phrase frequent in O. T. history; sign of late date of Gospel, thinks De Wette.

Vv. 9, 10. Prophetic reference, τότε, as in ii. 17, not ἵνα or ὅπως.—διὰ Ἱερεμίου, by Jeremiah, in reality by Zechariah (xi. 13), the reference to Jeremiah probably due to there being somewhat similar texts in that prophet (xviii. 2, 3, xxxii. 6-15) running in the evangelist's mind. A petty error. More serious is the question whether this is not a case of prophecy creating "facts," whether the whole story here told is not a legend growing out of the O. T. text

11. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἔστη[1] ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ ἡγεμόνος· καὶ ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτὸν ὁ ἡγεμών, λέγων, "Σὺ εἶ ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων;" Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἔφη αὐτῷ,[2] "Σὺ λέγεις." 12. Καὶ ἐν τῷ κατηγορεῖσθαι αὐτὸν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀρχιερέων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, οὐδὲν ἀπεκρίνατο. 13. τότε λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Πιλάτος, "Οὐκ ἀκούεις πόσα σοῦ καταμαρτυροῦσι;" 14. Καὶ οὐκ ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῷ πρὸς οὐδὲ ἓν ῥῆμα, ὥστε θαυμάζειν τὸν ἡγεμόνα λίαν.

[1] ℵBCLΣ have εσταθη, for which the scribes substituted the more usual εστη.

[2] αυτω has the support of ABXΔΣ, but Tisch. and W.H. (in text) on the authority of ℵL omit it.

quoted. So Brandt, who thinks the betrayal the only fact in the story of Judas, all the rest legendary (E. G., p. 11). The truth rather seems to be that facts, historical traditions, suggested texts which otherwise would never have been thought of. This may be inferred from the manipulation necessary to make the prophecy correspond to the facts: ἔλαβον, 1st person singular in Sept., 3rd person plural here = they took; the expression "the children of Israel" introduced with apparent intention to make the nation responsible for the betrayal; the substitution of the phrase "the field of the potter" for "the house of the Lord". And after all the manipulation how different the circumstances in the two cases! In the one case it is the prophet himself, valued at a petty sum, who cast his price into the House of the Lord; in the other, it is the priests, who bought the life of the prophet of Nazareth for a small sum, who give the money for a potter's field. The only real point of resemblance is the small value set upon a prophet in either case. It is a most unsatisfactory instance of prophetic fulfilment, almost as much so as that in Mt. ii. 23. But its very unsatisfactoriness makes for the historicity of the story. That the prophetic text, once associated with the story in the minds of believers, reacted on the manner of telling it, e.g., as to the weighing of the price (xxvi. 15), and the casting of the money into the holy place (xxvii. 5), is conceivable.

Vv. 11-26. Jesus before Pilate (Mk. xv. 2-15, Lk. xxiii. 2-7, 13-25).—Ver. 11. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς: δὲ resumes an interrupted story (ver. 2).—σὺ εἶ, etc.: Art Thou the King of the Jews? The question reveals the form in which the Sanhedrists presented their accusation. They had translated "Christ" into "King of the Jews" for Pilate's benefit, so astutely giving a political aspect to what under the other name was only a question of religion, or, as a Roman would view it, superstition. A most unprincipled proceeding, for the confession of Jesus that He was the Christ no more inferred a political animus than their own Messianic expectations.—σὺ λεγέις = yes. One is hardly prepared for such a reply to an equivocal question, and there is a temptation to seek escape by taking the words interrogatively = dost thou say so? or evasively, with Theophy. = you say, I make no statement. Explanations such as are given in John xviii. 33-37 were certainly necessary.—Ver. 12. The accusations here referred to appear to have been made on the back of Pilate's first question and Christ's answer. Mark indicates that they were copious. Luke formulates the charge before Pilate begins to interrogate (xxiii. 2). The purpose of their statements would be to substantiate the main charge that Jesus claimed to be King of the Jews in a sense hostile to Roman supremacy. What were the materials of proof? Possibly perverse construction of the healing ministry, of the consequent popularity, of Christ's brusquely independent attitude towards Rabbinism, suggesting a defiant spirit generally.—οὐδὲν ἀπεκρίνατο (note use of 1st aorist middle instead of the more usual ἀπεκρίθη). Jesus made no reply to these plausible mendacities, defence vain in such a case.—Ver. 13. Pilate noting His silence directs His attention to what they have been saying.—Ver. 14. καὶ οὐκ ἀπεκρίθη: still no reply, though no disrespect to the governor intended.—ὥστε θαυμάζειν, etc., the governor was very much (λίαν, at the end, emphatic) astonished: at the silence, and at the man; the silence attracting

15. Κατὰ δὲ ἑορτὴν [g] εἰώθει ὁ ἡγεμὼν [h] ἀπολύειν ἕνα τῷ ὄχλῳ [i] δέσμιον, ὃν ἤθελον. 16. εἶχον δὲ τότε δέσμιον [j] ἐπίσημον, λεγόμενον Βαραββᾶν. 17. συνηγμένων οὖν αὐτῶν, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Πιλάτος, "Τίνα θέλετε ἀπολύσω ὑμῖν; Βαραββᾶν, ἢ Ἰησοῦν τὸν λεγόμενον Χριστόν;" 18. ᾔδει γὰρ ὅτι [k] διὰ [k] φθόνον παρέδωκαν αὐτόν. 19. Καθημένου δὲ αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τοῦ βήματος, ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτὸν ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ, λέγουσα, "Μηδέν σοι καὶ τῷ δικαίῳ ἐκείνῳ· πολλὰ γὰρ ἔπαθον σήμερον κατ' ὄναρ δι' αὐτόν." 20. Οἱ δὲ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι ἔπεισαν τοὺς ὄχλους, ἵνα αἰτήσωνται τὸν Βαραββᾶν, g Mk. x. 1. Lk. iv. 16. Acts xvii. 2.

h Acts iii. 13.
i here and in Mk. xv. 6 in Gospp. Acts xvi. 25, 27. Eph. iii. 1 al.
j Rom. xvi. 7 (in a good sense).
k Phil. i. 16.

attention to the Silent One.—A new type of Jew this. The result of his observation is a favourable impression; how could it be otherwise? Pilate was evidently not alarmed by the charge brought against Jesus. Why? Apparently at first glance he saw that the man before him was not likely to be a pretender to royalty in any sense that he need trouble himself about. The σὺ in an emphatic position in ver. 11 suggests this = You the King of the Jews! Then there was nothing to bear out the pretension: no position, prestige, wealth, following; no troops, etc. (Grotius).

Vv. 15-18. Appeal to the people.—Pilate, not inexperienced in Jewish affairs, nor without insight into the ways of the ruling class, suspects that there are two sides to this matter. The very accusation suggests that the accused may be innocently popular, and the accusers jealous. An existing custom gives the opportunity of putting this to the test.—Ver. 15. κατὰ ἑορτὴν, at feast time (singulis festis, Hermann, Viger, p. 633), not all feasts, but the passover meant.—εἰώθει, was accustomed; time and circumstances of the origin of this custom unknown; a custom likely to arise sooner or later, as it symbolised the nature of the passover as a passing over (Weiss-Meyer), and helped to make the governor's presence at that season wear a gracious aspect; on that account probably originating under the Romans.—Ver. 16. εἶχον: they, the people (ὄχλῳ, ver 15).—ἐπίσημον: pointing not to the magnitude of his crime, but to the fact that for some reason or other he was an object of popular interest.—Βαραββᾶν, accusative of Βαραββᾶς = son of a father, or with double ρ, and retaining the ν at the end, Bar-Rabban = son of a Rabbi. Jerome in his Commentary on Mt. mentions that in the Hebrew Gospel the word was interpreted filius magistri eorum. Origen mentions that in some MSS. this man bore the name Jesus, an identity of name which makes the contrast of character all the more striking. But the reading has little authority.—Ver. 17. τίνα θέλετε ἀπολύσω. Here Pilate seems to take the initiative; in Mk. he is first reminded of the custom (xv. 8). Mk.'s whole account is fuller and clearer.—Βαρ. ἢ Ἰησ. The two names put before the people, as presumably both popular more or less, Barabbas for some unknown reason, Jesus by inference from being called "Christ". No favouritism implied. Pilate is feeling his way, wants to do the popular thing as safest for himself.—Ver. 18. ᾔδει, he knew, perhaps too strong a word, the fact being that he shrewdly suspected—knew his men, and instinctively divined that if Jesus was a popular favourite the Pharisees would be jealous. This explains his sang froid in reference to the title "King of the Jews," also his offering the name of Jesus to the people.

Vv. 19-20. Interlude of Pilate's wife, in Mt. alone probably introduced to explain the bias of Pilate in favour of Jesus apparent in the sequel (Weiss-Meyer).—Ver. 19. μηδὲν, etc., nothing to thee and that just one = have nothing to do with proceedings against Him.—πολλὰ γὰρ: reason for the advice, an unpleasant dream in the morning (σήμερον, to-day, early). The historicity of this incident is of course doubted, the use made of it, with embellishments, in apocryphal writings (Acta Pilati) being pressed into the service. But it is quite credible nevertheless. First, the wife of Pilate might be there, for it had become customary for wives to accompany provincial governors. Tacitus, Ann. iii. 33, 34, mentions an unsuccessful attempt in the senate to put down the practice. Second, she had a husband that much needed good advice, and would often get it from a good wife. Third, it was a womanly act.

τὸν δὲ Ἰησοῦν ἀπολέσωσιν. 21. ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ ἡγεμὼν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τίνα θέλετε ἀπὸ τῶν δύο ἀπολύσω ὑμῖν;" Οἱ δὲ εἶπον, "Βαραββᾶν."[1] 22. Λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Πιλάτος, "Τί οὖν ποιήσω Ἰησοῦν τὸν λεγόμενον Χριστόν;" Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ[2] πάντες, "Σταυρωθήτω." 23. Ὁ δὲ ἡγεμὼν[3] ἔφη, "Τί γὰρ κακὸν ἐποίησεν;" Οἱ δὲ [l]περισσῶς ἔκραζον, λέγοντες, "Σταυρωθήτω." 24. Ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ Πιλάτος, ὅτι οὐδὲν ὠφελεῖ, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον θόρυβος γίνεται, λαβὼν ὕδωρ, [m]ἀπενίψατο τὰς χεῖρας ἀπέναντι[4] τοῦ ὄχλου, λέγων, "Ἀθῷός εἰμι ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ δικαίου[5] τούτου· ὑμεῖς ὄψεσθε." 25. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς πᾶς ὁ λαὸς εἶπε, "Τὸ αἷμα αὐτοῦ ἐφ' ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ τέκνα ἡμῶν." 26. Τότε ἀπέλυσεν αὐτοῖς τὸν Βαραββᾶν· τὸν δὲ Ἰησοῦν [n]φραγελλώσας παρέδωκεν ἵνα σταυρωθῇ.

l Mk. x. 26; xv. 14 (W. H.). Acts xxvi. 11.
m here only.
n here and in Mk. xv. 15.

[1] τον before Βαρ. in ℵBL 1, 33.
[2] αυτω omitted in ℵABDΔΣ.
[3] ℵB 33, 69 omit ηγεμων.
[4] κατεναντι in BD (W.H. in text bracketed). ℵLΔΣ have απεναντι (Tisch.).
[5] BD omit του δικαιου, which probably has crept in from ver. 19.

Vv. 20-26. Result of the appeal to the people.—Ver. 20. οἱ δὲ ἀρχ., etc.: the Sanhedrists saw the danger, and set themselves to bias the popular judgment, not sure what might otherwise happen—with success, ἔπεισαν. So when, after due interval, the governor put the question, the reply was (ver. 21) τὸν Βαραββᾶν, and to the further question what then was to be done with Jesus: the unanimous (πάντες) reply was Σταυροθήτω. Where were the men who had a few days ago shouted Hosanna? If there, how fickle; if absent, why? Or were they silent, cowed by the prevailing mood?—Ver. 23. τί γὰρ κακὸν: elliptical, implying unwillingness to carry out the popular will. (Fritzsche, Grotius.) Some, Palairet, Raphel, etc., take γὰρ as redundant.—περισσῶς ἔκραζον, they kept crying out more loudly. Cf. Mk., where the force of περισσῶς comes out more distinctly.—Ver. 24. ὅτι οὐδὲν ὠφελεῖ, that it was no use, but rather only provoked a more savage demand, as is the way of mobs.—λαβὼν ὕδωρ, etc.: washed his hands, following a Jewish custom, the meaning of which all present fully understood, accompanying the action with verbal protestations of innocence. This also, with the grim reply of the people (ver. 25), peculiar to Mt.; a "traditional addition" (Weiss).—Ver. 26. τότε ἀπέλυσεν: Pilate, lacking the passion for justice, judges not according to the merits but according to policy. When he discovered that Jesus was not a popular favourite, in fact had no friends, he had no more interest in Him, but acted as the people wished, loosing Barabbas and delivering Jesus to be crucified, after having first subjected Him to scourging (φραγελλώσας = flagello, a Latinism probably borrowed from Mk.). Such was the barbarous practice of the Romans. It is alluded to by Josephus (B. J., v. 11, 1) in these terms: μαστιγούμενοι δὴ καὶ προβασανιζόμενοι τοῦ θανατου πᾶσαν αἰκίαν ἀνεσταυροῦντο τοῦ τείχους ἀντικρύ. Brandt thinks that the alleged custom of releasing a prisoner had no existence, and that the story in the Gospels arose out of an occurrence at a later time, the release of a prisoner the son of a Rabbi concerned in a tumult. The Christians said: they release the son of the Scribe and they crucified our Jesus, and at last the incident was read back into the story of the Passion (E. G., pp. 94-105).

Vv. 27-31. Jesus the sport of the soldiery (Mk. xv. 16-20).—Ver. 27. τότε: when Jesus had been sentenced to crucifixion.—οἱ στρατιῶται τ. ἡ., the soldiers of the governor, i.e., his bodyguard.—παραλαβόντες, etc.: they conducted Jesus from the scene of judgment (without) to the πραιτώριον, i.e., the official residence of the procurator, either Herod's palace, or more probably a palace connected with the fort Antonia, with barracks attached. The word has various meanings: a general's tent, a governor's residence, the barracks of the Praetorian

27. ΤΟΤΕ οἱ στρατιῶται τοῦ ἡγεμόνος, παραλαβόντες τὸν Ἰησοῦν εἰς τὸ ᵃ πραιτώριον, συνήγαγον ἐπ' αὐτὸν ὅλην τὴν σπεῖραν· 28. καὶ ἐκδύσαντες[1] αὐτόν, περιέθηκαν αὐτῷ χλαμύδα κοκκίνην[2]· 29. καὶ πλέξαντες στέφανον ἐξ ἀκανθῶν, ἐπέθηκαν ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν[3] αὐτοῦ, καὶ κάλαμον ἐπὶ τὴν δεξιὰν[4] αὐτοῦ· καὶ γονυπετήσαντες ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ, ἐνέπαιζον[5] αὐτῷ, λέγοντες, "Χαῖρε, ὁ βασιλεὺς[6] τῶν Ἰουδαίων·" 30. καὶ ἐμπτύσαντες εἰς αὐτόν, ἔλαβον τὸν κάλαμον, καὶ ἔτυπτον εἰς τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ. 31. Καὶ ὅτε ἐνέπαιξαν αὐτῷ, ἐξέδυσαν αὐτὸν τὴν χλαμύδα, καὶ ἐνέδυσαν αὐτὸν τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἀπήγαγον αὐτὸν εἰς τὸ σταυρῶσαι. 32. Ἐξερχόμενοι δὲ εὗρον ᵃ Mk. xv. 16. John xviii. 28-33; xix. 9. Acts xxiii. 35. Phil. i. 13.

[1] BD and some old Latin codd. have ενδυσαντες, which Weiss thinks has been changed into εκ. from not being understood. Vide below.

[2] χλαμυδα κοκκινην before περιεθηκαν in ℵBDL 69 al. (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] επι της κεφαλης in ℵBL 69.

[4] εν τη δεξια in ℵABDLΣ 1, 33, 69 al.

[5] ενεπαιζαν in ℵBDL.

[6] BDΔ have βασιλευ (W.H. in brackets, ο βασ. in margin).

guard, the Praetorian guard itself.—συνήγαγον, etc.: gathered about Him (for sport) the whole σπεῖραν, at most a cohort of 600, more probably a maniple of 200. ("σπεῖρα, anything twisted round like a ball of thread, is a translation of 'manipulus'; a wisp of hay." Carr in Cam. N. T., ad loc.) A large number to assemble for such a purpose, but Roman soldiers at passover time would always be on the alert for serious work or sport, and here was no ordinary chance of both, a man sentenced to be crucified who passed for King of the Jews. What more natural than to make sport of Him, and through Him to show their contempt for the Jewish people? (Holtzmann, H.C.).—Ver. 28. ἐκδύσαντες (or ἐνδ.) α.: taking off (or putting on) His clothes. If we adopt the former reading, the implied situation will be this: Jesus first stripped for scourging, then reclothed; then stripped again at the commencement of the mocking process. If the latter, this: Jesus after scourging led naked to the praetorium, there clothed, all but His upper garment, instead of which they put on χλαμύδα κ. (Meyer).—χλαμ. κοκκίνην, a scarlet cloak, probably a soldier's sagum. Carr renders a soldier's scarf, and suggests that it may have been a worn-out scarf of Pilate's (Herod's, Elsner). The ridicule would be more lifelike if it was really a fine article that might be, or had been, worn by a potentate.—πλέξαντες σ. ἐξ ἀ., weaving out of thorns a crown; not, say Meyer and Weiss, hard and sharp, so as to cause great pain, but young, flexible, easily plaited, the aim being to ridicule not to inflict torture. Possibly, but the soldiers would not make a point of avoiding giving pain. They would take what came first to hand.—κάλαμον, a reed; apparently under the gov. of ἐπέθηκαν, but really the object of ἔθηκαν, understood.—γονυπετήσαντες: after the investiture comes the homage, by lowly gesture and worshipful salutation: χαῖρε βασιλεῦ τ. Ἰ. Hail, King of the Jews. A mockery of the nation in intention quite as much as of the particular victim. Loesner (Observ. ad N. T.) adduces from Philo. (in Flaccum, 6) a historic parallel, in which the youth of Alexandria treat similarly a half-witted person, Karabas, the real design being to insult Herod Agrippa. Schanz and Holtzmann also refer to this incident.—Ver. 30. At this point rough sport turns into brutal treatment, as the moment for execution of the sentence approaches.—ἐμπτύσαντες: spitting, substituted for kissing, the final act of homage, followed by striking with the mock sceptre (ἔτυπτον ε. τ. κ.).—Ver. 31. ἐξέδυσαν, etc.: they took off the mock royal robe, and put on again His own garments (τὰ ἱμάτια, the upper garments, but why the plural ?). No mention of the crown; left on according to some of the ancients, Origen, e.g.: "semel imposita et nunquam detracta"; and, according to the same Father, con-

p Ch. v. 41. q John iv. 7, 10. r Acts viii. 23. s Lk. xiii. 1 (same const.).

ἄνθρωπον Κυρηναῖον, ὀνόματι Σίμωνα· τοῦτον [p] ἠγγάρευσαν ἵνα ἄρῃ τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ. 33. ΚΑΙ ἐλθόντες εἰς τόπον λεγόμενον Γολγοθᾶ, ὅς [1] ἐστι λεγόμενος κρανίου τόπος,[2] 34. [q] ἔδωκαν αὐτῷ [q] πιεῖν ὄξος [3] μετὰ [r] χολῆς [s] μεμιγμένον· καὶ γευσάμενος οὐκ ἤθελε [4] πιεῖν. 35. Σταυρώσαντες

[1] ο in most uncials. [2] κρανιου τοπος λεγομενος in ℵBL 1, 33 al.

[3] οινον in ℵBDL (Tisch., W.H.). Weiss thinks it possible that οινος has come from Mk.

[4] ηθελησεν in ℵBDLΣ.

sumed by the head of Jesus (" consumpta a capite Jesu "). Taken off doubtless along with the rest, for there must be no mockery of Jesus or Jews before the public. Such proceedings only for the barracks (Holtz., H.C.).

Vv. 32-38. Crucifixion (Mk. xv. 21-27; Lk. xxiii. 26, 35-38).—This part of the story begins with the closing words of ver. 31: " they led Him away to be crucified ".—Ver. 32. ἐξερχόμενοι: going out (of the city) according to later Roman custom, and in harmony also with Jewish usage (Num. xv. 35, 1 Kings xxi. 23, Acts vii. 58).—ἄνθρ. Κυρ.: a man of Cyrene, in Libya, presumably recognisable as a stranger, with whom liberties might be taken.—ἠγγάρευσαν, compelled; a military requisition. Cf. at chap. v. 41.—ἵνα ἄρῃ τ. σ. Jesus, carrying His cross according to the custom, has broken down under His burden. Gethsemane, betrayal, the ordeal of the past sleepless night, scourging, have made the flesh weak. No compassion for Him in finding a substitute; the cross must be carried, and the soldiers will not.—σταυρὸν: see on ver. 35.—Γολγοθᾶ: Weiss remarks on the double λεγόμενον—before the name, and in the following interpretation—and thinks it a sign that Mt. is copying from Mk. One wonders indeed why Mt., writing for Jews, should explain the word at all.—κρανίου τόπος, place of a skull (" Calvariae locus," Vulg., whence " Calvary " in A. V.), of skulls rather, say many interpreters; a place of execution, skulls lying all about (Jerome started this view). Recent interpreters (including Schanz) more naturally take the word as pointing to the shape of the hill. The locality is quite uncertain.

Ver. 34. οἶνον μετὰ χολῆς μ., wine mingled with gall. Mk. has ἐσμυρνισμένον οἶν., wine drugged with myrrh, a drink given by a merciful custom before execution to deaden the sense of pain. The wine would be the sour wine or posca used by Roman soldiers. In Mk. Jesus declines the drink, apparently without tasting, desiring to suffer with clear mind. In Mt. He tastes (γευσάμενος) and then declines, apparently because unpalatable, suggesting a different motive in the offerers, not mercy but cruelty; maltreatment in the very drink offered. To this view of the proceeding is ascribed the μετὰ χολῆς of Mt.'s text, not without the joint influence of Ps. lxix. 22 (Meyer and Weiss). Harmonists strive to reconcile the two accounts by taking χολή as signifying in Hellenistic usage any bitter liquid (quamvis amaritiem, Elsner), and therefore among other things myrrh. Prov. v. 4, Lament. iii. 15 (Sept.), in which χολή stands for wormwood, לַעֲנָה, are cited in proof of this. Against the idea that Mt.'s text has been altered from Mk.'s under the influence of Ps. lxix. 22, is the retention of οἶνος (ὄξος in Ps. and in T. R.) and the absence of any reference to the passage in the usual style—" that it might be fulfilled," etc.

Ver. 35. σταυρώσαντες (from σταυρόω, to drive stakes; in later Greek, and in N. T., to impale on a stake, σταυρός). All the evangelists touch lightly the fact of crucifixion, hurrying over the painful subject as quickly as possible; Mt., most of all, disposing of it in a participial clause. Many questions on which there has been much discussion suggest themselves, e.g., as to the structure and form of the cross: did it consist of an upright beam (palus, stipes) and a cross beam (patibulum, antenna), or of the former only, the hands being nailed to the beam above the head? (so Fulda, Das Kreuz und die Kreuzigung, 1878). Was Christ's cross a crux commissa (T) or a crux immissa (†)? Or is this distinction a purely imaginary one, as Fulda (p. 126) maintains against Justus Lipδὲ αὐτόν, [t] διεμερίσαντο τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ, [u] βάλλοντες [1] [u] κλῆρον· ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ προφήτου, 'Διεμερίσαντο τὰ ἱμάτιά μου ἑαυτοῖς, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ἱματισμόν μου ἔβαλον κλῆρον.' [2] 36. Καὶ καθήμενοι [v] ἐτήρουν αὐτὸν ἐκεῖ. 37. Καὶ ἐπέθηκαν ἐπάνω τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτοῦ τὴν [w] αἰτίαν αὐτοῦ γεγραμμένην, "Οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων." 38. Τότε σταυροῦνται σὺν αὐτῷ δύο λῃσταί, εἷς ἐκ δεξιῶν καὶ εἷς ἐξ εὐωνύμων.

t Lk. xi. 17, 18; xii. 52, 53; xxii. 17. Acts ii. 3, 45.
u the phrase here and in parall.
v ver. 54. Ch. xxviii. 4. Acts xii. 5, 6 (same sense).
w Mk. xv. 26. Acts xxv. 18, 27.

[1] βαλοντες in ℵAD (W.H. in margin).

[2] From ινα πληρωθη to end of ver. 35 is omitted in ℵABDLΣ. It has probably come in from John xix. 24.

sius, till Fulda the great authority on the subject of crucifixion? The work of the more recent writer should certainly be consulted before coming to a final decision on the form of the cross or the method of crucifixion. Another question is, what did Jesus carry to the place of execution: the upright post or the cross beam? (the latter according to Marquhardt, Röm. Alter. vii. 1, 1). And how was His body fixed to the cross: were the feet, e.g., nailed as well as the hands, or only tied to the beam with a rope or with wands or left free? The passages cited from ancient authors bearing on the subject, Artemidorus, Plautus, Seneca, are diversely interpreted, and the practice does not seem to have been invariable. Crucifixion was at best a rude mode of executing justice, and, especially in time of war, seems to have been performed by soldiers in diverse fashions, according to their whim (ἄλλον ἄλλῳ σχήματι πρὸς χλεύην, Joseph., v. 11, 1; plates showing various forms in Fulda). Still there would be a normal mode, and in the case of Jesus, when only one or two were put to death, it would probably be followed. His cross has generally been supposed to have been a crux immissa, with the accusation on the point of the upright post above the cross beam, with a peg whereon to sit. Whether His feet were pierced with nails cannot be certainly determined. Paulus took the negative side in the interest of the hypothesis that Jesus did not really die on the cross; Meyer strongly maintains the contrary, vide ad loc. The fragment of the Gospel of Peter speaks of nails in the hands only: "then they drew the nails from the hands of the Lord". Fulda takes the same view, representing the hands as nailed, the feet as tied to the beam.—τὰ ἱμάτια: the probability is that Jesus had been stript absolutely naked (γυμνοὶ σταυροῦνται, Artemid., Oneirocritica, ii. 58). On the dividing of the garments vide John xix. 23 f. The prophetic reference ἵνα πληρωθῇ in T. R. has little authority, and seems inserted from John xix. 24, by a scribe who thought it what the first evangelist should say. This is a second instance where a chance of prophetic citation is not taken advantage of.—Ver. 36: this statement about the executioners sitting down to watch Jesus takes the place of a statement as to the time of execution in Mk. The purpose apparently was to guard against a rescue.—Ver. 37: this fact is mentioned out of its proper place. It is probable that the placard with the accusation was fixed up before the cross was erected. As it stands in Mt.'s narrative, it looks like an after-thought of the soldiers as they sat keeping watch, their final jest at the expense of their victim and the nation to which He belonged. What the custom was as to this is not known. Of the various versions of the inscription Mk.'s is the shortest: THE KING OF THE JEWS; to this Mt. prefixes: This is Jesus.—Ver. 38: τότε introduces the fact mentioned as an accompaniment of the crucifixion of Jesus, without indicating its precise place in the course of events.—σταυροῦνται, the historical present with lively effect; and passive, probably to imply that this act was performed by other soldiers. This very slight notice grows into a considerable incident in the hands of Luke.

Vv. 39-44. Taunts of spectators (Mk. xv. 29-32; Lk. xxiii. 35-37, 39). The last drop in Christ's bitter cup. To us it may seem incredible that even His worst enemies could be guilty of anything so brutal as to hurl taunts at one suffering the agonies of crucifixion. But men then felt very differently from us, thanks to the civilising influence of the x vide Ch. xxiii. 4.

39. Οἱ δὲ παραπορευόμενοι ἐβλασφήμουν αὐτόν, x κινοῦντες τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτῶν, 40. καὶ λέγοντες, "Ὁ καταλύων τὸν ναὸν καὶ ἐν τρισὶν ἡμέραις οἰκοδομῶν, σῶσον σεαυτόν· εἰ υἱὸς εἶ τοῦ Θεοῦ,[1] κατάβηθι ἀπὸ τοῦ σταυροῦ." 41. Ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ[2] οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς ἐμπαίζοντες μετὰ τῶν γραμματέων καὶ πρεσβυτέρων ἔλεγον, 42. "Ἄλλους ἔσωσεν, ἑαυτὸν οὐ δύναται σῶσαι. εἰ[3] βασιλεὺς Ἰσραήλ ἐστι, καταβάτω νῦν ἀπὸ τοῦ σταυροῦ, καὶ πιστεύσομεν αὐτῷ.[4] 43. πέποιθεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν[5]· ῥυσάσθω νῦν αὐτόν,[6] εἰ θέλει αὐτόν. εἶπε γάρ, Ὅτι Θεοῦ εἰμι υἱός." 44. Τὸ δ' αὐτὸ καὶ οἱ λῃσταὶ οἱ y συσταυρωθέντες[7] αὐτῷ ὠνείδιζον αὐτῷ.[8]

y Rom. vi. 5. Gal. ii. 20 (in fig. sense).

[1] ει υιος θεου ει in B (W.H. in margin).

[2] ομοιως simply in ℵAL (Tisch.). ομοιως και in BK (W.H. in brackets).

[3] ℵBDL omit ει.

[4] επ αυτον in ℵBL.

[5] επι τω θεω in B (W.H. in margin).

[6] ℵBL 33 omit αυτον.

[7] συν αυτω in ℵBDL.

[8] αυτον in all uncials.

Christian faith, which has made the whole details of the Passion history so revolting to the Christian heart. These sneers at the great Sufferer are not invented fulfilments of prophecy (Ps. xxii. 7, 8; so Brandt), but belong to the certainties of the tragic story as told by the synoptists.—Ver. 39. οἱ παραπορευόμενοι, the passers by: the place of crucifixion therefore near a road; going to or from the temple services (Speaker's Com.); or on work-day business, the 13th not the 14th of the month? (Fritzsche, De Wette).—κινοῦντες τ. κ. α., shaking or nodding the head in the direction of the cross, as if to say: that is what it has come to.—Ver. 40. ὁ καταλύων (cf. ἡ ἀποκτείνουσα, xxiii. 37), this and the other taunts seem to be echoes of words said to or about Jesus at the trial, of which a report has already gone abroad among the populace. Whether the saying about destroying the temple was otherwise known can only be a matter of conjecture.—εἰ υἱὸς εἶ τ. θ.: Jesus had confessed Himself to be the Son of God at the trial (xxvi. 64).—κατάβηθι: the God of this world and all men of the world have but one thought as to Sonship; of course it means exceptional privilege. What can a Son of God have to do with a cross?—Ver. 41. ὁμοίως, etc.: one might have expected the dignitaries, priests, scribes, elders, to have left that low-minded work to the mob. But they condescend to their level, yet with a difference. They speak about the Sufferer, not to Him, and in a tone of affected seriousness and fairness.—Ver. 42. ἄλλους ἔσωσεν, etc., He saved others, Himself He cannot save. Both facts; the former they can now afford to admit, and they do so all the more readily that it serves as a foil to the other fact patent to everybody.—βασιλεὺς Ἰ. Messianic King—the claim involved in the confession before the Sanhedrim, refuted by the cross, for who could believe that Messiah would be crucified?—καταβάτω νῦν, etc.: yet let Him come down now from the cross, and we will believe on Him at once. These pious scoffers profess their readiness to accept descent from the cross as the conclusive sign from heaven they had always been asking for.—Ver. 43. This looks like a mere echo of Ps. xxii. 9 (not a literal quotation from the Sept., however, rather recalling Is. xxxvi. 5) rather than a word likely to be spoken by the Sanhedrists. What did they know about the personal piety of Jesus? Probably they were aware that He used to call God "Father," and that may be the basis of the statement, along with the confession of Sonship before the Sanhedrim: θεοῦ εἰμι υἱός.—νῦν, now is the time for testing the value of His trust, a plausible wicked sneer.—εἰ θέλει αὐτόν, if He love Him, an emphatic if, the love disproved by the fact.—θέλει is used in the sense of love in the Sept. (Ps. xviii. 20; xli. 12). Palairet gives examples of a similar use in Greek authors.—Ver. 44: the co-crucified brigands join with the mob and the priests in ribaldry.—τὸ αὐτὸ: Fritzsche supplies ἐποίουν after this phrase and renders: the same thing

45. Ἀπὸ δὲ ἕκτης ὥρας σκότος ἐγένετο ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ἕως ὥρας ἐννάτης· 46. περὶ δὲ τὴν ἐννάτην ὥραν ἀνεβόησεν[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, λέγων, "Ἡλί, Ἡλί,[2] λαμὰ[3] σαβαχθανί;" τοῦτ' ἔστι, "Θεέ μου, Θεέ μου, ἱνατί με [a]ἐγκατέλιπες;" 47. Τινὲς δὲ τῶν ἐκεῖ [a]ἑστώτων[4] ἀκούσαντες ἔλεγον, "Ὅτι Ἡλίαν φωνεῖ οὗτος." 48. Καὶ εὐθέως δραμὼν εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν, καὶ λαβὼν [a]σπόγγον, πλήσας τε ὄξους, καὶ περιθεὶς καλάμῳ, ἐπότιζεν αὐτόν· 49. οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ ἔλεγον,[5] "Ἄφες, ἴδωμεν εἰ ἔρχεται Ἡλίας σώσων αὐτόν."[6] a Mk. xv. 34. 2 Cor. iv. 9. 2 Tim. iv. 10, 16. Heb. x. 25; xiii. 5. Mk. xv. 36. John xix. 29.

[1] εβοησεν in BL 33, 69 (Trg., W.H.) from Mk.?

[2] Ελωι, Ελωι in B (W.H. in text).

[3] λεμα in ℵBL; there are other variants.

[4] εστηκοτων in ℵBCL 33.

[5] BD have ειπαν (W.H. in brackets).

[6] ℵBCL add αλλος δε λαβων λογχην ενυξεν αυτου την πλευραν και εξηλθεν υδωρ και αιμα (W.H. in double brackets). It is an early addition from John xix. 34.

did the robbers, for they too reproached Him ("idem vero etiam latrones fecerunt, nempe ei conviciati sunt"). It seems simpler to take αὐτὸ as one of two accusatives, depending on ὠνείδιζον, αὐτόν following (the true reading) being the other. Vide Winer, § 32, 4.

Vv. 45-49. Darkness without and within (Mk. xv. 33-36, Lk. xxiii. 44-46).—Ver. 45. ἀπὸ δὲ ἕκτης ὥρας: three hours, according to Mark (ver. 25, cf. 33), after the crucifixion the darkness came on. This is the first reference in Matthew to a time of day. The definiteness of the statement in this respect seems to vouch for the historicity of the fact stated. Those who find in it legend or myth point to the Egyptian darkness, and prophetic texts such as Amos viii. 9, Joel ii. 20, etc. (none of which, however, are cited by the evangelist), as explaining the rise of the story. The cause of this darkness is unknown (vide notes on Mark). It could not, of course, be an eclipse of the sun at full moon. Origen saw this and explained the phenomenon by the hypothesis of dense masses of cloud hiding the sun. Others (Paulus, De Wette, etc.) have suggested a darkening such as is wont to precede an earthquake. To the evangelist the event probably appeared supernatural.—ἐπὶ π. τ. γῆν, Origen and many after him restrict the reference to Palestine. The fragment of the Gospel of Peter limits it to Judaea (πᾶσαν τ. Ἰουδαίαν). In the thought of the evangelist the expression had probably a wider though indefinite range of meaning, the whole earth (Weiss) or the whole Roman world (Grotius).—ἕως ὥ. ἐννάτης: the end as exactly indicated as the beginning, another sign of historicity. The fact stated probably interested the evangelist as an emblem of the spiritual eclipse next to be related.—Ver. 46. ἠλί, ἠλί, etc.: the opening words of Ps. xxii., but partly at least in Aramaic not in Hebrew, wholly so as they stand in Codex B (W.H.), ἐλωί, ἐλωί, etc., corresponding exactly to the version in Mark.—ἠλί, ἠλί, if the true reading in Matthew, seems to be an alteration made to suit what follows, whereby the utterance of Jesus becomes a mixture of Hebrew and Aramaic. It is not likely that Jesus would so express Himself. He would speak wholly either in Hebrew or in Aramaic, saying in the one case: "eli eli lamah asavtani"; in the other: "eloi eloi lema savachtani". The form the utterance assumed in the earliest evangelic report might be an important clue. This Resch finds in the reading of Codex D, which gives the words in Hebrew. Resch holds that D often preserves the readings of the Urevangelium, which, contrary to Weiss, he believes to have contained a Passion history in brief outline (Agrapha, p. 53). Brandt expresses a similar view (E. G., pp. 228-232). The probability is that Jesus spoke in Hebrew. It is no argument against this that the spectators might not understand what He said, for the utterance was not meant for the ears of men. The historicity of the occurrence has been called in question on the ground that one in a state of dire distress would not express his feelings in borrowed

50. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς πάλιν κράξας φωνῇ μεγάλῃ [b] ἀφῆκε τὸ [b] πνεῦμα. 51. Καὶ ἰδού, τὸ [c] καταπέτασμα τοῦ ναοῦ ἐσχίσθη εἰς δύο [1] ἀπὸ ἄνωθεν ἕως κάτω· καὶ ἡ γῆ ἐσείσθη, καὶ αἱ πέτραι ἐσχίσθησαν· 52. καὶ τὰ μνημεῖα ἀνεῴχθησαν, καὶ πολλὰ σώματα τῶν [d] κεκοιμημένων [e] ἁγίων ἠγέρθη,[2] 53. καὶ ἐξελθόντες ἐκ τῶν μνημείων, μετὰ τὴν ἔγερσιν αὐτοῦ, εἰσῆλθον εἰς τὴν ἁγίαν πόλιν, καὶ [f] ἐνεφανίσθησαν πολλοῖς.

b here only in N.T. (Gen. xxxv. 18).
c here in parall. and in Heb. vi. 19; ix. 3; x. 20.
d 1 Cor. xv. 18, 20. 1 Thess. iv. 13, 15 al.
e here only in Gospp.
f Heb. ix. 24 (pass. as here).

[1] εις δυο after κατω in BCL (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] ηγερθη is as usual the sing. to suit a neut. pl. nom. ηγερθησαν in ℵBDL.

phrases. The alternative is that the words were put into the mouth of Jesus by persons desirous that in this as in all other respects His experience should correspond to prophetic anticipations. But who would have the boldness to impute to Him a sentiment which seemed to justify the taunt: "Let Him deliver Him if He love Him"? Brandt's reply to this is: Jewish Christians who had not a high idea of Christ's Person (E. G., p. 245). That in some Christian circles the cry of desertion was an offence appears from the rendering of "eli eli" in Evang. Petri—ἡ δύναμίς μου ἡ δ. μ. = my strength, my strength. Its omission by Luke proves the same thing.—Ver. 47. τινὲς δὲ: not Roman soldiers, for they knew nothing about Elias; might be Hellenistic Jews who did not understand Hebrew or Aramaean (Grotius); more probably heartless persons who only affected to misunderstand. It was poor wit, and showed small capacity for turning to advantage the words spoken. How much more to the purpose to have said: Hear Him! He actually confesses that His God in Whom He trusted has forsaken Him.—Ver. 48. εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν, one of the bystanders, not one of the τινὲς, with some human pity, acting under the impression, how got not indicated, that the sufferer was afflicted with thirst.—ὄξους, sour wine, posca, the drink of Roman soldiers, with sponge and reed at hand, for use on such occasions.—Ver. 49. ἄφες: either redundant coalescing with ἴδωμεν = let us see (cf. chap. vii. 4), age videamus, Grotius (vide also Burton, M. T., § 161), or meaning: hold, stop, don't give Him the drink, let us see whether Elias will come (ἔρχεται, comes without fail) to help Him. The latter is the more probable. The λοιποὶ belong to the scoffing crew. The remainder of this verse about the spear thrust—another, final, act of mercy, though attested by important MSS., seems to be imported from John xix. 34. It is omitted in R. V.

Vv. 50-56. Death and its accompaniments (Mk. xv. 37-41, Lk. xxiii. 46-49).—Ver. 50. πάλιν, pointing back to the cry in ver. 46.—φωνῇ μεγάλῃ. The Fathers found in the loud cry a proof that Jesus died voluntarily, not from physical exhaustion. Some modern writers, on the contrary, regard the cry as the utterance of one dying of a ruptured heart (Dr. Stroud on The Physical Cause of Christ's Death; Hanna, The Last Day of Our Lord's Passion). Mt.'s narrative, like Mk.'s, gives the impression that the cry was inarticulate. Brandt recognises this cry as historical.—Ver. 51. καὶ ἰδού, introducing solemnly a series of preternatural accompaniments, all but the first peculiar to Mt.—τὸ καταπέτασμα, the veil between the holy place and the most holy.—ἐσχίσθη: this fact, the rending of the veil, is mentioned by all the Synoptists, though Lk. introduces it at an early point in the narrative. It might have happened, as a natural event, an accidental coincidence, though it is not so viewed by the evangelist. A symbolic fiction, according to Brandt. The legendary spirit took hold of this event, magnifying the miracle. In the Hebrew Gospel the rending of the veil is transformed into the fracture of the lintel of the temple: "Superliminare templi infinitae magnitudinis fractum esse atque divisum" (Jerome, Com.).—καὶ ἡ γῆ, etc.: an earthquake, preceding and conditioning the greatest marvel of all, the opening of the graves and the resurrection of many saints (vv. 52 and 53). We seem here to be in the region of Christian legend. Certainly the legendary spirit laid hold of this feature with great eager-

54. Ὁ δὲ ἑκατόνταρχος καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ τηροῦντες τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ἰδόντες τὸν σεισμὸν καὶ τὰ γενόμενα,[1] ἐφοβήθησαν σφόδρα, λέγοντες, "Ἀληθῶς Θεοῦ υἱὸς[2] ἦν οὗτος."

55. Ἦσαν δὲ ἐκεῖ γυναῖκες πολλαὶ ἀπὸ μακρόθεν θεωροῦσαι, αἵτινες ἠκολούθησαν τῷ Ἰησοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς Γαλιλαίας, διακονοῦσαι αὐτῷ· 56. ἐν αἷς ἦν Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνή, καὶ Μαρία ἡ τοῦ Ἰακώβου καὶ Ἰωσῆ μήτηρ, καὶ ἡ μήτηρ τῶν υἱῶν Ζεβεδαίου.

57. ΟΨΙΑΣ δὲ γενομένης, ἦλθεν ἄνθρωπος πλούσιος ἀπὸ Ἀριμαθαίας, τοὔνομα Ἰωσήφ, ὃς καὶ αὐτὸς ἐμαθήτευσε[3] τῷ Ἰησοῦ· 58. οὗτος προσελθὼν τῷ Πιλάτῳ, ᾐτήσατο τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ.

[1] γινομενα in BD. [2] BD have υιος θεου (W.H. in margin).

[3] So in BLΔ. ℵCD have εμαθητευθη, which, though adopted by Tisch and W.H. (text), may be suspected of assimilation to the form used in Chap. xiii. 52, xxviii. 19. Vide below.

ness, expanding and going into details, giving, e.g., the names of those who rose: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, etc. (Vide Evang. Nicod., c. 17, and The Acts of Pilate in Thilo's Codex Apocryphus, N. T., p. 810).—Ver. 53. μετὰ τὴν ἔγερσιν αὐτοῦ, after the raising (active) of Jesus (by God), i.e., after Christ's own resurrection: not after the raising (of them) by Him, as if αὐτοῦ were genitive subjective. So Fritzsche, who, however, brackets the phrase as a doubtful reading. ἔγερσιν occurs here only in N. T.—Ver. 54. ἑκατόνταρχος = κεντυρίων in Mk., the officer in charge of the detachment entrusted with the execution, not hitherto mentioned.—οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ, etc.: the whole military party make pious reflections in Mt.; in Mk., with more probability, the centurion only.—καὶ τὰ γινόμενα, and (generally) the things happening, the earthquake included. For a similar use of καὶ vide xxvi. 59.—υἱὸς θεοῦ: Lk. substitutes for this "a just man". In the centurion's mouth the words would mean more than that and less than the sense they bear for a Christian = a hero, an extraordinary man. Yet Lk.'s rendering is to the point, because the Roman soldier is conceived as seeing in the events the anger of the gods at the treatment of an innocent man.—Ver. 55. γυναῖκες, women, bolder than men, love casting out fear. Lk. associates with them others called οἱ γνωστοὶ αὐτῷ, His acquaintance, which might include the disciples. Though they fled panic-stricken they may have rallied and returned to see the end, either along with the women or mixed in the crowd, and so have become qualified afterwards for witnessing to what happened. It is no argument against this that no mention is made of them in the narratives. It is no part of the plan of the evangelists to indicate the sources of their information. The women are not mentioned for this purpose, but because they have a part to play in the sequel. If they had been introduced as witnesses it would not have been made so clear that they stood "afar off" (ἀπὸ μακρόθεν). In like manner that Peter followed his Master to the judgment hall is told, not that he may be available as a witness, but because there is a story of denial to relate about him.—πολλαί, many, a tribute to the impression made on feminine hearts by the Galilean ministry; for it was from Galilee they came, as the following clause states (αἵτινες, etc., defining them as women who knew Him well, loved Him warmly, and served Him devotedly).—Ver. 56. ἐν αἷς: three out of the many named, with a reference to the sequel, or as the best known. Mary of Magdala (first mention in Mt.), Mary, the mother of a well-known pair of brothers, and the mother of the sons of Zebedee (Salome in Mk.).

Vv. 57-66. Burial (Mk. xv. 42-47, Lk. xxiii. 50-56). ἦλθεν, etc., there came (to the place of crucifixion, the centre of interest in the preceding narrative) a man (unknown to readers), rich (this fact put in the forefront by Mt.—εὐσχήμων βουλευτής in Mk. On εὐσχήμων Phrynichus remarks that the vulgar take it as = rich, or in good social position, while the ancients took it as applying to the noble or symmetrical. Mt. may be following vulgar usage, but also with an eye to Is. liii. 9: "with the rich in τότε ὁ Πιλάτος ἐκέλευσεν ἀποδοθῆναι τὸ σῶμα.[1] 59. καὶ λαβὼν τὸ σῶμα ὁ Ἰωσὴφ [g] ἐνετύλιξεν αὐτὸ[2] σινδόνι καθαρᾷ, 60. καὶ ἔθηκεν αὐτὸ ἐν τῷ καινῷ αὐτοῦ μνημείῳ, ὃ [h] ἐλατόμησεν ἐν τῇ πέτρᾳ· καὶ προσκυλίσας λίθον μέγαν τῇ θύρᾳ τοῦ μνημείου, ἀπῆλθεν. 61. ἦν δὲ ἐκεῖ Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνή, καὶ ἡ ἄλλη Μαρία, καθήμεναι ἀπέναντι τοῦ τάφου.

62. ΤΗι δὲ [i] ἐπαύριον, ἥτις ἐστὶ μετὰ τὴν παρασκευήν, συνήχθησαν οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι πρὸς Πιλάτον, 63. λέγοντες, "Κύριε, ἐμνήσθημεν ὅτι ἐκεῖνος ὁ [j] πλάνος εἶπεν ἔτι ζῶν, Μετὰ τρεῖς ἡμέρας g here and in Lk. xxiii. 53. John xx. 7.

h Mk. xv. 46 (Ex. xxi. 33).
i Mk. xi. 12. John i. 29. Acts x. 9 al.
j 2 Cor. vi. 8. 1 Tim. iv. 1 (adj.). 2 John 7.

[1] ℵBL omit το σωμα (Tisch., W.H.).
[2] BD have εν before σινδονι (W.H. in brackets).

His death"); from Arimathaea (Ramathaim Zophim, 1 Sam. i. 1); the name Joseph, and the relation to Jesus that of a disciple (ἐμαθήτευσε, which, if the correct reading, is an instance of the use of this verb in a neuter sense. Cf. xiii. 52, xxviii. 19, Acts xiv. 21).—Ver. 58. προσελθὼν: from the cross Joseph returns, and approaches Pilate to beg the body of Jesus for burial. In the case of the crucified such a request was necessary, but was generally granted ("Eorum in quos animadvertitur corpora non aliter sepeliuntur quam si fuerit petitum et permissum". Ulpian. de Cadav. punit. in Justinian, Corpus Jur. Civ. xlviii. 24, 1). The general practice was to leave the bodies to waste. The privilege of burial was sometimes granted for money. There is nothing to show that Pilate condescended to such meanness, at least in the present instance, though Theophy. suggests that he did.—ἐκέλευσεν ἀποδοθῆναι, he ordered it to be delivered.—Ver. 59. ἐνετύλιξεν (little used, found in Aristophanes), wrapped.—σινδόνι καθαρᾷ, in clean, i.e., never before used linen.—σινδών is of uncertain derivation and varying sense, being applied to cloths of diverse material, but here generally understood as meaning linen cloth, wrapped in strips round the body as in the case of mummies in Egypt, the body being first washed (Acts ix. 37). As to this way of preparing dead bodies for burial we have no details in O. T. (Benzinger, p. 163).—Ver. 60. ἐν τῷ καινῷ αὐτοῦ μνημείῳ, in his own new tomb, recently prepared for himself. This not brought out in parallels.—ἐλατόμησεν (λᾶς τέμνω): the aorist for the pluperfect, as in ver. 55; he had hewn out of the rock = ἐν τῇ, πέτρᾳ, the article pointing to the custom of making sepulchres in rock.—λίθον μέγαν: the usual mode of shutting the door of the tomb; the Jews called the stone golal, the roller.—ἀπῆλθεν: the entombment over, Joseph went away; but the Dead One was not left alone.—Ver. 61. ἦν δὲ ἐκεῖ, etc., but, in contrast to Joseph, there was there Mary, the woman of Magdala, also the other Mary, sitting in front of the tomb.—τάφου here, as in xxiii. 27, 29, used of a place of burial, not of the act of burial. The word is peculiar to Mt. in the N. T.

Vv. 62-66. Precautions against theft of the body; peculiar to Mt., and among the less certain elements of the Passion history, owing its origin and presence in this Gospel apparently to the exigencies of the primitive Christian apologetic against Jewish unbelief, which, as we gather from ver. 64, must have sought to invalidate the faith in the resurrection of Jesus by the hypothesis of theft accounting for an empty grave. The transactions here recorded effectually dispose of that hypothesis by making theft impossible. Is the story true, or must we, with Meyer, relegate it to the category of unhistorical legend? Meyer founds largely on the impossibility of Christ predicting so distinctly as is here implied, even to His own disciples, His resurrection. That means that the priests and Pharisees could have had no such solicitude as is ascribed to them. All turns on that. If they had such fears, so originating, it would be quite natural to take precautions against a trick. I think it quite possible that even independently of the saying in chap. xii. 40, given as spoken to Pharisees, it had somehow reached their ears that Jesus had predicted His Passion, and in speaking of it was wont to connect with it the idea ἐγείρομαι. 64. κέλευσον οὖν [k] ἀσφαλισθῆναι τὸν τάφον ἕως τῆς τρίτης ἡμέρας· μήποτε ἐλθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ[1] νυκτὸς[2] κλέψωσιν αὐτόν, καὶ εἴπωσι τῷ λαῷ, Ἠγέρθη ἀπὸ τῶν νεκρῶν· καὶ ἔσται ἡ ἐσχάτη [l] πλάνη χείρων τῆς πρώτης." 65. Ἔφη δὲ[3] αὐτοῖς ὁ Πιλάτος, "Ἔχετε [m] κουστωδίαν· ὑπάγετε, ἀσφαλίσασθε ὡς οἴδατε." 66. Οἱ δὲ πορευθέντες ἠσφαλίσαντο τὸν τάφον, σφραγίσαντες τὸν λίθον μετὰ τῆς κουστωδίας.

k Acts xvi. 24.
l here only in Gospels, frequent in Epp.
m here and in Ch. xxviii. 11.

[1] ℵB omit αυτου, found in CDL al. (W.H. place it in margin).
[2] νυκτος wanting in many uncials (Tisch., W.H. omit).
[3] BL and other uncials omit δε (Tisch., W.H., in margin).

of rising again, and it was natural that at such a time they should not despise such reports.

Ver. 62. τῇ ἐπαύριον, the next day, i.e., the Jewish Sabbath, curiously described as the day (ἥτις) μετὰ τὴν παρασκευήν, the more important day defined by reference to the less important, suggesting that Mt. has his eye on Mk.'s narrative (xv. 42). So Weiss-Meyer.—Ver. 63. ἐκεῖνος: contemptuous reference, as to one not worthy to be named, and far off, a thing of the past removed for ever by death.—ὁ πλάνος: a wanderer in the first place, then derivatively, from the character of many wanderers, in N. T. a deceiver.—ἐγείρομαι, present for future, expressing strong confidence.—Ver. 64. ἕως τ. τρίτης ἡμέρας: the definite specification of time here and in ver. 63 may have been imported into the story in the course of the tradition.—ἡ ἐσχάτη πλάνη, the last delusion = faith in the resurrection, belief in the Messiahship of Jesus being the first.—χείρων, worse, not so much in character as in consequences, more serious.—Ver. 65. ἔχετε: probably imperative, not indicative = have your watch, the ready assent of a man who thinks there is not likely to be much need for it, but has no objections to gratify their wish in a small matter. So most recent interpreters—Meyer, Weiss, Holtz., Weizsäcker, Morison, Spk., Com., Alford. The Vulgate takes it as indicative = habetis, which Schanz follows. This rendering implies that Pilate wished them to be content with what they had already, either their own temple watch or soldiers already put at their disposal. Carr (Camb. N. T.) doubts the correctness of the modern interpretation on the ground that no clear example of the use of ἔχειν in the sense of "to take" occurs in either classical or Hellenistic Greek.—κουστωδίαν, a guard, a Latinism, a natural word for the Roman Pilate to use.—ὑπάγετε ἀσφαλίσασθε, the three verbs: ἔχ. ὑπάγ. ἀσφαλ., following each other without connecting particles form an asyndeton "indicating impatience on the part of Pilate" (Camb. N. T.).—ὡς οἴδατε, as ye know how.—Ver. 66. ἠσφαλίσαντο is to be taken with the last clause.—μετὰ τῆς κουστωδίας, which points to the main means of securing the tomb against plunder. The participial clause.—σφραγίσαντες τὸν λίθον—is a parenthesis pointing to an additional precaution, sealing the stone, with a thread over it and sealed to the tomb at either end. The worthy men did their best to prevent theft, and—the resurrection!

Chapter XXVIII. The Resurrection and the Great Commission.

Vv. 1-10. The open grave (Mk. xvi. 1-8, Lk. xxiv. 1-11).—Ver. 1. ὀψὲ . . . . σαββάτων, a curious and puzzling note of time, inconsistent with itself if translated "late on Sabbath, towards daybreak on the first day of the week," and on the assumption that the day is supposed to begin and end at sunset. That would give, as the time at which the events to be narrated happened, the afternoon of one day and the early morning of the next. Of course the two clauses are meant to coincide in meaning, and a way out of the difficulty must be sought. One is to take ὀψὲ as = post, after the Sabbath, or late in comparison with the Sabbath, σαββάτων in clause 1 being in effect a genitive of comparison. So Euthy. and Grotius, who take σαββ. as = the whole passover week, De Wette, Weizsäcker, etc. Another is to take ὀψὲ as = not later than, but late on, and to assume that the day is conceived to begin and end with sunrise according to the civil mode of reckoning. So Kypke, Meyer, Weiss, Morison. Authorities are divided as to a Lk. xxiii. 54, vide notes there.

b here only in N.T. (Gen. v. 3).

XXVIII. 1. ΌΨΕ δὲ σαββάτων, τῇ [a] ἐπιφωσκούσῃ εἰς μίαν σαββάτων, ἦλθε Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνή, καὶ ἡ ἄλλη Μαρία, θεωρῆσαι τὸν τάφον. 2. Καὶ ἰδού, σεισμὸς ἐγένετο μέγας· ἄγγελος γὰρ Κυρίου καταβὰς ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, προσελθὼν [1] ἀπεκύλισε τὸν λίθον ἀπὸ τῆς θύρας,[2] καὶ ἐκάθητο ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ. 3. ἦν δὲ ἡ [b] ἰδέα αὐτοῦ ὡς ἀστραπή, καὶ τὸ ἔνδυμα αὐτοῦ λευκὸν ὡσεὶ [3] χιών. 4. ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ φόβου αὐτοῦ ἐσείσθησαν οἱ τηροῦντες, καὶ ἐγένοντο [4] ὡσεὶ [3] νεκροί. 5. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ ἄγγελος εἶπε ταῖς γυναιξί, "Μὴ φοβεῖσθε ὑμεῖς· οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι Ἰησοῦν τὸν ἐσταυρωμένον ζητεῖτε. 6. οὐκ ἔστιν ὧδε· ἠγέρθη γάρ, καθὼς εἶπε. δεῦτε, ἴδετε τὸν τόπον ὅπου

[1] και before προσελθων in ℵBCL.

[2] ℵBD omit απο της θυρας (so Tisch. and W.H.).

[3] ℵBD have ως here, and with these LΔ in end of ver. 4.

[4] εγενηθησαν in ℵBCDL.

Greek usage, Meyer and Weiss, e.g., contending that ὀψὲ always means lateness of the period specified, and still current. Holtzmann, H. C., remarks that only from the second clause do we learn that by the first is not meant the evening of the Sabbath, but the end of the night following, conceived as still belonging to the Sabbath.—τῇ ἐπιφωσκούσῃ, supply ἡμέρᾳ or ὥρᾳ.—εἰς μίαν. σ., towards day one of the week (Sabbath in first clause). —ἦλθε, came, singular though more than one concerned, as in xxvii. 56, 61. Mary of Magdala, evidently the heroine among the women.—θεωρῆσαι τ. τ., to see the sepulchre; no word of anointing, that being excluded by the story of the watch. —Ver. 2. The particulars in this and the following two verses are peculiar to Mt.: first, an earthquake (σεισμὸς), as in xxvii. 51; second, an angel descending from heaven; third, the angel rolling away the stone; fourth, the angel sitting on the stone as guard.—Ver. 3. ἰδέα (here only in N. T.; in Sept., Dan. i. 13, 15), the appearance, aspect (of the countenance of the angel). Vide Trench, Syn., p. 262, on μορφή, σχῆμα, ἰδέα.—ὡς ἀστραπὴ (xxiv. 27), as lightning—brilliant, dazzling.—τὸ ἔνδυμα α., his raiment as distinct from his face—ὡς χιών, white as snow (cf. Mt. xvii. 2).—Ver. 4. ὡς νεκροί: the keepers, through fear of the angel, were shaken as by an earthquake, and became as dead men—stupefied, helpless, totally incapacitated for action by way of preventing what is assumed, though not directly stated, to have happened. The resurrection is not described.

Vv. 5-7. The angel speaks to the women.—μὴ φοβεῖσθε ὑμεῖς, fear not ye, with tacit reference to the guards.—οἶδα γὰρ: γὰρ gives a reason for the soothing tone of the address. The angel recognises them as friends of the crucified.—Ver. 6. οὐκ ἔστιν, etc.: with what sublime simplicity and brevity is the amazing story told! "Versus hic incisa habet perquam apta" (Beng.). The last clause is better without the epithet ὁ κύριος, more in keeping with the rest. Bengel calls it gloriosa appellatio, but, as Meyer remarks, just on that account it was more liable to be added than omitted.—Ver. 7. ταχὺ πορευθεῖσαι: introducing "quite in his own (the evangelist's) manner of expression" (Weiss) the command of the angel = go quickly and tell, etc.—προάγει: present; He is even now going before you into Galilee; in accordance with the prediction in xxvi. 32 the risen Shepherd is on His way to the pre-appointed rendezvous.—ὄψεσθε, there shall ye see Him, and be able to satisfy yourselves that He is indeed risen. With this word ends the message to the disciples.—ἰδοὺ εἶπον ὑμῖν, behold I said it to you = note what I say, and see if it do not come true. Mark has καθὼς εἶπεν ὑμῖν = as He said to you, referring to the promise of Jesus, and forming part of the message to the disciples.

Vv. 8-10. Appearance of Jesus to the women on the way to deliver their message.—Ver. 8. ἀπελθοῦσαι: the reading of T. R. (ἐξελθ.) implies that they had been within the tomb, of which no mention is made in Matthew. They went away from, not out of, the tomb.—

ἔκειτο ὁ Κύριος.[1] 7. καὶ ταχὺ πορευθεῖσαι εἴπατε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, ὅτι ἠγέρθη ἀπὸ τῶν νεκρῶν· καὶ ἰδού, προάγει ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν· ἐκεῖ αὐτὸν ὄψεσθε. ἰδού, εἶπον ὑμῖν." 8. Καὶ ἐξελθοῦσαι[2] ταχὺ ἀπὸ τοῦ μνημείου μετὰ φόβου καὶ χαρᾶς μεγάλης, ἔδραμον ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ. 9. ὡς δὲ ἐπορεύοντο ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ,[3] καὶ ἰδού, ὁ[4] Ἰησοῦς ἀπήντησεν[5] αὐταῖς, λέγων, "Χαίρετε." Αἱ δὲ προσελθοῦσαι ἐκράτησαν αὐτοῦ τοὺς πόδας, καὶ προσεκύνησαν αὐτῷ. 10. τότε λέγει αὐταῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς· "Μὴ φοβεῖσθε· ὑπάγετε, ἀπαγγείλατε τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς μου, ἵνα ἀπέλθωσιν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, κἀκεῖ με ὄψονται."

[1] ℵB 33 omit ο κυριος (W.H. relegate to margin).

[2] απελθουσαι in ℵBCL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] From ως δ. επορ. to αυτου is omitted in ℵBD 33, 69 and many versions, and left out by modern editors. The passage may have fallen out by similar ending (αυτου—αυτου).

[4] ℵBCDLΔ omit ο.

[5] ℵBC have υπηντησεν.

ἀπὸ τ. μν., depending on ἀπελθοῦσαι, in Mark on ἔφυγον.—μετὰ φόβου καὶ χαρᾶς μεγάλης, with fear and great joy. This union of apparently opposite emotions is true to human nature. All powerful tides of gladness cause nervous thrills that feel like fear and trembling. Cf. Isaiah lx. 5 and Phil. ii. 12. The fear and trembling St. Paul speaks of is the result of an exhilarating consciousness of having a great solemn work in hand —a race to run, a prize to win.—Ver. 9. καὶ ἰδοὺ, and behold, another surprise (ver. 2). They are on the way to tell the disciples that they are to be favoured with a meeting in Galilee, and lo they are privileged to meet the risen One themselves.—ὑπήντησεν, cf. chap. viii. 34, xxv. 1-6.—ἐκράτησαν, etc., they took hold of His feet and cast themselves before Him; the gesture befitting the circumstances, an unlooked-for meeting with one who has been crucified and whose aspect is greatly changed. Impossible to resume the old familiar relations as if nothing had happened.—Ver. 10. μὴ φοβεῖσθε: kindly in word and tone, meant to remove the embarrassment visible in their manner.—ὑπάγετε, ἀπαγγείλατε, another asyndeton as in xxvii. 65. The instructions to the women simply repeat, in much the same words, those given by the angel (ver. 7), with the exception that the disciples are spoken of by the kindly name of "brethren".

The similarity of vv. 9, 10 to John xx. 14-18 has been remarked on (vide Weiss, Meyer, on ver. 9). It has been lately commented on in connection with the theory of a "four-gospel Canon" prepared by the Presbyters of Asia Minor in the beginning of the second century. Vide Der Schluss des Marcus-Evangeliums der Vier-Evangelien-Kanon und die Kleinasiatischen Presbyter, by Dr. Paul Rohrbach. Rohrbach's idea is that when this Canon was prepared the editors altered more or less the statements of the Synoptists as to the visions of the Risen Christ so as to bring them somewhat into harmony with those of the fourth Gospel. For this purpose Mark's original ending was cancelled and the present one, vv. 9-20, put in its place. The editorial procedure in the case of Matthew consisted in inserting vv. 9, 10 in the narrative, thus providing for at least one vision in Jerusalem, and making room for more, and so cancelling the impression otherwise produced that Jesus was seen only in Galilee. In support of the view that vv. 9, 10 are an editorial addition at a later date Rohrbach adduces the fact that the narrative has an appearance of continuity when they are omitted, and also that the instructions of Jesus to the women are a mere echo of those given by the angel.

Vv. 11-15. The guards and the priests.—Ver. 11. πορευομένων δὲ α., while the women go on their errand, the guards, crestfallen, play their poor part. Some of them (τινὲς) go into the city and report in their own way to the priests all that has happened.—Ver. 13. ἀργύρια:

11. Πορευομένων δὲ αὐτῶν, ἰδού, τινὲς τῆς κουστωδίας ἐλθόντες εἰς τὴν πόλιν ἀπήγγειλαν τοῖς ἀρχιερεῦσιν ἅπαντα τὰ γενόμενα. 12. καὶ συναχθέντες μετὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, συμβούλιόν τε λαβόντες, ἀργύρια ἱκανὰ ἔδωκαν τοῖς στρατιώταις, 13. λέγοντες, "Εἴπατε, Ὅτι οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ νυκτὸς ἐλθόντες ἔκλεψαν αὐτὸν ἡμῶν κοιμωμένων, 14. καὶ ἐὰν ἀκουσθῇ τοῦτο ἐπὶ[1] τοῦ ἡγεμόνος, ἡμεῖς πείσομεν αὐτόν,[2] καὶ ὑμᾶς [c] ἀμερίμνους ποιήσομεν." 15. Οἱ δὲ λαβόντες τὰ[3] ἀργύρια ἐποίησαν ὡς ἐδιδάχθησαν. καὶ διεφημίσθη ὁ λόγος οὗτος παρὰ Ἰουδαίοις μέχρι τῆς σήμερον.[4] c 1 Cor. vii. 32 (Wisdom vi. 16; vii. 23).

16. Οἱ δὲ ἕνδεκα μαθηταὶ ἐπορεύθησαν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, εἰς τὸ

[1] BD have υπο instead of επι (W.H. in margin), probably because ηκουσθη was understood in the usual sense. Vide below.

[2] ℵB omit αυτον. [3] ℵB omit τα, which W.H. relegate to the margin.

[4] BDL vulg. add ημερας (W.H. in brackets), which just because it is unusual is probably genuine (Tisch. omits).

the holy men thoroughly understand the power of money; silver pieces, shekels are meant.—ἱκανὰ probably means here a considerable number, not a number sufficient to bribe the soldiers (Meyer and Weiss). They gave with a free hand. This sense of ἱκανός is frequent in the N. T. Vide, e.g., Mk. x. 46, of the crowd following Jesus at Jericho, and Acts xxvii. 9 (of time).—Ver. 13. εἴπατε, introducing the lie they put into the mouths of the soldiers. The report to be set abroad assumes that there is a fact to be explained, the disappearance of the body. And it is implied that the statement to be given out as to that was known by the soldiers to be false: i.e., they were perfectly aware that they had not fallen asleep at their post and that no theft had taken place. The lie for which the priests paid so much money is suicidal; one half destroys the other. Sleeping sentinels could not know what happened.—Ver. 14. ἐὰν ἀκουσθῇ, either: if this come to the ears of, etc., as in A. V., or: if this come to a hearing, a trial, before, etc., as in R. V. margin. The latter is preferred by many modern commentators. The reading ἐπὶ τ. ἡ. suits the second sense best. Cf. 1 Cor. vi. 1, 1 Tim. v. 19.—ἡμεῖς, emphatic, implying a great idea of their influence, on their part.—πείσομεν, will persuade him; how not said, money conceivably in their minds. Kypke renders: will appease; so also Loesner ("aliquem pacare vel precibus vel donis"), citing examples from Philo. The ordinary punishment for falling asleep on the watch was death. Could soldiers be persuaded by any amount of money to run such a risk? Of course they might take the money and go away laughing at the donors, meaning to tell their general the truth. Could the priests expect anything else? If not, could they propose the project seriously? The story has its difficulties.—ἀμερίμνους, free from grounds of anxiety; guaranteed against all possible unpleasant consequences. Bengel's comment on this verse is: "Quam laboriosum bellum mendacii contra veritatem!"—Ver. 15. This verse states that the soldiers did as instructed, so originating a theft theory, which, according to our evangelist, was current in his day at the time he wrote in Jewish circles.

Vv. 16-20. The meeting in Galilee, peculiar to Mt.—Ver. 16. οἱ δὲ ἕνδεκα μ., the eleven, not merely to discount Judas, but to indicate that what follows concerns the well-known Twelve (minus one), the future Apostles of the faith.—εἰς τὸ ὄρος, to the mountain, a more specific indication of the locality than any previously reported. Conjectures have been made as to the mountain meant, e.g., that on which the hill teaching was communicated. An interesting suggestion but unverifiable.—οὗ, an adverb = ubi, used pregnantly so as to include quo: whither Jesus had bid them go, and where He wished them to remain.—ἐτάξατο: if this points to an instruction given expressly by Jesus, it is strange that the evangelist has not recorded it. It rather seems to presuppose an understanding based on experiences of the Galilean ministry as to the rendezvous.

ὄρος οὗ ἐτάξατο αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς. 17. καὶ ἰδόντες αὐτόν, προσεκύνησαν αὐτῷ[1]· οἱ δὲ ἐδίστασαν. 18. καὶ προσελθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐλάλησεν αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Ἐδόθη μοι πᾶσα ἐξουσία [d] ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ [d] ἐπὶ[2] γῆς. 19. πορευθέντες οὖν[3] μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, d Ch. vi. 10; xvi. 19; xviii. 18 (similar phrases).

[1] ℵBD 33 it. omit αυτω.

[2] επι γης in ℵΑΔΣ al. (Tisch.). επι της γης in BD (W.H in brackets).

[3] ουν in ΒΔΠΣ, verss. (W.H.). ℵA and other uncials omit (Tisch.).

The meeting place would be some familiar haunt, recalling many past associations and incidents, only imperfectly recorded in the Gospels. If there was such a retreat among the mountains often resorted to, it would doubtless be the scene of the hill teaching, as well as of other unrecorded disciple experiences. The disciples would need no express direction to go there. Instinct would guide them.—Ver. 17. A very meagre statement, the whole interest of the evangelist being absorbed by the words spoken by Jesus.—προσεκύνησαν as in ver. 9, but the men less demonstrative than the women; no mention of seizing Jesus by the feet.—οἱ δὲ ἐδίστασαν: but some doubted (cf. xiv. 31, in reference to Peter). This clause seems to qualify and limit the previous statement as to the worshipping, giving this sense: they worshipped, i.e., the most of them, for some were in doubt. So Meyer, who cites in support Klotz, Ad Devar, whose statement is to the effect that in passages of this kind containing a clause with δὲ without a μέν preceding, a universal affirmation is first made and then a division follows, which shows that a universal affirmation was not really intended (p. 358). Various methods have been adopted to get rid of the unwelcome conclusion that some of the eleven did not do homage, e.g., by taking ἐδίστασαν as a pluperfect (Fritzsche, Grotius), or by finding the doubters among the 500 mentioned by St. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 6), or even by altering the text οἱ δὲ into οὐδέ (Beza). The whole narrative is so brief and vague as to lend support to the hypothesis that in the appearance of Jesus here recorded we have not one particular occurrence, but a general picture of the Christophanies, in which mingled conflicting feelings of reverent recognition and hesitation as to the identity of the person played their part. Such is the view of Keil, Steinmeyer, and Holtzmann (H. C.).

Vv. 18-20. The final commission.—Ver. 18. προσελθὼν, approaching; the speech of Jesus is majestic, but His bearing is friendly, meant to set them free from doubt and fear.—ἐλάλησε: this may seem a word not sufficiently dignified for the communication made. But it is often used, especially in Hebrews, in reference to divine revelations (vide, e.g., chap. i. 1).—ἐδόθη μοι, there was given to me; the aorist as in xi. 27, the thought of which earlier text this utterance reiterates and amplifies. The reference may be to the resurrection, and the meaning that that event ipso facto placed Jesus in a position of power. Cf. Rom. i. 4.—πᾶσα ἐξουσία, every form of authority; command of all means necessary for the advancement of the Kingdom of God.—ἐν οὐρανῷ: this points to session on His celestial throne at the right hand of God. Jesus speaks as one already in heaven. There is no account of the ascension in Mt. It is conceived as involved in the resurrection.—ἐπὶ γῆς: upon earth, the whole earth. The two phrases together point to a universal cosmic dominion. But so far as earth is concerned, the dominion is only a matter of right or theory, a problem to be worked out. Hence what follows.—Ver. 19. πορευθέντες οὖν: the οὖν omitted in many texts aptly expresses the connection. The commission to the Apostles arises out of the power claimed = all power has been given to me on earth, go ye therefore, and make the power a reality.—μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη: make disciples (act., cf. at xxvii. 57) of all the nations (cf. x. 5, "go not into the way of the Gentiles").—βαπτίσαντες: baptism the condition of discipleship = make disciples by baptising; the sole condition, circumcision, and everything particularistic or Judaistic tacitly negatived. Christian baptism referred to here only in this Gospel.—αὐτοὺς refers to ἔθνη, a constr. ad sensum, as in Acts xv. 17; Rom. ii. 14. In the anabaptist controversy αὐτοὺς was taken βαπτίζοντες[1] αὐτοὺς [e] εἰς τὸ [e] ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ καὶ τοῦ Ἁγίου Πνεύματος, 20. διδάσκοντες αὐτοὺς [f] τηρεῖν πάντα ὅσα ἐνετειλάμην ὑμῖν· καὶ ἰδού, ἐγὼ μεθ' ὑμῶν εἰμι πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας ἕως τῆς [g] συντελείας τοῦ [g] αἰῶνος. Ἀμήν."[2] e Acts viii. 16; xix. 5. Rom. vi. 3. 1 Cor. i. 13; x. 2. Gal. iii. 27 (all with εις and accus.). f vide at Ch. xix. 17. g vide at Ch. xiii. 39.

[1] βαπτισαντες in BD (W.H. margin). βαπτιζοντες (T.R., W.H., text). The reading of T.R. (ℵΔΣ) is probably a conformation to διδασκοντες in next clause.

[2] The Αμην is not found in ℵABD 1, 33, and is left out by modern editors.

by the opponents of infant baptism as referring to μαθητὰς in μαθητεύσατε, and the verb was held to mean "teach". For some references to this extinct controversy vide Wetstein, ad loc., and Hermann's Viger, p. 61.—εἰς τὸ ὄνομα, into the name, i.e., as confessing the name which embodies the essence of the Christian creed.—τοῦ πατρὸς, etc.: it is the name not of one but of three, forming a baptismal Trinity—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. It is not said into the names of, etc., nor into the name of the Father, and the name of the Son, and the name of the Holy Ghost—whence might be deduced the idea of a Trinity constituting at the same time a Divine Unity. But this would probably be reading more into the words than was intended.—Ver. 20. διδάσκοντες α., teaching them, present participle, implying that Christian instruction is to be a continuous process, not subordinate to and preparing for baptism, but continuing after baptism with a view to enabling disciples to walk worthily of their vocation.—τηρεῖν: the teaching is with a view not to gnosis but to practice; the aim not orthodox opinion but right living.—πάντα ὅσα ἐνετειλάμην ὑμῖν: the materials of instruction are to be Christ's own teaching. This points to the desirableness for the Church's use of an oral or written tradition of Christ's words: these to be the rule of faith and practice.—καὶ ἰδοὺ, introducing an important promise to the missionaries of the new universal religion to keep them in courage and good hope amid all difficulties.—ἐγὼ μεθ' ὑμῶν, I the Risen, Exalted, All-powerful One, with you my apostles and representatives engaged in the heroic task of propagating the faith.—εἰμί, am, not will be, conveying the feeling of certainty, but also spoken from the eternal point of view, sub specie aeternitatis, for which distinctions of here and there, now and then, do not exist. Cf. John viii. 58, "before Abraham was I am". In the Fourth Gospel the categories of the Absolute and the Eternal dominate throughout. — πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας, all the days, of which, it is implied, there may be many; the vista of the future is lengthening.—ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, until the close of the current age, when He is to come again; an event, however, not indispensable for the comfort of men who are to enjoy an uninterrupted spiritual presence.

This great final word of Jesus is worthy of the Speaker and of the situation. Perhaps it is not to be taken as an exact report of what Jesus said to His disciples at a certain time and place. In it the real and the ideal seem to be blended; what Jesus said there and then with what the Church of the apostolic age had gradually come to regard as the will of their Risen Lord, with growing clearness as the years advanced, with perfect clearness after Israel's crisis had come. We find here (1) a cosmic significance assigned to Christ (all power in heaven and on earth); (2) an absolutely universal destination of the Gospel; (3) baptism as the rite of admission to discipleship; (4) a rudimentary baptismal Trinity; (5) a spiritual presence of Christ similar to that spoken of in the Fourth Gospel. To this measure of Christian enlightenment the Apostolic Church, as represented by our evangelist, had attained when he wrote his Gospel, probably after the destruction of Jerusalem. Therein is summed up the Church's confession of faith conceived as uttered by the lips of the Risen One. "Expressly not as words of Jesus walking on the earth, but as words of Him who appeared from heaven, the evangelist here presents in summary form what the Christian community had come to recognise as the will and the promise of their exalted Lord" (Weiss-Meyer).

ΤΟ ΚΑΤΑ ΜΑΡΚΟΝ

ΑΓΙΟΝ ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ.

I. 1. ἈΡΧΗ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ[1]· 2. ὡς[2] γέγραπται ἐν τοῖς προφήταις,[3] "Ἰδού ἐγὼ[4] ἀποστέλλω τὸν ἄγγελόν μου πρὸ προσώπου σου, ὃς κατασκευάσει τὴν ὁδόν

[1] The title υιου τ. Θ. is wanting in ℵ and omitted by Tisch. and W.H. (in text). Most uncials and many verss. have it. Its omission is probably due to similar ending. BDL omit του.

[2] καθως in ℵBLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] For εν τοις π. in many uncials ℵBDLΔ 33, Lat. and Syr. verss., have εν τω Ισαια τω π. The T.R. is a gram. cor.

[4] εγω is in ℵLΔΣ (Tisch.), but wanting in BD (W.H.).

Chapter I. The Baptist. The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus. Beginnings of the Galilean Ministry.—Vv. 1-8. The appearance and ministry of the Baptist (Mt. iii. 1-12, Lk. iii. 1-18).—Ver. 1. ἀρχὴ, etc.: This verse may best be taken as the superscription of the whole Gospel, and as meaning: Here begins the Gospel concerning Jesus Christ the Son of God. So viewed it should be made to stand apart, ver. 2 beginning a new section as in the Greek Testament of W. and H. If we connect ver. 1 closely with vv. 2-4 it will contain the statement that the Gospel of Jesus Christ began with the ministry of the Baptist. On this view the connection of the sentences may be taken in two ways: either ver. 1 may be joined closely to ver. 2, the resulting sense being: the beginning of the Gospel (was) as it is written = was in accordance with the prophetic oracle predicting the introduction of Messiah by a forerunner, the story of the Baptist then following as the fulfilment of the prophecy; or vv. 2, 3 may be bracketed as a parenthesis, and ver. 1 connected with ver. 4, yielding this sense: the beginning of the Gospel was or became (ἐγένετο) John the Baptist. All three ways give a perfectly good meaning. In favour of the first view is the absence of the article before ἀρχὴ, against it has been alleged (Holtzmann, H. C.) that καθὼς in Matthew and Mark always connects with what goes before, never introduces a protasis as in Lk. vi. 31.—τοῦ εὐαγγελίου Ἰ. Χ., the good news concerning, not preached by, Ἰ. Χ. being genitive objective; not quite the evangelic record, but on its way to that final meaning of εὐαγγέλιον. "Christ" here appears as a proper name, as in Mt. i. 1.—υἱοῦ τ. Θεοῦ: this title, even if omitted, is implicit in the title Christ, but it is every way likely to have formed a part of the original text, as indicating the point of view in which Jesus is to be presented to readers of the Gospel. Without assuming any acquaintance on the part of the evangelist with the Gospel of the Infancy in Matthew and Luke we may say that this title takes the place of the opening chapters in these Gospels. It is all that Mark offers to gratify the curiosity to which these chapters owe their origin. Who is this remarkable Personage of whom you write? He is "the Son of God". How much that was meant to convey cannot be certainly determined.

Vv. 2-4. καθὼς introduces a prophetic σου ἔμπροσθέν σου.[1] 3. Φωνὴ βοῶντος ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, "Ἑτοιμάσατε τὴν ὁδὸν Κυρίου· εὐθείας ποιεῖτε τὰς τρίβους αὐτοῦ." 4. Ἐγένετο Ἰωάννης[2] βαπτίζων ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, καὶ[3] κηρύσσων βάπτισμα μετανοίας εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν. 5. καὶ ἐξεπορεύετο πρὸς αὐτὸν πᾶσα ἡ Ἰουδαία χώρα, καὶ οἱ Ἱεροσολυμῖται· καὶ ἐβαπτίζοντο πάντες[4] ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ ποταμῷ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ,[5] ἐξομολογούμενοι τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν. 6. ἦν δὲ[6] Ἰωάννης[6] ἐνδεδυμένος τρίχας καμήλου, καὶ ζώνην δερματίνην περὶ τὴν ὀσφὺν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐσθίων[7] ἀκρίδας καὶ μέλι ἄγριον. 7. Καὶ ἐκήρυσσε, λέγων, "Ἔρχεται ὁ ἰσχυρότερός μου ὀπίσω μου, οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς [a]κύψας λῦσαι τὸν

[a] John viii. 6, 8.

[1] εμπροσθεν σου omitted in ℵBDL al. It is probably from Mt. xi. 10.
[2] ο before βαπτιζων in ℵBLΔ (Tisch., Trg., W.H.).
[3] και in ℵDL al. (Tisch.), but wanting in 13, 33 al. (W.H. omit).
[4] παντες before και εβαπ. in ℵBDLΔ. [5] υπ αυτου before εν τω Ι. in ℵBL 33.
[6] και ην in ℵBL 33, and ο before Ι. in ℵBLΣ. [7] εσθων in ℵBLΔ 33.

citation as protasis to the historical statement about John in ver. 4 = in accordance with, etc., John appeared. The prophetic reference and the historical statement are given in inverse order in Matthew.—ἐν τῷ Ἡσαΐᾳ, in Isaiah, the actual quotation being from Isaiah and Malachi (ver. 2) conjointly. An inaccuracy doubtless, but not through an error of memory (Meyer and Weiss), but through indifference to greater exactness, the quotation from Isaiah being what chiefly occupied the mind. It is something analogous to attraction in grammar. It is Mark's only prophetic citation on his own account.—ἰδοὺ begins the quotation from Mal. iii. 1, given as in Mt. xi. 10, with μου, after προσώπου and ὁδόν, changed into σου.—Ver. 3. Quotation from Is. xl. 3 as in Mt. iii. 3.—Ver. 4. ἐγένετο Ἰ.: in accordance with, and in fulfilment of, these prophetic anticipations, appeared John.—ὁ βαπτίζων = the Baptist (substantive participle), that the function by which he was best known. — εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν: this clause (in Luke, not in Matthew) may plausibly be represented as a Christianised version of John's baptism (Weiss), but of course John's preaching and baptism implied that if men really repented they would be forgiven (Holtz., H. C.).

Vv. 5-8. Ver. 5 describes the widespread character of the movement much as in Mt., only that Judaea comes before Jerusalem, and the district of the Jordan is not mentioned.—Ver. 6 describes John's way of life as in Mt., ἐνδεδυμένος standing for εἶχεν τὸ ἔνδυμα, and ἔσθων for ἡ τροφὴ ἦν.—Ver. 7. καὶ ἐκήρυσσεν, introducing a special and very important part of his kerygma: inter alia he kept saying—anxious to prevent men from forming a wrong impression of his position. This is what makes mention of his ministry relevant in the evangelic record.—λῦσαι τὸν ἱμάντα, to loose the latchet of, instead of τὰ ὑποδ. βαστάσαι; a stronger expression of subordination, practically the same idea.—Ver. 8. πνεύματι ἁγίῳ: καὶ πυρί omitted, whereby the view presented of Messiah's function becomes less judicial, more Christian. Mt.'s account here is truer to John's conception of the Messiah. Mk.'s was probably influenced by the destination of his Gospel for Gentile readers.

Vv. 9-11. The baptism of Jesus (Mt. iii. 13-17; Lk. iii. 21, 22).—Ver. 9. ἐν ἐκείναις τ. ἡ. = in those days; an indefinite note of time = while John was carrying on his ministry of preaching and baptising.—ἦλθεν Ἰησοῦς, came Jesus, with what feelings, as compared with Pharisees and Sadducees, vide notes on Mt.—ἀπὸ Ναζ. τ. Γαλ., from Nazareth, presumably His home; of Galilee, to define the part of the country for outsiders; only Galilee mentioned in Mt.—εἰς τὸν Ἰ.: ἐν with dative in ver. 5. The expression is pregnant, the idea of descending into the river being latent in εἰς.—ὑπὸ Ἰωαν., by John; no hesitation indicated; cf. remarks on three synoptical narratives on this point in Mt. It does b here. Lk. iii. 16. John i. 29 (Acts xxii. 28 of thongs to bind prisoners).

[b] ἱμάντα τῶν ὑποδημάτων αὐτοῦ. 8. ἐγὼ μὲν[1] ἐβάπτισα ὑμᾶς ἐν[2] ὕδατι· αὐτὸς δὲ βαπτίσει ὑμᾶς ἐν[2] Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ." 9. Καὶ[3] ἐγένετο ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις, ἦλθεν Ἰησοῦς ἀπὸ Ναζαρὲτ τῆς Γαλιλαίας, καὶ ἐβαπτίσθη ὑπὸ Ἰωάννου εἰς τὸν Ἰορδάνην.[4] 10. καὶ εὐθέως[5] ἀναβαίνων ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕδατος, εἶδε σχιζομένους τοὺς οὐρανούς, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα ὡσεὶ[6] περιστερὰν καταβαῖνον ἐπ'[7] αὐτόν· 11. καὶ φωνὴ ἐγένετο ἐκ τῶν οὐρανῶν, "Σὺ εἶ ὁ υἱός μου ὁ ἀγαπητός, ἐν ᾧ[8] εὐδόκησα." 12. Καὶ εὐθὺς τὸ Πνεῦμα αὐτὸν [c] ἐκβάλλει εἰς τὴν ἔρημον. 13. καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ[9] ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα,[10] πειραζόμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ Σατανᾶ, καὶ ἦν μετὰ τῶν θηρίων· καὶ οἱ ἄγγελοι διηκόνουν αὐτῷ.

c cf. in Mt. ix. 38. John x. 4.

[1] ℵBL 33, 69 verss. omit μεν, doubtless a gram. cor. to answer to δε.

[2] The first εν not in ℵBΔ cursives, the second not in BL (Tisch. omits first, W.H. both).

[3] B omits και (W.H. in margin).

[4] εις τον Ι. υπο Ιω. in ℵBDL 33, 69 al.

[5] The best texts have ευθυς uniformly in Mk.

[6] ως in ℵABDLΔ.

[7] εις αυτον in BD 13, 69.

[8] σοι in ℵBLΔΣ (Tisch., W.H.).

[9] ℵABDL 33 omit εκει, meant originally perhaps as a substitute for εν τη ερημω following.

[10] τεσσ. ημερας in ℵBL 33.

not even appear whether John had any suspicion that the visitor from Nazareth was ὁ ἰσχυρότερος, of whom he had spoken. The manner in which the baptism of Jesus is reported is the first instance of the realism of this Gospel, facts about Jesus stated in a naked manner as compared, e.g., with Lk., who is influenced by religious decorum.—Ver. 10. εὐθὺς, straightway, a favourite word of Mk.'s, to be taken with εἶδε = as soon as He had ascended, etc., He saw. For similar usage in reference to εἶτα vide Hermann, Viger, p. 772.—σχιζομένους, being rent asunder, a sudden event; a stronger word than that used in Mt. and Lk. (ἀνεῴχθησαν—ῆναι). The subject of εἶδε is Jesus.—εἰς αὐτόν: this reading suggests the idea of a descent not merely upon (ἐπὶ) but into Him, as if to take up its abode; henceforth the immanent spirit of Jesus.

Vv. 12, 13. The temptation (Mt. iv. 1-11; Lk. iv. 1-13).—Ver. 12. ἐκβάλλει: historic present, much used in Mk. with lively effect; introduces a new situation. The first thing the Spirit does (εὐθὺς) is to drive Jesus into the wilderness, the expression not implying reluctance of Jesus to go into so wild a place (Weiss), but intense preoccupation of mind. Allowing for the weakening of the sense in Hellenistic usage (H. C.), it is a very strong word, and a second instance of Mk.'s realism: Jesus thrust out into the inhospitable desert by force of thought. De Wette says that the ethical significance of the temptation is lost in Mk.'s meagre narrative, and that it becomes a mere marvellous adventure. I demur to this. The one word ἐκβάλλει tells the whole story, speaks as far as may be the unspeakable. Mt. and Mk. have tried to tell us what happened, but have they given us more than a dim shadow of the truth?—Ver. 13. πειραζόμενος, being tempted, presumably the whole time; doubtless the real truth. Two powers at work all through, the Spirit of God and the spirit of evil.—ἦν μετὰ τ. θηρ.: not merely pictorial or intended to hint danger; meant rather to indicate the uninhabited nature of the place; no supplies obtainable there, hunger therefore a part of the experience.—οἱ ἄγγελοι: angels as opposed, not to devils (Schanz), but to human beings, of whom there were none.—διηκόνουν, ministered; in what way not said, but implying exhaustion. These few touches of Mk. suggest a vivid picture of a spiritual crisis: intense preoccupation, instinctive retreat into congenial grim solitudes, temptation, struggle, fierce and protracted, issuing d John iii. 15 (with ἐν).

14. ΜΕΤΑ δὲ[1] τὸ παραδοθῆναι τὸν Ἰωάννην, ἦλθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, κηρύσσων τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς βασιλείας[2] τοῦ Θεοῦ, 15. καὶ λέγων,[3] "Ὅτι πεπλήρωται ὁ καιρὸς, καὶ ἤγγικεν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ· μετανοεῖτε, καὶ [d] πιστεύετε [d] ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ."

16. Περιπατῶν δὲ[4] παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν τῆς Γαλιλαίας, εἶδε Σίμωνα καὶ Ἀνδρέαν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ,[5] βάλλοντας ἀμφίβληστρον[6] ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ· ἦσαν γὰρ ἁλιεῖς· 17. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Δεῦτε ὀπίσω μου, καὶ ποιήσω ὑμᾶς γενέσθαι ἁλιεῖς ἀνθρώπων." 18. Καὶ εὐθέως ἀφέντες τὰ δίκτυα αὐτῶν[7] ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ. 19. Καὶ προβὰς ἐκεῖθεν[8] ὀλίγον, εἶδεν Ἰάκωβον τὸν τοῦ Ζεβεδαίου, καὶ Ἰωάννην τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, καὶ αὐτοὺς ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ καταρτίζοντας τὰ δίκτυα. 20. καὶ εὐθέως ἐκάλεσεν αὐτούς· καὶ ἀφέντες τὸν πατέρα αὐτῶν Ζεβεδαῖον ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ μετὰ τῶν μισθωτῶν, ἀπῆλθον ὀπίσω αὐτοῦ.

[1] μετα δε in ℵLΔΣ (Tisch.). και μετα in BD (W.H.).
[2] της βασ. omit ℵBL 33; brought in by scribes as the usual phrase.
[3] και λεγων omitted in ℵ; Tisch., W.H., in brackets; found in BLΔ.
[4] και παραγων in ℵBDL 13, 33, 69 al. T.R. assimilated to Mt. iv. 18.
[5] Σιμωνος in ℵBL.
[6] For βαλλ. αμφιβλ. (from Mt. iv. 18) ℵBL 33 have αμφιβαλλοντες (Tisch., W.H.).
[7] αυτων omitted in ℵBCL.
[8] BDL omit εκειθεν.

in weakness, calling for preternatural aid.

Vv. 14-20. The Galilean ministry begins (Mt. iv. 12-22; Lk. iv. 14).—Ver. 14. τὸ εὐαγγ. τ. θεοῦ: the Gospel of God, the good news sent by God to men through Jesus, a strong name for Christ's message.—Ver. 15. ἡ βασιλεία τ. θ.: this defines more precisely the gospel Jesus preaches. It is the gospel of the Kingdom of God. But even this is vague. The kingdom may be differently conceived: as an awful thing or as a beneficent thing. The summons following throws light on its nature.—μετανοεῖτε καὶ πιστεύετε: "repent" echoes John's preaching, and savours of awe, but "believe" is a new word, and presumably the watchword of the new ministry. And the name for the message to be believed settles the nature of the kingdom. Its coming is good news (ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ). For πιστεύειν ἐν, vide Gal. iii. 26, Eph. i. 13.—Ver. 16. ἀμφιβάλλοντες: just because different from Mt.'s expression, to which the T. R. assimilates Mk.'s, is likely to be the true reading, and is very expressive: casting about (their nets understood, here only).—Ver. 17. γενέσθαι: I will make you become, implying a gradual process of training; therefore the disciples called as early as possible.—Ver. 20. μετὰ μισθωτῶν: they left their father with the hired assistants. This is taken by some as a merely pictorial trait, but others justly regard it as a touch of humanity. It comforted Mk. and probably his voucher Peter that the two brothers did not need to leave their father alone. He could do without them.

Vv. 21-28. First appearance in the synagogue; first impressions (Lk. iv. 31-37).—Ver. 21. εἰς πορεύονται: Jesus and the four newly acquired disciples enter or arrive at.—Καπ., Capernaum; first mention. From Mk.'s narrative alone we should gather that Jesus arrived at Capernaum on His way northwards from the south--from the Jordan to Galilee, then along the shore of the lake to Capernaum.—εὐθέως: seems to imply arrival on Sabbath.—σάββασιν: dative plural as if from σάββας; plural, after analogy of names for feast days (τὰ ἄζυμα, τὰ γενέσια, τὰ ἐγκαίνια).—ἐδίδασκε: Mt. in his general summary of the Galilean ministry applies both this word and κηρύσσω to Christ's synagogue utterances. These, addressed to a e again in Ch. v. 12.

21. Καὶ εἰσπορεύονται εἰς Καπερναούμ· καὶ εὐθέως τοῖς σάββασιν εἰσελθὼν εἰς τὴν συναγωγήν, ἐδίδασκε.[1] 22. καὶ ἐξεπλήσσοντο ἐπὶ τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ· ἦν γὰρ διδάσκων αὐτοὺς ὡς ἐξουσίαν ἔχων, καὶ οὐχ ὡς οἱ γραμματεῖς. 23. Καὶ [2] ἦν ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ αὐτῶν ἄνθρωπος [e] ἐν πνεύματι [e] ἀκαθάρτῳ, καὶ ἀνέκραξε, 24. λέγων, "Ἔα,[3] τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί, Ἰησοῦ Ναζαρηνέ; ἦλθες ἀπολέσαι ἡμᾶς; οἶδα [4] σε τίς εἶ, [f] ὁ ἅγιος τοῦ Θεοῦ." 25. Καὶ ἐπετίμησεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, λέγων, "Φιμώθητι, καὶ ἔξελθε ἐξ αὐτοῦ." 26. Καὶ [g] σπαράξαν αὐτὸν τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἀκάθαρτον, καὶ κράξαν [5] φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, ἐξῆλθεν ἐξ αὐτοῦ. 27. καὶ [h] ἐθαμβήθησαν πάντες,[6] ὥστε συζητεῖν πρὸς αὐτούς,[7]

f same exp. in John vi. 69 (W.H.).
g Ch. ix. 20. Lk. ix. 39.
h Ch. x. 24, 32 (Wisdom xvii. 3).

[1] εισελθων . . . εδιδασκε (T.R.) is the reading of BD (W.H. text). Some copies omit εισελθων, and place εδιδασκε before εις τ. συν.; so ℵL (Tisch., W.H., in margin. Ws. retains, T.R.).

[2] και ευθυς in ℵBL 33; ευθυς left out because not understood.

[3] εα not in ℵBD. It probably comes in from Lk. (iv. 34).

[4] οιδαμεν in ℵLΔ (Tisch., W.H., in margin), οιδα in BCDΣ; probably correct.

[5] φωνησαν in ℵBL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] απαντες in ℵBL; παντες in CDΔ al.

[7] ℵCDΔΣ have προς εαυτους (W.H. marg.). ℵB have simply αυτους (Tisch., W.H., text. Ws.).

popular audience, would come more properly under the head of kerygma than of didache.—Ver. 22. ἐξεπλήσσοντο: they were amazed; a strong word, several times in Mk. (Mt. vii. 28).—ὡς ἐξουσίαν ἔχων, etc.: a similar remark in Mt. vii. 29 (see notes there) appended to Sermon on Mount. Mk. gives no discourse, but only notes the impression made. "A poor substitute for the beautiful Sermon on the Mount" (Schanz). Doubtless, but let us be thankful for what we do get: a record of the impression made by Christ's very first appearance in the synagogue, witnessing to a striking individuality. Mk. omits much, and is in many ways a meagre Gospel, but it makes a distinctive contribution to the evangelic history in showing by a few realistic touches (this one of them) the remarkable personality of Jesus.

Vv. 23-28. The demoniac.—Ver. 23. εὐθὺς: almost = ἰδοὺ, Matthew's word for introducing something important.—αὐτῶν, in their synagogue, i.e., the synagogue of the same men who had been surprised at Christ's preaching. They are to get a new surprise, though one would have been enough for one day. We also get a surprise, for nothing in Mark's narrative thus far has prepared us to expect such an event as is reported. In his general sketch of the Galilean ministry (iv. 23-25) Matthew combines the three features: preaching, teaching, and healing.—ἐν π. ἀ. = with an unclean spirit (Maldonatus, Holtz., H. C.), in the power of, possessed by, Meyer, Weiss, Keil, etc. An unclean spirit is Mark's standing name for what Matthew commonly calls δαίμων or δαιμόνιον.—Ver. 24. τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί, what to us and to Thee. The diseased man speaks for the demon in him, and the demon speaks for the fraternity as all having one interest. For the phrase used in a similar sense vide 1 Kings xvii. 18.—Ναζαρηνέ: first certain intimation (cf. ver. 9) that Jesus belonged to Nazareth. The corresponding adjective in Matthew is Ναζωραῖος (ii. 23).—ἦλθες ἀ. ἡ. may be either a question or an assertion, the sense of the whole passage being: Thou art come to destroy us, for I know well who Thou art —the Holy One of God (Fritzsche). The epithet, ἅγιος, applied to Jesus is in antithesis to ἀκαθάρτῳ.—Ver. 25. φιμώθητι: vide at Mt. xxii. 12.—Ver. 26. σπαράξαν, convulsing, throwing into a spasm. This reveals a characteristic of the malady under which the man suffered. He appears to have been an epileptic. The Gadarene demoniac was a madman. This was the final fit before recovery.—Ver. 27. ἐθαμβήθησαν: another strong word peculiar to Mark = they were λέγοντας, "Τί ἐστι τοῦτο; τίς ἡ διδαχὴ ἡ καινὴ αὕτη, ὅτι [1] κατ' ἐξουσίαν καὶ τοῖς πνεύμασι τοῖς ἀκαθάρτοις ἐπιτάσσει, καὶ ὑπακούουσιν αὐτῷ;" 28. Ἐξῆλθε δὲ [2] ἡ ἀκοὴ αὐτοῦ εὐθὺς [3] εἰς ὅλην τὴν περίχωρον τῆς Γαλιλαίας.

29. Καὶ εὐθέως ἐκ τῆς συναγωγῆς ἐξελθόντες, ἦλθον [4] εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν Σίμωνος καὶ Ἀνδρέου, μετὰ Ἰακώβου καὶ Ἰωάννου. 30. ἡ δὲ πενθερὰ Σίμωνος κατέκειτο [l] πυρέσσουσα. καὶ εὐθέως λέγουσιν l here and in Mt. viii. 14.

[1] The scribes have flattened the text here into commonplace, and left only one cause of wonder instead of two. The true reading, because realistic, true to life, is doubtless that of ℵBL: διδαχη καινη κατ εξουσιαν και, in which κατ' ἐξ. may be joined either to what goes before or to what follows.

[2] και εξηλθεν in ℵBCDLΔΣ.

[3] BCL add πανταχου after ευθυς. It may have fallen out by similar ending (αυτου).

[4] εξελθων ηλθεν in BDΣ old Latin verss. (W.H. marg.). The T.R. conforms to ver. 21.

astonished, i.e., at the sudden and complete recovery. They saw at a glance that the attack had not run its usual course.—ὥστε with the infinitive here expressing result.—συζητεῖν, to seek together; in N. T. tropical = to inquire of one another, to discuss. The word occurs several times in Mark.—τί ἐστι τοῦτο. The question refers to the whole appearance of Jesus in the synagogue that day. One surprise following close on another provoked wondering inquiry as to the whole phenomenon. The words following state the twofold ground of their astonishment: (1) διδαχὴ καινὴ κατ' ἐξουσίαν, a style of teaching new as to authoritativeness (entirely different from the familiar type of the scribes); (2) καὶ τοῖς πνεύμασι τοῖς ἀκαθάρτοις ἐπιτάσσει, etc., also He commandeth the unclean spirits so that they obey Him. Both equally unlooked for: the former a moral miracle, the latter a physical; both revealing an imperial spirit exercising sway over the minds and bodies of men.—Ver. 28. ἡ ἀκοὴ, the report, as in Mt. xiv. 1, xxiv. 6.—εὐθὺς, expressive of the lightning speed with which rumour travels = πανταχοῦ = πανταχοῖ, in every direction.—εἰς ὅλην τ. π. τ. Γαλ., a vague phrase suggestive of a wide range of circulation, even beyond the boundaries of Galilee. But that can hardly be meant. Recent interpreters take it as meaning that the fame spread into the Galilean environment of Capernaum, along the lake north and south, and back into the hill country.

Similarity at certain points in this incident to the story of the Gadarene demoniac, especially in the deprecatory speech (ver. 24, Mt. viii. 29), has suggested the hypothesis of borrowing on one side or other. Keim thinks this not a real history but an acted programme, like the change of water into wine in John ii., and like the preaching programme in Lk. iv. (L. J., ii. 165, 203), a mere duplicate of the Gadara story. Weiss thinks the words spoken by the demoniac (ver. 34) are borrowed from that story, and that Mark reproduces the features with which Peter was wont to describe such cases. The lifelike reflections of the spectators (ver. 27) powerfully witness for the reality of the occurrence.

Vv. 29-31. Cure of Peter's mother-in-law (Mt. viii. 14, 15; Lk. iv. 38, 39).—ἐξελθόντες ἦλθον: even if the reading of B (participle and verb singular) be the true one, as it probably is just because the more difficult, the implied fact is that Jesus left the synagogue accompanied by His disciples, probably all four, Simon and Andrew as well as James and John. Jesus came from the synagogue to the house of Simon and Andrew, with them, and with James and John.—Ver. 30. πυρέσσουσα (same word in Matthew), fevered, or feverish, doubtless a common occurrence in the damp, marshy flats by the lake.—λέγουσι αὐτῷ π. α., forthwith they tell Him about her, not necessarily as expecting Him to heal her, but to account for her absence, or as one naturally tells a friend of family troubles.—Ver. 31. ἤγειρεν, etc., He took hold of her hand and so raised her up, the cure taking place simultaneously. In Matthew the touch (ἥψατο) is the αὐτῷ περὶ αὐτῆς. 31. καὶ προσελθὼν ἤγειρεν αὐτήν, κρατήσας τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῆς[1]· καὶ ἀφῆκεν αὐτὴν ὁ [j] πυρετὸς εὐθέως,[2] καὶ διηκόνει[j] αὐτοῖς. 32. Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης, ὅτε [k] ἔδυ[3] ὁ ἥλιος, ἔφερον πρὸς αὐτὸν πάντας τοὺς κακῶς ἔχοντας καὶ τοὺς δαιμονιζομένους· 33. καί ἡ πόλις ὅλη ἐπισυνηγμένη ἦν[4] πρὸς τὴν θύραν. 34. καὶ ἐθεράπευσε πολλοὺς κακῶς ἔχοντας ποικίλαις νόσοις· καὶ δαιμόνια πολλὰ ἐξέβαλε, καὶ οὐκ ἤφιε λαλεῖν τὰ δαιμόνια, ὅτι ᾔδεισαν αὐτόν.

35. Καὶ πρωῒ ἔννυχον[5] λίαν ἀναστὰς ἐξῆλθε, καὶ ἀπῆλθεν εἰς ἔρημον τόπον, κἀκεῖ προσηύχετο. 36. καὶ [l] κατεδίωξαν[6] αὐτὸν ὁ[7]

j parall. John iv. 52. Acts xxviii. 8.
k here and in Lk. iv. 40 (Gen. xxviii. 11).
l here only in N.T.

[1] ℵBL omit αυτης. [2] ℵBCL 33 al. omit ευθεως.

[3] BD have εδυσε, which being used transitively by the Greeks was likely to be corrected into εδυ by the ancient revisers.

[4] For η πολις . . . ην ℵBCDL 33 have ην ολη η πολις επισυνηγμενη (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] εννυχα in ℵBCDL (modern editions).

[6] κατεδιωξεν in ℵB, which revisers would readily change into the plural.

[7] ℵBL omit ο.

means of cure. Holtz. (H. C.) thinks Jesus took hold of her hand simply by way of greeting, and that the result was unexpected, Jesus thus discovering an unsuspected power.

Vv. 32-34. Cures on Sabbath evening (Mt. viii. 16, 17; Lk. iv. 40, 41).—Ver. 32. ὀψίας, etc.: exact indication of time by two phrases, on the arrival of evening when the sun set; evening a vague phrase = late afternoon. It was Sabbath, and the people would wait till sunset when Sabbath closed. Hence the double note of time. So most recent commentators, also Victor Ant. in Cramer's Catenae (ἐπειδὴ ἐνόμιζον μὴ ἐξεῖναί τινι θεραπεύειν σαββάτῳ, τούτου χάριν τοῦ σαββάτου τὸ πέρας ἀνέμενον). Matthew and Luke divide Mark's phrases between them. The first sufficed for Matthew because he says nothing of its being Sabbath. This instance of duality in expression in Mark has done service in connection with Griesbach's hypothesis that Mark is made up from Matthew and Luke.—κακῶς ἔχοντας, such as were ailing, peculiar to Mark.—τοὺς δαιμονιζομένους: them specially, because of what happened in the synagogue.—Ver. 33. ὅλη ἡ πόλις, a colloquial exaggeration.—πρὸς τ. θύραν: the door of Peter's house. Meyer thinks that in the interval Jesus had gone to His own house, and that it was there the people gathered. But does Mark's gospel think of Jesus as having a residence in Capernaum? Weiss answers in the negative.—Ver. 34. πολλούς, many; not all? In Matthew many are brought and all are healed.—ἤφιε, allow, imperfect, as if from ἀφίω with augment on preposition, again in xi. 16; prorsus barbara (Fritzsche).—ὅτι ᾔδεισαν α., because they knew Him. On the insight of demoniacs cf. at Mt. viii. 28 ff.

Vv. 35-39. Flight from Capernaum (Lk. iv. 42-44).—Ver. 35. πρωΐ, early, an elastic word, the last watch from three to six, defined more exactly by ἔννυχα λίαν = much in the night, at the beginning of the watch, or at the dark hour before dawn.—ἔννυχα is the neuter plural of ἔννυχος, nocturnal, used as an adverb (here only).—ἀναστὰς, etc.: He rose up, went out of Capernaum, went away to a desert, solitary place, and there engaged in prayer. It was a kind of flight from Capernaum, the scene of those remarkable occurrences; "flight from the unexpected reality into which His ideal conception of His calling had brought Him," Holtz., H. C. The real reason of the flight was doubtless a desire to preach in as many synagogues as possible before the hostility of the scribes, instinctively dreaded, had time to act obstructively. Jesus had a plan of a preaching tour in Galilee (vide ver. 38), and He felt He could not begin too soon. He left in the night, fearing opposition from the people.—Ver. 36. κατεδίωξεν: followed Him up; almost pursued Him as a fugitive; verb singular, though more than one followed, Σίμων καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ· 37. καὶ εὑρόντες αὐτόν,[1] λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Ὅτι πάντες ζητοῦσί σε." 38. Καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ἄγωμεν[2] εἰς τὰς ἐχομένας [m] κωμοπόλεις, ἵνα κἀκεῖ κηρύξω· εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ἐξελήλυθα."[3] 39. Καὶ ἦν[4] κηρύσσων ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν, εἰς ὅλην τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, καὶ τὰ δαιμόνια ἐκβάλλων.

m here only.

40. Καὶ ἔρχεται πρὸς αὐτὸν λεπρός, παρακαλῶν αὐτὸν καὶ γονυπετῶν αὐτόν,[5] καὶ[6] λέγων αὐτῷ, "Ὅτι, ἐὰν θέλῃς, δύνασαί με καθαρίσαι." 41. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[7] σπλαγχνισθείς, ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα, ἥψατο αὐτοῦ,[8] καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Θέλω, καθαρίσθητι." 42. Καὶ εἰπόντος αὐτοῦ,[9] εὐθέως, ἀπῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἡ λέπρα, καὶ ἐκαθαρίσθη.

[1] ℵBL have ευρον αυτον και.

[2] ℵBCL 33 add αλλαχου, a rare word (here only in Mk.), and apparently superfluous, therefore likely to be omitted.

[3] ℵBCL 33 have εξηλθον, doubtless the true reading, changed into εξεληλυθα because the meaning was not understood and under the influence of Lk. Jesus is explaining why He left Capernaum so hastily. Vide below.

[4] ηλθεν in ℵBL Cop. Aeth. verss. (Tisch., W.H.). ην is from Lk. (iv. 44).

[5] BD omit και γονυπετων αυτον, possibly by homoeot. ℵL have και γονυ. without αυτον.

[6] ℵB 69 omit και.

[7] For ο δε I. ℵBD have simply και (Tisch., W.H.).

[8] αυτου ηψατο in ℵBL.

[9] ειπ. αυτου is a gloss, omitted in ℵBDL.

Peter, the chief of them, being thought of mainly. A strong term like ἐκβάλλει, ver. 12, all allowance made for weakened force in Hellenistic usage.—Ver. 37. πάντες ζητοῦσί σε: all seek Thee, not merely all the people of Capernaum, but all the world: "nemo non te quaerit," Fritzsche; a colloquial exaggeration.—Ver. 38. ἄγωμεν: let us go, intransitive; not so used in Greek authors.—κωμοπόλεις: village towns; towns as to extent of population, villages as without walls (Kypke); Oppidula (Beza); here only in N. T., found in Strabo.—κηρύξω: that there I may preach, no word of healing; because no part of His vocation (Klostermann); because subordinate to the preaching (Schanz).—ἐξῆλθον: I came out (from Capernaum, ver. 35). This may seem trivial (Keil), but it appears to be the real meaning, and it is so understood by Meyer, Weiss, Holtz., and even Schanz. The Fathers understood the words as meaning: "I am come from heaven". So Keil. In this clause Weiss finds evidence that in Mk.'s narrative Jesus has no home in Capernaum. He has visited it, done good in it, and now He wants to go elsewhere.—Ver. 39. ἦλθεν (vide critical notes).—εἰς τ. συν. may be connected with ἦλθεν, and the sentence will run thus: He came, preaching, to their synagogues, all over Galilee; also casting out devils, the healing ministry being referred to as subordinate to the teaching. If we connect εἰς τὰς συν. with κηρύσσων the word "synagogues" will refer to the assemblies rather than to the places = preaching to their synagogues, as we might say "preaching to their churches" or "congregations". For similar expressions cf. xiii. 10, xiv. 9, John viii. 26. This short verse contains the record of an extensive preaching tour, of which not a single discourse has been preserved. Doubtless some of the parables were spoken on these occasions. Note the synagogue, not the market place, was the scene of Christ's addresses; His work religious, not political (Schanz).

Vv. 40-45. The leper (Mt. viii. 1-4; Lk. v. 12-16).—Ver. 40. καὶ ἔρχεται, etc., and there cometh to Him, historic present as so often; where this happened not said, probably an incident of the preaching tour; "in one of the cities," says Lk.—ἐὰν θέλῃς δύν.: the leper has seen or heard enough of Christ's healing ministry to be sure as to the power. He doubts the will, naturally from the nature of the disease, especially if it be the first cure of the kind, or the first so far as the man knows.—Ver. 41. σπλαγχνισθείς, having compassion. Watch carefully

43. Καὶ ἐμβριμησάμενος αὐτῷ, εὐθέως ἐξέβαλεν αὐτόν, 44. καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ὅρα, μηδενὶ μηδὲν εἴπῃς· ἀλλ' ὕπαγε, σεαυτὸν δεῖξον τῷ ἱερεῖ, καὶ προσένεγκε περὶ τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ σου ἃ προσέταξε Μωσῆς, εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς." 45. Ὁ δὲ ἐξελθὼν ἤρξατο κηρύσσειν πολλὰ καὶ διαφημίζειν τὸν λόγον, ὥστε μηκέτι αὐτὸν δύνασθαι [n] φανερῶς εἰς πόλιν [1] εἰσελθεῖν· ἀλλ' ἔξω ἐν [2] ἐρήμοις τόποις ἦν, καὶ ἤρχοντο πρὸς αὐτὸν πανταχόθεν.[3] n John vii. 10. Acts x. 9.

[1] The order of the words varies in the MSS.

[2] επ in ℵBLΔ.

[3] παντοθεν in many uncials (Tisch., W.H.).

the portraiture of Christ's personality in this Gospel, Mk.'s speciality.—Ver. 42. ἀπῆλθεν, etc.: another instance of duality, the leprosy left him, and he or it was cleansed. Lk. has the former of the two phrases, Mt. the latter.—καθαρίζειν is Hellenistic for καθαίρειν.—Ver. 43. ἐμβριμησάμενος, etc.: assuming a severe aspect, vide notes on the word at Mt. ix. 30, especially the quotation from Euthy. Zig.—ἐξέβαλεν α., thrust him out of the synagogue or the crowd. It is not quite certain that the incident happened in a synagogue, though the inference is natural from the connection with ver. 39. Lepers were not interdicted from entering the synagogue. These particulars are peculiar to Mk., and belong to his character sketching. He does not mean to impute real anger to Jesus, but only a masterful manner dictated by a desire that the benefit should be complete = away out of this, to the priest; do what the law requires, that you may be not only clean but recognised as such by the authorities, and so received by the people as a leper no longer.—Ver. 44. εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς: for a testimony from priest to people, without which the leper would not be received as clean.—Ver. 45. What Jesus feared seems to have happened. The man went about telling of his cure, and neglecting the means necessary to obtain social recognition as cured.—τὸν λόγον: "the matter," A. V. Perhaps we should translate strictly the word, i.e., the word Jesus spoke: "I will, be thou clean". So Holtz. after Fritzsche. So also Euthy. Zig. (διεφήμιζε τὸν λόγον, ὃν εἴρηκεν αὐτῷ ὁ χριστὸς, δηλαδὴ τὸ θέλω, καθαρίσθητι, ὡς μετ' ἐξουσίας γενόμενον).—εἰς πόλιν: the result was that Jesus could not enter openly into a city, a populous place, but was obliged to remain in retired spots. This cure and the popularity it caused may have co-operated to bring Christ's synagogue ministry to an abrupt termination by stirring up envy. Jesus was between two fires, and His order to the leper, go, show thyself, had a double reference: to the man's good and to the conciliation of the scribes and synagogue rulers.—καὶ ἤρχοντο, etc.: and (still) they kept coming from all quarters. Popularity at its height. There is nothing corresponding to ver. 45 in Mt.

CHAPTER II. INCIPIENT CONFLICT. This chapter and the first six verses of the next report incidents which, though not represented as happening at the same time, have all one aim: to exhibit Jesus as becoming an object of disfavour to the religious classes, the scribes and Pharisees. Sooner or later, and soon rather than later, this was inevitable. Jesus and they were too entirely different in thought and ways for good will to prevail between them for any length of time. It would not be long before the new Prophet would attract their attention. The comments of the people in Capernaum synagogue, doubtless often repeated elsewhere, on the contrast between His style of teaching and that of the scribes, would soon reach their ears, and would not tend to promote a good understanding. That was one definite ground of offence, and others were sure to arise.

Vv. 1-12. The palsied man (Mt. ix. 1-8; Lk. v. 17-26).—Ver. 1. The reading of ℵBL (W.H.) with εἰσελθὼν for εἰσῆλθεν in T. R., and omitting καὶ before ἠκούσθη, gives a ruggedly anacolouthistic construction ("and entering again into Capernaum after days it was heard that He was at home"), which the T. R. very neatly removes. The construction of the sentence, even as it stands in the critically approved text, may be made smoother by taking ἠκούσθη not im-

II. 1. Καὶ πάλιν εἰσῆλθεν[1] εἰς Καπερναοὺμ δι᾽ ἡμερῶν· καὶ[2] ἠκούσθη ὅτι εἰς οἶκόν[3] ἐστι· 2. καὶ εὐθέως συνήχθησαν πολλοί, ὥστε μηκέτι [a] χωρεῖν μηδὲ τὰ πρὸς τὴν θύραν· καὶ [b] ἐλάλει αὐτοῖς τὸν [b] λόγον. 3. Καὶ ἔρχονται πρὸς αὐτόν, παραλυτικὸν φέροντες,[4] [c] αἰρόμενον ὑπὸ τεσσάρων. 4. καὶ μὴ δυνάμενοι προσεγγίσαι[5] αὐτῷ διὰ τὸν ὄχλον, [d] ἀπεστέγασαν τὴν στέγην ὅπου ἦν, καὶ [e] ἐξορύξαντες χαλῶσι τὸν κράββατον,[6] ἐφ᾽ ᾧ[7] ὁ παραλυτικὸς κατέκειτο.

a John ii. 6; xxi. 25.
b Ch. iv. 33.
c Mt. iv. 6.
d here only.
e Gal. iv. 15 (to dig out the eyes).

[1] εισελθων παλιν in ℵBDL; probably correct just because of the halting const. which the T.R. rectifies.

[2] ℵBL omit και; for the connection of the words vide below.

[3] ℵBDLΣ have εν οικω (Tisch., W.H. in text). But εις οικον (CΔ al.) is to be preferred as the more difficult.

[4] ℵBL have φεροντες προς αυτον παραλυτικον.

[5] προσενεγκαι in ℵBL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] Spelt κραβαττον in most uncials.

[7] οπου in ℵBDL. εφ ω (T.R.) is explanatory.

personally, but as referring to Jesus. He entering, etc., was heard of as being at home (Schanz and Holtzmann alternatively).—πάλιν, again, a second time, i. 21 mentioning the first. He has not been there apparently since He left it (i. 35) on the preaching tour in Galilee. —δι᾽ ἡμερῶν: after days, cf. Gal. ii. 1; classical examples of this use of διὰ in Wetstein and Elsner. The expression suggests a short period, a few days, which seems too short for the time required for the preaching tour, even if it had been cut short by hostile influence, as is not improbable. The presence of scribes at this scene is very significant. They appear hostile in attitude on Christ's return to Capernaum. They had probably been active before it. Fritzsche translates: interjectis pluribus diebus. For a considerable time διὰ χρόνου would be the appropriate phrase. We get rid of the difficulty by connecting δι᾽ ἡμερῶν with ἠκούσθη (Kloster.), the resulting meaning being that days elapsed after the arrival in Capernaum before people found out that Jesus was there. He had been absent possibly for months, and probably returned quietly.—ἐν οἴκῳ or εἰς οἶκον (T. R.) = at home (in Peter's house presumably); εἰς οἶκον suggests the idea of entrance.—Ver. 2. συνήχθησαν πολλοὶ: with the extraordinary incidents of some weeks or months ago fresh in their memory, a great gathering of the townspeople was inevitable.—ὥστε, etc.: the gathering was phenomenal; not only the house filled, but the space round about the door crowded—no room for more people even there (μηδὲ), not to speak of within. —τὸν λόγον: the phrase has a secondary sound, as if an echo of the speech of the apostolic church, but the meaning is plain. Jesus was preaching the gospel of the kingdom when the following incident happened. Preaching always first. —Ver. 3. ἔρχονται: historic present with lively effect. The arrival creates a stir.—φέροντες: this may mean more than the four who actually carried the sick man (ὑπὸ τεσσάρων), friends accompanying. The bearers might be servants (Schanz).—Ver. 4. The particulars in this verse not in Mt., who did not care how they found their way to Jesus; enough for him that they succeeded somehow.—προσεγγίσαι (T. R.): here only in N. T. to approach; προσενέγκαι (W.H.), to bring near (the sick man understood) to Him, Jesus.—ἀπεστέγασαν τ. σ., removed the roof, to which they would get access by an outside stair either from the street or from the court.—ὅπου ἦν, where He was; where was that? in an upper room (Lightfoot and Vitringa), or in a room in a one-storied house (Holtz., H. C.), or not in a room at all, but in the atrium or compluvium, the quadrangle of the house (Faber, Archäol., Jahn, Archäol.). In the last-mentioned case they would have to remove the parapet (battlement, Deut. xxii. 8) and let the man down into the open space.—ἐξορύξαντες: not something additional to but explanatory of ἀπεστέγασαν = they unroofed by digging through the material—tiles, laths, and

5. ἰδὼν δὲ[1] ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὴν πίστιν αὐτῶν λέγει τῷ παραλυτικῷ, "Τέκνον, ἀφέωνταί[2] σοι αἱ ἁμαρτίαι σου."[3] 6. Ἦσαν δέ τινες τῶν γραμματέων ἐκεῖ καθήμενοι, καὶ διαλογιζόμενοι ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν, 7. "Τί[4] οὗτος οὕτω λαλεῖ βλασφημίας[5]; τίς δύναται ἀφιέναι ἁμαρτίας, εἰ μὴ εἷς, ὁ Θεός;" 8. Καὶ εὐθέως ἐπιγνοὺς ὁ Ἰησοῦς [f] τῷ πνεύματι αὐτοῦ, ὅτι οὕτως[6] διαλογίζονται ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[7] "Τί ταῦτα διαλογίζεσθε ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν; 9. τί ἐστιν εὐκοπώτερον, εἰπεῖν τῷ παραλυτικῷ, Ἀφέωνταί[8] σοι[9] αἱ

f Ch. viii. 12.

[1] και ιδων in ℵBCL.

[2] B 33 have αφιενται. αφεωνται conforms to Lk. (v. 20), and is to be suspected.

[3] For σοι αι αμ. σου (from Lk.) ℵBDLΔ have σου αι αμ.

[4] οτι in B (W.H. marg.).

[5] In the T.R., ουτος ουτω λαλει βλασφημιας, we detect the hand of harmonising and prosaic revisers once more. The true reading is τι (B, οτι) ουτος ουτως λαλει; βλασφημει (ℵBDL). Vide below.

[6] B omits ουτως (W.H. in brackets).

[7] λεγει in ℵBL 33. B omits αυτοις (W.H. in brackets).

[8] αφιενται in ℵB.

[9] σου in ℵBL al.

plaster.—κράβαττον: a small portable couch, for the poor, for travellers, and for sick people; condemned by Phryn., p. 62; σκίμπους the correct word. Latin grabatus, which may have led Mk. to use the term in the text.—Ver. 5. τὴν πίστιν α., their faith, that of the bearers, shown by their energetic action, the sick man not included (οὐ τὴν πίστιν τοῦ παραλελυμένου ἀλλὰ τῶν κομισάντων, Victor Ant., Cramer, Cat.).—τέκνον, child, without the cheering θάρσει of Mt.

Vv. 6-12. Thus far of the sick man, how he got to Jesus, and the sympathetic reception he met with. Now the scribes begin to play their part. They find their opportunity in the sympathetic word of Jesus: thy sins be forgiven thee; a word most suitable to the case, and which might have been spoken by any man.—τινες τ. γρ.: Lk. makes of this simple fact a great affair: an assembly of Pharisees and lawyers from all quarters—Galilee, Judaea, Jerusalem, hardly suitable to the initial stage of conflict.—ἐκεῖ καθήμενοι: sitting there. If the posture is to be pressed they must have been early on the spot, so as to get near to Jesus and hear and see Him distinctly.—ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις α.: they looked like men shocked and disapproving. The popularity of Jesus prevented free utterance of their thought. But any one could see they were displeased and why. It was that speech about forgiveness.—Ver. 7. τί οὗτος οὕτω λάλει; βλασφημεῖ. This reading of ℵBDL is far more lifelike than that of the T. R., which exemplifies the tendency of copyists to smooth down into commonplace whatever is striking and original = why does this person thus speak? He blasphemes. The words suggest a gradual intensification of the fault-finding mood: first a general sense of surprise, then a feeling of impropriety, then a final advance to the thought: why, this is blasphemy! It was nothing of the kind. What Jesus had said did not necessarily amount to more than a declaration of God's willingness to forgive sin to the penitent. They read the blasphemy into it.—Ver. 8. εὐθὺς ἐπιγνοὺς: Jesus read their thoughts at once, and through and through (ἐπί).—τῷ πνεύματι, by His spirit, as distinct from the ear, they having said nothing.—Vv. 9, 10, vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 11. σοὶ λέγω, I say to thee, a part of Christ's speech to the man in Mk., not likely to have been so really; laconic speech, the fewest words possible, characteristic of Jesus.—ἔγειρε, means something more than age (Fritzsche) = come, take up thy bed. Jesus bids him do two things, each a conclusive proof of recovery: rise, then go to thy house on thine own feet, with thy sick-bed on thy shoulder.—Ver. 12 tells how the man did as bidden, to the astonishment of all spectators.—πάντας, all, without exception, scribes included? (Kloster.) It might have been so had the sentence stopped ἁμαρτίαι, ἢ εἰπεῖν, Ἔγειραι,[1] καὶ[2] ἆρόν σου τὸν κράββατον,[3] καὶ περιπάτει; 10. ἵνα δὲ εἰδῆτε, ὅτι ἐξουσίαν ἔχει ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἀφιέναι ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς[4] ἁμαρτίας, (λέγει τῷ παραλυτικῷ,) 11. Σοὶ λέγω, ἔγειραι,[5] καὶ[6] ἆρον τὸν κράββατόν σου, καὶ ὕπαγε εἰς τὸν οἶκόν σου." 12. Καὶ ἠγέρθη εὐθέως, καὶ[7] ἄρας τὸν κράββατον, ἐξῆλθεν ἐναντίον[8] πάντων· ὥστε ἐξίστασθαι πάντας, καὶ δοξάζειν τὸν Θεόν, λέγοντας,[9] "Ὅτι οὐδέποτε οὕτως[10] εἴδομεν."

13. Καὶ ἐξῆλθε πάλιν παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ πᾶς ὁ ὄχλος ἤρχετο πρὸς αὐτόν, καὶ ἐδίδασκεν αὐτούς. 14. Καὶ παράγων εἶδε Λευῒν τὸν τοῦ Ἀλφαίου, καθήμενον ἐπὶ τὸ τελώνιον, καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ἀκολούθει μοι." Καὶ ἀναστὰς ἠκολούθησεν αὐτῷ. 15. Καὶ ἐγέ-

[1] εγειρε in ℵCD al. (Tisch.). εγειρου in BL (W.H.).
[2] και in ℵBΔ (Tisch.), omit CDL (W.H. in brackets).
[3] τον κραβ. σου in ℵBCDLΣ.
[4] επι της γης αφιεναι in ℵCDLΔΣ (Tisch.). αφ. αμαρ. επι τ. γ. in B (W.H. text).
[5] εγειρε in most uncials.
[6] και omit ℵBCDL.
[7] και ευθυς in ℵBCL.
[8] εμπροσθεν in ℵBL.
[9] B omits (W.H. in brackets). D has και λεγειν.
[10] ουτως ουδεποτε ℵBDL.

there. For no doubt the scribes were as much astonished as their neighbours at what took place. But they would not join in the praise to God which followed.—οὕτως οὐδέποτε εἴδομεν: elliptical, but expressive, suited to the mental mood = so we never saw, i.e., we never saw the like.

N.B.—The title "Son of Man" occurs in this narrative for the first time in Mk.'s Gospel; for its import vide on Mt.

Vv. 13-27. Call of Levi, feast following (Mt. ix. 9-13; Lk. v. 27-32). This incident is not to be conceived as following immediately after that narrated in the foregoing section.—Ver. 13 interrupts the continuity of the history. It states that Jesus went out again (cf. i. 16) alongside (παρὰ) the sea, that the multitude followed Him, and that He taught them. A very vague general notice, serving little other purpose than to place an interval between the foregoing and following incidents.—Ver. 14. Λευῒν. Levi, the son of Alphaeus, the name here and in Lk. different from that given in first gospel, but the incident manifestly the same, and the man therefore also; Levi his original name, Matthew his apostle name. Mk. names Matthew in his apostle list (iii. 18), but he fails to identify the two, though what he states about Levi evidently points to a call to apostleship similar to that to the four fishermen (i. 16, 20). The compiler of the first Gospel, having Mk. before him, and, noticing the omission, substituted the name Matthew for Levi, adding to it λεγόμενον (ix. 9) to hint that he had another name.—ἀκολούθει μοι: a call to apostleship (in terms identical in all three Synoptics), and also to immediate service in connection with the mission to the publicans (vide on Mt.).—Ver. 15. ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ αὐτου: whose house? Not perfectly clear, but all things point to that of Levi. There is no mention of a return to Capernaum, where Jesus dwelt. The custom house may have been outside the town, nearer the shore. Then if the house of Jesus (Peter's) had been meant, the name of Jesus should have stood after οἰκία instead of at the close of the verse. The main point to note is that whatever house is meant, it must have been large enough to have a hall or court capable of accommodating a large number of people. Furrer assumes as a matter of course that the gathering was in the court. "Here in the court of one of these ruined houses sat the Saviour of the lost in the midst of publicans and sinners" (Wanderungen, p. 375).—πολλοὶ, etc.: many to be taken in earnest, not slurred over, as we are apt to do when we think of this feast as a private entertainment given by Mt. to his quondam friends, Jesus being nothing more than a guest.—ἦσαν γὰρ πολλοὶ καὶ ἠκολούθουν αὐτῷ: Mk. here takes νετο ἐν τῷ[1] κατακεῖσθαι αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ αὐτοῦ, καὶ πολλοὶ τελῶναι καὶ ἁμαρτωλοὶ συνανέκειντο τῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ· ἦσαν γὰρ πολλοί, καὶ ἠκολούθησαν[2] αὐτῷ. 16. καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι,[3] ἰδόντες αὐτὸν ἐσθίοντα[4] μετὰ τῶν τελωνῶν καὶ ἁμαρτωλῶν,[5] ἔλεγον τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Τί[6] ὅτι μετὰ τῶν τελωνῶν καὶ ἁμαρτωλῶν ἐσθίει καὶ πίνει;"[7] 17. Καὶ ἀκούσας ὁ Ἰησοῦς λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσιν οἱ ἰσχύοντες ἰατροῦ, ἀλλ' οἱ κακῶς ἔχοντες. οὐκ ἦλθον καλέσαι δικαίους, ἀλλὰ ἁμαρτωλοὺς εἰς μετάνοιαν."[8]

[1] Instead of εγενετο εν τω ℵBL 33 have simply γινεται (W.H.).

[2] ηκολουθουν in ℵBLΔ (modern editors).

[3] For και οι Φ. BLΔ have των Φαρισαιων, which doubtless the ancient scribes stumbled at as unusual.

[4] For αυτον εσθιοντα B 33 have οτι εσθιει (W.H., R.G.T.), ℵDL οτι ησθιε (Tisch.). The T.R. follows ACΔΣ.

[5] αμαρτωλων και τελωνων in BDL 33, to be preferred just because unusual.

[6] Omit τι BL 33 (W.H.).

[7] ℵBD omit και πινει, which the scribes would be ready to insert.

[8] ℵABDLΔΣ al. verss. omit εις μετανοιαν, which has been imported from Lk.

pains to prevent us from overlooking the πολλοὶ of the previous clause = for they, the publicans, and generally the people who passed for sinners, were many, and they had begun to follow Him. Some (Schanz, Weiss, etc.) think the reference is to the disciples (μαθηταῖς), mentioned here for first time, therefore a statement that they were numerous (more, e.g., than four), quite apposite. But the stress of the story lies on the publicans, and Christ's relations with them. (So Holtz., H. C.) It was an interesting fact to the evangelist that this class, of whom there was a large number in the neighbourhood, were beginning to show an interest in Jesus, and to follow Him about. To explain the number Elsner suggests that they may have gathered from various port towns along the shore. Jesus would not meet such people in the synagogue, as they seem to have been excluded from it (vide Lightfoot and Wünsche, ad Mt. xviii. 17). Hence the necessity for a special mission.—Ver. 16. ἔλεγον: the scribes advance from thinking (ii. 6) to speaking; not yet, however, to Jesus but about Him to His disciples. They note, with disapproval, His kindly relations with "sinners". The publicans and other disreputables had also noted the fact. The story of the palsied man and the "blasphemous" word, "thy sins be forgiven thee," had got abroad, making them prick up their ears, and awakening decided interest in these tabooed circles, in the "Blasphemer".—Ver. 17. καλέσαι: to call, suggestive of invitations to a feast (Fritzsche, Meyer, Holtz.), and making for the hypothesis that Jesus, not Matthew, was the real host at the social gathering: the whole plan His, and Matthew only His agent; vide notes on Mt. He called to that particular feast as to the feast of the kingdom, the one a means to the other as the end.—δικαίους, ἁμαρτωλούς: Jesus preferred the company of the sinful to that of the righteous, and sought disciples from among them by preference. The terms are not ironical. They simply describe two classes of society in current language, and indicate with which of the two His sympathies lay.

Vv. 18-22. Fasting (Mt. ix. 14-17, Lk. v. 33-39).—Ver. 18. καὶ, and, connection purely topical, another case of conflict.—ἦσαν νηστεύοντες, either: were wont to fast (Grotius, Fritzsche, Schanz, etc.), or, and this gives more point to the story: were fasting at that particular time (Meyer, Weiss, Holtz., H. C.).—ἔρχονται καὶ λέγ., they come and say, quite generally; they = people, or some representatives of John's disciples, and the Pharisees.—Ver. 19. μὴ δύνανται, etc.: the question answers

18. Καὶ ἦσαν οἱ μαθηταὶ Ἰωάννου καὶ οἱ τῶν Φαρισαίων[1] νηστεύοντες· καὶ ἔρχονται καὶ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Διατί οἱ μαθηταὶ Ἰωάννου καὶ οἱ[2] τῶν Φαρισαίων νηστεύουσιν, οἱ δὲ σοὶ μαθηταὶ οὐ νηστεύουσι;" 19. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Μὴ δύνανται οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος, ἐν ᾧ ὁ νυμφίος μετ' αὐτῶν ἐστι, νηστεύειν; ὅσον χρόνον μεθ' ἑαυτῶν ἔχουσι τὸν νυμφίον,[3] οὐ δύνανται νηστεύειν· 20. ἐλεύσονται δὲ ἡμέραι ὅταν ἀπαρθῇ ἀπ' αὐτῶν ὁ νυμφίος, καὶ τότε νηστεύσουσιν ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις.[4] 21. καὶ[5] οὐδεὶς ἐπίβλημα ῥάκους ἀγνάφου ἐπιρράπτει ἐπὶ ἱματίῳ παλαιῷ[6] εἰ δὲ μή, αἴρει τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτοῦ[7] τὸ καινὸν τοῦ παλαιοῦ, καὶ χεῖρον σχίσμα γίνεται. 22. καὶ οὐδεὶς βάλλει οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς παλαιούς· εἰ δὲ μή, ῥήσσει[8] ὁ οἶνος ὁ νέος[9] τοὺς ἀσκούς, καὶ ὁ οἶνος ἐκχεῖται καὶ οἱ ἀσκοὶ ἀπολοῦνται[10]· ἀλλὰ οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς καινοὺς βλητέον."[11]

[1] For των Φαρισαιων ℵABCD al. verss. have Φαρισαιοι.
[2] ℵBCL have μαθηται after οι.
[3] ℵBCL arrange thus: εχουσι τον ν. μετ αυτων.
[4] εν εκεινη τη ημερα in ℵABCDLΔΣ, etc. [5] και omit ℵABCLΔ 33.
[6] επι ιματιον παλαιον in ℵBCDL. The dat. conforms to Mt.
[7] απ αυτου in ℵBLΣ. [8] ρηξει in ℵBCDL 33.
[9] ℵBCDL 13, 69 al. omit ο νεος.
[10] BL (D in part) read ο οιν. απολλυται και οι ασ. T.R. conforms to Mt.
[11] ℵB omit βλητεον (from Lk.). D and old Lat. verss. omit the whole clause.

itself, and is allowed to do so in Mt. and Lk. Mk. at the expense of style answers it formally in the negative.—ὅσον χρόνον, etc. For all this the Syriac Vulgate has a simple no.—Ver. 20. Here also the style becomes burdened by the sense of the solemn character of the fact stated: there will come days when the Bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast—in that day! This final expression, ἐν ἐκείνῃ ἡμέρᾳ, singular, for plural in first clause, is very impressive, although Fritzsche calls it prorsus intolerabile. There is no ground for the suggestion that the phrase is due to the evangelist, and refers to the Friday of the Passion Week (Holtz., H. C.). It might quite well have been used by Jesus.—Ver. 21. ἐπιρράπτει, sews upon, for ἐπιβάλλει in Mt. and Lk.; not in Greek authors, here only in N. T.; in Sept., Job xvi. 15, the simple verb.—εἰ δὲ μή: vide on εἰ δὲ μήγε in Mt. ix. 17.—αἴρει, etc.: that which filleth up taketh from it (ἀπ' αὐτοῦ)—the new, viz., from the old; the second clause explanatory of the first.—καὶ χ. σ. γ., and a worse rent takes place.—Ver. 22. ῥήξει. Pricaeus (ad Mt. ix. 17) quotes from Seneca (83 Epist.): "musto dolia ipsa rumpuntur"—of course, a fortiori, old skins.—καὶ ὁ οἶνος, etc.: and the wine is lost, also the skins.—ἀλλὰ, etc.: this final clause, bracketed in W. and H., with the βλητέον, probably inserted from Lk., gives very pithy expression to the principle taught by the parable: but new wine into new skins! As to the bearing of both parables as justifying both John and Jesus, vide notes on Mt., ad loc.

Vv. 23-28. The Sabbath question (Mt. xii. 1-8, Lk. vi. 1-5).—Ver. 23. καὶ ἐγ.: connection with foregoing topical, not temporal; another case of conflict.—αὐτὸν παραπορεύεσθαι: ἐγένετο is followed here by the infinitive in first clause, then with καὶ and a finite verb in second clause. It is sometimes followed by indicative with καὶ, and also without καὶ (vide Burton's Syntax, § 360).—παραπορ. stands here instead of διαπορ. in Lk., and the simple verb with διὰ after it in Mt. It seems intended to combine the ideas of going through and alongside. Jesus went through a corn field on a footpath with grain on either side.—ὁδὸν ποιεῖν is a puzzling phrase. In

23. Καὶ ἐγένετο παραπορεύεσθαι αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς σάββασι [1] διὰ τῶν σπορίμων, καὶ ἤρξαντο οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ [2] ὁδὸν ποιεῖν [3] τίλλοντες τοὺς στάχυας. 24. καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι ἔλεγον αὐτῷ, "Ἴδε, τί ποιοῦσιν ἐν [4] τοῖς σάββασιν, ὃ οὐκ ἔξεστι;" 25. Καὶ αὐτὸς ἔλεγεν [5] αὐτοῖς, "Οὐδέποτε ἀνέγνωτε, τί ἐποίησε Δαβίδ, ὅτε χρείαν ἔσχε καὶ ἐπείνασεν αὐτὸς καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ; 26. πῶς [6] εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ [g] ἐπὶ [g] Ἀβιάθαρ τοῦ [7] ἀρχιερέως, καὶ τοὺς ἄρτους τῆς προθέσεως ἔφαγεν, οὓς οὐκ ἔξεστι φαγεῖν εἰ μὴ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι, [8] καὶ ἔδωκε καὶ τοῖς σὺν αὐτῷ οὖσι;" 27. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Τὸ σάββατον διὰ τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἐγένετο, οὐχ [9] ὁ ἄνθρωπος διὰ τὸ σάββατον. 28. ὥστε κύριός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου καὶ τοῦ σαββάτου."

g Lk. iii. 2; iv. 27. Acts xi. 28.

[1] BCD have διαπορ. (Lk.). ℵBCDLΔ place αυτον εν τοις σαββασι before the verb.

[2] οι μαθ. before ηρξαντο in ℵBCDL 33, 69 al.

[3] B has οδοποιειν (W.H. margin).

[4] ℵABCDΔΣ it. vulg. omit εν.

[5] ℵBCL omit αυτος (most modern editions. Ws. after Meyer dissents). For ελεγεν ℵCL it. vulg. have λεγει (Tisch., W.H., Ws.).

[6] BD omit πως (W.H. in brackets).

[7] ℵBL omit του.

[8] τους ιερεις in ℵBL.

[9] και ουχ in ℵBCLΔΣ 33 verss.

classic Greek it means to make a road = viam sternere, ὁδὸν ποιεῖσθαι meaning to make way = iter facere. If we assume that Mk. was acquainted with and observed this distinction, then the meaning will be: the disciples began to make a path by pulling up the stalks (τίλλοντες τοὺς στάχυας), or perhaps by trampling under foot the stalks after first plucking off the ears. The ἤρξαντο in that case will mean that they began to do that when they saw the path was not clear, and wished to make it more comfortable for their Master to walk on. But it is doubtful whether in Hellenistic Greek the classic distinction was observed, and Judges xvii. 8 (Sept.) supplies an instance of ὁδὸν ποιεῖν = making way, "as he journeyed". It would come natural to Mk. to use the phrase in the sense of iter facere. If we take the phrase in this sense, then we must, with Beza, find in the passage a permutata verborum collocatio, and translate as if it had run: ὁδὸν ποιοῦντες τίλλειν: "began, as they went, to pluck," etc. (R. V.). The former view, however, is not to be summarily put aside because it ascribes to the disciples an apparently wanton proceeding. If there was a right of way by use and wont, they would be quite entitled to act so. The only difficulty is to understand how a customary path could have remained untrodden till the grain was ripe, or even in the ear. On this view vide Meyer. Assuming that the disciples made a path for their Master by pulling up the grain, with which it was overgrown, or by trampling the straw after plucking the ears, what did they do with the latter? Mt. and Lk. both say or imply that the plucking was in order to eating by hungry men. Meyer holds that Mk. knows nothing of this hunger, and that the eating of the ears came into the tradition through the allusion to David eating the shewbread. But the stress Mk. lays on need and hunger (duality of expression, ver. 25) shows that in his idea hunger was an element in the case of the disciples also.—Ver. 24. ἔλεγον αὐτῷ. In this case they speak to Christ against His disciples; indirectly against Him.—ὃ οὐκ ἔξεστιν: the offence was not trampling the grain or straw, but plucking the ears; reaping on a small scale; rubbing = threshing, in Lk.—χρείαν ἔσχε καὶ ἐπείνασεν: another example of Mk.'s duality, intelligible only if hunger was the point of the story. The verbs are singular, because David (αὐτὸς) is the hero, his followers in the background. — Ver. 26. ἐπὶ

III. 1. ΚΑΙ εἰσῆλθε πάλιν εἰς τὴν[1] συναγωγήν, καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ ἄνθρωπος [a] ἐξηραμμένην ἔχων τὴν χεῖρα, 2. καὶ [b] παρετήρουν[2] αὐτὸν εἰ τοῖς σάββασι θεραπεύσει αὐτόν, ἵνα κατηγορήσωσιν αὐτοῦ. 3. καὶ λέγει τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ ἐξηραμμένην ἔχοντι τὴν χεῖρα,[3] "Ἔγειραι[4] εἰς τὸ μέσον." 4. Καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ἔξεστι τοῖς σάββασιν ἀγαθοποιῆσαι,[5] ἢ κακοποιῆσαι; ψυχὴν σῶσαι, ἢ ἀποa Ch. ix. 18.

b Lk. vi. 6; xiv. 1; xx. 20. Acts ix. 24.

[1] ℵB omit την, which may have come in from Lk. (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] So in ℵBL. CDΔΣ have the middle (Lk.).

[3] τω την χειρα εχοντι ξηραν in BL (W.H.). ℵCΔ have την ξηραν χειρα εχοντι (Tisch.).

[4] εγειρε in most uncials.

[5] αγαθον ποιησαι in ℵD (Tisch.). BCLΔΣ have αγαθοπ. as in T.R. (possibly assimilated to κακοποιησαι, W.H.).

Ἀβιάθαρ ἀρ.: under A., a note of time, also implying his sanction: the sanction of a distinguished sacerdotal character = of Abiathar as priest. But Ahimelech was the priest then (1 Sam. xxi. 2 f.). Either a natural error arising from the close connection of David with Abiathar, the well-known high priest, or we must adopt one or other of the solutions proposed: father and son, Ahimelech and Abiathar, both bore both names (1 Sam. xxii. 20, 2 Sam. viii. 17, 1 Chron. xviii. 16)—so the Fathers; Abiathar, the son, Ahimelech's assistant at the time, and mentioned as the more notable as approving of the conduct of his own father and of David (Grotius); ἐπὶ taken in the sense it bears in Mk. xii. 26 (ἐπὶ βάτου)—in the passage about Abiathar—not a satisfactory suggestion.—Ver. 27. καὶ ἔλεγεν, etc., and He said to them; this phrase is employed to introduce a saying of Jesus containing a great principle. The principle is that the Sabbath is only a means towards an end—man's highest good. Strange that Mk. should have been allowed to have a monopoly of this great word! For this saying alone, and the parable of gradual growth (iv. 26-29), his Gospel was worth preserving. —Ver. 28. ὥστε: wherefore, so then, introducing a thesis of co-ordinate importance, while an inference from the previous statement.—ὁ υἱὸς τ. ἀ.: the Son of Man, as representing the human interest, as opposed to the falsely conceived divine interest championed by the Pharisees.—καὶ τ. σ., even of the Sabbath, so inviolable in your eyes. Lord, not to abolish but to interpret and keep in its own place, and give it a new name.

CHAPTER III. THE SABBATH QUESTION CONTINUED. THE DISCIPLE-CIRCLE. Another Sabbatic conflict completes the group of incidents (five in all) designed to illustrate the opposition of the scribes and Pharisees to Jesus. Then at v. 7 begins a new section of the history, extending to vi. 13, in which the disciples of Jesus are, speaking broadly, the centre of interest. First the people, then their religious heads, then the nucleus of the new society.

Vv. 1-6. The withered hand (Mt. xii. 9-14, Lk. vi. 6-11).—Ver. 1. καὶ: connection simply topical, another instance of collision in re Sabbath observance.—πάλιν: as was His wont on Sabbath days (i. 21, 39). —συναγωγήν: without the article (ℵB), into a synagogue, place not known.—ἐξηραμμένην, dried up, the abiding result of injury by accident or disease, not congenital—"non ex utero, sed morbo aut vulnere; haec vis participii," Beng.—Ver. 2. παρετήρουν, they were watching Him; who, goes without saying: the same parties, i.e., men of the same class, as those who figure in the last section. This time bent on finding Jesus Himself at fault in re the Sabbath, instinctively perceiving that His thoughts on the subject must be wholly diverse from theirs.—Ver. 3. ἔγειρε εἰς: pregnant construction = arise and come forth into the midst. Then, the man standing up in presence of all, Jesus proceeds to catechise the would-be fault-finders.—Ver. 4. ἀγαθὸν ποιῆσαι ἢ κακοποιῆσαι, either: to do good or evil to one, or to do the morally good or evil. Recent commentators favour the latter as essential to the cogency of Christ's argument. But the former seems more consonant to κτεῖναι;" Οἱ δὲ ἐσιώπων. 5. καὶ ᶜπεριβλεψάμενος αὐτοὺς μετ' ὀργῆς, ᵈσυλλυπούμενος ἐπὶ τῇ ᵉπωρώσει τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, λέγει τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, "Ἔκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου."[1] Καὶ ἐξέτεινε, καὶ ἀποκατεστάθη ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ ὑγιὴς ὡς ἡ ἄλλη.[2] 6. Καὶ ἐξελθόντες οἱ Φαρισαῖοι εὐθέως μετὰ τῶν Ἡρωδιανῶν συμβούλιον ἐποίουν[3] κατ' αὐτοῦ, ὅπως αὐτὸν ἀπολέσωσι.

c Lk. vi. 10 and several times elsewhere; in Mk. always in mid.
d here only in N.T.
e Rom. xi. 25. Eph. iv. 18.

7. ΚΑΙ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνεχώρησε μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ[4] πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ πολὺ πλῆθος ἀπὸ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ἠκολούθησαν[5] αὐτῷ,[5] καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας, 8. καὶ ἀπὸ Ἱεροσολύμων, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰδουμαίας, καὶ πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου· καὶ οἱ[6] περὶ Τύρον καὶ Σιδῶνα,

[1] B omits σου (W.H. χειρα without σου in marg.).

[2] υγιης ως η αλλη has little attestation; comes from Mt.

[3] εδιδουν in BL; unusual and therefore altered into εποιουν, or εποιησαν.

[4] μετα τ. μ. α. ανεχωρησεν in ℵBCDLΔ al.; the true reading, vide below.

[5] ηκολουθησεν and without αυτω in ℵBCL. The position of the verb in the sentence varies.

[6] Omit οι ℵBCLΔ.

the situation. It was a question of performing an act of healing. Christ assumes that the ethically good coincides with the humane (Sabbath made for man). Therein essentially lay the difference between Him and the Pharisees, in whose theory and practice religious duty and benevolence, the divine and the human, were divorced. To do good or to do evil, these the only alternatives: to omit to do good in your power is to do evil; not to save life when you can is to destroy it.—ἐσιώπων, they were silent, sullenly, but also in sheer helplessness. What could they reply to a question which looked at the subject from a wholly different point of view, the ethical, from the legal one they were accustomed to? There was nothing in common between them and Jesus.—Ver. 5. περιβλεψάμενος, having made a swift, indignant (μετ' ὀργῆς) survey of His foes.—συλλυπούμενος: this present, the previous participle aorist, implying habitual pity for men in such a condition of blindness. This is a true touch of Mk.'s in his portraiture of Christ.—τῆς καρδίας: singular, as if the whole class had but one heart, which was the fact so far as the type of heart (hardened) was concerned.—Ver. 6. ἐξελθόντες: the stretching forth of the withered hand in obedience to Christ's command, conclusive evidence of cure, was the signal for an immediate exodus of the champions of orthodox Sabbath-keeping; full of wrath because the Sabbath was broken, and especially because it was broken by a miracle bringing fame to the transgressor—the result plots (συμβούλιον ἐδίδουν, here only) without delay (εὐθὺς) against His life.—μετὰ τῶν Ἡρῳδιανῶν, with the Herodians, peculiar to Mk.; first mention of this party. A perfectly credible circumstance. The Pharisaic party really aimed at the life of Jesus, and they would naturally regard the assistance of people having influence at court as valuable.

Vv. 7-12. The fame of Jesus spreads notwithstanding (vide Mt. iv. 25, xii. 15 f.; Lk. vi. 17-19).—Ver. 7. μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν, with the disciples: note—they now come to the front. We are to hear something about them to which the notice of the great crowd is but the prelude. Hence the emphatic position before the verb.—πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν: as if to a place of retreat (vide ver. 9). πολὺ πλῆθος: πολὺ, emphatic, a vast, exceptionally great crowd, in spite, possibly in consequence, of Pharisaic antagonism. Of course this crowd did not gather in an hour. The history is very fragmentary, and blanks must be filled up by the imagination. Two crowds meet—(1) πολὺ πλῆθος from Galilee; (2) from more remote parts: Judaea, Jerusalem, Idumaea, Peraea, and the district of Tyre and Sidon—πλῆθος πολύ (ver. 8): a considerable crowd, but not so great.—ἀπο τ. Ἰδουμαίας: Idumaea, mentioned here only, "then practically the southern f here only in sense of crowding. Cf. Mt. vii. 14. Elsewhere metaphorical.

g here only in same sense.
h here and in Mt. xii. 16 (= to make one known).

πλῆθος πολύ, ἀκούσαντες[1] ὅσα ἐποίει,[1] ἦλθον πρὸς αὐτόν. 9. καὶ εἶπε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, ἵνα πλοιάριον προσκαρτερῇ αὐτῷ, διὰ τὸν ὄχλον, ἵνα μὴ [f]θλίβωσιν αὐτόν. 10. πολλοὺς γὰρ ἐθεράπευσεν, ὥστε [g]ἐπιπίπτειν αὐτῷ, ἵνα αὐτοῦ ἅψωνται, ὅσοι εἶχον μάστιγας· 11. καὶ τὰ πνεύματα τὰ ἀκάθαρτα, ὅταν αὐτὸν ἐθεώρει,[2] προσέπιπτεν[2] αὐτῷ, καὶ ἔκραζε,[2] λέγοντα, "Ὅτι σὺ εἶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ." 12. Καὶ πολλὰ ἐπετίμα αὐτοῖς, ἵνα μὴ αὐτὸν [h]φανερὸν ποιήσωσι.[3] 13. Καὶ ἀναβαίνει εἰς τὸ ὄρος, καὶ προσκαλεῖται οὓς ἤθελεν αὐτός· καὶ ἀπῆλθον πρὸς αὐτόν. 14. καὶ ἐποίησε δώδεκα,[4] ἵνα ὦσι μετ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἵνα ἀποστέλλῃ αὐτοὺς κηρύσσειν, 15. καὶ ἔχειν ἐξουσίαν θεραπεύειν τὰς νόσους, καὶ[5] ἐκβάλλειν τὰ δαιμόνια· 16. καὶ

[1] ακουοντες in ℵBD; ποιει in BL (W.H.).

[2] εθεωρουν, προσεπιπτον, εκραζον in best MSS. The sing. a gram. cor. (neut. pl. nom.).

[3] ποιωσι in B[3]DL, as in T.R. in ℵBCΔΣ (Tisch. former, W.H. latter).

[4] ℵBCΔ add ους και αποστολους ωνομασε, probably an importation from Lk.

[5] θεραπευειν τους νοσους και omitted in ℵBCLΔ.

Shephelah, with the Negeb."—G. A. Smith, Historical Geography of the Holy Land, p. 239. Mentioned by Josephus (B. J., iii. 3-5) as a division of Judaea.—Ver. 9. ἵνα πλοιάριον προσκαρτερῇ: a boat to be always in readiness, to get away from the crowds. Whether used or not not said; shows how great the crowd was.—Ver. 10. ὥστε ἐπιπίπτειν: so that they knocked against Him; one of Mk.'s vivid touches. They hoped to obtain a cure by contact anyhow brought about, even by rude collision.—μάστιγας, from μάστιξ, a scourge, hence tropically in Sept. and N. T., a providential scourge, a disease; again in v. 29, 34.—Ver. 11. ὅταν ἐθ. In a relative clause like this, containing a past general supposition, classical Greek has the optative without ἄν. Here we have the imperfect indicative with ἄν (ὅτε ἄν). Vide Klotz., ad Devar, p. 690, and Burton, M. and T., § 315. Other examples in chap. vi. 56, xi. 19.—προσέπιπτον, fell before (ἐπιπίπτειν, above, to fall against).—Σὺ εἶ ὁ υ. τ. θ.: again an instance of spiritual clairvoyance in demoniacs. Vide at Mt. viii. 29.—Ver. 12. This sentence is reproduced in Mt. xii. 16, but without special reference to demoniacs, whereby it loses much of its point.

Vv. 13-19a. Selection of the Twelve (cf. Mt. x. 2-4, Lk. vi. 12-16).—Ver. 13. εἰς τὸ ὄρος. He ascends to the hill; same expression as in Mt. v. 1; reference not to any particular hill, but to the hill country flanking the shore of the lake; might be used from whatever point below the ascent was made.—προσκαλεῖται, etc., He calls to Him those whom He Himself (αὐτός after the verb, emphatic) wished, whether by personal communication with each individual, or through disciples, not indicated. It was an invitation to leave the vast crowd and follow Him up the hill; addressed to a larger number than twelve, from whom the Twelve were afterwards selected.—ἀπῆλθον π. α.: they left the crowd and followed after Him.—Ver. 14. He is now on the hill top, surrounded by a body of disciples, perhaps some scores, picked out from the great mass of followers.—καὶ ἐποίησε δώδεκα: and He made, constituted as a compact body, Twelve, by a second selection. For use of ποιεῖν in this sense vide 1 Sam. xii. 6, Acts ii. 36, Heb. iii. 2. God "made" Jesus as Jesus "made" the Twelve. What the process of "making" in the case of the Twelve consisted in we do not know. It might take place after days of close intercourse on the hill.—ἵνα ὦσιν μετ' αὐτοῦ, that they might be (constantly) with Him; first and very important aim of the making, mentioned only by Mk—training contemplated.—ἵνα ἀποστέλλῃ: to send them out on a preaching and healing mission, also in view, but only after a while. This verb frequent in Mk. Note the absence of τοῦ before κηρύσσειν and ἔχειν (ver. 15).—Ver. 16. καὶ ἐποίησεν τ. δ., and He

[i] ἐπέθηκε[1] τῷ Σίμωνι ὄνομα[2] Πέτρον· 17. καὶ Ἰάκωβον τὸν τοῦ Ζεβεδαίου, καὶ Ἰωάννην τὸν ἀδελφὸν τοῦ Ἰακώβου· καὶ ἐπέθηκεν αὐτοῖς ὀνόματα Βοανεργές,[3] ὅ ἐστιν, Υἱοὶ βροντῆς· 18. καὶ Ἀνδρέαν, καὶ Φίλιππον, καὶ Βαρθολομαῖον, καὶ Ματθαῖον, καὶ Θωμᾶν, καὶ Ἰάκωβον τὸν τοῦ Ἀλφαίου, καὶ Θαδδαῖον, καὶ Σίμωνα τὸν Κανανίτην,[4] 19. καὶ Ἰούδαν Ἰσκαριώτην,[5] ὃς καὶ παρέδωκεν αὐτόν.

Καὶ ἔρχονται[6] εἰς οἶκον· 20. καὶ συνέρχεται πάλιν[7] ὄχλος, ὥστε μὴ δύνασθαι αὐτοὺς μήτε[8] ἄρτον φαγεῖν. 21. καὶ ἀκούσαντες [j] οἱ i here and in ver. 17 only in sense of adding a name.

j the phrase here only in N.T. (1 Macc. ii. 17; xiii. 52).

[1] To και επεθηκε ℵBCΔ prefix και εποιησε τους δ.; a probable reading, vide below.

[2] ονομα τω Σιμωνι in ℵBCLΔ.

[3] Βοανηργες in ℵABCLΔ 33.

[4] Καναναιον in ℵBCDLΔ 33 it. vulg.

[5] Ισκαριωθ in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[6] ερχεται in ℵB. The plural (T.R.) is a correction.

[7] ο before οχλος in ℵBDL (W.H. bracketed).

[8] μητε in ℵBDΣ (Tisch.). μηδε in BLΔ 33 (W.H.).

appointed as the Twelve—the following persons, the twelve names mentioned being the object of ἐποίησε, and τοὺς δ. being in apposition.—Πέτρον is the first name, but it comes in very awkwardly as the object of the verb ἐπέθηκε. We must take the grammar as it stands, content that we know, in spite of crude construction, what is meant. Fritzsche (after Beza, Erasmus, etc.) seeks to rectify the construction by prefixing, on slender critical authority, πρῶτον Σίμωνα, then bracketing as a parenthesis καὶ ἐπέθηκε . . . Πέτρον = first Simon (and He gave to Simon the name Peter).—Ver. 17. Βοανεργές = בְּנֵי רְגֶשׁ as pronounced by Galileans; in Syrian = sons of thunder; of tumult, in Hebrew. Fact mentioned by Mk. only. Why the name was given not known. It does not seem to have stuck to the two disciples, therefore neglected by the other evangelists. It may have been an innocent pleasantry in a society of free, unrestrained fellowship, hitting off some peculiarity of the brothers. Mk. gives us here a momentary glimpse into the inner life of the Jesus-circle—Peter, whose new name did live, doubtless the voucher. The traditional interpretation makes the epithet a tribute to the eloquence of the two disciples (διὰ τὸ μέγα καὶ διαπρύσιον ἠχῆσαι τῇ οἰκουμένῃ τῆς θεολογίας τὰ δόγματα. Victor Ant.).—Ver. 18. Ματθαῖον. One wonders why Mk. did not here say: Levi, to whom He gave the name Matthew. Or did this disciple get his new name independently of Jesus? This list of names shows the importance of the act of selecting the Twelve. He gives the names, says Victor Ant., that you may not err as to the designations, lest any one should call himself an apostle (ἵνα μὴ ὁ τυχὼν εἴπῃ ἀπόστολος γεγονέναι).

Vv. 19b-21. The friends of Jesus think Him out of His senses; peculiar to Mk. One of his realisms which Mt. and Lk. pass over in silence.—Ver. 19b. καὶ ἔρχεται εἰς οἶκον, and He cometh home ("nach Haus," Weizs.) to house-life as distinct from hill-life (εἰς τὸ ὄρος, ver. 13). The formal manner in which this is stated suggests a sojourn on the hill of appreciable length, say, for some days. How occupied there? Probably in giving a course of instruction to the disciple-circle; say, that reproduced in the "Sermon on the Mount" = the "Teaching on the Hill," vide introductory notes on Mt. v.—Ver. 20. The traditional arrangement by which clause b forms part of ver. 19 is fatal to a true conception of the connection of events. The R. V., by making it begin a new section, though not a new verse, helps intelligence, but it would be better still if it formed a new verse with a blank space left between. Some think that in the original form of Mk. the Sermon on the Mount came in here. It is certainly a suitable place for it. In accordance with the above suggestion the text would stand thus:—

Ver. 19. And Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed Him.

Ver. 20. And He cometh home.

Ver. 21. And the multitude cometh together again, etc.

συνέρχεται: the crowd, partially disk 2 Cor. v. 13.

1 Ch. ix. 29; xvi. 17.

παρ' αὐτοῦ ἐξῆλθον κρατῆσαι αὐτόν· ἔλεγον γάρ, "Ὅτι [k] ἐξέστη."

22. Καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς οἱ ἀπὸ Ἱεροσολύμων καταβάντες ἔλεγον, "Ὅτι Βεελζεβοὺλ ἔχει," καὶ "Ὅτι ἐν τῷ ἄρχοντι τῶν δαιμονίων

persed, reassembles (implying lapse of an appreciable interval). Jesus had hoped they would go away to their homes in various parts of the country during His absence on the hill, but He was disappointed. They lingered on.—ὥστε, etc.: the crowding about the house and the demand for sight and succour of the Benefactor were so great that they (Jesus and His companions) could not find leisure not even (μηδὲ) to take food, not to speak of rest, or giving instruction to disciples. Erasmus (Adnot.) thinks the reference is to the multitude, and the meaning that it was so large that there was not bread for all, not to speak of kitchen (obsonia).—Ver. 21 introduces a new scene into the lively drama. The statement is obscure partly owing to its brevity (Fritzsche), and it is made obscurer by a piety which is not willing to accept the surface meaning (so Maldonatus—"hunc locum difficiliorem pietas facit"), which is that the friends of Jesus, having heard of what was going on—wonderful cures, great crowds, incessant activity—set out from where they were (ἐξῆλθον) with the purpose of taking Him under their care (κρατῆσαι αὐτόν), their impression, not concealed (ἔλεγον γὰρ, they had begun to say), being that He was in an unhealthy state of excitement bordering on insanity (ἐξέστη). Recent commentators, German and English, are in the main agreed that this is the true sense.—οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ means either specifically His relatives ("sui" Vulg., οἱ οἰκεῖοι α.—Theophy), so Raphel, Wetstein, Kypke, Loesner, with citations from Greek authors, Meyer and Weiss, identifying the parties here spoken of with those referred to in ver. 31; or, more generally, persons well disposed towards Jesus, an outer circle of disciples (Schanz and Keil).—ἀκούσαντες: not to be restricted to what is mentioned in ver. 20; refers to the whole Galilean ministry with its cures and crowds, and constant strain. Therefore the friends might have come from a distance, Nazareth, e.g., starting before Jesus descended from the hill. That their arrival happened just then was a coincidence.—ἔλεγον γὰρ: for they were saying, might refer to others than those who came to lay hold of Jesus—to messengers who brought them news of what was going on (Bengel), or it might refer quite impersonally to a report that had gone abroad ("rumor exierat," Grotius), or it might even refer to the Pharisees. But the reference is almost certainly to the friends. Observe the parallelism between οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ, ἔλεγον γὰρ, ὅτι ἐξέστη and οἱ γραμματεῖς, οἱ ἔλεγον, ὅτι βεελ. ἔχει in ver. 22 (Fritzsche points this out in a long and thorough discussion of the whole passage).—ἐξέστη: various ways of evading the idea suggested by this word have been resorted to. It has been referred to the crowd = the crowd is mad, and won't let Him alone. Viewed as referring to Jesus it has been taken = He is exhausted, or He has left the place = they came to detain Him, for they heard that He was going or had gone. Both these are suggested by Euthy. Zig. Doubtless the reference is to Jesus, and the meaning that in the opinion of His friends He was in a state of excitement bordering on insanity (cf. ii. 12, v. 42, vi. 51). δαίμονα ἔχει (Theophy.) is too strong, though the Jews apparently identified insanity with possession. Festus said of St. Paul: "Much learning doth make thee mad". The friends of Jesus thought that much benevolence had put Him into a state of enthusiasm dangerous to the health both of body and mind. Note: Christ's healing ministry created a need for theories about it. Herod had his theory (Mt. xiv.), the friends of Jesus had theirs, and the Pharisees theirs: John redivivus, disordered mind, Satanic possession. That which called forth so many theories must have been a great fact.

Vv. 22-30. Pharisaic theory as to the cures of demoniacs wrought by Jesus (Mt. xii. 22-37, Lk. xv. 17-23).—Ver. 22. οἱ γραμ. οἱ ἀπὸ Ἱ., the scribes from Jerusalem. The local Pharisees who had taken the Herodians into their murderous counsels had probably also communicated with the Jerusalem authorities, using all possible means to compass their end. The representatives of the southern scribes had probably arrived on the scene about the same time as the friends of Jesus, although it is not inconceivable that Mk. introduces the narrative regarding them here because ἐκβάλλει τὰ δαιμόνια."[m] 23. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος αὐτούς, ἐν παραβολαῖς ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Πῶς δύναται Σατανᾶς Σατανᾶν ἐκβάλλειν; 24. καὶ ἐὰν βασιλεία ἐφ' ἑαυτὴν μερισθῇ, οὐ δύναται σταθῆναι ἡ βασιλεία ἐκείνη· 25. καὶ ἐὰν οἰκία ἐφ' ἑαυτὴν μερισθῇ, οὐ δύναται[1] σταθῆναι ἡ οἰκία ἐκείνη[2]· 26. καὶ εἰ ὁ Σατανᾶς ἀνέστη ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν καὶ μεμέρισται,[3] οὐ δύναται σταθῆναι,[4] ἀλλὰ τέλος ἔχει. 27. οὐ[5] δύναται οὐδεὶς τὰ[6] σκεύη τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ, εἰσελθὼν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν[6] αὐτοῦ, διαρπάσαι, ἐὰν μὴ πρῶτον ἰσχυρὸν δήσῃ, καὶ τότε τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ διαρπάσει. 28. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι πάντα ἀφεθήσεται τὰ [m] ἁμαρτήματα τοῖς υἱοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων,[7] καὶ[8]

m Rom. iii. 25. 1 Cor. vi. 18.

[1] δυνησεται in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.). δυναται conforms to ver. 24.

[2] η οικια εκεινη στηναι in BL (Trg., W.H.). σταθηναι in ℵCD (Tisch.).

[3] και εμερισθη in BL (W.H.), εμερισθη και in ℵCΔ (Tisch.).

[4] στηναι in ℵBCL (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] αλλ before ου in ℵBCLΔ 33 al.

[6] εις την οικιαν του ισχυρου εισελθων τα σκευη αυτου in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[7] τα αμαρ. after ανθρωπων in ℵABCDL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[8] αι after και in ℵABCEFGLΔΣ (Tisch., W.H.).

of the resemblances and contrasts between their theory and that of the friends. Mt. sets the incident in different relations, yielding a contrast between Pharisaic ideas and those of the people respecting the cure of demoniacs by Jesus (xii. 22 f.).—Βεελζεβοὺλ ἔχει, He hath Beelzebub, implying that Beelzebub hath Him, using Him as his agent. The expression points to something more than an alliance, as in Mt., to possession, and that on a grand scale; a divine possession by a base deity doubtless, god of flies (Beelzebub) or god of dung (Beelzebul), still a god, a sort of Satanic incarnation; an involuntary compliment to the exceptional power and greatness of Jesus.—ἐν τῷ ἄρχοντι τ. δ.: the assumption is that spirits are cast out by the aid of some other spirit stronger than those ejected.—Ver. 23. προσκαλεσάμενος: Jesus, not overawed by the Jerusalem authorities, invites them to come within talking distance, that He may reason the matter with them.—ἐν παραβολαῖς, in figures: kingdom, house, plundering the house of a strong man. Next chapter concerning the parabolic teaching of Jesus casts its shadow on the page here. The gist of what Jesus said to the scribes in refutation of their theory is: granting that spirits are cast out by aid of another spirit, more is needed in the latter than superior strength. There must be qualitative difference—in nature and interest. The argument consists of a triple movement of thought. 1. The absurdity of the theory is broadly asserted. 2. The principle on which the theory is wrecked is set forth in concrete form. 3. The principle is applied to the case in hand. —πῶς δύναται, etc., how can Satan cast out Satan? It is not a question of power, but of motive, what interest can he have? A stronger spirit casting out a weaker one of the same kind? (so Fritzsche).—Vv. 24, 25 set forth the principle or rationale embodied in two illustrations. The theory in question is futile because it involves suicidal action, which is not gratuitously to be imputed to any rational agents, to a kingdom (ver. 24), to a house (ver. 25), and therefore not to Satan (ver. 26).—Ver. 27 by another figure shows the true state of the case. Jesus, not in league with Satan or Beelzebub, but overmastering him, and taking possession of his goods, human souls. The saying is given by Mk. much the same as in Mt.

Vv. 28, 29. Jesus now changes His tone. Thus far He has reasoned with the scribes, now He solemnly warns to this effect. You do not believe your own theory; you know as well as I how absurd it is, and that I must be casting out devils by a very different spirit from βλασφημίαι ὅσας[1] ἂν βλασφημήσωσιν· 29. ὃς δ' ἂν βλασφημήσῃ εἰς τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον, οὐκ ἔχει ἄφεσιν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἀλλ' ἔνοχός ἐστιν[2] αἰωνίου κρίσεως[3]·" 30. ὅτι ἔλεγον, "Πνεῦμα ἀκάθαρτον ἔχει." 31. Ἔρχονται οὖν[4] οἱ ἀδελφοὶ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ[5] καὶ ἔξω ἑστῶτες[6] ἀπέστειλαν πρὸς αὐτόν, φωνοῦντες[7] αὐτόν. 32. καὶ ἐκάθητο ὄχλος περὶ αὐτόν·[8] εἶπον δὲ[9] αὐτῷ, "Ἰδού, ἡ μήτηρ σου

[1] οσα in ℵBDΔ. οσας a gram. cor.

[2] εσται in ℵDLΔ (Tisch.), εστιν in BC (W.H.).

[3] αμαρτηματος in ℵBLΔ 33 Lat. Codd. κρισεως (T.R.) is explanatory of a difficult word.

[4] For ερχ. ουν ABCLΔ have και ερχονται (W.H.). ℵD have και ερχεται.

[5] η μητηρ α. και οι αδελφοι in ℵBCDLΔ. The plural verb gave rise to the transposition in T.R.

[6] στηκοντες in BCΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[7] καλουντες in ℵBCL.

[8] περι αυτον οχλος in ABCLΔΣ.

[9] και λεγουσιν in ℵBCDLΔ.

Beelzebub. You are therefore not merely mistaken theorists, you are men in a very perilous moral condition. Beware!—Ver. 28. ἀμὴν: solemn word, introducing a solemn speech uttered in a tone not to be forgotten.—πάντα ἀφεθήσεται, all things shall be forgiven; magnificently broad proclamation of the wideness of God's mercy. The saying as reproduced in Lk. xii. 10 limits the reference to sins of speech. The original form, Weiss thinks (in Meyer), but this is very doubtful. It seems fitting that when an exception is being made to the pardonableness of sin, a broad declaration of the extent of pardon should be uttered.—τοῖς υἱοῖς τ. ἀ., to the sons of men; this expression not in Mt., but in its place a reference to blasphemy against the Son of Man. To suspect a literary connection between the two is natural. Which is the original form? Mk.'s? (Holtz., H. C., after Pfleiderer.) Mt.'s? (Weiss in Meyer.) The latter the more probable. Vide on ver. 30.—τὰ ἁμαρ. καὶ αἱ βλ.: either in apposition with and explicative of πάντα, or τὰ ἁμαρ., the subject which πάντα qualifies. The former construction yields this sense: all things shall be forgiven to, etc., the sins and the blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme. The last clause qualifying βλασφημίαι (ὅσα ἐὰν βλ.) which takes the place of πάντα in relation to ἁμαρτ. is in favour of the latter rendering = all sins shall be forgiven, etc., and the blasphemies, etc.—Ver. 29. The great exception, blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.—εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα: hath not forgiveness for ever. Cf. the fuller expression in Mt.—ἀλλ' ἔνοχός ἐστιν, but is guilty of. The negative is followed by a positive statement of similar import in Hebrew fashion.—αἰωνίου ἁμαρτήματος: of an eternal sin. As this is equivalent to "hath never forgiveness," we must conceive of the sin as eternal in its guilt, not in itself as a sin. The idea is that of an unpardonable sin, not of a sin eternally repeating itself. Yet this may be the ultimate ground of unpardonableness: unforgivable because never repented of. But this thought is not necessarily contained in the expression. —Ver. 30. ὅτι ἔλεγον, etc., because they said: "He hath an unclean spirit," therefore He said this about blasphemy against the Holy Ghost—such is the connection. But what if they spoke under a misunderstanding like the friends, puzzled what to think about this strange man? That would be a sin against the Son of Man, and as such pardonable. The distinction between blasphemy against the Son of Man and blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, taken in Mt. xii. 31, is essential to the understanding of Christ's thought. The mere saying, "He hath an unclean spirit," does not amount to the unpardonable sin. It becomes such when it is said by men who know that it is not true; then it means calling the Holy Spirit an unclean spirit. Jesus believed that the scribes were in that position, or near it.

Vv. 31-35. The relatives of Jesus (Mt. xii. 46-50, Lk. viii. 19-21).—Ver. 31. ἔρχονται, even without the οὖν following in T. R., naturally points back καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί σου [1] ἔξω ζητοῦσί σε". 33. Καὶ ἀπεκρίθη αὐτοῖς, λέγων, [2] "Τίς ἐστιν ἡ μήτηρ μου ἢ [3] οἱ ἀδελφοί μου [4];" 34. Καὶ περιβλεψάμενος [n] κύκλῳ τοὺς περὶ αὐτὸν [5] καθημένους, λέγει, "[n] Ἴδε, ἡ μήτηρ μου καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί μου. 35. ὃς γὰρ [6] ἂν ποιήσῃ τὸ θέλημα [7] τοῦ Θεοῦ, οὗτος ἀδελφός μου καὶ ἀδελφή μου [8] καὶ μήτηρ ἐστί."

n Ch. vi. 6. Lk. ix. 12. Rom. xv. 19. Rev. iv. 6; v. 11; vii. 11.

[1] D adds και αι αδελφαι σου, which may have fallen out by similar ending in ℵBCLΔ (W.H. margin).

[2] και αποκριθεις α. λεγει in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] και in ℵBCLΔ.

[4] BD omit this μου.

[5] τους περι α. κυκλω in ℵBCLΔ.

[6] γαρ omitted in B.

[7] τα θεληματα in B (W.H. margin).

[8] μου omitted in ℵABDLΔ.

to ver. 21. The evangelist resumes the story about Christ's friends, interrupted by the encounter with the scribes (so Grotius, Bengel, Meyer, Weiss, Holtz.; Schanz and Keil dissent).—στήκοντες, from στήκω, a late form used in present only, from ἕστηκα, perfect of ἵστημι.—Ver. 32. The crowd gathered around Jesus report the presence of His relatives. According to a reading in several MSS., these included sisters among those present. They might do so under a mistake, even though the sisters were not there. If the friends came to withdraw Jesus from public life, the sisters were not likely to accompany the party, though there would be no impropriety in their going along with their mother. They are not mentioned in ver. 31. On the other hand, ἀδελφὴ comes in appropriately in ver. 35 in recognition of female disciples, which may have suggested its introduction here.—Ver. 33. τίς ἐστιν, etc., who is my mother, and (who) my brothers? an apparently harsh question, but He knew what they had come for.—Ver. 34. περιβλεψάμενος, as in ver. 5, there in anger, here with a benign smile.—κύκλῳ: His eye swept the whole circle of His audience; a good Greek expression.—Ver. 35. ὃς ἂν, etc.: whosoever shall do the will of God ("of my Father in heaven," Mt.), definition of true discipleship.—ἀδελφός, ἀδελφή, μήτηρ: without the article, because the nouns are used figuratively (Fritzsche). This saying and the mood it expressed would confirm the friends in the belief that Jesus was in a morbid state of mind.

CHAPTER IV. PARABOLIC TEACHING. In common with Mt., Mk. recognises that teaching in parables became at a given date a special feature of Christ's didactic ministry. He gives, however, fewer samples of that type than the first evangelist. Two out of the seven in Mt., with one peculiar to himself, three in all; in this respect probably truer to the actual history of the particular day. Teaching in parables did not make an absolutely new beginning on the day on which the Parable of the Sower was spoken. Jesus doubtless used similitudes in all His synagogue discourses, of which a few samples may have been preserved in the Mustard Seed, the Treasure, and the Pearl.

Vv. 1-9. The Sower (Mt. xiii 1-9, Lk. viii. 4-8).—Ver. 1. πάλιν ἤρξατο. After spending some time in teaching disciples, Jesus resumes His wider ministry among the people in the open air: at various points along the shore of the sea (παρὰ τ. θ.). Speaking to larger crowds than ever (ὄχλος πλεῖστος), which could be effectively addressed only by the Speaker getting into a boat (πλοῖον, τὸ πλοῖον would point to the boat which Jesus had asked the disciples to have in readiness, iii. 9), and sailing out a little distance from the shore, the people standing on the land as close to the sea as possible (πρὸς τ. θ.).—Ver. 2. πολλά: a vague expression, but implying that the staple of that day's teaching consisted of parables, probably all more or less of the same drift as the parable of the Sower, indicating that in spite of the ever-growing crowds Jesus was dissatisfied with the results of His popular ministry in street and synagogue = much seed-sowing, little fruit. The formation of the disciple-circle had revealed that dissatisfaction in another way. Probably some of the parables spoken in the boat have not been preserved, the Sower

IV. 1. ΚΑΙ πάλιν ἤρξατο διδάσκειν παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ συνήχθη[1] πρὸς αὐτὸν ὄχλος πολύς,[2] ὥστε αὐτὸν ἐμβάντα εἰς τὸ πλοῖον[3] καθῆσθαι ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ· καὶ πᾶς ὁ ὄχλος πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἦν[4]. 2. καὶ ἐδίδασκεν αὐτοὺς ἐν παραβολαῖς πολλά, καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ, 3. "Ἀκούετε. ἰδού, ἐξῆλθεν ὁ σπείρων τοῦ[5] σπεῖραι· 4. καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ σπείρειν, ὃ μὲν ἔπεσε παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν, καὶ ἦλθε τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ[6] καὶ κατέφαγεν αὐτό. 5. ἄλλο δὲ[7] ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὸ πετρῶδες, ὅπου οὐκ εἶχε γῆν πολλήν· καὶ εὐθέως ἐξανέτειλε, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν βάθος[8] γῆς· 6. ἡλίου δὲ ἀνατείλαντος[9] ἐκαυματίσθη,[10] καὶ διὰ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν

[1] συναγεται in ℵBCLΔ (modern editors).

[2] πλειστος in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H., al.).

[3] εις πλοιον εμβαντα in ℵBCL. DΔ have same order with το before πλοιον.

[4] ησαν in ℵBCLΔ 33. ην is a gram. cor.

[5] Omit του ℵB, found in CLΔ.

[6] Omit του ουρανου ℵABCLΔΣ.

[7] και αλλο (αλλα D 33) in ℵBCLΔ.

[8] βαθος γης in ℵACLΔΣ, but B has της γ., and perhaps this is the true reading, though recent editors adopt the other.

[9] και οτε ανετειλεν ο ηλιος in ℵBCLΔ. T.R. conforms to Mt.

[10] BD have εκαυματισθησαν (W.H. margin).

serving as a sample.—ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ α. In the teaching of that day He said inter alia what follows.—Ver. 3. ἀκούετε: hear! listen! a summons to attention natural for one addressing a great crowd from a boat quite compatible with ἰδού, which introduces the parable (against Weiss in Meyer). The parable is given here essentially as in Mt., with only slight variations: σπεῖραι (ver. 3) for σπείρειν; ὃ μὲν (ver. 4) for ἃ μεν, ἄλλο (vv. 5, 7) for ἄλλα. To the statement that the thorns choked the grain (συνέπνιξαν αὐτό), Mk. adds (ver. 7) καὶ καρπὸν οὐκ ἔδωκεν, an addition not superfluous in this case, as it would have been in the two previous, because the grain in this case reaches the green ear. To be noted further is the expansion in ver. 8, in reference to the seed sown on good soil, Mt. says it yielded fruit (ἐδίδου καρπὸν), Mk. adds ἀναβαίνοντα καὶ αὐξανόμενον, καὶ ἔφερεν, all three phrases referring to ἄλλα at the beginning of the verse. The participles taken along with ἐδίδου καρπὸν distinguish the result in the fourth case from those in the three preceding. The first did not spring up, being picked up by the birds, the second sprang up but did not grow, withered by the heat, the third sprouted and grew up but yielded no (ripe) fruit, choked by thorns (Grotius).—καὶ ἔφερεν introduces a statement as to the quantity of fruit, the degrees being arranged in a climax, 30, 60, 100, instead of in an anti-climax, as in Mt., 100, 60, 30.—Ver. 9. καὶ ἔλεγεν: this phrase is wanting in Mt., and the summons to reflection is more pithily expressed there = who hath ears let him hear. The summons implies that understanding is possible even for those without.

Vv. 10-12. Disciples ask an explanation of the parable (Mt. xiii. 10-17, Lk. viii. 9-10). Ver. 10. κατὰ μόνας (ὁδούς or χώρας understood), alone—οἱ περὶ αὐτὸν, those about Him, not = οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ (iii. 21), nor = the Twelve, who are separately mentioned (σὺν τ. δωδ.); an outer circle of disciples from which the Twelve were chosen.—τὰς παραβολάς, the parables, spoken that day. They asked Him about them, as to their meaning. The plural, well attested, implies that the parables of the day had a common drift. To explain one was to explain all. They were a complaint of the comparative fruitlessness of past efforts.—Ver. 11. ὑμῖν, to you has been given, so as to be a permanent possession, the ῥίζαν ἐξηράνθη. 7. καὶ ἄλλο ἔπεσεν εἰς τὰς ἀκάνθας· καὶ ἀνέβησαν αἱ ἄκανθαι, καὶ συνέπνιξαν αὐτό, καὶ καρπὸν οὐκ ἔδωκε. 8. καὶ ἄλλο[1] ἔπεσεν εἰς τὴν γῆν τὴν καλήν· καὶ ἐδίδου καρπὸν ἀναβαίνοντα καὶ αὐξάνοντα,[2] καὶ ἔφερεν ἓν[3] τριάκοντα, καὶ ἓν[3] ἑξήκοντα, καὶ ἓν[3] ἑκατόν." 9. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς,[4] "Ὁ ἔχων[5] ὦτα ἀκούειν ἀκουέτω." 10. Ὅτε δὲ[6] ἐγένετο [a] καταμόνας, ἠρώτησαν[7] αὐτὸν οἱ περὶ αὐτὸν σὺν τοῖς δώδεκα τὴν παραβολήν.[8] 11. καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὑμῖν δέδοται γνῶναι τὸ μυστήριον[9] τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἐκείνοις δὲ τοῖς ἔξω, ἐν παραβολαῖς τὰ πάντα γίνεται· 12. ἵνα βλέποντες βλέπωσι, καὶ μὴ ἴδωσι· καὶ ἀκούοντες ἀκούωσι, καὶ μὴ συνιῶσι· μήποτε ἐπιστρέψωσι, καὶ ἀφεθῇ αὐτοῖς τὰ ἁμαρτήματα."[10] 13. Καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Οὐκ οἴδατε τὴν παραβολὴν ταύτην; καὶ πῶς πάσας τὰς παραβολὰς γνώσεσθε; 14. ὁ σπείρων τὸν λόγον σπείρει. 15. οὗτοι δέ εἰσιν οἱ παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν, ὅπου σπείρεται ὁ λόγος, καὶ a here and in Lk. ix. 18.

[1] αλλα in ℵBCL. αλλο conforms to that in ver. 7.

[2] αυξανομενον in ACDLΔ (Tisch.). αυξανομενα in ℵB (W.H.) agreeing with αλλα.

[3] Most uncials have εν thrice (= ἓν). ℵCΔ have εις thrice (Tisch., Trg.). BL have εις εν εν (W.H. text), out of which the other readings probably grew.

[4] Most uncials and many verss. omit αυτοις.

[5] ℵBCDΔ have ος εχει., ο εχων is from parall.

[6] και οτε in ℵBCDLΔ.

[7] ηρωτων ABLΔ 33 (-ουν ℵC, Tisch.).

[8] τας παραβολας in ℵBCLΔ.

[9] το μυστηριον διδοται (without γνωναι) in ℵBL (Tisch., W.H.).

[10] ℵBCL omit τα αμαρτηματα, which is an explanatory gloss.

mystery of the Kingdom of God. They have been initiated into the secret, so that for them it is a secret no longer, not by explanation of the parable (Weiss), but independently. This true of them so far as disciples; discipleship means initiation into the mystery. In reality, it was only partially, and by comparison with the people, true of the disciples.—γνῶναι in T. R. is superfluous. —τοῖς ἔξω refers to the common crowd. —ἐν παραβολαῖς: all things take place as set forth in parables. This implies that the use of parables had been a standing feature of Christ's popular kerygma, in synagogue and street.—Ver. 12 seems to state the aim of the parabolic method of teaching as being to keep the people in the dark, and prevent them from being converted and forgiven. This cannot really have been the aim of Jesus. Vide notes on the parable of the Sower in Mt., where the statement is softened somewhat.

Vv. 13-20. Explanation of the Sower (Mt. xiii. 18-23, Lk. viii. 11-15), prefaced by a gentle reproach that explanation should be needed.—Ver. 13. οὐκ οἴδατε . . . γνώσεσθε: not one question = know ye not this parable, and how ye shall know all, etc. (so Meyer and Weiss), but two = know ye not this parable? and how shall ye, etc. (so most), the meaning being, not: if ye know not the simpler how shall ye know the more difficult? but rather implying that to understand the Sower was to understand all the parables spoken that day (πάσας τὰς παρ.). They had all really one burden: the disappointing result of Christ's past ministry.—Ver. 14, in effect, states that the seed is the word.—Ver. 15. οἱ παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν: elliptical for, those in whose case the seed falls along the way = the "way-side" men, and so in the other cases.—ὅπου for εἰς οὓς, Euthy. Zig.—Ver. 16. ὁμοίως would stand more naturally before οὗτοι = on the same method of interpretation.—σπειρόμενοι: this class are identified with the seed rather than with the soil, but the sense, though crudely expressed, ὅταν ἀκούσωσιν, εὐθέως ἔρχεται ὁ Σατανᾶς καὶ αἴρει τὸν λόγον τὸν ἐσπαρμένον ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν.[1] 16. καὶ οὗτοί εἰσιν ὁμοίως οἱ ἐπὶ τὰ πετρώδη σπειρόμενοι, οἵ, ὅταν ἀκούσωσι τὸν λόγον, εὐθέως μετὰ χαρᾶς λαμβάνουσιν αὐτόν, 17. καὶ οὐκ ἔχουσι ῥίζαν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ἀλλὰ πρόσκαιροί εἰσιν· εἶτα γενομένης θλίψεως ἢ διωγμοῦ διὰ τὸν λόγον, εὐθέως σκανδαλίζονται. 18. καὶ οὗτοί[2] εἰσιν οἱ εἰς τὰς ἀκάνθας σπειρόμενοι, οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ τὸν λόγον ἀκούοντες,[3] 19. καὶ αἱ μέριμναι τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου,[4] καὶ ἡ ἀπάτη τοῦ πλούτου, καὶ αἱ περὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἐπιθυμίαι εἰσπορευόμεναι συμπνίγουσι τὸν λόγον, καὶ ἄκαρπος γίνεται. 20. καὶ οὗτοί[5] εἰσιν οἱ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν τὴν καλὴν σπαρέντες, οἵτινες ἀκούουσι τὸν λόγον καὶ παραδέχονται, καὶ καρποφοροῦσιν, ἓν τριάκοντα, καὶ ἓν ἑξήκοντα, καὶ ἓν ἑκατόν." 21. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Μήτι[6] ὁ λύχνος ἔρχεται,[7] ἵνα ὑπὸ τὸν

[1] For εν τ. κ. α. (T.R.) B has εις αυτους (Trg., W.H.), ℵCLΔ εν αυτοις (Tisch.).
[2] αλλοι in ℵBCDLΔ.
[3] ακουσαντες in ℵBCDLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).
[4] τουτου is an explanatory gloss not found in the best MSS.
[5] εκεινοι in ℵBCLΔ.
[6] οτι before μητι in BL (Tisch., W.H.).
[7] ερχεται before ο λυχνος in ℵBCDLΔ.

is plain. They are the "rocky ground" men.—Ver. 18. ἄλλοι εἰσὶν, there are others; ἄλλοι, well attested (οὗτοί in T. R.), is significant. It fixes attention on the third type of hearers as calling for special notice. They are such as, lacking the thoughtlessness of the first and shallowness of the second class, and having some depth and earnestness, might be expected to be fruitful; a less common type and much more interesting. —Ver. 19 specifies the hindrances, the choking thorns—μέριμναι τ. α., cares of life, in the case of thoughtful devout poor (Mt. vi. 25 f.).—ἀπάτη τ. πλ., the deceitfulness of wealth in the case of the commercial class (Chorazin, Bethsaida, Capernaum: Mt. xi. 21-23. Vide notes there).—αἱ π. τ. λ. ἐπιθυμίαι, the lusts for other things—sensual vices in the case of publicans and sinners (chap. ii. 13-17). Jesus had met with such cases in His past ministry.—Ver. 20. παραδέχονται, receive, answering to συνιείς in Mt. This does not adequately differentiate the fourth class from the third, who also take in the word, but not it alone. Lk. has supplied the defect.—εν might be either ἓν = this one 30, that one 60, etc., or ἐν = in 30, and in 60, and in 100 = good, better, best, not inferior, respectable, admirable. The lowest degree is deemed satisfactory. On the originality of the interpretation and on the whole parable vide in Mt.

Vv. 21-25. Responsibilities of disciples (Mt. v. 15, x. 26, vii. 2; Lk. viii. 16-18). True to His uniform teaching that privileges are to be used for the benefit of others, Jesus tells His disciples that if they have more insight than the multitude they must employ it for the common benefit. These sentences in Mk. represent the first special instruction of the disciples. Two of them, vv. 21, 24, are found in the Sermon on the Mount (Mt. v. 15, vii. 2). The whole of them come in appositely here, and were probably spoken at this time. (Cf. Lk. viii. 16-18, where they are partially given in the same connection.) In any case, their introduction in connection with the parables is important as showing that Mk. can hardly have seriously believed, what he certainly seems to say, that Jesus spoke parables to blind the people.—Ver. 21. μήτι ἔρχεται, does the light come, for is it brought, in accordance with classic usage in reference to things without life; example in Kypke, e.g., οὐκ ἔμειν' ἐλθεῖν τράπεζαν νυμφίαν. Pindar, Pyth., iii., 28 = "non exspectavit donec adferretur mensa sponsalis".—ὑ. τ. κλίνην: not necessarily a table-couch (Meyer), might μόδιον τεθῇ ἢ ὑπὸ τὴν κλίνην; οὐχ ἵνα ἐπὶ τὴν λυχνίαν ἐπιτεθῇ [1]; 22. οὐ γάρ ἐστί τι κρυπτόν, ὃ ἐὰν μὴ [2] φανερωθῇ· οὐδὲ ἐγένετο ἀπόκρυφον, ἀλλ' ἵνα εἰς φανερὸν ἔλθῃ [3]· 23. εἴ τις ἔχει ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω." 24. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Βλέπετε τί ἀκούετε. ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε, μετρηθήσεται ὑμῖν, καὶ προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν τοῖς ἀκούουσιν.[4] 25. ὃς γὰρ ἂν ἔχῃ,[5] δοθήσεται αὐτῷ· καὶ ὃς οὐκ ἔχει, καὶ ὃ ἔχει ἀρθήσεται ἀπ' αὐτοῦ."

26. Καὶ ἔλεγεν, "Οὕτως ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὡς ἐὰν [6]

[1] τεθη in ℵBCDLΔ al.

[2] Instead of ο εαν μη ℵBΔ have εαν μη ινα (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] ελθη εις φαν. in ℵCDLΔ.

[4] τοις ακουουσιν is a gloss, omitted in ℵBCDLΔ.

[5] For αν εχη ℵBCLΔ have εχει.

[6] ℵBDLΔ 33 al. omit εαν.

be a bed, high enough to be in no danger of being set on fire. Vide on Mt. v. 15. The moral: let your light shine that others may know what ye know.—Ver. 22. Double statement of the law that the hidden is to be revealed; 1st, predictively: there is nothing hidden which shall not be revealed; 2nd, interpretatively, with reference to the purpose of the hider: nor did anything become concealed with any other view than that it should eventually come to manifestation. —ἀπόκρυφον (ἀποκρύπτω), here and in Lk. viii. 17, Col. ii. 3.—ἀλλ': in effect = εἰ μὴ nisi, but strictly ἐγένετο ἀπόκρυφον is understood to be repeated after it = nothing becomes concealed absolutely, but it is concealed in order that, etc. This is universally true. Things are hid because they are precious, but precious things are meant to be used at some time and in some way. All depends on the time and the way, and it is there that diversity of action comes in. Christ's rule for that was: show your light when it will glorify God and benefit men; the world's rule is: when safe and beneficial to self.—Ver. 23. In ver. 9 a summons to try to understand the parable; here a summons to those who have understood, or shall understand, the parable, or the great theme of all the parables, to communicate their knowledge. Fritzsche, after Theophy. and Grot., thinks that in vv. 21, 22, Jesus exhorts His disciples to the culture of piety or virtue, not to the diffusion of their light, giving, as a reason, that the latter would be inconsistent with the professed aim of the parables to prevent enlightenment!—Ver. 24. βλέπετε, etc., take heed what you hear or how (πῶς, Lk.), see that ye hear to purpose.—ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ, etc. = careful hearing pays, the reward of attention is knowledge (ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε τὴν προσοχὴν ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ μετρηθήσεται ὑμῖν ἡ γνῶσις, Euthy. Zig.). In Mt. vii. 2 the apothegm is applied to judging. Such moral maxims admit of many applications. The idea of measuring does not seem very appropriate here. Holtz. (H. C.) thinks ver. 24 interrupts the connection.—προστεθήσεται implies that the reward will be out of proportion to the virtue; the knowledge acquired to the study devoted to the subject. There shall be given over and above, not to those who hear (T. R., τοῖς ἀκούουσιν), but to those who think on what they hear. This thought introduces ver. 25, which, in this connection, means: the more a man thinks the more he will understand, and the less a man thinks the less his power of understanding will become. "Whoso hath attention, knowledge will be given to him, and from him who hath not, the seed of knowledge will be taken. For as diligence causes that seed to grow, negligence destroys it," Euthy.

Vv. 26-29. Parable of the Blade, the Ear, and the Full Corn.—Peculiar to Mark and beyond doubt a genuine utterance of Jesus, the doctrine taught being over the head of the reporter and the Apostolic Church generally.—Ver. 26. καὶ ἔλεγεν, and He said, to whom? The disciples in private, or the crowd from the boat? The absence of αὐτοῖς after ἔλεγεν (cf. vv. 21, 24) is not conclusive against the former, as Weiss and Meyer think. On the latter view vv. 21-25 are a parenthesis. In any case this new parable refers to the disciples as representing the fertile soil, and is a pendant to the parable of the Sower, teaching that even in the case of ἄνθρωπος βάλῃ τὸν σπόρον ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, 27. καὶ καθεύδῃ καὶ ἐγείρηται νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν, καὶ ὁ σπόρος βλαστάνῃ [1] καὶ μηκύνηται [2] ὡς οὐκ οἶδεν αὐτός. 28. [b] αὐτομάτη γὰρ [3] ἡ γῆ καρποφορεῖ, πρῶτον χόρτον, εἶτα [4] στάχυν, εἶτα [4] πλήρη σῖτον [5] ἐν τῷ στάχυϊ. 29. ὅταν δὲ παραδῷ [6] ὁ καρπός, εὐθέως ἀποστέλλει τὸ δρέπανον, ὅτι [c] παρέστηκεν ὁ θερισμός."

b here and in Acts xii. 10.

c here only in the sense of being present.

30. Καὶ ἔλεγε, "Τίνι [7] ὁμοιώσωμεν τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ; ἢ ἐν ποίᾳ παραβολῇ παραβάλωμεν αὐτήν [8]; 31. ὡς κόκκῳ σινάπεως, ὅς, ὅταν σπαρῇ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, μικρότερος [9] πάντων τῶν σπερμά-

[1] βλαστα in BCDLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] μηκυνεται in BD, implying that βλαστα is also indicative.

[3] γαρ omit ℵABCL.

[4] ειτεν in ℵBLΔ.

[5] πληρης σιτος in BD (Alford, Tisch., Trg., W.H.). CΣ have πληρης σιτον, which W.H. (appendix) regard as probably the true reading, πληρης being an indeclinable adjective as in Acts vi. 5. Weiss, on the other hand, regards this reading of CΣ as a half correction.

[6] παραδοι in ℵBDΔ. CL have παραδω.

[7] πως in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H. al.).

[8] εν τινι αυτην παραβολη θωμεν in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[9] μικροτερον ον in ℵBL(ων)Δ 33, εστι (in T.R. supplying the place of ον) being omitted (Tisch., W.H.).

the fourth type of hearers the production of fruit is a gradual process demanding time. Put negatively it amounts to saying that Christ's ministry has as yet produced no fruit properly speaking at all, but only in some cases met with a soil that gives promise of fruit (the disciples). The parable reveals at once the discrimination and the patience of Jesus. He knew the difference between the blade that would wither and that which would issue in ripe grain, and He did not expect this result in any case per saltum. A parable teaching this lesson was very seasonable after that of the Sower.—Ver. 27. καθεύδῃ . . . ἡμέραν, sleep and rise night and day, suggestive of the monotonous life of a man who has nothing particular to do beyond waiting patiently for the result of what he has already done (seed sown). The presents express a habit, while βάλῃ, ver. 26, expresses an act, done once for all.—βλαστᾷ (the reading in BDL, etc., as if from βλαστάω) may be either indicative or subjunctive, the former if we adopt the reading μηκύνεται (BD., etc.) = and the seed sprouts and lengthens.—ὡς οὐκ οἶδεν αὐτός, how knoweth not (nor careth) he, perfectly indifferent to the rationale of growth; the fact enough for him.—Ver. 28. αὐτομάτη (αὐτός and μέμαα from absolute μάω, to desire eagerly), self-moved, spontaneously, without external aid, and also beyond external control; with a way and will, so to speak, of its own that must be respected and waited for. Classical examples in Wetstein, Kypke, Raphel, etc.—καρποφορεῖ, beareth fruit, intransitive. The following nouns, χόρτον, στάχυν, are not the object of the verb, but in apposition with καρπὸν (καρπὸν φέρει) or governed by φέρει, understood (φέρει, quod ex καρποφορεῖ petendum, Fritzsche).—πλήρης σῖτος, this change to the nominative (the reading of BD) is a tribute to the importance of the final stage towards which the stages of blade and ear are but preparatory steps = then is the full ear. Full = ripe, perfect, hence the combination of the two words in such phrases as πλήρη καὶ τέλεια τἀγαθὰ quoted by Kypke from Philo. The specification of the three stages shows that gradual growth is the point of the parable (Schanz).—Ver. 29. παραδοῖ (παραδόω), when the fruit yields itself, or permits (by being ripe). The latter sense (for which classical usage can be cited) is preferred by most recent commentators.

Vv. 30-32. The Mustard Seed (Mt. xiii. 31-32, Lk. xiii. 18, 19).—Ver. 30. πῶς . . . θῶμεν (vide above). This introductory question, especially as given in the text των ἐστὶ[1] τῶν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· 32. καὶ ὅταν σπαρῇ, ἀναβαίνει, καὶ γίνεται πάντων τῶν λαχάνων μείζων,[2] καὶ ποιεῖ κλάδους μεγάλους, ὥστε δύνασθαι ὑπὸ τὴν σκιὰν αὐτοῦ τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ κατασκηνοῦν." 33. Καὶ τοιαύταις παραβολαῖς πολλαῖς ἐλάλει αὐτοῖς τὸν λόγον, καθὼς ἠδύναντο ἀκούειν· 34. χωρὶς δὲ παραβολῆς οὐκ ἐλάλει αὐτοῖς· κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ[3] [d] ἐπέλυε πάντα.

35. ΚΑΙ λέγει αὐτοῖς ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῃ ἡμέρᾳ ὀψίας γενομένης, "Δι-d cf. Acts xix. 39.

[1] μικροτερον ον in ℵBL(ων)Δ 33, εστι (in T.R. supplying the place of ον) being omitted (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] μειζον παντων των λαχ. in ℵBCL 33. D has the same order with μειζων.

[3] τοις ιδιοις μαθ. in ℵBCLΔ.

of W.H., is very graphic = how shall we liken the Kingdom of God, or in (under) what parable shall we place it? The form of expression implies that something has been said before creating a need for figurative embodiment, something pointing to the insignificance of the beginnings of the Kingdom. The two previous parables satisfy this requirement = the word fruitful only in a few, and even in them only after a time. What is the best emblem of this state of things?—Ver. 31. ὡς κόκκῳ: ὡς stands for ὁμοιώσωμεν = let us liken it to a grain, etc.; κόκκον would depend on θῶμεν.—ὃς ὅταν σπαρῇ . . . καὶ ὅταν σπαρῇ: the construction of this passage as given in critical texts is very halting, offering a very tempting opportunity for emendation to the scribes who in the T. R. have given us a very smooth readable text (vide A. V.). Literally it runs thus: "which when it is sown upon the earth, being the least of all the seeds upon the earth—and when it is sown," etc. The R. V. improves this rugged sentence somewhat by substituting "yet" for "and" in last clause. It is hardly worth while attempting to construe the passage. Enough that we see what is meant. In the twice used ὅταν σπαρῇ, the emphasis in the first instance lies on ὅταν, in the second on σπαρῇ (Bengel, Meyer). By attending to this we get the sense: which being the least of all seeds when it is sown or at the time of sowing, yet when it is sown, after sowing, springs up, etc.—μικρότερον ὂν is neuter by attraction of σπερμάτων, though κόκκῳ going before is masculine. —Ver. 32. μεῖζον π. τ. λαχάνων, the greatest of all the herbs, still only an herb; no word of a tree here as in Matthew and Luke, though comparatively tree-like in size, making great boughs (κλάδους μεγάλους), great relatively to its kind, not to forest trees. Mark's version here is evidently the more original.

Vv. 33, 34. Conclusion of the parable collection (Mt. xiii. 34, 35).—Ver. 33. τοιαύταις π. π., with such parables, many of them, He was speaking to them the word, implying that the three—sower; blade, ear and full corn; mustard seed—are given as samples of the utterances from the boat, all of one type, about seed representing the word, and expressing Christ's feelings of disappointment yet of hope regarding His ministry. Many is to be taken cum grano.—καθὼς ἠδύναντο ἀκούειν = as they were able to understand, as in 1 Cor. xiv. 2, implying that parables were employed to make truth plain (De Wette).—Ver. 34. χωρὶς παραβολῆς, etc., without a parable He was not wont to speak to the people, not merely that day, but at any time.—ἐπέλυε, etc., He was in the habit of interpreting all things (viz., the parables in private to His own disciples, the Twelve, cf. ἐπιλύσεως, 2 Peter i. 20). This does not necessarily imply that the multitude understood nothing, but only that Jesus, by further talk, made the disciples understand better. Yet on the whole it must be admitted that in his account of Christ's parabolic teaching Mark seems to vacillate between two opposite views of the function of parables, one that they were used to make spiritual truths plain to popular intelligence, the other that they were riddles, themselves very much needing explanation, and fitted, even intended, to hide truth. This second view might be suggested and fostered by the fact that some of the parables express recondite spiritual truths.

Vv. 35-41. Crossing the lake (Mt. viii. 18, 23-27, Lk. viii. 22-25).—ἐν ἐκείνῃ τ. ἡ., on that day, the day of the parable ἔλθωμεν εἰς τὸ πέραν." 36. Καὶ ἀφέντες τὸν ὄχλον, παραλαμβάνουσιν αὐτὸν ὡς ἦν ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ· ^e^καὶ ἄλλα ^e^δὲ [1] πλοιάρια [2] ἦν μετ' αὐτοῦ. 37. καὶ γίνεται λαῖλαψ ἀνέμου μεγάλη [3]· τὰ δὲ [4] κύματα ^f^ἐπέβαλλεν εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, ὥστε αὐτὸ ἤδη γεμίζεσθαι.[5] 38. καὶ ἦν αὐτὸς [6] ἐπὶ [7] τῇ πρύμνῃ ἐπὶ τὸ ^g^προσκεφάλαιον καθεύδων· καὶ διεγείρουσιν [8] αὐτόν, καὶ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Διδάσκαλε, οὐ ^h^μέλει σοι ὅτι ἀπολλύμεθα;" 39. Καὶ διεγερθεὶς ἐπετίμησε τῷ ἀνέμῳ, καὶ εἶπε τῇ θαλάσσῃ, "Σιώπα, πεφίμωσο." Καὶ ἐκόπασεν ὁ ἄνεμος, καὶ ἐγένετο γαλήνη μεγάλη. 40. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τί ^i^δειλοί ἐστε οὕτω; πῶς οὐκ [9] ἔχετε πίστιν;" 41. Καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν φόβον μέγαν, καὶ ἔλεγον πρὸς ἀλλήλους, "Τίς ἄρα οὗτός ἐστιν, ὅτι καὶ ὁ ἄνεμος καὶ ἡ θάλασσα ὑπακούουσιν [10] αὐτῷ;"

e καὶ δὲ in Mt. x. 18. John vi. 51. 1 John i. 3 al.
f here only in same sense.
g here only.
h Lk. x. 40 (with ὅτι).
i here. Mt. viii. 26. Rev. xxi. 8.

[1] ℵBCLΔ omit δε, found in D; no other instance of και . . . δε in Mk.

[2] πλοια in ℵABCDΔΣ. [3] μεγαλη ανεμου in BDLΔ.

[4] και τα for τα δε in ℵBCDLΔ.

[5] ωστε ηδη γεμιζεσθαι το πλοιον in ℵ^a^BCDLΔ: rugged style, but none the less likely to be true.

[6] αυτος ην in ℵBCLΔ. [7] εν in ℵABCDLΔ.

[8] εγειρουσιν in ℵBCΔ. [9] ουπω in ℵBDLΔ (W.H.).

[10] υπακουει in BL (W.H.). So ℵCΔ, but with αυτω before verb. Vide below.

discourse, the more to be noted that Mark does not usually trouble himself about temporal connection.—διέλθωμεν, let us cross over, spoken to the Twelve, who are in the boat with Jesus.—Ver. 36. This verse describes the manner in which Christ's wish was carried out—it was in effect a flight along the only line of retreat, the shore being besieged by the crowd = leaving (ἀφέντες, not dismissing) the crowd they carry Him off (avehunt, Grotius) as He was in the ship (ὡς ἦν = ὡς εἶχεν) sine apparatu (Bengel) and sine mora; but there were also other boats with Him, i.e., with His boat. This last fact, peculiar to Mark, is added to show that even seawards escape was difficult. Some of the people had got into boats to be nearer the Speaker. The δὲ after ἄλλα, though doubtful, helps to bring out the sense. This is another of Mark's realisms.—Ver. 37. γίνεται λαῖλαψ: cf. Jonah i. 4, ἐγένετο κλύδων μέγας.—ἐπέβαλλεν, were dashing (intransitive) against and into (εἰς) the ship.—γεμίζεσθαι, so that already (ἤδη) the ship was getting full.—Ver. 38. τὸ προσκεφάλαιον, the pillow, a part of the ship, as indicated by the article (Bengel); no soft luxurious pillow, probably of wood (Theophy., Euthy.); "the leathern cushion of the steersman" (Maclear, Camb. N. T.); the low bench at the stern on which the steersman sometimes sits, and the captain sometimes rests his head to sleep (Van Lennep, Bible Lands, p. 62).—Ver. 39. Observe the poetic parallelism in this verse: wind and sea separately addressed, and the corresponding effects separately specified: lulled wind, calmed sea. The evangelist realises the dramatic character of the situation.—σιώπα, πεφίμωσο, silence! hush! laconic, majestic, probably the very words.—ἐκόπασεν, ceased, as if tired blowing, from κόπος (vide at Mt. xiv. 32).—Ver. 40. τί δειλοί, etc., duality of expression again. Matthew gives the second phrase, Luke the gist of both.—Ver. 41. ἐφοβήθησαν φ. μ.: nearly the same phrase as in Jonah i. 16.—τίς ἄρα οὗτός; who then is this? One would have thought the disciples had been prepared by this time for anything. Matthew indeed has οἱ ἄνθρωποι, suggestive of other than disciples, as if such surprise in them were incongruous. But their emotional condition, arising out of the dangerous situation, must be taken into account. For the rest Jesus was always giving them surprises; His mind and character had so many sides.—ὑπακούει, singular, the wind and the sea thought of separately, each a wild lawless element, not given to obeying: even the wind, even the sea, obeys Him!

V. 1. ΚΑΙ ἦλθον εἰς τὸ πέραν τῆς θαλάσσης, εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν.[1] 2. καὶ ἐξελθόντι αὐτῷ[2] ἐκ τοῦ πλοίου, εὐθέως ἀπήντησεν[3] αὐτῷ ἐκ τῶν μνημείων ἄνθρωπος ἐν πνεύματι ἀκαθάρτῳ, 3. ὃς τὴν [a] κατοίκησιν εἶχεν ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις[4]· καὶ οὔτε ἁλύσεσιν οὐδεὶς[5] ἠδύνατο αὐτὸν δῆσαι, 4. διὰ τὸ αὐτὸν πολλάκις πέδαις καὶ ἁλύσεσι δεδέσθαι, καὶ [b] διεσπᾶσθαι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ τὰς ἁλύσεις, καὶ τὰς πέδας συντετρίφθαι, καὶ οὐδεὶς αὐτὸν ἴσχυε[6] [c] δαμάσαι· 5. καὶ διαπαντὸς νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας ἐν τοῖς ὄρεσι καὶ ἐν τοῖς μνήμασιν[7] ἦν κράζων καὶ [d] κατακόπτων ἑαυτὸν λίθοις. 6. Ἰδὼν δὲ[8] τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἀπὸ

a here only in N.T.
b here and in Acts xxiii. 10.
c Jas. iii. 7, 8.
d here only in N.T.

[1] Γερασηνων in ℵBD it. vg. (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] εξελθοντος αυτου in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] υπηντησεν in ℵBCDLΔ.

[4] μνημασι in ℵABCLΔΣ.

[5] ουδε αλυσει ουκετι ουδεις in BCL; for ουδε and ουκετι ουδεις the consensus is greater (+ℵDΔ).

[6] ισχυεν αυτον in many uncials.

[7] εν τοις μν. και εν τοις ορ. in the best copies.

[8] και ιδων in ℵBCLΔ.

CHAPTER V. THE GERASENE DEMONIAC. THE DAUGHTER OF JAIRUS. THE WOMAN WITH AN ISSUE. This group of incidents is given in the same order in all three synoptists, but in Matthew not in immediate sequence.—Vv. 1-20. The Gerasene Demoniac (Mt. viii. 28-34, Lk. viii. 26-39).—Ver. 1. εἰς τὴν χῶραν τ. Γερασηνῶν: on the proper name to the place vide at the parallel place in Mt.—Ver. 2. ἐξελ. αὐτοῦ . . . ὑπήντησεν αὐτῷ; note the correction of style in Luke. Mark's incorrectness is to be preferred as emphasising the fact that the meeting with the demoniac took place immediately after leaving the boat. Just on that account the εὐθὺς before ὑπήντησεν (omitted in B) is unnecessary.—ἐκ τ. μνημείων, from the tombs, as in Mt., ἐκ τῆς πόλεως in Lk.; the former doubtless the fact. Luke's phrase probably means that he belonged to the city, not necessarily implying that he came from it just then (vide Lk. viii. 27, last clause).—Vv. 3-5 elaborately describe the man's condition, as if the evangelist or rather his informant (Peter) were fascinated by the subject; not a case of idle word-painting, but of realistic description from vivid, almost morbid, recollection. Holtzmann (H. C.) refers to Is. lxv. 4, 5, as if to suggest that some elements of the picture—dwelling in tombs, eating swine's flesh—were taken thence.—τὴν κατ., the, i.e. his dwelling, implying though not emphasising constant habit (perpetuum, Fritzsche), Lk., "for a long time".—οὐδὲ, οὐκέτι, οὐδεὶς: energetic accumulation of negatives, quite in the spirit of the Greek language. At this point the sentence breaks away from the relative construction as if in sympathy with the untamable wildness of the demoniac.—Ver. 4 tells how they had often tried to bind the madman, feet (πέδαις) and hands (ἁλύσεσι, with chains, for the hands here, in contrast to πέδαις, chains for the feet; usually it means chains in general).—συντετρῖφθαι: the use of a distinct verb in reference to the fetters suggests that they were of different material, either cords (Meyer) or wooden (Schanz), and that we should render συντετ., not "broken in pieces" (A.V.), but rubbed through as if by incessant friction.—Ver. 5. As the previous verse depicts the demoniac strength, so this the utter misery of the poor sufferer.—διὰ παντὸς νυκ. κ. ἡμέρ., incessantly night time and day time, even during night when men gladly get under roof (Weiss, Mc.-Evang.) and when sleep makes trouble cease for most: no sleep for this wretch, or quiet resting-place.—ἐν τ. μνήμασι κ. ἐ. τ. ὄρεσι, in tombs or on mountains, in cave or out in the open, there was but one occupation for him: not rest or sleep, but ceaseless outcry and self-laceration (κράζων, κατακόπτων ἑαυτ. λίθοις).

Vv. 6-13. Meeting with Jesus. This desperate case will test Christ's power to heal. Madness, as wild and untamable as the wind or the sea. What is going to happen?—Ver. 6. ἀπὸ μακρόθεν, from μακρόθεν, ἔδραμε καὶ προσεκύνησεν αὐτῷ,[1] 7. καὶ κράξας φωνῇ μεγάλῃ εἶπε,[2] "Τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί, Ἰησοῦ, υἱὲ τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὑψίστου; [a] ὁρκίζω σε τὸν Θεόν, μή με βασανίσῃς." 8. ἔλεγε γὰρ αὐτῷ, "Ἔξελθε, τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἀκάθαρτον ἐκ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου." 9. Καὶ ἐπηρώτα αὐτόν, "Τί σοι ὄνομα[3];" Καὶ ἀπεκρίθη, λέγων, "Λεγεὼν[4] ὄνομά μοι,[5] ὅτι πολλοί ἐσμεν." 10. Καὶ παρεκάλει αὐτὸν πολλά, ἵνα μὴ αὐτοὺς ἀποστείλῃ[6] ἔξω τῆς χώρας. 11. ἦν δὲ ἐκεῖ πρὸς τὰ ὄρη[7] ἀγέλη χοίρων μεγάλη βοσκομένη· 12. καὶ παρεκάλεσαν αὐτὸν πάντες οἱ δαίμονες[8] λέγοντες, "Πέμψον ἡμᾶς εἰς τοὺς χοίρους, ἵνα εἰς αὐτοὺς εἰσέλθωμεν." 13. Καὶ ἐπέτρεψεν αὐτοῖς εὐθέως ὁ Ἰησοῦς.[9] καὶ ἐξελθόντα τὰ πνεύματα τὰ ἀκάθαρτα εἰσῆλθον εἰς τοὺς χοίρους· καὶ ὥρμησεν ἡ ἀγέλη κατὰ τοῦ κρημνοῦ εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν· ἦσαν δὲ[10]

[a] Acts xix. 13 (same const.).

[1] αυτον in ℵBCLΔ instead of the more usual αυτω of T.R.

[2] λεγει in ℵABCLΔΣ.

[3] ονομα σοι in most uncials. D has σοι ον. (so in Mk.).

[4] και λεγει αυτω Λεγιων in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] BD add εστιν.

[6] αυτα αποσ. in BCΔ. D has αυτους.

[7] τω ορει in all uncials.

[8] παντες οι δαιμ. omit ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[9] ℵBCLΔ omit ευθεως ο I.

[10] ℵBCDLΔ omit ησαν δε.

afar, a relative expression, a favourite pleonasm in Mk. (xiv. 54, xv. 40).—προσεκύνησεν: worshipful attitude, as of one who feels already the charm or spell of Him before whom he kneels; already there is a presentiment and commencement of cure, though not yet welcome.—Ver. 7. τ. θ. τοῦ ὑψίστου; Mt. has τοῦ θεοῦ only. Luke gives the full expression = the Son of God Most High. Which is the original? Weiss (Meyer) says Mt.'s, Mk. adding τ. ὑψ. to prepare for the appeal to One higher even than Jesus, in ὁρκίζω following. But why should not the demoniac himself do that?—ὁρκίζω: in classics to make swear, in N. T. (here and in Acts xix. 13) to adjure with double accusative; not good Greek according to Phryn.; ὁρκόω the right word.—μή με βασανίσῃς: no πρὸ καιροῦ as in Mt., the reference apparently to the present torment of demoniac or demon, or both; either shrinking from cure felt to be impending.—Ver. 8. ἔλεγεν γὰρ, for He was about to say: not yet said, but evident from Christ's manner and look that it was on His tongue; the conative imperfect (Weiss).—Ver. 9. τί σοι ὄνομα; instead of saying at once what He had meant to say, Jesus adopts a roundabout method of dealing with the case, and asks the demoniac his name, as if to bring him into composure.—Λεγιὼν: from the Roman legion not a rare sight in that region, emblem of irresistible power and of a multitude organised into unity; the name already naturalised into Greek and Aramaean. The use of it by the demoniac, like the immediate recognition of Jesus as a God-like person, reveals a sensitive, fine-strung mind wrecked by insanity.—Ver. 10. παρεκάλει: he, Legion, in the name of the demons, beseeches earnestly (πολλὰ) that He would not send them (αὐτὰ) out of the region (χώρας). Decapolis, beloved by demons, suggests Grotius, because full of Hellenising apostate Jews, teste Joseph. (A. J., xvii., 11).—Ver. 11. ἐκεῖ, there, near by. Cf. Mt. viii. 30.—πρὸς τῷ ὄρει; on the mountain side.—Ver. 12. πέμψον: send us into the swine; no chance of permission to enter into men; no expectation either of the ensuing catastrophe.—Ver. 13. καὶ ἐπέτρεψεν: permission not command to enter; in Mt. not even that, simply a peremptory: Depart! Vide notes there.—εἰσῆλθον: an inference from the sequel; neither exit nor entrance could be seen. There was doubtless a coincidence between the cure and the catastrophe.—ὡς δισχίλιοι: about 2000, an estimate of the herds possibly exaggerated.—ἐπνίγοντο (πνίγω, to choke), were drowned, used in this ὡς δισχίλιοι· καὶ ἐπνίγοντο ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ. 14. Οἱ δὲ βόσκοντες τοὺς χοίρους[1] ἔφυγον, καὶ ἀνήγγειλαν[2] εἰς τὴν πόλιν καὶ εἰς τοὺς ἀγρούς. καὶ ἐξῆλθον[2] ἰδεῖν τί ἐστι τὸ γεγονός· 15. καὶ ἔρχονται πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, καὶ θεωροῦσι τὸν δαιμονιζόμενον καθήμενον καὶ[3] ἱματισμένον καὶ σωφρονοῦντα, τὸν ἐσχηκότα τὸν λεγεῶνα· καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν· 16. καὶ διηγήσαντο αὐτοῖς οἱ ἰδόντες, πῶς ἐγένετο τῷ δαιμονιζομένῳ, καὶ περὶ τῶν χοίρων. 17. καὶ ἤρξαντο παρακαλεῖν αὐτὸν ἀπελθεῖν ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων αὐτῶν. 18. Καὶ ἐμβάντος[4] αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, παρεκάλει αὐτὸν ὁ δαιμονισθείς, ἵνα ᾖ μετ' αὐτοῦ.[5] 19. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς[6] οὐκ ἀφῆκεν αὐτόν, ἀλλὰ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ὕπαγε εἰς τὸν οἶκόν σου πρὸς τοὺς σούς, καὶ ἀνάγγειλον[7] αὐτοῖς ὅσα σοι ὁ Κύριος[8]

[1] και οι βοσ. αυτους in ℵBCDLΔ.

[2] απηγ. and ηλθον in ℵBL (CD have απηγ.).

[3] και omitted in ℵBDLΔ.

[4] εμβαινοντος in ℵABCDLΔΣ 33.

[5] μετ αυτου η in ℵABCLΔ.

[6] For ο δε I. the same authorities have simply και.

[7] απαγ. in ℵBCΔ.

[8] ο κυριος σοι in BCΔ.

sense in Joseph., A. J., x., 7, 5, regarding Jeremiah in the dungeon.

Vv. 14-20. Sequel of the story.—Ver. 14. εἰς τὴν πόλιν, etc.: the herds of course ran in breathless panic-stricken haste to report the tragedy in the city and in the neighbouring farms (ἀγρούς).—καὶ ἦλθον, etc.: and the people in town and country as naturally went to see what had happened. Their road brings them straight to Jesus (ver. 15), and they see there a sight which astonishes them, the well-known and dreaded demoniac completely altered in manner and aspect: sitting (καθήμενον) quiet, not restless; clothed (ἱματισμένον here and in Lk. viii. 35), implying previous nakedness, which is expressly noted by Lk. (viii. 27), sane (σωφρονοῦντα), implying previous madness. For this sense of the verb vide 2 Cor. v. 13. Some take the second and third participle as subordinate to the first, but they may be viewed as co-ordinate, denoting three distinct, equally outstanding, characteristics: "sedentem, vestitum, sanae mentis, cum antea fuisset sine quiete, vestibus, rationis usu" (Bengel)—all this had happened to the man who had had the Legion! (τὸν ἐσχ. τ. λεγιῶνα)—ἐσχηκότα, perfect in sense of pluperfect. Burton, § 156.—ἐφοβήθησαν: they were afraid, of the sane man, as much as they had been of the insane, i.e., of the power which had produced the change.—Ver. 16. The eye-witnesses in further explanations to their employers now connect the two events together—the cure and the catastrophe—not representing the one as cause of the other, but simply as happening close to each other. The owners draw a natural inference: cure cause of catastrophe, and (ver. 17) request Jesus, as a dangerous person, to retire.—ἤρξαντο, began to request, pointing to transition from vague awe in presence of a great change to desire to be rid of Him whom they believed to be the cause both of it and of the loss of their swine. Fritzsche takes ἤρξαντο as meaning that Jesus did not need much pressure, but withdrew on the first hint of their wish.—Ver. 18. ἐμβαίνοντος, embarking, the same day? Jesus had probably intended staying some days on the eastern shore as on the hill (iii. 13), to let the crowd disperse.—ἵνα μετ' αὐτοῦ ᾖ: an object clause after verb of exhorting with ἵνα, and subjunctive instead of infinitive as often in N. T., that he might be with Him (recalling iii. 14). The man desired to become a regular disciple. Victor of Ant., Theophy., Grotius, and partly Schanz think his motive was fear lest the demons might return.—Ver. 19. Jesus refuses, and, contrary to His usual practice, bids the healed one go and spread the news, as a kind of missionary to Decapolis, as the Twelve were to Galilee. The first apostle of the heathen (Holtz. (H. C.) after Volkmar). Jesus determined that those who would not have Himself should have His repreἐποίησε,[1] καὶ ἠλέησέ σε." 20. Καὶ ἀπῆλθε καὶ ἤρξατο κηρύσσειν ἐν τῇ Δεκαπόλει, ὅσα ἐποίησεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς· καὶ πάντες ἐθαύμαζον.

21. ΚΑΙ διαπεράσαντος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ πάλιν εἰς τὸ πέραν, συνήχθη ὄχλος πολὺς ἐπ' αὐτόν, καὶ ἦν παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν. 22. Καὶ ἰδού,[2] ἔρχεται εἷς τῶν ἀρχισυναγώγων, ὀνόματι Ἰάειρος, καὶ ἰδὼν αὐτόν, πίπτει πρὸς τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ· 23. καὶ παρεκάλει[3] αὐτὸν πολλά, λέγων, "Ὅτι τὸ [f] θυγάτριόν μου ἐσχάτως ἔχει· ἵνα ἐλθὼν ἐπιθῇς αὐτῇ τὰς χεῖρας,[4] ὅπως[5] σωθῇ καὶ ζήσεται."[5] 24. Καὶ ἀπῆλθε μετ' αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἠκολούθει αὐτῷ ὄχλος πολύς, καὶ συνέθλιβον αὐτόν.

25. Καὶ γυνή τις[6] οὖσα ἐν ῥύσει αἵματος ἔτη δώδεκα,[7] καὶ πολλὰ παθοῦσα ὑπὸ πολλῶν ἰατρῶν, 26. καὶ [g] δαπανήσασα τὰ παρ' ἑαυτῆς[8]

f again ver. 31.

g Lk. xv. 14. Acts xxi. 24. 2 Cor. xii. 15. Jas. iv. 3.

[1] πεποιηκεν in ℵABCLΣ.

[2] Omit ιδου ℵBDLΔ.

[3] παρακαλει in ℵACL (Tisch., W.H., text). παρεκαλει in BDΔ (W.H. margin).

[4] τας χειρας αυτη in ℵBCLΔ.

[5] ινα σωθη και ζηση in ℵBCDLΔ (οπως and ζησεται from Mt.).

[6] Omit τις ℵABCLΔ (found in DΣ).

[7] δωδεκα ετη in ℵBCLΔ.

[8] αυτης in BLΣ (W.H. text), εαυτης in CDΔ (Tisch., W.H., margin).

sentative.—πεποίηκεν, perfect, the effect abiding: hath done for me, as you see.—ἠλέησέν σε: pitied thee at the time of cure. ὅσα may be understood before ἠλ. = and how, etc., or καὶ ἠλ. may be a Hebraising way of speaking for ἐλεήσας σε (Grotius).—Κυριός: the subject to the two verbs = God, as in O. T. Sept.—Ver. 20. ἐν τῇ Δεκαπόλει: he took a wide range; implying probably that he was known throughout the ten cities as the famous madman of Gerasa. What was the effect of his mission in that Greek world? Momentary wonder at least (ἐθαύμαζον), perhaps not much more.

Vv. 21-43. The daughter of Jairus and the woman with bloody issue (Mt. ix. 18-26, Lk. viii. 40-56).—Ver. 21. ὄχλος πολὺς: the inescapable crowd, in no hurry to disperse, gathers again about Jesus, on His return to the western shore.—ἐπ' αὐτόν: not merely to, but after Him, the great centre of attraction (cf. πρὸς α., ii. 13, iv. 1).—παρὰ τ. θ., by the sea (here and there); how soon after the arrival the incident happened not indicated (cf. Mt. ix. 18 for sequence and situation), nor is the motive of the narrative. Weiss suggests that the Jairus story is given as another instance of unreceptivity, ver. 40 (Meyer).—Ver. 22. εἷς τ. ἀ.: the expression implies a plurality of synagogues, each having its chief ruler. The reference is probably to Capernaum.—Ver. 23. θυγάτριόν μ.: an instance of Mk.'s love of diminutives, again in vii. 25.—ἐσχάτως ἔχει, is extremely ill, at death's door (in Mt. dead), stronger than κακῶς ἔχει, a late Greek phrase (examples in Elsner, Wetstein, Kypke, etc.), disapproved by Phryn. (Lobeck, p. 389).—ἵνα ἐλθὼν ἐπιθῇς: either used as an imperative (cf. 1 Tim. i. 3, ἵνα παραγγείλῃς), or dependent on some verb understood, e.g., δέομαί σου (Palairet), ἥκω (Fritzsche); better παρακαλέω σε, the echo of παρεκάλει going before (Grotius. Similarly Euthy. Zig.).

Vv. 25-34. The woman with an issue.—Ver. 25. ἐν ῥύσει α. = αἱμορροοῦσα of Mt.: in or with a flux of blood. So in Lk. also.—Ver. 26. Details about the case, similarly in Lk., not in Mt.; either they expand or Mt. abbreviates.—πολλὰ παθοῦσα: no wonder, remarks Lightfoot, in view of the endless prescriptions for such a case, of which he gives samples (Hor. Heb.); physicians of the empiric or prescientific type.—τὰ παρ' αὐτῆς, her means, cf. οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ, iii. 21.—μηδὲν ὠφελ: nothing profited, the subjective negative, μηδὲν, implies disappointed expectation.—Ver. 27. ἀκούσασα: to simplify the construction πάντα, καὶ μηδὲν ὠφεληθεῖσα, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εἰς τὸ χεῖρον ἐλθοῦσα, 27. ἀκούσασα[1] περὶ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ἐλθοῦσα ἐν τῷ ὄχλῳ ὄπισθεν, ἥψατο τοῦ ἱματίου αὐτοῦ· 28. ἔλεγε γάρ, "Ὅτι κἂν τῶν ἱματίων αὐτοῦ ἅψωμαι,[2] σωθήσομαι." 29. Καὶ εὐθέως ἐξηράνθη ἡ πηγὴ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτῆς, καὶ ἔγνω τῷ σώματι ὅτι [h] ἴαται ἀπὸ τῆς μάστιγος. 30. καὶ εὐθέως ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐπιγνοὺς ἐν ἑαυτῷ τὴν ἐξ αὐτοῦ δύναμιν ἐξελθοῦσαν, ἐπιστραφεὶς ἐν τῷ ὄχλῳ, ἔλεγε, "Τίς μου ἥψατο τῶν ἱματίων;" 31. Καὶ ἔλεγον αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, "Βλέπεις τὸν ὄχλον συνθλίβοντά σε, καὶ λέγεις, Τίς μου ἥψατο;" 32. Καὶ περιεβλέπετο ἰδεῖν τὴν τοῦτο ποιήσασαν. 33. ἡ δὲ γυνὴ φοβηθεῖσα καὶ τρέμουσα, εἰδυῖα ὃ γέγονεν ἐπ'[3] αὐτῇ, ἦλθε καὶ προσέπεσεν αὐτῷ, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ πᾶσαν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. 34. ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Θύγατερ,[4] ἡ πίστις σου σέσωκέ σε· ὕπαγε εἰς εἰρήνην, καὶ ἴσθι h cf. John i. 40 (μένει).

[1] τα after ακ. in ℵBCΔ 33 (Tisch., W.H. See below).

[2] οτι εαν αψωμαι καν τ. ι. in ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.). The reading in T.R. is a simplification.

[3] ℵBCDL omit επ (in AΣ al.). Δ has εν.

[4] θυγατηρ in BD (W.H.).

of this long sentence (vv. 25, 26, 27) we may, with Fritzsche, connect this participle with γυνή, ver. 25, and treat all between as a parenthesis = a certain woman (whose case was, etc.) having heard, etc.—τὰ περὶ τ. Ἰ. The importance of the τὰ (ℵ*BC*Δ. W.H.) here is that with it the expression means not merely that the woman had heard of the return of Jesus from the east side, but that she had for the first time heard of Christ's healing ministry in general. She must have been a stranger from a distance, e.g., from Caesarea Philippi, her home, according to Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., vii., 18), her house identifiable with a statue reproducing the gospel incident before the door; possibly a heathen, but more probably, from her behaviour, a Jewess—stealing a cure by touch when touch by one in her state was forbidden (Lev. xv. 19-27).—Ver. 29. ἐξηράνθη ἡ πηγή: perhaps this means no more than Lk.'s statement that the flux was stopped, but the expression seems chosen to signify a complete permanent cure—not merely the stream but the fountain dried.—ἔγνω τ. σ.: she was conscious that the flow had ceased (ἔγνω διὰ τοῦ σώματος μηκέτι ῥαινομένου τοῖς σταλαγμοῖς, Euthy. Zig.).—Ver. 30. ἐπιγνοὺς τὴν . . . δύναμιν ἐξελθοῦσαν, conscious of the going forth of the healing virtue; ἐξελθ. is the substantive participle as object of the verb ἐπιγνούς. The statement as given by Mk. (and Lk.) implies that the cure was not wrought by the will of Jesus. But it may nevertheless have been so. Jesus may have felt the touch, divined its meaning, and consented to the effect. Vide on Mt., ad loc.—τίς μου ἥψατο τῶν ἱματίων: who touched me on my clothes? This verb here, as usual, takes genitive both of person and thing (Buttmann's Grammar, N. T., p. 167).—Ver. 31. τὸν ὄχ. συνθλίβοντά σε, the crowd squeezing Thee, as in ver. 24. The simple verb in iii. 9. The compound implies a greater crowd, or a more eager pressure around Jesus. How exciting and fatiguing that rude popularity for Him!—Ver. 32. περιεβλέπετο: Jesus, knowing well the difference between touch and touch, regardless of what the disciples had plausibly said, kept looking around in quest of the person who had touched Him meaningfully.—τὴν τ. ποιήσασαν: feminine, a woman's touch. Did Jesus know that, or is it the evangelist choosing the gender in accordance with the now known fact? (Meyer and Weiss). The former possible, without preternatural knowledge, through extreme sensitiveness.—Ver. 33. φοβ. καὶ τρέμ., fearing and trembling, the two states closely connected and often combined (2 Cor. vii. 15, Eph. vi. 5, Phil. ii. 12).—εἰδυῖα, etc., explains her emotion: she knew what had happened to her, and thought what a dreadful thing it would be to have the surreptitiously obtained ὑγιὴς ἀπὸ τῆς μάστιγός σου." 35. Ἔτι αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, ἔρχονται ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀρχισυναγώγου, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι ἡ θυγάτηρ σου ἀπέθανε· τί ἔτι σκύλλεις τὸν διδάσκαλον;" 36. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εὐθέως[1] ἀκούσας[2] τὸν λόγον λαλούμενον λέγει τῷ ἀρχισυναγώγῳ, "Μὴ φοβοῦ, μόνον [i] πίστευε." 37. Καὶ οὐκ ἀφῆκεν οὐδένα αὐτῷ[3] συνακολουθῆσαι, εἰ μὴ Πέτρον[4] καὶ Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην τὸν ἀδελφὸν Ἰακώβου. 38. καὶ ἔρχεται[5] εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ ἀρχισυναγώγου, καὶ θεωρεῖ θόρυβον,[6] κλαίοντας καὶ [j] ἀλαλάζοντας πολλά. 39. καὶ εἰσελθὼν λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Τί [k] θορυβεῖσθε καὶ κλαίετε; τὸ παιδίον οὐκ ἀπέθανεν, ἀλλὰ καθεύδει." 40. Καὶ κατεγέλων αὐτοῦ. ὁ δὲ[7] ἐκβαλὼν ἅπαντας,[8] παραλαμβάνει τὸν πατέρα τοῦ παιδίου καὶ τὴν μητέρα καὶ τοὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ εἰσπορεύεται ὅπου

i Ch. xv. 32; xvi. 16, 17 (absol.).
j 1 Cor. xiii. 1.
k Mt. ix. 23. Acts xvii. 5; xx. 10.

[1] Omit ευθεως ℵBDLΔ.
[2] παρακουσας in ℵBLΔ, changed into ακουσας because not understood.
[3] μετ αυτου in ℵBCLΔ.
[4] τον before Π. in ℵBCΔ, omitted to conform with Ιακ. Ιωαν.
[5] ερχονται in ℵABCDΔ, changed into ερχεται to agree with θεωρει (LΣ al.).
[6] και before κλαιοντας in many uncials. D omits.
[7] αυτος δε in ℵBCDLΔ.
[8] παντας in ℵABCLΔΣ.

benefit recalled by an offended benefactor disapproving her secrecy and her bold disregard of the ceremonial law.—πᾶσαν τὴν ἀλήθειαν, the whole truth, which would include not only what she had just done, but her excuse for doing it—the pitiful tale of chronic misery. From that tale impressively told, heard by disciples, and not easily to be forgotten, the particulars in ver. 26 were in all probability derived.—Ver. 34. The woman had already heard the fame of Jesus (ver. 27). From what Jesus said to her she would for the first time get some idea of His exquisite sympathy, delicately expressed in the very first word: θύγατερ, daughter, to a mature woman, probably not much, if at all, younger than Himself! He speaks not as man to woman, but as father to child.

Note how vivid is Mark's story compared with the meagre colourless version of Mt.! A lively impressionable eyewitness, like Peter, evidently behind it.

Vv. 35-43. The story of Jairus' daughter resumed.—Ver. 35. ἀπὸ τ. ἀρχισ., from the ruler of the synagogue, i.e., from his house, as in A.V. (ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκίας τ. σ., Euthy.). The ruler is supposed to be with Jesus all the time.—Ver. 36. παρακούσας: might mean to disregard, as in Mt. xviii. 17 (with genitive). So Meyer; but here probably it means overhearing a word not spoken directly to Him. The two senses are quite compatible. Jesus might overhear what was said and disregard its import, i.e., act contrary to the implied suggestion that nothing could now be done in the case. The latter He certainly did.—πίστευε, present, continue in a believing mood, even in presence of death.—Ver. 37. συνακολουθῆσαι: here with μετά, in xiv. 51, and Lk. xxiii. 49 with dative.—τὸν Πέτρον, etc., Peter, James, and John; earliest trace of preference within the disciple-circle. Not in Mt., but followed by Lk. The three chosen to be witnesses of a specially remarkable event. Perhaps the number of disciples was restricted to three not to crowd the house.—Ver. 38. θεωρεῖ: what was going on within the house appealed to both eye and ear; here the scene is described from the spectacular side—a multitude of people seen making a confused din (θόρυβον), in which sounds of weeping and howling without restraint (πολλά) are distinguishable.—καὶ after θόρυβον is epexegetic, and κλαίοντας and ἀλαλάζοντας special features under it as a general. Flute playing (Mt. ix. 23) not referred to.—Ver. 40. κατεγέλων: this the point of the story for the evangelist, thinks Weiss, hence related after the demoniac—common link, the unbelief of ἦν τὸ παιδίον ἀνακείμενον.[1] 41. καὶ κρατήσας τῆς χειρὸς τοῦ παιδίου, λέγει αὐτῇ, "Ταλιθά, κοῦμι[2]·" ὅ ἐστι μεθερμηνευόμενον, "Τὸ κοράσιον, (σοὶ λέγω) ἔγειραι."[3] 42. Καὶ εὐθέως ἀνέστη τὸ κοράσιον καὶ περιεπάτει, ἦν γὰρ ἐτῶν δώδεκα· καὶ ἐξέστησαν[4] ἐκστάσει μεγάλῃ. 43. καὶ διεστείλατο αὐτοῖς πολλά, ἵνα μηδεὶς γνῷ[5] τοῦτο· καὶ εἶπε δοθῆναι αὐτῇ φαγεῖν.

VI. 1. ΚΑΙ ἐξῆλθεν ἐκεῖθεν, καὶ ἦλθεν[6] εἰς τὴν πατρίδα αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἀκολουθοῦσιν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ· 2. καὶ γενομένου σαββάτου, ἤρξατο ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ διδάσκειν[7] καὶ πολλοὶ[8] ἀκούοντες ἐξεπλήσσοντο, λέγοντες, "Πόθεν τούτῳ ταῦτα; καὶ τίς ἡ σοφία ἡ δοθεῖσα αὐτῷ,[9] ὅτι καὶ δυνάμεις τοιαῦται διὰ τῶν χειρῶν αὐτοῦ

[1] אBDLΔ omit ανακειμενον, an explanatory gloss.

[2] κουμ in אBCLΣ 33. κουμι in DΔ, which Weiss thinks the true reading against Tisch., Trg., W.H.

[3] εγειρε in most uncials. [4] Add ευθυς after εξεστησαν אBCLΔ 33.

[5] γνοι in ABDL (Tisch., W.H.). γνω in אCΔΣ.

[6] ερχεται in אBCLΔ, changed into ηλθεν to conform to εξηλθεν.

[7] διδασ. εν τη συν. in אBCDLΔ. [8] οι πολλοι in BL (Tisch., W.H.).

[9] τουτω in אBCLΔ, changed into αυτω to improve the style. The two τουτω life-like.

the people. But surely in this case incredulity was very excusable!—τὸν πατέρα, etc.: father, mother, and the three disciples taken into the sick chamber, the former as parents, the latter as witnesses.—Ver. 41. Ταλιθά κοῦμ, maiden, rise! first instance in which the words of Jesus, as spoken in Aramaic, are given. Jesus may have been a bilingual, sometimes using Greek, sometimes Syriac. He would use the vernacular on a pathetic occasion like this. The word Ταλιθά, feminine of Teli (טְלִי), is found in the Hebrew only in the plural (טְלָאִים).—Ver. 42. περιεπάτει, etc.: the diminutive κοράσιον might suggest the idea of a mere child, therefore, after stating that she walked about, it is added that she was twelve years old. In Mk. only.—Ver. 43. διεστείλατο: that the girl had recovered could not be hid, but that she had been brought back from death might be. Jesus wished this, not desiring that expectations of such acts should be awakened.—δοθῆναι φαγεῖν: she could walk and eat; not only alive, but well: "graviter aegroti vix solent cibum sumere," Grotius.—εἶπεν here takes the infinitive after it, not, as often, ἵνα with subjunctive.

CHAPTER VI. AT NAZARETH. MISSION OF THE TWELVE. HEROD AND JOHN. FEEDING OF THE THOUSANDS. SEA INCIDENT. The first two of the miscellaneous group of narratives contained in this chapter (vv. 1-13) are regarded by some (Weiss, Schanz, etc.) as forming the conclusion of a division of the Gospel beginning at iii. 7, having for its general heading: The disciple-circle versus the unreceptive multitude. Such analysis of the Gospels into distinct masses is useful provided it be not overdone.

Vv. 1-6a. Jesus at Nazareth (Mt. xiii. 53-58, cf. Lk. iv. 16-30).—Ver. 1. ἐξῆλθεν ἐκεῖθεν. It is not said, but it is very probable, that this was another of Christ's attempts to escape from the crowd into a scene of comparative quiet and rest (the hill, iii. 13, the eastern shore, v. 1, Nazareth, vi. 1). Mt. gives this incident at the close of the parable collection; Lk. at the beginning of the Galilean ministry. Mk.'s connection is the most historical, Lk.'s is obviously an anticipation. It is the same incident in all three Gospels.—πατρίδα: vide notes on Mt., ad loc.—οἱ μαθηταὶ α. Mt. omits this.—Ver. 2. ἤρξατο διδάσκειν, etc.: Jesus did not go to Nazareth for the purpose of preaching, rather for rest; but that He should preach was inevit-γίνονται[1]; 3. οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τέκτων, ὁ υἱὸς Μαρίας,[2] ἀδελφὸς δὲ[3] Ἰακώβου καὶ Ἰωσῆ[4] καὶ Ἰούδα καὶ Σίμωνος; καὶ οὐκ εἰσὶν αἱ ἀδελφαὶ αὐτοῦ ὧδε πρὸς ἡμᾶς;" Καὶ ἐσκανδαλίζοντο ἐν αὐτῷ. 4. ἔλεγε δὲ[5] αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι προφήτης ἄτιμος, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῇ πατρίδι αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐν τοῖς συγγενέσι[6] καὶ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ αὐτοῦ."[6] 5. Καὶ οὐκ ἠδύνατο ἐκεῖ οὐδεμίαν δύναμιν ποιῆσαι,[7] εἰ μὴ ὀλίγοις ἀρρώστοις ἐπιθεὶς τὰς χεῖρας, ἐθεράπευσε. 6. καὶ ἐθαύμαζε[8] διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν· καὶ περιῆγε τὰς κώμας [a]κύκλῳ διδάσκων.

a Ch. iii. 34 reff.

[1] For οτι . . . γινονται should stand και αι δυναμεις τοι. δια τ. χ. γινομεναι as in ℵB (W.H.). The crude construction suits the mood of the speakers.

[2] ℵBCLΔ have before Μαρ. της, omitted to assimilate to following names.

[3] και αδελ. in ℵBCDLΔ. [4] Ιωσητος in BDLΔ 33. [5] και ελεγεν in ℵBCDLΔ 33.

[6] συγγενευσιν αυτου in BLΣ (Tisch., W.H.). [7] ποιησαι ουδ. δυν. in ℵBCLΔ.

[8] εθαυμασεν in ℵB (Tisch., W.H., text). T.R. as in CDL (W.H. margin).

able; therefore, the Sabbath coming round, He appeared in the synagogue, and spoke.—πόθεν τούτῳ ταῦτα: laconic; comprehensive, vague question, covering the discourse just heard and all that had been reported to them about their townsman, with the one word ταῦτα: such speech, such wisdom (τίς ἡ σοφία), such powers (δυνάμεις, not wrought there), in such a well-known person (τούτῳ).—Ver. 3. ὁ τέκτων: avoided by Mt., who says the carpenter's son: one of Mk.'s realisms. The ploughs and yokes of Justin M. (c. Trypho., 88) and the apocryphal Gospels pass beyond realism into vulgarity.—ἐσκανδαλίζοντο: what they had heard awakened admiration, but the external facts of the speaker's connections and early history stifled incipient faith; vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 4. ἐν τοῖς συγγενεῦσιν α., among his kinsmen. This omitted in Mt., ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ α. covering it.—Ver. 5. οὐκ ἠδύνατο, etc., He was not able to do any mighty work, which is qualified by the added clause, that He placed His hands on a few ailing persons (ἀρρώστοις); quite minor cures, not to be compared with those reported in the previous chapter. For this statement Mt. substitutes: He did not there many mighty works.—Ver. 6. ἐθαύμασεν, etc. Jesus marvelled at the faith of the centurion. Nazareth supplied the opposite ground for astonishment. There Jesus found an amount of stupid unreceptivity for which His experience in Decapolis and elsewhere had not prepared Him. It was the ne plus ultra in that line. This wonder Mt. omits, merely noting the unbelief as cause of the non-performance of miracles. We are to conceive of it as bringing about this result, not by frustrating attempts at healing, but by not giving Jesus an opportunity. The people o Nazareth were so consistently unbelieving that they would not even bring their sick to Him to be healed (Klostermann), and, as Euthy. Zig. remarks, it was not fitting that Jesus should benefit them against their will (οὐκ ἔδει βιαίως εὐεργετεῖν αὐτούς).

Vv. 6b-13. Mission of the Twelve (Mt. x. 1-15, Lk. ix. 1-6).—Ver. 6b may either be connected with the foregoing narrative, when it will mean that Jesus, rejected by the Nazareans, made a teaching tour among the villages around (Fritzsche, Meyer), or it may be taken as an introduction to the following narrative = Jesus resumes the rôle of a wandering preacher in Galilee (i. 38, 39) and associates with Himself in the work His disciples (Schanz, Weiss, Klostermann, etc.). This brief statement in Mark: and He went round about the villages in a circle teaching, answers to Matt. ix. 35-38, where the motive of the mission of the Twelve is more fully explained.—Ver. 7. ἤρξατο, etc.: Jesus calling to Him (προσκαλεῖται, vide iii. 13) the Twelve began at length to do what He had intended from the first (Weiss), viz., to send them forth as missioners (ἀποστέλλειν).—δύο δύο, two (and) two, Hebraic for κατά or ἀνά δύο; two together, not one by one, a humane arrangement.—ἐδίδου, imperfect, as

7. ΚΑΙ προσκαλεῖται τοὺς δώδεκα, καὶ ἤρξατο αὐτοὺς ἀποστέλλειν [b]δύο δύο, καὶ ἐδίδου αὐτοῖς ἐξουσίαν τῶν πνευμάτων τῶν ἀκαθάρτων. 8. καὶ παρήγγειλεν αὐτοῖς, ἵνα μηδὲν αἴρωσιν εἰς ὁδόν, εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον· μὴ πήραν, μὴ ἄρτον,[1] μὴ εἰς τὴν ζώνην [c]χαλκόν· 9. ἀλλ᾽ [d]ὑποδεδεμένους [e]σανδάλια· καὶ "μὴ ἐνδύσησθε[2] δύο χιτῶνας." 10. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὅπου ἐὰν εἰσέλθητε εἰς οἰκίαν, ἐκεῖ μένετε ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθητε ἐκεῖθεν. 11. καὶ ὅσοι[3] ἂν μὴ δέξωνται[3] ὑμᾶς, μηδὲ ἀκούσωσιν ὑμῶν, ἐκπορευόμενοι ἐκεῖθεν, ἐκτινάξατε τὸν [f]χοῦν τὸν ὑποκάτω τῶν ποδῶν ὑμῶν, εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἀνεκτότερον ἔσται Σοδόμοις ἢ Γομόρροις ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως, ἢ τῇ πόλει ἐκείνῃ."[4] 12. Καὶ ἐξελθόντες ἐκήρυσσον[5] ἵνα μετανοήσωσι[6]· 13. καὶ δαιμόνια πολλὰ ἐξέβαλλον, καὶ ἤλειφον ἐλαίῳ πολλοὺς ἀρρώστους καὶ ἐθεράπευον.

b here only in N.T. (Gen. vi. 19, 20).
c Ch. xii. 41.
d Acts xii. 8. Eph. vi. 15.
e Acts xii. 8 (Is. xx. 2. Judith x. 4; xvi. 9).
f Rev. xviii. 19 (=dust).

[1] μη αρτον μη πηραν in ℵBCLΔ. The order of T.R. conforms to Lk. (so in D).

[2] ενδυσασθαι is the reading of W.H. (text), on slight authority. LΣ have ενδεδυσθαι. The T.R. is supported by ℵACDΔ, and is adopted by Tisch., Trg. (text), Weiss (W.H. margin).

[3] ος αν τοπος μη δεξηται in ℵBLΔ (Tisch., W.H.). The T.R. is an adaptation to ακουσωσιν in next clause, which refers to the people in the place.

[4] From αμην λεγω υμιν to εκεινη is an importation from Mt. not found in ℵBCDLΔ.

[5] εκηρυξαν in ℵBCDLΔ. The imperfect (T.R.) is an assimilation to εξεβαλλον in ver. 13.

[6] μετανοωσιν in BDL (Tisch., W.H.). μετανοησωσι (ℵCΔ) sympathises with εκηρυξαν.

specifying an accompaniment of the mission, not pointing to separate empowerment of each pair.—ἐξουσίαν τ. π. τ. α., power over unclean spirits, alone mentioned by Mark, cf. Matthew and Luke.—Ver. 8. εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον: vide in Matthew, ad loc.—χαλκόν: no mention of gold and silver, brass the only money the poor missionaries were likely to handle.—Ver. 9. ἀλλὰ . . . σανδάλια, but shod with sandals.—μηδὲ ὑποδήματα, says Matthew, reconcilable either by distinguishing between sandals and shoes (vide on Matthew), or by understanding μηδὲ before ὑποδεδεμένους (Victor Ant.).—δυο χιτῶνας: In Mark the prohibition is not to wear (ἐνδύσησθε) two tunics, in Matthew and Luke not to possess a spare one. The sentence in vv. 8, 9 presents a curious instance of varying construction: first ἵνα with the subjunctive after παρήγγειλεν (ver. 8), then ὑποδεδεμένους, implying an infinitive with accusative (πορεύεσθαι understood), then finally there is a transition from indirect to direct narration in μὴ ενδύσησθε.—Ver. 10. ἐκεῖ, ἐκεῖθεν, there, in the house; thence, from the village.—Ver. 11. καὶ ὃς ἂν τ. . . . ὑμων: another instance of inconsequent construction beginning with a relative clause and passing into a conditional one = and whatever place does not receive you, if (ἐάν understood) they, its people, do not listen to you (so Schanz and Weiss in Meyer).—ὑποκάτω, the dust that is under your feet, instead of ἐκ and ἀπὸ in Matthew and Luke. The dust of their roads adhering to your feet, shake it off and leave it behind you. Vv. 12, 13 report the carrying out of the mission by the Twelve through preaching and healing.—ἵνα μετανοῶσιν: the burden of their preaching was, Repent. Luke has the more evangelic term, εὐαγγελιζόμενοι. The other aspect of their ministry is summed up in the expulsion of many demons, and the cure of many suffering from minor ailments, ἀρρώστους (cf. ver. 5). In Mark's account the powers of the Twelve appear much more restricted than in Matthew (cf. x. 8). The use of oil in healing (ἐλαίῳ) is to be noted. Some have regarded this as a mark of late date (Baur). Others (Weiss, Schanz) view it as a primitive g 1 Cor. iii. 13; xiv. 25. Phil. i. 13.

h vide Mt. xiv. 2.

14. Καὶ ἤκουσεν ὁ βασιλεὺς Ἡρώδης, (g φανερὸν γὰρ g ἐγένετο τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ,) καὶ ἔλεγεν,[1] "Ὅτι Ἰωάννης ὁ βαπτίζων ἐκ νεκρῶν ἠγέρθη,[2] καὶ διὰ τοῦτο h ἐνεργοῦσιν αἱ δυνάμεις ἐν αὐτῷ." 15. Ἄλλοι[3] ἔλεγον, "Ὅτι Ἡλίας ἐστίν·" ἄλλοι δὲ ἔλεγον, "Ὅτι προφήτης ἐστίν, ἢ[4] ὡς εἷς τῶν προφητῶν." 16. Ἀκούσας δὲ ὁ Ἡρώδης εἶπεν,[5] "Ὅτι[6] ὃν ἐγὼ ἀπεκεφάλισα Ἰωάννην, οὗτός[7] ἐστιν· αὐτὸς ἠγέρθη ἐκ νεκρῶν."[7] 17. Αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ Ἡρώδης ἀποστείλας ἐκράτησε τὸν Ἰωάννην, καὶ ἔδησεν αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ[8] φυλακῇ, διὰ Ἡρωδιάδα τὴν γυναῖκα Φιλίππου τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ, ὅτι αὐτὴν ἐγάμησεν.

[1] So in ℵACLΔΣ (Tisch., W.H., margin). Vide below.
[2] εγηγερται εκ νεκρων in ℵBDLΔ 33.
[3] Many uncials add δε.
[4] ℵBCL omit εστιν η (Tisch., W.H.).
[5] ελεγεν in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[6] οτι omit ℵBDL 33.
[7] For ουτος . . . εκ νεκ. ℵBLΔ have simply ουτος ηγερθη.
[8] τη is found only in minusc.

practice (vide James v. 14). Many conjectural opinions have been expressed as to the function or significance of the oil. According to Lightfoot and Schöttgen it was much used at the time by physicians.

The instructions to the Twelve present an interesting problem in criticism and comparative exegesis. It is not improbable that two versions of these existed and have been drawn upon by the synoptists, one in the Logia of Matthew, reproduced, Weiss thinks, substantially in Lk. x. (mission of Seventy), the other in Mk. vi., used (Weiss) in Lk. ix. 1-6. Matthew, according to the same critic, mixes the two. Similarly Holtzmann, who, however, differs from Weiss in thinking the two versions entirely independent. Weiss reconstructs the original version of the Logia thus:—

1. Mt. ix. 38 = Lk. x. 2, prayer for labourers.
2. Lk. x. 3 = go forth, I send you as lambs among wolves.
3. Mt. x. 5, 6, go not to Samaria, but to Israel only.
4. Lk. x. 4-11, detailed instructions.

Vv. 14-16. Herod and Jesus (Mt. xiv. 1, 2, Lk. ix. 7-9).—Ver. 14. ἤκουσεν: Herod heard, what? Christ's name, τὸ ὁ. α. (φανερὸν γὰρ ἐγέν., a parenthesis)? Or all that is stated in vv. 14, 15, court opinion about Jesus (from φανερὸν to προφητῶν, a parenthesis)? Both views have been held, but the simplest view is that Herod heard of the doings of the Twelve, though it is difficult to believe that the report of their mission was the first tidings he had received of the great work of Jesus, especially in view of the understanding between the Pharisees and Herodians mentioned in iii. 6. In the reports which reached Herod the Twelve were merged in their Master. He was the hero of the whole Galilean movement. Such is the import of the statement that His name had become known.—βασιλεὺς: strictly, Herod was only a tetrarch (Matthew and Luke), but it was natural for Mark writing for the Roman world to use this title, as it was applied freely in Rome to all eastern rulers.—ἔλεγεν, he said, i.e., Herod. ἔλεγον, the reading of BD, and adopted by W.H., puts the saying into the mouth of the court people. Matthew has taken it the former way, Luke the latter. The theory that Jesus was John risen looks more like the creation of a troubled conscience than the suggestion of light-minded courtiers, unless indeed it was thrown out by them as a jest, and yet it appears to be the aim of the evangelist first to report the opinions of others and then to give the king's, emphatically endorsing one of the hypotheses.—ἐγήγερται, is risen, and is now alive and active, the latter the point emphasised.—ἐνεργοῦσιν αἱ δ.: vide notes on Matthew.—Ἡλίας, Elias redivivus, with extraordinary power and mission.—Ver. 15. προφήτης, etc., a prophet like one of the old prophets, not any of them redivivus. Luke understands it in the latter sense.—Ver. 16. Ἰώαννην: the accusative incorporated with the relative clause by

18. ἔλεγε γὰρ ὁ Ἰωάννης τῷ Ἡρώδῃ, "Ὅτι οὐκ ἔξεστί σοι ἔχειν τὴν γυναῖκα τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου." 19. Ἡ δὲ Ἡρωδιὰς ἐνεῖχεν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἤθελεν αὐτὸν ἀποκτεῖναι· καὶ οὐκ ἠδύνατο. 20. ὁ γὰρ Ἡρώδης ἐφοβεῖτο τὸν Ἰωάννην, εἰδὼς αὐτὸν ἄνδρα δίκαιον καὶ ἅγιον, καὶ συνετήρει αὐτόν· καὶ ἀκούσας αὐτοῦ, πολλὰ ἐποίει,[1] καὶ ἡδέως αὐτοῦ ἤκουε. 21. καὶ γενομένης ἡμέρας εὐκαίρου, ὅτε Ἡρώδης τοῖς γενεσίοις αὐτοῦ δεῖπνον ἐποίει[2] τοῖς μεγιστᾶσιν αὐτοῦ καὶ τοῖς i Lk. xi. 53.

j Rev. vi. 15; xviii. 23.

[1] ηπορει in ℵBL. Memph. vers. (R.V., Tisch., Trg., marg., W.H., Ws.). εποιει (T.R.) in ACDΔΠΣΦ, etc. Lat. and Syr. verss.

[2] εποιησεν in ℵBCDLΔ.

attraction both in position and in construction; vide Winer, § xxiv. 2, and Viger, p. 33. The king's statement is very emphatic = the man whom I beheaded, John, he is risen (that is what it all means).

Vv. 17-29. Story of Herod and the Baptist (Mt. xiv. 3-12). Herod's endorsement of the theory that Jesus is John redivivus gives a convenient opportunity for reporting here post eventum the Baptist's fate. The report is given in aorists which need not be translated as pluperfects (as in A. V. and R. V.).—Ver. 17. αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ Ἡ., for the same Herod, who made the speech just reported, etc.—τὴν γυναῖκα Φιλίππου: some have supposed that the mistake is here made of taking Herodias for the wife of Philip the tetrarch, who in reality was husband of her daughter Salome (so Holtz. in H. C.). Herodias had previously been the wife of a rich man in Jerusalem, step-brother of Herod Antipas, referred to by Josephus (Ant. J., xviii., 5, 4) by the name of Herod, the family name. He may, of course, have borne another name, such as Philip. Even if there be a slip it is a matter of small moment compared to the moral interest of the gruesome story.—Ver. 19. ἡ δὲ Ἡρ.: the murderous mood is by Mark ascribed to Herodias; in her it would certainly be strongest and unchecked by any other feeling. In Herod, if the mood was there, it was accompanied by worthier impulses (vide on Matthew).—ἐνεῖχεν, had a grudge (χόλον understood, so Fritzsche al.) against him (αὐτῷ, dative of disadvantage); or, kept in mind what John had said, treasured up against him, with fixed hate and purpose of revenge.—καὶ οὐκ ἠδύνατο, and was not able, to compass her end for a while.—Ver. 20 gives the reason.—ἐφοβεῖτο, feared, a mixture of reverence and superstitious dread towards the prophet and man of God.—συνετήρει, not merely observed him (A. V.)—this too neutral and colourless—kept him safe (R. V.) from her fixed malice often manifested but not likely to have its way with him in ordinary circumstances.—ἀκούσας πολλὰ implies frequent meetings between the Baptist and the king, either at Machaerus or at Tiberias.—ἠπόρει, the true reading, not only on critical grounds (attested by ℵBL), but also on psychological, corresponding exactly to the character of the man—a δίψυχος ἀνὴρ—drawn two ways, by respect for goodness on the one hand, by evil passions on the other. He was at a loss what to do in the matter of his wife's well-known purpose, shiftless (ἀπορεῖν, to be without resources); half sympathised with her wish, yet could not be brought to the point.—ἡδέως α. ἤκουεν, ever heard him with pleasure; every new hearing exorcising the vindictive demon, even the slightest sympathy with it, for a time.

Vv. 21-29. The fatal day.—Ver. 21. εὐκαίρου, a day convenient for the long cherished purpose of Herodias; so regarded by her as well as by the evangelist. She had a chance then, if ever, and might hope that by wine, love, and the assistance of obsequious guests, her irresolute husband would at last be brought to the point (Grotius). The word occurs again in the N. T., Heb. iv. 16, εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν = seasonable succour.—μεγιστᾶσιν (μεγιστᾶνες from μέγιστος), magnates. A word belonging to Macedonian Greek, condemned by Phryn. (p. 196: μέγα δυναμένοι the right expression), frequent in Sept. With these magnates, the civil authorities, are named the chief military men (χιλιάρχοις) and the socially important persons of Galilee (πρώτοις)—an imposing gathering on Herod's birthday.—Ver. 22. ἤρεσεν, it, the dancing, pleased Herod χιλιάρχοις καὶ τοῖς πρώτοις τῆς Γαλιλαίας, 22. καὶ εἰσελθούσης τῆς θυγατρὸς αὐτῆς τῆς[1] Ἡρωδιάδος, καὶ ὀρχησαμένης, καὶ ἀρεσάσης[2] τῷ Ἡρώδῃ καὶ τοῖς συνανακειμένοις, εἶπεν ὁ βασιλεὺς[3] τῷ κορασίῳ, "Αἴτησόν με ὃ ἐὰν θέλῃς, καὶ δώσω σοί·" 23. καὶ ὤμοσεν αὐτῇ, "Ὅτι ὃ ἐάν[4] με αἰτήσῃς, δώσω σοί, ἕως ἡμίσους τῆς βασιλείας μου." 24. Ἡ δὲ[5] ἐξελθοῦσα εἶπε τῇ μητρὶ αὐτῆς, "Τί αἰτήσομαι[6];" Ἡ δὲ εἶπε, "Τὴν κεφαλὴν Ἰωάννου τοῦ Βαπτιστοῦ."[7] 25. Καὶ εἰσελθοῦσα εὐθέως [k] μετὰ σπουδῆς πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα, ᾐτήσατο, λέγουσα, "Θέλω ἵνα μοι δῷς ἐξ αὐτῆς[8] ἐπὶ πίνακι τὴν κεφαλὴν Ἰωάννου τοῦ Βαπτιστοῦ." 26. Καὶ περίλυπος γενόμενος ὁ βασιλεύς, διὰ τοὺς ὅρκους καὶ τοὺς συνανακειμένους[9] οὐκ ἠθέλησεν αὐτὴν ἀθετῆσαι.[10] 27. καὶ εὐθέως ἀποστείλας ὁ βασιλεὺς σπεκουλάτωρα[11] ἐπέταξεν ἐνεχθῆναι[12] τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ. ὁ δὲ[13] ἀπελθὼν ἀπεκεφάλισεν αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ, 28. καὶ ἤνεγκε τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ πίνακι, καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτὴν τῷ κορασίῳ· καὶ τὸ κοράσιον ἔδωκεν k Rom. xii. 8. 2 Cor. vii. 11, 12; viii. 7, 8, 16. Heb. vi. 11. 2 Pet. i. 5. Jude 3.

[1] For αυτης της ℵBDLΔ have αυτου (omitting της), adopted by W.H. contrary, Weiss thinks, to all history, all grammar, and the context (vide in Meyer).

[2] For και αρεσ. ℵBCL 33 have ηρεσεν.

[3] ο δε βασιλ. ειπεν in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[4] BΔ have ο τι εαν, the most probable reading (W.H. text).

[5] For η δε ℵBLΔ 33 have και.

[6] αιτησωμαι in ℵABCDGLΔ 33.

[7] βαπτιζοντος in ℵBLΔ.

[8] εξαυτης δως μοι in ℵBCLΔ.

[9] ανακειμενους in BCLΔ.

[10] αθετ. αυτην in ℵBCLΔ.

[11] σπεκουλατορα in ℵABL al.

[12] ενεγκαι in ℵBCΔ (T.R. in DL).

[13] For ο δε BCLΔ have και.

and his guests.—τ. κορασίῳ, to the girl, as in v. 41-2, not necessarily a child; the word was used familiarly like the Scotch word "lassie"; disapproved by Phryn., p. 73.—αἴτησόν με . . . ὤμοσεν: promise first, followed by oath after a little interval, during which the girl naturally hesitated what to ask.—Ver. 23. ἡμίσους, genitive of ἥμισυς, like ἡμίση (τὰ, plural), a late form = the half, of my kingdom: maudlin amorous generosity.—Ver. 24. She goes out to ask advice of her mother, implying that she had not previously got instructions as Matthew's account suggests.—Ver. 25. εὐθὺς μετὰ σπουδῆς, without delay and with quick step, as of one whose heart was in the business. There had been no reluctance then on the girl's part, no need for much educating to bring her to the point; vide remarks on προβιβασθεῖσα in Mt. xiv. 8. Her mother's child.—ἐξαυτῆς (supply ὥρας), on the spot, at once; request proffered with a cool pert impudence almost outdoing the mother.—Ver. 26. περίλυπος γενόμενος: a concessive clause, καίπερ understood = and the king, though exceedingly sorry, yet, etc.—ὅρκους: there might be more oaths than one (vide on Matthew), but the plural was sometimes used for a single oath. Schanz cites instances from Aeschylus and Xenophon. —ἀθετῆσαι α., to slight her, by treating the oath and promise as a joke; a late word, used, in reference to persons, in the sense of breaking faith with (here only). Kypke renders the word here: "noluit fidem illi datam fallere," citing instances from Diod., Polyb., and Sept. —Ver. 27. σπεκουλάτορα = speculator in Latin, literally a watcher, a military official of the empire who acted partly as courier, partly as a police officer, partly as an executioner; illustrative citations in Wetstein. The word found its way into the Jewish language (here only).—Ver. 29 relates how the disciples of John buried the carcase of their master.—ἐν μνημείῳ, in a tomb. The phrase recalls αὐτὴν τῇ μητρὶ αὐτῆς. 29. Καὶ ἀκούσαντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἦλθον, καὶ ἦραν τὸ πτῶμα αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔθηκαν αὐτὸ ἐν τῷ[1] μνημείῳ.

30. Καὶ συνάγονται οἱ ἀπόστολοι πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, καὶ ἀπήγγειλαν αὐτῷ πάντα, καὶ[2] ὅσα ἐποίησαν καὶ ὅσα ἐδίδαξαν. 31. καὶ εἶπεν[3] αὐτοῖς, "Δεῦτε ὑμεῖς αὐτοὶ κατ' ἰδίαν εἰς ἔρημον τόπον, καὶ ἀναπαύεσθε[4] ὀλίγον." Ἦσαν γὰρ οἱ ἐρχόμενοι καὶ οἱ ὑπάγοντες πολλοί, καὶ οὐδὲ φαγεῖν ηὐκαίρουν.[5] 32. καὶ ἀπῆλθον εἰς ἔρημον τόπον τῷ πλοίῳ[6] κατ' ἰδίαν. 33. Καὶ εἶδον αὐτοὺς ὑπάγοντας οἱ ὄχλοι,[7] καὶ ἐπέγνωσαν αὐτὸν[8] πολλοί· καὶ πεζῇ ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν πόλεων [l] συνέδραμον ἐκεῖ, καὶ [m] προῆλθον αὐτούς, καὶ συνῆλθον πρὸς l Acts iii. 11.

m Lk. xxii. 47.

[1] Omit τω most uncials (D has it).
[2] Omit και ℵBCDLΔΣ.
[3] λεγει in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[4] αναπαυσασθε in ℵBCΔ.
[5] ευκαιρουν in most uncials.
[6] τω πλ. εις ερ. τοπον in ℵBLΔ.
[7] Omit οι οχ. ℵABDLΔΣ al.
[8] BD have εγνωσαν and without an object (αυτον or αυτους).

to mind the burial of Jesus. Did the evangelist wish to suggest for the reflection of his readers a parallel between the fate of the Baptist and that of Christ? (So Klostermann).

Vv. 30-33. Return of the Twelve (Mt. xiv. 13, Lk. ix. 10, 11).—Ver. 30 transfers us from the past date of the horrible deed just related to the time when the fame of Jesus and His disciples recalled the deed of guilt to Herod's mind.—συνάγονται οἱ ἀπόστολοι πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, the apostles (here only, and not in the technical sense of after days, but = the men sent out on the Galilean mission, the missioners) gather to Jesus. Where? after how long? and what has Jesus been doing the while? No answer is possible. These are gaps in the evangelic history.—πάντα ὅσα ἐπ.: suggests that they had great things to tell, though vv. 12, 13 create very moderate expectations. The repetition of ὅσα before ἐδίδαξαν = how much they had taught ("quanta docuerant," Fritzsche), may surprise. The teaching element could not be extensive in the range of topics. Yet, if it took the form of personal narrative concerning Jesus, it might be copious enough, and really the principal feature of the mission. Vide notes on Mt., chap. x.—Ver. 31. ὑμεῖς αὐτοί, either: you yourselves, vos ipsi, without the crowd (Meyer, Schanz), or, better: you the same men who have been hard at work and need rest (Weiss in Meyer, Holtz., H. C.). This sympathy of Jesus with the Twelve reflects His own craving for rest which He often unsuccessfully strove to obtain.—ἀναπαύσασθε, aorist, only a breathing space in a life of toil.—οἱ ἐρ. καὶ οἱ ὑπάγ. Many coming and going: a constant stream of people on some errand; no sooner done with one party than another presented itself—no leisure.—οὐδὲ φαγεῖν εὐκαίρουν: no leisure (cf. εὔκαιρος, ver. 21), even to eat; imperfect, implying that it was not a solitary occurrence. What was the business on hand? Probably a political movement in Christ's favour with which the Twelve sympathised. Vide John vi. 15.—Ver. 32. τῷ πλοίῳ. The boat which stood ready for service (iii. 9).—κατ' ἰδίαν, privately, i.e., with Jesus only in the boat, and without other boats accompanying. As to the reason for this withdrawal into privacy cf. Mk.'s account with Mt.'s (xiv. 13), who connects with the report of John's death. Beyond doubt, Mk.'s is the correct account. The excursion was an attempt to escape from the crowd and from dangerous illusions; again without success.—Ver. 33 explains why.—εἶδον, etc., they (the people) saw them departing.—ἐπέγνωσαν (or ἔγνωσαν, BD) is better without an object (αὐτοὺς or αὐτὸν) = they knew, not who they were, but what they were after, where they were going, doubtless from the course they were steering.—πεζῇ (from πεζός, adjective ὁδῷ, understood), on foot, by land round the end of the lake.—συνέδραμον, they ran together, excited and exciting, each town on the way contributing its rill to the growing stream of eager human beings; what a picture! The αὐτόν.[1] 34. καὶ ἐξελθὼν εἶδεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς[2] πολὺν ὄχλον, καὶ ἐσπλαγχνίσθη ἐπ' αὐτοῖς,[3] ὅτι ἦσαν ὡς πρόβατα μὴ ἔχοντα ποιμένα· καὶ ἤρξατο διδάσκειν αὐτοὺς πολλά. 35. Καὶ ἤδη ὥρας πολλῆς γενομένης, προσελθόντες αὐτῷ[4] οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ λέγουσιν,[4] "Ὅτι ἔρημός ἐστιν ὁ τόπος, καὶ ἤδη ὥρα πολλή· 36. ἀπόλυσον αὐτούς, ἵνα ἀπελθόντες εἰς τοὺς κύκλῳ ἀγροὺς καὶ κώμας, ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς ἄρτους[5]· τί γὰρ φάγωσιν οὐκ ἔχουσιν."[5] 37. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Δότε αὐτοῖς ὑμεῖς φαγεῖν." Καὶ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Ἀπελθόντες ἀγοράσωμεν διακοσίων δηναρίων[6] ἄρτους, καὶ δῶμεν[7] αὐτοῖς φαγεῖν." 38. Ὁ δὲ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Πόσους ἄρτους ἔχετε; ὑπάγετε καὶ[8] ἴδετε." Καὶ γνόντες λέγουσι, "Πέντε, καὶ δύο ἰχθύας." 39. Καὶ ἐπέταξεν αὐτοῖς ἀνακλῖναι[9] πάντας συμπόσια συμπόσια ἐπὶ τῷ χλωρῷ χόρτῳ. 40. καὶ ἀνέπεσον πρασιαὶ πρασιαί, ἀνὰ[10] ἑκατὸν καὶ ἀνὰ[10] πεντήκοντα. 41. καὶ λαβὼν τοὺς πέντε ἄρτους καὶ τοὺς δύο ἰχθύας, ἀναβλέψας εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, εὐλόγησε· καὶ κατέκλασε τοὺς ἄρτους, καὶ ἐδίδου τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ[11] ἵνα παραθῶσιν[12] αὐτοῖς· καὶ τοὺς δύο ἰχθύας ἐμέρισε πᾶσι· 42. καὶ ἔφαγον πάντες, καὶ ἐχορτάσθησαν· 43. καὶ ἦραν κλασμάτων δώδεκα κοφίνους πλήρεις,[13]

[1] ℵBLΔ omit και συνηλθον προς αυτον (Tisch., W.H.). [2] Omit ο I. ℵAB al. pl.
[3] αυτους in ℵBD. [4] ελεγον in ℵBLΔ.
[5] For αρτους . . . εχουσιν ℵBLΔ have simply τι φαγωσιν (Tisch., W.H.).
[6] δην. διακ. in ℵABLΔ. [7] δωσωμεν in ℵBD. -ομεν LΔ (W.H.).
[8] και omit ℵBDL 33. [9] ανακλιθηναι in ℵB. ανακλιναι DLΔ.
[10] κατα in ℵBD (Tisch., W.H.). [11] αυτου omit ℵBLΔ.
[12] παρατιθωσιν in ℵBLΔ. [13] B has κλασματα δ. κοφινων πληρωματα (W.H.).

ultimate result, a congregation of 5000. This the climax of popularity, and, from the fourth Gospel we learn, its crisis (chap. vi.).—προῆλθον, "outran" (A. V.), anticipated = φθάνειν in classics.

Vv. 34-44. The feeding (Mt. xiv. 14-21, Lk. ix. 11-17).—Ver. 34. ἤρξατο διδάσκειν, He began to teach, constrained by pity (ἐσπλαγχνίσθη), though weary of toil and of popularity. To teach; Mt. says to heal. There could be few, if any, sick in a crowd that had come in such a hurry.—Ver. 35. ὥρας πολλῆς, it being late in the day.—πολύς was extensively used by the Greeks in all sorts of connections, time included; examples in Kypke and Hermann's Viger, p. 137 f. The phrase recurs in last clause of this verse (ὥρα πολλή).—Ver. 37. δηναρ. διακ. ἄρτους, loaves of (purchasable for) 200 denarii; the sum probably suggested by what the Twelve knew they were in possession of at the time = seven pounds in the purse of the Jesus-circle (Grotius, Holtz., H. C.).—Ver. 39. συμπόσια συμ. Hebraistic for ἀνα συμ. (cf. δύο δύο, ver. 7) = in dining companies.—ἐπὶ τῷ χλωρῷ χόρτῳ, on the green grass; a reedy, marshy place near the mouth of the Jordan at the north end of the lake. Vide Stanley's description (Sinai and Palestine).—Ver. 40. πρασιαὶ πρασιαὶ = ἀνα πρασίας, in garden flower plots, or squares, picturesque in fact and in description, bespeaking an eye-witness of an impressionable nature like Peter.—Ver. 43. καὶ ἦραν, etc., and they took up, as fragments (κλάσματα, BL), the fillings (πληρώματα) of twelve baskets.—καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἰχθύων, and of the fishes, either over and above what was in the twelve baskets (Fritzsche), or some fragments of the fishes included in them (Meyer).—Ver. 44. πεντακισχίλιοι ἄνδρες, 5000 men: one loaf for 1000! Mt. adds: χωρὶς γυναικῶν καὶ παιδίων, women and children not counted. Of these, in the circumstances, there would καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἰχθύων. 44. καὶ ἦσαν οἱ φαγόντες τοὺς ἄρτους ὡσεὶ[1] πεντακισχίλιοι ἄνδρες. 45. Καὶ εὐθέως ἠνάγκασε τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ ἐμβῆναι εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, καὶ προάγειν εἰς τὸ πέραν πρὸς Βηθσαϊδάν, ἕως αὐτὸς ἀπολύσῃ[2] τὸν ὄχλον. 46. καὶ [n] ἀποταξάμενος αὐτοῖς, ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸ ὄρος προσεύξασθαι. 47. Καὶ ὀψίας γενομένης, ἦν τὸ πλοῖον ἐν μέσῳ τῆς θαλάσσης, καὶ αὐτὸς μόνος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. 48. Καὶ εἶδεν[3] αὐτοὺς βασανιζομένους ἐν τῷ ἐλαύνειν· ἦν γὰρ ὁ ἄνεμος ἐναντίος αὐτοῖς. καὶ[3] περὶ τετάρτην φυλακὴν τῆς νυκτὸς ἔρχεται πρὸς αὐτούς, περιπατῶν ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης· καὶ ἤθελε παρελθεῖν αὐτούς. 49. οἱ δὲ ἰδόντες αὐτὸν περιπατοῦντα ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης,[4] ἔδοξαν φάντασμα εἶναι,[5] καὶ ἀνέκραξαν· 50. πάντες γὰρ αὐτὸν εἶδον, καὶ ἐταράχθησαν. καὶ εὐθέως[6] ἐλάλησε μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Θαρσεῖτε· ἐγώ εἰμι, μὴ φοβεῖσθε." 51. Καὶ ἀνέβη πρὸς αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, καὶ ἐκόπασεν ὁ ἄνεμος· καὶ λίαν ἐκ περισσοῦ[7] ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἐξίσταντο, καὶ n Lk. ix. 61; xiv. 33. Acts xviii. 8.

[1] ℵBDLΔ omit ωσει. [2] απολυει in ℵBL. απολυσῃ is from Mt.

[3] ιδων in ℵBDLΔ, which (D excepted) also omit και before περι τεταρτην φυλακην. ειδεν και is a simplification of the construction.

[4] Tr. (επι τ. θ. περιπ.) ℵBLΔ 33.

[5] οτι φαντασμα εστιν in ℵBLΔ 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] ο δε ευθυς in ℵBLΔ.

[7] ℵBLΔ omit εκ περισσου (W.H.). It suits the situation and may have fallen out by oversight, or been omitted as superfluous, though really not so.

be few, therefore probably not referred to by Mk.

Vv. 45-52. Another sea-anecdote (Mt. xiv. 22-33). Luke drops out here and does not join his brother evangelists till we come to viii. 27.—Ver. 45. εὐθὺς: no time to lose; it was getting late.—ἠνάγκασε, vide on Mt.—εἰς τὸ πέραν: we are apt to take this as a matter of course as = to the other (western) side of the lake, and consequently to assume that πρὸς Βηθσαϊδάν points to a Bethsaida there, distinct from Bethsaida Julias (John i. 44). But the expression εἰς τ. π. may mean from the south end of the plain El Batiha, on the eastern side, to the north end towards Bethsaida Julias, the rendezvous for the night. In that case the contrary wind which overtook the disciples would be the prevailing wind from the north-east, driving them in an opposite direction away from Bethsaida towards the western shore. This is the view advocated by Furrer. Vide Zeitschrift des Palästina-Vereins, B. ii. (1879). Holtz., H. C., thinks that either this view must be adopted or the true reading in the clause referring to B. must be that represented in some Latin copies: "trans fretum a Bedsaida," C. Veron.; "a Bethsaida," C. Monac.—Ver. 46. ἀποταξάμενος, having dismissed them, i.e., the multitude; late Greek condemned by Phryn., p. 23 (ἔκφυλον πάνυ).—Ver. 48. ἐν τῷ ἐλαύνειν, in propelling (the ship with oars).—περὶ τετ. φυλ., about the fourth watch, between three and six in the morning, towards dawn.—ἤθελε παρελθεῖν, He wished to pass them—"praeterire eos," Vul.; it appeared so to them.—Ver. 50. Not quite an instance of Mark's habit of iteration: explains how they came to think it was a phantasm. All saw what looked like Jesus, yet they could not believe it was He, a real man, walking on the water; therefore they took fright and rushed to the conclusion: a spectre!—Ver. 51. ἐκόπασεν, as in iv. 39—λίαν ἐκ περισσοῦ, very exceedingly, a double superlative, a most likely combination for Mark, though ἐκ περ. is wanting in some important MSS. and omitted in W.H. Cf. ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ in Eph. iii. 20.—Ver. 52 reflects on the astonishment of the Twelve as blameworthy in view of ἐθαύμαζον.[1] 52. οὐ γὰρ συνῆκαν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἄρτοις· ἦν γὰρ ἡ καρδία αὐτῶν[2] °πεπωρωμένη.

53. ΚΑΙ διαπεράσαντες ἦλθον ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν[3] Γενησαρέτ,[4] καὶ προσωρμίσθησαν. 54. καὶ ἐξελθόντων αὐτῶν ἐκ τοῦ πλοίου, εὐθέως ἐπιγνόντες αὐτόν, 55. περιδραμόντες[5] ὅλην τὴν περίχωρον[6] ἐκείνην, ἤρξαντο ἐπὶ τοῖς κραββάτοις τοὺς κακῶς ἔχοντας ᵖπεριφέρειν, ὅπου ἤκουον ὅτι ἐκεῖ[7] ἐστι. 56. καὶ ὅπου ἂν εἰσεπορεύετο εἰς κώμας ἢ[8] πόλεις ἢ[8] ἀγρούς, ἐν ταῖς ἀγοραῖς ἐτίθουν[9] τοὺς ἀσθενοῦντας, καὶ παρεκάλουν αὐτόν, ἵνα κἂν τοῦ κρασπέδου τοῦ ἱματίου αὐτοῦ ἅψωνται· καὶ ὅσοι ἂν ἥπτοντο[10] αὐτοῦ, ἐσώζοντο.

o Ch. viii. 17. John xii. 40. Rom. xi. 7. 2 Cor. iii. 14.

p 2 Cor. iv. 10. Eph. iv. 14.

[1] ℵBLΔ omit και εθαυμαζον, which is superfluous.

[2] For ην γαρ . . . αυτων ℵBLΔ have αλλ ην, etc., and AℵBΣ αυτων η καρ.

[3] επι τ. γ. ηλθον in ℵBLΔ 33.

[4] εις before Γεν. in ℵBLΔ 33.

[5] περιεδραμον in ℵBLΔ 33 (with και before ηρξαντο).

[6] χωραν in ℵBLΔ 33.

[7] εκει omit ℵBLΔ.

[8] εις before πολεις and αγρους in ℵBDΔ.

[9] ετιθεσαν in ℵBLΔ.

[10] ηψαντο in ℵBDLΔ 33 al.

the recent feeding of the multitude. One might rather have expected a reference to the stilling of the storm in crossing to Decapolis. But that seems to have appeared a small matter compared with walking on the sea. The evangelist seems anxious to show how much the Twelve needed the instruction to which in the sequel Jesus gives Himself more and more.

Vv. 53-56. The landing (Mt. xiv. 34-36).—Ver. 53. προσωρμίσθησαν (πρὸς ὁρμίζω from ὅρμος), they came to anchor, or landed on the beach; here only in N. T.—Ver. 55. ἐπὶ τοῖς κραββάτοις, upon their beds, vide ii. 4.—περιφέρειν, to carry about from place to place. If they did not find Jesus at one place, they were not discouraged, but carried their sick to another place where He was likely to be. Their energy, not less than the word κραββάτοις, recalls the story in ii. 1-12.—ὅπου ἤκουον ὅτι ἐστιν, not: wherever He was = ὅπου ἦν, but: wherever they were told He was; ἐστιν, present, from the point of view of those who gave the information in indirect discourse. Vide on this, Burton, M. and T., § 351.—Ver. 56. κώμας, πόλεις, ἀγρούς: point probably to a wider sphere of activity than the plain of Gennesaret. This was practically the close of the healing ministry, in which the expectation and faith of the people were wound up to the highest pitch.

CHAPTER VII. WASHING OF HANDS. SYROPHENICIAN WOMAN. A DEAF-MUTE HEALED.—Vv. 1-23. Concerning ceremonial ablutions (Mt. xv. 1-20).—Ver. 1. καὶ connects what follows very loosely with what goes before: not temporal sequence but contrast between phenomenal popularity and hostility of the religious leaders of the people, in the view of the evangelist.—τινὲς τῶν γραμ., etc., some of the scribes who had come from Jerusalem, cf. iii. 22, and remarks there.—Ver. 2. καὶ ἰδόντες: the sentence beginning with these words properly runs on to the end of ver. 5, but the construction of so long a sentence overtaxes the grammatical skill of the writer, so it is broken off unfinished after the long explanatory clause about Jewish customs, vv. 3-4—a kind of parenthesis—and a new sentence begun at ver. 5 = and seeing, etc. (for the Pharisees, etc.), and the Pharisees and scribes ask; instead of: they ask, etc. The sense plain enough, though grammar crude.—τινὰς τ. μαθ., some of the disciples, not all. When? On their evangelistic tour? (Weiss; Holtz., H. C.) We have here, as in i. 24, a case of attraction = seeing some that they eat (ὅτι ἐσθίουσι, W.H.), for seeing that some eat (ὅτι τινὲς ἐσ.).—ἀνίπτοις, unwashed, added to explain for Gentile readers the technical term κοιναῖς = profane (cf. Rom. xiv. 14).—Vv. 3-4. Ex-

VII. 1. ΚΑΙ συνάγονται πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ Φαρισαῖοι, καί τινες τῶν γραμματέων, ἐλθόντες ἀπὸ Ἱεροσολύμων· 2. καὶ ἰδόντες τινὰς τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ [a] κοιναῖς[1] χερσί, τοῦτ' ἔστιν ἀνίπτοις, ἐσθίοντας[1] ἄρτους[2] ἐμέμψαντο[3]· 3. (οἱ γὰρ Φαρισαῖοι καὶ πάντες οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι, ἐὰν μὴ [b] πυγμῇ νίψωνται τὰς χεῖρας, οὐκ ἐσθίουσι, κρατοῦντες τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν πρεσβυτέρων· 4. καὶ ἀπὸ ἀγορᾶς, ἐὰν μὴ [c] βαπτίσωνται,[4] οὐκ ἐσθίουσι· καὶ ἄλλα πολλά ἐστιν ἃ παρέλαβον κρατεῖν, [d] βαπτισμοὺς ποτηρίων καὶ ξεστῶν καὶ χαλκίων καὶ κλινῶν[5]·) 5. ἔπειτα[6] ἐπερωτῶσιν αὐτὸν οἱ Φαρισαῖοι καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς, "Διατί οἱ μαθηταί σου οὐ [e] περιπατοῦσι[7] κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, ἀλλὰ ἀνίπτοις[8] χερσὶν ἐσθίουσι τὸν ἄρτον;" 6. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς[9] εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὅτι καλῶς προεφήτευσεν Ἡσαΐας περὶ ὑμῶν τῶν ὑποκριτῶν, ὡς γέγραπται, 'Οὗτος ὁ λαὸς τοῖς χείλεσί με a ver. 5. Acts x. 14. Rom. xiv. 14. Heb. x. 29.

b here only.
c Lk. xi. 38.
d Col. ii. 12. Heb. vi. 2; ix. 10.
e Acts xxi. 21. Rom. viii. 4.

[1] οτι before κοιναις with εσθιουσι in ℵBLΔ 33 (W.H.).

[2] τους before αρτους in ℵBDLNΔΣ.

[3] Omit εμεμψαντο ℵABLΔ. It was doubtless introduced to help the construction.

[4] ℵB have ραντισωνται (W.H. text).

[5] και κλινων is omitted in ℵBLΔ (W.H. marg.), but found in D. It might fall out by similar ending, and was hardly likely to be added as a gloss.

[6] και in ℵBDL 33.

[7] ου περι. οι μαθ. σου in ℵBLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[8] κοιναις in ℵBD for ανιπτοις, which seems an explanatory substitute.

[9] Omitted in ℵBLΔ 33, also οτι before καλως.

planatory statement about Jewish customs, not in Mt.—πάντες οἱ Ἰουδ.: the Pharisees, the thorough-going virtuosi in religion, were a limited number; but in this and other respects the Jews generally followed ancient custom. The expression reminds us of the Fourth Gospel in its manner of referring to the people of Israel—the Jews—as foreigners. Mark speaks from the Gentile point of view.—πυγμῇ, with the fist, the Vulgate has here crebro, answering to πυκνά, a reading found in ℵ. Most recent interpreters interpret πυγμῇ as meaning that they rubbed hard the palm of one hand with the other closed, so as to make sure that the part which touched food should be clean. (So Beza.) For other interpretations vide Lightfoot, Bengel, and Meyer.—Ver. 4. ἀπ' ἀγορᾶς, from market (coming understood = ὅταν ἔλθωσι in D), a common ellipsis, examples in Raphel, Kypke, and Bos, Ell. Gr., p. 98.—ῥαντίσωνται (ℵB), they sprinkle. The reading, βαπτίσωνται (T.R.), may be interpreted either as = dipping of the hands (mersionem manuum, Lightfoot, Wetstein), or, bathing of the whole body. (Meyer. "The statement proceeds by way of climax: before eating they wash the hands always. When they come from market they take a bath before eating.")—ποτηρίων, ξεστῶν, χαλκίων: the evangelist explains how the Jews not only cleansed their own persons, but also all sorts of household utensils—altogether a serious business, that of preserving ceremonial purity. The two first articles, cups and jugs, would be of wood; earthen vessels when defiled had to be broken (Lev. xv. 12). The second word, ξεστῶν, is a Latinism = sextus or sextarius, a Roman measure = 1½ English pints; here used without reference to contents = urceus in Vulg.—χαλκίων = vessels of brass. The καὶ κλινῶν, added in some MSS., will mean couches for meals on which diseased persons may have lain (lepers, etc.).—Ver. 5. At last we come to the point, the complaint of the jealous guardians of Jewish custom, as handed down from the elders (κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν τ. π.), against the disciples of Jesus, and indirectly against Jesus Himself.—διατί οὐ περιπατοῦσι κατὰ: for this Mt. substitutes δ. παραβαίνουσι.

Vv. 6-13. The reply of Jesus. It con-τιμᾷ, ἡ δὲ καρδία αὐτῶν πόρρω ἀπέχει ἀπ' ἐμοῦ. 7. μάτην δὲ σέβονταί με, διδάσκοντες διδασκαλίας, ἐντάλματα ἀνθρώπων·' 8. Ἀφέντες γὰρ[1] τὴν ἐντολὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ, κρατεῖτε τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, βαπτισμοὺς ξεστῶν καὶ ποτηρίων, καὶ ἄλλα παρόμοια τοιαῦτα πολλὰ ποιεῖτε."[2] 9. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Καλῶς[f] ἀθετεῖτε τὴν ἐντολὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα τὴν παράδοσιν ὑμῶν τηρήσητε. 10. Μωσῆς γὰρ εἶπε, 'Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ τὴν μητέρα σου·' καί, 'ὁ κακολογῶν πατέρα ἢ μητέρα θανάτῳ τελευτάτω·' 11. Ὑμεῖς δὲ λέγετε, Ἐὰν εἴπῃ ἄνθρωπος τῷ πατρὶ ἢ τῇ μητρί, Κορβᾶν, (ὅ ἐστι, δῶρον,) ὃ ἐὰν ἐξ ἐμοῦ ὠφεληθῇς· 12. καὶ[3] οὐκέτι ἀφίετε αὐτὸν οὐδὲν ποιῆσαι τῷ πατρὶ αὐτοῦ[4] ἢ τῇ μητρὶ αὐτοῦ,[4] 13. ἀκυροῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ τῇ παραδόσει ὑμῶν ᾗ παρεδώκατε· καὶ παρόμοια τοιαῦτα πολλὰ ποιεῖτε." 14. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος πάντα[5] τὸν ὄχλον, ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἀκούετέ[6] μου πάντες, καὶ συνίετε.[6] 15. οὐδέν ἐστιν ἔξωθεν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου εἰσπορευόμενον εἰς αὐτόν, ὃ δύναται f 1 Cor. i. 19. Gal. ii. 21; iii. 15. Heb. x. 28.

[1] γαρ omitted in ℵBLΔ.

[2] All after ανθρωπων is omitted in ℵBLΔ, and is obviously a gloss taken from ver. 4.

[3] Omit και ℵBDΔ.

[4] ℵBDL omit αυτου in both places.

[5] παλιν instead of παντα (substituted for a word not understood) in ℵBDLΔ, Vulg. Cop.

[6] ακουσατε in BDL and συνετε in BLΔ. The presents in T.R. are from Mt.

sists of a prophetic citation and a countercharge, given by Mt. in an inverted order. Commentators, according to their bias, differ as to which of the two versions is secondary.—Ver. 6. καλῶς: twice used in Mk. (ver. 9), here = appositely, in ver. 9 ironically = bravely, finely. The citation from Isaiah is given in identical terms in the two accounts.—Ver. 8. At this point Mk.'s account seems secondary as compared with Mt.'s. This verse contains Christ's comment on the prophetic oracle, then, ver. 9, He goes on to say the same thing over again.—Ver. 10. Μωσῆς, Moses; God in Mt., the same thing in Jewish esteem.—Ver. 11. Κορβᾶν: Mk. gives first the Hebrew word, then its Greek equivalent.—Ver. 12. Here again the construction limps; it would have been in order if there had been no λέγετε after ὑμεῖς at beginning of ver. 11 = but ye, when a man says, etc., do not allow him, etc.—Ver. 13. ᾗ παρεδώκατε, which ye have delivered. The receivers are also transmitters of the tradition, adding their quota to the weight of authority.—παρόμοια τοιαῦτα πολλὰ: many such similar things, a rhetorically redundant phrase (such, similar) expressive of contempt. Cf. Col. ii. 21, Heb. ix. 10.

Vv. 14-16. The people taken into the discussion. — προσκαλεσάμενος: the people must have retired a little into the background, out of respect for the Jerusalem magnates.—ἀκούσατέ μου, etc., hear me all ye, and understand; a more pointed appeal than Mt.'s: hear and understand.—Ver. 15. This saying is called a parable in ver. 17, and Weiss contends that it must be taken strictly as such, i.e., as meaning that it is not foods going into the body through the mouth that defile ceremonially, but corrupt matters issuing from the body (as in leprosy). Holtzmann, H. C., concurs. Schanz dissents on the ground that on this view the connection with unclean hands is done away with, and a quite foreign thought introduced. Mt., it is clear, has not so understood the saying (xv. 11), and while he also calls it a parable (ver. 15) he evidently means thereby an obscure, enigmatical saying, needing explanation. Why assume that Mk. means anything more? True, he makes Jesus say, not that which cometh αὐτὸν κοινῶσαι[1]· ἀλλὰ τὰ ἐκπορευόμενα ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ, ἐκεῖνά[2] ἐστι τὰ κοινοῦντα τὸν ἄνθρωπον. 16. εἴ τις ἔχει ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω.[3] 17. Καὶ ὅτε εἰσῆλθεν εἰς οἶκον ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄχλου, [g] ἐπηρώτων αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ περὶ τῆς παραβολῆς.[4] 18. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς [h] ἀσύνετοί ἐστε; οὐ νοεῖτε ὅτι πᾶν τὸ ἔξωθεν εἰσπορευόμενον εἰς τὸν ἄνθρωπον οὐ δύναται αὐτὸν κοινῶσαι; 19. ὅτι οὐκ εἰσπορεύεται αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν καρδίαν, ἀλλ᾽ εἰς τὴν κοιλίαν· καὶ εἰς τὸν ἀφεδρῶνα ἐκπορεύεται, καθαρίζον[5] πάντα τὰ βρώματα." 20. Ἔλεγε δέ, "Ὅτι τὸ ἐκ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐκπορευόμενον, ἐκεῖνο κοινοῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον. 21. ἔσωθεν γὰρ ἐκ τῆς καρδίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων οἱ διαλογισμοὶ οἱ κακοὶ ἐκπορεύονται, μοιχεῖαι, πορνεῖαι, φόνοι, 22. κλοπαί,[6] πλεονεξίαι, πονηρίαι, δόλος, ἀσέλγεια, ὀφθαλμὸς πονηρός, βλασφημία, ὑπερηφανία, ἀφροσύνη. 23. πάντα ταῦτα τὰ πονηρὰ ἔσωθεν ἐκπορεύεται, καὶ κοινοῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον."

g Ch. xi. 29. Lk. xx. 40 (τινά τι).

h Rom. i. 21, 31; x. 19.

[1] κοινωσαι αυτον in ℵLΔ (B το κοινουν α.).

[2] τα εκ του ανθ. εκπορ. in ℵBDLΔ 33, and εκεινα omitted in ℵBLΔ.

[3] Omit whole verse ℵBDL. It is probably a gloss.

[4] την παραβολην for περι της. π. in ℵBDLΔ 33.

[5] καθαριζων in ℵABLΔ al., Orig. (modern editions).

[6] πορνειαι, κλοπαι, φονοι, μοιχειαι in ℵBLΔ.

out of the mouth, but the things which come out of the man. But if He had meant the impure matters issuing from the body, would He not have said ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, so as to make His meaning unmistakable? On the whole, the most probable view is that even in ver. 15 the thought of Jesus moves in the moral sphere, and that the meaning is: the only defilement worth serious consideration is that caused by the evil which comes out of the heart (ver. 21).

Vv. 17-23. Conversation with the disciples.—εἰς οἶκον ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄχλου = alone, apart from the crowd, at home, wherever the home, pro tem., might be. Whatever was said or done in public became habitually a subject of conversation between Jesus and the Twelve, and therefore of course this remarkable saying.—Ver. 18. Here, as in vi. 52, Mk. takes pains to make prominent the stupidity and consequent need of instruction of the Twelve.—οὕτω καὶ ὑ., etc.: are ye, too, so unintelligent as not to understand what I have said: that that which goeth into the man from without cannot defile?—Ver. 19. ὅτι οὐκ . . . εἰς τὴν καρδίαν: this negative statement is not in Mt. The contrast makes the point clearer. The idea throughout is that ethical defilement is alone of importance, all other defilement, whether the subject of Mosaic ceremonial legislation or of scribe tradition, a trivial affair. Jesus here is a critic of Moses as well as of the scribes, and introduces a religious revolution.—καθαρίζων (not -ον) is accepted generally as the true reading, but how is it to be construed? as the nominative absolute referring to ἀφεδρῶνα, giving the sense: evacuation purges the body from all matter it cannot assimilate? So most recent commentators. Or ought we not to terminate the words of Jesus at ἐκπορεύεται with a mark of interrogation, and take what follows as a comment of the evangelist? = ἐκπορεύεται;—καθαρίζων, etc.: this He said, purging all meats; making all meats clean, abolishing the ceremonial distinctions of the Levitical law. This view was adopted by Origen and Chrysostom, and is vigorously defended by Field, Otium Nor., ad loc., and favoured by the Spk., Commentary. Weizsäcker adopts it in his translation: "So sprach er alle Speisen rein".—Ver. 20. ἔλεγεν δὲ: the use of this phrase here favours the view that καθαρίζων, etc., is an interpolated remark of the evangelist (Field).—Ver.

i Lk. viii. 47. Acts xxvi. 26. 2 Pet. iii. 5, with part. Heb. xiii. 2.
j with προς and accus. here only.

24. Καὶ ἐκεῖθεν[1] ἀναστὰς ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὰ μεθόρια[2] Τύρου καὶ Σιδῶνος.[3] καὶ εἰσελθὼν εἰς τὴν[4] οἰκίαν, οὐδένα ἤθελε γνῶναι, καὶ οὐκ ἠδυνήθη[5] [i]λαθεῖν. 25. ἀκούσασα γὰρ[6] γυνὴ περὶ αὐτοῦ, ἧς εἶχε τὸ θυγάτριον αὐτῆς πνεῦμα ἀκάθαρτον, ἐλθοῦσα [j]προσέπεσε [j]πρὸς τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ· 26. ἦν δὲ ἡ γυνὴ[7] Ἑλληνίς, Συροφοίνισσα[8] τῷ γένει· καὶ ἠρώτα αὐτὸν ἵνα τὸ δαιμόνιον ἐκβάλλῃ[9] ἐκ τῆς θυγατρὸς αὐτῆς. 27. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν[10] αὐτῇ, "Ἄφες πρῶτον

[1] εκειθεν δε in ℵBLΔ.

[2] μεθορια is an interpretative harmonising (Mt. xv. 22) substitute for ορια in ℵBDLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] DLΔ omit και Σ. (Tisch.), found in ℵB (W.H. bracket).

[4] Omit την ℵABLΔ, etc.

[5] ηδυνασθη in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.). -ηθη DΔ (Trg., R.V.).

[6] αλλ' ευθυς before ακουσασα instead of γαρ in ℵBLΔ 33.

[7] η δε γυνη ην in ℵBDLΔ 33.

[8] Συραφοινικισσα in B and many other uncials = Συρα Φοινικισσα.

[9] εκβαλη in ℵABDLΔΣ al.

[10] For ο δε Ι. ειπεν ℵBLΔ 33 have και ελεγεν.

21. An enumeration of the things which come out of the man, from the heart; first six plurals, πορνεῖαι, etc.; then six singulars, δόλος, etc. (ver. 22).—Ver. 23. Concluding reflection: all these bad things come out from within and defile the man. Commonplace now, what a startling originality then!

Vv. 24-30. The Syrophenician woman (Mt. xi. 21-28).—ἐκεῖθεν δὲ ἀναστὰς points to a change from the comparatively stationary life by the shores of the lake to a period of wandering in unwonted scenes. Cf. x. 1, where ἀναστὰς is used in reference to the final departure from Galilee to the south. The δὲ, instead of the more usual καὶ, emphasises this change.—εἰς τὰ ὅρια Τ., not towards (Fritzsche), but into the borders of Tyre. There can be no doubt that in Mk.'s narrative Jesus crosses into heathen territory (cf. ver. 31). In view of the several unsuccessful attempts made by Jesus to escape from the crowd into quiet and leisure, so carefully indicated by Mk., this almost goes without saying. Failing within Jewish territory, He is forced to go without, in hope to get some uninterrupted leisure for confidential intercourse with the Twelve, rendered all the more urgent by scenes like that just considered, which too plainly show that His time will be short.—εἰς οἰκίαν, into a house, considering Christ's desire for privacy, more likely to be that of a heathen stranger (Weiss) than that of a friend (Meyer, Keil).—οὐδένα ἤθελε γνῶναι, He wished no one to know (He was there); to know no one (Fritzsche), comes to the same thing: desires to be private, not weary of well-doing, but anxious to do other work hitherto much hindered.—οὐκ ἠδυνάσθη λαθεῖν, He was not able to escape notice; not even here!—Ver. 25. εὐθὺς: does not imply that the woman heard of Christ's arrival as soon as it happened, but that, after hearing, she lost no time in coming = as soon as she heard. Yet sorrow, like the demoniacs, was quick to learn of His presence.—θυγάτριον: another of Mk.'s diminutives.—Ver. 26. Ἑλληνίς, Σύρα, Φοινίκισσα, a Greek in religion, a Syrian in tongue, a Phenician in race (Euthy. Zig.). The two last epithets combined into one (Συροφ.) would describe her as a Syrophenician as distinct from a Phenician of Carthage. Mk. is careful to define the nationality and religion of the woman to throw light on the sequel.—Ver. 27. ἄφες πρῶτον, etc.: a milder word than that in Mt. (ver. 26); it is here a mere question of order: first Jews, then Gentiles, St. Paul's programme, Rom. i. 16. In Mt. we read, οὐκ ἔστι καλὸν, it is not right, seemly, to take the children's bread and to throw it to the dogs. Mk. also has this word, but in a subordinate place, and simply as a reason for the prior claim of the children.

χορτασθῆναι τὰ τέκνα· οὐ γὰρ καλόν ἐστι[1] λαβεῖν τὸν ἄρτον τῶν τέκνων, καὶ βαλεῖν τοῖς κυναρίοις."[1] 28. Ἡ δὲ ἀπεκρίθη καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ναί, κύριε· καὶ γὰρ[2] τὰ κυνάρια ὑποκάτω τῆς τραπέζης ἐσθίει[3] ἀπὸ τῶν ψιχίων τῶν παιδίων." 29. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Διὰ τοῦτον τὸν λόγον, ὕπαγε· ἐξελήλυθε τὸ δαιμόνιον ἐκ τῆς θυγατρός σου."[4] 30. Καὶ ἀπελθοῦσα εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτῆς, εὗρε τὸ δαιμόνιον ἐξεληλυθός, καὶ τὴν θυγατέρα βεβλημένην ἐπὶ τῆς κλίνης.[5]

31. ΚΑΙ πάλιν ἐξελθὼν ἐκ τῶν ὁρίων Τύρου καὶ[6] Σιδῶνος, ἦλθε πρὸς[6] τὴν θάλασσαν τῆς Γαλιλαίας, ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν ὁρίων Δεκαπόλεως. 32. καὶ φέρουσιν αὐτῷ κωφὸν μογιλάλον,[7] καὶ παρακαλοῦσιν αὐτὸν

[1] εστι καλον in ℵBDLΔ and βαλειν after τοις κυν. in ℵB.

[2] γαρ omitted in ℵBD 33. It comes from Mt.

[3] εσθιει a grammatical correction for εσθιουσιν in ℵBDLΔ al.

[4] ℵBLΔ have το δαιμ. after εκ της θυγ. σου.

[5] ℵBLΔ invert the order of the facts, το δαιμ. εξελ. at the end. The order in T.R. is due to the feeling that it was more natural: cure first, quiet resting in bed following. For τ. θυγ. βεβλημενην ℵBLΔ 33 have το παιδιον βεβλημενον (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] ηλθε δια Σιδωνος εις in ℵBDLΔ.

[7] ℵBDΔ have και before μογιλαλον.

We note also that Mk., usually so full in his narratives compared with Mt., omits the intercession of the Twelve with Christ's reply (Mt. vv. 23, 24). Yet Mk.'s, "first the children," is really equivalent to "I am not sent," etc. The former implies: "your turn will come"; the latter: "to minister to you is not my vocation". This word, preserved in Mt., becomes less harsh when looked at in the light of Christ's desire for quiet, not mentioned in Mt. Jesus made the most of the fact that His commission was to Jews. It has been thought that, in comparison with Mt., Mk.'s report of Christ's words is secondary, adapted purposely to Gentile readers. Probably that is the case, but, on the other hand, he gives us a far clearer view of the extent and aim of the excursion to the North, concerning which Mt. has, and gives, no adequate conception.—Ver. 28. ἀπεκρίθη, aorist, hitherto imperfect. We come now to what Mk. deems the main point of the story, the woman's striking word.— ὑποκάτω τ. τραπ., the dogs under the table, waiting for morsels, a realistic touch.—τῶν ψιχίων τ. π., not merely the crumbs which by chance fall from the table, but morsels surreptitiously dropt by the children ("qui panem saepe prodigunt," Beng.) to their pets. Household dogs, part of the family, loved by the children; hard and fast line of separation impossible.—Ver. 29. διὰ τ. τ. λόγον, for this word, which showed the quick wit of the faith, which Mt. specifies as the reason of the exception made in her favour.—Ver. 30. βεβλημένον: the emphasis lies on this word rather than on παιδίον (Bengel), as expressing the condition in which the mother found her daughter: lying quietly ("in lecto molliter cubantem sine ullâ jactatione," Grotius).

It is probable that this interesting incident cannot be fully understood without taking into consideration circumstances not mentioned in the narratives, and which, therefore, it does not fall to the expositor to refer to. On this vide my book, With Open Face, chap. vii.

Vv. 31-37. Cure of a deaf-mute, peculiar to Mk. Mt. has, instead, a renewal of the healing ministry on an extensive scale, the thing Jesus desired to avoid (xv. 29-31).—Ver. 31. After the instructive episode Jesus continued His journey, going northwards through (διὰ, vide critical notes) Sidon, then making a circuit so as to arrive through Decapolis at the Sea of Galilee. The route is not more definitely indicated; perhaps it was along the highway over the Lebanon range to Damascus; it may conceivably have touched that ancient city, which, according to Pliny (H. N., v., 16), was included in Decapolis (vide Holtz., H. C., and Schürer, Div., ii., vol. i., p. 95).—Ver. 32. μογιλάλον, speaking with difficulty; but here for ἵνα ἐπιθῇ αὐτῷ τὴν χεῖρα. 33. καὶ ἀπολαβόμενος αὐτὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄχλου κατ' ἰδίαν, ἔβαλε τοὺς δακτύλους αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰ ὦτα αὐτοῦ, καὶ [k] πτύσας ἥψατο τῆς γλώσσης αὐτοῦ, 34. καὶ ἀναβλέψας εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, ἐστέναξε, καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ἐφφαθά," ὅ ἐστι, "Διανοίχθητι." 35. Καὶ εὐθέως[1] διηνοίχθησαν[2] αὐτοῦ αἱ [l] ἀκοαί· καὶ ἐλύθη ὁ δεσμὸς τῆς γλώσσης αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐλάλει ὀρθῶς. 36. καὶ διεστείλατο αὐτοῖς ἵνα μηδενὶ εἴπωσιν[3]· ὅσον δὲ αὐτὸς[4] αὐτοῖς διεστέλλετο, μᾶλλον περισσότερον ἐκήρυσσον· 37. καὶ [m] ὑπερπερισσῶς ἐξεπλήσσοντο, λέγοντες, "Καλῶς πάντα πεποίηκε· καὶ τοὺς κωφοὺς [n] ποιεῖ ἀκούειν, καὶ τοὺς[5] ἀλάλους λαλεῖν."

k Ch. viii. 23. John ix. 6.
l Lk. vii. 1. Acts xvii. 20. Heb. v. 11 (pl. = organs of hearing).
m cf. the verb in Rom. v. 20 and ὑπερεκ- in 1 Thess. v. 13.
n const. Ch. i. 17. Acts iii. 12.

[1] ευθεως is omitted here in ℵBDL 33 and inserted before ελυθη in ℵLΔ; wanting here also in BD it. (W.H. omit both).

[2] ηνοιγησαν in ℵBDL. T.R. assimilates to ver. 34. [3] λεγωσιν in ℵBL 33.

[4] ℵBLΔ omit αυτος and insert an αυτοι before μαλλον (Tisch., W.H.). The T.R. is an attempt at improving the style.

[5] τους omit ℵBLΔ 33.

dumb. Cf. ἀλάλους, ver. 37, used in Sept., Is. xxxv. 6, for אִלֵּם, dumb, here only in N.T.—Ver. 33. ἀπολαβόμενος, etc., withdrawing him from the crowd apart. Many reasons have been assigned for this procedure. The true reason, doubtless, is that Jesus did not wish to be drawn into a new ministry of healing on a large scale (Weiss, Schanz).—ἔβαλε τοὺς δακτύλους, etc.: one finger of the right hand into one ear, another of the left hand into the other, on account of the narrowness and depth of the hearing faculty, that He might touch it (διὰ τὸ στενὸν καὶ βαθὺ τῆς ἀκοῆς ἵνα θίξῃ ταύτης, Euthy. Zig.). Deafness is first dealt with; it was the primary evil. —πτύσας, spitting; on what, the tongue of the dumb man as on the eyes of the blind (viii. 23)? So Meyer. Or on His own finger, with which He then touched the tongue? So Weiss, Schanz, Kloster., Holtz. (H. C.), Keil. Mk. leaves us hear to our own conjectures, as also in reference to the import of these singular acts of Jesus. Probably they were meant to rouse interest and aid faith in the dull soul of the sufferer. (Vide Trench, Notes on the Miracles.)

Ver. 34. ἀναβλέψας, ἐστέναξε: Jesus looked up in prayer, and sighed or groaned in sympathy. In this case a number of acts, bodily and mental, are specified. Were these peculiar to it, or do we here get a glimpse into Christ's modus operandi in many unrecorded cases? On the latter view one can understand the exhausting nature of the healing ministry. It meant a great mental strain.—ἐφφαθά, an Aramaic word = as Mk. explains, διανοίχθητι; doubtless the word actually spoken = Be opened, in reference to the ears, though the loosing of the tongue was part of the result ensuing.—Ver. 35. αἱ ἀκοαί, literally, the hearings, here the instruments of hearing, the ears. So often in classics.—ἐλάλει ὀρθῶς, he began to speak in a proper or ordinary manner, implying that in his dumb condition he had been able only to make inarticulate sounds.—Ver. 36. μᾶλλον περισσότερον, a double comparative, forcibly rendered in A.V., "So much the more, a great deal". Cf. 2 Cor. vii. 13. This use of μᾶλλον to strengthen comparatives is found in classics, instances in Raphel, Annon., ad loc., and Hermann's Viger, p. 719.—Ver. 37. ὑπερπερισσῶς, superabundantly, a double superlative; here only.—καλῶς π. πεποίηκε, He hath done all things well. This looks like a reflection on past as well as present; the story of the demoniac, e.g. Observe the ποιεῖ, present, in next clause, referring to the cure just effected. It happened in Decapolis, and we seem to see the inhabitants of that region exhibiting a nobler mood than in chap. v. 17. Of course, there were no swine lost on this occasion. Their astonishment at the miracle may seem extravagant, but it must be remembered that they have had little experience of Christ's healing work; their own fault.

VIII. 1. ᾿ΕΝ ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις, παμπόλλου[1] ὄχλου ὄντος, καὶ μὴ ἐχόντων τί φάγωσι, προσκαλεσάμενος ὁ Ἰησοῦς[2] τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ λέγει αὐτοῖς, 2. "Σπλαγχνίζομαι ἐπὶ τὸν ὄχλον· ὅτι ἤδη ἡμέρας[3] τρεῖς προσμένουσί μοι, καὶ οὐκ ἔχουσι τί φάγωσι· 3. καὶ ἐὰν ἀπολύσω αὐτοὺς νήστεις εἰς οἶκον αὐτῶν, ἐκλυθήσονται ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ· τινὲς γὰρ αὐτῶν μακρόθεν ἥκασι."[4] 4. Καὶ ἀπεκρίθησαν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, "Πόθεν[5] τούτους δυνήσεταί τις ὧδε χορτάσαι ἄρτων ἐπ' ἐρημίας;" 5. Καὶ ἐπηρώτα[6] αὐτούς, "Πόσους ἔχετε ἄρτους;" Οἱ δὲ εἶπον, "Ἑπτά." 6. Καὶ παρήγγειλε[7] τῷ ὄχλῳ ἀναπεσεῖν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· καὶ λαβὼν τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἄρτους, εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασε καὶ ἐδίδου τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, ἵνα παραθῶσι[8] καὶ παρέθηκαν τῷ

[1] παλιν πολλου in ℵBDLΔΣ 33. παμπολλου is a conjectural emendation suggested by the fact of a great crowd, and perplexity caused by παλιν here as in vii. 14.

[2] ℵABDLΔΣ 33 it. vulg. cop. omit ο Ιησους, also ℵDLΔΣ omit αυτου after μαθητας.

[3] ημερας = a grammatical correction for ημεραι (ℵL, etc.), or ημεραις τρισιν in B.

[4] For τινες γαρ . . . ηκασι read και τινες (ℵBLΔ) αυτων απο μακροθεν (ℵBDLΔ), εισιν (BLΔ).

[5] οτι before ποθεν in BLΔ.

[6] ηρωτα in ℵBLΔ.

[7] παραγγελλει in ℵBDLΔ.

[8] παρατιθωσιν in ℵBCLΔ 33.

Chapter VIII. Second Feeding. Sign from Heaven. Cure at Bethsaida. Caesarea Philippi.—Vv. 1-10. Second feeding (Mt. xv. 32-39).—Ver. 1. ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις: a vague phrase, used only once again in this Gospel (i. 9, in reference to Jesus going from Nazareth to be baptised), indicating inability to assign to the following incident a precise historical place. Cf. Mt. iii. 1 for similar vague use of the expression.—πάλιν πολλοῦ ὄ. ὄ. This well-attested reading is another indication of the evangelist's helplessness as to historical connection: there being again a great crowd. Why? where? not indicated, and we are not entitled to assert that the scene of the event was Decapolis, and the occasion the healing of the deaf-mute. The story is in the air, and this is one of the facts that have to be reckoned with by defenders of the reality of the second feeding against those who maintain that it is only a literary duplicate of the first, due to the circumstance that the Petrine version of it differed in some particulars from that in the Logia of Matthew. On this subject I do not dogmatise, but I cannot pretend to be insensible to the difficulties connected with it.—ὄχλου, a great crowd again. How often the crowd figures in the evangelic story! It is the one monotonous feature in narratives of thrilling interest.—Ver. 2. Vide on Mt. xv. 32.—Ver. 3. ἐκλυθήσονται, they will faint. This verb is used in N. T. in middle or passive in the sense of being faint or weary in body or mind (Gal. vi. 9, Heb. xii. 3).—καί τινες . . . εἰσίν, and some of them are from a distance, peculiar to Mark. The meaning is that such, even if in vigour at starting, would be exhausted before reaching their destination. But could they not get food by the way?—Ver. 4. πόθεν, whence. This adverb was used by the Greeks, in speaking of food, in reference to the source of supply—πόθεν φάγητε = "unde cibum petituri sitis". Examples in Kypke, Raphel, Palairet.—ἐπ' ἐρημίας, in a desert. The scene of the first feeding is a desert place also (chap. vi. 32). But in that case food was purchasable within a reasonable distance; not so here.—Ver. 6. Compare the meagre statement here with the picturesque description in vi. 38-40. The evangelist seems to lack interest in the twice-told tale. Ver. 7. ἰχθύδια: another of Mark's diminutives, but Matthew has it also (xv. 34), copied ὄχλῳ. 7. καὶ εἶχον ἰχθύδια ὀλίγα· καὶ εὐλογήσας εἶπε παραθεῖναι καὶ αὐτά."[1] 8. ἔφαγον δέ,[2] καὶ ἐχορτάσθησαν· καὶ ἦραν περισσεύματα κλασμάτων, ἑπτὰ σπυρίδας. ἦσαν δὲ οἱ φαγόντες[3] ὡς τετρακισχίλιοι· 9. καὶ ἀπέλυσεν αὐτούς.

10. Καὶ εὐθέως ἐμβὰς εἰς τὸ πλοῖον μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ ἦλθεν εἰς τὰ μέρη Δαλμανουθά. 11. καὶ ἐξῆλθον οἱ Φαρισαῖοι, καὶ ἤρξαντο συζητεῖν αὐτῷ, ζητοῦντες παρ' αὐτοῦ σημεῖον ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, πειράζοντες αὐτόν. 12. καὶ ἀναστενάξας τῷ πνεύματι αὐτοῦ λέγει, "Τί ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη σημεῖον ἐπιζητεῖ[4]; ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν,[5] εἰ δοθήσεται τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ σημεῖον." 13. Καὶ ἀφεὶς αὐτούς, ἐμβὰς πάλιν[6] εἰς τὸ πλοῖον,[6] ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸ πέραν.

14. Καὶ ἐπελάθοντο λαβεῖν ἄρτους, καὶ εἰ μὴ ἕνα ἄρτον οὐκ εἶχον μεθ' ἑαυτῶν ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ. 15. καὶ διεστέλλετο αὐτοῖς, λέγων,

[1] Read και ευλογησας αυτα ειπεν και ταυτα παρατιθεναι (ℵBLΔ).

[2] και εφαγον in ℵBCDLΔ.

[3] Omit οι φαγ. ℵBLΔ 33.

[4] ζητει σημειον in ℵBCDLΔ 33.

[5] BL omit υμιν (W.H. put in margin).

[6] Read παλιν εμβας, and omit εις το πλ. (ℵBCLΔ, Tisch., W.H.).

probably from Mark. In these two places only.—Ver. 8. περισσεύματα κλασμάτων, the remainders of the broken pieces. Matthew uses the singular neuter, τὸ περισσεῦον, in both feedings.—σπυρίδας: in both accounts of second feeding, κοφίνους in both accounts of first (κόφινοι in Luke). On the difference in meaning, vide notes on Mt. xiv. 20.—Ver. 10. Here as in case of first feeding there is a crossing of the lake immediately after (εὐθὺς, which has an obvious reason in first case). This time Jesus and the Twelve enter the boat together, at least in Mark's narrative (μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν).—Δαλμανουθά, in Matthew Μαγαδάν; both alike unknown: another of the features in this narrative which give a handle to critical doubt. Some place it on the western shore in the plain of Gennesaret (Furrer, "On the site of Khan Minyeh lay once Dalmanutha," Wanderungen, p. 369); others to the south-east of the lake near the junction of the Yarmuk with the Jordan (Delhemiyeh, Robinson, B. R., iii. 264). Weiss (in Meyer) adopts this view. Holtzmann (H. C.), while leaning to the former alternative, leaves the matter doubtful.

Vv. 11-12. Pharisees seek a sign (Mt. xii. 1-4).—Ver. 11. ἐξῆλθον οἱ Φ., the Pharisees went out, from their seat in the Holy Land into the heathen Decapolis, otherwise carefully shunned, in their zeal against Jesus. So Weiss (in Meyer).—Ver. 12. ἀναστενάξας, fetching a deep sigh, here only in N. T.; in Sept., Lament. i. 4, Sirach. xxv. 18, etc.—τῷ πνεύματι α., in His spirit. The sigh physical, its cause spiritual—a sense of irreconcilable enmity, invincible unbelief, and coming doom.—εἰ δοθήσεται, if there shall be given = there shall not (οὐ) be given a Hebraistic form of emphatic negative assertion. The suppressed apodosis is: may I die, or God punish me. Other instances in Heb. iii. 11, iv. 3, 5. In Mark there is an absolute refusal of a sign. In Matthew the refusal is qualified by offer of Jonah. But that was an absolute refusal of signs in their sense.

Vv. 13-21. Warning against evil leavens (Mt. xvi. 4b-12).—Ver. 13. εἰς τὸ πέραν, to the other side; which, east or west? Here again opinion is divided. The reference to Bethsaida, ver. 22, might be expected to decide, but then there is the dispute about the two Bethsaidas; Bethsaida Julias, and Bethsaida on the western shore. These points are among the obscurities of the Synoptical narratives which we are reluctantly compelled to leave in twilight.—Ver. 14. εἰ μὴ ἕνα ἄρτον: a curiously exact reminiscence where so much else that seems to us more important is left vague. But it shows that we have to do with reality, for the suggestion of the Tübingen critics that it is a mere bit o word painting is not credible. The one loaf seems to witness to a Christ-like

"Ὁρᾶτε, βλέπετε ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ τῆς ζύμης Ἡρώδου." 16. Καὶ διελογίζοντο πρὸς ἀλλήλους, λέγοντες,[1] "Ὅτι ἄρτους οὐκ ἔχομεν."[2] 17. Καὶ γνοὺς ὁ Ἰησοῦς[3] λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Τί διαλογίζεσθε, ὅτι ἄρτους οὐκ ἔχετε; οὔπω νοεῖτε, οὐδὲ συνίετε; ἔτι[4] πεπωρωμένην ἔχετε τὴν καρδίαν ὑμῶν; 18. ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχοντες οὐ βλέπετε; καὶ ὦτα ἔχοντες οὐκ ἀκούετε; καὶ οὐ μνημονεύετε; 19. ὅτε τοὺς πέντε ἄρτους ἔκλασα εἰς τοὺς πεντακισχιλίους, πόσους κοφίνους πλήρεις κλασμάτων[5] ἤρατε;" Λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Δώδεκα." 20. "Ὅτε δὲ τοὺς ἑπτὰ εἰς τοὺς τετρακισχιλίους, πόσων σπυρίδων πληρώματα κλασμάτων ἤρατε;" Οἱ δὲ εἶπον,[6] "Ἑπτά." 21. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Πῶς οὐ[7] συνίετε;"

22. ΚΑΙ ἔρχεται[8] εἰς Βηθσαϊδάν· καὶ φέρουσιν αὐτῷ τυφλόν, καὶ παρακαλοῦσιν αὐτὸν ἵνα αὐτοῦ ἅψηται. 23. καὶ ἐπιλαβόμενος τῆς

[1] Omit λεγοντες (an explanatory word used) ℵBD.

[2] B has εχουσιν, adopted by Trg. (text). W.H., Ws., Tisch., and R.V. retain εχομεν.

[3] Omit ο Ι. BΔ.

[4] ℵBCDLΔΣ omit ετι.

[5] κλασματων πληρεις in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[6] και λεγουσιν in ℵBCLΔ.

[7] B has πως ου νοειτε. πως ου is to be preferred to ουπω (ℵCLΔ) or πως ουπω (D), as expressive of vexation. Tisch. and W.H. adopt ουπω.

[8] ερχονται in BCDLΔ. The sing. (T.R.) is an adaptation to αυτω.

easymindedness as to food in the disciple-circle. Let to-morrow look after itself!—Ver. 15. ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης, etc.: two leavens, one of Pharisees, another of Herod, yet placed together because morally akin and coincident in practical outcome. Vide notes on Mt. xvi. 1-6.—Ver. 16. πρὸς ἀλλήλους. Mt. has ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. The mind of Jesus was profoundly preoccupied with the ominous demand of the sign-seekers, and the disciples might talk quietly to each other unnoticed by Him.—Ver. 17. γνοὺς: He does notice, however, and administers a sharp rebuke for their preoccupation with mere temporalities, as if there were nothing higher to be thought of than bread.—πεπωρωμένην, in a hardened state; the word stands in an emphatic position. For the time the Twelve are wayside hearers, with hearts like a beaten path, into which the higher truths cannot sink so as to germinate.—Ver. 18 repeats in reference to the Twelve the hard saying uttered concerning the multitude on the day of the parables (iv. 12). In vv. 19, 20 Jesus puts the Twelve through their catechism in reference to the recent feedings, and then in ver. 21 (according to reading in B) asks in the tone of a disappointed Master: How do you not understand? If we may emphasise the imperfect tense of ἔλεγεν, He said this over and over again, half speaking to them, half to Himself; another of Mk.'s realistic features. All this shows how much the Twelve needed special instruction, and it is obviously Mk.'s aim to make this prominent. Desire for leisure to attend to their instruction is in his narrative the key to the excursions in the direction of Tyre and Sidon and to Caesarea Philippi.

Vv. 22-26. A blind man cured at Bethsaida, peculiar to Mk.—Ver. 22. Βηθσαϊδάν. If there were two Bethsaidas, which of the two? If only one of course it was Bethsaida Julias. But against this has been cited the term κώμη twice applied to the town (vv. 23, 26), which, however, may be regarded as satisfactorily explained by the remark: it had been a village, and was first made a town by Philip, who enlarged and beautified it and called it Julias in honour of the daughter of Augustus (Joseph., B. J., ii., 9, 1, etc.). So Meyer and others.—Ver. 23. ἔξω τῆς κώμης, outside the village, for the same reason as in vii. 33, to avoid creating a run on Him for cures. Therefore Jesus becomes χειρὸς τοῦ τυφλοῦ, ἐξήγαγεν[1] αὐτὸν ἔξω τῆς κώμης· καὶ πτύσας εἰς τὰ ὄμματα αὐτοῦ, ἐπιθεὶς τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῷ, ἐπηρώτα αὐτὸν εἴ τι βλέπει.[2] 24. καὶ ἀναβλέψας ἔλεγε, "Βλέπω τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, ὅτι ὡς δένδρα ὁρῶ περιπατοῦντας." 25. Εἶτα πάλιν ἐπέθηκε[3] τὰς χεῖρας ἐπὶ τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐποίησεν αὐτὸν ἀναβλέψαι[4]· καὶ ἀποκατεστάθη,[5] καὶ ἐνέβλεψε[6] τηλαυγῶς[7] ἅπαντας.[8] 26. καὶ ἀπέστειλεν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν[9] οἶκον αὐτοῦ, λέγων, "Μηδὲ εἰς τὴν κώμην εἰσέλθῃς, μηδὲ εἴπῃς τινὶ ἐν τῇ κώμῃ."[10]

27. Καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς καὶ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰς κώμας Καισαρείας τῆς Φιλίππου· καὶ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ ἐπηρώτα τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, λέγων αὐτοῖς, "Τίνα με λέγουσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι εἶναι;"

[1] εξηνεγκεν in ℵBCLΔ, replaced in T.R. by a more common word.
[2] βλεπεις in BCDΔ (W.H. text) more expressive than βλεπει (ℵL, Tisch.).
[3] εθηκεν in BL (W.H.).
[4] For the explanatory gloss και επ. α. αναβλεψαι ℵBCLΔ Cop. have και διεβλεψεν.
[5] απεκατεστη in ℵBCLΔ (B αποκ.).
[6] ενεβλεπεν (imp.) BLΔ.
[7] ℵCLΔ have δηλαυγως (Tisch.). τηλ. in BD (W.H. text, δηλ. margin).
[8] απαντα in ℵBCDLΔ.
[9] Omit τον many uncials.
[10] All after εισελθης omit ℵBL.

conductor of the blind man Himself, though he doubtless had one (Weiss-Meyer).—πτύσας, spitting, in this case certainly on the diseased parts. Spittle was regarded as a means of cure by the ancients. Holtzmann (H. C.) cites the story of Vespasian in Alexandria narrated by Tacitus (Hist., iv., 81). The prince was asked to sprinkle the eyes of a blind man "oris excremento".—εἴ τι βλέπεις, do you, possibly, see anything? εἰ with a direct question, vide Winer, lvii., 2.—Ver. 24. ἀναβλέψας: the narrative contains three compounds of βλέπω (ἀνὰ, διὰ, ἐν); the first denotes looking up in the tentative manner of blind men, the second looking through (a mist as it were) so as to see clearly, the third looking into so as to see distinctly, as one sees the exact outlines of a near object (cf. Mk. xiv. 67).—ὡς δένδρα, as trees, so indistinct was vision as yet; yet not trees, but men because moving ("non arbores, quia ambulent," Bengel). He knew what a man is like, therefore he had once seen, not born blind. —Ver. 25. A second touch brings better vision, so that διέβλεψεν, and he was now restored to full use of his eyes; the result being permanent perfect vision—ἐνέβλεπεν, imperfect.—διέβλεψεν points to the first act of distinct seeing.—τηλαυγῶς (τῆλε αὐγή here only), shining from afar. He saw distant objects distinctly as if they were near; did not need to go near them to see them.—Ver. 26. εἰς οἶκον, home.—μηδὲ, etc., go not into the village; to avoid creating a sensation. It has been suggested that the gradual restoration of sight in this case was meant to symbolise the slowness of the Twelve in attaining spiritual insight. They got their eyes opened very gradually like the blind man of Bethsaida. So Klostermann.

Vv. 27-ix. 1. At Caesarea Philippi (Mt. xvi. 13-28, Lk. ix. 18-27).—Ver. 27. καὶ ἐξῆλθεν: the καὶ connects very loosely with what goes before, but presumably ἐξῆλθεν refers to Bethsaida. They leave it and go northwards towards Caesarea Philippi, up the Jordan valley, a distance of some twenty-five or thirty miles.—ὁ Ἰησοῦς: that Jesus is here expressly named is a hint that something very important is to be narrated, and the mention of the disciples along with Him indicates that it closely concerns them.—εἰς τὰς κώμας Κ. τ. Φ., to the villages of Caesarea Philippi, not to Caesarea Philippi itself. Mt. has τὰ μέρη. Apparently they did not enter the city itself. Jesus seems to have avoided the towns in which the Herodian passion for ambitious architecture was displayed. Besides at this time He

28. Οἱ δὲ ἀπεκρίθησαν,[1] "Ἰωάννην[2] τὸν Βαπτιστήν· καὶ ἄλλοι Ἠλίαν· ἄλλοι δὲ ἕνα[3] τῶν προφητῶν." 29. Καὶ αὐτὸς λέγει αὐτοῖς,[4] "Ὑμεῖς δὲ τίνα με λέγετε εἶναι;" Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ[5] ὁ Πέτρος λέγει αὐτῷ, "Σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστός." 30. Καὶ ἐπετίμησεν αὐτοῖς, ἵνα μηδενὶ λέγωσι περὶ αὐτοῦ.

31. ΚΑΙ ἤρξατο διδάσκειν αὐτούς, ὅτι δεῖ τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου πολλὰ παθεῖν, καὶ ἀποδοκιμασθῆναι ἀπὸ[6] τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ ἀρχιερέων καὶ γραμματέων, καὶ ἀποκτανθῆναι, καὶ μετὰ τρεῖς ἡμέρας ἀναστῆναι· 32. καὶ παρρησίᾳ τὸν λόγον ἐλάλει. Καὶ

[1] ειπαν αυτω λεγοντες in ℵBCLD (D has απεκ. αυτω λεγ.).
[2] οτι before Ι. in ℵB.
[3] For ενα ℵBCL have οτι εις.
[4] επηρωτα αυτους in ℵBCDLΔ.
[5] Omit δε BL (Tisch., W.H.).
[6] υπο in ℵBCDL; with των before αρχ. (ℵBCD), and before γραμ. (ℵBCDL).

desired solitude.—ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, on the way, probably when the city of Caesarea Philippi came into view. Vide on Mt. xvi. 13. But conversation leading up to the critical subject might begin as soon as they had got clear of Bethsaida. No time to be lost now that the Master had got the Twelve by themselves. Or was the Master, very silent on that journey, preparing His own mind for what was coming?—ἐπηρώτα, imperfect, because subordinate to the reply of the disciples, the main thing.—τίνα με, etc.: on the form of the question vide on Mt. xvi. 13. —Ver. 28. οἱ δὲ εἶπαν α. λέγοντες, they said, saying, tautology, somewhat like the vulgar English idiom: He said, says he; fixing attention on what is said.—Ἰωάννην τ. Β.: the accusative depending on λέγουσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποί σε εἶναι understood. This infinitive construction passes into direct speech in the last clause: ὅτι εἷς (εἶ) τ. προφητῶν. The opinions reported are much the same as in vi. 14, 15.—Ver. 29. ὑμεῖς δὲ, etc.: a very pointed question given by all the Synoptists in the same terms. The reply, on the other hand, is different in each. Vide on Mt. xvi. 16.—ἀποκριθεὶς λέγει: we have here an aorist participle of identical action with a finite verb in the present tense. It usually goes with the aorist (cf. Mt. xvi. 17, ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν).—Ver. 30. ἐπετίμησεν, He threatened them, spoke in a tone of menace, as if anticipating foolish talk—περὶ αὐτοῦ—about Him, i.e., about His being the Christ, as in Mt. The prohibition might have a double reference: to the people, to prevent the spread of crude ideas as to the Messiahship of Jesus; to the disciples, that they might keep the new faith to themselves till it took deep root in their own souls. Recall Carlyle's counsel to young men: if thou hast an idea keep it to thyself, for as soon as thou hast spoken it it is dead to thee (Stump Orator in Latter Day Pamphlets).

Vv. 31-33. First announcement of the Passion.—Ver. 31. καὶ: Mt. has the more emphatic ἀπὸ τότε, indicating that then began an entirely new way of speaking as to the coming fate of Jesus. —διδάσκειν, to teach, more appropriate is Mt.'s word, δεικνύειν, to show. It was a solemn intimation rather than instruction that was given.—δεῖ, it must be; in all three evangelists. It points to the inevitableness of the event, not to the rationale of it. On that subject Jesus gave in the first place no instruction.—πολλὰ παθεῖν: where not indicated, as in Mt.—ἀποδοκιμασθῆναι: an expressive word taken from Ps. cxviii. 22, fitly indicating the precise share of the religious authorities in the coming tragedy. Their part was solemnly to disapprove of the claimant to Messiahship. All else was the natural sequel of their act of rejection.—τῶν πρ., τῶν ἀρ., τῶν γρ.: the article before each of the three classes named, saddling each with its separate responsibility.—Ver. 32. παρρησίᾳ: He spoke the word plainly, unmistakably. This remark was rendered almost necessary by the choice of the word διδάσκειν in ver. 31. Mt.'s δεικνύειν implies παρρησίᾳ. This word (from πᾶς, ῥῆσις) in ordinary Greek usage means frank, unreserved speech, as opposed to partial or total silence. Here, προσλαβόμενος αὐτὸν ὁ Πέτρος[1] ἤρξατο ἐπιτιμᾷν αὐτῷ. 33. ὁ δὲ ἐπιστραφεὶς, καὶ ἰδὼν τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, ἐπετίμησε τῷ[2] Πέτρῳ, λέγων,[3] "Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· ὅτι οὐ φρονεῖς τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων."

34. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τὸν ὄχλον σὺν τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὅστις[4] θέλει ὀπίσω μου ἐλθεῖν, ἀπαρνησάσθω ἑαυτόν, καὶ ἀράτω τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀκολουθείτω μοι. 35. ὃς γὰρ ἂν θέλῃ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ σῶσαι, ἀπολέσει αὐτήν. ὃς δ' ἂν ἀπολέσῃ[5] τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ καὶ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, οὗτος[6] σώσει αὐτήν. 36. τί γὰρ ὠφελήσει[7] ἄνθρωπον, ἐὰν κερδήσῃ[8] τὸν κόσμον ὅλον, καὶ ζημιωθῇ[8] τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ; 37. ἢ τί δώσει ἄνθρωπος[9] ἀντάλλαγμα τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ; 38. ὃς γὰρ ἂν [o]ἐπαισχυνθῇ με καὶ τοὺς ἐμοὺς λόγους ἐν τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῇ μοιχαλίδι καὶ ἁμαρτωλῷ, καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπαισχυνθήσεται αὐτόν, ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐν τῇ δόξῃ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀγγέλων τῶν ἁγίων."

o Lk. ix. 26. Rom. i. 16. 2 Tim. i. 8, 16.

[1] ο Π. αυτον in BL.
[2] Omit τω ℵBDL.
[3] και λεγει in ℵBCLΔ.
[4] ει τις in ℵBCDLΔ (W.H.).
[5] απολεσει in ℵBCΔ al.; a mechanical conformation to the preceding απολεσει, thinks Weiss.
[6] ουτος (from Lk.) omit ℵABCDLΔ verss.
[7] ωφελει in ℵBL.
[8] κηρδηση ζημιωθη come from Mt.; read κηρδησαι ζημιωθηναι with ℵBL (Tisch., W.H.), of course omitting εαν.
[9] η τι δωσει αν. is another conformation to Mt., read τι γαρ δοι α. with ℵB (Tisch., W.H.).

as in John xi. 14, xvi. 25, 29, it means plain speech as opposed to hints or veiled allusions, such as Jesus had previously given; as in Mk. ii. 20 (bridegroom taken away). In this sense St. Paul (2 Cor. iii. 12) claims παρρησία for the Christian ministry in contrast to the mystery connected with the legal dispensation as symbolised by the veil of Moses. The term was adopted into the Rabbinical vocabulary, and used to signify unveiled speech as opposed to metaphorical or parabolic speech (Wünsche, Beiträge, ad loc.).—προσλαβόμενος ὁ Π.: what Peter said is not given, Mk's aim being simply to show that Jesus had so spoken that misunderstanding of what He said was impossible. That the news should be unwelcome is regarded as a matter of course.—Ver. 33. ἐπιστραφεὶς: the compound instead of the simple verb in Mt., which Mk. does not use.—ἰδὼν τ. μαθ.: the rebuke is administered for the benefit of all, not merely to put down Peter. This resistance to the cross must be grappled with at once and decisively. What Peter said, all felt. In Mk.'s report of the rebuke the words σκάνδαλον εἶ ἐμοῦ are omitted. On the saying vide in Mt.

Vv. 34-38. First lesson on the cross.—Ver. 34. τὸν ὄχλον, the crowd. Even here! A surprise; is it not a mistake? So appears to think Weiss, who (in Meyer) accounts for the reference to a crowd by supposing that the words of Mt. x. 38 are in his mind, which are given in Lk. xiv. 25 as spoken to a crowd, probably because they were so given in his source. Jesus certainly desired to be private at this time, and in the neighbourhood of Caesarea Philippi ought to have succeeded.—Ver. 35. τοῦ εὐαγγελίου: for my sake and the Gospel's, an addition of Mk.'s, possibly a gloss.—σώσει, instead of the more enigmatical εὑρήσει of Mt.—Ver. 38 reproduces the logion in Mt. x. 33 concerning being ashamed of Jesus, which does not find a place here in Mt.'s version. In Mt.'s form it is the outward ostensible act of

IX. 1. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι εἰσί τινες τῶν ὧδε[1] ἑστηκότων, οἵτινες οὐ μὴ γεύσωνται θανάτου, ἕως ἂν ἴδωσι τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐληλυθυῖαν ἐν δυνάμει."

2. Καὶ μεθ' ἡμέρας ἓξ παραλαμβάνει ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὸν Πέτρον καὶ τὸν Ἰάκωβον καὶ τὸν Ἰωάννην, καὶ ἀναφέρει αὐτοὺς εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν κατ' ἰδίαν μόνους· καὶ μετεμορφώθη ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῶν, 3. καὶ τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο[2] στίλβοντα, λευκὰ λίαν ὡς χιών,[3] οἷα γναφεὺς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς οὐ δύναται[4] λευκᾶναι. 4. καὶ ὤφθη αὐτοῖς Ἡλίας σὺν Μωσεῖ, καὶ ἦσαν συλλαλοῦντες τῷ Ἰησοῦ. 5. καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Πέτρος λέγει τῷ Ἰησοῦ, "Ῥαββί, καλόν ἐστιν ἡμᾶς ὧδε εἶναι· καὶ ποιήσωμεν σκηνὰς τρεῖς,[5] σοὶ μίαν, καὶ Μωσεῖ μίαν, καὶ Ἡλίᾳ

[1] ωδε των in BD; των ωδε a correction of style.

[2] ℵBCΔ al. pl. have εγενετο as in T.R., which nevertheless is probably a correction of εγενοντο in DL to suit the neut. pl. nom.

[3] ως χιων is a gloss (Mt. xxviii. 3); not in ℵBCLΔ.

[4] ουτως follows in ℵBCLΔ, omitted as superfluous in T.R.

[5] τρεις σκηνας in ℵBCLΔ 33.

denial that is animadverted on; here the feeling of shame, which is its cause—ix. 1.—καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς: with this phrase Mk. makes a new start, and turns the close of the Caesarea Philippi conversation into an introduction to the following narrative concerning the transfiguration, apparently suggesting that in the latter event the words found their fulfilment. This impression, if it existed, does not bind the interpreter.—ἀμὴν, introducing a solemn statement.—ἕως ἂν ἴδωσιν, etc.: the promised vision is differently described in the three accounts, as thus:—

Till they see: the Son of Man coming in His Kingdom (Mt.).

Till they see: the Kingdom of God come (ἐληλυθυῖαν) in power (Mk.).

Till they see: the Kingdom of God (Lk.).

CHAPTER IX. THE TRANSFIGURATION. THE EPILEPTIC. SECOND ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE PASSION. RETURN TO CAPERNAUM AND CONVERSATION THERE. —Vv. 2-13. The transfiguration (Mt. xvii. 1-13, Lk. ix. 28-36).—Ver. 2. ἀναφέρει with accusative of person = to lead, a usage unknown to the Greeks. So in Mt.; Lk. avoids the expression. —κατ' ἰδίαν μόνους, apart alone, a pleonasm, yet μόνους, in Mk. only, is not superfluous. It emphasises the κατ' ἰδίαν, and expresses the passion for solitude. Strictly, it refers only to the three disciples as opposed to the nine, but it really reflects the feeling of Jesus. His desire to be alone with three select companions for a season.—Ver. 3. στίλβοντα, glittering; here only in N. T., common in classics; in Sept. of bright brass (Ezra viii. 27); "flashing sword" (R. V., Nahum iii. 3); sunshine on shields (1 Macc. vi. 39).—λευκὰ λίαν, white very. All the evangelists become descriptive. Mk., as was to be expected, goes beyond the two others.—ὡς χιών (T.R.) is a tempting addition, especially if Hermon was the scene, but it so adequately expresses the highest degree of whiteness, that alongside of it λίαν and the following words, οἷα, etc., would have been superfluous.—γναφεὺς, a fuller, here only in N. T. (ἀγνάφου in ii. 21).—ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, suggesting a contrast between what fullers on this earth can do in the way of whitening cloth, and the heaven-wrought brightness of Christ's garments (Schanz).—Ver. 4. Ἡλίας συν Μ.: Elijah first, not as the more important, but because of his special significance in connection with Messiah's advent, which was the subject of subsequent conversation (ver. 9 ff.).—Ver. 5. Ῥαββί, Rabbi: each evangelist has a different word here.—καλόν, etc. On this vide notes in Mt.—ποιήσωμεν: let us make, not let me make as in Mt. (vide notes there).—σοὶ μίαν καὶ Μωσεῖ, etc.: Moses now comes before Elijah.—Ver. 6. τί ἀποκριθῇ, what he should answer—to the vision; he did not know μίαν." 6. Οὐ γὰρ ᾔδει τί λαλήσῃ[1]· ἦσαν γὰρ ἔκφοβοι.[2] 7. καὶ ἐγένετο νεφέλη [a]ἐπισκιάζουσα αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἦλθε[3] φωνὴ ἐκ τῆς νεφέλης, λέγουσα,[4] "Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱός μου ὁ ἀγαπητός· αὐτοῦ ἀκούετε."[5] 8. Καὶ ἐξάπινα περιβλεψάμενοι, οὐκέτι οὐδένα εἶδον, ἀλλὰ τὸν Ἰησοῦν μόνον μεθ' ἑαυτῶν. 9. Καταβαινόντων δὲ[6] αὐτῶν ἀπὸ[7] τοῦ ὄρους, διεστείλατο αὐτοῖς ἵνα μηδενὶ διηγήσωνται ἃ εἶδον,[8] εἰ μὴ ὅταν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῇ. 10. καὶ τὸν λόγον ἐκράτησαν πρὸς ἑαυτούς, συζητοῦντες τί ἐστι τό, ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῆναι. 11. Καὶ ἐπηρώτων αὐτόν, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι λέγουσιν οἱ γραμματεῖς, ὅτι Ἡλίαν δεῖ ἐλθεῖν πρῶτον;" 12. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθείς, a Lk. i. 35. Acts v. 15.

[1] αποκριθη in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[2] For ησαν γαρ εκ. ℵBCDLΔ have εκφοβοι γαρ εγενοντο.

[3] εγενετο again in ℵBCLΔ; ηλθε a correction of style.

[4] ℵBC al. omit λεγουσα (from parall.).

[5] ακουετε αυτου in ℵBCDL 33.

[6] και καταβ. in ℵBCDLΔ 33.

[7] BD 33 have εκ.

[8] α ειδον before διηγ. in ℵBCDLΔ.

what else to make of it than that Moses and Elijah had come to stay. This is probably an apologetic remark added by the evangelist to the original narrative. Lk. reproduces it in a somewhat altered form.—ἔκφοβοι: they were frightened out of their wits (again in Heb. xii. 21); explains the stupidity of Peter. The fear created by the sudden preternatural sight made him talk nonsense. Mt. makes the fear follow the Divine voice.—Ver. 7. καὶ ἐγένετο, before νεφέλη, and again before φωνὴ, in each place instead of Mt.'s ἰδοὺ; in both cases pointing to something remarkable: an overshadowing cloud, and a mysterious voice from the cloud.—Ver. 8. ἐξάπινα, suddenly, a form belonging to late Greek =ἐξαπίνης=ἐξαίφνης: here only in N. T.; several times in Sept. Kypke cites examples from the Psalms of Solomon and Jamblichus. The word here qualifies not περιβλεψάμενοι, but the change in the state of things which they discovered (εἶδον) on looking around.—οὐκέτι οὐδένα ἀλλὰ, etc.; no longer any one except (ἀλλὰ=εἰ μὴ after a negative).—τὸν Ἰησοῦν, etc.: Jesus alone with themselves: the whole celestial vision gone as quickly as it came.

Vv. 9-13. Conversation during the descent, not given in Lk.—Ver. 10. τὸν λόγον ἐκράτησαν, they kept the word; i.e., if the verb be taken in the sense of vii. 3, 4, 8, gave heed to the Master's prohibition of speech concerning what had just happened, at least till after the resurrection—strictly complied with His wish. If we connect πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς with ἐκράτ., the meaning will be: they kept the saying to (with) themselves (A. V.), or rather, taking λόγον in the sense of "thing," they kept the matter—what had happened—to themselves: did not speak about it. The sense is the same in effect, but the latter is perhaps the better connection of words, as if πρὸς ἑ. were intended to go with συζητοῦντες it would more naturally have come after it.—τί ἐστι τὸ, etc.: the reference to the resurrection in the prohibition of the Master puzzled and troubled the three disciples: resurrection—His own, and soon, in our time; but that implies death; whereof, indeed, He lately spoke to us, but how hard to receive! Peter's resistance, sympathised with by his brethren, not yet overcome. They speak of it to one another, though not again to the Master.—Ver. 11. ὅτι λέγουσιν, etc.: this may be taken as an indirect or suggested rather than expressed question, ὅτι being recitative, as in ii. 16 = the Pharisees and scribes say, etc.,—how about that? (Weiss in Meyer), or, writing not ὅτι but ὅ, τι (neuter of ὅστις), as an instance of the use of this pronoun as an interrogative in a direct question (Meyer, Schanz, vide also Burton, M. and T., § 349). De Wette takes ὅτι =τί ὅτι after Beza and Grotius (who calls it one of Mk.'s Hebraisms).—Ver. 12. The construction of this sentence also is somewhat puzzling. After Ἡλίας εἶπεν[1] αὐτοῖς, "Ἠλίας μὲν ἐλθὼν πρῶτον, ἀποκαθιστᾷ[2] πάντα· καὶ πῶς γέγραπται ἐπὶ τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ἵνα πολλὰ πάθῃ καὶ ἐξουδενωθῇ.[3] 13. ἀλλὰ λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι καὶ Ἠλίας ἐλήλυθε, καὶ ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ ὅσα ἠθέλησαν,[4] καθὼς γέγραπται ἐπ' αὐτόν."

14. Καὶ ἐλθὼν[5] πρὸς τοὺς μαθητάς, εἶδεν[5] ὄχλον πολὺν περὶ αὐτούς, καὶ γραμματεῖς συζητοῦντας αὐτοῖς.[6] 15. καὶ εὐθέως πᾶς ὁ ὄχλος ἰδὼν[7] αὐτόν, ἐξεθαμβήθη,[7] καὶ προστρέχοντες ἠσπάζοντο αὐτόν. 16. καὶ ἐπηρώτησε τοὺς γραμματεῖς,[8] "Τί συζητεῖτε πρὸς

[1] For αποκ. ειπεν ℵBCLΔ have simply εφη.

[2] αποκαθιστανει in ALΔ (-τισ- in B, W.H., -τασ- in D).

[3] Vide below.

[4] ηθελον in ℵBCDL.

[5] ελθοντες, ειδον in ℵBLΔ.

[6] προς αυτους in ℵBCLΔ.

[7] ιδοντες, εξεθαμβηθησαν in ℵBCLΔ (εθαμβησαν in D).

[8] ℵBDLΔ have αυτους.

comes μὲν in the best MSS., raising expectation of a δὲ in the apodosis, instead of which we have καὶ (πῶς γέγραπται). Examples of such substitution occur in classic authors; concerning which Klotz, Devar., p. 659, remarks: when καί, τέ, or the like are put for δὲ after μὲν, it is not properly a case of construction, but rather: "quaedam quasi legitima orationis ἀνακολουθία". Perhaps we are at a loss from merely reading the words instead of hearing them spoken with a pause between first and second half of sentence, thus: Elias, indeed, coming first, restoreth all things (so teach the scribes) —and how stands it written about the Son of Man?—that He should suffer many things and be set at nought! The aim is to awaken thought in the mind of the disciples by putting together things incongruous. All things to be restored in preparation for Messiah; Messiah Himself to suffer and be set at nought: what then can the real function and fate of Elijah the restorer be? Who is Elijah? —ἐξουδενηθῇ: this form, found in BD and adopted by W.H., is rare. The verb occurs in three forms—ἐξουδενέω, ἐξουδενόω (T.R.), ἐξουθενέω; the latter two in more common use. The word in any form is late Greek. Vide Grimm's Lexicon, and Lobeck, Phryn., p. 181 (from ἐξ, οὐδέν or οὐθέν = to treat as nought).—Ver. 13 contains Christ's own view of Elijah's coming, which differs both from that of the scribes and from that of the disciples, who found it realised in the vision on the hill.—καθὼς γέγραπται ἐπ' αὐτόν: the reference is to the persecution of Elijah by Jezebel, the obvious intention being to suggest the identification of the expected prophet with the Baptist. All pointing to one conclusion —suffering the appointed lot of the faithful servants of God in this evil world: Elijah, John, Jesus. That, the lesson Jesus wished by all means to inculcate: the δεῖ πολλὰ παθεῖν, now, and henceforth, to the end.

Vv. 14-29. The epileptic boy (Mt. xvii. 14-21, Lk. ix. 37-43). The story is told in Mark with much greater fulness than in the parallels.—Ver. 14. ὄχλον πολὺν: the great crowd and the fact that the disciples at the foot of the hill, the nine, had been asked to heal the sufferer, are in favour of the view that the scene of the transfiguration was less remote than Hermon from the familiar theatre of the healing ministry of Jesus and His disciples.—γραμματεῖς συζητοῦντας π. α., scribes wrangling with them, the nine. This is peculiar to Mark, but the situation is easily conceivable: the disciples have tried to heal the boy and failed (ver. 18); the scribes, delighted with the failure, taunt them with it, and suggest by way of explanation the waning power of the Master, whose name they had vainly attempted to conjure with. The baffled nine make the best defence they can, or perhaps listen in silence.—Ver. 15. ἐξεθαμβήθησαν, were utterly amazed, used by Mark only in N. T., here, and in xiv. 33 and xvi. 5 in connections which demand a very strong sense. What was there in common in the three situations: the returned Master, the agony in the garden, and the appearance of the angel at the resurrection? A surprise; which, whether sorrowful or joyful, always gives a certain emotional shock. The Master αὐτούς;" 17. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς[1] εἷς ἐκ τοῦ ὄχλου, εἶπε,[1] "Διδάσκαλε, ἤνεγκα τὸν υἱόν μου πρός σε, ἔχοντα πνεῦμα [b] ἄλαλον. 18. καὶ ὅπου ἂν αὐτὸν καταλάβῃ, ῥήσσει αὐτόν· καὶ [c] ἀφρίζει, καὶ [d] τρίζει τοὺς ὀδόντας αὐτοῦ,[2] καὶ [e] ξηραίνεται· καὶ εἶπον τοῖς μαθηταῖς σου ἵνα αὐτὸ ἐκβάλωσι, καὶ οὐκ ἴσχυσαν." 19. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς αὐτῷ,[3] λέγει, "[f] Ὦ γενεὰ ἄπιστος, ἕως πότε πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἔσομαι; [f] ἕως πότε ἀνέξομαι ὑμῶν; φέρετε αὐτὸν πρός με." 20. Καὶ ἤνεγκαν αὐτὸν πρὸς αὐτόν· καὶ ἰδὼν αὐτόν, εὐθέως τὸ πνεῦμα ἐσπάραξεν[4] αὐτόν· καὶ πεσὼν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἐκυλίετο ἀφρίζων. 21. Καὶ ἐπηρώτησε τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, "Πόσος χρόνος ἐστίν, ὡς τοῦτο γέγονεν αὐτῷ;" Ὁ δὲ εἶπε, "Παιδιόθεν.[5] 22. καὶ πολλάκις αὐτὸν καὶ εἰς πῦρ[6] ἔβαλε καὶ εἰς ὕδατα, ἵνα ἀπολέσῃ αὐτόν· ἀλλ' εἴ τι δύνασαι,[7]

b Ch. vii. 37.
c here and ver. 20.
d here only.
e Ch. iii. 1.
f parall. John x. 24. Rev. vi. 10 (ἕως πότε).

[1] απεκριθη αυτω without ειπε in ℵBDLΔ 33.
[2] Omit αυτου ℵBCDLΔ 33.
[3] αυτοις in ℵABDLΔ 33.
[4] το πν. ευθυς συνεσπαραξεν in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[5] εκ παιδ. in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[6] αυτον after και εις πυρ in ℵBCLΔ.
[7] δυνη in ℵBDLΔ.

reappears, when He is not looked for, when He is needed, and when His name is being taken in vain, perhaps not without a certain sympathy on the part of the volatile crowd not accustomed hitherto to miscarriage of attempts at healing when the name of Jesus was invoked. In that case their feeling would be a compound of confusion and gladness—ashamed and yet delighted to see Him, both betrayed in their manner.—Ver. 16. ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτούς, He asked them, i.e., the people who in numbers ran to meet Him. Jesus had noticed, as He drew near, that there was a dispute going on in which the disciples were concerned, and not knowing the composition of the crowd, He proceeds on the assumption that they had all a share in it = the crowd as a whole versus the nine.—Ver. 17. The father of the sick boy answers for the company, explaining the situation, laying the main stress of course on the deplorable condition of his child.—πρὸς σέ, to thee, not aware that Jesus was absent.—πνεῦμα ἄλαλον, a dumb spirit; the boy dumb, and therefore by inference the spirit.—Ver. 18. ὅπου ἂν α. καταλάβῃ, wherever it happens to seize him. The possession (ἔχοντα, ver. 17) is conceived of as intermittent; "the way of the spirit inferred from the characteristic phenomena of the disease" (The Miraculous Element in the Gospels, p. 181). Then follows a graphic description of the ensuing symptoms: spasms (ῥήσσει, a late form of ῥήγνυμι), foaming (ἀφρίζει from ἀφρός: he, the boy, foameth), grinding of the teeth (τρίζει τ. ὀδ.), then the final stage of motionless stupor graphically described as withering (ξηραίνεται), for which Euthy. gives as an equivalent ἀναισθητεῖ, and Weizsäcker "und wird starr".

Ver. 19. The complaint of Jesus, vide on Matthew.—Observe the πρὸς ὑμᾶς instead of Matthew's μεθ' ὑμῶν. = how long shall I be in relations with you, have to do with you?—Ver. 20. ἰδὼν may be taken as referring to the boy (Schanz), in which case we should have an anacolouthistic nominative for the accusative, the writer having in view to express his meaning in passives (ἐκυλίετο); or to the spirit (πνεῦμα) by a construction ad sensum = the spirit seeing Jesus made a last attack (Weiss in Meyer, et al.). This is most in keeping with the mode of conceiving the matter natural to the evangelist. The visible fact was a fresh fit, and the explanation, from the possession point of view, that the spirit, seeing Jesus, and knowing that his power was at an end, made a final assault.—Ver. 21. ὡς: a particle of time, here as frequently in Luke and John = since, or when.—ἐκ παιδιόθεν, ἐκ redundant, similar to ἀπὸ μακρόθεν (v. 6).—Ver. 22. εἴ τι δύνῃ, if Thou canst do anything (A. and R. Vv.), or better, if anyhow Thou canst help. The father speaks under the impression that the case, as he has just described it, is one of peculiar difficulty; therefore while the leper said βοήθησον ἡμῖν, σπλαγχνισθεὶς ἐφ' ἡμᾶς." 23. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Τό, εἰ δύνασαι πιστεῦσαι,[1] πάντα δυνατὰ τῷ πιστεύοντι." 24. Καὶ[2] εὐθέως κράξας ὁ πατὴρ τοῦ παιδίου, μετὰ δακρύων[3] ἔλεγε, "Πιστεύω, Κύριε,[4] βοήθει μου τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ." 25. Ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὅτι ἐπισυντρέχει ὄχλος, ἐπετίμησε τῷ πνεύματι τῷ ἀκαθάρτῳ, λέγων αὐτῷ, "Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἄλαλον καὶ κωφόν,[5] ἐγώ σοι ἐπιτάσσω,[5] ἔξελθε ἐξ αὐτοῦ, καὶ μηκέτι εἰσέλθῃς εἰς αὐτόν." 26. Καὶ κράξαν, καὶ πολλὰ σπαράξαν αὐτόν,[6] ἐξῆλθε· καὶ ἐγένετο ὡσεὶ νεκρός, ὥστε πολλοὺς[7] λέγειν ὅτι ἀπέθανεν. 27. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς κρατήσας αὐτὸν τῆς χειρός,[8] ἤγειρεν αὐτόν· καὶ ἀνέστη.

28. Καὶ εἰσελθόντα αὐτὸν[9] εἰς οἶκον, οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπηρώτων αὐτὸν κατ' ἰδίαν,[9] "Ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἠδυνήθημεν ἐκβαλεῖν αὐτό;" 29. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τοῦτο τὸ γένος ἐν οὐδενὶ δύναται ἐξελθεῖν, εἰ μὴ ἐν προσευχῇ καὶ νηστείᾳ."[10]

[1] ει δυνῃ without πιστευσαι (a gloss) in ℵBDΔ (CL δυνασαι without πισ.).
[2] Omit και BLΔ.
[3] Omit μετα δακ. ℵBCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).
[4] Omit Κυριε ℵBCDL.
[5] το πνευμα after κωφον, and σοι after επιτασσω in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[6] ℵBCDL have κραξας, σπαραξας, and omit αυτον.
[7] τους πολ. in ℵABLΔ 33.
[8] της χειρος αυτου in ℵBDLΔ.
[9] εισελθοντος αυτου in ℵBCDLΔ, also κατ ιδιαν before επηρωτων.
[10] ℵB omit και νηστεια, which comes from Mt. (T.R.).

"if Thou will," he says "if Thou canst". With reference to the form δύνῃ, Phryn. says that it is right after ἐάν, but that at the beginning of a sentence δύνασαι must be used (p. 359).—Ver. 23. τὸ εἰ δύνῃ, nominative absolute: as to the "if Thou canst".—πάντα δυν., all, in antithesis to the τι of the father.—Ver. 24. κράξας: eager, fear-stricken cry; making the most of his little faith, to ensure the benefit, and adding a prayer for increase of faith (βοήθει, etc.) with the idea that it would help to make the cure complete. The father's love at least was above suspicion. Meyer and Weiss render "help me even if unbelieving," arguing that the other, more common rendering is at variance with the meaning of βοήθησον in ver. 22.

Vv. 25-29. The cure.—ἐπισυντρέχει (ἅπ. λεγ.) indicates that the crowd was constantly increasing, so becoming a new crowd (ὄχλος without art.); natural in the circumstances. Jesus seeing this proceeds to cure without further delay. The spirit is now described as unclean and, with reference to the boy's symptoms, both dumb and deaf.—μηκέτι εἰσέλθῃς, enter not again. This was the essential point in a case of intermittent possession. The spirit went out at the end of each attack, but returned again.—Ver. 26 describes a final fit, apparently worse than the preceding. It was evidently an aggravated type of epilepsy, fit following on fit and producing utter exhaustion. Mark's elaborate description seems to embody the recollections of one on whom the case had made a great impression.—Ver. 28. εἰς οἶκον: into a house, when or whose not indicated, the one point of interest to the evangelist is that Jesus is now alone with His disciples.—ὅτι, recitative, here as in ver. 11, introduces a suggested question: we were not able to cast it out—why?—Ver. 29. τοῦτο τὸ γένος, etc.: This is one of the texts which very soon became misunderstood, the ascetic addition, καὶ νηστείᾳ, being at once a proof and a cause of misunderstanding. The traditional idea has been that Jesus here prescribes a certain discipline by which the exorcist could gain power to cope successfully with the most obstinate cases of possession, a course of prayer and fasting. This idea continues to dominate the mind even when the ascetic addition to the text has come to be regarded as doubtful; witness this

30. ΚΑΙ ἐκεῖθεν ἐξελθόντες παρεπορεύοντο[1] διὰ τῆς Γαλιλαίας· καὶ οὐκ ἤθελεν ἵνα τις γνῷ.[2] 31. ἐδίδασκε γὰρ τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὅτι ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται εἰς χεῖρας ἀνθρώπων, καὶ ἀποκτενοῦσιν αὐτόν· καὶ ἀποκτανθείς, τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ[3] ἀναστήσεται." 32. Οἱ δὲ ἠγνόουν τὸ ῥῆμα, καὶ ἐφοβοῦντο αὐτὸν ἐπερωτῆσαι.

33. Καὶ ἦλθεν[4] εἰς Καπερναούμ· καὶ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ γενόμενος, ἐπηρώτα αὐτούς, "Τί ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς[5] διελογίζεσθε;"

[1] BD have επορευοντο (W.H. text), παρεπ. in ℵCLΔ (Tisch.).

[2] γνοι in ℵBCDL.

[3] μετα τρεις ημερας in ℵBCDLΔ.

[4] So in CLΔ, ηλθον in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] Omit προς εαυ. ℵBCDL.

remark: "The authorisation, however (for omitting καὶ νησ.), is not sufficient. But even if it were overwhelming, fasting would, in its essence, be implied" (Morison on Mark). What Jesus said doubtless was: "This kind can go out in (on the ground of) nothing except prayer," and His meaning that there was no hope of success except through a believing (of course faith is implied) appeal to the almighty power of God. It was a thought of the same kind as that in Mt. xix. 26 (Mk. x. 27): the impossible for man is possible for God. Of course in the view of Christ, prayer, faith (vide Mt. xvii. 20), both in healer and in healed, was needful in all cases, but He recognised that there were certain aggravated types of disease (the present, one of them) in which the sense of dependence and trust was very specially required. In the case of the epileptic boy this had been lacking both in the father and in the disciples. Neither he nor they were hopeful of cure.

Vv. 30-32. Second announcement of the Passion (Mt. xvii. 22, 23, Lk. ix. 43-45).—Ver. 30. καὶ ἐκεῖθεν ἐξελθόντες, going forth from thence, i.e., from the scene of the last cure, wherever that was: it might be north or south of their destination (Capernaum)—Caesarea Philippi or Tabor.—παρεπορεύοντο, they passed along without tarrying anywhere. Some take the παρὰ in the compound verb to mean, went along by-ways, to avoid publicity: "diverticulo ibant, non via regia," Grotius. It is certainly true that Jesus had become so well known in Galilee that it would be difficult for Him on the thoroughfares to escape recognition as He wished (οὐκ ἤθελεν ἵνα τις γνοῖ).—Ver. 31. ἐδίδασκε γὰρ, etc.: gives the reason for this wish. It was the reason for the whole of the recent wandering outside Galilee: the desire to instruct the Twelve, and especially to prepare them for the approaching crisis.—καὶ ἔλεγεν introduces the gist or main theme of these instructions. The words following: ὅτι ὁ υἱὸς, etc., are more than an announcement made in so many words once for all: they are rather the text of Christ's whole talk with His disciples as they went along. He was so saying (ἔλεγεν, imperfect) all the time, in effect.—παραδίδοται, is betrayed, present; it is as good as done. The betrayal is the new feature in the second announcement.—Ver. 32. ἠγνόουν: they had heard the statement before, and had not forgotten the fact, and their Master had spoken too explicitly for them to be in any doubt as to His meaning. What they were ignorant of was the why, the δεῖ. With all He had said, Jesus had not yet been able to make that plain. They will never know till the Passion has become a fact accomplished.—ῥῆμα, a solemn name for the utterance (vide Mt. iv. 4) = the oracular, prophetic, and withal weird, mysterious word of doom.—ἐφοβοῦντο, they feared to ask, they did not wish to understand, they would live on in hope that their Master was under a hallucination; true to human nature.

Vv. 33-50. The Twelve at school (Mt. xviii. 1-10, Lk. ix. 46-50, etc.).—Ver. 33. Καπερναούμ: home? This statement, more than anything else in Mk., gives the impression that Capernaum was a kind of home for Jesus.—ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, in the house, opposed to ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, but probably pointing to a particular house in which Jesus was wont to stay.—τί . . . διελογίζεσθε, what were ye discussing? Jesus did not always walk beside His disciples (vide x. 32). He went before,

34. Οἱ δὲ ἐσιώπων· πρὸς ἀλλήλους γὰρ [g]διελέχθησαν ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, τίς μείζων. 35. καὶ καθίσας [h]ἐφώνησε τοὺς δώδεκα, καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Εἴ τις θέλει πρῶτος εἶναι, ἔσται πάντων ἔσχατος, καὶ πάντων διάκονος." 36. Καὶ λαβὼν παιδίον, ἔστησεν αὐτὸ ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῶν· καὶ [i]ἐναγκαλισάμενος αὐτό, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς· 37. "Ὃς ἐὰν [1] ἓν τῶν τοιούτων παιδίων δέξηται ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματί μου, ἐμὲ δέχεται· καὶ ὃς ἐὰν [1] ἐμὲ δέξηται,[2] οὐκ ἐμὲ δέχεται, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἀποστείλαντά με."

g here in Gospels. Several times in Acts and in Heb. xii. 5.
h vide at Mt. xx. 32.
i Ch. x. 16.

38. Ἀπεκρίθη δὲ [3] αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰωάννης, λέγων,[3] "Διδάσκαλε, εἴδομέν τινα τῷ ὀνόματί [4] σου ἐκβάλλοντα δαιμόνια, ὃς οὐκ ἀκολουθεῖ ἡμῖν [5]· καὶ ἐκωλύσαμεν [6] αὐτόν, ὅτι οὐκ ἀκολουθεῖ [6] ἡμῖν." 39 Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε, "Μὴ κωλύετε αὐτόν· οὐδεὶς γάρ ἐστιν ὃς ποιήσει δύναμιν ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματί μου, καὶ δυνήσεται ταχὺ κακολογῆσαί με. 40. ὃς γὰρ

[1] BDLΔ have αν in both places, ℵC in the first place.

[2] So in CDΔΣ al. ℵBL have δεχηται (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] For απεκ. δε ℵBΔ have εφη and omit λεγων.

[4] With εν prefixed in ℵBCDLΔΣ.

[5] This clause ος . . . ημιν is omitted in ℵBCLΔ, and treated as doubtful by modern editors. It may have been omitted to avoid redundancy (vide last clause, οτι ουκ, etc.). But such redundancy is characteristic of Mk.

[6] εκωλυομεν in ℵBDLΔ, and ηκολουθει in ℵBCLΔ.

thinking His deep thoughts, they followed thinking their vain thoughts The Master had noticed that something unusual was going on, divined what it was, and now asks.—Ver. 34. ἐσιώπων, they kept silent, ashamed to tell.—Ver. 35. καὶ καθίσας, etc.: every word here betokens a deliberate attempt to school the disciples in humility. The Master takes His seat (καθίσας), calls His scholars with a magisterial tone (ἐφώνησεν, for various sense in which used, vide references, Mt. xx. 32) –the Twelve (τοὺς δ.), called to an important vocation, and needing thorough discipline to be of service in it.—εἴ τις θέλει, etc. the direct answer to the question under discussion: who the greatest? = greatness comes by humility (ἔσχατος), and service (διάκονος).—Ver. 36. The child, produced at the outset in Mt., is now brought on the scene (λαβών), not, however, as a model (that in x. 15), but as an object of kind treatment.—ἐναγκαλισάμενος: in Mk. only = taking it into His arms, to symbolise how all that the child represents should be treated.—Ver. 37. δέξηται in the first member of the sentence, δέχηται in the second; the former (aorist, subjective with ἂν), the more regular in a clause expressing future possibility. Winer, xlii. 3b (a). The second member of the sentence is not in the corresponding place in Mt., but is given in Mt. x. 40.

Vv. 38-41. A reminiscence (Lk. ix. 49-50). Probably an incident of the Galilean mission, introduced without connecting particle, therefore (Weiss) connection purely topical; suggested (Holtz., H. C.) to the evangelist by the expression ἐπὶ τ. ὀνόματί μου in ver. 37, answering to ἐν τ. ὀ. σ. in ver. 38.—ἐκβάλλοντα δ.: exorcists usually conjured with some name, Abraham, Solomon; this one used the name of Jesus, implying some measure of faith in His worth and power.—ἐκωλύομεν, imperfect, taken by most as implying repeated interdicts, but it may be the conative imperfect = we tried to prevent him.—οὐκ ἠκολούθει, he did not follow us; the reason for the prohibition. The aloofness of the exorcist is represented as still continuing in the words ὃς οὐκ ἀκολουθεῖ (T. R.).—Ver. 39. Jesus disallows the interdict for a reason that goes deeper than the purely external one of the disciples = not of our company? well, but with us at heart.—δυνήσεται ταχὺ: points to moral impossibility: use of Christ's name in exorcism incompatible with hostile or inappreciative thought and speech of Him.—ταχὺ softens the assertion: not soon; he may do it, but οὐκ ἔστι καθ᾽ ὑμῶν,[1] ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν[1] ἐστιν. 41. ὃς γὰρ ἂν ποτίσῃ ὑμᾶς ποτήριον ὕδατος ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου,[2] ὅτι Χριστοῦ ἐστε, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐ μὴ ἀπολέσῃ[3] τὸν μισθὸν αὐτοῦ. 42. Καὶ ὃς ἂν σκανδαλίσῃ ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν[4] τῶν πιστευόντων εἰς ἐμέ,[5] καλόν ἐστιν αὐτῷ μᾶλλον, εἰ [j] περίκειται λίθος μυλικὸς[6] περὶ τὸν τράχηλον αὐτοῦ, καὶ βέβληται εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν. 43. Καὶ ἐὰν σκανδαλίζῃ[7] σε ἡ χείρ σου, ἀπόκοψον αὐτήν· καλόν σοι ἐστὶ[8] κυλλὸν εἰς τὴν ζωὴν εἰσελθεῖν,[9] ἢ τὰς δύο χεῖρας ἔχοντα ἀπελθεῖν εἰς τὴν γέενναν, εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ ἄσβεστον, 44. ὅπου ὁ σκώληξ αὐτῶν οὐ τελευτᾷ, καὶ τὸ πῦρ οὐ σβέννυται.[10] 45. καὶ ἐὰν ὁ πούς σου σκανδαλίζῃ σε, ἀπόκοψον αὐτόν· καλόν ἐστί σοι[11] εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν ζωὴν χωλόν, ἢ τοὺς δύο πόδας ἔχοντα βληθῆναι εἰς τὴν γέενναν, εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ ἄσβεστον,[12] 46. ὅπου ὁ σκώληξ αὐτῶν οὐ τελευτᾷ, καὶ τὸ πῦρ οὐ σβέννυται.[10] 47. καὶ ἐὰν ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου σκανδαλίζῃ σε, ἔκβαλε αὐτόν· καλόν σοι ἐστὶ[13] μονόφθαλμον εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἢ δύο ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχοντα βληθῆναι εἰς τὴν γέενναν τοῦ πυρός,[14] 48. ὅπου ὁ

j Lk. xvii. 2. Acts xxviii. 20. Heb. v. 2; xii. 1.

[1] ημων in both places in ℵBCD.

[2] εν ονοματι simply in BCLΣ (W.H.), εν ον. μου in ℵDΔ (Tisch.).

[3] οτι before ου μη in ℵBCDLΔ.

[4] τουτων after μικρων in ℵBCDLΔ.

[5] εις εμε may come from Mt., though it is in ℵBLΣ; wanting in ℵΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] μυλος ονικος in ℵBCDLΔ may be a conforming to Mt., but T.R. more probably conforms to Lk.

[7] σκανδαλιση in ℵBLΔ.

[8] εστιν σε in ℵBCLΔ.

[9] εισελθειν before εις in ℵBCDLΔ.

[10] Ver. 44 is wanting in ℵBCLΔ, some minusc. and verss., also ver. 46.

[11] σε in ℵABCLΔ.

[12] Omit εις το . . . ασβεστον ℵBCLΔ.

[13] σε εστιν in ℵB.

[14] του πυρος omit ℵBDLΔ (BL omit την before γεενναν).

it will mean a change of mind, and disuse of my name.—Ver. 40. The counterpart truth to that in Mt. x. 30. Both truths, and easily harmonised. It is in both cases a question of tendency; a little sympathy inclines to grow to more, so also with a lack of sympathy. Vide on Mt. x. 30.—Ver. 41 = Mt. x. 42, but a later secondary form of the saying: ποτήριον ὕδατος for π. ψυχροῦ, and ὅτι Χριστοῦ ἐστέ instead of εἰς ὄν. μαθητοῦ.

Vv. 42-48. After the episode of the exorcist the narrative returns to the discourse broken off at ver. 38. From receiving little children and all they represent, Jesus passes to speak of the sin of causing them to stumble.—Ver. 42. καλόν, etc.: well for him; rather = better. Each evangelist has his own word here: Mt. συμφέρει, Lk. (xvii. 2) λυσιτελεῖ; but Mk., according to the best attested reading, has the strong phrase μύλος ὀνικὸς in common with Mt. He is content, however, with the expression "in the sea," instead of Mt.'s "in the deep part of the sea," the faithful reproduction, probably, of what Jesus actually said.—Ver. 43. The offender of the little ones is still more an offender against himself, hence the discourse by an easy transition passes to counsels against such folly. In Mk.'s version these are given in a most particular way, hand, foot and eye being each used separately to illustrate the common admonition. In Mt. hand and foot are combined. In the third illustration εἰς τὴν ζωὴν is replaced by εἰς τ. βασιλείαν τ. θ. The refrain: "where the worm, etc.," is repeated in T. R. with solemn effect after each example, but the best MSS. have it only after the third, vv. 44, 46 being thus omitted (R. V.).

σκώληξ αὐτῶν οὐ τελευτᾷ, καὶ τὸ πῦρ οὐ σβέννυται. 49. Πᾶς γὰρ πυρὶ ἁλισθήσεται, καὶ πᾶσα θυσία ἁλὶ ἁλισθήσεται.[1] 50. καλὸν τὸ ἅλας· ἐὰν δὲ τὸ ἅλας ἄναλον γένηται, ἐν τίνι αὐτὸ [k] ἀρτύσετε; ἔχετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἅλας,[2] καὶ εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἀλλήλοις."

k Lk. xiv. 34. Col. iv. 6.

[1] This last clause is omitted in ℵBLΔ, many minusc. (Tisch., W.H., vide below).

[2] αλα in ℵABDLΔ.

Vv. 49-50. Salting inevitable and indispensable. These verses appear only in Mk. as part of this discourse. The logion in ver. 50 corresponds to Mt. v. 13, Lk. xiv. 34-35.—Ver. 49 is a crux interpretum, and has given rise to great diversity of interpretation (vide Meyer, ad loc.). Three questions may be asked. (1) What is the correct form of the saying? (2) Was it spoken at this time by Jesus? (3) If it was, how is it to be connected with the previous context? As to (1) some important MSS. (ℵBLΔ and the new Syr. Sin.) omit the second half of the sentence, retaining only "every one shall be salted with fire". D and some copies of the old Lat. omit the first part and retain the second. W. and H. retain only part 1. Weiss and Schanz think that the text must be taken in its entirety, and that part 2 fell out by homoeoteleuton, or was omitted because of its difficulty. Holtzmann, H. C., is inclined to favour the reading of D. It is difficult to decide between these alternatives, though I personally lean to the first of the three, not only because of the weighty textual testimony, but, as against D, on account of the startling character of the thought, salted with fire, its very boldness witnessing for its authenticity. As to (2) I think it highly probable that such thoughts as vv. 49-50 contain were spoken at this time by Jesus. The two thoughts, salting inevitable and salting indispensable, were thoroughly apposite to the situation: a master teaching men in danger of moral shipwreck through evil passion, and unless reformed sure to prove unfit for the work to which they were destined. I cannot therefore agree with Holtzmann (H. C.) that Mk., misled by the word πῦρ in ver. 48, has brought in here a logion spoken at some other time. As to (3) I see no necessity to regard γάρ, ver. 49, as binding us down to a close exclusive connection with ver. 48, requiring us to interpret ver. 49a thus: every one that does not cut off the offending member shall be salted by the fire of hell; itself quenchless, and not destroying its victim, as it is the nature of ordinary fire to do, but rather preserving him for eternal torment, like salt. Thus viewed, ver. 49a is a mere comment on the words οὐ σβέννυται. The saying should rather be taken in connection with the whole course of thought in vv. 43-48, in which case it will bear this sense: "every one must be salted somehow, either with the unquenchable fire of gehenna, or with the fire of severe self-discipline. Wise is he who chooses the latter alternative." If we ignore the connection with ver. 48, and restrict πᾶς to the disciple-circle, this alternative rendering will be avoided, and the idea will be: every man who is to come to any good, will, must, be salted with fire. In that case, however, it is difficult to account for the unusual combination of salt and fire, whose functions are so opposed. 49b is of quite subordinate importance, merely at best a parabolic aid to thought. Grotius and others divide the sacrifices into two classes answering to the two forms of salting: burnt offerings typifying those consumed in hell, peace offerings those preserved by self-discipline.—Ver. 50 sets forth the other great truth: salting in the form of self-discipline indispensable.—καλὸν τὸ ἅλας, an excellent thing is salt; a most seasonable truth just then. What follows seems less so, as it stands in Mk.'s text. As spoken by Jesus, if we may assume that it was spoken on this occasion, it might come in quite naturally. The three thoughts in this verse: salt good, care must be taken that it lose not its virtue, have salt in yourselves, may be merely themes packed together in a single sentence, on which Jesus discoursed at length.—ἄναλον, ἅπ. λεγ. in N. T., used in later Greek; μωρανθῇ in Mt. and Lk.—ἔχετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἅλα: have salt in yourselves. In the two former clauses disciples are thought of, as in Mt. v. 13, as themselves salt for the world. Here they are viewed as the subject of the salting process. They must be salted in order to be salt to the world, their

X. 1. ΚΑΚΕΙΘΕΝ[1] ἀναστὰς ἔρχεται εἰς τὰ ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας, διὰ τοῦ[2] πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου· καὶ συμπορεύονται πάλιν ὄχλοι πρὸς αὐτόν· καὶ ὡς εἰώθει, πάλιν ἐδίδασκεν αὐτούς. 2. Καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ[3] Φαρισαῖοι ἐπηρώτησαν[3] αὐτόν, εἰ ἔξεστιν ἀνδρὶ γυναῖκα ἀπολῦσαι, πειράζοντες αὐτόν. 3. ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τί ὑμῖν ἐνετείλατο Μωσῆς;" 4. Οἱ δὲ εἶπον, "Μωσῆς ἐπέτρεψε[4] βιβλίον ἀποστασίου γράψαι, καὶ ἀπολῦσαι." 5. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν[5] αὐτοῖς, "Πρὸς τὴν σκληροκαρδίαν ὑμῶν ἔγραψεν ὑμῖν τὴν

[1] και εκειθεν in ℵBCDΔ.

[2] και instead of δια του in ℵBCL; περαν without και in DΔ. The και caused trouble to scribes, some omitted it after Mt., some substituted δια του as in T.R.

[3] BLΔ omit οι (added here as usual), and ℵBCDLΔ have the imperfect επηρωτων instead of the aorist so often substituted for it in T.R. (again in ver. 10).

[4] επετρεψεν M. in ℵBDLΔ.

[5] For και . . . ειπεν read with ℵBCLΔ ο δε I. ειπεν.

ulterior vocation. Meantime a more immediate effect of their being salted is pointed out in the closing words.—εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἀλλήλοις: be at peace with one another; which they were not. The cause of dispeace was ambition. The salting would consist in getting rid of that evil spirit at whatever cost.—εἰρηνεύετε: a Pauline word, remarks Holtz. (H.C.). True, but why not also a word of Jesus? certainly very apposite to the occasion.

Note.—Salting of disciples imports suffering pain, but is not to be confounded with the cross-bearing of faithful disciples (viii. 34). The former is the discipline of self-denial necessary to make a man a follower of Christ worthy of the name. The latter is the tribulation that comes on all who follow closely in the footsteps of Christ. The one is needful to make us holy, the other overtakes us when and because we are holy.

CHAPTER X. MARRIAGE QUESTION. LITTLE CHILDREN. QUEST AFTER ETERNAL LIFE. TWO SONS OF ZEBEDEE. BARTIMAEUS.—Ver. 1. The departure from Galilee (Mt. xix. 1).—ἐκεῖθεν ἀναστὰς, as in vii. 24, q.v.; there, of a departure from Galilee which was followed by a return (ix. 33), here, of a final departure, so far as we know. Beza finds in the expression a Hebraism—to sit is to remain in a place, to rise is to depart from it. Kypke renders, et inde discedens, and gives classic examples of the usage.—εἰς τὰ ὅρια τ. Ι. καὶ πέραν, etc., into the borders of Judaea and of Peraea; how reached not indicated. The reading of T. R. διὰ τοῦ πέραν τ. Ι. gives the route. Vide on Mt., ad loc., where the καὶ (of ℵBCL) is omitted.—συμπορεύονται πάλιν, crowds again gather.—ὄχλοι, plural; here only, with reference to the different places passed through.—ὡς εἰώθει, as He was wont; remarked on, because the habit had been suspended for a season during which the whole attention of Jesus had been devoted to the Twelve. That continues to be the case mainly still. In every incident the Master has an eye to the lesson for the disciples. And the evangelist takes pains to make the lesson prominent. Possibly his incidents are selected and grouped with that in view: marriage, children, money, etc. (so Weiss in Meyer).—ἐδίδασκεν, He continued teaching, so also in vi. 34. In both places Mt. (xiv. 14, xix. 2) speaks of healing. Yet Mk.'s Gospel is a gospel of acts, Mt.'s of words. Each is careful to make prominent, in general notices, what he comparatively neglects in detail.

Vv. 2-12. The question of divorce (Mt. xix. 3-12).—ἀπολῦσαι: the question is put absolutely, the qualifying clause κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν in Mt. being omitted. Thus put the question presupposes knowledge of Christ's high doctrine as to marriage, and is an attempt to bring Him into collision with the Mosaic law, as absolutely interdicting what it allowed.—Ver. 3. τί ὑμῖν ἐνετείλατο Μ.: here Jesus has in view not what Moses allowed in Deut. xxiv. 1, but what he in Genesis enjoined as the ideal state of things (Moses from the Jewish point of view author of the Pentateuch and all its legislation). They naturally supposed He had in view the former (ver. 4).—Ver. 5.

ἐντολὴν ταύτην· 6. ἀπὸ δὲ ἀρχῆς κτίσεως, ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ ἐποίησεν αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεός.[1] 7. 'ἕνεκεν τούτου καταλείψει ἄνθρωπος τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν μητέρα· καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ,[2] 8. καὶ ἔσονται οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν.' ὥστε οὐκέτι εἰσὶ δύο, ἀλλὰ μία σάρξ. 9. ὃ οὖν ὁ Θεὸς συνέζευξεν, ἄνθρωπος μὴ χωριζέτω." 10. Καὶ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ[3] πάλιν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐπηρώτησαν[4] αὐτόν. 11. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ὃς ἐὰν ἀπολύσῃ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ καὶ γαμήσῃ ἄλλην, μοιχᾶται ἐπ' αὐτήν· 12. καὶ ἐὰν γυνὴ[5] ἀπολύσῃ τὸν ἄνδρα αὐτῆς καὶ[5] γαμηθῇ ἄλλῳ,[5] μοιχᾶται.

13. Καὶ προσέφερον αὐτῷ παιδία, ἵνα ἅψηται αὐτῶν· οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ ἐπετίμων τοῖς προσφέρουσιν.[6] 14. ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἠγανάκτησε, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἄφετε τὰ παιδία ἔρχεσθαι πρός με, καὶ[7] μὴ κωλύετε αὐτά· τῶν γὰρ τοιούτων ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ

[1] Omit ο θεος ℵBCLΔ. D has ο θ., and omits αυτους (W.H. omit ο θ. and bracket αυτους).

[2] και προσκ. . . . αυτου, omitted in ℵB, is probably an addition from Mt. or Sept.

[3] εις την οικιαν in ℵBDLΔ.

[4] οι μαθ. περι τουτου επηρωτων in ℵ (τουτων) BCLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] For γυνη απ. ℵBCLΔ have αυτη απολυσασα without και, and for γαμηθη αλλω, γαμηση αλλον (so also D: Tisch., W.H.).

[6] ℵBCLΔ have αυτων before αψηται, επετιμησαν for επιτιμων, and αυτοις for τοις προσφερουσι (W.H.).

[7] BΔΣ omit και, which comes from parall., and weakens the force of the words. Vide below.

Both evangelists, while varying considerably in their reports, carefully preserve this important logion as to legislation conditioned by the sklerokardia.—ταύτην: at the end, with emphasis; this particular command in contradiction to the great original one.—Ver. 6: "But from the beginning of the creation (it runs) 'male and female made He them,'" ἄρσεν καὶ, etc., being a quotation from Sept. (Gen. i. 27), vv. 7, 8 being another (vide Gen. ii. 24), with Christ's comment in the last clause of ver. 8 and in ver. 9 appended. On the import of the words vide in Mt., ad loc.—Vv. 10-12 report as spoken to the Twelve in the house (as opposed to the way in which the Pharisees are supposed to have encountered Jesus) what in Mt.'s version appears as the last word to the interrogants (ver. 9). Two variations are noticeable: (1) the absence of the qualifying clause εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ πορνείᾳ, and (2) the addition of a clause (ver. 12) stating the law in its bearing on the woman = if she put away her husband and marry another, she is an adulteress. In the former case Mk. probably reports correctly what Christ said, in the latter he has added a gloss so as to make Christ's teaching a guide for his Gentile readers. Jewish women could not divorce their husbands. The ἐπ' αὐτήν at the end of ver. 11 may mean either against, to the prejudice of, her (the first wife), or with her (the second). The former view is taken by the leading modern exegetes, the latter by Victor Ant., Euthy., Theophy., and, among moderns, Ewald and Bleek.

Vv. 13-16. Suffer the children (Mt. xix. 13-15, Lk. xviii. 15-17).—Ver. 13. παιδία as in Mt. Lk. has βρέφη = infants carried in arms. Note the use of the compound προσέφερον; elsewhere the simple verb. The word is commonly used of sacrifices, and suggests here the idea of dedication.—ἅψηται, touch, merely, as if that alone were enough to bless; prayer mentioned in Mt.—τοῖς προσφέρουσιν (T. R.), probably interprets the αὐτοῖς (W.H.) after ἐπετίμησαν.—Ver. 14. ἠγανάκτησε, "was moved with indignation" (R. V.) is too strong,

Θεοῦ· 15. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὃς ἐὰν μὴ δέξηται τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ ὡς παιδίον, οὐ μὴ εἰσέλθῃ εἰς αὐτήν." 16. Καὶ ἐναγκαλισάμενος αὐτά, τιθεὶς τὰς χεῖρας ἐπ' αὐτά, ηὐλόγει αὐτά.[1]

17. Καὶ ἐκπορευομένου αὐτοῦ εἰς ὁδόν, προσδραμὼν εἷς καὶ γονυπετήσας αὐτὸν ἐπηρώτα αὐτόν, "Διδάσκαλε ἀγαθέ, τί ποιήσω ἵνα ζωὴν αἰώνιον κληρονομήσω;" 18. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; οὐδεὶς ἀγαθός, εἰ μὴ εἷς, ὁ Θεός. 19. τὰς ἐντολὰς οἶδας, Μὴ μοιχεύσῃς· μὴ φονεύσῃς[2]· μὴ κλέψῃς· μὴ ψευδομαρτυρήσῃς· μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς· τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ τὴν μητέρα." 20. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν[3] αὐτῷ, "Διδάσκαλε, ταῦτα πάντα ἐφυλαξάμην ἐκ νεότητός μου." 21. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς [a]ἐμβλέψας [a]αὐτῷ ἠγάπησεν αὐτόν, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ἕν σοι[4] ὑστερεῖ· ὕπαγε, ὅσα ἔχεις πώλησον, καὶ δὸς τοῖς[5] πτωχοῖς, καὶ ἕξεις θησαυρὸν ἐν a cf. Ch. xiv. 67. Lk. xx. 17; xxii. 61.

[1] Instead of τιθεις . . . ηυλογει αυτα ℵBCLΔ have κατευλογει τιθεις τας χειρας επ. αυτα (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] μη φονευσης before μη μοιχευσης in BCΔ (W.H. text).

[3] For ο δε αποκ. ειπεν ℵBCΔ have ο δε εφη.

[4] σε in ℵBCL. [5] BΔ al. omit τοις (W.H. in brackets).

"was much displeased" (A. V.) is better, "was annoyed" is better still ("ward unwillig," Weizsäcker).—μὴ κωλύετε, καὶ of T. R. before μὴ is much better left out: suffer them to come; do not hinder them; an expressive asyndeton. This saying is the main point in the story for the evangelist, hence the imperfects in ver. 13. It is another lesson for the still spiritually crude disciples.—Ver. 15 answers to Mt. xviii. 3. As Jesus gave several lessons on humility and kindred virtues, in Capernaum, here, and on the way to Jericho (x. 35 f.), it is not to be wondered at if the sayings spoken in the several lessons got somewhat mixed in the tradition. It does not greatly matter when they were uttered. The thing to be thankful for is their preservation.—Ver. 16. ἐναγκαλισάμενος, as in ix. 36. Jesus took each child in His arms, one by one, and blessed it: κατευλόγει, imperfect. The process would last a while, but Jesus would not soon weary in such work. The compound verb κατευλόγει (ℵBCL, etc.), here only, has intensive force like καταφιλέω in Mt. xxvi. 49 (vide notes there and Maclear in C. G. T.).

Vv. 17-27. Quest after eternal life (Mt. xix. 16-30, Lk. xviii. 18-30).—Ver. 17. ἐκπορευομένου α. εἰς ὁδὸν: the incident to be related happens as Jesus is coming out from some house into the highway, at what precise point on the journey Mk. neither knows nor cares. The didactic significance of the story alone concerns him.—διδάσκαλε ἀγαθέ: that the epithet ἀγαθός was really used by the man is highly probable. Vide on Mt.—Ver. 18. τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν: on the import of this question vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 19. The commandments of the second table enumerated are expressed by subjunctives with μὴ, instead of future indicatives with οὐ. While Mt. has the supernumerary, "love thy neighbour," Mk. has μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, which probably has in view the humane law in Deut. xxiv. 14, 15, against oppressing or withholding wages from a hired servant; a more specific form of the precept: love thy neighbour as thyself, and a most apposite reminder of duty as addressed to a wealthy man, doubtless an extensive employer of labour. It should be rung in the ears of all would-be Christians, in similar social position, in our time: defraud not, underpay not.—Ver. 21. ἠγάπησεν α.: on the import of the statement in reference to the man vide on Mt. Jesus loved this man. Grotius remarks: Jesus loved not virtues only, but seeds of virtues ("et semina virtutum"). Field (Otium Nor.) renders "caressed". Bengel takes ἐμβλέψας ἠγάπησεν as a ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, and renders, amanter aspexit = lovingly regarded him—ἕν σε ὑστερεῖ. In Mk. Jesus, not the inquirer, remarks on the οὐρανῷ· καὶ δεῦρο, ἀκολούθει μοι, ἄρας τὸν σταυρόν."[1] 22. Ὁ δὲ στυγνάσας ἐπὶ τῷ λόγῳ ἀπῆλθε λυπούμενος· ἦν γὰρ ἔχων κτήματα πολλά. 23. Καὶ περιβλεψάμενος ὁ Ἰησοῦς λέγει τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Πῶς δυσκόλως οἱ τὰ χρήματα ἔχοντες εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰσελεύσονται." 24. Οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ ἐθαμβοῦντο ἐπὶ τοῖς λόγοις αὐτοῦ. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς πάλιν ἀποκριθεὶς λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Τέκνα, πῶς [b]δύσκολόν ἐστι τοὺς πεποιθότας ἐπὶ τοῖς χρήμασιν[2] εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰσελθεῖν. 25. εὐκοπώτερόν ἐστι κάμηλον διὰ τῆς[3] τρυμαλιᾶς τῆς[3] ῥαφίδος εἰσελθεῖν,[4] ἢ πλούσιον εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰσελθεῖν." 26. Οἱ δὲ περισσῶς ἐξεπλήσσοντο, λέγοντες πρὸς ἑαυτούς,[5] "Καὶ τίς δύναται σωθῆναι;" 27. Ἐμβλέψας δὲ[6] αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς λέγει, "Παρὰ ἀνθρώποις ἀδύνατον, ἀλλ' οὐ παρὰ τῷ[7] Θεῷ· πάντα γὰρ δυνατά ἐστι[8] παρὰ

b here only.

[1] αρας τ. σ. is a gloss from Ch. viii. 34, omitted in ℵBCDΔ.

[2] τους πεπ. . . . χρημασιν is a gloss wanting in ℵBΔ; vide below. Omission by similar ending (Alford) is abstractly possible.

[3] της is found in B in both places (W.H. margin), but omitted in many uncials.

[4] διελθειν in some copies (W.H.).

[5] αυτον in ℵBCΔ.

[6] Omit δε ℵBCΔ.

[7] Omit τω ℵBCΔ. B omits the second τω at end of sentence (W.H. in brackets).

[8] εστι omitted in ℵBC al.; more expressive without.

lack; in Mt. the reverse is the fact: the man is conscious of his defect, an important point in his spiritual condition.—δεῦρο, etc.: from the invitation to join the disciple band Weiss (Meyer) infers that the incident must have happened before the circle of the Twelve was complete. The last clause in T. R. about the cross is an obvious gloss by a scribe whose mind was dominated by stereotyped religious commonplaces.—Ver. 22. στυγνάσας: in Mt. xvi. 3, of the sky, here, of the face, λυπούμενος, following, referring to the mind: with sad face and heavy heart.

Vv. 23-27. The moral of the story given for the benefit of the disciples, περιβλεψάμενος (iii. 5, 34), looking around, to see what impression the incident had made on the Twelve.—πῶς = ἀληθῶς, Euthy.—πῶς δυσ., with what difficulty!—τὰ χρήματα, wealth collectively held by the rich class (Meyer).—Ver. 4. ἐθαμβοῦντο, were confounded.—πάλιν ἀποκριθεὶς prepares us for repetition with unmitigated severity, rather than toning down, which is what we have in T. R., through the added words, τοὺς πεποιθότας ἐπὶ τοῖς χρήμασιν, suggesting an idea more worthy of a scribe than of Jesus; for it is not merely difficult but impossible for one trusting in riches to enter the Kingdom. Yet this is one of the places where the Sin. Syriac agrees with the T. R.—Ver. 25. In this proverbial saying the evangelists vary in expression in reference to the needle and the needle-eye, though one might have looked for stereotyped phraseology in a proverb. The fact points to different Greek renderings of a saying originally given in a Semitic tongue.—τρυμαλιᾶς, from τρύω, to rub through, so as to make a hole. According to Furrer, proverbs about the camel and the needle-eye, to express the impossible, are still current among the Arabs. E.g., "hypocrites go into paradise as easily as a camel through a needle-eye"; "He asks of people that they conduct a camel through a needle-eye" (Wanderungen, p. 339).—Ver. 26. The disciples, amazed, ask: καὶ τίς δύναται σωθῆναι; τίς ἄρα, etc., in Mt. The καὶ resumes what has been said, and draws from it an inference meant to call its truth in question (Holtz., H. C.) = who, in that case, can be saved?—Ver. 27. This saying is given diversely in the three parallels; most pithily in Mt., and perhaps nearest to the original. For the meaning vide on Mt.

Vv. 28-31. Peter's question (Mt. xix.

τῷ Θεῷ." 28. Καὶ ἤρξατο ὁ Πέτρος λέγειν[1] αὐτῷ, "Ἰδού, ἡμεῖς ἀφήκαμεν πάντα, καὶ ἠκολουθήσαμέν[2] σοι." 29. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν,[3] "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐδείς ἐστιν, ὃς ἀφῆκεν οἰκίαν, ἢ ἀδελφούς, ἢ ἀδελφάς, ἢ πατέρα, ἢ μητέρα,[4] ἢ γυναῖκα,[5] ἢ τέκνα, ἢ ἀγρούς, ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ καὶ[6] τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, 30. ἐὰν μὴ λάβῃ ἑκατονταπλασίονα νῦν ἐν τῷ [e] καιρῷ τούτῳ, οἰκίας καὶ ἀδελφοὺς καὶ ἀδελφὰς καὶ μητέρας[7] καὶ τέκνα καὶ ἀγρούς, μετὰ διωγμῶν, καὶ ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τῷ ἐρχομένῳ ζωὴν αἰώνιον. 31. πολλοὶ δὲ ἔσονται πρῶτοι ἔσχατοι, καὶ οἱ ἔσχατοι πρῶτοι."

e Rom. iii. 26; viii. 18.

32. ἮΣΑΝ δὲ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ ἀναβαίνοντες εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα· καὶ ἦν προάγων αὐτοὺς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, καὶ ἐθαμβοῦντο, καὶ[8] ἀκολουθοῦντες ἐφοβοῦντο. καὶ παραλαβὼν πάλιν τοὺς δώδεκα, ἤρξατο αὐτοῖς λέγειν τὰ μέλλοντα αὐτῷ συμβαίνειν· 33. "Ὅτι, ἰδού, ἀναβαίνομεν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδοθήσεται τοῖς ἀρχιερεῦσι καὶ τοῖς γραμματεῦσι, καὶ κατακρινοῦσιν αὐτὸν θανάτῳ,

[1] λεγειν before ο Π. and without και before ηρξ. in ℵBCΔ.
[2] ηκολουθηκαμεν in BCD.
[3] For αποκ. . . . ειπεν ℵBΔ Cop. have εφη ο Ι.
[4] μητερα η πατερα in BCΔ.
[5] ℵBDΔ omit η γυναικα, which probably comes from Lk.
[6] και ενεκεν in ℵCDΔ (W.H in brackets).
[7] So in BΔ, but ℵCD have μητερα, a correction (W.H. margin).
[8] οι δε in ℵBCLΔ; not understood, therefore και substituted in late uncials.

27-30, Lk. xviii. 28-30).—Ver. 28 introduces the episode without any connecting word such as τότε in Mt. ἰδού betrays self-consciousness, also the following ἡμεῖς. Yet, with all his self-consciousness, Peter, in Mk.'s account, has not courage to finish his question, stopping short with the statement of fact on which it is based = behold! we have left all and followed Thee?—ἀφήκαμεν, aorist, refers to an act done once for all, ἠκολουθήκαμεν, to an abiding condition. —Ver. 29. Jesus, seeing Peter's meaning, proceeds to give, first, a generous answer, then a word of warning. In the enumeration of persons and things forsaken, "wife" is omitted in important MSS. (W.H.). The omission is true to the delicate feeling of Jesus. It may have to be done, but He would rather not say it.—τοῦ εὐαγγελίου: a gloss to suit apostolic times and circumstances.—Ver. 30. νῦν: the present time the sphere of compensation; ἑκατονταπλασίονα (Lk. viii. 8): the measure characteristically liberal; μετὰ διωγμῶν: the natural qualification, seeing it is in this world that the moral compensation takes place, yet not diminishing the value of the compensation, rather enhancing it, as a relish; a foreshadowing this, perhaps a transcript, of apostolic experience.—Ver. 31. On this apothegm vide on Mt.

Vv. 32-34. Third prediction of the Passion (Mt. xx. 17-19, Lk. xviii. 31-34).—Ver. 32. εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, to Jerusalem! The fact that they were at last on the march for the Holy City is mentioned to explain the mood and manner of Jesus.—προάγων: Jesus in advance, all the rest following at a respectful distance.—ἐθαμβοῦντο: the astonishment of the Twelve and the fear of others (οἱ ἀκολ. ἐφοβοῦντο) were not due to the fact that Jesus had, against their wish, chosen to go to Jerusalem in spite of apprehended danger (Weiss). These feelings must have been awakened by the manner of Jesus, as of one labouring under strong emotion. Only so can we account for the fear of the crowd, who were not, like the Twelve, acquainted with Christ's forebodings of death. Memory and expectation were both active at that καὶ παραδώσουσιν αὐτὸν τοῖς ἔθνεσι, 34. καὶ ἐμπαίξουσιν αὐτῷ, καὶ μαστιγώσουσιν αὐτόν, καὶ ἐμπτύσουσιν αὐτῷ,[1] καὶ ἀποκτενοῦσιν αὐτόν· καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ[2] ἀναστήσεται."

35. Και [d] προσπορεύονται αὐτῷ Ἰάκωβος καὶ Ἰωάννης οἱ υἱοὶ Ζεβεδαίου, λέγοντες,[3] "Διδάσκαλε, θέλομεν ἵνα ὃ ἐὰν αἰτήσωμεν,[4] ποιήσῃς ἡμῖν." 36. Ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τί θέλετε ποιῆσαί με[5] ὑμῖν;" 37. Οἱ δὲ εἶπον αὐτῷ, "Δὸς ἡμῖν, ἵνα εἷς ἐκ δεξιῶν σου[6] καὶ εἷς ἐξ εὐωνύμων σου[7] καθίσωμεν ἐν τῇ δόξῃ σου." 38. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Οὐκ οἴδατε τί αἰτεῖσθε. δύνασθε πιεῖν τὸ ποτήριον ὃ ἐγὼ πίνω, καὶ[8] τὸ βάπτισμα ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι, βαπτισθῆναι;" 39. Οἱ δὲ εἶπον αὐτῷ, "Δυνάμεθα." Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τὸ μὲν[9] ποτήριον ὃ ἐγὼ πίνω, πίεσθε· καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι, βαπτισθήσεσθε· 40. τὸ δὲ καθίσαι ἐκ δεξιῶν μου καὶ ἐξ εὐωνύμων μου,[10] οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν δοῦναι, ἀλλ' οἷς ἡτοίμασται." 41. Καὶ ἀκούσαντες οἱ δέκα ἤρξαντο ἀγανακτεῖν

d here only.

[1] εμπτυσουσιν in first place, μαστιγ. second, in ℵBCLΔ.

[2] μετα τρεις ημερας in ℵBCDLΔ.

[3] ℵBCDLΔ add αυτω.

[4] ℵABCLΔ add σε.

[5] For ποιησαι με B has με ποιησω. CD correct by omitting με, ALΔΣ by changing into infinitive with accusative as in T.R.

[6] σου εκ δεξιων in ℵBCLΔ.

[7] εξ αριστερων (without σου) in BLΔ.

[8] η in ℵBCDLΔ.

[9] μεν wanting in ℵBCLΔ. T.R. is a grammatical correction.

[10] η for και, and μου after ευων. omitted, in ℵBDLΔ. Besides these ACΣ al. omit second μου.

moment, producing together a high-strung state of mind: Peraea, John, baptism in the Jordan, at the beginning; Jerusalem, the priests, the cross, at the end! Filled with the varied feelings excited by these sacred recollections and tragic anticipations, He walks alone by preference, step and gesture revealing what is working within and inspiring awe — "muthig und entschlossen," Schanz; with "majesty and heroism," Morison; "tanto animo tantâque alacritate," Elsner; "more intrepidi ducis," Grotius. This picture of Jesus in advance on the way to Jerusalem is one of Mk.'s realisms.—Ver. 33. ὅτι ἰδού, etc.: the third prediction has for its specialties delivery to the Gentiles (τοῖς ἔθνεσι), and an exact specification of the indignities to be endured: mocking, spitting, scourging. Jesus had been thinking of these things before He spoke of them; hence the excitement of His manner.

Vv. 35-45. The sons of Zebedee (Mt. xx. 20-28), showing the comic side of the drama.—Ver. 35. In Mk., James and John speak for themselves: Διδάσκαλε θέλομεν, etc. In Mt. the mother speaks for them.—Ver. 36. τί θέλετέ με ποιήσω: this reading of B is accredited by its very grammatical peculiarity, two constructions being confused together; an accusative (με) followed, not as we expect by the infinitive, ποιῆσαι (T. R.), but by the subj. delib., ποιήσω.—Ver. 38. τὸ βάπτισμα: in Mk. there is a double symbolism for the Passion, a cup and a baptism; in Mt.'s true text only the former. The cup is an Old Testament emblem; the baptism not so obviously, yet it may rest on Ps. xlii. 7, lxix. 2, cxxiv. 4-5. The conception of Christian baptism as baptism into death is Pauline (Rom. vi.). — Ver. 40. ἡτοίμασται stands alone in Mk. without the reference to the Father, which is in Mt.—Ver. 42. οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν, those who pass for, are esteemed as, rulers: "quos gentes habent et agnoscunt" (Beza); "qui περὶ Ἰακώβου καὶ Ἰωάννου. 42. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς προσκαλεσάμενος αὐτοὺς[1] λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Οἴδατε ὅτι οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν τῶν ἐθνῶν κατακυριεύουσιν αὐτῶν· καὶ οἱ μεγάλοι αὐτῶν κατεξουσιάζουσιν αὐτῶν. 43. οὐχ οὕτω δὲ ἔσται[2] ἐν ὑμῖν· ἀλλ' ὃς ἐὰν θέλῃ γενέσθαι μέγας[3] ἐν ὑμῖν, ἔσται διάκονος ὑμῶν[3]· 44. καὶ ὃς ἂν θέλῃ ὑμῶν γενέσθαι[4] πρῶτος, ἔσται πάντων δοῦλος· 45. καὶ γὰρ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἦλθε διακονηθῆναι, ἀλλὰ διακονῆσαι, καὶ δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν."

46. Καὶ ἔρχονται εἰς Ἱεριχώ καὶ ἐκπορευομένου αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ Ἱεριχώ, καὶ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ὄχλου ἱκανοῦ, υἱὸς[5] Τιμαίου Βαρτίμαιος ὁ τυφλὸς ἐκάθητο παρὰ τὴν ὁδὸν προσαιτῶν.[5] 47. καὶ ἀκούσας ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ὁ Ναζωραῖός[6] ἐστιν, ἤρξατο κράζειν καὶ λέγειν, "Ὁ υἱὸς[7] Δαβίδ, Ἰησοῦ, ἐλέησόν με." 48. Καὶ ἐπετίμων αὐτῷ πολλοί, ἵνα σιωπήσῃ· ὁ δὲ πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἔκραζεν, "Υἱὲ Δαβίδ, ἐλέησόν με." 49. Καὶ στὰς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτὸν φωνηθῆναι[8]· καὶ φωνοῦσι τὸν τυφλόν, λέγοντες αὐτῷ, "Θάρσει· ἔγειραι,[9] φωνεῖ σε." 50. Ὁ δὲ ἀποβαλὼν τὸ ἱμάτιον αὐτοῦ ἀναστὰς[10] ἦλθε πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν·

[1] και προσκαλ. αυτους ο Ι. in ℵBCDLΔ. [2] εστιν in ℵBCDLΔ Lat. vet. Vulg.

[3] μεγας γεν. in ℵBCLΔ, also υμων διακ. [4] εν υμιν ειναι in ℵBCLΔ.

[5] For υιος . . . προσαιτων ℵBLΔ have ο υιος Τ. Β. τυφλος προσαιτης εκαθ. παρα την οδον (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] Ναζαρηνος in BLΔ. B places εστιν after Ιησους.

[7] υιε (for ο υ.) in ℵBCLΣ.

[8] φωνησατε αυτον in ℵBCLΔ changed in T.R. into the more commonplace αυτον φωνηθηναι.

[9] εγειρε in ℵABCDLΔΣ.

[10] A tame substitute for αναπηδησας in ℵBDLΔ, so characteristic of Mk.

honorem habent imperandi" (Grotius). Some, e.g., Palairet, regard δοκοῦντες as redundant, and take the phrase in Mk. as = Mt.'s οἱ ἄρχοντες. Kypke resolves it into οἱ ἐκ δόγματός τινος ἄρχοντες = "qui constituti sunt ut imperent".—Ver. 43. ἐστιν (W.H.), is; the "is" not of actual fact, but of the ideal state of things.—Ver. 45. Vide on Mt.

Vv. 46-52. Bartimaeus (Mt. xx. 29-34, Lk. xviii. 35-43).—Ver. 46. ἔρχονται, historical present for effect. Jericho an important place, and of more interest to the narrator; the last stage on the journey before arriving at Jerusalem (Weiss in Meyer).—ἐκπορευομένου α.: Jesus mentioned apart as the principal person, or as still going before, the disciples and the crowd mentioned also, as they have their part to play in the sequel, πορευομένων understood.—ὄχ. ἱκανοῦ: not implying that the crowd was of very moderate dimensions, but = a large crowd, as we say colloquially "pretty good" when we mean "very good". This use of ἱκανός probably belonged to the colloquial Greek of the period. Vide Kennedy, Sources of N. T. Greek, p. 79.—ὁ υἱὸς Τ. Β. Mk. knows the name, and gives both name, Bartimaeus, and interpretation, son of Timaeus.—Ver. 47. υἱὲ Δαβίδ: this in all three narratives the popular name for Messiah.—Ver. 49. φωνήσατε, φωνοῦσι, φωνεῖ: no attempt to avoid monotony out of regard to style. It is the appropriate word all through, to call in a loud voice, audible at a distance, in the open air (vide ix. 35).—θάρσει, ἔγειρε, φωνεῖ, courage, rise, He calls you; pithy, no superfluous words, just how they would speak.—Ver. 50. Graphic description of the beggar's eager response—mantle thrown off, jumping to his feet, he

51. καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[1] "Τί θέλεις ποιήσω σοί[2];" Ὁ δὲ τυφλὸς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ῥαββονί, ἵνα ἀναβλέψω." 52. Ὁ δὲ[3] Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ὕπαγε· ἡ πίστις σου σέσωκέ σε." καὶ εὐθέως ἀνέβλεψε, καὶ ἠκολούθει τῷ Ἰησοῦ[4] ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ.

XI. 1. ΚΑΙ ὅτε ἐγγίζουσιν εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ,[5] εἰς Βηθφαγὴ καὶ Βηθανίαν[6] πρὸς τὸ ὄρος τῶν Ἐλαιῶν, ἀποστέλλει δύο τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, 2. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ὑπάγετε εἰς τὴν κώμην τὴν κατέναντι ὑμῶν· καὶ εὐθέως εἰσπορευόμενοι εἰς αὐτὴν εὑρήσετε πῶλον δεδεμένον, ἐφ' ὃν οὐδεὶς[7] ἀνθρώπων κεκάθικε[8]· λύσαντες αὐτὸν ἀγάγετε.[9] 3. καὶ ἐάν τις ὑμῖν εἴπῃ, Τί ποιεῖτε τοῦτο; εἴπατε, Ὅτι[10] ὁ κύριος

[1] αυτω ο Ι. ειπεν in ℵBCDLΔ.

[2] τι σοι θελεις ποιησω in ℵBCLΔ, obviously preferable to the smooth reading in T.R.

[3] και ο Ι. in BLΔ Cop. (W.H.).

[4] αυτω for τω Ι. in ℵABCDLΔ al. Lat. vet. Vulg.

[5] Ιερουσαλημ is not used in Mk. The true form here is Ιεροσολυμα as in ℵBCDCΔΣ.

[6] D vet. Lat. Vulg. have simply και εις Βηθανιαν, which Tisch. adopts. The reading in T.R. is supported by ℵABCLΔΣ al.

[7] Add ουπω, following ουδεις in BLΔ; after ανθρωπων in ℵC, before ουδεις in ΚΠΣ (W.H. order 1, Tisch. 2).

[8] εκαθισεν in ℵBCLΔ.

[9] λυσατε α. και φερετε in ℵBCLΔ. The T.R. conforms to Lk.

[10] Omit οτι with BΔ vet. Lat.

comes, runs, to Jesus. Though blind he needs no guide (Lk. provides him with one); led by his ear.—Ver. 51. τί σοι θέλεις, etc.: what do you want: alms or sight?—ῥαββονί: more respectful than Rabbi (here and in John xx. 16).—ἵνα ἀναβλέψω: sight, of course, who would think of asking an alms of One who could open blind eyes!

CHAPTER XI. ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM. OTHER INCIDENTS. Vv. 1-11. The solemn entry (Mt. xxi. 1-11; Lk. xix. 29-44).—Ver. 1. It is first stated generally that they approach Jerusalem, then Bethphage and Bethany are named to define more exactly the whereabouts. Both villages named; partly because close together, partly because, while Bethphage was the larger and better known place, and therefore might have stood alone as an indication of locality, Bethany was the place where the colt was to be got.—Ver. 2. κατέναντι ὑ., opposite you. This adverb (from κατά ἔναντι) is not found in Greek authors, but occurs frequently in Sept.—ἐφ' ὃν οὐδεὶς οὔπ. ἀν. ἐκάθισεν: this point, that the colt had never been used, would seem of vital importance afterhand, from the Christian point of view, and one cannot wonder that it took a sure place in the tradition, as evinced by the narrative in Mk. followed by Lk. But it is permissible to regard this as an expansion of what Jesus actually said. The idea underlying is that for sacred purposes only unused animals may be employed (vide Numb. xix. 2, 1 Sam. vi. 7).—λύσατε, φέρετε: aorist and present; the former denoting a momentary act, the latter a process.—Ver. 3. ὁ κύριος α. χ. ἔχει: the Master hath need of him. Vide on this at Mt. xxi. 3.—καὶ εὐθὺς, etc.: and straightway He returneth him (the colt) again.—πάλιν, a well-attested reading, clearly implies this meaning, i.e., that Jesus bids His disciples promise the owner that He will return the colt without delay, after He has had His use of it. So without hesitation Weiss (in Meyer) and Holtzmann (H. C.). Meyer thinks this a paltry thing for Christ to say, and rejects πάλιν as an addition due to misunderstanding. Biassed by αὐτοῦ χρείαν ἔχει· καὶ εὐθέως αὐτὸν ἀποστελεῖ[1] ὧδε." 4. Ἀπῆλθον δέ,[2] καὶ εὗρον τὸν[3] πῶλον δεδεμένον πρὸς τὴν[3] θύραν ἔξω ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀμφόδου, καὶ λύουσιν αὐτόν. 5. καί τινες τῶν ἐκεῖ ἑστηκότων ἔλεγον αὐτοῖς, "Τί ποιεῖτε λύοντες τὸν πῶλον;" 6. Οἱ δὲ εἶπον αὐτοῖς καθὼς ἐνετείλατο[4] ὁ Ἰησοῦς· καὶ ἀφῆκαν αὐτούς. 7. καὶ ἤγαγον[5] τὸν πῶλον πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, καὶ ἐπέβαλον[6] αὐτῷ τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐπ' αὐτῷ.[7] 8. πολλοὶ δὲ[8] τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν ἔστρωσαν εἰς τὴν ὁδόν· ἄλλοι δὲ στοιβάδας[9] ἔκοπτον[10] ἐκ τῶν δένδρων, καὶ ἐστρώννυον εἰς τὴν ὁδόν.[10] 9. καὶ οἱ προάγοντες καὶ οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες ἔκραζον, λέγοντες,[11] "Ὡσαννά· εὐλογημένος ὁ

[1] αποστελλει in very many uncials. The most important various reading is παλιν after αποστελλει in ℵBC*DLΔ minusc. Orig.; doubtless a true reading, though omitted for harmonistic reasons in many copies. B places αυτον last, αποσ. παλιν α. (W.H. marg.).

[2] και απηλθον in ℵBLΔ.

[3] BDL omit τον before πωλον (ℵCΔ have it, Tisch.), and BLΔ omit την before θυραν (in ℵCD, Tisch.).

[4] ειπεν in ℵBCLΔ.

[5] φερουσιν instead of ηγαγον (from parall.) in ℵBLΔ.

[6] επιβαλλουσι in ℵBCDLΔ for επεβαλον, which conforms to ηγαγον.

[7] επ αυτον in ℵBCDLΔ.

[8] και πολλοι in ℵBCLΔ.

[9] στιβαδας in most uncials (ℵBDLΔ, etc.).

[10] For εκοπτον . . . οδον (cf. Mt.) ℵBLΔ have simply κοψαντες εκ των αγρων.

[11] Omit λεγοντες ℵBCLΔ.

the same sense of decorum—"below the dignity of the occasion and of the Speaker"—the Speaker's Comm. cherishes doubt as to πάλιν, sheltering itself behind the facts that, while the MSS. which insert "again" are generally more remarkable for omissions than additions, yet in this instance they lack the support of ancient versions and early Fathers. I do not feel the force of the argument from decorum. It judges Christ's action by a conventional standard. Why should not Jesus instruct His disciples to say "it will be returned without delay" as an inducement to lend it? Dignity! How much will have to go if that is to be the test of historicity! There was not only dignity but humiliation in the manner of entering Jerusalem: the need for the colt, the use of it, the fact that it had to be borrowed all enter as elements in the lowly state of the Son of Man. On the whole subject vide notes on Mt. This is another of Mk.'s realisms, which Mt.'s version obliterates. Field (Otium Nor.), often bold in his interpretations, here succumbs to the decorum argument, and is biassed by it against the reading πάλιν contained in so many important MSS. (vide above).—Ver. 4. ἀμφόδου (ἄμφοδον and -ος from ἀμφί and ὁδός, here only in N. T.), the road round the farmyard. In Jer. xvii. 27, Sept., it seems to denote some part of a town: "the palaces of Jerusalem" (R. V.).—Vv. 5-6. Mk. tells the story very circumstantially: how the people of the place challenged their action; how they repeated the message of Jesus; and the satisfactory result. Mt. (xxi. 6) is much more summary.—Ver. 8. στιβάδας (στιβάς from στείβω, to tread, hence anything trodden, such as straw, reeds, leaves, etc.; here only in N. T.); "layers of leaves," R. V., margin; or layers of branches (κλάδους, Mt.) obtained, as Mk. explains, by cutting from the fields (κόψαντες ἐκ τ. ἀγρῶν).—στοιβάς (στοιβάδας, T. R.) is probably a corrupt form of στιβάς. Hesychius defines στιβάς as a bed of rods and green grass and leaves (ἀπὸ ῥάβδων καὶ χλωρῶν χόρτων στρῶσις, καὶ φύλλων).—Ver. 9. οἱ προάγοντες, those going before; pro-ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου. 10. εὐλογημένη ἡ ἐρχομένη βασιλεία ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου[1] τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν Δαβίδ· Ὡσαννὰ ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις." 11. Καὶ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα ὁ Ἰησοῦς, καὶ[2] εἰς τὸ ἱερόν· καὶ περιβλεψάμενος πάντα, ὀψίας[3] ἤδη οὔσης τῆς ὥρας, ἐξῆλθεν εἰς Βηθανίαν μετὰ τῶν δώδεκα.

12. Καὶ τῇ ἐπαύριον ἐξελθόντων αὐτῶν ἀπὸ Βηθανίας, ἐπείνασε· 13. καὶ ἰδὼν συκῆν μακρόθεν,[4] ἔχουσαν φύλλα, ἦλθεν εἰ ἄρα εὑρήσει τι[5] ἐν αὐτῇ· καὶ ἐλθὼν ἐπ' αὐτήν, οὐδὲν εὗρεν εἰ μὴ φύλλα· οὐ[6] γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς[6] σύκων. 14. καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς[7] εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Μηκέτι ἐκ σοῦ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα[8] μηδεὶς καρπὸν φάγοι." Καὶ ἤκουον

[1] Omit this second εν ον. K. with ℵBCDLΔ. [2] Omit ο I. και with ℵBCDLΔ.

[3] ℵCLΔ, Orig., have οψε (Tisch., W.H., text, brackets), but BD and other uncials have οψιας. B omits της ωρας.

[4] απο μακ. in many uncials (ℵBD, etc.). [5] τι ευρησει in ℵBCLΔ.

[6] ο γαρ καιρος ουκ ην in ℵBCLΔ cop. syr.

[7] ο I. omit ℵBCDLΔ; also in ver. 15.

[8] εις τον αιωνα before εκ σου in ℵBCDLΔ.

bably people who had gone out from the city to meet the procession.—Ver. 11. εἰσῆλθεν, etc.: the procession now drops out of view and attention is fixed on the movements of Jesus. He enters Jerusalem, and especially the temple, and surveys all (περιβλεψάμενος πάντα) with keenly observant eye, on the outlook, like St. Paul at Athens, not for the picturesque, but for the moral and religious element. He noted the traffic going on within the sacred precincts, though He postponed action till the morrow. Holtzmann (H. C.) thinks that the περιβλεψάμενος πάντα implies that Jesus was a stranger to Jerusalem. But, as Weiss remarks (in Meyer), Mk. cannot have meant to suggest that, even if Jesus had never visited Jerusalem since the beginning of the public ministry.

Vv. 12-14. The fig tree on the way (Mt. xxi. 18-19).—Ver. 12 tells how Jesus coming from Bethany, where He had passed the night with the Twelve, felt hunger. This is surprising, considering that He probably spent the night in the house of hospitable friends. Had the sights in the temple killed sleep and appetite, so that He left Bethany without taking any food?—Ver. 13. εἰ ἄρα, if in the circumstances; leaves there, creating expectation.—εὑρήσει: future indicative; subjunctive, more regular.—ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς, etc., for it was not the season of figs. This in Mk. only. The proper season was June for the first-ripe figs. One may wonder, then, how Jesus could have any expectations. But had He? Victor Ant. and Euthy. viewed the hunger as feigned. It is more reasonable to suppose that the hope of finding figs on the tree was, if not feigned, at least extremely faint. He might have a shrewd guess how the fact was, and yet go up to the tree as one who had a right to expect figs where there was a rich foliage, with intent to utilise it for a parable, if He could not find fruit on it. In those last days the prophetic mood was on Jesus in a high degree, and His action would be only very partially understood by the Twelve.—Ver. 14. φάγοι: the optative of wishing with μὴ (μηκέτι), as in classic Greek (Burton, M. T., § 476). The optative is comparatively rare in the N. T.—ἤκουον: the disciples heard (what He said); they were not inobservant. His manner would arrest attention. The remark prepares for what is reported in ver. 20; hence the imperfect.

Vv. 15-19. Cleansing of the temple (Mt. xxi. 12-17, Lk. xix. 45-48). The state of things Jesus saw in the temple yesterday has been in His mind ever since: through the night watches in Bethany; in the morning, killing appetite; on the way, the key to His enigmatical behaviour towards the fig tree.—Ver. 15. εἰς τὸ ἱερόν, into the temple, that is, the forecourt, the court of the Gentiles.—τοὺς π. καὶ τοὺς ἀ., the sellers and the οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ. 15. Καὶ ἔρχονται εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα· καὶ εἰσελθὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν ἤρξατο ἐκβάλλειν τοὺς πωλοῦντας καὶ ἀγοράζοντας[1] ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ· καὶ τὰς τραπέζας τῶν κολλυβιστῶν, καὶ τὰς καθέδρας τῶν πωλούντων τὰς περιστερὰς κατέστρεψε· 16. καὶ οὐκ ἤφιεν ἵνα τις διενέγκῃ σκεῦος διὰ τοῦ ἱεροῦ. 17. καὶ ἐδίδασκε, λέγων[2] αὐτοῖς, "Οὐ γέγραπται, 'Ὅτι ὁ οἶκός μου οἶκος προσευχῆς κληθήσεται πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν'; ὑμεῖς δὲ ἐποιήσατε[3] αὐτὸν σπήλαιον λῃστῶν." 18. Καὶ ἤκουσαν οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς,[4] καὶ ἐζήτουν πῶς αὐτὸν ἀπολέσουσιν[5]· ἐφοβοῦντο γὰρ αὐτόν, ὅτι πᾶς[6] ὁ ὄχλος ἐξεπλήσσετο ἐπὶ τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ.

19. Καὶ ὅτε[7] ὀψὲ ἐγένετο, ἐξεπορεύετο[8] ἔξω τῆς πόλεως. 20. Καὶ πρωῒ παραπορευόμενοι,[9] εἶδον τὴν συκῆν ἐξηραμμένην ἐκ ῥιζῶν. 21. καὶ ἀναμνησθεὶς ὁ Πέτρος λέγει αὐτῷ, "Ῥαββί, ἴδε, ἡ συκῆ ἣν

[1] τους before αγορ. in ℵBCL al.
[2] For λεγων ℵBCLΔ have και ελεγε. B omits αυτοις.
[3] πεποιηκατε in BLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).
[4] αρχ. before γραμ. in ℵBCDLΔ al.
[5] απολεσωσιν in ℵABCDL, etc.
[6] πας γαρ in ℵBCΔ.
[7] οταν in ℵBCLΔ.
[8] BΔ have εξεπορευοντο (W.H., text, brackets).
[9] παραπ. πρωι in ℵBCDLΔ.

buyers: article before both (not so in Mt.), both put in the pillory as alike evil in their practice.—Ver. 16. ἤφιεν: vide i. 34. The statement that Jesus did not allow any one to carry anything (σκεῦος, Lk. viii. 16) through the temple court is peculiar to Mk. It does not point to any attempt at violent prohibition, but simply to His feeling as to the sacredness of the place. He could not bear to see the temple court made a bypath or short cut, not to speak of the graver abominations of the mercenary traffic He had sternly interrupted. In this feeling Jesus was at one with the Rabbis, at least in their theory. "What reverence is due to the temple? That no one go into the mountain of the house (the court of the Gentiles) with his staff, shoes, purse, or dust on his feet. Let no one make a crossing through it, or degrade it into a place of spitting" (Babyl. Jevamoth, in Lightfoot, ad loc.).—Ver. 17. ἐδίδασκε covers more than what He said just then, pointing to a course of teaching (cf. ver. 18 and Lk. xix. 47). Here again we note that while Mt. speaks of a healing ministry in the temple (xxi. 14) Mk. gives prominence to teaching. Yet Mt. gives a far fuller report of the words spoken by Jesus during the last week.—πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, to all the Gentiles, as in Is. lvi. 7, omitted in the parallel; very suitable in view of the fact that the traffic went on in the court of the Gentiles. A foreshadowing of Christian universalism.—πεποιήκατε, ye have made it and it now is.—Ver. 18. πῶς, the purpose to get rid of Jesus fixed, but the how puzzling because of the esteem in which He was held.—Ver. 19. ὅταν (ὅτε, T.R.) implies repetition of the action. We have here ἄν with the indicative instead of the optative without ἄν as in the classics. Field (Ot. Nor.) regards ὅταν ὀψὲ ἐγένετο as a solecism due probably to Mk. himself (as in iii. 11, ὅταν ἐθεώρουν), and holds that the connection in Mk.'s narrative is decidedly in favour of a single action instead of, as in Lk., a daily practice.

Vv. 20-25. The withered fig tree and relative conversation (Mk. xxi. 20-22).—Ver. 20. παραπορευόμενοι, passing by the fig tree (on the way to Jerusalem next morning).—πρωῒ: the position of this word after παραπ., instead of before as in T.R., is important. It gives it emphasis as suggesting that it was in the clear morning light that they noticed the state of the tree. It might have been in the same condition the previous evening, but it would be dark when they passed the spot.—Ver. 21. ἀναμνησθεὶς, remembering (what the Master had said the previous morning).—ὁ Πέτρος:

κατηράσω ἐξήρανται." 22. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς Ἰησοῦς λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ἔχετε πίστιν Θεοῦ. 23. ἀμὴν γὰρ[1] λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ὃς ἂν εἴπῃ τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ, Ἄρθητι, καὶ βλήθητι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ μὴ διακριθῇ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ πιστεύσῃ ὅτι ἃ λέγει[2] γίνεται· ἔσται αὐτῷ ὃ ἐὰν εἴπῃ.[3] 24. διὰ τοῦτο λέγω ὑμῖν, Πάντα ὅσα ἂν προσευχόμενοι[4] αἰτεῖσθε, πιστεύετε ὅτι λαμβάνετε,[5] καὶ ἔσται ὑμῖν. 25. Καὶ ὅταν στήκητε[6] προσευχόμενοι, ἀφίετε εἴ τι ἔχετε κατά τινος· ἵνα καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς ἀφῇ ὑμῖν τὰ παραπτώματα ὑμῶν. 26. εἰ δὲ ὑμεῖς οὐκ ἀφίετε, οὐδὲ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς ἀφήσει τὰ παραπτώματα ὑμῶν." [7]

27. ΚΑΙ ἔρχονται πάλιν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα· καὶ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ περιπατοῦντος αὐτοῦ, ἔρχονται πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι, 28. καὶ λέγουσιν[8] αὐτῷ, "Ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ταῦτα ποιεῖς; καὶ[9] τίς σοι τὴν ἐξουσίαν ταύτην ἔδωκεν,[10] ἵνα ταῦτα

[1] γαρ omitted in ℵBD.

[2] For πιστευσῃ οτι α λεγει ℵBLΔ have πιστευῃ οτι ο λαλει (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] Omit ο εαν ειπῃ ℵBCDLΔ.

[4] For οσα αν προσευχομενοι ℵBCDLΔ have οσα προσευχεσθε και (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] ελαβετε in ℵBCLΔ. T.R. is a correction.

[6] στηκετε in CDL (Tisch., W.H.), but B has στηκητε.

[7] Ver. 26 is omitted in ℵBLΔ (Tisch., W.H.). Weiss thinks it has fallen out by similar ending.

[8] ℵBCLΔ have ελεγον. λεγουσι conforms to ερχονται in ver. 27.

[9] η in ℵBLΔ.

[10] εδωκεν before την εξ. τ. in ℵBCLΔ.

spokesman as usual; the disciples generally in Mt.—Ver. 22. ἔχετε πίστιν, have faith. The thoughts of Jesus here take a turn in a different direction to what we should have expected. We look for explanations as to the real meaning of an apparently unreasonable action, the cursing of a fig tree. Instead, He turns aside to the subject of the faith necessary to perform miraculous actions. Can it be that the tradition is at fault here, connecting genuine words of the Master about faith and prayer with a comparatively unsuitable occasion? Certainly much of what is given here is found in other connections—ver. 23 in Mt. xvii. 20, Lk. xvii. 6; ver. 24 in Mt. vii. 7, Lk. xi. 9; ver. 25 in Mt. xviii. 35; of course in somewhat altered form. Mk. seems here to make room for some important words of our Lord, as if to compensate for neglect of the didache which he knew to be an important feature in His ministry, doing this, however, as Meyer remarks, by way of thoughtful redaction, not by mere random insertion.—πίστιν Θεοῦ, faith in God, genitive objective as in Rom. iii. 22 and Heb. vi. 2 (βαπτισμῶν διδαχὴν).—Ver. 24. ἐλάβετε: this reading (ℵBCLΔ) Fritzsche pronounces absurd. But its very difficulty as compared with λαμβάνετε (T.R.) guarantees its genuineness. And it is not unintelligible if, with Meyer, we take the aorist as referring to the divine purpose, or even as the aorist of immediate consequence, as in John xv. 6 (ἐβλήθη). So De Wette, vide Winer, sec. xl. 5 b.

Vv. 27-33. By what authority? (Mt. xxi. 23-27, Lk. xx. 1-8).—Ver. 27. πάλιν, again, for the third time: on the day of arrival, on the day of the temple cleansing, and on this day, the event of which is the questioning as to authority.—περιπατοῦντος αὐτοῦ, while He is walking about, genitive absolute, instead of accusative governed by πρὸς; probably simply descriptive (Schanz) and not implying anything offensive in manner—walking as if He were Lord of the place (Kloster.); nor, on the other hand, meant ποιῇς;" 29. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἀποκριθεὶς[1] εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ἐπερωτήσω ὑμᾶς κἀγὼ[2] ἕνα λόγον, καὶ ἀποκρίθητέ μοι, καὶ ἐρῶ ὑμῖν ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ταῦτα ποιῶ. 30. Τὸ βάπτισμα Ἰωάννου[3] ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἦν, ἢ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων; ἀποκρίθητέ μοι." 31. Καὶ ἐλογίζοντο[4] πρὸς ἑαυτούς, λέγοντες, "Ἐὰν εἴπωμεν, Ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, ἐρεῖ, Διατί οὖν οὐκ ἐπιστεύσατε αὐτῷ; 32. ἀλλ' ἐὰν[5] εἴπωμεν, Ἐξ ἀνθρώπων," ἐφοβοῦντο τὸν λαόν,[6] ἅπαντες γὰρ εἶχον τὸν Ἰωάννην, ὅτι ὄντως[7] προφήτης ἦν. 33. καὶ ἀποκριθέντες λέγουσι τῷ Ἰησοῦ,[8] "Οὐκ οἴδαμεν." Καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀποκριθεὶς[9] λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Οὐδὲ ἐγὼ λέγω ὑμῖν ἐν ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ ταῦτα ποιῶ."

XII. 1. ΚΑΙ ἤρξατο αὐτοῖς ἐν παραβολαῖς λέγειν,[10] "Ἀμπελῶνα ἐφύτευσεν ἄνθρωπος, καὶ περιέθηκε φραγμόν, καὶ ὤρυξεν ὑπολήνιον, καὶ ᾠκοδόμησε πύργον, καὶ ἐξέδοτο[11] αὐτὸν γεωργοῖς, καὶ ἀπεδήμησε. 2. καὶ ἀπέστειλε πρὸς τοὺς γεωργοὺς τῷ καιρῷ δοῦλον, ἵνα παρὰ

[1] Omit αποκριθεις ℵBCLΔ 33. [2] καγω (from parall.) omitted in BCLΔ.
[3] το before I. in ℵBCDLΔ 33. [4] διελογιζοντο in BCDLΔ.
[5] Omit εαν ℵABCLΔ. Vide below. [6] οχλον in ℵBC (W.H.).
[7] οντως οτι in BCL. [8] τω I. λεγουσι in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[9] Omit αποκριθεις ℵBCLΔ 33. [10] λαλειν in ℵBLΔ.
[11] εξεδετο in ℵABCL, changed into the more correct εξεδοτο (T.R.).

to convey the idea that Jesus was giving no fresh cause of offence, simply walking about (Weiss).—Ver. 28. ἵνα ταῦτα ποιῇς: ἵνα with subjunctive after ἐξουσίαν instead of infinitive found in ii. 10, iii. 15.—Ver. 29. The grammatical structure of this sentence, compared with that in Mt. xxi. 24, is crude—καὶ ἀποκρίθητέ μοι instead of ὃν ἐὰν εἴπητέ μοι. It is colloquial grammar, the easy-going grammar of popular conversation.—ἕνα λόγον, vide at Mt. xxi. 24.—Ver. 30. ἀποκρίθητέ μοι, answer me; spoken in the confident tone of one who knows they cannot and will not try. —Vv. 31-32 give their inward thoughts as divined by Jesus. Their spoken answer was a simple οὐκ οἴδαμεν (ver. 33).—Ver. 32. ἀλλὰ εἴπωμεν, ἐξ ἀνθρώπων; = but suppose we say, from men? —ἐφοβοῦντο τὸν ὄχλον. Here Mk. thinks for them instead of letting them think for themselves as in Mt. (ver. 26, φοβούμεθα) = —they were afraid of the multitude.—ἅπαντες γὰρ, etc.: here again the construction is somewhat crude—Ἰωάννην by attraction, object of the verb εἶχον instead of the subject of ἦν, and ὄντως by trajection separated from the verb it qualifies, ἦν, giving this sense: for all held John truly that he was a prophet = for all held that John was indeed a prophet.

CHAPTER XII. A PARABLE AND SUNDRY CAPTIOUS QUESTIONS.—Vv. 1-12. Parable of the wicked vinedressers (Mt. xxi. 33-46, Lk. xx. 9-19).—Ver. 1. ἐν παραβολαῖς: the plural may be used simply because there are more parables than one even in Mk., the main one and that of the Rejected Stone (vv. 10, 11), but it is more probably generic = in parabolic style (Meyer, Schanz, Holtz., H. C.). Jesus resumed (ἤρξατο) this style because the circumstances called forth the parabolic mood, that of one "whose heart is chilled, and whose spirit is saddened by a sense of loneliness, and who, retiring within himself, by a process of reflection, frames for his thoughts forms which half conceal, half reveal them"—The Parabolic Teaching of Christ, p. 20.—ἀμπελῶνα: a vineyard, the theme suitably named first.—ἄμπελος is the usual word in Greek authors, but Kypke cites some instances of ἀμπελὼν in late authors.—ὑπολήνιον (here only), the under vat of a wine press, into which the juices trampled out in the ληνὸς flowed.—ἐξέδετο (W.H.), a defective form, as if from δίδω. Cf. ἀπέδετο, Heb. xii. 16.—Ver. 2. τῷ καιρῷ: at τῶν γεωργῶν λάβῃ ἀπὸ τοῦ καρποῦ[1] τοῦ ἀμπελῶνος· 3. οἱ δὲ[2] λαβόντες αὐτὸν ἔδειραν, καὶ ἀπέστειλαν κενόν. 4. καὶ πάλιν ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτοὺς ἄλλον δοῦλον· κἀκεῖνον λιθοβολήσαντες[3] ἐκεφαλαίωσαν, καὶ ἀπέστειλαν ἠτιμωμένον.[3] 5. καὶ πάλιν[4] ἄλλον ἀπέστειλε· κἀκεῖνον ἀπέκτειναν· καὶ πολλοὺς ἄλλους, τοὺς[5] μὲν δέροντες, τοὺς[5] δὲ ἀποκτείνοντες. 6. ἔτι[6] οὖν ἕνα υἱὸν ἔχων ἀγαπητὸν αὐτοῦ, ἀπέστειλε καὶ αὐτὸν πρὸς αὐτοὺς ἔσχατον,[6] λέγων, Ὅτι ἐντραπήσονται τὸν υἱόν μου. 7. ἐκεῖνοι δὲ οἱ γεωργοὶ εἶπον πρὸς ἑαυτούς,[7] Ὅτι οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ κληρονόμος· δεῦτε, ἀποκτείνωμεν αὐτόν, καὶ ἡμῶν ἔσται ἡ κληρονομία. 8. καὶ λαβόντες αὐτὸν ἀπέκτειναν, καὶ ἐξέβαλον[8] ἔξω τοῦ ἀμπελῶνος. 9. τί οὖν[9] ποιήσει ὁ κύριος τοῦ ἀμπελῶνος; ἐλεύσεται καὶ ἀπολέσει τοὺς γεωργούς, καὶ δώσει τὸν ἀμπελῶνα ἄλλοις. 10. Οὐδὲ τὴν γραφὴν ταύτην ἀνέγνωτε; 'Λίθον, ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν γωνίας. 11. παρὰ Κυρίου ἐγένετο αὕτη, καὶ ἔστι

[1] των καρπων in ℵBCLΔ 33. [2] και for οι δε in ℵBDLΔ 33.

[3] ℵBDLΔ 33 omit λιθοβολησαντες; ℵBL have εκεφαλιωσαν; and for και απεστειλαν ητιμωμενον, ℵBL have και ητιμασαν (so also DΔ, but with varying spelling of verb). λιθοβολησαντες comes from Mt.

[4] Omit παλιν ℵBCDLΔ 33.

[5] ους in both places ℵBLΔ. D has ους in first, αλλους in second place.

[6] For ετι ουν . . . εσχατον read ετι ενα ειχεν υιον αγαπ. απεστειλεν αυτον εσχατον προς αυτους with ℵBLΔ.

[7] προς εαυ. ειπαν in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[8] ℵBC place αυτον after απεκτειναν and insert another αυτον after εξεβαλον.

[9] Omit ουν BL cop.

the season of fruit, or at the time agreed on; the two practically coincident.—δοῦλον: a servant, one at a time, three in succession, then many grouped together, and finally the son. In Mt. first one set of servants are sent, then a larger number, then the son.—ἀπὸ τῶν καρπῶν: a part of the fruits, rent paid in kind, a share of the crop.—Ver. 4. ἐκεφαλί (αί, T.R.) ωσαν: ought to mean, summed up (κεφάλαιον, Heb. viii. 1 = the crown of what has been spoken), but generally taken to mean "smote on the head" ("in capite vulneraverunt," Vulg.). A "veritable solecism," Meyer ("Mk. confounded κεφαλαιόω with κεφαλίζω"). Field says: "We can only conjecture that the evangelist adopted ἐκεφαλαίωσαν, a known word in an unknown sense, in preference to ἐκεφάλωσαν, of which both sound and sense were unknown".—Ver. 5. πολλοὺς ἄλλους, many others. The construction is very loose. We naturally think of πολ. ἄλ. as depending on ἀπέστειλε = he sent many others, and possibly that was really what the evangelist had in his mind, though the following participles, δέροντες ἀποκτέννοντες, suggest a verb, having for its subject the agents these participles refer to = they maltreated many others, beating some and killing some. So most recent writers. Vide Buttmann, N. T. G., p. 293. Elsner suggests ἀπεσταλμένους after πολλ. ἄλλ. = and many others, sent, they either beat or slew.—Ver. 8. Mk. says: the son and heir they killed and cast out of the vineyard. Mt. and Lk. more naturally, as it seems: they cast out and killed. We must understand Mk. to mean cast out dead (Meyer, Weiss, Schanz), or with Grotius we must take καὶ ἐξέβαλον as = ἐκβληθέντα.—Ver. 11. παρὰ κυρίου, etc., from or through the Lord it (the rejected stone) became this very thing (αὕτη), viz., the head of the corner—κεφαλὴ γωνίας.—Ver. 12. καὶ ἐφοβήθαυμαστὴ ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς ἡμῶν.'" 12. Καὶ ἐζήτουν αὐτὸν κρατῆσαι, καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν τὸν ὄχλον· ἔγνωσαν γὰρ ὅτι πρὸς αὐτοὺς τὴν παραβολὴν εἶπε· καὶ ἀφέντες αὐτὸν ἀπῆλθον.

13. Καὶ ἀποστέλλουσι πρὸς αὐτόν τινας τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ τῶν Ἡρωδιανῶν, ἵνα αὐτὸν ἀγρεύσωσι λόγῳ. 14. οἱ δὲ[1] ἐλθόντες λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, "Διδάσκαλε, οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἀληθὴς εἶ, καὶ οὐ μέλει σοι περὶ οὐδενός· οὐ γὰρ βλέπεις εἰς πρόσωπον ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ἐπ' ἀληθείας τὴν ὁδὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ διδάσκεις. ἔξεστι κῆνσον Καίσαρι δοῦναι[2] ἢ οὔ; δῶμεν, ἢ μὴ δῶμεν;" 15. Ὁ δὲ εἰδὼς αὐτῶν τὴν ὑπόκρισιν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τί με πειράζετε; φέρετέ μοι δηνάριον, ἵνα ἴδω." 16. Οἱ δὲ ἤνεγκαν. Καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Τίνος ἡ εἰκὼν αὕτη καὶ ἡ ἐπιγραφή;" Οἱ δὲ εἶπον αὐτῷ, "Καίσαρος." 17. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[3] "Ἀπόδοτε τὰ Καίσαρος[4] Καίσαρι, καὶ τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ τῷ Θεῷ." Καὶ ἐθαύμασαν[5] ἐπ' αὐτῷ.

18. Καὶ ἔρχονται Σαδδουκαῖοι πρὸς αὐτόν, οἵτινες λέγουσιν

[1] και for οι δε in ℵBCDLΔ 33.

[2] δουναι before κηνσον in ℵBCLΔ. For κηνσον D has επικαιφαλαιον.

[3] For και αποκ. . . . αυτοις B has simply ο δε Ι. ειπεν.

[4] τα Κ. αποδοτε Κ. in ℵBCLΔ. T.R. conforms to Mt.

[5] εξεθαυμασαν in ℵB. T.R. = Mt.

θησαν: καὶ is to all intents adversative here, though grammarians deny that it is ever so used (vide Winer, sec. liii. 3 b) = they sought to lay hold of Him, but they feared the people.—ἔγνωσαν refers to the Synedrists (Weiss, Holtz.), not to the ὄχλος (Meyer). It gives a reason at once for their desire to lay hold of Jesus, and for their fear of the people. They must be careful so to act as not to appear to take the parable to themselves, while they really did so.

Vv. 13-17. Tribute to Caesar (Mt. xxii. 15-22, Lk. xx. 20-26).—Ver. 13. τινὰς: according to Mt. the representatives of the Pharisees were disciples, not masters; a cunning device in itself. Vide on Mt. xxii. 16.—ἀγρεύσωσι (here only in N.T.), that they might hunt or catch Him, like a wild animal. Mt.'s expression, παγιδεύσωσι, equally graphic. Lk. avoids both.—λόγῳ: either, their question, or His reply; the one involves the other.—Ver. 14. The flattering speech is differently and more logically (Schanz) given in Mt. Vide notes there on the virtues specified.—ἔξεστιν, etc.: the question now put, and in two forms in Mk. First, as in Mt., is it lawful, etc.; second, in the added words, δῶμεν ἢ μὴ δῶμεν; These have been distinguished as the theoretical and the practical form of the question respectively (Meyer, Weiss, Schanz), but there is no real difference. Yet it is not idle repetition. The second question gives urgency to the matter. They speak as men who press for an answer for their guidance (Holtz., H. C.).—Ver. 15. δηνάριον: instead of Mt.'s νόμισμα τοῦ κήνσου; as a matter of fact the denarius was the coin of the tribute.—ἵνα ἴδω, that I may see: as if He needed to study the matter, a touch of humour. The question was already settled by the existence of a coin with Caesar's image on it. This verb and the next, ἤνεγκαν, are without object; laconic style.—Ver. 17. Christ's reply is given here very tersely = the things of Caesar render to Caesar, and those of God to God.—ἐξεθαύμαζον: the compound, in place of Mt.'s simple verb, suggests the idea of excessive astonishment, though we must always allow for the tendency in late Greek to use compounds. Here only in N. T., occasionally in Sept.

Vv. 18-27. The resurrection question (Mt. xxii. 23-33, Lk. xx. 27-29).—Ver. 19. The case is awkwardly stated here as compared with Mt., though Lk. retains the awkwardness = if the brother of any ἀνάστασιν μὴ εἶναι· καὶ ἐπηρώτησαν[1] αὐτόν, λέγοντες, 19. "Διδάσκαλε, Μωσῆς ἔγραψεν ἡμῖν, ὅτι ἐάν τινος ἀδελφὸς ἀποθάνῃ, καὶ καταλίπῃ γυναῖκα, καὶ τέκνα μὴ ἀφῇ,[2] ἵνα λάβῃ ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ,[3] καὶ ἐξαναστήσῃ σπέρμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ· 20. ἑπτὰ ἀδελφοὶ ἦσαν· καὶ ὁ πρῶτος ἔλαβε γυναῖκα, καὶ ἀποθνήσκων οὐκ ἀφῆκε σπέρμα· 21. καὶ ὁ δεύτερος ἔλαβεν αὐτήν, καὶ ἀπέθανε, καὶ οὐδὲ αὐτὸς ἀφῆκε σπέρμα[4]· καὶ ὁ τρίτος ὡσαύτως· 22. καὶ[5] ἔλαβον αὐτὴν οἱ ἑπτά, καὶ οὐκ ἀφῆκαν σπέρμα.[5] ἐσχάτη[6] πάντων ἀπέθανε καὶ ἡ γυνή.[6] 23. ἐν τῇ οὖν[7] ἀναστάσει, ὅταν ἀναστῶσι,[8] τίνος αὐτῶν ἔσται γυνή; οἱ γὰρ ἑπτὰ ἔσχον αὐτὴν γυναῖκα." 24. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς,[9] "Οὐ διὰ τοῦτο πλανᾶσθε, μὴ εἰδότες τὰς γραφάς, μηδὲ τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ Θεοῦ; 25. ὅταν γὰρ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῶσιν, οὔτε γαμοῦσιν, οὔτε γαμίσκονται,[10] ἀλλ' εἰσὶν ὡς ἄγγελοι οἱ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. 26. περὶ δὲ τῶν νεκρῶν, ὅτι ἐγείρονται, οὐκ ἀνέγνωτε ἐν τῇ βίβλῳ Μωσέως, ἐπὶ τῆς[11] βάτου, ὡς[12] εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ Θεός, λέγων, 'Ἐγὼ ὁ Θεὸς Ἀβραάμ, καὶ

[1] επηρωτων in ℵBCDLΔ 33. T.R. = parall.

[2] μη αφη τεκνον in BLΔ.

[3] Omit αυτου ℵBCLΔ.

[4] For και ουδε . . . σπερμα ℵBCLΔ 33 have μη καταλιπων σ.

[5] For και ελαβον . . . σπερμα ℵBCLΔ 33 have και οι επτα ουκ αφηκαν σπερμα.

[6] For εσχατη . . . γυνη read with ℵBCLΔ 33 εσχατον και η γυνη απεθανεν.

[7] Omit ουν ℵBCLΔ.

[8] The oldest uncials omit οταν αναστωσι, which may, as Weiss suggests, have fallen out by similar ending (αναστασει) (Tisch. inserts, W.H. omit).

[9] For και . . . αυτοις read εφη αυτοις ο Ι. with ℵBCLΔ 33.

[10] γαμιζονται in ℵBCLΔ (γαμιζουσι D).

[11] του in ℵABCLΔ al. της in D (= Lk.).

[12] πως in ℵBCLΔ. ως in D, al.

one die, and leave a wife, and leave not children, let his (the brother's) brother take his wife and raise up seed to his brother. Mk. avoids the word ἐπιγαμβρεύσει (in Mt.).—Ver. 20: abrupt statement of the case, without connecting particle, and ἑπτὰ placed first for emphasis = seven brothers there were (in a case supposed, or pretendedly real, παρ' ἡμῖν, Mt.).—Ver. 23. τίνος αὐτῶν, etc., of which of them shall she be the wife? (γυνή, without the article, vide notes on Mt.).—Ver. 24. οὐ πλανᾶσθε, do ye not err? not weaker but stronger than a positive assertion: "pro vehementi affirmatione," Grotius.—διὰ τοῦτο usually refers to something going before, and it may do so here, pointing to their question as involving ignorant presuppositions regarding the future state, an ignorance due, in turn, to ignorance of Scripture teaching and the power of God. But it is more natural to connect it with the following clause, as in cases when the expression precedes ὅτι, ἵνα, ὅταν, etc., for μὴ εἰδότες is = ὅτι οὐκ οἴδατε. So De Wette and others, vide Winer, sec. xxiii. 5.—Ver. 26. ἐν τῇ βίβλῳ Μ.: a general reference to the Pentateuch, the following phrase, ἐπὶ τοῦ βάτου, supplying a more definite reference to the exact place in the book, the section relating to the bush. "At the bush," i.e., Ex. iii., similarly reference might be made to Ex. xv., by the title: "at the song of Moses".—βάτος is masculine here according to the best reading; feminine in Lk. xx. 37. The feminine is Hellenistic, the masculine Attic. Vide Thayer's Grimm. The word occurs in Aristoὁ[1] Θεὸς Ἰσαάκ, καὶ ὁ[1] Θεὸς Ἰακώβ'; 27. Οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ[2] Θεὸς νεκρῶν, ἀλλὰ Θεὸς[3] ζώντων· ὑμεῖς οὖν[4] πολὺ πλανᾶσθε."

28. Καὶ προσελθὼν εἷς τῶν γραμματέων, ἀκούσας αὐτῶν συζητούντων, εἰδὼς ὅτι καλῶς αὐτοῖς ἀπεκρίθη,[5] ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτόν, "Ποία ἐστὶ πρώτη πασῶν ἐντολή[6];" 29. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῷ,[7] "Ὅτι πρώτη πασῶν τῶν ἐντολῶν,[8] 'Ἄκουε, Ἰσραήλ· Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν Κύριος εἷς ἐστί. 30. καὶ ἀγαπήσεις Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας σου καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ψυχῆς σου, καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς διανοίας σου, καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ἰσχύος σου.' αὕτη πρώτη ἐντολή.[9] 31. καὶ δευτέρα ὁμοία αὕτη,[10] 'Ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς σεαυτόν.'

[1] BD omit the article in these two places.
[2] BDLΔ omit ο, which has been introduced through θεος being taken as subject.
[3] Omit θεος ℵABCDΔΣ.
[4] ℵBCLΔ K cop. omit υμεις ουν. Vide below.
[5] απεκριθη αυτοις in ℵBCLΔ 33.
[6] εντολη πρωτη παντων in ℵBCLΔ. T.R. is a grammatical correction.
[7] απεκριθη ο Ι. in ℵBLΔ 33.
[8] For οτι . . . εντολων read with ℵBLΔ οτι πρωτη εστι.
[9] Omit αυτη π. εν. (a gloss from ver. 28) with ℵBLΔ.
[10] For και . . . αυτη BLΔ have simply δευτερα αυτη (Tisch., W.H.).

phanes and in the N. T.; possibly colloquial (Kennedy, Sources of N.T.G., p. 78).—Ver. 27. πολὺ πλανᾶσθε, much ye err. This new and final assertion of ignorance is very impressive; severe, but kindly; much weakened by adding ὑμεῖς οὖν.

Vv. 28-34. The great commandment (Mt. xxii. 34-40). The permanent value of this section lies in the answer of Jesus to the question put to Him, which is substantially the same in both Mt. and Mk. The accounts vary in regard to the motive of the questioner. In Mt. he comes to tempt, in Mk. in hope of getting confirmation in a new way of thinking on the subject, similar to that of the man in quest of eternal life—that which put the ethical above the ritual. No anxious attempt should be made to remove the discrepancy. — Ver. 28. προσελθών, ἀκούσας, εἰδὼς: the second and third of these three participles may be viewed as the ground of the first = one of the scribes, having heard them disputing, and being conscious that He (Jesus) answered them well, approached and asked Him, etc.—ποία, what sort of; it is a question, not of an individual commandment, but of characteristic quality. The questioner, as conceived by Mk., probably had in view the distinction between ritual and ethical, or positive and moral. The prevalent tendency was to attach special importance to the positive, and to find the great matters of the law in circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, the rules respecting phylacteries, etc. (Lightfoot). The opposite tendency, to emphasise the ethical, was not unrepresented, especially in the school of Hillel, which taught that the love of our neighbour is the kernel of the law. The questioner, as he appears in Mk., leant to this side.—Ver. 29. ἄκουε, Ἰσραήλ, etc.: this monotheistic preface to the great commandment is not given by Mt. Possibly Mk. has added it by way of making the quotation complete, but more probably Jesus Himself quoted it to suggest that duty, like God, was one, in opposition to the prevailing habit of viewing duty as consisting in isolated precepts. Mt. compensates for the omission by preserving the reflection: "On these two commandments hangeth the whole law and the prophets". In Mk. the bond of unity is God; in Mt. love.—Ver. 30. Heart, soul, mind, strength (ἰσχύος); in Mt.: heart, soul, mind; in Lk. (x. 27): heart, soul, strength, mind; in Deut. (vi. 4): heart, soul, strength (δυνάμεως); all varied ways of saying "to the uttermost degree" = "all that is within";

Μείζων τούτων ἄλλη ἐντολὴ οὐκ ἔστι." 32. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ γραμματεύς, "Καλῶς, διδάσκαλε, ἐπ' ἀληθείας εἶπας, ὅτι εἷς ἐστι Θεός,[1] καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλος πλὴν αὐτοῦ. 33. καὶ τὸ ἀγαπᾷν αὐτὸν ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας, καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς συνέσεως, καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ψυχῆς,[2] καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ἰσχύος, καὶ τὸ ἀγαπᾷν τὸν πλησίον ὡς ἑαυτόν, πλεῖόν[3] ἐστι πάντων τῶν ὁλοκαυτωμάτων καὶ τῶν θυσιῶν." 34. Καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἰδὼν αὐτόν, ὅτι νουνεχῶς ἀπεκρίθη, εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Οὐ μακρὰν εἶ ἀπὸ τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ." Καὶ οὐδεὶς οὐκέτι ἐτόλμα αὐτὸν ἐπερωτῆσαι.

35. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἔλεγε, διδάσκων ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, "Πῶς λέγουσιν οἱ γραμματεῖς, ὅτι ὁ Χριστὸς υἱός ἐστι Δαβίδ[4]; 36. αὐτὸς γὰρ[5] Δαβὶδ εἶπεν ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι τῷ Ἁγίῳ, 'Εἶπεν ὁ Κύριος τῷ κυρίῳ μου, Κάθου[6] ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, ἕως ἂν θῶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς σου ὑποπόδιον[7] τῶν ποδῶν σου.' 37. Αὐτὸς οὖν[8] Δαβὶδ λέγει αὐτὸν κύριον· καὶ πόθεν υἱὸς αὐτοῦ ἐστι[9];" Καὶ ὁ πολὺς ὄχλος ἤκουεν αὐτοῦ ἡδέως.

[1] ℵABLΔΣ al. omit θεος.
[2] Omit this clause imported from ver. 30, and found in ADΣ al.
[3] περισσοτερον in ℵBLΔ 33.
[4] Δαβιδ before εστιν in ℵBDL.
[5] ℵBLΔ omit γαρ.
[6] καθισον in B (Trg., W.H., marg.).
[7] υποκατω in BD sah. cop.
[8] ℵBLΔ omit ουν.
[9] αυτου εστιν υιος in BL.

and with the full potency of that "all".—Ver. 32. καλῶς, ἐπ' ἀληθείας: to be taken together = well indeed!—εἷς ἐστιν: He is one (God understood, supplied in T.R.).—Ver. 33: the manner of loving God is stated by the scribe in yet another form of language: heart, understanding (συνέσεως), might.—περισσότερόν ἐστιν, etc., is more, far, than all the burnt offerings and the sacrifices (meat offerings) = the whole Levitical ritual. There is a ring of conviction in the words. The varied expression of the law of love to God (συνέσεως) also bears witness to sincerity and independent thought. — ὁλοκαυτωμάτων (ὁλοκαυτόω, from ὅλος, καίω), here and in Heb. x. 6, from Sept., for עֹלָה.—Ver. 34. νουνεχῶς, intelligently, as one who had a mind (of his own), and really thought what he said, a refreshing thing to meet with at any time, and especially there and then. Here only in N.T. = νουνεχόντως in classics.—οὐ μακρὰν, not far; near by insight into its nature (the ethical supreme), and in spirit—a sincere thinker.—οὐδεὶς οὐκέτι, etc.: questioning given up because seen to be vain, always ending either in the confusion or in the acquiescence of questioners (cf. Lk. xx. 40).

Vv. 35-37. David's Son and David's Lord (Mt. xxii. 41-46, Lk. xx. 41-44). On the aim and import of this counter-question vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 35. ἀποκριθεὶς, διδάσκων ἐ. τ. ἱ.: these two participles describe the circumstances under which the question was asked—addressed to silenced and disheartened opponents, and forming a part of the public instruction Jesus had been giving in the temple; a large body of people present.—Ver. 36. αὐτὸς Δ. Over against the dogma of the scribes, stated in ver. 35 as something well known (in Mt. Jesus asks for their opinion on the topic), is set the declaration of David himself, introduced without connecting particle. David, who ought to know better than the scribes.—ἐν τῷ π. τ. ἁ.: especially when speaking, as they would all admit, by inspiration.—εἶπεν, etc.: the quotation as given in T.R. exactly reproduces the Sept. The omission of ὁ before Κύριος in BD turns the latter into a proper name of God.—κάθου (κάθισον in B) is a late or "popular" form of the

38. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ,[1] "Βλέπετε ἀπὸ τῶν γραμματέων, τῶν θελόντων ἐν στολαῖς περιπατεῖν, καὶ ἀσπασμοὺς ἐν ταῖς ἀγοραῖς, 39. καὶ πρωτοκαθεδρίας ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς, καὶ πρωτοκλισίας ἐν τοῖς δείπνοις· 40. οἱ κατεσθίοντες[2] τὰς οἰκίας τῶν χηρῶν, καὶ προφάσει μακρὰ προσευχόμενοι· οὗτοι λήψονται περισσότερον κρίμα."

41. Καὶ καθίσας ὁ Ἰησοῦς[3] κατέναντι[4] τοῦ γαζοφυλακίου ἐθεώρει πῶς ὁ ὄχλος βάλλει χαλκὸν εἰς τὸ γαζοφυλάκιον. καὶ πολλοὶ

[1] εν τῃ διδ. αυτου ελεγεν in ℵBLΔ 33.

[2] B has κατεσθοντες.

[3] ℵBLΔ cop. omit ο Ι.

[4] So in ℵADΔΣ (Tisch., W.H., text, brackets). απεναντι in B (W.H. marg.).

present imperative of κάθημαι.—Ver. 37. καὶ ὁ πολὺς ὄχλος, etc.: this remark about the large crowd which had been witness to these encounters, as it stands in our N. T. at end of ver. 37, seems to refer merely to the closing scene of the conflict. Probably the evangelist meant the reflection to apply to the whole = the masses enjoyed Christ's victory over the classes, who one after the other measured their wits against His. The remark is true to the life. The people gladly hear one who speaks felicitously, refutes easily, and escapes dexterously from the hands of designing men. (ὡς ἡδέως διαλεγομένου, καὶ εὐχερῶς αὐτοὺς ἀνατρέποντος, καὶ ὡς αὐτὸς ἀπηλλαγμένος τῆς βασκανίας—Euthy. Zig.)

Vv. 38-40. Warning against the influence of the scribes (Lk. xx. 45-47). As if encouraged by the manifest sympathy of the crowd, Jesus proceeds to warn them against the baleful influence of their religious guides.—Ver. 38. ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ α.: this expression alone suffices to show that what Mk. here gives is but a fragment of a larger discourse of the same type—an anti-scribal manifesto. Here again the evangelist bears faithful witness to a great body of διδαχή he does not record. Mt. xxiii. shows how much he omits at this point.—ἔλεγεν: the imperfect here may be taken as suggesting that what follows is but a sample = He was saying things like this. —βλέπετε ἀπὸ as in viii. 15.—θελόντων, desiring, not so much claiming as their privilege (Meyer) as taking a childish pleasure in = φιλούντων, Lk. xx. 46.—ἐν στολαῖς, in long robes, worn by persons of rank and distinction ("gravitatis index," Grotius), possibly worn specially long by the scribes that the tassels attached might trail on the ground. So Wünsche, ad loc. Vide picture of Pharisee in his robes in Lund, Heiligthümer. — περιπατεῖν: infinitive, depending on θελόντων followed by accusatives, ἀσπασμούς, etc., depending on same word: oratio variata, vide Mt. xxiii. 6.—Ver. 40. οἱ κατεσθίοντες: this verse is probably still to be regarded as a continuation of the description ot the scribes commencing with τῶν θελόντων, only the writer has lost the sense of the original construction, and instead of the genitive puts the nominative, so giving to what follows the force of an independent sentence (so Weiss). Grotius, Meyer, and Schanz take ver. 40 as a really independent sentence. Lk. set the precedent for this; for, apparently having Mk.'s text before him, he turns οἱ κατεσθίοντες into οἱ κατεσθίουσι. Holtzmann, H. C., is undecided between the two views. As to the sense, two facts are stated about the scribes: they devoured the houses, the property of widows, and they made long (μακρά, vide on Lk. xx. 47) prayers in the homes of, and presumably for, these widows.—προφάσει: the real aim to get money, the long seemingly fervent prayers a blind to hide this aim. It is not necessary to suppose that the money-getting and the praying were connected by regular contract (so apparently Fritzsche, and Weiss in Meyer). For πρόφασις cf. Phil. i. 18 and especially 1 Thess. ii. 5.—οὗτοι λήψονται, etc.: this remark applies specially to the conduct just described: catching widows' substance with the bait of prayer, which Jesus characteristically pronounces exceptionally damnable in view of its sleek hypocrisy and low greed. The appending of this reflection favours the view that ver. 40 is after all an independent sentence. In it and the two preceding πλούσιοι ἔβαλλον πολλά· 42. καὶ ἐλθοῦσα μία χήρα πτωχὴ ἔβαλε λεπτὰ δύο, ὅ ἐστι κοδράντης. 43. καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, λέγει[1] αὐτοῖς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἡ χήρα αὕτη ἡ πτωχὴ πλεῖον πάντων βέβληκε τῶν βαλόντων[2] εἰς τὸ γαζοφυλάκιον. 44. πάντες γὰρ ἐκ τοῦ περισσεύοντος αὐτοῖς ἔβαλον· αὕτη δὲ ἐκ τῆς ὑστερήσεως αὐτῆς πάντα ὅσα εἶχεν ἔβαλεν, ὅλον τὸν βίον αὐτῆς."

[1] ειπεν in ℵABDLΔΣ.

[2] For βεβληκε, ABDLΔΣ 33 have εβαλεν, and for βαλοντων ℵABDLΔΣ have βαλλοντων. Tisch. reads βεβληκεν τ. βαλλ., W.H. εβαλεν τ. βαλλ.

we have a very slight yet vivid picture of Pharisaic piety in its vanity, avarice, and hypocrisy.

Vv. 41-44. The widow's offering (Lk. xxi. 1-4). This charming story comes in with dramatic effect, after the repulsive picture of the greedy praying scribe. The reference to the widows victimised by the hypocrites may have suggested it to the evangelist's mind. It bears the unmistakable stamp of an authentic reminiscence, and one can imagine what comfort it would bring to the poor, who constituted the bulk of the early Gentile Church (Schanz).—Ver. 41. καθίσας: Jesus, a close and keen observer of all that went on (xi. 11), sits down at a spot convenient for noticing the people casting their contributions into the temple treasury.—γαζοφυλακίου (γάζα, Persian, φυλακή = θησαυροφυλάκιον, Hesychius). Commentators are agreed in thinking that the reference is to the treasury in the court of the women, consisting of thirteen brazen trumpet-shaped receptacles, each destined for its distinctive gifts, indicated by an inscription, so many for the temple tribute, and money gifts for sacrifice; others for incense, wood, etc.; all the gifts having reference to the service carried on. The gifts were people's offerings, generally moderate in amount: "the Peter's pence of the Jews" (Holtzmann, H. C.).—χαλκὸν may be meant for money in general, copper representing all sorts (Fritzsche, Grotius, etc.); but there seems to be no good reason why we should not take it strictly as denoting contributions in copper, the ordinary, if not exclusive, money gifts (Meyer; Holtzmann, H. C.).—πολλοὶ πλούσιοι, etc., many rich were casting in much: Jesus was near enough to see that, also to notice exactly what the widow gave. Among the rich givers might be some of the praying scribes who had imposed on widows by their show of piety, suggesting reflections on where wealthy givers get the money they bestow for pious purposes. That is not a matter of indifference to the Kingdom of God, whatever it may be to beneficiaries.—Ver. 42. μία χ. π., one poverty-stricken widow. With what intense interest Jesus would watch her movements, after His eye fell on her! How much will she give?—λεπτὰ δύο, "two mites"; minute, of course, but two: she might have kept one of them (Bengel).—λεπτόν, so called from its smallness; smallest of brass coins—significant of deep poverty; two given, of a willing mind.—Ver. 43. ἡ πτωχὴ, emphatic—the poverty-stricken; manifest from her dress and wasted look.—Ver. 44.—ἐκ τῆς ὑστερήσεως, from her state of want, cf. on Lk.—ὑστέρησις, here and in Phil. iv. 11.—πάντα ὅσα: this not visible to the eye; divined by the mind, but firmly believed to be true, as appears from the repetition of the statement in another form.—ὅλον τὸν βίον, her whole means of life. For the use of βίος in this sense vide Lk. viii. 43, xv. 12, 30; similarly in classics.

Though it has nothing to do with strict exegesis, I am tempted to give here a prayer by that felicitous interpreter and devout monk, Euthymius Zigabenus, based on this beautiful Gospel story: "May my soul become a widow casting out the devil to which it is joined and subject, and casting into the treasury of God two lepta, the body and the mind; the one made light (λεπτυνθέντα) by temperance, the other by humility".

CHAPTER XIII. THE APOCALYPTIC DISCOURSE. This is the solitary instance in which the second evangelist has given at length a discourse of Jesus. The fulness with which the apocalyptic discourse is recorded is all the more striking, when contrasted with the very meagre reproduction of the anti-pharisaic discourse (xii. 38-40). The exception made in its favour was doubtless due to XIII. 1. ΚΑΙ ἐκπορευομένου αὐτοῦ ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, λέγει αὐτῷ εἷς τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, "Διδάσκαλε, ἴδε, ποταποὶ λίθοι καὶ ποταπαὶ οἰκοδομαί." 2. Καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀποκριθεὶς[1] εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Βλέπεις ταύτας τὰς μεγάλας οἰκοδομάς; οὐ μὴ ἀφεθῇ[2] λίθος ἐπὶ λίθῳ,[3] ὃς οὐ μὴ καταλυθῇ." 3. Καὶ καθημένου αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ ὄρος τῶν Ἐλαιῶν κατέναντι τοῦ ἱεροῦ, ἐπηρώτων[4] αὐτὸν κατ' ἰδίαν Πέτρος καὶ Ἰάκωβος καὶ Ἰωάννης καὶ Ἀνδρέας, 4. "Εἰπὲ[5] ἡμῖν, πότε ταῦτα ἔσται; καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον ὅταν μέλλῃ πάντα ταῦτα συντελεῖσθαι[6];" 5. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἀποκριθεὶς αὐτοῖς ἤρξατο λέγειν,[7] "Βλέπετε μή τις ὑμᾶς πλανήσῃ. 6. πολλοὶ γὰρ[8] ἐλεύσονται ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματί μου,

[1] Omit αποκριθεις with ℵBL 33.
[2] Add ωδε with ℵBDLΔΣ (W.H.).
[3] λιθον in ℵBLΔ 33 (Tisch., W.H.).
[4] επηρωτα in ℵBL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).
[5] ειπον in ℵBDL 33.
[6] ταυτα συντελ. παντα in ℵBL.
[7] ℵBL 33 have ηρξατο λεγειν αυτοις without αποκριθεις (Tisch., W.H.).
[8] Omit γαρ ℵBL.

Mk.'s estimate of its interest and value for his first readers. Perhaps he was influenced in part by the fascinations of prediction. The real interest of the discourse and the key to its interpretation are to be found, as pointed out in the notes on the corresponding chapter in Mt., in its ethical aim—"to forewarn and forearm the representatives of a new faith, so that they might not lose their heads or their hearts in an evil perplexing time": notes on Mt. For a full exposition of the discourse in the light of this aim readers are referred to these notes.

Vv. 1-4. The introduction (Mt. xxiv. 1-3; Lk. xxi. 5-7).—Ver. 1. εἷς τ. μαθητῶν, one of the disciples; the disciples generally in Mt.; who, not said, nor for what motive; probably to divert the Master from gloomy thoughts.—ποταποὶ λίθοι, etc.: what stones and what buildings! the former remarkable for size, as described by Josephus (Antiq., xv., 11, 3); the latter for beauty. On ποταπός vide at Mt. viii. 27.—Ver. 2. βλέπεις: a question, do you see? to fix attention on an object concerning which a startling statement is to be made.—μεγάλας, great buildings, acknowledging the justness of the admiration and pointing to a feature which might seem incompatible with the statement following: that vast strong pile surely proof against destruction!—Ver. 3. εἰς τὸ ὄρος: implying previous motion towards, before sitting down on the Mount of Olives.—κατέναντι τ. ἱ., opposite the temple, with the admired buildings in full view; this graphic touch in Mk. only. —ἐπηρώτα (ℵBL), singular: Peter in view as the chief speaker, though accompanied by other three; imperfect, as subordinate to ἤρξατο in ver. 5 explaining the occasion of the discourse Jesus then began to deliver.—ὁ Πέτρος, etc.: the well-known three, and a fourth —Andrew; a selection found only here. Were these all the disciples with Jesus, all who went with Him to Bethany in the evenings, the rest remaining in Jerusalem? The two pairs of brothers were the first called to discipleship (Mk. i. 16-20). This reminiscence points to internal relations in the disciple-circle imperfectly known to us.—κατ' ἰδίαν, apart, i.e., from the rest of the disciples. Mt. has the same phrase, though he assumes all the disciples to be present, which is suggestive of literary dependence.—Ver. 4. The question of the four has exclusive reference to the predicted destruction of the sacred buildings. In Mt. three questions are mixed together: vide notes there.

Vv. 5-8. Signs prelusive of the end (Mt. xxiv. 4-8, Lk. xxi. 8-11). Jerusalem's judgment-day not to come till certain things have happened: advent of false Messiahs, rise of wars.—βλέπετε, take heed that no one deceive you; the ethical key-note struck at once; the aim of the whole discourse to help disciples to keep heads cool, and hearts brave in a perilous evil time (vide on Mt.).—Ver. 6. ἐγώ εἰμι, I am (He, the Christ). In what sense to be understood vide on Mt. The Messianic hope misconceived was the ruin of the Jewish people.—Ver. 7.

λέγοντες, Ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι· καὶ πολλοὺς πλανήσουσιν. 7. ὅταν δὲ ἀκούσητε πολέμους καὶ ἀκοὰς πολέμων, μὴ θροεῖσθε· δεῖ γὰρ[1] γενέσθαι· ἀλλ' οὔπω τὸ τέλος. 8. Ἐγερθήσεται γὰρ ἔθνος ἐπὶ ἔθνος, καὶ βασιλεία ἐπὶ βασιλείαν· καὶ[2] ἔσονται σεισμοὶ κατὰ τόπους, καὶ[2] ἔσονται λιμοὶ καὶ ταραχαί.[3] ἀρχαὶ[4] ὠδίνων ταῦτα. 9. Βλέπετε δὲ ὑμεῖς ἑαυτούς. παραδώσουσι γὰρ[5] ὑμᾶς εἰς συνέδρια, καὶ εἰς συναγωγὰς δαρήσεσθε, καὶ ἐπὶ ἡγεμόνων καὶ βασιλέων σταθήσεσθε ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ, εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς· 10. καὶ εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη δεῖ πρῶτον[6] κηρυχθῆναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. 11. ὅταν δὲ ἀγάγωσιν[7] ὑμᾶς παραδιδόντες, μὴ προμεριμνᾶτε τί λαλήσητε, μηδὲ μελετᾶτε[8] ἀλλ' ὃ ἐὰν δοθῇ ὑμῖν ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ, τοῦτο λαλεῖτε· οὐ γάρ ἐστε ὑμεῖς οἱ λαλοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον. 12. παραδώσει δὲ[9] ἀδελφὸς ἀδελφὸν εἰς θάνατον, καὶ πατὴρ τέκνον·

[1] אB sah. cop. omit γαρ. Vide below.

[2] אBDL omit the first και and BL the second. Vide below.

[3] אBDL vet. Lat. vulg. cop. omit και ταραχαι (so Trg., Tisch., W.H.), but these words may have fallen out by similar ending (αρχαι, so Weiss).

[4] αρχη in אBDLΔ (Trg., Tisch., W.H.), which may be an assimilation to Mt. αρχαι in AEFGXΓΣ al. (Weiss).

[5] Omit γαρ BL cop.

[6] πρωτον δει in אBD. LΔ = T.R.

[7] και οταν αγωσιν in אBDL.

[8] אBDL omit μηδε μελετατε.

[9] και παραδωσει in אBDL.

πολέμους: first pseudo-Messiahs preaching national independence; then, naturally, as a second σημεῖον, wars, actual or threatened (ἀκοὰς πολ.).—μὴ θροεῖσθε: good counsel, cheerful in tone, laconic in expression = be not scared; they must happen; but the end not yet. The disconnected style, no γὰρ after δεῖ (אB), suits thee motional prophetic mood.—τὸ τέλος, the crisis of Jerusalem. —Ver. 8. ἔσονται σεισμοί, etc., there will be earthquakes in places; there will be famines. Here again the briefest reading without connecting particles (καί, καί) is to be preferred, as suiting the abrupt style congenial to the prophetic mood. The καὶ ταραχαί after λιμοὶ may have fallen out of אBDL by homoeoteleuton (ἀρχαὶ following immediately after), but after earthquakes and famines disturbances seems an anticlimax.

Ver. 9-13. Third sign, drawn from apostolic experiences (Mt. xxiv. 9-13, Lk. xxi. 12-19). On the hypothesis that this is an interpolation into the discourse, having no organic connection with it, vide on Mt. The contents of this section, especially in Mk.'s version, correspond closely to Mt. x. 17-22. But the question, in which of the two discourses the logion has the more historical setting, is not thereby settled. Some utterance of the sort was certainly germane to the present situation.—Ver. 9. βλέπετε, etc.: not meant to strike a depressing note, but to suggest that the most interesting omens should be found in their own experiences as the Apostles of the faith, which, however full of tribulation, would yet be, on the whole, victorious.—παραδώσουσι, etc.: the tribulations are not disguised, but the blunt statement only lends emphasis to the declaration in ver. 10 that, notwithstanding, the Gospel must (δεῖ) and shall be proclaimed on a wide scale.—εἰς συναγωγὰς δαρήσεσθε: the εἰς here is pregnant = you, delivered to the synagogues, shall be maltreated. Bengel renders: "in synagogas inter verbera agemini" = ye shall be driven into the synagogues with clubs. So Nösgen.—Ver. 11 gives counsel for Apostles placed at the bar of kings and rulers. They are not to be anxious beforehand (προμεριμνᾶτε, here only in N.T.) even as to what they shall say, not to speak of what shall happen to them as the result of the trial. Their apologia will be given to them. They will not be the καὶ ἐπαναστήσονται τέκνα ἐπὶ γονεῖς, καὶ θανατώσουσιν αὐτούς· 13. καὶ ἔσεσθε μισούμενοι ὑπὸ πάντων διὰ τὸ ὄνομά μου· ὁ δὲ ὑπομείνας εἰς τέλος, οὗτος σωθήσεται.

14. "Ὅταν δὲ ἴδητε τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως, τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ Δανιὴλ τοῦ προφήτου,[1] ἑστὸς[2] ὅπου οὐ δεῖ· (ὁ ἀναγινώσκων νοείτω·) τότε οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ φευγέτωσαν εἰς τὰ ὄρη· 15. ὁ δὲ[3] ἐπὶ τοῦ δώματος μὴ καταβάτω εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν,[4] μηδὲ εἰσελθέτω ἆραί τι[5] ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας αὐτοῦ· 16. καὶ ὁ εἰς τὸν ἀγρὸν ὢν[6] μὴ ἐπιστρεψάτω εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω, ἆραι τὸ ἱμάτιον αὐτοῦ. 17. οὐαὶ δὲ ταῖς ἐν γαστρὶ ἐχούσαις καὶ ταῖς θηλαζούσαις ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις. 18. προσεύχεσθε δὲ ἵνα μὴ γένηται ἡ φυγὴ ὑμῶν[7] χειμῶνος. 19. ἔσονται γὰρ αἱ ἡμέραι ἐκεῖναι θλίψις, οἵα οὐ γέγονε τοιαύτη ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κτίσεως ἧς[8] ἔκτισεν ὁ Θεός, ἕως τοῦ νῦν, καὶ οὐ μὴ

[1] ℵBDL omit το ρηθεν . . . προφητου, which comes from Mt.

[2] εστηκοτα in ℵBL (vide below).

[3] B sah. cop. omit δε. More expressive without.

[4] ℵBL omit εις την οικιαν, a gloss.

[5] τι αραι in BL.

[6] ℵBDLΔ omit ων.

[7] ℵBL omit η φυγη υμων. More impressive without. What meant obvious. Vide below.

[8] ην in ℵBCL.

real speakers (οὐ γάρ ἐστε ὑμεῖς οἱ λαλοῦντες), but the Holy Spirit. Lk. has "I" here: Christ = the Holy Ghost. This comforting word is wanting in Mt., and whether it was really spoken at this time must remain uncertain. Mt. describes with more detail the internal troubles of the Christian community—mutual treachery, false prophets (within, not without, like the false Messiahs of ver. 5), lawlessness, chilling of early enthusiasm—all implying the lapse of a considerable time, and all to happen before the end of Jerusalem. (Vv. 10-12.) For all this Mk. gives only the brief statement in ver. 12.—Ver. 13 answers in its first part to Mt. xxiv. 9b, and in its second to Mt. xxiv. 13.

Vv. 14-23. The Jewish catastrophe (Mt. xxiv. 15-25, Lk. xxi. 20-24).—Ver. 14. τὸ βδέλυγμα τ. ἐ. The horror is the Roman army, and it is a horror because of the desolation it brings. Vide on Mt. The reference to Daniel in T.R. is imported from Mt.—ἑστηκότα, the reading in the best texts, masculine, though referring to βδέλυγμα, because the horror consists of soldiers (Schanz) or their general. (Cf. ὁ κατέχων, 2 Thess. ii. 7.)—ὅπου οὐ δεῖ, where it ought not, instead of ἐν τόπῳ ἁγίῳ in Mt.—a graceful circumlocution betraying the Jewish Christian writing for heathen Christians, abstaining from making claims that might be misunderstood for his native country by calling it the "holy land" (Schanz).—ὁ ἀναγινώσκων ν. The reference here cannot be to Daniel, which is not mentioned in Mk., but either to the Gospel itself or to a separate document which it embodies—a Jewish or Jewish-Christian Apocalypse (vide on Mt.). The words may be taken as a direction to the reader in synagogue or church to explain further the meaning to hearers, it being a matter of vital practical concern. Vide Weizsäcker, Das Apos. Zeit., p. 362.—Ver. 15. δώματος, he who is on the roof. Vide at Mt. x. 27. The main point to be noted in Mk.'s version of the directions for the crisis as compared with Mt.'s (q.v.) is the omission of the words μηδὲ σαββάτῳ, probably out of regard to Gentile readers.—Ver. 18. ἵνα μὴ γένηται, that it may not be; what not said, φυγὴ (T.R.) being omitted in best texts = the nameless horror which makes flight imperative, the awful crisis of Israel.—Ver. 19. ἔσονται γὰρ αἱ ἡμέραι, etc., for (not in those days, but) those days (themselves) shall be a tribulation. So we speak of γένηται. 20. καὶ εἰ μὴ Κύριος ἐκολόβωσε[1] τὰς ἡμέρας, οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σάρξ· ἀλλὰ διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς οὓς ἐξελέξατο, ἐκολόβωσε τὰς ἡμέρας. 21. Καὶ τότε ἐάν τις ὑμῖν εἴπῃ, Ἰδού,[2] ὧδε ὁ Χριστός, ἤ ἰδού,[2] ἐκεῖ, μὴ πιστεύσητε.[3] 22. ἐγερθήσονται γὰρ ψευδόχριστοι καὶ ψευδοπροφῆται, καὶ δώσουσι[4] σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, πρὸς τὸ ἀποπλανᾷν, εἰ δυνατόν, καὶ[5] τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς. 23. ὑμεῖς δὲ βλέπετε· ἰδού,[6] προείρηκα ὑμῖν πάντα. 24. Ἀλλ' ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις, μετὰ τὴν θλίψιν ἐκείνην, ὁ ἥλιος σκοτισθήσεται, καὶ ἡ σελήνη οὐ δώσει τὸ φέγγος αὐτῆς, 25. καὶ οἱ ἀστέρες τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἔσονται ἐκπίπτοντες,[7] καὶ αἱ δυνάμεις αἱ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς σαλευθήσονται. 26. καὶ τότε ὄψονται τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐρχόμενον ἐν νεφέλαις μετὰ δυνάμεως πολλῆς καὶ δόξης. 27. καὶ τότε ἀποστελεῖ τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ,[8] καὶ ἐπισυνάξει τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ[8] ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων ἀνέμων, ἀπ' ἄκρου γῆς ἕως ἄκρου οὐρανοῦ.

[1] εκολ. Κ. in ℵBL.

[2] ℵBL have ιδε both times; for η before second ιδε B has και, which has been changed into η (as in Mt.) in DΔΣ al.; omitted in ℵL (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] πιστευετε in ℵABCDLΔ.

[4] δωσουσι in ℵABCLΣ al. ποιησουσι in D (Tisch.).

[5] Omit και ℵBD (from Mt.).

[6] Omit ιδου BL cop. aeth. (Tisch., W.H.).

[7] εσονται εκ τ. ουρ. πιπτοντες ℵBC (Tisch., W.H.).

[8] Omit first αυτου BDL (Tisch., W.H.), second DL, which is found in ℵBCΔ. Tisch. omits both. W.H. have second in brackets, omitting first.

"evil days," and in Scotland of the "killing times".—οἵα οὐ γέγονεν, etc.: a strong statement claiming for the crisis of Israel a unique place of tragic distinction in the whole calamitous experience of the human race, past and to come.—οἵα τοιαύτη, pleonastic, cf. 1 Cor. xv. 48, 2 Cor. x. 11.—Ver. 20. The merciful shortening of the days, out of regard to the elect, is here directly ascribed to God. Mt. uses the passive construction, where vide as to the idea of shortening and the reason.—τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς οὓς ἐξελέξατο, the elect whom He elected, recalling "the creation which God created" in ver. 19; but more than a mere literary idiosyncrasy, emphasising the fact that the elect are God's elect, whom He loves and will care for, and whose intercessions for others He will hear.—Ver. 22. ψευδόχριστοι, ψευδοπροφῆται, false Christs, and false prophets; again, as in ver. 6, here as there without, not within, the Church; political Messiahs, in ver. 6 spoken of as the prime cause of all the calamities, here as at the last hour promising deliverance therefrom.—πρὸς τὸ ἀποπλανᾷν, with a view to mislead; the compound verb occurs again in 1 Tim. vi. 10, in passive.—Ver. 23. ὑμεῖς δὲ, etc., now you look out! I have told you all things beforehand; forewarned, forearmed.

Vv. 24-32. The coming of the Son of Man (Mt. xxiv. 29-35, Lk. xxi. 25-33).—Ver. 24. ἀλλὰ, opposes to the false Christs who are not to be believed in, the coming of the true Christ.—ἐν ἐκείναις τ. ἡμέραις, in those days, for Mt.'s εὐθέως, a vaguer phrase, yet making the parusia synchronise with the thlipsis.—Ver. 25. οἱ ἀστέρες, etc., the stars shall be in process of falling (one after the other)—ἔσονται with πίπτοντες instead of πεσοῦνται in Mt.—αἱ δυνάμεις, etc.: the powers in heaven = the powers of heaven (Mt.) = the host of heaven (Is. xxxiv. 4), a synonym for the stars.—Ver. 26. τὸν υἱὸν τ. ἀ.: the Son of Man, not the sign of, etc., as in Mt.:

28. "Ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς συκῆς μάθετε τὴν παραβολήν· ὅταν αὐτῆς ἤδη ὁ κλάδος[1] ἁπαλὸς γένηται, καὶ ἐκφυῇ τὰ φύλλα, γινώσκετε ὅτι ἐγγὺς τὸ θέρος ἐστίν· 29. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ὅταν ταῦτα ἴδητε[2] γινόμενα, γινώσκετε ὅτι ἐγγύς ἐστιν ἐπὶ θύραις. 30. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι οὐ μὴ παρέλθῃ ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη, μέχρις οὗ πάντα ταῦτα[3] γένηται. 31. ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ παρελεύσονται[4]· οἱ δὲ λόγοι μου οὐ μὴ παρέλθωσι.[4]

32. "Περὶ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης καὶ[5] τῆς ὥρας, οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, οὐδὲ οἱ ἄγγελοι οἱ[6] ἐν οὐρανῷ, οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός, εἰ μὴ ὁ πατήρ.

33. "Βλέπετε, ἀγρυπνεῖτε καὶ προσεύχεσθε,[7] οὐκ οἴδατε γὰρ πότε ὁ καιρός ἐστιν. 34. ὡς ἄνθρωπος ἀπόδημος ἀφεὶς τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ, καὶ δοὺς τοῖς δούλοις αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐξουσίαν, καὶ[8] ἑκάστῳ τὸ ἔργον

[1] The order of the words varies in MSS. ℵABCDL have ηδη ο κλ. αυτης (W.H., Tisch., as in T.R.).

[2] ιδητε ταυτα in ℵABCL. [3] ταυτα παντα in ℵBCLΔ.

[4] παρελευσονται in ℵBC; sing. in LΔΣ (from Mt.); for ου μη παρελθωσι (from Mt.) ℵBL have παρελευσονται a second time, and BL omit μη, which does not elsewhere occur in Mk. with ου and future indicative.

[5] η in ℵBCLΔΣ. ℵD have και.

[6] ℵDL omit οι after αγ. CΔ have it. B reads αγγελος (W.H. marg.).

[7] BD omit και προσευχεσθε; a gloss.

[8] ℵBCDL omit και, a connecting particle added by scribes.

Christ His own sign, vide on Mt.—Ver. 27. ἀπ' ἄκρου γῆς, etc. (cf. expression in Mt.), from the extremity of the earth to the extremity of heaven. The earth is conceived as a flat surface, and the idea is—from one end of the earth to the other, where it touches the heavens. But they touch at both ends, so that Mt.'s expression is the more accurate. Either from one end of the earth to the other end of the earth, or from one end of the heaven to, etc.—Ver. 28. Parable of the fig tree, as in Mt.—ἐκφύῃ: this verb without accent might either be present subjunctive active of ἐκφύω = ἐκφύῃ = it putteth forth its leaves; or 2nd aorist subjunctive intransitive = ἐκφυῇ, from ἐξεφύην, later form of 2nd aorist indicative instead of ἐξέφυν = the leaves shoot out. The former is preferred by most commentators.

Vv. 32-37. Concluding exhortation (Mt. xxiv. 36).—Ver. 32. The words ὁ υἱὸς are an undoubted reading in Mk., and there can be little doubt they form a part of the true text in Mt. also. As to the import of the solemn declaration of nescience Jesus here makes, I need only refer to what has been said on the corresponding text in Mt. It is not a disclaimer of knowledge as to the precise day, month, or year of what it is certain will happen within the then present generation, but rather an intimation that all statements (that regarding the generation included) as to the time of the parusia must be taken in a qualified sense. Jesus had, I still feel, two ways of speaking on the subject, one for comfort (it will be soon), and one for caution (it may not be so soon as even I think or you expect).—Ver. 33. ἀγρυπνεῖτε: watch, be sleepless (α priv. and ὕπνος).—οὐκ οἴδατε, etc., ye know not the time or season (καιρός) of the parusia. If even the Son knows not, still less His disciples; therefore let them watch.—Ver. 34. Enforcement of the exhortation to watch by a brief parable. At this point each of the synoptical evangelists goes his own way. In Mt. Jesus presses home the lesson by historical and prophetical pictures of the surprises brought by unexpected crises; in Lk. by general statements; in Mk. by a comparison which seems to be the germ of the parable in Mt. xxv. 14-30.—ἄνθρωπος ἀπόδημος (here only), a travelling man, cf. ἄνθ. ἔμπορος, a merchant man, in Mt. xiii. 45.—ἀφεὶς, δοὺς: these participles αὐτοῦ, καὶ τῷ θυρωρῷ ἐνετείλατο ἵνα γρηγορῇ. 35. γρηγορεῖτε οὖν· οὐκ οἴδατε γὰρ πότε ὁ κύριος τῆς οἰκίας ἔρχεται, ὀψέ, ἢ μεσονυκτίου,[1] ἢ ἀλεκτοροφωνίας, ἢ πρωΐ· 36. μὴ ἐλθὼν ἐξαίφνης εὕρῃ ὑμᾶς καθεύδοντας. 37. ἃ[2] δὲ ὑμῖν λέγω, πᾶσι λέγω, Γρηγορεῖτε."

[1] μεσονυκτιον in ℵBCLΔ. T.R. (-ου) conforms to the following genitive.

[2] ο in ℵBCLΔ.

specify the circumstances under which the command to the porter, the main point, was given; it was when the master was leaving, and when he gave to all his servants his parting instructions.—τὴν ἐξουσίαν, his (the master's) authority, distributed among the servants when he could no longer exercise it himself.—τὸ ἔργον α., to each one his work, in apposition with ἐξουσίαν. In the master's absence each man became his own master; put upon his honour, the seat of the ἐξουσία, and prescribing careful performance of the ἔργον entrusted to each.—καὶ τ. θυρωρῷ, also, among the rest, and very specially, to the porter (he gave instructions). The καὶ here is emphatic, as if it had been καὶ δὴ καί.—ἵνα γρηγορῇ, that he should watch: note that in this parable the function of watching becomes the business of one—the porter. Each servant has his appropriate task; the porter's is to watch. Yet in the moral sphere watching is the common duty of all, the temper in which all are to discharge their functions. All have to be porters, waiting at the gate, ready to open it to the returning master. Hence the closing exhortation in ver. 37. What I say to you, the four disciples (ver. 3), I say to all: watch. This had to be added, because it was not said or suggested by the parable; a defect which makes it doubtful whether we have here a logion of Jesus in authentic form, and which may account for its omission by Lk.—Ver. 35. ὀψὲ ἤ, etc.: the night divided, Roman fashion, into four watches: 6-9, 9-12, 12-3, 3-6. Before the exile the Jews divided the night into three parts.—μεσονύκτιον: vide at Lk. xi. 5 on this word, found also in Acts xvi. 25, xx. 7.—ἀλεκτοροφωνία is a ἅπαξ λεγ. in N. T.—Ver. 36. ἐξαίφνης, suddenly, here in Lk. ii. 13, and four times in Acts.—καθεύδοντας: this applies to all the servants, not merely to the porter; therefore all must watch as well as work. In the case of a master absent on a journey, the servants cannot know even the day, not to speak of the hour or watch of the night, as they could in the cases supposed in Lk. xii. 36, Mt. xxv. 1. Therefore they must keep awake not merely one night, but many nights, an incongruity which again suggests that we have not here an original utterance of Jesus, but a composite logion with elements borrowed from several parables.

CHAPTER XIV. THE PASSION HISTORY.—Vv. 1-2. Introduction (Mt. xxvi. 1-5, Lk. xxii. 1-2).—Ver. 1. ἦν δὲ τὸ π.: the first hint that the visit of Jesus to Jerusalem took place at passover season.—τὸ πάσχα καὶ τὰ ἄζυμα: full name of the feast, which consisted of the passover proper beginning on the 14th Nisan, and the seven days of unleavened bread. Mt. and Lk. give each only one of the designations; Mt. the former, Lk. the latter. Mk.'s dual designation a manifest combination of Mt. and Lk., say the followers of Griesbach.—μετὰ δύο ἡμέρας, indicates the point of time at which the Sanhedrists began seriously to consider how they could safely get rid of Jesus. Mt. turns this into an announcement by Jesus. Lk. generalises the precise note of time into a statement that the feast was approaching (ἤγγιζεν).—ἐν δόλῳ, in or with craft. ἐν = בְּ in Heb. Mt. has simply δόλῳ, the dative instr.—Ver. 2. ἔλεγον γάρ is a more difficult reading than ἔλ. δὲ of Mt., hence the correction in T.R. The γάρ presupposes that the murder of Jesus during the feast was from the first regarded as out of the question, and the clause following partly makes that fact explicit, partly assigns a reason for it. They wanted to compass His death, but they were in a difficulty, for they felt and said to one another: it may not be on the feast, lest there be a popular disturbance.—μήποτε ἔσται: the fut. ind. instead of the more usual subjunctive after μήποτε (cf. Col. ii. 8, Heb. iii. 12), implying the almost certain occurrence

XIV. 1. ῏ΗΝ δὲ τὸ πάσχα καὶ τὰ ἄζυμα μετὰ δύο ἡμέρας· καὶ ἐζήτουν οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς, πῶς αὐτὸν ἐν δόλῳ κρατήσαντες ἀποκτείνωσιν· 2. ἔλεγον δέ,[1] "Μὴ ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, μήποτε θόρυβος ἔσται[2] τοῦ λαοῦ." 3. Καὶ ὄντος αὐτοῦ ἐν Βηθανίᾳ, ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ Σίμωνος τοῦ λεπροῦ, κατακειμένου αὐτοῦ, ἦλθε γυνὴ ἔχουσα ἀλάβαστρον μύρου νάρδου πιστικῆς πολυτελοῦς· καὶ[3] συντρίψασα τὸ[4] ἀλάβαστρον, κατέχεεν αὐτοῦ κατὰ[5] τῆς κεφαλῆς. 4. ἦσαν δέ τινες ἀγανακτοῦντες πρὸς ἑαυτούς, καὶ λέγοντες,[6] "Εἰς τί ἡ ἀπώλεια

[1] γαρ in ℵBCDL; δε in T.R. is from Mt.

[2] εσται θορυβος in ℵBCDL.

[3] Omit και ℵBL cop.

[4] The article is found in all the genders; το in GM cursives; τον in ℵADΣ and many other uncials (Tisch.); την in BCLΔ (Trg., W.H.).

[5] ℵBCLΔ omit κατα (introduced because usual).

[6] ℵBCL omit και λεγοντες, which may come from Mt.

of a θόρυβος if an attempt were made on the life of Jesus during the feast. This shows how highly the Sanhedrists estimated the influence of Jesus.

Vv. 3-9. The anointing in Bethany (Mt. xxvi. 6-13).—Ver. 3. ὄντος αὐτοῦ, κατακειμένου αὐτοῦ: two genitive absolute clauses whereof Weiss makes critical use (Marcus-Evang.); in which Schanz sees simply an instance of Mk.'s helplessness in style. The first indicates generally the time and place, the second the position of Jesus (at table) when the woman approached Him (ἦλθεν).—ἀλάβαστρον. Vide in Mt.—πιστικῆς: a puzzling word recurring in the fourth Gospel (xii. 3). It has been variously explained. (1) As one of Mk.'s Latinisms = spicatus, turned into πιστικὸς like Sextarius into ξέστης (Mk. vii. 4). In favour of this view is the Vulgate nardi spicati reproduced in "spikenard" (spiked-nard), A. V., and it has been adopted by Wetstein, Grotius, Rosenmüller, etc. (2) As meaning liquid, potable, from πίω, πιπίσκω, Fritzsche and others. (3) As derived from the name of a place whence the ointment was obtained, Augustine; also Bengel: "Pista urbs Indorum in regione Cabul; quâ ex regione pleraque aromata jam tum petebantur". But he adds: "Ex nomine proprio potius formaretur πισταῖος". (4) As = πιστός, trusty, genuine, to distinguish it from spurious imitations which abounded (Pliny, H. N., xii., 26). Instances of the use of the word in this sense are cited from Greek authors, e.g., from Artemidorus, ii., 32: πιστικὴ γυνὴ καὶ οἰκουρὸς (vide Beza and Kypke). The choice lies between (1) and (4); most modern commentators (following Theophy. and Euthy.) adopt the latter. The following account of nard from Tristram's Natural History of the Bible is interesting: "An Indian product procured from the Nardostachys Jatamansi, growing on the Himalaya Mountains in Nepaul and Bhotan. It was well known to the Greeks and Romans, and is mentioned by classic authors as derived from the hills on the banks of the Ganges. One peculiarity of the plant which is mentioned by old writers aids in its identification, viz., that it has many hairy spikes shooting from one root. These shaggy stems are caused by the root leaves shooting up from the ground and surrounding the stalk. It is from this part of the plant that the perfume is procured and prepared simply by drying it."—πολυτελοῦς (1 Tim. ii. 9, 1 Pet. iii. 4), dear, hence the temptation to produce cheap counterfeits.—συντρίψασα: she broke the narrow-necked vase that the contents might be poured out quickly, not drop by drop, and perhaps that the vessel used for so sacred a purpose might never be employed again (Kloster., Weiss, Schanz, etc.).—Ver. 4. τινὲς, certain persons; who, not indicated; Mt. says the disciples, John singles out Judas.—τοῦ μύρου γέγονεν: these words omitted in Mt. Observe the repetition in ver. 5, τοῦτο τὸ μύρον (BCL, etc.). Mt. simlpy has τοῦτο (so here in T.R.). Mt. more elegant in style, but Mk. truer to life = "To what purpose this waste of the myrrh? For this myrrh might, etc."—the style of men speaking under emotion.—Ver. 5. ἐπάνω, etc., for above three hundred pence. The cardinal αὕτη τοῦ μύρου γέγονεν; 5. ἠδύνατο γὰρ τοῦτο[1] πραθῆναι ἐπάνω τριακοσίων δηναρίων,[2] καὶ δοθῆναι τοῖς πτωχοῖς·" καὶ ἐνεβριμῶντο αὐτῇ. 6. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, "Ἄφετε αὐτήν· τί αὐτῇ κόπους παρέχετε; καλὸν ἔργον εἰργάσατο εἰς ἐμέ.[3] 7. πάντοτε γὰρ τοὺς πτωχοὺς ἔχετε μεθ' ἑαυτῶν, καὶ ὅταν θέλητε, δύνασθε αὐτοὺς[4] εὖ ποιῆσαι· ἐμὲ δὲ οὐ πάντοτε ἔχετε. 8. ὃ εἶχεν αὕτη,[5] ἐποίησε· προέλαβε μυρίσαι μου τὸ σῶμα[6] εἰς τὸν ἐνταφιασμόν. 9. ἀμὴν[7] λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅπου ἂν κηρυχθῇ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦτο[8] εἰς ὅλον τὸν κόσμον, καὶ ὃ ἐποίησεν αὕτη λαληθήσεται εἰς μνημόσυνον αὐτῆς." 10. Καὶ ὁ Ἰούδας ὁ Ἰσκαριώτης, εἷς[9] τῶν δώδεκα, ἀπῆλθε πρὸς τοὺς ἀρχιερεῖς, ἵνα παραδῷ αὐτὸν[10] αὐτοῖς. 11. Οἱ δὲ ἀκούσαντες ἐχάρησαν, καὶ ἐπηγγείλαντο αὐτῷ ἀργύριον δοῦναι· καὶ ἐζήτει πῶς εὐκαίρως αὐτὸν παραδῷ.[11]

[1] τουτο το μυρον ABCLΔ al. Vide below.

[2] δην. τριακ. in ℵCDL (Tisch.). T.R. as in ABΔΣ al. (W.H. marg.).

[3] εν εμοι in ℵABCDLΔΣ al. (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] αυτοις with παντοτε following in BL sah. cop. (W.H. with παν. in brackets). ℵ omits both (Tisch.). αυτους in AΣ al.

[5] εσχεν in ℵABCDLΔΣ al.; omit αυτη BL cursives.

[6] το σωμα μου in ℵBDLΣ (W.H.).

[7] δε after αμην in ℵBDLΔ al.

[8] ℵBDL omit τουτο, inserted, as δε is omitted, after Mt.

[9] For ο Ι. ο Ισ. εις ℵBCD have Ι. Ισ., and ℵBCL ο εις.

[10] αυτον παραδοι in BD (προδοι). ℵCLΔ also place αυτον first.

[11] παραδοι in BD; αυτον before ευκαιρως in ℵABCLΔ.

number is here in the genitive of price after πραθῆναι. In 1 Cor. xv. 6 ἐπάνω is followed by a dative depending on ὤφθη.—Ver. 6. ἐν ἐμοί, in me (cf. Mt. xvii. 12), for the more usual εἰς ἐμέ (in Mt., and imported into Mk. in T.R.).—Ver. 7. καὶ ὅταν θέλητε, etc., and when ye wish ye can do them a kindness; a thought implied in the previous clause (the poor ye have always), and probably an expansion by Mk. (cf. Mt.), yet not superfluous: suggesting the thought that expenditure in one direction does not disqualify for beneficent acts in another. The willing-minded will always have enough for all purposes.—Ver. 8. ὃ ἔσχεν (suppl. ποιεῖν), what she had to do she did; the reference being not to the measure of her power (wealth) but to her opportunity: she did what lay to her hand, and could only be done then.—προέλαβε μυρίσαι, she anticipated the anointing; the latter verb here only, the former in 1 Cor. xi. 21, Gal. vi. 1.—ἐνταφιασμόν: the noun answering to the verb in Mt., here and in John and in one place in the classics. —Ver. 9. εἰς ὅλον τ. κ. for ἐν ο., etc., in Mt.; a constr. praeg., the idea of going to all parts of the world with the gospel being understood.

Vv. 10-11. Judas offers to betray his Master (Mt. xxvi. 14-16, Lk. xxii. 3-6).—Ver. 11. ἐχάρησαν, they rejoiced; when one of the twelve companions of Jesus unexpectedly turned up ready to deliver his Master into their hands. A most vivid feature omitted by Mt. in his summarising way. Well might they rejoice, as but for this windfall they might have been totally at a loss how to compass their end.—ἐπηγγείλαντο, they promised to pay, did not actually pay on the spot, as Mt.'s statement implies (ἔστησαν, ver. 15).—ἐζήτει, cf. ἐζήτουν, ver. 1, in reference to the Sanhedrists. They were seeking means of getting rid of Jesus; Judas was now on the outlook for a chance of betraying Him into their hands.—εὐκαίρως here only in N. T., the

12. ΚΑΙ τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν ἀζύμων, ὅτε τὸ πάσχα ἔθυον, λέγουσιν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, "Ποῦ θέλεις ἀπελθόντες ἑτοιμάσωμεν ἵνα φάγῃς τὸ πάσχα;" 13. Καὶ ἀποστέλλει δύο τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Ὑπάγετε εἰς τὴν πόλιν· καὶ ἀπαντήσει ὑμῖν ἄνθρωπος κεράμιον ὕδατος βαστάζων· ἀκολουθήσατε αὐτῷ, 14. καὶ ὅπου ἐὰν εἰσέλθῃ, εἴπατε τῷ οἰκοδεσπότῃ, Ὅτι ὁ διδάσκαλος λέγει, Ποῦ ἐστι τὸ κατάλυμα,[1] ὅπου τὸ πάσχα μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν μου φάγω; 15. καὶ αὐτὸς ὑμῖν δείξει ἀνώγεον[2] μέγα ἐστρωμένον ἕτοιμον· ἐκεῖ[3] ἑτοιμάσατε ἡμῖν." 16. Καὶ ἐξῆλθον οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ,[4] καὶ ἦλθον εἰς τὴν πόλιν, καὶ εὗρον καθὼς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἡτοίμασαν τὸ πάσχα.

17. Καὶ ὀψίας γενομένης ἔρχεται μετὰ τῶν δώδεκα· 18. καὶ ἀνακειμένων αὐτῶν καὶ ἐσθιόντων, εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς,[5] "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι εἷς ἐξ ὑμῶν παραδώσει με, ὁ ἐσθίων[6] μετ' ἐμοῦ." 19. Οἱ δὲ[7] ἤρξαντο λυπεῖσθαι, καὶ λέγειν αὐτῷ εἷς καθ' εἷς, "Μή τι ἐγώ;"

[1] μου after καταλυμα in ℵBCDLΔΣ. Vide below.
[2] αναγαιον in ℵABCDL al.
[3] και before εκει in ℵBCDL.
[4] Omit αυτου ℵBLΔ.
[5] ο Ι. ειπεν in ℵBCL.
[6] B has των εσθιοντων (W.H. marg.).
[7] οι δε omitted in ℵBL cop.

adjective and verb in Mk. vi. 21, 31, the noun in Mt. xxvi. 16.

Vv. 12-16. Arrangements for paschal feast (Mt. xxvi. 17-19, Lk. xxii. 7-13). Mk. is much more circumstantial in this section than Mt., his apparent aim being to explain how Judas did not find his opportunity at the paschal supper, the place of celebration being carefully concealed beforehand.—Ver. 12. τῇ π. ἡμέρᾳ τ. ἀ. ὅτε τ. πάσχα ἔθυον: again a double note of time, the second clause indicating precisely that by the first day is meant the 14th Nisan. Schanz, following the Greek Fathers, takes πρώτῃ in the first clause as = προτέρᾳ, yielding the same sense as πρὸ τ. ἑορ. τ. πάσχα in John xiii. 1.—ποῦ θέλεις;: the disciples would ask this question in good time, say in the forenoon of the 14th.—Ver. 13. δύο: more exact than Mt.; of course all the disciples would not be sent on such an errand. Lk. names the two.—ὑπάγετε, etc.: the instructions in Mk. are sufficient to guide the messengers. Mt.'s πρὸς τὸν δεῖνα is manifestly too vague, and could not have been spoken by Jesus.—ἄνθρωπος: water-carrying was generally the occupation of women; hence a man performing the office would be more noticeable.—κεράμιον (neuter of adjective κεράμιος, earthen), an earthen pitcher, here and in Lk. xxii. 10.—Ver. 14. τὸ κατάλυμά μου, my guest chamber. This μου of the best texts is interesting as suggesting a previous understanding between Jesus and the householder. It is not necessary to import the miraculous into the narrative.—Ver. 15. ἀνάγαιον (ἀνά, γαῖα = γῆ), a room above the earth, an upper room.—μέγα, large, enough for the company.—ἐστρωμένον, furnished with table-cushions. — ἕτοιμον, perhaps a synonym for ἐστρωμένον = furnished, all ready; possibly pointing to the removal of leaven (C.G.T.).

Vv. 17-21. The presence of a traitor announced (Mt. xxvi. 20-25, Lk. xxii. 21-23).—Ver. 17. ἔρχεται: after sunset He cometh to the place appointed for the feast, presumably after the two who had been sent to make arrangements had rejoined the company.—Ver. 18. ὁ ἐσθίων μετ' ἐμοῦ: this clause, omitted in Mt., is designed to indicate, not the culprit, but the gravity of his offence = one of you, one who eats bread with me, a table companion.—Ver. 19. εἷς κατὰ εἷς, one by one = εἷς ἕκαστος in Mt.; κατὰ is used adverbially, and hence is followed by εἷς instead of ἕνα. For other instances of this usage of late Greek vide John viii. 9, Rom. xii. 5, and cf. Winer, § xxxvii. 3.—Ver. 20. To the anxious questioning of the disciples Mk.

Καὶ ἄλλος, "Μή τι ἐγώ[1];" 20. Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς[2] εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Εἷς ἐκ[3] τῶν δώδεκα, ὁ ἐμβαπτόμενος μετ' ἐμοῦ εἰς τὸ τρυβλίον.[4] 21. ὁ μὲν υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ὑπάγει, καθὼς γέγραπται περὶ αὐτοῦ[5]· οὐαὶ δὲ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ, δι' οὗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται· καλὸν ἦν[6] αὐτῷ, εἰ οὐκ ἐγεννήθη ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος."

22. Καὶ ἐσθιόντων αὐτῶν, λαβὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς[7] ἄρτον εὐλογήσας ἔκλασε, καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς, καὶ εἶπε, "Λάβετε, φάγετε.[8] τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ σῶμά μου." 23. Καὶ λαβὼν τὸ[9] ποτήριον εὐχαριστήσας ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἔπιον ἐξ αὐτοῦ πάντες· 24. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ αἷμά μου, τὸ τῆς καινῆς διαθήκης,[10] τὸ περὶ πολλῶν ἐκχυνόμενον.[11] 25. ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι οὐκέτι οὐ μὴ πίω ἐκ τοῦ γεννήματος τῆς ἀμπέλου, ἕως τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης, ὅταν αὐτὸ πίνω καινὸν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ."

[1] και αλλος μη τι εγω (ADΣ al.) omitted in BCLPΔ, possibly by similar ending (omit Tisch., W.H.).

[2] Omitted in ℵBCDL; a mere mechanical expletive.

[3] ℵBCL sah. cop. omit εκ (it comes from ver. 18).

[4] BC have το εν τρυβ. (W.H. brackets: ἐν).

[5] οτι introduces this clause (ο μεν υιος, etc.) in ℵBL sah. cop.

[6] BL sah. omit ην. [7] BD omit ο Ι. (from Mt.).

[8] φαγετε only in later uncials (Tisch., W.H., omit).

[9] ℵBCDLΔΣ omit το (from Lk.).

[10] For το τ. καινης δ. ℵBCL have της διαθ. (D omits καινης).

[11] ℵBCDLΔ have εκχυννομενον υπερ πολλων. T.R. from Mt.

makes Jesus reply: one of the Twelve; he who dippeth with me in the dish. A repetition of the original declaration with variations: the Twelve for you, and dipping in the dish for eating; the former bringing out the gravity of the fact, the Twelve chosen to be Apostles of the faith, one of them the traitor of its Author; the latter narrowing the circle within which the traitor is to be found. Twelve ate with Jesus, only three or four would dip with Him.—ἐμβαπτόμενος, middle, dipping with his own hand: "haec vis medii verbi," Bengel.—Ver. 21. ὅτι, assigns a reason for the fact just stated. To fulfil Scripture (Ps. xli. 9) the Son of Man must go from the earth through betrayal by an intimate. This verse contains an instance in Mk of the construction μὲν δὲ (again in v. 38 and in xvi. 19, 20).—καλὸν αὐτῷ, good for him, without the ἦν as in Mt. For the construction vide on Mt. and Burton, M. and T. in N. T., § 248.—ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος: this repetition (vide τῷ ἀ. ἐκ. above) gives a tragic solemnity to the utterance = good for him, if he had not been born, that man! Cf. Mk. ii. 20, "days will come, etc., and then shall they fast, in that day".

Vv. 22-25. The Lord's Supper (Mt. xxvi. 26-29, Lk. xxii. 19-20), vide notes on Mt.'s account, to which Mk.'s closely corresponds.—Ver. 22. ἐσθιόντων α., while they were eating, as in ver. 18; a very general indication of time. This and the announcement of the betrayal are for Mt. and Mk. the two memorabilia of the paschal feast of Jesus with His disciples, and all they know is that they happened during feast-time.—λάβετε, take, without φάγετε, as in Mt.; the more laconic expression likely to be the original. "Take" implies "eat".—Ver. 23. καὶ ἔπιον, etc., and they drank of it, all. In Mt.'s account Jesus bids them drink, as He had previously bidden them eat. Mk.'s version strikes one as the more primitive; Mt.'s as influenced by liturgical usage.—Ver. 24. καὶ εἶπεν: while they drank the cup (not after they had drunk it, De Wette: nor before they began to drink, as Mt.'s narrative by itself would suggest), Jesus explained to them the symbolic import of

26. Καὶ ὑμνήσαντες ἐξῆλθον εἰς τὸ ὄρος τῶν Ἐλαιῶν. 27. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ὅτι πάντες σκανδαλισθήσεσθε ἐν ἐμοὶ ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ[1]· ὅτι γέγραπται, 'Πατάξω τὸν ποιμένα, καὶ διασκορπισθήσεται τὰ πρόβατα.[2] 28. Ἀλλὰ μετὰ τὸ ἐγερθῆναί με, προάξω ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν." 29. Ὁ δὲ Πέτρος ἔφη αὐτῷ, "Καὶ εἰ[3] πάντες σκανδαλισθήσονται, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγώ." 30. Καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ἀμὴν λέγω σοι, ὅτι[4] σήμερον ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ,[5] πρὶν ἢ δὶς ἀλέκτορα φωνῆσαι, τρὶς ἀπαρνήσῃ με."[6] 31. Ὁ δὲ ἐκ περισσοῦ ἔλεγε μᾶλλον,[7] "Ἐάν με δέῃ συναποθανεῖν σοι, οὐ μή σε ἀπαρνήσομαι." Ὡσαύτως δὲ[8] καὶ πάντες ἔλεγον.

32. ΚΑΙ ἔρχονται εἰς χωρίον οὗ τὸ ὄνομα Γεθσημανῆ· καὶ λέγει τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, "Καθίσατε ὧδε, ἕως προσεύξωμαι." 33. Καὶ

[1] ℵBCDLΔ al. omit εν εμοι . . . ταυτῃ, which comes from Mt.

[2] τα προβ. διασκορπ. in ℵBCDL; διασκορπισθησονται in ℵBCDLΔΣ.

[3] ει και in ℵBCGL (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] Add συ ABLΣ al., omitted in ℵCDΔ (Tisch., W.H., adopt; vide below).

[5] ταυτῃ τ. ν., without εν, in ℵBCDL (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] με before απαρ. in ℵBCDΔ (T.R. = Mt.).

[7] εκπερισσως in ℵBCD; ελαλει in ℵBDL; omit μαλλον ℵBCDL.

[8] B omits δε (W.H. brackets).

the cup. The important point in Mk.'s account of the words, as compared with Mt.'s, is the omission of the expression, εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν.

Vv. 26-31. On the way to Gethsemane (Mt. xxvi. 30-35, Lk. xxii. 39).—Ver. 26, exactly as in Mt. xxvi. 30, states that after singing the paschal hymn the company went forth towards the Mount of Olives.—Ver. 27. πάντες σκανδαλισθήσεσθε, ye all shall be made to stumble; absolutely, without the addition of ἐν ἐμοὶ ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ imported into the text from Mt. in T.R. It was a startling announcement in broad general terms that the disciple-circle was about to experience a moral breakdown. The announcement was made not by way of reproach, but rather as a preface to a more cheering prophecy of an early reunion.—Ver. 28. ἀλλὰ μ.: stronger than Mt.'s μ. δὲ=ye shall be offended, but (be of good cheer) after my resurrection I will go before you, as your Shepherd (προάξω ὑμᾶς) into Galilee.—Ver. 29. It is the former part of the Master's speech that lays hold of Peter's mind; hence he promptly proceeds to make protestations of fidelity.—εἰ καὶ, etc.: even if (as is likely) all the rest shall be offended (the future, because the case put is conceived to be probable), yet certainly (ἀλλ' strongly opposing what follows to what goes before; vide Klotz, p. 93, on the force of ἀλλὰ in the apodosis of a conditional proposition) not I.—Ver. 30. To this over-confident ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγώ of the disciple, the Master returns a very pointed and peremptory reply: I tell thee that thou (σὺ emphatic) to-day (σήμερον), on this night (more precise indication of time), before the cock crow twice (still more precise indication of time), shall deny me, not once, but again and again and again (τρίς).—Ver. 31. ἐκπερισσῶς, abundantly in matter and manner, with vehemence and iteration; a ἅπαξ λεγ.—ἐλάλει, kept saying: that he would not deny his Master even if he had to die for it.—ὡσαύτως, a stronger word than Mt.'s ὁμοίως=in the same way, and probably in the same words. But the words of the others were simply a faint echo of Peter's vehement and copious talk. They feebly said once (ἔλεγον = εἶπον) what he said strongly again and again (ἐλάλει).

Vv. 32-42. In Gethsemane (Mt. xxvi. 36-46, Lk. xxii. 40-46).—Ver. 33. ἤρξατο, introduces the description of our Lord's awful experience in the garden.—ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, to be amazed; in Mk. only, first in ix. 15, where see remarks on its meaning. Though Jesus had long παραλαμβάνει τὸν Πέτρον καὶ τὸν Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην[1] μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ.[2] Καὶ ἤρξατο ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι καὶ ἀδημονεῖν. 34. καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Περίλυπός ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου ἕως θανάτου· μείνατε ὧδε καὶ γρηγορεῖτε." 35. Καὶ προελθὼν[3] μικρόν, ἔπεσεν[4] ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, καὶ προσηύχετο, ἵνα, εἰ δυνατόν ἐστι, παρέλθῃ ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἡ ὥρα· 36. καὶ ἔλεγεν, "Ἀββᾶ, ὁ πατήρ, πάντα δυνατά σοι. παρένεγκε τὸ ποτήριον ἀπ' ἐμοῦ τοῦτο[5]· ἀλλ' οὐ τί ἐγὼ θέλω, ἀλλὰ τί σύ." 37. Καὶ ἔρχεται καὶ εὑρίσκει αὐτοὺς καθεύδοντας, καὶ λέγει τῷ Πέτρῳ, "Σίμων, καθεύδεις; οὐκ ἴσχυσας μίαν ὥραν γρηγορῆσαι; 38. γρηγορεῖτε καὶ προσεύχεσθε, ἵνα μὴ εἰσέλθητε[6] εἰς πειρασμόν. τὸ μὲν πνεῦμα πρόθυμον, ἡ δὲ σὰρξ ἀσθενής." 39. Καὶ πάλιν ἀπελθὼν προσηύξατο, τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον εἰπών. 40. καὶ ὑποστρέψας εὗρεν αὐτοὺς πάλιν[7] καθεύδοντας· ἦσαν γὰρ οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν βεβαρημένοι,[8] καὶ οὐκ ᾔδεισαν τί αὐτῷ ἀποκριθῶσι.[9]

[1] B has τον before each name (W.H.). Many MSS. have the article only with Πετρον.

[2] μετ αυτου in ℵBCD.

[3] CDLΔ have προσελθων, but προελθων, found in ℵB al., seems to be the word needed. προσελθων is a frequent mistake of the scribes.

[4] επιπτεν in ℵBL (επεσεν from Mt.).

[5] τουτο απ. εμου in ℵABCLΔΣ al.

[6] ελθητε in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.). Weiss rejects the omission of εις before ελθ.; a very frequent mistake in the old MSS.

[7] For υποστρεψας . . . παλιν (ACΔ, Tisch.) ℵBL have παλιν ελθων ευρεν αυτους (W.H.). D the same, omitting παλιν.

[8] αυτων before οι οφ. in ℵBCLΔ, and καταβαρυνομενοι in ABLΔ; καταβαρουμενοι in D.

[9] αποκ. before αυτω ℵABCDL.

known, and had often with realistic plainness spoken of, what was to befall Him, yet the vivid sense of what it all meant came upon His soul at this hour, as a sudden appalling revelation. The other two words used by Mk. to describe Christ's state of mind (ἀδημονεῖν. περίλυπος) occur in Mt. also.—Ver. 35. ἔπιπτεν (ℵBL, ἔπεσεν T.R. as in Mt.), imperfect: He fell again and again on the ground. It was a protracted desperate struggle.—καὶ προσηύχετο ἵνα: Mk. first indicates the gist of Christ's prayers (=that if possible the hour might pass from Him), then reports what Jesus said (ver. 36). In the prayer of Jesus the experience dreaded is called the cup, as in Mt. The Hour and the Cup—both alike solemn, suggestive names.—Ver. 36. Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ: in the parallels simply πάτερ. In the Apostolic Church the use of the double appellation among Gentile Christians was common (vide Rom. viii. 15, Gal. iv. 6), Ἀββᾶ having become a proper name and πατὴρ being added as its interpretation = God our Father. Mk. imparts into the prayer of our Lord this apostolic usage. Jesus doubtless would use only one of the names, probably the Aramaic.—παρένεγκε τ. π. τ., remove this cup; equivalent to παρέλθῃ in ver. 35 (Lk. xxii. 42).—ἀλλ' οὐ, etc.; "but not what (τί for ὅ) I will, but what Thou"; elliptical but clear and expressive: γενήσεται or γενέσθαι δεῖ (not γενέσθω which would demand μὴ before θέλω) is understood (vide Holtzmann, H. C., and Weiss in Meyer).—Ver. 37. τῷ Πέτρῳ: to the disciple who had been so confident of his loyalty, but also from whom Jesus expected most in the way of sympathy.—Σίμων: the old, not the new, disciple, name; ominous.—Ver. 38. This exhortation to watch and pray is given in almost identical terms in Mt. and Mk. It looks like a second-ary version of what our Lord actually said.—Ver. 39. Mk., like Mt., divides

41. Καὶ ἔρχεται τὸ τρίτον, καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, "Καθεύδετε τὸ[1] λοιπὸν καὶ ἀναπαύεσθε. ἀπέχει· ἦλθεν ἡ ὥρα· ἰδού, παραδίδοται ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου εἰς τὰς χεῖρας τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν. 42. ἐγείρεσθε, ἄγωμεν· ἰδού, ὁ παραδιδούς με ἤγγικε."

43. Καὶ εὐθέως, ἔτι αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, παραγίνεται Ἰούδας, εἷς ὢν[2] τῶν δώδεκα, καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὄχλος πολὺς[3] μετὰ μαχαιρῶν καὶ ξύλων, παρὰ τῶν ἀρχιερέων καὶ τῶν γραμματέων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων. 44. [a]δεδώκει δὲ ὁ παραδιδοὺς αὐτὸν σύσσημον αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Ὃν ἂν φιλήσω, αὐτός ἐστι· κρατήσατε αὐτόν, καὶ ἀπαγάγετε[4] ἀσφαλῶς," 45. Καὶ ἐλθών, εὐθέως προσελθὼν αὐτῷ λέγει, "Ῥαββί, ῥαββί[5]·" a Ch. xv. 10, John xi. 57 (omission of argument: usual in N. T.).

[1] το is found in ℵBΔΣ; omitted in CDL (Tisch. retains, W.H. in brackets).

[2] Omit ων ℵABCDLΣ.

[3] ℵBL omit πολυς found in CDΔ (comes from Mt.).

[4] απαγετε in ℵBDL. [5] Ραββει once only in ℵBCDLΔ.

the agony into three acts, but he reports the words spoken by Jesus in prayer only in the first. Mt. gives the prayer of Jesus in the second act, as well as in the first, generalising in the third, where he repeats the formula here used by Mk.: τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον εἰπών.—Ver. 40. καταβαρυνόμενοι, "their eyes were very heavy"; R. V., weighed down with irresistible sleep.—καταβαρύνω, here and occasionally in the Sept. = the more usual καταβαρέω (from the simple verb βαρέω comes βεβαρημένοι in T.R.).—καὶ οὐκ ᾔδεισαν, etc.: this remark recalls the experience of the same three on the hill of transfiguration (cf. ix. 6). But in the earlier instance the reference is to the stupidity produced by sleep, here probably to shame on account of unseasonable sleep. They felt that they ought to have kept awake during their Master's hour of trial, and knew not how to excuse themselves.—Ver. 41. ἀπέχει, "it is enough," A. V. = sufficit in Vulgate; one of the puzzling words in Mk.'s vocabulary to which many meanings have been given. Beza, in doubt as to Jerome's interpretation, was satisfied at last by a quotation from Anacreon coming into his mind, in which the poet, giving instructions to a painter for the portrait of his mistress, concludes: ἀπέχει. βλέπω γὰρ αὐτήν· τάχα, κηρέ, καὶ λαλήσεις = "Enough! the girl herself I view: so like, 'twill soon be speaking, too". Elsner and Raphel follow Beza. Kypke dissents and renders: ἀπέχει, ἦλθεν ἡ ὥρα, as if it were ἦλθε καὶ ἀπ. ἡ ὥ. = the hour (of my passion) is come and calls you and me away from this scene. Most modern commentators accept the rendering, "It is enough". Vide an interesting note in Field's Otium Nor. The meaning is: I have conquered in the struggle; I need your sympathy no longer; you may sleep now if you will.

Vv. 43-52. The apprehension (Mt. xxvi. 47-56, Lk. xxii. 47-53).—Ver. 43. εὐθὺς, etc. (ἰδοὺ in Mt.), straightway, even while He is speaking, appears Judas, who is carefully defined by surname and position as one of the Twelve. At what point of time the traitor left the company on his nefarious errand is not indicated. According to Weiss (in Meyer) the evangelist conceives of Judas as going with the rest to Gethsemane and stealing away from the nine, after the three had been taken apart, having now satisfied himself as to the Master's whereabouts.—παρὰ τ. ἀρχ., etc.: παρὰ goes along with παραγίνεται, and implies that Judas and those with him had an official commission from the authorities, the three classes of whom are carefully specified.—Ver. 44. δεδώκει: the pluperfect, but without augment, vide Winer, § xii. 9.—σύσσημον (neuter of adjective σύσσημος: σύν, σῆμα): a sign previously agreed on (σημεῖον in Mt.), a late word severely condemned by Phrynichus, p. 418, here only in N. T. In Sept. for נֵס an "ensign" (Is. v. 26).—ἀσφαλῶς may mean either: lead Him away with an easy mind (He will not attempt escape), or: lead, etc., cautiously, carefully—He may slip out of your hands as He has done before (Lk. iv. 30). Judas was just the kind of man to have καὶ κατεφίλησεν αὐτόν. 46. Οἱ δὲ ἐπέβαλον ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν,[1] καὶ ἐκράτησαν αὐτόν.

47. Εἷς δέ τις[2] τῶν παρεστηκότων σπασάμενος τὴν μάχαιραν ἔπαισε τὸν δοῦλον τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, καὶ ἀφεῖλεν αὐτοῦ τὸ ὠτίον.[3] 48. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὡς ἐπὶ λῃστὴν ἐξήλθετε μετὰ μαχαιρῶν καὶ ξύλων, συλλαβεῖν με; 49. καθ' ἡμέραν ἤμην πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ διδάσκων, καὶ οὐκ ἐκρατήσατέ με· ἀλλ' ἵνα πληρωθῶσιν αἱ γραφαί." 50. Καὶ ἀφέντες αὐτὸν πάντες ἔφυγον.[4] 51. Καὶ εἷς τις νεανίσκος[5] ἠκολούθει[6] αὐτῷ, περιβεβλημένος σινδόνα ἐπὶ γυμνοῦ. καὶ κρατοῦσιν αὐτὸν οἱ νεανίσκοι[7]· 52. ὁ δὲ καταλιπὼν τὴν σινδόνα γυμνὸς ἔφυγεν ἀπ' αὐτῶν.[8]

[1] For επ αυτον τ. χ. αυτων BDL have simply τας χειρας αυτω, the most probable reading.

[2] εις δε without τις in ℵAL (W.H. have τις bracketed); BCΔ have τις.

[3] ωταριον in ℵBD; ωτιον in CLΔ (probably from Mt.).

[4] εφυγον παντες in ℵBCLΔ, preferable reading. Vide below.

[5] Instead of εις τις νεαν. (AΔΣ al.) ℵBCL have νεαν. τις.

[6] συνηκ. in ℵBCL. D = T.R. Δ συνηκολουθησεν.

[7] ℵBCDLΔ omit οι νεαν.

[8] ℵBCL omit απ αυτων (a gloss found in ADΔΣ al.).

a superstitious dread of Christ's preternatural power.—Ver. 45. ἐλθὼν εὐθὺς προσελθὼν = arrived on the spot he without delay approaches Jesus; no hesitation, promptly and adroitly done.—Ῥαββί: without Mt.'s χαῖρε, and only once spoken (twice in T.R.), the fervour of false love finding expression in the kiss (κατεφίλησεν, vide notes on Mt.) rather than in words.

Vv. 47-52. Attempt at rescue.—Ver. 47. εἷς τ. παρ., one of those standing by, i.e., one of the three, Peter according to the fourth gospel (xviii. 10).—τὴν μάχ., the sword = his sword, as if each disciple was armed; vide on Mt.—ὠτάριον = ὠτίον, T.R., diminutive of οὖς; the use of diminutives for the members of the body was common in popular speech. Vide Lobeck, Phryn., p. 211.—Ver. 48. On this and the following verse vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 49. ἵνα πληρωθῶσιν αἱ γ.: this may be a case of ἵνα with the subjunctive used as an imperative = let the Scriptures be fulfilled. Cf. 2 Cor. viii. 7, last clause, and consult Winer, § xliii. 5 d. — Ver. 50. καὶ ἀφέντες, etc., and deserting Him fled all (πάντες last, vide above): the nine with the three, the three not less than the nine—all alike panic-stricken.—Ver. 51 introduces a little anecdote peculiar to Mk., the story of an unknown friend, not one of the Twelve, who had joined the company, and did not fly with the rest.—συνηκολούθει α., was following Jesus; when He was being led away, and after the disciples had fled.—περιβεβλημένος σινδόνα ἐπὶ γυμνοῦ: this suggests that the youth, on hearing some sudden report, rose out of his bed and rushed out in his night-shirt, or, being absolutely naked, hurriedly threw about his body a loose cotton or linen sheet. The statement that on being laid hold of he cast off the garment favours the latter alternative.—Ver. 52. γυμνὸς ἔφ., fled naked, in the literal sense, whereon Bengel remarks: "on a night not without a moon; fear conquers shame in great danger". (A few years ago a young wife chased a thief, who had been stealing her wedding presents, through the streets of Glasgow, in the early hours of the morning, in her night-gown; not without success. Her husband modestly stayed behind to put on his clothes.)—Who was this young man? Mk. the evangelist, say many, arguing: the story was of no interest to any one but the hero of it, therefore the hero was the teller of the tale. A good argument, unless a motive can be assigned for the insertion of the narrative other than

53. ΚΑΙ ἀπήγαγον τὸν Ἰησοῦν πρὸς τὸν ἀρχιερέα· καὶ συνέρχονται αὐτῷ[1] πάντες οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς. 54. Καὶ ὁ Πέτρος ἀπὸ μακρόθεν ἠκολούθησεν αὐτῷ ἕως ἔσω εἰς τὴν αὐλὴν τοῦ ἀρχιερέως· καὶ ἦν συγκαθήμενος μετὰ τῶν ὑπηρετῶν, καὶ θερμαινόμενος πρὸς τὸ φῶς. 55. Οἱ δὲ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ ὅλον τὸ συνέδριον ἐζήτουν κατὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ μαρτυρίαν, εἰς τὸ θανατῶσαι αὐτόν· καὶ οὐχ εὕρισκον. 56. πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐψευδομαρτύρουν κατ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἴσαι αἱ μαρτυρίαι οὐκ ἦσαν. 57. καί τινες ἀναστάντες ἐψευδομαρτύρουν κατ' αὐτοῦ, λέγοντες, 58. "Ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἠκούσαμεν αὐτοῦ λέγοντος, Ὅτι ἐγὼ καταλύσω τὸν ναὸν τοῦτον τὸν χειροποίητον, καὶ διὰ τριῶν ἡμερῶν ἄλλον ἀχειροποίητον οἰκοδομήσω." 59. Καὶ merely personal interest. Schanz suggests a desire to exhibit in a concrete instance the danger of the situation, and the ferocity of the enemies of Jesus. On the whole one feels inclined to acquiesce in the judgment of Hahn, quoted by Holtz., H. C., that in this curious incident we have "the monogram of the painter (Mk.) in a dark corner of the picture". Brandt, however (Die Ev. Gesch., p. 28), dissents from this view.

[1] ℵDLΔ omit αυτω, found in BΣ al. pler. (W.H. marg.).

Vv. 53-65. Before Caiaphas (Mt. xxvi. 57-68, Lk. xxii. 54, 66-71).—Ver. 53. συνέρχονται α. πάντες, etc.: again all the three orders of the Sanhedrists are named, who have been summoned to meet about the time the party sent to apprehend Jesus might be expected to arrive.—Ver. 54. ὁ Πέτρος: the story of Peter's denial begins here, and, after being suspended by the account of the trial, is resumed at ver. 66.—ἀπὸ μακρόθεν, from afar (ἀπὸ redundant here as elsewhere), fearful, yet drawn on by love and curiosity.—ἕως ἔσω εἰς: a redundant but expressive combination, suggesting the idea of one stealthily feeling his way into the court of the palace, venturing further and further in, and gaining courage with each step (vide Weiss, Mk.-Evan., p. 470).—θερμαινόμενος: nights cold even at Easter in Palestine; a fire in the court welcome in the early hours of morning, when something unusual was going on. "However hot it may be in the daytime, the nights in spring are almost always cold"—Furrer, Wanderungen, p. 241.—πρὸς τὸ φῶς, at the fire; here called light, because it was there to give light as well as heat. Elsner and Raphel cite instances of the use of φῶς for fire from Xenophon. Hesychius gives πῦρ as one of its meanings.

Vv. 55-65. The trial and condemnation.—Ver. 55. μαρτυρίαν: Mt. has ψευδομαρτυρίαν, justly so characterised, because the Sanhedrists wanted evidence for a foregone conclusion: evidence that would justify a sentence of death.—Ver. 56. ἴσαι, equal, to the same effect, as the testimonies of true witnesses would, of course, be. Grotius takes the word as meaning, not equal to one another, but equal to the demands of weighty evidence and justifying condemnation. Elsner agrees, arguing from the use of the word again, in reference to the evidence about the temple logion of Jesus. These witnesses, he holds, are not represented as making conflicting statements, but simply as making statements not sufficiently weighty—not equal to the occasion. There is some force in this.—Ver. 57. τινες, some, for which Mt. has the more definite δύο, the smallest number necessary to establish a matter.—Ver. 58. ὅτι, etc.: Mk.'s version of the testimony borne by the witnesses differs in important respects from that of Mt.; viz., by the insertion of the words τὸν χειροποίητον and ἄλλον ἀχειροποίητον. Mt.'s form doubtless comes nearest to what the witnesses actually said. Mk.'s puts into their mouths, to a certain extent, the sense in which he and his fellow-Christians understood Christ's saying, viz., as a prophecy that the material temple would be superseded by a spiritual temple = the community of believers in Jesus. If they had really spoken, as here reported, the falsehood would have lain rather in the animus of their statement than in its meaning: the animus of men who regarded it as impious to speak of the temple of God being destroyed, as contemptuous to οὐδὲ οὕτως ἴση ἦν ἡ μαρτυρία αὐτῶν. 60. Καὶ ἀναστὰς ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς εἰς τὸ[1] μέσον ἐπηρώτησε τὸν Ἰησοῦν, λέγων, "Οὐκ ἀποκρίνῃ οὐδέν; τί οὗτοί σου καταμαρτυροῦσιν;" 61. Ὁ δὲ ἐσιώπα, καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπεκρίνατο.[2] Πάλιν ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς ἐπηρώτα αὐτόν, καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ, "Σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστός, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ εὐλογητοῦ;" 62. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, "Ἐγώ εἰμι. καὶ ὄψεσθε τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου καθήμενον ἐκ δεξιῶν[3] τῆς δυνάμεως, καὶ ἐρχόμενον μετὰ τῶν νεφελῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ." 63. Ὁ δὲ ἀρχιερεὺς διαρρήξας τοὺς χιτῶνας αὐτοῦ λέγει, "Τί ἔτι χρείαν ἔχομεν μαρτύρων; 64. ἠκούσατε τῆς βλασφημίας· τί ὑμῖν φαίνεται;" Οἱ δὲ πάντες κατέκριναν αὐτὸν εἶναι ἔνοχον[4] θανάτου. 65. Καὶ ἤρξαντό τινες ἐμπτύειν αὐτῷ, καὶ περικαλύπτειν τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ,[5] καὶ κολαφίζειν αὐτόν, καὶ λέγειν αὐτῷ, "Προφήτευσον·" καὶ οἱ ὑπηρέται ῥαπίσμασιν αὐτὸν ἔβαλλον.[6]

66. Καὶ ὄντος τοῦ Πέτρου ἐν τῇ αὐλῇ κάτω,[7] ἔρχεται μία τῶν

[1] ℵABCLΔΣ al. pl. omit το found in D.

[2] For ουδεν απεκ. (ADΔΣ al.) ℵBCL 33 sah. cop. have ουκ απεκ. ουδεν.

[3] εκ δεξ. καθ. in ℵBCDLΔΣ al.

[4] ενοχον ειναι in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[5] αυτου το προσ. in ℵBCLΔ 33.

[6] ελαβον in ℵABCLΔ. εβαλλον substituted in later MSS. for a word not understood.

[7] κατω εν τ. αυλ. in ℵBCL. D omits κατω.

characterise it as hand-made, and as blasphemous to suggest that another could take its place.—Ver. 60. εἰς μέσον: a graphic feature in Mk., suggesting that the high priest arose from his seat and advanced into the semi-circle of the council towards Jesus—the action of an irritated, baffled man.—οὐκ ἀποκρίνῃ: on the high priest's question vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 61. ἐσιώπα καὶ, etc.: one of Mk.'s dualisms, yet not idle repetition = He maintained the silence He had observed up to that point (imperfect), and He answered nothing to the high priest's pointed question (aorist).—πάλιν: the high priest makes another attempt to draw Jesus into some self-condemning utterance, this time successfully.—τοῦ εὐλογητοῦ, the Blessed One, here only, absolutely, as a name for God. Usually, an epithet attached to Κύριος (Wünsche, Beiträge).—Ver. 62. Ἐγώ εἰμι. On Christ's reply to the high priest affirming the Messianic claim, vide notes on Mt.—Ver. 63. τοὺς χιτῶνας, his tunics, or undergarments, of which persons in good position wore two. —Ver. 64. τί ὑμῖν φαίνεται, what appears to you to be the appropriate penalty of such blasphemous speech? = τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ in Mt. Nösgen denies the equivalence, and renders Mk.'s peculiar phrase: what lies for you on the hand, what is now your duty? with appeal to Xenophon, Anab., v., 7, 3.—Ver. 65. τινες: presumably Sanhedrists.—περικαλύπτειν: Mt. says nothing of this, but he as well as Mk. represents them as asking Jesus to prophesy. Mt.'s version implies that Jesus was struck from behind, Mk.'s in front.—οἱ ὑπηρέται: following the example of their masters.—ῥαπίσμασιν αὐτὸν ἔλαβον, received Him with slaps of the open hand: a phrase recalling the Latin, accipere aliquem verberibus.

Vv. 66-72. Peter's denial (Mt. xxvi. 69-75, Lk. xxii. 56-62).—Ver. 66. κάτω ἐ. τ. α., below in the court, implying that the trial of Jesus had taken place in a chamber on a higher level.—ἔρχεται μία, etc., cometh one of the maids of the high priest—a servant in his palace, on some errand that night when all things were out of their usual course. That a maid should be astir and on duty at that unseasonable hour was itself a sign that something extraordinary was going on.—Ver. 67. ἰδοῦσα: Peter, sitting at the fire, catches her eye, and she sees at once

παιδισκῶν τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, 67. καὶ ἰδοῦσα τὸν Πέτρον θερμαινόμενον, ἐμβλέψασα αὐτῷ λέγει, "Καὶ σὺ μετὰ τοῦ Ναζαρηνοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἦσθα."[1] 68. Ὁ δὲ ἠρνήσατο, λέγων, "Οὐκ[2] οἶδα, οὐδὲ[2] ἐπίσταμαι τί σὺ[3] λέγεις." Καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ἔξω εἰς τὸ προαύλιον· καὶ ἀλέκτωρ ἐφώνησε.[4] 69. Καὶ ἡ παιδίσκη ἰδοῦσα αὐτὸν πάλιν ἤρξατο[5] λέγειν τοῖς παρεστηκόσιν,[6] "Ὅτι οὗτος ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐστιν." 70. Ὁ δὲ πάλιν ἠρνεῖτο. Καὶ μετὰ μικρὸν πάλιν οἱ παρεστῶτες ἔλεγον τῷ Πέτρῳ, "Ἀληθῶς

[1] ησθα before I. with του prefixed in BCL. The readings vary much here, but that of BCL (Tisch., W.H., Weiss) is the most like Mk.'s graphic style. Vide below.

[2] ουτε ουτε in ℵBDL.

[3] συ τι in ℵBCLΔΣ 33, altered by the scribes into the smoother τι συ.

[4] και αλεκτωρ εφωνησεν omitted in ℵBL; found in CDΔ al. Vide below.

[5] ηρξατο παλιν in ℵCLΔ (Tisch., W.H., text). B omits, and for λεγειν following has ειπεν (W.H. marg.).

[6] παρεστωσιν in ℵBCLΔ.

that he is a stranger. Going closer to him, and looking sharply into his face in the dim fire-light (ἐμβλέψασα), she comes at once to her conclusion.—καὶ σὺ, etc., thou also wert with the Nazarene—that Jesus; spoken in a contemptuous manner, a faithful echo of the tone of her superiors. The girl had probably seen Peter in Christ's company in the streets of Jerusalem, or in the temple during the last few days, and doubtless she had heard disparaging remarks about the Galilean prophet in the palace.—Ver. 68. οὔτε οἶδα, etc., I neither know nor understand, thou, what thou sayest. —οὔτε-οὔτε connect closely the two verbs as expressing inability to comprehend what she means. The unusual emphatic position of σὺ (σὺ τί λέγεις, smoothed down into τί σὺ λ. in T.R.) admirably reflects affected astonishment. —ἐξῆλθεν: he slunk away from the fire into the forecourt—προαύλιον, here only in N. T.—καὶ ἀλέκτωρ ἐφώνησε: these words, omitted in ℵBL, are of very dubious authenticity. Weiss and Holtzmann think they were inserted by copyists under the impression that the words of Jesus to Peter, ver. 30, meant that the cock was to crow twice in close succession, whereas the δὶς referred to the second time of cock-crowing, the beginning of the second watch after midnight. Schanz, while regarding this explanation of δὶς as unnatural, admits that it is difficult to understand how this first crow did not remind Peter of the Lord's warning word.—Ver. 69. ἡ παιδίσκη: the article naturally suggests that it is the same maid, and probably but for harmonistic interests there would have been no doubt on the subject. Yet the fact that Mt. makes it another obliges us to ask whether Mk.'s expression necessarily means the same person. Grotius, whom Rosenmüller follows, says ἡ may here, as occasionally elsewhere = τις. Of more weight is the suggestion that it means the maid on duty in that particular place, the forecourt (Schanz and Klostermann; the remarks of the latter specially worthy of notice). On first thoughts one might deem πάλιν decisive as to identity, but (1) it is wanting in B, and (2) its most probable position is just before λέγειν, and the meaning, that Peter was a second time spoken to (or at) on the subject of his connection with Jesus, not that the same person spoke in both cases. On the whole a certain element of doubt remains, which cannot be eliminated by exegetical considerations. In favour of one maid is the consideration that two able to recognise Peter is more unlikely than one. Yet the two might be together when they saw Peter previously, or the one might point him out to the other that night. In Mt.'s narrative the standers-by seem also to have independent knowledge of Peter. In Mk. the maid gives them information. On the whole, Mk., as was to be expected, gives the clearer picture of the scene.—τοῖς παρεστῶσιν, to those standing by; pointing to Peter, and speaking so that he could hear.—Ver. 70. Now, it is the bystanders who persecute Peter with the charge of being a disciple.—ἀληθῶς: they are quite sure of it, for two reasons:

ἐξ αὐτῶν εἶ· καὶ γὰρ Γαλιλαῖος εἶ, καὶ ἡ λαλιά σου ὁμοιάζει."[1] 71. Ὁ δὲ ἤρξατο ἀναθεματίζειν καὶ ὀμνύειν,[2] "Ὅτι οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον τοῦτον, ὃν λέγετε." 72. Καὶ[3] ἐκ δευτέρου ἀλέκτωρ ἐφώνησε. Καὶ ἀνεμνήσθη ὁ Πέτρος τοῦ ῥήματος οὗ[4] εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ὅτι πρὶν ἀλέκτορα φωνῆσαι δίς,[5] ἀπαρνήσῃ με τρίς."[5] καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν[6] ἔκλαιε.

[1] και η λαλ. σ. ομοιαζει is imported from Mt.; omitted in ℵBCDL (Tisch., W.H., Weiss).

[2] ομνυναι in BL al. (ομνυειν in Mt.).

[3] και followed by ευθυς in ℵBLD; omitted in ACINX, etc., which insert και αλεκ. εφωνησε in ver. 68.

[4] το ρημα ως in ℵABCLΔ, corrected into the more usual του ρηματος in some copies.

[5] B places δις before φωνησαι, and ℵBCLΔ have τρις με απαρνηση instead of the order in T.R.

[6] For επιβαλων εκλαιε D has ηρξατο κλαιειν, and is followed by Latin, Egyptian, and Syriac verss., including Syr. Sin.

(1) the maid's confidence not specified but implied in the καὶ γὰρ, which introduces an additional reason; (2) Γαλιλαῖος εἶ = you are (by your speech) a Galilean. The addition in some MSS., καὶ ἡ λαλία σ., etc., explanatory of the term Galilean, would be quite in Mk.'s manner, but the best authorities omit it.—Ver. 71. ἀναθεματίζειν: used absolutely, to call down curses on himself in case he was telling lies. Mt. has καταθ., which is probably a contraction from καταναθ. (in T.R.).—Ver. 72. εὐθὺς: omitted in the MSS. which insert a first cock-crow in ver. 68, as implying that this was the first crow at that hour, as in Mt.—ἐκ δευτέρου (omitted in ℵL because apparently implying a first cock-crow during the denial, which they omit) must be understood with Weiss as referring to the second time of cock-crowing (three in the morning), the first being at midnight.—ἐπιβαλὼν: another puzzle in Mk.'s vocabulary; very variously interpreted. Most modern interpreters adopt the rendering in the A. V. and R. V., "when he thought thereon" (ἐπιβαλὼν τὸν νοῦν). Weizsäcker: "er bedachte es und weinte". Theophylact took ἐπιβ = ἐπικαλυψάμενος τὴν κεφαλήν, having covered his head (that he might weep unrestrainedly), a rendering which Fritzsche and Field (Otium Nor.) decidedly support. Field remarks: "it may have been a trivial or colloquial word, such as would have stirred the bile of a Phrynichus or a Thomas Magister, who would have inserted it in their Index Expurgatorius, with a caution: ἐπιβαλὼν μὴ λέγε ἀλλὰ ἐγκαλυψάμενος ἢ ἐπικαλυψάμενος". Brandt (Die Ev. Gesch., p. 31), adopting a suggestion by Holwerda, thinks the original word may have been ἐκβαλὼν = going out, or flinging himself out. Klostermann ingeniously suggests: "stopped suddenly in his course of denial, like a man, running headlong, knocking suddenly against an obstacle in his way". The choice seems to lie between the renderings: "thinking thereon" and "covering his head".

CHAPTER XV. THE PASSION HISTORY CONTINUED. — Vv. 1-5. Before Pilate (Mt. xxvii. 1-14, Lk. xxiii. 1-10).—Ver. 1. εὐθὺς, πρωΐ, without delay, quam primum, in the morning watch, which might mean any time between three and six, but probably signifies after sunrise. —συμβούλιον will mean either a consultation or the result, the resolution come to, according as we adopt the reading: ποιήσαντες (T.R. = BΔ) or ἑτοιμάσαντες (ℵCL).—καὶ ὅλον τὸ συνέδριον: the καὶ simply identifies = even the whole Sanhedrim, and does not imply that, besides the three classes previously mentioned, some others were present (e.g., στρατηγοὺς τοῦ ἱεροῦ: Lk. xxii. 52). This added clause signifies that it was a very important meeting, as, in view of its aim, to prepare the case for Pilate, it obviously was. The Sanhedrists had accomplished nothing till they had got the matter put in such a form that they might hope to prevail with the procurator, with whom lay the jus gladii, to do their wicked will, and

XV. 1. ΚΑΙ εὐθέως ἐπὶ τὸ πρωῒ[1] συμβούλιον ποιήσαντες[2] οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς μετὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ γραμματέων, καὶ ὅλον τὸ συνέδριον, δήσαντες τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἀπήνεγκαν καὶ παρέδωκαν τῷ[3] Πιλάτῳ. 2. καὶ ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτὸν ὁ Πιλάτος, "Σὺ εἶ ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων;" Ὁ δὲ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Σὺ λέγεις." 3. Καὶ κατηγόρουν αὐτοῦ οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς πολλά· 4. ὁ δὲ Πιλάτος πάλιν ἐπηρώτησεν[4] αὐτόν, λέγων,[5] "Οὐκ ἀποκρίνῃ οὐδέν; ἴδε, πόσα σου καταμαρτυροῦσιν[6]·" 5. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς οὐκέτι οὐδὲν ἀπεκρίθη, ὥστε θαυμάζειν τὸν Πιλάτον.

6. Κατὰ δὲ ἑορτὴν ἀπέλυεν αὐτοῖς ἕνα δέσμιον, ὅνπερ ᾐτοῦντο.[7] 7. ἦν δὲ ὁ λεγόμενος Βαραββᾶς μετὰ τῶν συστασιαστῶν[8] δεδεμένος,

[1] πρωι without επι το in ℵBCDL.

[2] So in BΔΣ al. ℵCL have ετοιμασαντες (Tisch., W.H., margin).

[3] Omit τω ℵBCDLΔ. [4] επηρωτα in B 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] ℵ omits λεγων (Tisch., W.H., in brackets).

[6] κατηγορουσιν in ℵBCD (Tisch., W.H.). καταμαρ. in T.R. is from Mt.

[7] ον παρητουντο in ℵAB (Tisch., Trg., marg., W.H.). ονπερ (T.R.) is found nowhere else in the N.T. Vide below.

[8] στασιαστων in ℵBCD. Weiss thinks the συσ- (T.R.) has been omitted per incuriam in these MSS.

of course that Jesus claimed to be the Christ would not serve that purpose. Vide notes on Mt.—Πιλάτῳ: without the article in best MSS. on this the first mention; with, in subsequent reference. Mk. does not think it necessary to say who or what Pilate was, not even mentioning, as Mt., that he was the governor.—Ver. 2. σὺ εἶ ὁ β. Pilate's question reveals the secret of the morning meeting. The crafty Sanhedrists put a political construction on the confession of Jesus. The Christ, therefore a pretender to the throne of Israel. Vide on Mt.—Ver. 3. πολλά: either an adverb = much, or the accusative after κατηγόρουν. As to the matter of these accusations vide on Mt. But to what end, when Jesus had confessed that He was King; giving Himself away, so to speak? The Sanhedrists must have seen from Pilate's manner, a smile on his face perhaps, that he did not take the confession seriously. For the reason of this vide on Mt.—Ver. 4. πόσα, answering to πολλά in ver. 3, might mean "how grave," Thayer's Grimm, but probably = how many, as in vi. 38, viii. 5, 19.—Ver. 5. ὥστε θαυμ. τ. Π. Mt. adds λίαν. The governor had never seen a prisoner like this before. He does not believe Him to be a political pretender, but he sees that He is a remarkable man, and feels that he must proceed cautiously, groping his way amid the parties and passions of this strange people.

Vv. 6-15. Jesus or Barabbas? (Mt. xxvii. 15-26, Lk. xxiii. 16-25).—Ver. 6. ἀπέλυεν, imperfect = Mt.'s εἰώθει ἀπολύειν, pointing to a practice of the governor at passover season; on which vide on Mt.—ὅνπερ ᾐτοῦντο, "whomsoever they desired," A. V. The R. V. adopts the reading preferred by W.H., ὃν παρῃτοῦντο, and translates "whom they asked of him". It is difficult to decide between the two readings, as the περ might easily be changed into παρ, and vice versâ. In favour of the T.R. is the fact that παρῃτοῦντο ordinarily in N. T., as in the classics, means to refuse, and also that ὅνπερ very strongly emphasises the finality of the popular choice—they might ask the release of any one, no matter whom—such is the force of περ; it would be granted. On these grounds Field (Otium Nor.) decides for the T. R.—Ver. 7. στασιαστῶν (συστασ., T.R.): this word (here only in N. T.) contains an interesting hint as to the nature of the offence committed by Barabbas and his associates. They were no mere band of brigands (λῃστής: John xviii. 40), but men engaged in an insurrection, probably of a political character, rising out οἵτινες ἐν τῇ στάσει φόνον πεποιήκεισαν. 8. καὶ ἀναβοήσας[1] ὁ ὄχλος ἤρξατο αἰτεῖσθαι, καθὼς ἀεὶ[2] ἐποίει αὐτοῖς. 9. ὁ δὲ Πιλάτος ἀπεκρίθη αὐτοῖς, λέγων, "Θέλετε ἀπολύσω ὑμῖν τὸν βασιλέα τῶν Ἰουδαίων;" 10. Ἐγίνωσκε γὰρ ὅτι διὰ φθόνον παραδεδώκεισαν αὐτὸν οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς.[3] 11. οἱ δὲ ἀρχιερεῖς ἀνέσεισαν τὸν ὄχλον, ἵνα μᾶλλον τὸν Βαραββᾶν ἀπολύσῃ αὐτοῖς· 12. ὁ δὲ Πιλάτος ἀποκριθεὶς πάλιν εἶπεν[4] αὐτοῖς, "Τί οὖν θέλετε[5] ποιήσω ὃν[6] λέγετε βασιλέα[7] τῶν Ἰουδαίων;" 13. Οἱ δὲ πάλιν ἔκραξαν, "Σταύρωσον αὐτόν."

[1] αναβας in ℵBD sah. cop. (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] αει wanting in ℵBΔ sah. cop. (Tisch. and W.H. omit).

[3] B omits οι αρχ. (W.H. in brackets).

[4] For αποκ. παλ. ειπεν ℵBC have παλ. αποκ. ελεγεν.

[5] θελετε, found in D, is omitted in ℵBCΔ 33. Tisch. retains, W.H. omit.

[6] B omits ον (W.H. in brackets). Vide below.

[7] τον before βασ. in ℵABCΔ.

of the restless desire of many for independence, and in connection with that guilty of murder (φόνον), at least some of them (οἵτινες), Barabbas included.—τῇ στάσει: the article refers back to στασιαστῶν = the insurrection implied in there being insurrectionists. Mk. therefore does not refer to the insurrection as known to his readers. Perhaps he knew nothing about it himself, nor do we.—Ver. 8. ἀναβὰς, etc.: Mk. assigns the initiative to the people. So Lk.; Mt. and John to Pilate. The difference is not important to the course of the history. The custom existing, this incident was bound to come about somehow. Nor does it greatly affect the question as to the attitude of Pilate. In either case he was simply feeling his way. The custom gave him a chance of feeling the popular pulse, a most important point for a ruler of his opportunist type.—καθὼς, here = that which.—Ver. 9. θέλετε, etc.: Pilate makes the tentative suggestion that the favoured person should be Jesus; whom he designates "King of the Jews," to see how the people would take a title which the Sanhedrists regarded as a mortal offence.—Ver. 10. ἐγίνωσκεν, it gradually dawned upon him. Pilate would see the animus of the Sanhedrists in their many accusations (ver. 3), from which it would appear that Christ's real offence was His great influence with the people. Hence the attempt to play off the one party against the other: the people against the priests.—Ver. 11. ἀνέσεισαν, the aorist implies that the priests stirred up the people with success, to the effect that their request to Pilate was in favour of Barabbas. One may wonder how they so easily gained their purpose. But Barabbas, as described by Mk., represented a popular passion, which was stronger than any sympathy they might have for so unworldly a character as Jesus—the passion for political liberty. The priests would know how to play on that feeling. What unprincipled characters they were! They accuse Jesus to Pilate of political ambition, and they recommend Barabbas to the people for the same reason. But a "holy" end sanctifies the means! On the contrast between Jesus and Barabbas vide Klostermann.—Ver. 12. It is presupposed that the people have intimated their preference for Barabbas perhaps by the cry: not Jesus, but Barabbas. Hence Pilate proceeds to ask: "what, then, am I to do with Him whom ye call (λέγετε) the King of the Jews?" That whom ye call was very astute. It ought to bring out the real feeling of the people, as from the next verse we learn that it did.—Ver. 13. πάλιν: they had intimated their will already by a popular shout = Barabbas, not Jesus; now they intimate their feeling about Jesus by a second shout with the unmistakable ring of reprobation in it: CRUCIFY HIM! That is what Pilate's ὃν λέγετε has brought out. It has been taken as an insult. The sense is the same if, with B, we omit ὃν. Pilate's question then = what then shall I do, tell me, to the King of the Jews? The sting lies in the

14. Ὁ δὲ Πιλάτος ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Τί γὰρ κακὸν ἐποίησεν[1];" Οἱ δὲ περισσοτέρως[2] ἔκραξαν, "Σταύρωσον αὐτόν." 15. Ὁ δὲ Πιλάτος βουλόμενος τῷ ὄχλῳ τὸ ἱκανὸν ποιῆσαι, ἀπέλυσεν αὐτοῖς τὸν Βαραββᾶν· καὶ παρέδωκε τὸν Ἰησοῦν, φραγελλώσας, ἵνα σταυρωθῇ.

16. Οἱ δὲ στρατιῶται ἀπήγαγον αὐτὸν ἔσω τῆς αὐλῆς, ὅ ἐστι πραιτώριον, καὶ συγκαλοῦσιν ὅλην τὴν σπεῖραν, 17. καὶ ἐνδύουσιν[3] αὐτὸν πορφύραν, καὶ περιτιθέασιν αὐτῷ πλέξαντες ἀκάνθινον στέφανον, 18. καὶ ἤρξαντο ἀσπάζεσθαι αὐτόν, "Χαῖρε, βασιλεῦ τῶν Ἰουδαίων·" 19. καὶ ἔτυπτον αὐτοῦ τὴν κεφαλὴν καλάμῳ, καὶ ἐνέπτυον αὐτῷ, καὶ τιθέντες τὰ γόνατα προσεκύνουν αὐτῷ. 20. Καὶ ὅτε ἐνέπαιξαν αὐτῷ, ἐξέδυσαν αὐτὸν τὴν πορφύραν, καὶ ἐνέδυσαν αὐτὸν τὰ ἱμάτια τὰ ἴδια[4]· καὶ ἐξάγουσιν αὐτόν, ἵνα σταυρώσωσιν αὐτόν. 21. καὶ ἀγγαρεύουσι παράγοντά τινα Σίμωνα Κυρηναῖον, ἐρχόμενον ἀπ᾿ ἀγροῦ, τὸν πατέρα Ἀλεξάνδρου καὶ Ῥούφου, ἵνα ἄρῃ τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ.

22. ΚΑΙ φέρουσιν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ Γολγοθᾶ[5] τόπον, ὅ ἐστι μεθερμηνευό-

[1] εποι. κακον in BCΔ. [2] περισσως in ℵABCDΔ. Vide below.

[3] ενδιδυσκουσιν in ℵBCDΔ. Vide below.

[4] For τα ιδια BCΔ have αυτου (W.H.); ℵ reads τα ιδια ιματια αυτου (Tisch.).

[5] τον Γολγοθαν in ℵBLΔΣ.

title.—Ver. 14. This final speech of Pilate presents a subtle combination of honesty and craft. He says what he really thinks: that Jesus is innocent, and he makes sure that the people really mean to stand to what they have said. —περισσῶς, beyond measure: the positive here is stronger than the comparative περισσοτέρως (T.R.), and it is far better attested.—Ver. 15. Pilate was now quite sure what the people wished, and so, as an opportunist, he let them have their way.—τὸ ἱκανὸν ποιῆσαι: to satisfy (here only in N. T.) = satisfacere in Vulg., perhaps a Latinism (vide Grotius), but found in later Greek (vide Raphel and Elsner).—φραγελλώσας: certainly a Latinism, from flagellare.

Vv. 16-20. Mocked by the soldiers (Mt. xxvii. 27-31).—Ver. 16. The soldiers in charge of the prisoner conduct Him into the barracks (ἔσω τῆς αὐλῆς, ὅ ἐστιν πραιτώριον = into the court, that is, the praetorium—Weizsäcker), and call together their comrades to have some sport.—ὅλην τὴν σπεῖραν: "a popular exaggeration" (Sevin.); at most 200 men.—Ver. 17. ἐνδιδύσκουσιν for ἐνδύουσιν, T.R.: a rare word, not in classics, found in Sept. and Joseph. (and in Lk. viii. 27, xvi. 19), and because rare, the more probable reading.—πορφύραν, a purple garment, for Mt.'s χλαμύδα κοκκίνην = "scarlet robe".—ἀκάνθινον σ.: here and in John xix. 5.

Vv. 21-26. The crucifixion (Mt. xxvii. 32-37, Lk. xxiii. 26, 33-38).—Ver. 21. ἀγγαρεύουσιν: on this word vide on Mt. v. 41.—ἀπ᾿ ἀγροῦ: this detail in Mk. and Lk. has been taken as an unintentional hint that the crucifixion took place a day earlier than the synoptical statements imply. Coming from the country, i.e., from his work. But even Holtzmann, H. C., disallows the inference: "as if nine in the morning were evening after work time, and εἰς ἀγρὸν in Mk. xvi. 12 meant ploughing or reaping".—Ἀλεξ., Ῥούφ.: these names imply interest in the persons referred to within the circle of Mk.'s first readers, presumably well-known Christians. Rufus in Rom. xvi. 13? Alexander in Acts xix. 33?—Ver. 22. φέρουσιν α.: they carry Him: "ferunt, non modo ducunt," Bengel. It would appear that Jesus was so weak through the strain of the last few days, and the scourging, μενον,[1] Κρανίου τόπος. 23. Καὶ ἐδίδουν αὐτῷ πιεῖν[2] ἐσμυρνισμένον οἶνον· ὁ δὲ[3] οὐκ ἔλαβε. 24. Καὶ σταυρώσαντες[4] αὐτόν, διεμέριζον[5] τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ, βάλλοντες κλῆρον ἐπ' αὐτά, τίς τί ἄρῃ. 25. ἦν δὲ ὥρα τρίτη, καὶ ἐσταύρωσαν αὐτόν. 26. Καὶ ἦν ἡ ἐπιγραφὴ τῆς αἰτίας αὐτοῦ ἐπιγεγραμμένη, "Ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων." 27. Καὶ σὺν αὐτῷ σταυροῦσι δύο λῃστάς, ἕνα ἐκ δεξιῶν καὶ ἕνα ἐξ εὐωνύμων αὐτοῦ. 28. καὶ ἐπληρώθη ἡ γραφὴ ἡ λέγουσα, 'Καὶ μετὰ ἀνόμων ἐλογίσθη.[6] 29. Καὶ οἱ παραπορευόμενοι ἐβλασφήμουν αὐτόν, κινοῦντες τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτῶν, καὶ λέγοντες, "Οὐά, ὁ καταλύων τὸν ναόν, καὶ ἐν τρισὶν ἡμέραις οἰκοδομῶν,[7] 30. σῶσον σεαυτόν, καὶ κατάβα[8] ἀπὸ τοῦ σταυροῦ." 31. Ὁμοίως δὲ[9] καὶ οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς ἐμπαίζοντες πρὸς ἀλλήλους μετὰ τῶν γραμματέων ἔλεγον, "Ἄλλους ἔσωσεν, ἑαυτὸν οὐ δύναται σῶσαι. 32. ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῦ[10] Ἰσραὴλ καταβάτω νῦν ἀπὸ τοῦ σταυροῦ, ἵνα ἴδωμεν καὶ πιστεύσωμεν."

[1] μεθερμηνευομενος in ℵBΣ. [2] ℵBCLΔ omit πιειν.

[3] ος δε in ℵB 33. [4] For the participle BL have σταυρουσιν αυτον και.

[5] For διεμεριζον (in minusc. only) read διαμεριζονται.

[6] ℵABCD sah. omit this verse, which is interpolated from Lk. xxii. 37.

[7] οικοδομων before τρι. ημ. in BDL. εν is wanting in D and other uncials (Tisch. omits, W.H. brackets).

[8] For και καταβα ℵBDLΔ have καταβας.

[9] δε omitted in ℵBCLΔ. [10] ℵBDLΔ omit του before Ισραηλ.

that He was unable to walk, not to speak of carrying His cross. He had to be borne as the sick were borne to Him (Mk. i. 32).—Ver. 23. ἐδίδουν: the conative imperfect = they tried to give, offered. — ἐσμυρνισμένον οἶνον, wine drugged with myrrh, here only in N. T. Cf. Mt.'s account.—οὐκ ἔλαβεν: Mt. says Jesus tasted the drink. He would not take it because He knew that it was meant to stupefy.—Ver. 24. τίς τί ἄρῃ, who should receive what; two questions pithily condensed into one, another example in Lk. xix. 15, vide Winer, § lxvi., 5, 3.—Ver. 25. ὥρα τρίτη, the third hour = nine o'clock as we reckon; raising a harmonistic problem when compared with John xix. 14. Grotius comments: "id est, jam audita erat tuba horae tertiae, quod dici solebat donec caneret tuba horae sextae" (they called it the third hour till the sixth was sounded).—καὶ = when, Hebraistic, but also not without example in classics in similar connections: the fact stated connected with its time by a simple καὶ; instances in Meyer.—Ver. 26. ἐπιγραφὴ ἐπιγεγραμμένη: awkwardly expressed; Mt. and Lk. have phrases which look like corrections of style.—ὁ βασ. τῶν Ἰουδ.: the simplest form of the inscription.

Vv. 29-32. Taunts of spectators (Mt. xxvii. 39-44, Lk. xxiii. 35, 37, 39).—Ver. 29. οὐὰ = Latin, vah, expressing here ironical admiration: "admirandi vim cum ironia habet," Bengel. Raphel remarks that this word was not given in the Greek Lexicons, but that it is not therefore to be regarded as a Latinism peculiar to Mk., but rather as a word which had been adopted and used by the later Greeks, e.g., Arrian. Here only in N. T.—Ver. 30. καταβὰς (καὶ κατάβα, T.R.), etc., save Thyself, having descended, etc., or by descending = descend and so save Thyself.—Ver. 31. οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς: both in Mt. and in Mk. the priests lead in the unhallowed chuckling, scribes and elders (Mt.) being mentioned only subordinately (μετὰ, etc.).—πρὸς ἀλλήλους: a common fear gives place to a common sportiveness in this unholy brotherhood, now that the cause of their fear is removed.—Ver. 32. ἵνα ἴδωμεν[1] that we may see (in the descent from the cross) an unmistakable sign from heaven of Messiahship, and so believe in Thee.—

Καὶ οἱ συνεσταυρωμένοι[1] αὐτῷ ὠνείδιζον αὐτόν. 33. Γενομένης δὲ[2] ὥρας ἕκτης, σκότος ἐγένετο ἐφ᾽ ὅλην τὴν γῆν, ἕως ὥρας ἐννάτης. 34. καὶ τῇ ὥρᾳ τῇ ἐννάτῃ[3] ἐβόησεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, λέγων,[4] "Ἐλωΐ, Ἐλωΐ, λαμμᾶ σαβαχθανί[5];" ὅ ἐστι μεθερμηνευόμενον, "Ὁ Θεός μου, ὁ Θεός μου, εἰς τί με ἐγκατέλιπες[6];" 35. Καί τινες τῶν παρεστηκότων[7] ἀκούσαντες ἔλεγον, "Ἰδού,[8] Ἡλίαν φωνεῖ." 36. Δραμὼν δὲ εἷς,[9] καὶ[10] γεμίσας σπόγγον ὄξους, περιθείς τε[11] καλάμῳ, ἐπότιζεν αὐτόν, λέγων, "Ἄφετε, ἴδωμεν εἰ ἔρχεται Ἡλίας καθελεῖν αὐτόν."

37. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἀφεὶς φωνὴν μεγάλην ἐξέπνευσε. 38. καὶ τὸ καταπέτασμα τοῦ ναοῦ ἐσχίσθη εἰς δύο, ἀπὸ ἄνωθεν ἕως κάτω.

[1] συν after συνεσταυρωμενοι in ℵBL. [2] και γεν. in ℵBDLΔ.
[3] τη ενατη ωρα in ℵBDL. [4] Omit λεγων ℵBDL.
[5] The spelling of the words λαμ. σαβ. varies much in the MSS.
[6] με after εγκατελ. in ℵBL. [7] B has εστηκοτων.
[8] ιδε in ℵBLΔ 33. [9] τις in ℵBLΔ. [10] BL omit και.
[11] ℵBDL 33 omit τε (W.H. read Δραμων δε τις γεμ. σ. ο. περιθεις καλ.).

οἱ συνεσταυρωμένοι, the co-crucified. Mk., like Mt., knows nothing of the conversion of one of the robbers reported by Lk. How different these fellow-sufferers in spirit from the co-crucified in St. Paul's sense (Rom. vi. 6, Gal. ii. 20)!

Vv. 33-36. Darkness without and within (Mt. xxvii. 45-49, Lk. xxiii. 44-46).—Ver. 33. γενομένης, ἐγένετο: another awkwardness of style variously amended in Mt. and Lk.—σκότος: on this darkness vide on Mt. Furrer (Wanderungen, pp. 175-6) suggests as its cause a storm of hot wind from the south-east, such as sometimes comes in the last weeks of spring. "The heavens are overcast with a deep gray, the sun loses his brightness, and at last disappears. Over the darkened land rages the storm, so that the country, in the morning like a flower-carpet, in the evening appears a waste. . . . On the saddest day in human history swept such a storm at noon over Jerusalem, adding to the terrors of the crucifixion."—Ver. 34. ἐλωΐ, ἐλωΐ: the Aramaic form of the words spoken by Jesus, Mt. giving the Hebrew equivalent. On this cry of desertion vide remarks on the parallel place in Mt.—ὁ Θεός μου. ὁ Θ. μ.: as in Sept. Mt. gives the vocative.—εἰς τί, for what end? ἵνα τί in Mt. and Sept.—Ver. 35. Ἡλίαν: the name of Elijah might be suggested by either form of the name of God—Eli or Eloi. Who the τινες were that made the poor pun is doubtful, most probably heartless fellow-countrymen who only affected to misunderstand.—Ver. 36. δραμὼν δὲ: if the wits were heartless mockers, then δὲ will imply that this person who offered the sufferer a sponge saturated with posca (vide Mt.) was a friendly person touched by compassion. For the credit of human nature one is very willing to be convinced of this.—ἐπότιζεν might, like ἐδίδουν (ver. 23), be viewed as a conative imperfect = offered Him a drink, but John's narrative indicates that Jesus accepted the drink (xix. 30).—λέγων refers to the man who brought the drink. In Mt. it is others who speak (xxvii. 49), and the sense of what was said varies accordingly—ἄφες in Mt. naturally, though not necessarily, means: stop, don't give Him the drink (vide on Mt.)—ἄφετε in Mk., spoken by the man to the bystanders, means naturally: allow me (to give Him the drink), the idea being that thereby the life of the sufferer would be prolonged, and so as it were give time for Elijah to come (ἴδωμεν εἰ ἔρ. Ἡ.) to work an effectual deliverance by taking Him down from the cross (καθελεῖν α.).—εἰ ἔρ.: εἰ with the present indicative instead of the more usual ἐὰν with subjunctive in a future supposition with probability (vide Burton, M. and T. in N. T., § 251).

Vv. 37-41. Death and its accompaniments (Mt. xxvii. 50-56, Lk. xxiii. 46-49).—

39. Ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ κεντυρίων ὁ παρεστηκὼς ἐξ ἐναντίας αὐτοῦ, ὅτι οὕτω κράξας[1] ἐξέπνευσεν, εἶπεν, "Ἀληθῶς ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὗτος[2] υἱὸς ἦν Θεοῦ." 40. Ἦσαν δὲ καὶ γυναῖκες ἀπὸ μακρόθεν θεωροῦσαι, ἐν αἷς ἦν[3] καὶ Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνή, καὶ Μαρία ἡ τοῦ[4] Ἰακώβου τοῦ μικροῦ καὶ Ἰωσῆ[5] μήτηρ, καὶ Σαλώμη, 41. αἳ καί,[6] ὅτε ἦν ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ, ἠκολούθουν αὐτῷ, καὶ διηκόνουν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἄλλαι πολλαὶ αἱ συναναβᾶσαι αὐτῷ εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα.

42. Καὶ ἤδη ὀψίας γενομένης, ἐπεὶ ἦν παρασκευή, ὅ ἐστι προσάβ-

[1] ℵBL cop. omit κραξας, found in ACΔΣ al. unc.

[2] The order of the words varies: ουτος ο ανθ. in ℵBDLΔ 33 (Tisch., W.H.); υιος ην θ. in AC al. (Tisch.); υιος θ. ην in ℵBLΔ (W.H.).

[3] ην (from Mt.) omitted in ℵBL.

[4] ℵBCΔΣ omit του.

[5] Ιωσητος in BDLΔ.

[6] ℵB 33 omit και; ACLΔ omit αι. Perhaps both omissions are due to similar ending.

Ver. 37. φωνὴν μεγάλην: a second great voice uttered by Jesus (vide ver. 34), the fact indicated in Mt. by the word πάλιν. At this point would come in John's τετέλεσται (xix. 30). — ἐξέπνευσεν, breathed out His life, expired; aorist, the main fact, to which the incident of the drink (ἐπότιζεν, imperfect) is subordinate; used absolutely, here (and in Lk. xxiii. 46), as often in the classics. Bengel remarks: "spirare conducit corpori, exspirare spiritui".—Ver. 38. The fact of the rending of the veil stated as in Mt., with omission of Mt.'s favourite ἰδοὺ, and the introduction of another of Mk.'s characteristic pleonasms, ἀπ' ἄνωθεν.—Ver. 39. κεντυρίων, a Latinism = centurio, for which Mt. and Lk. give the Greek ἑκατόνταρχος.—ἐξ ἐναντίας (χώρας), right opposite Jesus, so that he could hear and see all distinctly. The thing that chiefly impressed him, according to Mk., was the manner of His death. —οὕτως ἐξέπνευσεν = with a loud voice, as if life were still strong, and so much sooner than usual, as of one who, needing no Elijah to aid Him, could at will set Himself free from misery. This was a natural impression on the centurion's part, and patristic interpreters endorse it as true and important. Victor Ant. says that the loud voice showed that Jesus died κατ' ἐξουσίαν, and Theophylact applies to the ἐξέπνευσεν the epithet δεσποτικῶς. But it may be questioned whether this view is in accord either with fact or with sound theology. What of the φέρουσι in ver. 22? And is there not something docetic in self-rescue from the pangs of the cross, instead of leaving the tragic experience to run its natural course? Mt.'s explanation of the wonder of the centurion, by the external events—earthquake, etc.—is, by comparison, secondary. Schanz characterises Mk.'s account as "schöner psychologisch" (psychologically finer). —Ver. 40. On the faithful women who looked on from afar, vide on Mt. Mk. singles out for special mention the same three as Mt.: Mary of Magdala, Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children. Mk. distinguishes James, the brother of Joses, as τοῦ μικροῦ = either the little in stature (Meyer and Weiss), or the less in age, the younger (Schanz). Mk. refers to the mother of Zebedee's children by her own name, Salome. Neither evangelist mentions Mary, the mother of Jesus.—Ver. 41. This interesting reference to service rendered to Jesus in Galilee, given here by Mk. only, applies to the three named, hence the honourable mention of them. Mt. substitutes service on the way from Galilee to Jerusalem rendered by all—evidently a secondary account.—ἄλλαι πολλαί, others, many; also worthy of honour, but of an inferior order compared with the three. They made the journey from Galilee to Jerusalem with Jesus.

Vv. 42-47. Burial (Mt. xxvii. 57-66, Lk. xxiii. 50-56).—Ver. 42. ἤδη: omitted by Mt., but important, as indicating that the business Joseph had on hand—that of obtaining and using permission to take down and bury the body of Jesus—must βατον, 43. ἦλθεν[1] Ἰωσὴφ ὁ ἀπὸ Ἀριμαθαίας, εὐσχήμων βουλευτής, ὃς καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν προσδεχόμενος τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ· τολμήσας εἰσῆλθε πρὸς[2] Πιλάτον, καὶ ᾐτήσατο τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. 44. ὁ δὲ Πιλάτος ἐθαύμασεν[3] εἰ ἤδη τέθνηκε· καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τὸν κεντυρίωνα, ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτὸν εἰ πάλαι[4] ἀπέθανε· 45. καὶ γνοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ κεντυρίωνος, ἐδωρήσατο τὸ σῶμα[5] τῷ Ἰωσήφ. 46. καὶ ἀγοράσας σινδόνα, καὶ[6] καθελὼν αὐτόν, ἐνείλησε τῇ σινδόνι, καὶ κατέθηκεν[7] αὐτὸν ἐν μνημείῳ,[8] ὃ ἦν λελατομημένον ἐκ πέτρας· καὶ προσεκύλισε λίθον ἐπὶ τὴν θύραν τοῦ μνημείου. 47. ἡ δὲ Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνὴ καὶ Μαρία Ἰωσῆ[9] ἐθεώρουν ποῦ τίθεται.[10]

[1] ελθων in ℵABCLΔ, etc., ηλθεν in D. [2] προς τον in ℵBLΔ 33.

[3] ℵD have εθαυμαζεν (Tisch.), aor. (T.R.) in BCLΔ (W.H.).

[4] παλαι in ℵCL (Tisch.), ηδη in BD (W.H. text, παλαι marg.).

[5] πτωμα in ℵBDL; changed into σωμα from a feeling of decorum.

[6] ℵBDL cop. omit και, added as a connecting particle.

[7] εθηκεν in ℵBDL (W.H.).

[8] ℵB have μνηματι, instead of μνημειω in CDLΔ. Tisch. and W.H. adopt reading of ℵB.

[9] η before Ιωσ. in BCΔ; Ιωσητος in BLΔ. [10] τεθειται in BCDLΔ.

be gone about without delay. It was already the afternoon of the day before the Sabbath, προσάββατον, called παρασκευή (here and in the parallels in this technical sense). It must, therefore, be done at once, or it could not be done till Sabbath was past.—Ver. 43. εὐσχήμων: Mt. has πλούσιος; vide there for remarks on the two epithets.—βουλευτής, a councillor, not in the provincial town, Arimathaea, which would have been mentioned, but in the grand council in Jerusalem.—καὶ αὐτὸς, not in contrast to the Sanhedrists generally (Weiss), but in company with the women previously named (Schanz); he, like them, was an expectant of the Kingdom of God.—τολμήσας: a graphic word, in Mk. only, giving a vivid idea of the situation. Objections to be feared on Pilate's part on score of time—dead so soon? possibly surly indifference to the decencies of burial in the case of a crucified person, risk of offence to the religious leaders in Jerusalem by sympathy shown to the obnoxious One, even in death. Therefore to be rendered: "taking courage, went in unto Pilate" (vide Field, Ot. Nor., ad loc.).—Ver. 44. Omitted by Mt., whose narrative throughout is colourless compared with Mk.'s.—εἰ τέθνηκε: εἰ = ὅτι, after a verb of wonder (vide Burton, M. and T., § 277, and Winer, § lx., 6).—εἰ ἀπέθανε: τέθνηκε has reference to the present of the speaker, ἀπέθανε to the moment of death.—πάλαι: opposed to ἄρτι, and not implying a considerable time before, but only bare priority to the present. Pilate's question to the centurion was, did He die before now? = is He actually dead?—Ver. 45. Satisfied on the point Pilate freely gives (ἐδωρήσατο) the carcase (πτῶμα, ℵBDL, corrected from feelings of reverence into σῶμα in many MSS.).—Ver. 46. ἀγοράσας, having purchased linen; therefore purchases could be made. This word, and the reason given for Joseph's haste (ver. 42), have, not without a show of reason, been regarded as unintentional evidence in favour of the Johannine Chronology of the Passion. So Meyer, Weiss, and Holtzmann.—καθελὼν: καθαιρεῖν was the technical term for taking down from the cross. Proofs in Elsner, Raphel, Kypke, and Loesner.—ἐνείλησεν: here only in N. T.—ἐν μνημείῳ (μνήματι, ℵB): no indication in Mk. as in Mt. that it was new, and Joseph's own.—Ver. 47. τέθειται: from the perfect Meyer and Weiss infer that the women were not present at the burial, but simply approached and took note where Jesus lay after burial. Schanz dissents, and refers to the καὶ before ὅτε in ver. 41 in some MSS., as proving that they had come to render the last office to Jesus.

XVI. 1. ΚΑΙ διαγενομένου τοῦ σαββάτου, Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνὴ καὶ Μαρία ἡ τοῦ Ἰακώβου καὶ Σαλώμη ἠγόρασαν ἀρώματα, ἵνα ἐλθοῦσαι ἀλείψωσιν αὐτόν. 2. καὶ λίαν πρωῒ τῆς μιᾶς[1] σαββάτων ἔρχονται ἐπὶ τὸ μνημεῖον,[2] ἀνατείλαντος[3] τοῦ ἡλίου. 3. καὶ ἔλεγον πρὸς ἑαυτάς, "Τίς ἀποκυλίσει ἡμῖν τὸν λίθον ἐκ τῆς θύρας τοῦ μνημείου;" 4. Καὶ ἀναβλέψασαι θεωροῦσιν ὅτι ἀποκεκύλισται[4] ὁ λίθος· ἦν γὰρ μέγας σφόδρα. 5. καὶ εἰσελθοῦσαι[5] εἰς τὸ μνημεῖον, εἶδον νεανίσκον καθήμενον ἐν τοῖς δεξιοῖς, περιβεβλημένον στολὴν λευκήν· καὶ ἐξεθαμβήθησαν. 6. ὁ δὲ λέγει αὐταῖς, "Μὴ ἐκθαμβεῖσθε. Ἰησοῦν ζητεῖτε τὸν Ναζαρηνὸν τὸν ἐσταυρωμένον·

[1] τη μια in ℵBLΔ 33 (B omits τη, W.H. brackets).

[2] So in BDLΔ (W.H.). ℵC have μνημα (Tisch.).

[3] ανατελλοντος in D (W.H. marg.).

[4] ανακεκυλισται in ℵBL. αποκεκ. conforms to ver. 3.

[5] ελθουσαι in B (W.H. marg.).

CHAPTER XVI. THE RESURRECTION. Vv. 1-8. The open grave (Mt. xxviii 1-10, Lk. xxiv. 1-12).—Ver. 1. διαγενομένου τοῦ σαββάτου, the Sabbath being past; similar use of διαγ- in Acts xxv. 13, xxvii. 9, and in late Greek authors; examples in Elsner, Wetstein, Raphel, e.g., διαγενομένων πάλιν ἐτῶν δέκα, Polyb., Hist., ii., 19.—ἠγόρασαν ἀρ., purchased spices; wherewith, mingled with oil, more perfectly to anoint the body of the Lord Jesus. The aorist implies that this purchase was made on the first day of the week. Lk. (xxiii. 56) points to the previous Friday evening. Harmonists (Grotius, e.g.) reconcile by taking ἠγόρ. as a pluperfect. "After sunset there was a lively trade done among the Jews, because no purchase could be made on Sabbath" (Schanz).—Ver. 2. λίαν πρωῒ, very early in the morning, suggesting a time hardly consistent with the qualifying clause: ἀνατείλαντος τοῦ ἡλίου = when the sun was risen, which again does not harmonise with the "deep dawn" of Lk. and the "yet dark" of John. Mk.'s aim apparently is to emphasise the fact that what he is going to relate happened in broad daylight; Lk.'s to point out that the pious women were at their loving work as early on the Sunday morning as possible.—Ver. 3. ἔλεγον πρὸς ἑαυτάς: as they went to the sepulchre, they kept saying to each other (ad invicem, Vulg., πρὸς ἀλλήλας, Euthy.). — τίς ἀποκυλίσει: their only solicitude was about the stone at the sepulchre's mouth: no thought of the guards in Mk.'s account. The pious women thought not of angelic help. Men had rolled the stone forward and could roll it back, but it was beyond woman's strength.—Ver. 4. ἀναβλέψασαι, looking up, as they approached the tomb; suggestive of heavy hearts and downcast eyes, on the way thither.—ἦν γὰρ μέγας σφόδρα: this clause seems out of place here, and it has been suggested that it should be inserted after μνημείου in ver. 3, as explaining the women's solicitude about the removal of the stone. As it stands, the clause explains how the women could see, even at a distance, that the stone had already been removed. It was a sufficiently large object. How the stone was rolled away is not said.

Vv. 5-8. The women enter into the tomb through the open door, and experience a greater surprise.—νεανίσκον, a young man. In Mt.'s account it is an angel, and his position is not within the tomb, as here, but sitting on the stone without. Lk. has two men in shining apparel.—στολὴν λευκήν, in a white long robe, implying what is not said, that the youth is an angel. No such robe worn by young men on earth.—Ver. 6. μὴ ἐκθαμβεῖσθε, "be not affrighted" (as they had been by the unexpected sight of a man, and wearing heavenly apparel); no ὑμεῖς after the verb here, as in Mt. after φοβεῖσθε, where there is an implied contrast between the women and the guards (vide on Mt.).—Ἰησοῦν, etc., Jesus ye seek, the Nazarene, the crucified. Observe the objective, far-off style of description, befitting a visitor from ἠγέρθη, οὐκ ἔστιν ὧδε· ἴδε, ὁ τόπος ὅπου ἔθηκαν αὐτόν. 7. ἀλλ' ὑπάγετε, εἴπατε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ καὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ, ὅτι προάγει ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν· ἐκεῖ αὐτὸν ὄψεσθε, καθὼς εἶπεν ὑμῖν." 8. Καὶ ἐξελθοῦσαι ταχὺ[1] ἔφυγον ἀπὸ τοῦ μνημείου· εἶχε δὲ[2] αὐτὰς τρόμος καὶ ἔκστασις· καὶ οὐδενὶ οὐδὲν εἶπον, ἐφοβοῦντο γάρ.[3]

[1] ℵABCDLΔΣ omit ταχυ (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] γαρ for δε in ℵBD vet. Lat. cop. syr. vers.

[3] On verses 9-20, in relation to the Gospel, vide below.

another world.—ἠγέρθη, etc.: note the abrupt disconnected style: risen, not here, see (ἴδε) the place (empty) where they laid Him. The empty grave, the visible fact; resurrection, the inference; when, how, a mystery (ἄδηλον, Euthy.).—Ver. 7. ἀλλὰ, but; change in tone and topic; gazing longer into the empty grave would serve no purpose: there is something to be done—go, spread the news! Cf. John xiv. 31: But . . . arise, let us go hence!—καὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ, and to Peter in particular: why? to the disciple who denied his Master? so the older interpreters—to Peter, with all his faults, the most important man in the disciple band? so most recent interpreters: ut dux Apostolici coetus, Grotius.—ὅτι, recit., introducing the very message of the angel. The message recalls the words of Jesus before His death (chap. xiv. 28).—ἐκεῖ, there, pointing to Galilee as the main scene of the reappearing of Jesus to His disciples, creating expectation of a narrative by the evangelist of an appearance there, which, however, is not forthcoming.—Ver. 8. ἐξελθοῦσαι, going out—of the sepulchre into which they had entered (ver. 5).—ἔφυγον, they fled, from the scene of such surprises. The angel's words had failed to calm them; the event altogether too much for them.—τρόμος καὶ ἔκστασις, trembling, caused by fear, and stupor, as of one out of his wits.—τρόμος = "tremor corporis": ἔκστασις = "stupor animi," Bengel.—οὐδενὶ οὐδὲν εἶπον: an unqualified statement as it stands here, no "on the way," such as harmonists supply: "obvio scilicet," Grotius.—ἐφοβοῦντο γὰρ gives the reason of this reticence so unnatural in women; they were in a state of fear. When the fear went off, or events happened which made the disciples independent of their testimony, their mouths would doubtless be opened.

So ends the authentic Gospel of Mark, without any account of appearances of the risen Jesus in Galilee or anywhere else. The one thing it records is the empty grave, and an undelivered message sent through three women to the disciples, promising a reunion in Galilee. Strange that a story of such thrilling interest should terminate so abruptly and unsatisfactorily. Was there originally a continuation, unhappily lost, containing, e.g., an account of a meeting of the Risen One in Galilee with His followers? Or was the evangelist prevented by some unknown circumstances from carrying into effect an intention to bring his story to a suitable close? We cannot tell. All we know (for the light thrown on the question by criticism, represented, e.g., by Tischendorf, Nov. Test., G. Ed., viii., vol. i., pp. 403-407; Hahn, Gesch. des. N. Kanons, ii., p. 910 ff.; Westcott and Hort, Introduction, Appendix, pp. 29-51, approaches certainty) is that vv. 9-20 of Mk. xvi. in our N. T. are not to be taken as the fulfilment of any such intention by the author of the second Gospel. The external evidence strongly points this way. The section is wanting in ℵB and in Syr. Sin. Jerome states (Ep. cxx., quaest. 3) that it was wanting in nearly all Greek copies ("omnibus Graecis libris pene"), and the testimony of Eusebius is to the same effect. The internal evidence of style confirms the impression made by the external: characteristic words of Mk. wanting, words not elsewhere found in the Gospel occurring (e.g., ἐθεάθη, v. 11), the narrative a meagre, colourless summary, a composition based on the narratives of the other Gospels, signs ascribed to believers, some of which wear an apocryphal aspect (vide ver. 18). Some, in spite of such considerations, still regard these verses as an integral part of Mk.'s work, but for many the question of present interest is: what account is to be given of them, viewed as an indubitable addendum by another hand? Who wrote this conclusion, when, and with

9. Ἀναστὰς δὲ πρωῒ πρώτῃ σαββάτου ἐφάνη πρῶτον Μαρίᾳ τῇ Μαγδαληνῇ, ἀφ' ἧς[1] ἐκβεβλήκει ἑπτὰ δαιμόνια. 10. ἐκείνη πορευθεῖσα ἀπήγγειλε τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ γενομένοις, πενθοῦσι καὶ κλαίουσι. 11. κἀκεῖνοι ἀκούσαντες ὅτι ζῇ καὶ ἐθεάθη ὑπ' αὐτῆς what end in view? We wait for the final answers to these questions, but important contributions have recently been made towards a solution of the problem. In an Armenian codex of the Gospels, written in 986 A.D., the close of Mk. (vv. 9-20), separated by a space from what goes before to show that it is distinct, has written above it: "Of the Presbyter Aristion," as if to suggest that he is the author of what follows. (Vide Expositor, October, 1893. Aristion, the Author of the last Twelve Verses of Mark, by F. C. Conybeare, M.A.) More recently Dr. Rohrbach has taken up this fact into his interesting discussion on the subject already referred to (vide on Mt. xxviii. 9, 10), and appreciated its significance in connection with the preparation of a four-gospel Canon by certain Presbyters of Asia Minor in the early part of the second century. His hypothesis is that in preparing this Canon the Presbyters felt it necessary to bring the Gospels into accord, especially in reference to the resurrection, that in their preaching all might say the same thing on that vital topic. In performing this delicate task, the fourth Gospel was taken as the standard, and all the other Gospels were to a certain extent altered in their resurrection sections to bring them into line with its account. In Mt. and Lk. the change made was slight, simply the insertion in the former of two verses (xxviii. 9, 10), and in the latter of one (xxiv. 12). In Mk., on the other hand, it amounted to the removal of the original ending, and the substitution for it of a piece taken from a writing by Aristion the Presbyter, mentioned by Papias. The effect of the changes, if not their aim, was to take from Peter the honour of being the first to see the risen Lord, and from Galilee that of being the exclusive theatre of the Christophanies. It is supposed that the original ending of Mk. altogether ignored the Jerusalem appearances, and represented Jesus, in accordance with the statement of St. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 5), as showing Himself (in Galilee) first to Peter, then to the Twelve. The inference is based partly on Mk. xvi. 7, and partly on the relative section of the Gospel of Peter, which, following pretty closely Mk.'s account as far as ver. 8, goes on to tell how the Twelve found their way sad of heart to their old homes, and resumed their old occupations. In all this Rohrbach, a pupil of Harnack's, is simply working out a hint thrown out by his master in his Dogmengeschichte, vol. i., p. 346, 3 Ausg. It would be premature to accept the theory as proved, but it is certainly entitled to careful consideration, as tending to throw some light on an obscure chapter in the early history of the Gospels, and on the ending of the canonical Gospel of Mark in particular.

[1] παρ ης in CDL 33 (W.H.).

Vv. 9-20 may be divided into three parts corresponding more or less to sections in John, Luke, and Matthew, and not improbably based on these; vv. 9-11, answering to John xx. 14-18; vv. 12-14, answering to Lk. xxiv. 13-35; vv. 15-18, answering to Mt. xxviii. 19. Vv. 19, 20 wind up with a brief reference to the ascension and the subsequent apostolic activity of the disciples.

Vv. 9-11. ἀναστὰς δὲ refers to Jesus, who, however, is not once named in the whole section. This fact with the δὲ favours the hypothesis that the section is a fragment of a larger writing.—πρωῒ πρώτῃ σαβ.: whether these words are to be connected with ἀναστὰς, indicating the time of the resurrection, or with ἐφάνη, indicating the time of the first appearance, cannot be decided (vide Meyer).—πρῶτον Μαρίᾳ τ. Μ., first to Mary of Magdala, as in John (xx. 14).—παρ' ἧς, etc.: this bit of information, taken from Lk. viii. 2, is added as if this woman were a stranger never mentioned before in this Gospel, a sure sign of another hand.—ἐφάνη, in this verse = appeared to, does not elsewhere occur in this sense.—Ver. 10. ἐκείνη, she, without emphasis, not elsewhere so used.—πορευθεῖσα: the simple verb πορεύεσθαι, three times used in this section (vv. 12, 15), does not occur anywhere else in this Gospel.—τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ γενομένοις: the reference is not to the disciples in the stricter sense who are called the Eleven (ver. 14), but to the friends of Jesus generally, an ex-ἠπίστησαν. 12. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα δυσὶν ἐξ αὐτῶν περιπατοῦσιν ἐφανερώθη ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, πορευομένοις εἰς ἀγρόν. 13. κἀκεῖνοι ἀπελθόντες ἀπήγγειλαν τοῖς λοιποῖς· οὐδὲ ἐκείνοις ἐπίστευσαν. 14. Ὕστερον[1] ἀνακειμένοις αὐτοῖς τοῖς ἕνδεκα ἐφανερώθη, καὶ ὠνείδισε τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν καὶ σκληροκαρδίαν, ὅτι τοῖς θεασαμένοις αὐτὸν ἐγηγερμένον[2] οὐκ ἐπίστευσαν. 15. Καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, "Πορευθέντες εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἅπαντα, κηρύξατε τὸ εὐαγγέλιον πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει. 16. ὁ πιστεύσας καὶ βαπτισθεὶς σωθήσεται· ὁ δὲ ἀπιστήσας κατακριθήσεται. 17. σημεῖα δὲ τοῖς πιστεύσασι ταῦτα παρακολουθήσει[3]· ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου δαιμόνια ἐκβαλοῦσι· γλώσσαις λαλήσουσι καιναῖς[4]· 18. ὄφεις ἀροῦσι· κἂν θανάσιμόν τι πίωσιν, οὐ μὴ αὐτοὺς βλάψει[5]· ἐπὶ ἀρρώστους χεῖρας ἐπιθήσουσι, καὶ καλῶς ἕξουσιν."

[1] ΑΔΣ al. add δε after υστερον.

[2] ACΔ add εκ νεκρων after εγηγερμενον (W.H. brackets).

[3] ακολουθησει ταυτα in CL (W.H. text; as in T.R. margin).

[4] CLΔ omit καιναις, and have in this place και εν ταις χερσιν (W.H. text, brackets, with καιναις in margin).

[5] βλαψη in ACLΔ al. (Tisch., W.H. T.R. only in minusc.).

pression not elsewhere occurring in any of the Gospels.—Ver. 11. ἐθεάθη, was seen. This verb, used again in ver. 14, is foreign to Mk., as is also ἀπιστεῖν, also twice used here (ἠπίστησαν, ver. 11; ἀπιστήσας, ver. 16).

Vv. 12-14. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα, afterwards (only here in Mk.); vaguely introducing a second appearance in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem.—δυσὶν ἐξ αὐτῶν, to two of the friends of Jesus previously referred to, not of the Eleven. Cf. with Lk. xxiv. 13. It is not only the same fact, but the narrative here seems borrowed from Lk.—ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in a different form. Serving no purpose here, because the fact it accounts for, the non-recognition of Jesus by the two disciples (Lk. xxiv. 16), is not mentioned. —εἰς ἀγρόν: for εἰς κώμην in Lk. The use of φανεροῦσθαι in the sense of being manifested to, in ver. 12, is peculiar to this section (again in ver. 14).—Ver. 14. ὕστερον, at a later time; vague indication, here only. It is difficult to identify this appearance with any one mentioned in the other Gospels. What follows in ver. 15, containing the final commission, seems to point to the farewell appearance in Galilee (Mt. xxviii. 16), but the ἀνακειμένοις (ver. 14) takes us to the scene related in Lk. xxiv. 36-43, though more than the Eleven were present on that occasion. The suggestion has been made (Meyer, Weiss, etc.) that the account here blends together features taken from various appearances. The main points for the narrator are that Jesus did appear to the Eleven, and that He found them in an unbelieving mood.

Vv. 15-18. The Commission (Mt. xxviii. 18-20).—εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἅπαντα, added to Mt.'s πορευθέντες.—κηρύξατε τ. εὐ.: this more specific and evangelic phrase replaces Mt.'s μαθητεύσατε, and πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει gives more emphatic expression to the universal destination of the Gospel than Mt.'s πάντα τὰ ἔθνη.—Ver. 16 is a poor equivalent for Mt.'s reference to baptism, insisting as it does, in an ecclesiastical spirit, on the necessity of baptism rather than on its significance as an expression of the Christian faith in God the Father, Son, and Spirit. Jesus may not have spoken as Mt. reports, but the words put into His mouth by the first evangelist are far more worthy of the Lord than those here ascribed to Him. —Ver. 17. Here also we find a great lapse from the high level of Mt.'s version of the farewell words of Jesus: signs, physical charisms, and thaumaturgic powers, taking the place of the spiritual presence of the exalted Lord. Casting out devils represents the evangelic miracles; speaking with tongues those of the apostolic age; taking up venomous serpents and drinking deadly poison

19. Ὁ μὲν οὖν Κύριος,[1] μετὰ τὸ λαλῆσαι αὐτοῖς, ἀνελήφθη εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐκ δεξιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ· 20. ἐκεῖνοι δὲ ἐξελθόντες ἐκήρυξαν πανταχοῦ, τοῦ Κυρίου συνεργοῦντος, καὶ τὸν λόγον βεβαιοῦντος διὰ τῶν ἐπακολουθούντων σημείων. Ἀμήν.[2]

[1] CLΔ have Ιησους after Κυριος (W.H. brackets).
[2] Αμην is found in CLΔ among other uncials (W.H. marg.).

seem to introduce us into the twilight of apocryphal story. Healing of the sick by laying on of hands brings us back to apostolic times. θανάσιμον is a ἅπ. λεγ.

Vv. 19, 20. The story ends with a brief notice of the ascension of the Lord Jesus on the one hand (μὲν), and of the apostolic activity of the Eleven on the other (δὲ). Lk., who means to tell the story of the acts of the Apostles at length, contents himself with reporting that the Eleven returned from Bethany, his scene of parting, to Jerusalem, not with sadness but with joy, there to worship and wait.

ΤΟ ΚΑΤΑ ΛΟΥΚΑΝ

ΑΓΙΟΝ ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ.

I. 1. ἘΠΕΙΔΗΠΕΡ πολλοὶ ἐπεχείρησαν ἀνατάξασθαι διήγησιν περὶ τῶν πεπληροφορημένων ἐν ἡμῖν πραγμάτων, 2. καθὼς παρέ-

Chapter I. The Early History. Vv. 1-4. The preface.—Ver. 1. ἐπειδήπερ: three particles, ἐπεί, δή, περ, blended into one word, implying that the fact to be stated is well known (δή), important (περ), and important as a reason for the undertaking on hand (ἐπεί) = seeing, as is well known. Hahn thinks the word before us is merely a temporal not a causal particle, and that Luke means only to say that he is not the first to take such a task on hand. But why mention this unless because it entered somehow into his motives for writing? It might do so in various ways: as revealing a widespread impulse to preserve in writing the evangelic memorabilia, stimulating him to do the same; as meeting an extensive demand for such writings on the part of Christians, which appealed to him also; as showing by the number of such writings that no one of them adequately met the demand, or performed the task in a final manner, and that therefore one more attempt was not superfluous. Ἐπειδήπερ, a good Greek word, occurs here only in N. T.—πολλοί: not an exaggeration, but to be taken strictly as implying extensive activity in the production of rudimentary "Gospels". The older exegetes understood the word as referring to heretical or apocryphal gospels, of course by way of censure. This view is abandoned by recent commentators, for whom the question of interest rather is: were Mt.'s Logia and Mk.'s Gospel among the earlier contributions which Lk. had in his eye? This question cannot be decided by exegesis, and answers vary according to the critical theories of those who discuss the topic. All that need be said here is that there is no apparent urgent reason for excluding Mt. and Mk. from the crowd of early essayists.—ἐπεχείρησαν, took in hand; here only in N. T. The word is a vox ambigua, and might or might not imply blame = attempted and did not succeed, or attempted and accomplished their task. It is not probable that emphatic blame is intended. On the other hand, it is not likely that ἐπεχ. is a mere expletive, and that ἐπεχ. ἀνατάξασθαι is simply = ἀνετάξαντο, as, after Casaubon, Palairet, Raphel, etc., maintained. The verb contains a gentle hint that in some respects finality had not yet been reached, which might be said with all due respect even of Mt.'s Logia and Mk.'s Gospel.—ἀνατάξασθαι διήγησιν, to set forth in order a narrative; the expression points to a connected series of narratives arranged in some order (τάξις), topical or chronological, rather than to isolated narratives, the meaning put on διήγησις by Schleiermacher. Both verb and noun occur here only in N. T.—περὶ . . . πραγμάτων indicates the subject of these narratives. The leading term in this phrase is πεπληροφορημένων, about the meaning of which interpreters are much divided. The radical idea of πληροφορέω (πλήρης, φέρω) is to bring or make full. The special sense will depend on the matter in reference to which the fulness takes place. It might be in the region of fact, in which case the word under consideration would mean "become a completed series," and the whole phrase "concerning events which now lie before us as a complete whole". This view is adopted by an increasing number of modern commentators (vide R. V.). Or the fulness may be in conviction, in which case the word would mean "most δοσαν ἡμῖν οἱ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς αὐτόπται καὶ ὑπηρέται γενόμενοι τοῦ λόγου, 3. ἔδοξε κἀμοί, [a] παρηκολουθηκότι ἄνωθεν πᾶσιν ἀκριβῶς, a cf. in 1 Tim. iv. 6; 2 Tim. iii. 10.

surely believed" (A. V.). This sense of complete conviction occurs several times in N. T. (Rom. iv. 21, Heb. vi. 11, x. 22), but with reference to persons not to things. A very large number of interpreters, ancient and modern, take the word here in this sense ("bei uns beglaubigten," Weizsäcker). Holtz., H. C., gives both without deciding between them ("vollgeglaubten oder vollbrachten"). Neither meaning seems quite what is wanted. The first is too vague, and does not indicate what the subject-matter is. The second is explicit enough as to that = the matters which form the subject of Christian belief; but one hardly expects these matters to be represented as the subject of sure belief by one whose very aim in writing is to give further certainty concerning them (ἀσφάλειαν, ver. 4). What if the sphere of the fulness be knowledge, and the meaning of the clause: "concerning the things which have become widely known among us Christians"? Then it would be plain enough what was referred to. Then also the phrase would point out the natural effect of the many evangelic narratives—the universal diffusion of a fair acquaintance with the leading facts of Christ's life. But have we any instance of such use of the word?—πληροφορία is used in reference to understanding and knowledge in Col. ii. 2. Then in modern Greek πληροφορῶ means to inform, and as the word is mainly Hellenistic in usage, and may belong to the popular speech preserved throughout the centuries, τῶν πεπλ. may mean, "those things of which information has been given" (Geldart, The Modern Greek Language, p. 186), or those things generally known among Christians as such.

Ver. 2. καθὼς implies that the basis of these many written narratives was the παράδοσις of the Apostles, which, by contrast, and by the usual meaning of the word, would be mainly though not necessarily exclusively oral (might include, e.g., the Logia of Mt.).—οἱ . . . τοῦ λόγου describes the Apostles, the ultimate source of information, as men "who had become, or been made, eye-witnesses and ministers of the word". Both αὐτόπτ. and ὑπηρ. may be connected with τοῦ λόγου, understood to mean the burden of apostolic preaching = the facts of Christ's earthly history. Eye-witnesses of the facts from the beginning (ἀπ' ἀρχῆς), therefore competent to state them with authority; servants of the word including the facts (= "all that Jesus began both to do and to teach"), whose very business it was to relate words and facts, and who therefore did it with some measure of fulness. Note that the ἡμῖν after παρέδοσαν implies that Lk. belonged to the second generation (Meyer, Schanz). Hahn infers from the ἡμῖν in ver. 1 that Lk. was himself an eye-witness of Christ's public ministry, at least in its later stage.

Ver. 3. ἔδοξε κἀμοὶ: modestly introducing the writer's purpose. He puts himself on a level with the πολλοί, and makes no pretensions to superiority, except in so far as coming after them, and more comprehensive inquiries give him naturally an advantage which makes his work not superfluous.—παρηκολουθηκότι ἄν. π.: having followed (in my inquiries) all things from the beginning, i.e., not of the public life of Jesus (ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ver. 2), but of His life in this world. The sequel shows that the starting point was the birth of John. This process of research was probably gone into antecedent to the formation of his plan, and one of the reasons for its adoption (Meyer, also Grimm, Das Proömium des Lukasevangelium in Jahrbücher f. deutsche Theologie, 1871, p. 48. Likewise Calvin: omnibus exacte pervestigatis), not merely undertaken after the plan had been formed (Hahn).—ἀκριβῶς, καθεξῆς σ. γρ. explain how he desired to carry out his plan: he wishes to be exact, and to write in an orderly manner (καθεξῆς here only in N. T., ἐφεξῆς in earlier Greek). Chronological order aimed at (whether successfully or not) according to many (Meyer, Godet, Weiss, Hahn). Schanz maintains that the chronological aim applies only to the great turning points of the history, and not to all details; a very reasonable view. These two adverbs, ἀκρ., καθ., may imply a gentle criticism of the work of predecessors. Observe the historical spirit implied in all Lk. tells about his literary plan and methods: inquiry, accuracy, order, aimed at at least; vouchers desired for all statements. Lk. is no religious romancer, who will invent at will, and say anything that καθεξῆς σοι γράψαι, κράτιστε Θεόφιλε, 4. ἵνα ἐπιγνῷς περὶ ὧν κατηχήθης λόγων τὴν ἀσφάλειαν.

5. ʼΕΓΕΝΕΤΟ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις Ἡρώδου τοῦ[1] βασιλέως τῆς Ἰουδαίας ἱερεύς τις ὀνόματι Ζαχαρίας, ἐξ ἐφημερίας Ἀβιά· καὶ ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ[2]

[1] ℵBLΞ omit του.

[2] For η γυνη αυτου ℵBCDXΞ 33 have γυνη αυτω (Tisch., W.H.). L has η γ. αυτω.

suits his purpose. It is quite compatible with this historic spirit that Lk. should be influenced in his narrations by religious feelings of decorum and reverence, and by regard to the edification of his first readers. That his treatment of materials bearing on the characters of Jesus and the Apostles reveals many traces of such influence will become apparent in the course of the exposition.—κράτιστε Θεόφιλε. The work is to be written for an individual who may perhaps have played the part of patronus libri, and paid the expenses of its production. The epithet κράτιστε may imply high official position (Acts xxiii. 26, xxvi. 25). On this see Grotius. Grimm thinks it expresses only love and friendship.

Ver. 4. Indicates the practical aim: to give certainty in regard to matters of Christian belief.—περὶ ὧν κ. λόγων: an attraction, to be thus resolved: περὶ τῶν λόγων οὓς κατηχήθης. λόγων is best taken = matters (πραγμάτων, ver. 1), histories (Weizsäcker), not doctrines. Doubtless this is a Hebraistic sense, but that is no objection, for after all Lk. is a Hellenist and no pure Greek, and even in this preface, whose pure Greek has been so often praised, he is a Hellenist to a large extent. (So Hahn, Einleitung, p. 6.) The subject of instruction for young Christians in those early years was the teaching, the acts, and the experience of Jesus: their "catechism" historic not doctrinal.—κατηχήθης: is this word used here in a technical sense = formally and systematically instructed, or in the general sense of "have been informed more or less correctly"? (So Kypke.) The former is more probable. The verb (from κατὰ, ἠχέω) is mainly Hellenistic in usage, rare in profane authors, not found in O. T. The N. T. usage, confined to Lk. and Paul, points to regular instruction (vide Rom. ii. 18).

This preface gives a lively picture of the intense, universal interest felt by the early Church in the story of the Lord Jesus: Apostles constantly telling what they had seen and heard; many of their hearers taking notes of what they said for the benefit of themselves and others: through these gospelets acquaintance with the evangelic history circulating among believers, creating a thirst for more and yet more; imposing on such a man as Luke the task of preparing a Gospel as full, correct, and well arranged as possible through the use of all available means—previous writings or oral testimony of surviving eye-witnesses.

Vv. 5-25. The birth of the Baptist announced. From the long prefatory sentence, constructed according to the rules of Greek syntax, and with some pretensions to classic purity of style, we pass abruptly to the Protevangelium, the prelude to the birth of Christ, consisting of the remainder of this chapter, written in Greek which is Hebraistic in phrase and structure, and Jewish in its tone of piety. The evangelist here seems to have at command an Aramaic, Jewish-Christian source, which he, as a faithful collector of evangelic memorabilia, allows to speak for itself, with here and there an editorial touch.

Vv. 5-7. The parents of John.—ἐγένετο, there was, or there lived.—ἐν ταῖς ἡ., etc.: in the days, the reign, of Herod, king of Judaea. Herod died 750 A.C., and the Christian era begins with 753 A.C. This date is too late by three or four years.—ἐξ ἐφημερίας Ἀβιά: ἐφημερία (a noun formed from ἐφημέριος -ον, daily, lasting for a day), not in profane authors, here and in ver. 8 in N. T., in Sept., in Chron. and Nehemiah, = (1) a service lasting for a day, or for days—a week; (2) a class of priests performing that service. The priests were divided into twenty-four classes, the organisation dating according to the tradition in Chronicles (1 Chron. xxiv.) from the time of David. The order of Abia was the eighth (1 Chron. xxiv. 10). Josephus (Ant., vii., 14, 7) uses ἐφημερίς and πατρία to denote a class. On the priesthood and the temple worship and the daily service, consult Schürer's History, Div. ii., vol. i., pp. 207-298.—γυνὴ: a daughter of Aaron; John descended ἐκ τῶν θυγατέρων Ἀαρών, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτῆς Ἐλισάβετ. 6. ἦσαν δὲ δίκαιοι ἀμφότεροι ἐνώπιον[1] τοῦ Θεοῦ, πορευόμενοι ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐντολαῖς καὶ δικαιώμασι τοῦ Κυρίου ἄμεμπτοι. 7. καὶ οὐκ ἦν αὐτοῖς τέκνον, καθότι ἡ Ἐλισάβετ ἦν[2] στεῖρα, καὶ ἀμφότεροι προβεβηκότες ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις αὐτῶν ἦσαν. 8. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν τῷ ἱερατεύειν αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ τάξει τῆς ἐφημερίας αὐτοῦ ἔναντι τοῦ Θεοῦ, 9. [b]κατὰ τὸ [b]ἔθος τῆς [c]ἱερατείας, [d]ἔλαχε τοῦ [e]θυμιάσαι εἰσελθὼν εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Κυρίου· 10. καὶ πᾶν τὸ πλῆθος τοῦ λαοῦ ἦν[3] προσευχόμενον ἔξω τῇ ὥρᾳ τοῦ θυμιάματος. 11. ὤφθη δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος Κυρίου, ἑστὼς ἐκ δεξιῶν τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου τοῦ θυμιάματος· 12. καὶ ἐταράχθη Ζαχαρίας ἰδών, καὶ φόβος ἐπέπεσεν ἐπ' αὐτόν. 13. Εἶπε δὲ πρὸς αὐτὸν ὁ ἄγγελος, "Μὴ φοβοῦ, Ζαχαρία· διότι εἰσηκούσθη ἡ δέησίς σου, καὶ ἡ γυνή σου Ἐλισάβετ γεννήσει b again in ii. 42; xxii. 39.

c Heb. vii. 5.
d John xix. 24. Acts i. 17. 2 Pet. i. 1.
e here only.

[1] ℵBC have εναντιον; ενωπιον in DLΔ.

[2] ην before η Ελ. in ℵBDLΔΞ (Tisch., W.H.). B 69 omit η (W.H. brackets).

[3] ην του λαου in ℵBLΔ (Tisch., W.H.).

from priestly parents on both sides.—Ver. 6. δίκαιοι: an O. T. term, and expressing an O. T. idea of piety and goodness, as unfolded in the following clause, which is Hebrew in speech as in sentiment: walking in all the commandments and ordinances (equivalent terms, not to be distinguished, with Calvin, Bengel, and Godet, as moral and ceremonial) blameless (relatively to human judgment).—Ver. 7. καὶ οὐκ ἦν, etc.: childless, a calamity from the Jewish point of view, and also a fact hard to reconcile with the character of the pair, for the Lord loveth the righteous, and, according to O. T. views, He showed His love by granting prosperity, and, among other blessings, children (Ps. cxxviii.).—καθότι: a good Attic word: in Lk.'s writings only in N. T. = seeing, inasmuch as.—προβεβηκότες ἐν τ. ἡμ.: "advanced in days," Hebraistic for the classic "advanced in age" (τὴν ἡλικίαν) or years (τοῖς ἔτεσιν): childless, and now no hope of children.

Vv. 8-10. Hope preternaturally revived.—ἐν τῷ ἱερατεύειν: Zechariah was serving his week in due course, and it fell to his lot on a certain day to perform the very special service of burning incense in the holy place. A great occasion in a priest's life, as it might never come to him but once (priests said to be as many as 20,000 in our Lord's time). "The most memorable day in the life of Zechariah" (Farrar, C. G. T.).—Ver. 9. κατὰ τὸ ἔθος is to be connected with ἔλαχε: casting lots, the customary manner of settling who was to have the honour.—εἰσελθὼν is to be connected with θυμιᾶσαι, not with ἔλαχε. The meaning is that entering the sanctuary was the necessary preliminary to offering incense: in one sense a superfluous remark (Hahn), yet worth making in view of the sacredness of the place. A great affair to get entrance into the ναός.—Ver. 10. πλῆθος: there might be a crowd within the temple precincts at the hour of prayer any day of the week, not merely on Sabbath or on a feast day ("dies solennis, et fortasse sabbatum," Bengel).

Vv. 11-17. A celestial visitant.—Ver. 11. ὤφθη: the appearance very particularly described, the very position of the angel indicated: on the right side of the altar of incense; the south side, the propitious side say some, the place of honour say others. The altar of incense is called, with reference to its function, θυμιατήριον in Heb. ix. 3.—Ver. 12. ἐταράχθη describes the state of mind generally = perturbed, φόβος specifically. Yet why afraid, seeing in this case, as always, the objective appearance answers to the inward state of mind? This fear of the divine belongs to O. T. piety.—Ver. 13. δέησις: all prayed at that hour, therefore of course the officiating priest. The prayer of Zechariah was very special—δέησις implies this as compared with προσευχή, vide Trench, Synonyms—and very realistic: for offspring. Beneath the dignity of the occasion say some υἱόν σοι, καὶ καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰωάννην. 14. καὶ ἔσται χαρά σοι καὶ ἀγαλλίασις, καὶ πολλοὶ ἐπὶ τῇ γεννήσει[1] αὐτοῦ χαρήσονται. 15. ἔσται γὰρ μέγας ἐνώπιον τοῦ[2] Κυρίου· καὶ οἶνον καὶ σίκερα οὐ μὴ πίῃ, καὶ Πνεύματος Ἁγίου πλησθήσεται ἔτι ἐκ κοιλίας μητρὸς αὐτοῦ. 16. καὶ πολλοὺς τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ ἐπιστρέψει ἐπὶ Κύριον τὸν Θεὸν αὐτῶν· 17. καὶ αὐτὸς προελεύσεται[3] ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ ἐν πνεύματι καὶ δυνάμει Ἡλίου,[4] ἐπιστρέψαι καρδίας πατέρων ἐπὶ τέκνα, καὶ ἀπειθεῖς ἐν φρονήσει δικαίων, ἑτοιμάσαι Κυρίῳ λαὸν κατεσκευασμένον." 18. Καὶ εἶπε Ζαχαρίας πρὸς τὸν ἄγγελον, "Κατὰ τί γνώσομαι τοῦτο; ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι πρεσβύτης, καὶ ἡ γυνή μου προβεβηκυῖα ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις αὐτῆς." 19. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ ἄγγελος εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ἐγώ εἰμι Γαβριὴλ ὁ παρεστηκὼς ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ· καὶ ἀπεστάλην λαλῆσαι πρός σε, καὶ εὐαγγελίσασθαί σοι ταῦτα. 20. καὶ ἰδού, ἔσῃ σιωπῶν καὶ μὴ δυνάμενος λαλῆσαι, ἄχρι

[1] γενεσει in most uncials.

[2] ℵACL 33 omit του (Tisch.). BDΔ have it (W.H. in marg.).

[3] προσελευσεται in BCL (W.H. marg.), probably an unintentional error.

[4] Ηλεια in ℵBL.

interpreters; a very superficial criticism. True to human nature and to O. T. piety, and not unacceptable to God. That the prayer was for offspring appears from the angelic message, objective and subjective corresponding. —γεννήσει, shall bear; originally to beget.—Ἰωάννην: the name already mentioned to inspire faith in the reality of the promise: meaning, God is gracious.—Ver. 14. χαρά, ἀγαλλίασις, a joy, an exultation; joy in higher, highest degree: joy over a son late born, and such a son as he will turn out to be. —πολλοὶ: a joy not merely to parents as a child, but to many as a man.—Ver. 15. μέγας, a great man before the Lord; not merely in God's sight = true greatness, but indicating the sphere or type of greatness: in the region of ethics and religion.—καὶ οἶνον, etc., points to the external badge of the moral and religious greatness: abstinence as a mark of consecration and separation — a devotee.—σίκερα = שֵׁכָר (not Greek), strong drink, extracted from any kind of fruit but grapes (here only in N. T.).—Πνεύματος Ἁγίου: in opposition to wine and strong drink, as in Eph. v. 18. But the conception of the Holy Spirit, formed from the Johannine type of piety, is very different from that of St. Paul, or suggested by the life of our Lord.—Ver. 16 describes the function of the Baptist. —ἐπιστρέψει: repentance, conversion, his great aim and watchword.—Ver. 17. προελεύσεται ἐν. α.: not a reference to John's function as forerunner of Messiah, but simply a description of his prophetic character. He shall go before God (and men) = be, in his career, an Elijah in spirit and power, and function; described in terms recalling Malachi iv. 6.

Vv. 18-20. Zechariah doubts. The angel's dazzling promise of a son, and even of a son with such a career, might be but a reflection of Zechariah's own secret desire and hope; yet when his day-dream is objectified it seems too good and great to be true. This also is true to human nature, which alternates between high hope and deep despair, according as faith or sense has the upper hand.—Ver. 19. ἀποκριθεὶς: the very natural scepticism of Zechariah is treated as a fault.—Γαβριὴλ: the naming of angels is characteristic of the later stage of Judaism (vide Daniel viii. 16, x. 21).—Ver. 20. σιωπῶν καὶ μὴ δ. λ., silent and not able to speak; a temporary dumbness the sign asked, a slight penalty; not arbitrary, however, rather the almost natural effect of his state of mind—a kind of prolonged stupefaction resulting from a promise too great to be believed, yet pointing to a boon passionately desired.—ἀνθ' ὧν: a phrase of Lk. = תַּחַת אֲשֶׁר, because.

ἧς ἡμέρας γένηται ταῦτα· ἀνθ' ὧν οὐκ ἐπίστευσας τοῖς λόγοις μου, οἵτινες πληρωθήσονται εἰς τὸν καιρὸν αὐτῶν." 21. Καὶ ἦν ὁ λαὸς προσδοκῶν τὸν Ζαχαρίαν· καὶ ἐθαύμαζον ἐν τῷ χρονίζειν αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ ναῷ.[1] 22. ἐξελθὼν δὲ οὐκ ἠδύνατο λαλῆσαι αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἐπέγνωσαν ὅτι ὀπτασίαν ἑώρακεν ἐν τῷ ναῷ· καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν διανεύων αὐτοῖς, καὶ διέμενε κωφός. 23. καὶ ἐγένετο ὡς ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τῆς [f]λειτουργίας αὐτοῦ, ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ. 24. Μετὰ δὲ ταύτας τὰς ἡμέρας συνέλαβεν Ἐλισάβετ ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ, καὶ περιέκρυβεν ἑαυτὴν μῆνας πέντε, λέγουσα, 25. "Ὅτι οὕτω μοι πεποίηκεν ὁ[2] Κύριος ἐν ἡμέραις, αἷς ἐπεῖδεν ἀφελεῖν τὸ[2] ὄνειδός μου ἐν ἀνθρώποις."

f 2 Cor. ix. 12. Phil. ii. 17-30. Heb. viii. 6; ix. 21.

26. ἘΝ δὲ τῷ μηνὶ τῷ ἕκτῳ ἀπεστάλη ὁ ἄγγελος Γαβριὴλ ὑπὸ[3] τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς πόλιν τῆς Γαλιλαίας, ᾗ ὄνομα Ναζαρέτ, 27. πρὸς παρθένον μεμνηστευμένην[4] ἀνδρί, ᾧ ὄνομα Ἰωσήφ, ἐξ οἴκου Δαβίδ· καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τῆς παρθένου Μαριάμ. 28. και εἰσελθὼν ὁ ἄγγελος[5] πρὸς αὐτὴν εἶπε, "Χαῖρε, κεχαριτωμένη· ὁ Κύριος μετὰ σοῦ,

[1] αυτον after εν τω ν. in BLΞ (W.H.). Order as in T.R. in ℵACDΔ al. (Tisch.).

[2] ℵCDL 33 omit ο (Tisch., W.H., text, ο in marg.). BΔ have it. ℵBDL 1 omit το before ονειδος.

[3] απο in ℵBL 1, 69.

[4] εμνηστ. in ℵABL.

[5] BLΞ 1, 131, cop. omit ο αγγελος (W.H.).

Vv. 21-22. The people without.—προσδοκῶν, waiting; they had to wait. The priest was an unusually long time within, something uncommon must have happened. The thought likely to occur was that God had slain the priest as unworthy. The Levitical religion a religion of distance from God and of fear. So viewed in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Illustrative quotations from Talmud in Wünsche, Beiträge, p. 413.—Ver. 22. ὀπτασίαν: from his dazed look they inferred that the priest had seen a vision (chap. xxiv. 23, 2 Cor. xii. 1).—διανεύων: making signs all he could do; he could not bless them, e.g., if that was part of his duty for the day, or explain his absence (here only).

Vv. 23-25. Returns home. The week of service over, Zechariah went back to his own house.—λειτουργίας: in Biblical Greek used in reference to priestly service; elsewhere of public service rendered by a citizen at his own expense or of any sort of service.—Ver. 24. περιέκρυβεν: hid herself entirely (περὶ), here only; ἔκρυβον: a late form of 2nd aorist. Why, not said, nor whether her husband told her what had happened to him.—μῆνας πέντε, after which another remarkable event happened. Whether she appeared openly thereafter is not indicated. Possibly not (J. Weiss).—ἐπεῖδεν: here and in Acts iv. 29 = took care, the object being ἀφελεῖν τὸ ὄν. μ. = to remove my reproach: keenly felt by a Jewish woman. ἐν is understood before αἷς (Bornemann, Scholia).

Vv. 26-38. The announcement to Mary.—Ver. 26. Ναζαρέτ: the original home of Joseph and Mary, not merely the adopted home as we might infer from Mt. ii. 23.—Ver. 27. ἐξ οἴκου Δ.: Mary, Joseph, or both? Impossible to be sure, though the repetition of παρθένου in next clause (instead of αὐτῆς) favours the reference to Joseph.—Ver. 28. χαῖρε, κεχαριτωμένη: ave plena gratiâ, Vulg., on which Farrar (C. G. T.) comments: "not gratiâ plena, but gratiâ cumulata"; much graced or favoured by God.—χαριτόω is Hellenistic, and is found, besides here, only in Eph. i. 6 in N. T.—ὁ Κύριος μετὰ σοῦ, the Lord (Jehovah) is or be with thee, ἐστί or ἔστω understood; the two renderings come practically to the same thing.—Ver. 29. διεταράχθη: assuming that ἰδοῦσα (T.R.) is no part of the true text, Godet thinks that Mary saw nothing, εὐλογημένη σὺ ἐν γυναιξίν."[1] 29. Ἡ δὲ ἰδοῦσα διεταράχθη ἐπὶ τῷ λόγῳ αὐτοῦ,[2] καὶ διελογίζετο ποταπὸς εἴη ὁ ἀσπασμὸς οὗτος. 30. Καὶ εἶπεν ὁ ἄγγελος αὐτῇ, "Μὴ φοβοῦ, Μαριάμ· εὗρες γὰρ χάριν παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ. 31. καὶ ἰδού, συλλήψῃ ἐν γαστρί, καὶ τέξῃ υἱόν, καὶ καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦν. 32. οὗτός ἔσται μέγας, καὶ υἱὸς ὑψίστου κληθήσεται· καὶ δώσει αὐτῷ Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς τὸν θρόνον Δαβὶδ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ, 33. καὶ βασιλεύσει ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰακὼβ εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, καὶ τῆς βασιλείας αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔσται τέλος." 34. Εἶπε δὲ Μαριὰμ πρὸς τὸν ἄγγελον, "Πῶς ἔσται τοῦτο, ἐπεὶ ἄνδρα οὐ γινώσκω;" 35. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ ἄγγελος εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον ἐπελεύσεται ἐπὶ σέ, καὶ δύναμις ὑψίστου ἐπισκιάσει

[1] ευλογημ. . . . γυναιξιν comes from ver. 42; wanting in ℵBL.

[2] For ιδουσα . . . αυτου ℵBDL have επι τ. λ. διεταραχθη (Tisch., W.H.).

and that it was only the word of the angel that disturbed her. It is certainly the latter that is specified as the cause of trouble. The salutation troubled her because she felt that it meant something important, the precise nature of which (ποταπὸς) did not appear. And yet on the principle that in supernatural experiences the subjective and the objective correspond, she must have had a guess.—Ver. 31. Ἰησοῦν: no interpretation of the name here as in Mt. i. 21; a common Jewish name, not necessarily implying Messianic functions. There may have been ordinary family reasons for its use.—Ver. 32 foreshadows the future of the child.—μέγας, applied also to John, ver. 15.—κληθήσεται, shall be called = shall be.—τὸν θρόνον Δ. τ. πατρὸς α.: the Messiah is here conceived in the spirit of Jewish expectation: a son of David, and destined to restore his kingdom.—Ver. 34: Mary's perplexity, how a mother and yet a virgin! J. Weiss points out that this perplexity on the part of a betrothed woman is surprising. Why not assume, as a matter of course, that the announcement had reference to a child to be born as the fruit of marriage with the man to whom she was betrothed? "These words betray the standpoint of Lk., who knows what is coming (ver. 35)." J. Weiss in Meyer.—Ver. 35. Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον: without the article because a proper name = the well-known Holy Spirit, say some (Meyer, Farrar), but more probably because the purpose is not to indicate the person by whom, etc., but the kind of influence: spirit as opposed to flesh, holy in the sense of separation from all fleshly defilement (Hofmann, J. Weiss, Hahn).—δύναμις ὑψίστου: the power of the Most High, also without article, an equivalent for π. ἅ., and more definite indication of the cause, the power of God. Note the use of ὕψιστος as the name of God in ver. 32, here, and in ver. 16. Feine (Vorkanonische Überlieferung des Lukas, p. 17) includes ὁ ὕψιστος, ὁ δυνατός (i. 49), ὁ δεσπότης (ii. 29), ὁ κύριος (i. 6, 9, 11, etc.), all designations of God, among the instances of a Hebraistic vocabulary characteristic of chaps. i. and ii. The first epithet recurs in vi. 35 in the expression "sons of the Highest," applied to those who live heroically, where Mt. has "children of your Father in heaven".—ἐπελεύσεται, ἐπισκιάσει: two synonyms delicately selected to express the divine substitute for sexual intercourse. Observe the parallelism here: "sign of the exaltation of feeling. The language becomes a chant," Godet. Some find poetry throughout these two first chapters of Lk. "These songs . . . doubtless represent reflection upon these events by Christian poets, who put in the mouths of the angels, the mothers and the fathers, the poems which they composed" (Briggs, The Messiah of the Gospels, p. 42. Even the address of Gabriel to Zechariah in the temple, i. 13-17, is, he thinks, such a poem).—τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον, the holy thing—holy product of a holy agency—which is being, or about to be, generated = the embryo, therefore appropriately neuter. —υἱὸς Θεοῦ, Son of God; not merely because holy, but because brought into σοι· διὸ καὶ τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον κληθήσεται Υἱὸς Θεοῦ. 36. καὶ ἰδού, Ἐλισάβετ ἡ συγγενής[1] σου, καὶ αὐτὴ συνειληφυῖα[2] υἱὸν ἐν γήρᾳ[3] αὐτῆς· καὶ οὗτος μὴν ἕκτος ἐστὶν αὐτῇ τῇ καλουμένῃ στείρᾳ· 37. ὅτι οὐκ ἀδυνατήσει παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ[4] πᾶν ῥῆμα." 38. Εἶπε δὲ Μαριάμ, "Ἰδού, ἡ δούλη Κυρίου· γένοιτό μοι κατὰ τὸ ῥῆμά σου." Καὶ ἀπῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτῆς ὁ ἄγγελος.

39. Ἀναστᾶσα δὲ Μαριὰμ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ταύταις ἐπορεύθη εἰς τὴν ὀρεινὴν μετὰ σπουδῆς, εἰς πόλιν Ἰούδα, 40. καὶ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον Ζαχαρίου, καὶ ἠσπάσατο τὴν Ἐλισάβετ. 41. καὶ ἐγένετο ὡς ἤκουσεν ἡ Ἐλισάβετ τὸν ἀσπασμὸν τῆς Μαρίας,[5] ἐσκίρτησε τὸ βρέφος ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ αὐτῆς· καὶ ἐπλήσθη Πνεύματος Ἁγίου ἡ

[1] συγγενις in ℵBDLΔ al. (Tisch., W.H.). [2] συνειληφεν in ℵBLΞ (W.H.).
[3] γηρει in all uncials. [4] του Θεου in ℵBDLΞ.
[5] τον ασπ. της Μ. η Ελ. in ℵBLΔΞ and some cursives.

being by the power of the Highest.—Ver. 36. καὶ ἰδού, introducing a reference to Elizabeth's case to help Mary's faith.—συγγενίς, late form for συγγενής (T.R.), a blood relation, but of what degree not indicated, suggesting that Mary perhaps belonged to the tribe of Levi.—γήρει: Ionic form of dative for γήρᾳ (T.R.). Hellenistic Greek was an eclectic language, drawing from all dialects as from the poets, turning their poetic expressions to the uses of prose.—καλουμένῃ: Elizabeth is described as one who is still being called barren, though six months gone in pregnancy, because people have had no means of knowing her state.—Ver. 37. ἀδυνατήσει: the verb means, in classic Greek, to be weak, of persons. In Sept. and N. T. (here and in Mt. xvii. 20) it means to be impossible, of things. Commentators differ as to whether we should render: no word of God shall be weak, inoperative, or no thing, with, on the part of, God, shall be impossible.—ῥῆμα = דָּבָר may be rendered either word or thing. The reading παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ (BDL) seems to demand the former of the two translations. Field, Otium Nor., discusses this passage. Adopting the above reading, and adhering to the sense of ἀδυνατ. in reference to things, he translates: "for from God no word (or no thing) shall be impossible".

Some recent critics find in this section two different views of the birth of Jesus, one implying natural paternity, the other supernatural causality, the former being the view in the original document, the other introduced by the evangelist, the former Jewish in its tendency of thought, the latter heathen-Christian. The subject is discussed by Hillmann in Jahrb. für prot. Theol., 1891, and Usener, Religionsgeschictliche Untersuchungen, 1888. J. Weiss, in his ed. of Meyer, p. 303, note, seems inclined to favour this view, and to see in vv. 31-33 the one version, and in vv. 34, 35 the other, due to Lk. Against this view vide Feine, Vork. Überlief.

Vv. 39-45. Mary visits Elizabeth.—Ver. 39. ἐν τ. ἡ. ταύταις in these (not those = ἐκείναις, A. V.) days = at the time of the angelic visit.—μετὰ σπουδῆς: no time lost, a most natural visit from one woman with a high hope, to another, a friend, in a similar state of mind.—εἰς τὴν ὀρεινὴν (χώραν, again ver. 65): into the hill country, referring to the southern hill country of Judah, Benjamin and Ephraim. Galilee had a hill country too. The expression has been supposed to point to the origin of Lk.'s document in Judaea (Hillmann).—εἰς πόλιν Ἰούδα, to a city of Judah, not particularly named. Reland (Palaestina) conjectures that we should read Jutta, the name of a priestly city mentioned twice in Joshua (xv. 55, xxi. 16).—Ver. 41. ἐσκίρτησε: commentators discuss the connection between the maternal excitement and the quickening of the child—which was cause and which effect. Let this and all other questions in reference to the movement denoted be passed over in respectful silence.—Ver. 42. ἀνεφώνησεν: here only in N. T. The verb, with the following words, κραυγῇ

Ἐλισάβετ, 42. καὶ ἀνεφώνησε φωνῇ[1] μεγάλῃ, καὶ εἶπεν, "Εὐλογημένη σὺ ἐν γυναιξί, καὶ εὐλογημένος ὁ καρπὸς τῆς κοιλίας σου. 43. καὶ πόθεν μοι τοῦτο, ἵνα ἔλθῃ ἡ μήτηρ τοῦ Κυρίου μου πρός με[2]; 44. ἰδοὺ γάρ, ὡς ἐγένετο ἡ φωνὴ τοῦ ἀσπασμοῦ σου εἰς τὰ ὦτά μου, ἐσκίρτησεν ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει τὸ βρέφος ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ μου. 45. καὶ μακαρία ἡ πιστεύσασα, ὅτι ἔσται [g] τελείωσις τοῖς λελαλημένοις αὐτῇ παρὰ Κυρίου."

g cf. Heb. vii. 11.

46. Καὶ εἶπε Μαριάμ, "[h] Μεγαλύνει ἡ ψυχή μου τὸν Κύριον, 47. καὶ ἠγαλλίασε τὸ πνεῦμά μου ἐπὶ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ σωτῆρί μου· 48. ὅτι ἐπέβλεψεν ἐπὶ τὴν ταπείνωσιν τῆς δούλης αὐτοῦ. ἰδοὺ γάρ, ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν μακαριοῦσί με πᾶσαι αἱ γενεαί· 49. ὅτι ἐποίησέ μοι μεγαλεῖα[3] ὁ δυνατός, καὶ ἅγιον τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ· 50. καὶ τὸ ἔλεος αὐτοῦ εἰς γενεὰς γενεῶν[4] τοῖς φοβουμένοις αὐτόν. 51. ἐποίησε κράτος ἐν βραχίονι αὐτοῦ· διεσκόρπισεν ὑπερηφάνους διανοίᾳ καρδίας αὐτῶν. 52. καθεῖλε δυνάστας ἀπὸ θρόνων, καὶ ὕψωσε ταπεινούς. 53. πεινῶντας ἐνέπλησεν ἀγαθῶν, καὶ πλουτοῦντας

h cf. use in Mt. xxiii. 5.

[1] κραυγῃ in BLΞ (Tisch., W.H.). [2] εμε in ℵB.
[3] μεγαλα in ℵBDL (Tisch., W.H.). μεγαλεια (CΔΞ) occurs in Acts ii. 11.
[4] εις γενεας και γενεας in BCLΞ (Tisch., W.H.).

μεγάλῃ, point to an unrestrained utterance under the influence of irrepressible feeling, thoroughly true to feminine nature: "blessed thou among women (a Hebrew superlative), and blessed the fruit of thy womb," poetic parallelism again, answering to the exalted state of feeling. The reference to the Holy Spirit (in ver. 41) implies that Elizabeth spoke by prophetic inspiration.—Ver. 43. ἵνα ἔλθῃ: subjunctive instead of infin. with art., the beginning of a tendency, which ended in the substitution of να with the subjunctive for the infinitive in modern Greek.—Ver. 44. γὰρ: implies that from the movement of her child Elizabeth inferred that the mother of the Lord stood before her.—Ver. 45. μακαρία, here, as elsewhere, points to rare and high felicity connected with heroic moods and achievements.—ὅτι, because or that, which? great conflict of opinion among commentators. The former sense would make ὅτι give the reason for calling Mary blessed = blessed because the things she hopes for will surely come to pass. The latter makes ὅτι indicate the object of faith = blessed she who believes that what God has said will come to pass, with possible allusion to her own husband's failure in faith.

Vv. 46-56. Mary's song.—μεγαλύνει: magnificat, Vulg., whence the ecclesiastical name for this hymn, which has close affinities with the song of Hanna in 1 Sam. ii. 1-10; variously regarded by critics: by some, e.g., Godet and Hahn, as an extemporised utterance under inspiration by Mary, by others as a remnant of old Jewish-Christian Hymnology (J. Weiss, etc.), by others still as a purely Jewish Psalm, lacking distinctively Christian features (Hillmann). There are certainly difficulties connected with the first view, e.g., the conventional phraseology and the presence of elements which do not seem to fit the special situation.—ψυχή, πνεῦμα: synonyms in parallel clauses.—Ver. 48. This verse and the two preceding form the first of four strophes, into which the song naturally divides. The first strophe expresses simply the singer's gladness. The second (vv. 49-50) states its cause. The third (vv. 51-53) describes in gnomic aorists the moral order of the world, for the establishment of which God ever works in His holy and wise Providence, overturning the conventional order, scattering the proud, upsetting thrones, and exalting them of low degree, filling the hungry, and sending the rich away empty. It is this third part of the hymn which on first view seems least in keeping with the occasion. And yet on a ἐξαπέστειλε κενούς. 54. ἀντελάβετο Ἰσραὴλ παιδὸς αὐτοῦ, μνησθῆναι ἐλέους, 55. καθὼς ἐλάλησε πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας ἡμῶν, τῷ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα." 56. Ἔμεινε δὲ Μαριὰμ σὺν αὐτῇ ὡσεὶ[1] μῆνας τρεῖς· καὶ ὑπέστρεψεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτῆς.

57. Τῇ δὲ Ἐλισάβετ ἐπλήσθη ὁ χρόνος τοῦ τεκεῖν αὐτήν, καὶ ἐγέννησεν υἱόν· 58. καὶ ἤκουσαν οἱ περίοικοι καὶ οἱ συγγενεῖς αὐτῆς, ὅτι ἐμεγάλυνε Κύριος τὸ ἔλεος αὐτοῦ μετ' αὐτῆς, καὶ συνέχαιρον αὐτῇ. 59. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῇ ὀγδόῃ ἡμέρᾳ,[2] ἦλθον περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον· καὶ ἐκάλουν αὐτὸ ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ Ζαχαρίαν. 60. καὶ ἀποκριθεῖσα ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ εἶπεν, "Οὐχί, ἀλλὰ κληθήσεται Ἰωάννης." 61. Καὶ εἶπον πρὸς αὐτήν, "Ὅτι οὐδείς ἐστιν ἐν τῇ συγγενείᾳ[3] σου, ὃς καλεῖται τῷ ὀνόματι τούτῳ." 62. Ἐνένευον δὲ τῷ πατρὶ αὐτοῦ, τὸ τί ἂν θέλοι καλεῖσθαι αὐτόν.[4]

[1] ως in ℵBLΞ 1.

[2] τη ημερα τη ογδοη in ℵBCDLΞ 33.

[3] εκ της συγγενειας in ℵABCLΔΞ.

[4] αυτο in ℵBD 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

large view this strophe exactly describes the constant tendency of Christ's influence in the world: to turn things upside down, reverse judgments, and alter positions. The last strophe (vv. 54, 55) sets forth the birth about to happen as a deed of divine grace to Israel.—Ver. 54. ἀντελάβετο: laid hold of with a view to help, as in Isaiah xli. 8, 9, Acts xx. 35, 1 Tim. vi. 2. Cf. ἐπιλαμβάνεται, Heb. ii. 16.—μνησθῆναι ἐλέους, καθὼς ἐλάλησεν: what is about to happen is presented as fulfilling a promise made to the Fathers long, long ago, but not forgotten by God, to whom 1000 years, so far as remembering and being interested in promises are concerned, are as one day.—τῷ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ τ. σ. α. The construction is a little doubtful, and has been differently understood. It is perhaps simplest to take Ἀβ., etc., as the dative of advantage = to remember mercy for the benefit of Abraham and his seed. The passage is an echo of Micah vii. 20.

Ver. 56. Mary returns to her home.—ἔμεινε: the time of Mary's sojourn with her kinswoman is given as "about three months". This would bring her departure near to the time of Elizabeth's confinement. Did she remain till the event was over? That is left doubtful.

Vv. 57-66. Birth of John.—Ver. 57. ἐπλήσθη, was fulfilled, the time for giving birth arrived in due course of nature.—Ver. 58. περίοικοι (περί, οἶκος), dwellers around, neighbours, here only in N. T., several times in Sept. Named first because nearest; some of the relatives would be farther away and would arrive later. This gathering of neighbours and kinsfolk (συγγενεῖς) presents a "gracious tableau of Israelite life," Godet.—μετ' αὐτῆς: a Hebraism = πρὸς αὐτήν.—συνέχαιρον α., they congratulated her: congratulabantur ei, Vulg.; or, better, they rejoiced with her (ver. 14).—Ver. 59. ἦλθον, on the eighth, the legal day, they came, to circumcise the child; i.e., those who were concerned in the function—the person who performed the operation, and the relatives of the family.—ἐκάλουν may be the imperfect of repeated action = they took for granted by repeated expressions that the name was to be Zechariah, or the conative imperfect indicating a wish which was frustrated.—Ver. 60. Ἰωάννης, John; presumably the mother had learned this from the father, by writing on a tablet as on the present occasion. The older commentators (Meyer also) supposed a Divine revelation.—Ver. 61. συγγενείας, kinsmanship. In Lk. only in N. T. Cf. Acts vii. 3, 14.—Ver. 62. ἐνένευον (here only in N. T.): they made signs, which seems to imply that Zechariah is supposed to be deaf as well as dumb. Various suggestions have been made to evade this conclusion; e.g., that men are very apt to treat a dumb person as if he were also deaf (Bengel, De Wette, Godet); that they communicated by signs instead of by

63. καὶ αἰτήσας πινακίδιον ἔγραψε, λέγων, "Ἰωάννης ἐστὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ·" καὶ ἐθαύμασαν πάντες. 64. Ἀνεῴχθη δὲ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ παραχρῆμα καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐλάλει εὐλογῶν τὸν Θεόν. 65. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐπὶ πάντας φόβος τοὺς περιοικοῦντας αὐτούς· καὶ ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ ὀρεινῇ τῆς Ἰουδαίας διελαλεῖτο πάντα τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα· 66. καὶ ἔθεντο πάντες οἱ ἀκούσαντες ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτῶν, λέγοντες, "Τί ἄρα τὸ παιδίον τοῦτο ἔσται;" Καὶ[1] χεὶρ Κυρίου ἦν μετ' αὐτοῦ. 67. Καὶ Ζαχαρίας ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ ἐπλήσθη Πνεύματος Ἁγίου, καὶ προεφήτευσε,[2] λέγων, 68. "Εὐλογητὸς Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, ὅτι ἐπεσκέψατο καὶ ἐποίησε [1]λύτρωσιν τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ· 69. καὶ ἤγειρε κέρας σωτηρίας ἡμῖν, ἐν τῷ[3] οἴκῳ Δαβὶδ τοῦ[3] παιδὸς αὐτοῦ· 70. (καθὼς ἐλάλησε διὰ στόματος τῶν ἁγίων τῶν[3] ἀπ' αἰῶνος προφη-

1 Ch. ii. 38. Heb. ix. 12.

[1] και γαρ in ℵBCDL (Tisch., W.H.). [2] επροφ. in ℵABCL 1, 33.

[3] Omit τω ℵBCDL 33: also του before παιδος ℵBDL; also των after αγιων ℵBLΔ 33.

speech to spare the feelings of Elizabeth, whose judgment was being appealed from (Meyer); that a sign was all that was needed, Zechariah having heard all that was said (Bleek, J. Weiss, Hahn).—τὸ before the clause following—τί ἂν θέλοι, viewed as a substantive, is very appropriate in a case where the question was not spoken but signalled.—ἂν θέλοι: the optative with ἄν, implies diverse possibilities; found in Lk.'s writings only in N. T.—Ver. 63. πινακίδιον (dim. from πίναξ), here only in N. T.: a little tablet probably covered with wax, used like a slate; pugillarem in Vulg.—λέγων is used here, Hebrew fashion = to the effect.—ἔγραψε λέγων: hypallage pro γράφων ἔλεγε (Pricaeus) = he said by writing.—ἐθαύμασαν: they wondered, at this consent of the parents in giving a strange name, and felt there must be something under it—an omen.—Ver. 64. στόμα, γλῶσσα: both connected with ἀνεῴχθη, though the idea of opening is applicable only to the former—a case of zeugma. The return of speech a second marvel or rather a third: (1) a child of old parents; (2) the singular name; (3) the recovery of speech, much marked, and commented on among the denizens of the hill country of Judah (διελαλεῖτο).—φόβος, not terror, but religious awe in presence of the supernatural—characteristic of all simple people.—Ver. 66. τί ἄρα, etc.: what, in view of all these unusual circumstances, will this child come to? A most natural question. They felt sure all things portended an uncommon future for this child: "omina principiis inesse solent".—καὶ γάρ, etc.: a reflection of the evangelist justifying the wistful questioning of the hill folk = they might well ask, for indeed the hand of the Lord was with him.

Vv. 67-79. The song of Zechariah, called from the first word of it in the Vulgate the Benedictus. It is usually divided into five strophes, but it is more obviously divisible into two main parts, vv. 67-75, vv. 76-79. (Briggs, The Messiah of the Gospels, calls these divisions strophes, thus recognising only two.) Hillmann (Jahrb. f. prot. Theol., 1891) regards the first part as a purely Jewish Psalm, having no reference to the birth of the Baptist; furnished with a preface, ver. 67, and an epilogue referring to the Baptist as the forerunner of Jesus by the evangelist. J. Weiss (in Meyer) seems to accept this conclusion, only suggesting that the second part (vv. 76-79) might be in the source used by Lk., appended to the Psalm by the Jewish-Christian redactor.

Ver. 67. ἐπροφήτευσεν, prophesied, when? At the circumcision, one naturally assumes. Hahn, however, connects the prophesying with the immediately preceding words concerning the hand of the Lord being with the boy. That is, Zechariah prophesied when it began to appear that his son was to have a remarkable career.—Ver. 68. ἐπεσκέψατο, visited graciously (vide on Mt. xxv. 36), occasionally used in Sept. in the sense of judicial visitation (Ps. lxxxix. 33). Note the use of the aorist here, which runs through vv. 68-75, in vv. 76-79

τῶν αὐτοῦ·) 71. σωτηρίαν ἐξ ἐχθρῶν ἡμῶν, καὶ ἐκ χειρὸς πάντων τῶν μισούντων ἡμᾶς· 72. ποιῆσαι ἔλεος μετὰ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν, καὶ μνησθῆναι διαθήκης ἁγίας αὐτοῦ, 73. ὅρκον ὃν ὤμοσε πρὸς Ἀβραὰμ τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν, 74. τοῦ δοῦναι ἡμῖν, ἀφόβως, ἐκ χειρὸς τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἡμῶν[1] ῥυσθέντας, λατρεύειν αὐτῷ 75. ἐν ὁσιότητι καὶ δικαιοσύνῃ ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ζωῆς[2] ἡμῶν. 76. Καὶ σύ,[3] παιδίον, προφήτης ὑψίστου κληθήσῃ· [j] προπορεύσῃ γὰρ πρὸ προσώπου[4] Κυρίου, ἑτοιμάσαι ὁδοὺς αὐτοῦ· 77. τοῦ δοῦναι γνῶσιν σωτηρίας τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ ἐν ἀφέσει ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν, 78. διὰ σπλάγχνα ἐλέους Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, ἐν οἷς ἐπεσκέψατο[5] ἡμᾶς ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους, 79. ἐπιφᾶναι τοῖς ἐν σκότει καὶ σκιᾷ θανάτου καθημένοις·

j here and in Acts vii. 40.

[1] εκ χειρος εχθρων in ℵBDL 33.

[2] πασαις ταις ημεραις in BL and της ζωης omitted in ℵBCDL al.

[3] και συ δε in ℵBCDL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] For προ προσωπου ℵB Orig. have ενωπιον (W.H.).

[5] ℵBL have επισκεψεται (W.H.).

futures occur. The object of ἐπεσκέψατο is latent in τῷ λαῷ (τὸν λαὸν, cf. vii. 16; λαός applied to Israel as the chosen people, ἔθνος to the other nations).—Ver. 69. κέρας σ. = βασιλείαν, because kings were anointed with a horn of oil, or = δύναμιν, because in their horn all horned animals have their power (Euthy. Zig.); a thoroughly Hebrew symbol.—ἐν οἴκῳ Δ., pointing to a descendant of David, who has wrought signal deliverance for Israel.—Ver. 70. ἁγίων: a predicate applied in reverence to the prophets, as to the apostles in Eph. iii. 5.—Ver. 71. σωτηρίαν, in apposition with κέρας σ., resuming and developing the thought interrupted by ver. 70, which is parenthetical.—ἐχθρῶν, τῶν μισούντων: not to be anxiously distinguished; poetic synonyms.—Ver. 72. ποιῆσαι: in effect epexegetical of salvation, though formally indicating the aim of the salvation.—μετὰ τ. π., as in ver. 58, to make mercy with, for to show mercy to.—ἁγίας, holy, applied to another of Israel's sacred inheritances: the covenant.—Ver. 73. ὅρκον for ὅρκου, depending on μνησθῆναι, a case of inverse attraction, the noun by the relative (ὃν, object of ὤμοσεν) instead of the relative by the noun. Cf. Lk. xx. 17. Examples from Greek authors in Bornemann, Scholia.—Ver. 75. ὁσιότητι: the Godward, religious aspect of conduct (Eph. iv. 24).—δικαιοσύνῃ: the manward, ethical aspect.

Vv. 76-79. From the general thanksgiving for Divine mercy the song turns to the special cause of gladness afforded by the birth of John.—σύ, παιδίον: this address supposes the Baptist to be still a child, and all that is said of him is a prophetic forecast of the future, in literary form.—ὑψίστου: once more, for God. In the circle which produced this hymn, and these early records, the idea of Divine transcendency characteristic of later Judaism seems to have prevailed.—Ver. 77. τοῦ δοῦναι, the infinitive of purpose, to be connected with προπορεύσῃ in ver. 76 = John will go before the Lord (Jehovah), with the view of giving the knowledge of salvation in the forgiveness of sins. This is a very general description of John's ministry, hardly differentiating it from that of Christ. The knowledge of salvation in forgiveness is salvation = Christ's gift.—Ver. 78. διὰ σπλάγχνα, etc., on account of, etc., indicating the fountain-head of salvation—the mercy of God, described in Hebrew phrase as the bowels of mercy of our God.—ἐπισκέψεται: the future (aorist in T.R.), though in few MSS. (ℵBL), is doubtless the true reading. In the second great strophe the verbs are all future, and describe what is to be.—ἀνατολὴ: happily rendered "dayspring" in A. V. The reference is undoubtedly to a light, star, or sun, not to a branch from Jesse's stem, as it might be so far as usage in Sept. is concerned (vide Jer. xxiii. 5, Zechar. iii. 8, vi. 12), for its function is ἐπιφᾶναι, to appear as a light to those in darkness (σκότει).—σκιᾷ θανάτου: vide on Mt. iv. 16.

τοῦ κατευθῦναι τοὺς πόδας ἡμῶν εἰς ὁδὸν εἰρήνης." 80. Τὸ δὲ παιδίον ηὔξανε καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο πνεύματι· καὶ ἦν ἐν ταῖς ἐρήμοις, ἕως ἡμέρας [k] ἀναδείξεως αὐτοῦ πρὸς τὸν Ἰσραήλ.

k here only.

II. 1. ΈΓΕΝΕΤΟ δὲ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις, ἐξῆλθε δόγμα παρὰ Καίσαρος Αὐγούστου, ἀπογράφεσθαι πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην· 2. αὕτη

The Benedictus is steeped in O. T. language; "an anthology from Psalms and Prophets," Holtz., H. C.

Ver. 80. Conclusion: being a summary statement on John's history from childhood to manhood.—πνεύματι: the growing strength of John's spirit, the development of a remarkable moral individuality, the main point in the view of the evangelist.—ἐν ταῖς ἐρήμοις, in the desert places: not far to go from his home to find them; visits to them frequent in early boyhood; constant abode when youth had passed into manhood; love of solitude grown into a passion. Meet foster-mother for one who is to be the censor of his time. Essenes not far off, but no indication of contact, either outwardly or inwardly, with them.

Chapter II. The Birth and Boyhood of Jesus.—Vv. 1-5. Joseph and Mary go up to Bethlehem. In these verses Luke makes a historical statement, which one might have been inclined to regard as an illustration of the ἀκρίβεια (i. 1), at which he aimed, as well as of his desire, in the spirit of Pauline universalism, to connect the birth of Jesus with the general history of the world. In the former respect the experience of the exegete is very disappointing. The passage has given rise to a host of questions which have been discussed, with bewildering conflict of opinion, in an extensive critical and apologetic literature. The difficulty is not so much as to the meaning of the evangelist's words, but rather as to their truth. As, however, the apologetic and the exegetical interests have been very much mixed up in the discussions, it may be well at the outset to indicate briefly the chief objections that have been taken to the passage on the score of historicity. On the face of it, Lk.'s statement is that the Roman Emperor at the time of Christ's birth ordered a universal census, that this order was carried out by Quirinius, governor of Syria, and that the execution of it was the occasion of Joseph and Mary going to Bethlehem. To this it has been objected:—

1. Apart from the Gospel, history knows nothing of a general imperial census in the time of Augustus.

2. There could have been no Roman census in Palestine during the time of Herod the Great, a rex socius.

3. Such a census at such a time could not have been carried out by Quirinius, for he was not governor in Syria then, nor till ten years later, when he did make a census which gave rise to a revolt under Judas of Galilee.

4. Under a Roman census it would not have been necessary for Joseph to go to Bethlehem, or for Mary to accompany him.—With these objections in our view we proceed with the exposition, noting their influence, as we go along, on the details of interpretation.

Ver. 1. ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις: the days of Herod (i. 5), and of the events related in the previous chapter: the birth of John, etc.—δόγμα (δοκέω) = δεδογμένον, an opinion as of philosophers; here a decree, as in Acts xvii. 7.—ἀπογράφεσθαι (here and in Heb. xii. 23): the decree concerned enrolment or registration of the population (the verb might be either middle or passive—enrol itself, or be enrolled; the latter the more probable). For what purpose—taxation, or general statistical objects—not indicated, and not to be taken for granted as in the rendering "taxed" in A. V., but the former most probably intended. The hypothesis that the registration had reference to statistics meets objections 1 and 2, because Augustus did make or complete a descriptio orbis of that sort, and such a census would give no offence to the Jews or their king. Vide Hahn, ad loc. The Greek word for taxing is ἀποτίμησις.—πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην: the whole habitable world, orbis terrarum = the Roman empire, not merely the provinces (Italy excluded), or Palestine, as has been suggested in an apologetic interest to get rid of the difficulties connected with a universal census. The usual meaning of the phrase, and the reference to Augustus as the source of the order, favour the larger sense. Augustus reigned from 30 B.C. to 14 A.D.

Ver. 2. This verse looks like a parenἡ[1] ἀπογραφὴ πρώτη ἐγένετο[2] ἡγεμονεύοντος τῆς Συρίας Κυρηνίου. 3. καὶ ἐπορεύοντο πάντες ἀπογράφεσθαι, ἕκαστος εἰς τὴν ἰδίαν[3] πόλιν. 4. Ἀνέβη δὲ καὶ Ἰωσὴφ ἀπὸ τῆς Γαλιλαίας, ἐκ πόλεως Ναζαρέτ, εἰς τὴν Ἰουδαίαν, εἰς πόλιν Δαβίδ, ἥτις καλεῖται Βηθλεέμ, διὰ τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν ἐξ οἴκου καὶ πατριᾶς Δαβίδ, 5. ἀπογράψασθαι σὺν Μαριὰμ τῇ μεμνηστευμένῃ[4] αὐτῷ γυναικί,[5] οὔσῃ ἐγκύῳ.

[1] η omitted in ℵBD 131; found in CLΔ (om. Tisch., W.H.).

[2] εγεν. before πρωτη in ℵD Orig. lat. (Tisch.). An exegetical device to meet a difficulty, thinks J. Weiss. As in T.R. ABCLΔ (W.H.).

[3] εαυτου in ℵcBDLΞ (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] εμνηστ. in ℵBCDLΞ.

[5] Omit γυναικι ℵBCDLΞ 1, 131 (Tisch., W.H.).

thetical explanation, and is actually bracketed in W.H. One could almost wish it had been omitted, or that there were reason to believe, as has been suggested by several writers, that it is a gloss that has found its way into the text, and that Lk. is not responsible for it—so much trouble has it given to commentators. Text and sense have alike been disputed.—αυτη has been taken as αὐτή = self, not αὕτη = illa, the same, to make room for a distinction between the decree and its execution or completion ten years after by Quirinius, so meeting difficulty No. 3. This device is now generally discarded. πρώτη has been taken as = προτέρα, meaning: this census took place before Quirinius was governor, a possible but very improbable rendering, not to say that one fails to see the object of such a statement. The true text is αὕτη ἀπογ. πρώτη ἐγέν., and the meaning: that census took place, as a first, when, etc. But why as a first? Because, reply many, there was a second, under the same Quirinius, ten years later, known to Lk. (Acts v. 37), disastrous in its consequence, and which he was anxious his readers should not confound with this one (so Hahn and others).—ἡγεμονεύοντος: this raises a question of fact. Was Quirinius governor then? He was, admittedly, governor of Syria ten years later, when he made the census referred to in Acts v. 37. Either there is a mistake here, or Quirinius was governor twice (so A. W. Zumpt, strenuously supported by Farrar, C. G. T., ad loc.), or at least present in Syria, at the time of Christ's birth, in some capacity, say as a commissioner in connection with the census.

Ver. 3. πάντες: not all throughout the world, but all in Palestine—the execution of the decree there being what the evangelist is interested in.—εἰς τὴν ἰδίαν πόλιν (or ἑαυτοῦ π., W.H.). Does this mean to the city of his people, or to the city of his abode? If the former, what a stir in Palestine, or in the world if πάντες be taken widely! A regular "Völkerwanderung" (Holtzmann in H. C.). Sensible of this, some (Hahn, e.g.) take the reference to be to the place of residence (Wohnort not Stammort), implying that Bethlehem was for Lk. as for Mt. Joseph's home, and that they merely happened to have been living in Nazareth just before. But ver. 7 implies that Joseph and Mary had no house in Bethlehem. Feine quotes, with a certain amount of approval, the view of Schneller (Kennst du das Land) that Joseph was not a carpenter but a mason, and that Bethlehem was therefore his natural home, being the headquarters of that craft then as now. On this view, Joseph had simply been in Nazareth building a house, not at home, but away from home for a time as an artisan.

Vv. 4, 5. Joseph and Mary and Nazareth are here referred to, as if they had not been mentioned before (i. 26, 27), implying that Lk. is here using an independent document (Holtz., H. C.).—ἀπὸ τ. Γαλ., ἐκ πόλ.: used with classical accuracy: ἀπὸ = direction from, ἐκ from within (C. G. T.).—ἐξ οἴκου καὶ πατριᾶς, "of the house and family," R. V.—οἶκοι, πατριαί, φυλαί represent a series of widening circles.—ἀπογράψασθαι, to be enrolled. If Bethlehem was Joseph's home, he would have gone to Bethlehem sooner or later in any case. Because of the census he went just then (Hahn).—σὺν Μαριὰμ, coming after ἀπογράψ., naturally suggests that she had to be enrolled too. Was this necessary? Even if not, reasons might be suggested for

6. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν τῷ εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἐκεῖ, ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ τεκεῖν αὐτήν. 7. καὶ ἔτεκε τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς τὸν πρωτότοκον, καὶ ἐσπαργάνωσεν αὐτόν, καὶ ἀνέκλινεν αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ[1] φάτνῃ· διότι οὐκ ἦν αὐτοῖς τόπος ἐν τῷ καταλύματι.

8. Καὶ ποιμένες ἦσαν ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ τῇ αὐτῇ ἀγραυλοῦντες καὶ φυλάσσοντες φυλακὰς τῆς νυκτὸς ἐπὶ τὴν ποίμνην αὐτῶν. 9. καὶ ἰδού,[2] ἄγγελος Κυρίου ἐπέστη αὐτοῖς, καὶ δόξα Κυρίου περιέλαμψεν αὐτούς· καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν φόβον μέγαν. 10. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ ἄγγελος, "Μὴ φοβεῖσθε· ἰδοὺ γάρ, εὐαγγελίζομαι ὑμῖν χαρὰν μεγάλην, ἥτις ἔσται παντὶ τῷ λαῷ· 11. ὅτι ἐτέχθη ὑμῖν σήμερον σωτήρ, ὅς ἐστι Χριστὸς Κύριος, ἐν πόλει Δαβίδ. 12. καὶ τοῦτο ὑμῖν τὸ[3] σημεῖον· εὑρήσετε βρέφος ἐσπαργανωμένον, κείμενον ἐν τῇ[4] φάτνῃ." 13. Καὶ ἐξαίφνης ἐγένετο σὺν τῷ ἀγγέλῳ πλῆθος

[1] Omit τη ℵABDLΞ.

[2] ℵBLΞ omit ιδου.

[3] το is omitted in BΞ 130 (W.H. relegate to margin).

[4] For κειμενον εν τη φατνη ℵD 68 read simply εν φατνη (Tisch.). BLΞ 1, 33 al. have και κειμενον (W.H.). Most MSS. omit τη before φατ.

her going with her husband: her condition, the intention to settle there as their real home, she an heiress, etc.—ἐγκύῳ (here only in N. T.), preparing for what follows.

With reference to the foregoing statement, it is generally agreed that a census of some kind must have taken place. Meyer and Weiss, following Schleiermacher and Olshausen, think that the event was something internal to Judaea, and concerned the revision of family genealogical registers, and that Lk. was misled into transforming this petty transaction into an affair of world-historical significance. This is not satisfactory. It would be much more satisfactory if it could be shown that Lk.'s historic framing of the birth of Jesus is strictly accurate. But most satisfactory of all is it to know that such a demonstration, however desirable, is not vital to faith.

Vv. 6, 7. The birth.—ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡ., as in i. 57. In this case, as in that of John, the natural course was run.—ἐσπαργάνωσεν (here and ver. 12), ἀνέκλινεν: the narrative runs as if Mary did these things herself, whence the patristic inference of painless birth.—φάτνῃ, in a manger (in a stall, Grotius, et al.).—καταλύματι, in the inn, not probably a πανδοχεῖον (x. 34), with a host, but simply a khan, an enclosure with open recesses. The meaning may be, not that there was absolutely no room for Joseph and Mary there, but that the place was too crowded for a birth, and that therefore they retired to a stall or cave, where there was room for the mother, and a crib for the babe (vide ch. xxii. 11).

Vv. 8-13. The shepherds and the angels.—Ver. 8. ποιμένες, shepherds, without article; no connection between them and the birthplace.—ἀγραυλοῦντες (ἀγρός, αὐλή, here only), bivouacking, passing the night in the open air; implying naturally a mild time of the year between March and November. In winter the flocks were in fold.—Ver. 9. ἐπέστη, used elsewhere by Lk. in reference to angelic appearances, eighteen times in his writings in all = stood beside; one more than their number, suddenly.—περιέλαμψεν: here and in Acts xxvi. 13, only, in N. T. = shone around.—ἐφοβήθησαν, they feared greatly; yet they were not utterly unprepared, their thoughts had been of a Divine gracious visitation—waiting for the consolation of Israel; subjective and objective corresponding.—Ver. 10. εὐαγγελίζομαι, etc., I bring good news in the form of a great joy (cf. i. 19).—παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, not merely to you, but to the whole people (of Israel, vide i. 68).—Ver. 11.—σωτήρ: a word occurring (with σωτηρία) often in Lk. and in St. Paul, not often elsewhere in N. T.—Κύριος: also often in Lk.'s Gospel, where the other evangelists use Jesus. The angel uses the dialect of the apostolic age.—Ver. 12. σημεῖον, the στρατιᾶς οὐρανίου,[1] αἰνούντων τὸν Θεόν, καὶ λεγόντων, 14. "Δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις Θεῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς εἰρήνη· ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία."[2] 15. Καὶ ἐγένετο, ὡς ἀπῆλθον ἀπ' αὐτῶν εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν οἱ ἄγγελοι, καὶ οἱ ἄνθρωποι οἱ ποιμένες[3] εἶπον[4] πρὸς ἀλλήλους, "Διέλθωμεν δὴ ἕως Βηθλεέμ, καὶ ἴδωμεν τὸ ῥῆμα τοῦτο τὸ γεγονός, ὃ ὁ Κύριος ἐγνώρισεν ἡμῖν." 16. Καὶ ἦλθον σπεύσαντες, καὶ ἀνεῦρον τήν τε Μαριὰμ καὶ τὸν Ἰωσήφ, καὶ τὸ βρέφος κείμενον ἐν τῇ φάτνῃ. 17. ἰδόντες δὲ διεγνώρισαν[5] περὶ τοῦ ῥήματος τοῦ λαληθέντος αὐτοῖς περὶ τοῦ παιδίου τούτου. 18. καὶ πάντες οἱ ἀκούσαντες

[1] ουρανου in BD (Trg., W.H., margin).

[2] The documents are divided between ευδοκια and ευδοκιας. Most recent editors favour the latter, following ℵABD, vet. Lat. Vulg., Iren. [lat.], Orig. [lat.] W.H. place ευδοκιας in text and ευδοκια in margin.

[3] ℵBLΞ 1 omit οι ανθρωποι found in ADΔ al. plur. Tisch., W.H., om. J. Weiss suggests that οι ποιμενες is an ancient gloss which in one branch of the tradition crept into the text, in another displaced οι ανθ.

[4] ελαλουν in ℵB.

[5] εγνωρισαν in ℵBDLΞ.

sign just that which might, but for forewarning, have been a stumbling block; the Saviour and Lord lying in a crib, in a cattle stall, or cave! So Hahn, but Godet and Schanz take "sign" merely in the sense of means of identification.

Ver. 14. The angels' song.—If we regard the announcement of the angel to the shepherds (vv. 10-12) as a song, then we may view the gloria in excelsis as a refrain sung by a celestial choir (πλῆθος στρατιᾶς οὐρανίου, ver. 13). With the reading εὐδοκίας, the refrain is in two lines:—

1. "Glory to God in the highest."

2. "And on earth peace among men, in whom He is well pleased."

εἰρήνη in 2 answering to δόξα in 1; ἐπὶ γῆς to ἐν ὑψίστοις; ἀνθρώποις to Θεῷ. With the reading εὐδοκία (T.R.), it falls into three:—

1. Glory to God in the highest.

2. And on earth peace (between man and man).

3. Good will (of God) among men.

ἐν ὑψίστοις, in the highest places, proper abode of Him who is repeatedly in these early chapters called "the Highest". The thought in 1 echoes a sentiment in the Psalter of Solomon (18, 11), μέγας ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν καὶ ἔνδοξος ἐν ὑψίστοις.—εὐδοκίας is a gen. of quality, limiting ἀνθρώποις = those men who are the objects of the Divine εὐδοκία. They may or may not be all men, but the intention is not to assert that God's good pleasure rests on all. J. Weiss in Meyer says = τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς.

Vv. 15-20. The shepherds go to Bethlehem.—διέλθωμεν δή, come! let us go. The force of δή, a highly emotional particle (the second time we have met with it, vide at Mt. xiii. 23), can hardly be expressed in English. The rendering in A. V. (and R. V.), "Let us now go," based on the assumption that δὴ has affinity with ἤδη, is very tame, giving no idea of the mental excitement of the shepherds, and the demonstrative energy with which they communicated to each other, comrade-fashion, the idea which had seized their minds. "The δὴ gives a pressing character to the invitation," Godet. Similarly Hahn = "agedum, wohlan, doch". Cf. δὴ in Acts xiii. 2. The διὰ in διέλθωμεν suggests the idea of passing through the fields.—ἕως (conjunction used as a preposition) may imply that it was a considerable distance to Bethlehem (Schanz).—ῥῆμα, here = "thing" rather than "word".—Ver. 16. σπεύσαντες, hasting; movement answering to mood revealed by δή.—τήν τε Μαριὰμ, etc., mother, father, child, recognised in this order, all united together in one group by τε. The position of the babe, in the manger, noted as corresponding to the angelic announcement; hence in ver. 17 the statement that the shepherds recognised the correspondence.—Vv. 18, 19. The shepherds of course told what they had seen in Bethlehem, and how they had been led to go there, and these verses state the effect produced by their story.

ἐθαύμασαν περὶ τῶν λαληθέντων ὑπὸ τῶν ποιμένων πρὸς αὐτούς. 19. ἡ δὲ Μαριὰμ πάντα συνετήρει τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα, συμβάλλουσα ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτῆς. 20. καὶ ἐπέστρεψαν[1] οἱ ποιμένες, δοξάζοντες καὶ αἰνοῦντες τὸν Θεὸν ἐπὶ πᾶσιν οἷς ἤκουσαν καὶ εἶδον, καθὼς ἐλαλήθη πρὸς αὐτούς.

21. ΚΑΙ ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ τοῦ περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον,[2] καὶ ἐκλήθη τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦς, τὸ κληθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀγγέλου πρὸ τοῦ συλληφθῆναι αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ.

22. ΚΑΙ ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ αὐτῶν, κατὰ τὸν νόμον Μωσέως, ἀνήγαγον αὐτὸν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, παραστῆσαι τῷ Κυρίῳ, 23. καθὼς γέγραπται ἐν νόμῳ Κυρίου, "Ὅτι πᾶν ἄρσεν διανοῖγον μήτραν ἅγιον τῷ Κυρίῳ κληθήσεται·" 24. καὶ τοῦ δοῦναι θυσίαν, κατὰ τὸ εἰρημένον ἐν νόμῳ[3] Κυρίου, 'Ζεῦγος [a] τρυγόνων ἢ δύο [b] νεοσσοὺς[4] περιστερῶν.'

a here only in N. T.
b here only in N. T.

[1] υπεστρεψαν in all uncials.
[2] αυτον in ℵABLΔΞ al. (Tisch., W.H.). D has το παιδιον.
[3] τω before νομω in ℵBDL.
[4] νοσσους in ℵB; νεοσσους in ADL.

All wondered, but Mary thought on all the wonderful things that had happened to herself and to the shepherds; keeping them well in mind (συνετήρει), and putting them together (συμβάλλουσα, conferens, Vulg.), so as to see what they all meant. The wonder of the many was a transient emotion (aorist); this recollecting and brooding of Mary was an abiding habit (συνετήρει, imperfect).

Vv. 21-24. Circumcision and presentation in the temple.—Ver. 21. ἐπλήσθησαν, as in i. 57, ii. 6, and again in ii. 22; in the first two places the reference is to the course of nature, in the second two to the course prescribed by the law.—τοῦ περιτεμεῖν, the genitive not so much of purpose (Meyer, J. Weiss), but of more exact definition (Schanz; vide Burton, M. and T., § 400, on the use of τοῦ with infinitive to limit nouns).—καὶ ἐκλήθη: the καὶ may be taken as "also" = He was circumcised (understood), and at the same time His name was called Jesus, or as introducing the apodosis: and = then (so Godet and Hahn). It might have been dispensed with (superfluit, Grotius).—Ver. 22. κατὰ τὸν νόμον Μ. The law relating to women after confinement is contained in Leviticus xii.—ἀνήγαγον: at the close of these forty days of purification His parents took Jesus up to Jerusalem from Bethlehem. The Greek form of the name for Jerusalem, Ἱεροσόλυμα, occurs here and in a few other places in Lk. Ἱερουσαλήμ is the more common form.—παραστῆσαι, a word used by Lk. and St. Paul (Rom. xii. 1), in the sense of dedication. This act was performed in accordance with the legal conception that the first-born belonged to God, His priestly servants before the institution of the Levitical order (Num. viii. 18, 19). J. Weiss suggests that the narrative is modelled on the story of the dedication of Samuel (1 Sam. i. 21-28).—Ver. 23. γέγραπται: the reference is to Ex. xiii. 2, and the statement implies that every first-born male child, as belonging to God, must be ransomed (Ex. xxxiv. 19, Num. xviii. 15, 16).—Ver. 24. τοῦ δοῦναι: parallel to παραστῆσαι, indicating another of the purposes connected with the visit to Jerusalem. The mother went to offer her gift of thanksgiving after the days of purification were ended.—τὸ εἰρημένον, in Lev. xii., where alternative offerings are specified: a lamb, and a turtle dove or a young pigeon; and in case of the poor two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, the one for a burnt offering, the other for a sin offering. Mary brought the poor woman's offering. The question has been asked, why any purification in this case? and the fact has been adduced in proof that the original docu-

25. Καὶ ἰδού, ἦν ἄνθρωπος[1] ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ, ᾧ ὄνομα Συμεών, καὶ ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὗτος δίκαιος καὶ [c]εὐλαβής, προσδεχόμενος παράκλησιν τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, καὶ Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον ἦν[2] ἐπ' αὐτόν· 26. καὶ ἦν αὐτῷ κεχρηματισμένον ὑπὸ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Ἁγίου, μὴ [d]ἰδεῖν [d]θάνατον πρὶν ἢ[3] ἴδῃ τὸν Χριστὸν Κυρίου. 27. Καὶ ἦλθεν ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι εἰς τὸ ἱερόν· καὶ ἐν τῷ εἰσαγαγεῖν τοὺς γονεῖς τὸ παιδίον Ἰησοῦν, τοῦ ποιῆσαι αὐτοὺς κατὰ τὸ εἰθισμένον τοῦ νόμου περὶ αὐτοῦ, 28. καὶ αὐτὸς ἐδέξατο αὐτὸ εἰς τὰς ἀγκάλας αὐτοῦ,[4] καὶ εὐλόγησε τὸν Θεόν, καὶ εἶπε, 29. "Νῦν ἀπολύεις τὸν δοῦλόν σου, δέσποτα, κατὰ τὸ ῥῆμά σου, ἐν εἰρήνῃ· 30. ὅτι εἶδον οἱ ὀφθαλμοί μου τὸ

c Acts ii. 5; viii. 2; xxii. 12.
d Heb. xi. 5.

[1] ανθρωπος before ην in ℵB (Tisch., W.H.). ην αν. in ADLΔ (not to be summarily rejected, J. Weiss).

[2] ην before αγιον in ℵBLΔ al., e. T.R. = D.

[3] πριν η in ADΔ; πριν αν in BF 36 (W.H. bracket η and read πριν αν); πριν η αν in L 33 (Tisch.).

[4] ℵBL omit αυτου (Tisch., W.H.).

ment used by Lk. knew nothing of the virgin birth.—γονεῖς, ver. 27, has been used for the same purpose (vide Hillmann, Jahrb. f. pr. Theol., 1891).

Vv. 25-28. Simeon.—Συμεών, introduced as a stranger (ἄνθρωπος ἦν). The legendary spirit which loves definite particulars about celebrities of Scripture has tried to fill up the blank. The father of Gamaliel the son of Hillel, one of the seventy translators of the Hebrew Bible, are among the suggestions. A bracketed passage in Euthy. Zig. says, in reference to the latter suggestion, that Simeon alone of the company objected to the rendering of Isaiah vii. 14: "the virgin shall conceive," and that an angel told him he should live to take the virgin's son into his arms.—δίκαιος καὶ εὐλαβής. The evangelist is careful to make known what this man was, while giving no indication who he was ("who they were no man knows, what they were all men know," inscription on a tombstone in a soldiers' graveyard in Virginia), just and God-fearing, a saint of the O. T. type.—προσδεχόμενος παράκλησιν τ. Ἰ.: an earnest believer in the Messianic hope, and fervently desiring its early fulfilment. Its fulfilment would be Israel's consolation. The Messianic hope, the ideal of a good time coming, was the child of present sorrow—sin and misery prevalent, all things out of joint. The keynote of this view is struck in Is. xl. i.: "comfort ye".—παρακαλεῖτε. The Rabbis called Messiah the Comforter, Menahem. Cf. προσδεχ. λύτρωσιν in ver. 38.—Ver. 26. ἦν κεχρηματισμένον, it had been revealed (for the verb vide Mt. ii. 12), how long before not indicated.—μὴ ἰδεῖν: we have here an instance of the aorist infinitive referring to what is future in relation to the principal verb. In such a case the aorist is really timeless, as it can be in dependent moods, vide Burton, M. and T., § 114.—πρὶν ἢ ἂν ἴδῃ: πρὶν here and in Acts xxv. 16 with a finite verb, usually with the infinitive, vide Mt. i. 18, xxvi. 34.—Ver. 27. ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι: observe the frequent reference to the Spirit in connection with Simeon, vide vv. 25 and 26.—εἰθισμένον (ἐθίζω), here only in N. T.: according to the established custom of the law.—Ver. 28. καί, as in ver. 21, before ἐκλήθη, introducing the apodosis "then" in A. V. and R. V.—αὐτός, not necessarily emphatic (Keil, Farrar), vide i. 22.

Vv. 29-32. Nunc dimittis.—Ver. 29. νῦν, now, at last, of a hope long cherished by one who is full of years, and content to die.—ἀπολύεις, Thou releasest me, present for the future, death near, and welcome.—δοῦλον, δέσποτα: slave, master; terms appropriate at all times to express the relation between God and men, yet savouring of legal piety.—ἐν εἰρήνῃ, in peace; he has had enough of life and its service, and the purpose of life has been fulfilled by the crowning mercy of a sight of the Christ: death will be as a sleep to a labouring man.—Ver. 30 gives the reason for this tranquil attitude towards death.—τὸ σωτήριόν σου, 31. ὃ ἡτοίμασας κατὰ πρόσωπον πάντων τῶν λαῶν· 32. φῶς εἰς ἀποκάλυψιν ἐθνῶν, καὶ δόξαν λαοῦ σου Ἰσραήλ." 33. Καὶ ἦν Ἰωσὴφ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ[1] θαυμάζοντες ἐπὶ τοῖς λαλουμένοις περὶ αὐτοῦ. 34. καὶ εὐλόγησεν αὐτοὺς Συμεών, καὶ εἶπε πρὸς Μαριὰμ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ, "Ἰδού, οὗτος [e] κεῖται εἰς πτῶσιν καὶ ἀνάστασιν πολλῶν ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ, καὶ εἰς σημεῖον ἀντιλεγόμενον· 35. (καὶ σοῦ δὲ[2] αὐτῆς τὴν ψυχὴν διελεύσεται ῥομφαία·) ὅπως ἂν ἀποκαλυφθῶσιν ἐκ πολλῶν καρδιῶν διαλογισμοί."

e Phil. i. 16. 1 Thess. iii. 3.

36. Καὶ ἦν Ἄννα [f] προφῆτις, θυγάτηρ Φανουήλ, ἐκ φυλῆς Ἀσήρ· αὕτη προβεβηκυῖα ἐν ἡμέραις πολλαῖς, ζήσασα ἔτη μετὰ ἀνδρὸς[3] f Rev. ii. 20.

[1] For ην . . . θαυμ. read ην ο πατηρ αυτου και η μητηρ θαυμ. with ℵBDL 1, 131. ℵL retain second αυτου. The substitution of Ιωσηφ for ο πατηρ explains itself.

[2] δε omitted in BLΞ.

[3] μετα ανδρος before ετη in ℵBLΔ 13, 33, 69, 131.

σωτήριον = τὴν σωτηρίαν, often in Sept. —Ver. 31. πάντων τῶν λαῶν: all peoples concerned in the salvation, at least as spectators.—Ver. 32. φῶς εἰς ἀ. ἐ.: the Gentiles are to be more than spectators, even sharers in the salvation, which is represented under the twofold aspect of a light and a glory.—φῶς and δόξαν may be taken in apposition with ὃ as objects of ἡτοίμασας: salvation prepared or provided in the form of a light for the Gentiles, and a glory for Israel. Universalism here, but not of the pronounced type of Lk. (Holtz., H. C.), rather such as is found even in O. T. prophets.—Ver. 33. ἦν: the construction is peculiar, the verb singular, and the participle, forming with it a periphrastic imperfect, plural = was the father, and was the mother, together wondering. Vide Winer, § 58, p. 651. The writer thinks of the two parents first as isolated and then as united in their wonder.—Ver. 34. εὐλόγησεν: "the less is blessed of the better". Age, however humble, may bless youth. Jacob blessed Pharaoh.—κεῖται, is appointed—εἰς πτῶσιν, etc.: generally, this child will influence His time in a decided manner, and to opposite effects, and with painful consequences to Himself; a forecast not necessarily beyond prophetic ken, based on insight into the career of epoch-making men. It is so more or less always. The blessing of being father or mother of such a child is great, but not unmixed with sorrow.—Ver. 35. καὶ σοῦ, singles out the mother for a special share in the sorrow connected with the tragic career of one destined to be much spoken against (ἀντιλεγόμενον); this inevitable because of a mother's intense love. Mary's sorrow is compared vividly to a sword (ῥομφαία here and in Rev. i. 16, and in Sept., Zech. xiii. 7) passing through her soul. It is a figure strong enough to cover the bitterest experiences of the Mater Dolorosa, but it does not necessarily imply prevision of the cross. There is therefore no reason, on this account at least, for the suggestion that ver. 35a is an editorial addition to his source by the evangelist (J. Weiss).—ὅπως introduces a final clause which can hardly refer to the immediately preceding statement about the sword piercing Mary's soul, but must rather indicate the purpose and result of the whole future career of the child, whereof the mother's sorrow is to be an incidental effect. The connection is: κεῖται εἰς πτ., etc. . . . ὅπως ἂν ἀποκαλ. The general result, and one of the Divine aims, will be the revelation of men's inmost thoughts, showing, e.g., that the reputedly godly were not really godly. Observe the ἂν in this pure final clause. It does not affect the meaning. Godet says that it indicates without doubt that the manifestation of hidden thoughts will take place every time occasion presents itself, in contact with the Saviour.

Vv. 36-38. Anna.—Another aged saint of the O. T. type comes on the stage speaking thankful prophetic words concerning the Holy Child.—Ver. 36. ἦν: either there was there, aderat (Meyer, Godet, Weizsäcker), or there was, there ἑπτὰ ἀπὸ τῆς [g] παρθενίας αὐτῆς· 37. καὶ αὕτη χήρα ὡς[1] ἐτῶν ὀγδοηκοντατεσσάρων, ἣ οὐκ ἀφίστατο ἀπὸ[2] τοῦ ἱεροῦ, νηστείαις καὶ δεήσεσι [h] λατρεύουσα νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν· 38. καὶ αὕτη[3] αὐτῇ τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐπιστᾶσα ἀνθωμολογεῖτο τῷ Κυρίῳ,[4] καὶ ἐλάλει περὶ αὐτοῦ πᾶσι τοῖς προσδεχομένοις λύτρωσιν ἐν[5] Ἱερουσαλήμ. 39. Καὶ ὡς ἐτέλεσαν ἅπαντα τὰ[6] κατὰ τὸν νόμον Κυρίου, ὑπέστρεψαν[7] εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, εἰς τὴν πόλιν αὐτῶν[8] Ναζαρέτ. 40. Τὸ δὲ παιδίον ηὔξανε, καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο πνεύματι,[9] πληρούμενον σοφίας[10]· καὶ χάρις Θεοῦ ἦν ἐπ' αὐτό.

g here only in N. T.

h Acts xxvi. 7. Heb. ix. 9; x. 2 (absol.).

[1] εως in ℵABLΞ 33. [2] BDL omit απο (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] ℵABDLΞ 33 al. omit this αυτη (Tisch., W.H.). [4] θεω in ℵBDLΞ.

[5] ℵBΞ minusc. omit εν (Tisch., W.H.) found in BLΔ al.

[6] παντα and without τα in ℵL (Tisch.); παντα with τα in BΞ (W.H.); απαντα without τα in D.

[7] επεστρεψαν in ℵBΞ. υπεσ. conforms to the common usage in Lk.

[8] For εις τ. π. αυτων ℵBD have εις π. εαυτων. [9] ℵBDL omit πνευματι.

[10] σοφια in BL 33 (W.H.). T.R. = ℵDΔ (Tisch.).

lived (De Wette, J. Weiss, Schanz, Hahn).—Ἄννα = חַנָּה, 1 Sam. i. 20 (Ἄννα in Sept.) = grace. Of this woman some particulars are given, e.g., her father and her tribe, which makes the absence of such details in Simeon's case more noteworthy. The two placed side by side give an aspect of historicity to the narrative.—αὕτη (or αὐτή, the sense much the same) introduces some further details in a loosely constructed sentence, which looks like biographic notes, with verbs left out = she advanced in years, having lived with a husband, seven years from virginity, the same a widow till eighty-four years—all which may be regarded, if we will, as a parenthesis, followed by a relative clause containing a statement of more importance, describing her way of life = who departed not from the temple, serving (God) by fasts and prayers, night and day.—Ver. 37. ἕως: either a widow for eighty-four years (Godet), or, as most think, a widow till the eighty-fourth year of her life. The former rendering would make her very old: married, say, at sixteen, seven years a wife, eighty-four years a widow = 107; not impossible, and borne out by the πολλαῖς after ἡμέραις (ver. 36, advanced in days—many).—νηστείαις: the fasting might be due to poverty, or on system, which would suggest a Judaistic type of piety.—νύκτα κ. ἡ.: did she sleep within the temple precincts?—Ver. 38. The T.R. has yet another αυτη here (the third), before αὐτῇ, which really seems wanted as nominative to the verb following, but which one can imagine scribes omitting to relieve the heaviness and monotony of the style.—ἀνθωμολογεῖτο (here only in N. T.): perhaps no stress should be laid on the preposition ἀντὶ, as the compound verb occurs in the sense of the simple verb in Sept. (Ps. lxxix. 13). The suggestion of an antiphony between Anna and Simeon (Godet; vicissim, Bengel) is tempting = began in turn to give thanks. The ἀντὶ may refer to spectators = began to praise God openly before all (Hahn). The subject of her praise of course was Jesus (περὶ αὐτοῦ), and its burden that He was the Saviour.—ἐλάλει points to an activity not confined to a single utterance; she spoke again and again on the theme to all receptive spirits. The omission of ἐν before Ἱερ. in ℵB, etc., gives us a peculiar designation for the circle to whom the prophetess addressed herself = those waiting for the redemption of Jerusalem (instead of Israel in ver. 25). Yet Isaiah xl. 2—"speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem"—makes such a turn of thought intelligible. And there might be discerning ones who knew that there was no place more needing redemption than that holy, unholy city.

Vv. 39, 40. Return to Nazareth.—πόλιν ἑαυτῶν, their own city, certainly

41. ΚΑΙ ἐπορεύοντο οἱ γονεῖς αὐτοῦ κατ' ἔτος εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ τῇ ἑορτῇ τοῦ πάσχα. 42. καὶ ὅτε ἐγένετο ἐτῶν δώδεκα, ἀναβάντων [1] αὐτῶν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα [2] κατὰ τὸ ἔθος τῆς ἑορτῆς, 43. καὶ τελειωσάντων τὰς ἡμέρας, ἐν τῷ ὑποστρέφειν αὐτούς, ὑπέμεινεν Ἰησοῦς ὁ παῖς ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ· καὶ οὐκ ἔγνω Ἰωσὴφ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ [3] αὐτοῦ. 44. νομίσαντες δὲ αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ συνοδίᾳ εἶναι,[4] ἦλθον ἡμέρας ὁδόν, καὶ ἀνεζήτουν αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς συγγενέσι καὶ ἐν [5] τοῖς γνωστοῖς· 45. καὶ μὴ εὑρόντες αὐτόν,[6] ὑπέστρεψαν εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ, ζητοῦντες [7] αὐτόν. 46. Καὶ ἐγένετο μεθ' ἡμέρας τρεῖς, εὗρον αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, καθεζόμενον ἐν μέσῳ τῶν διδασκάλων, καὶ ἀκούοντα αὐτῶν, καὶ

[1] αναβαινοντων in ℵABL 33 al.

[2] ℵBDL omit εις Ι., an explanatory addition.

[3] For εγνω Ι. και η μ. ℵBDL 1, 33 al. have εγνωσαν οι γονεις.

[4] ειναι before εν τη συν. in ℵBDL 1, 33.

[5] B 33 omit this εν (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] Omit αυτον ℵBDL.

[7] αναζ. in BCDL.

suggesting that Nazareth, not Bethlehem, had been the true home of Joseph and Mary.—Ver. 40. ηὔξανε καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο, grew, and waxed strong, both in reference to the physical nature.—πνεύματι in T.R. is borrowed from i. 80; a healthy, vigorous child, an important thing to note in reference to Jesus.—πληρούμενον: present participle, not = plenus, Vulg., full, but in course of being filled with wisdom—mind as well as body subject to the law of growth.—χάρις: a great word of St. Paul's, also more used by Lk. than by either of the other two synoptists (vide i. 52, iv. 22, vi. 32, 33, 34); here to be taken broadly = favour, good pleasure. The child Jesus dear to God, and the object of His paternal care.

Vv. 41-52. When twelve years old. Lk. here relates one solitary, significant incident from the early years of Jesus, as if to say: from this, learn all. The one story shows the wish to collect anecdotes of those silent years. There would have been more had the evangelist had more to tell. The paucity of information favours the historicity of the tradition.—Ver. 41. κατ' ἔτος: law-observing people, piously observant of the annual feasts, especially that of the passover.—Ver. 42. ἐτῶν δώδεκα: this mention of the age of Jesus is meant to suggest, though it is not directly stated, that this year He went up to Jerusalem with His parents; ἀναβαινόντων includes Him. At twelve a Jewish boy became a son of the law, with the responsibility of a man, putting on the phylacteries which reminded of the obligation to keep the law (vide Wünsche, Beiträge, ad loc.).—Ver. 43. τελειωσάντων τ. ἡ. This naturally means that they stayed all the time of the feast, seven days. This was not absolutely incumbent; some went home after the first two days, but such people as Joseph and Mary would do their duty thoroughly.—ὑπέμεινεν, tarried behind, not so much intentionally (Hahn) as by involuntary preoccupation—His nature rather than His will the cause (Acts xvii. 14).—Ver. 44. ἐν τῇ συνοδίᾳ, in the company journeying together (σύν, ὁδός, here only in N. T.), a journeying together, then those who so journey. A company would be made up of people from the same neighbourhood, well acquainted with one another.—ἡμέρας ὁδὸν, a day's journey. It is quite conceivable how they should have gone on so long without missing the boy, without much or any blame to the parents; not negligence, but human infirmity at worst.—συγγενέσι, γνωστοῖς: kinsfolk and acquaintances. Had there been less acquaintance and intimacy there had been less risk of losing the child. Friends take up each other's attention, and members of the same family do not stick so close together, and the absence of one excites no surprise.—Ver. 45. ἀναζητοῦντες: the present participle, expressing the purpose of the journey back to Jerusalem, where (not on the road) the search took place (cf. Acts xi. 25). The ἀνά here (as in ἀνεζήτουν, ver. 44) implies careful, anxious search.—Ver. 46. ἡμέρας τρεῖς, three days, measured from ἐπερωτῶντα αὐτούς. 47. ἐξίσταντο δὲ πάντες οἱ ἀκούοντες αὐτοῦ, ἐπὶ τῇ συνέσει καὶ ταῖς ἀποκρίσεσιν αὐτοῦ. 48. Καὶ ἰδόντες αὐτόν, ἐξεπλάγησαν· καὶ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ εἶπε,[1] "Τέκνον, τί ἐποίησας ἡμῖν οὕτως; ἰδού, ὁ πατήρ σου κἀγὼ ὀδυνώμενοι ἐζητοῦμέν[2] σε." 49. Καὶ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Τί ὅτι ἐζητεῖτέ με; οὐκ ᾔδειτε ὅτι ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός μου δεῖ εἶναί με;" 50. Καὶ αὐτοὶ οὐ συνῆκαν τὸ ῥῆμα ὃ ἐλάλησεν αὐτοῖς. 51. Καὶ κατέβη μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς Ναζαρέτ καὶ ἦν ὑποτασσόμενος αὐτοῖς. καὶ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ διετήρει πάντα τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα[3] ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτῆς. 52. καὶ Ἰησοῦς [i]προέκοπτε σοφίᾳ[4] καὶ ἡλικίᾳ, καὶ χάριτι παρὰ Θεῷ καὶ ἀνθρώποις.

[i] Rom. xiii. 12. Gal. i. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 16; iii. 9.

[1] ειπεν before προς αυτον in ℵBCDL.

[2] B has ζητουμεν (W.H.).

[3] ℵBD omit ταυτα (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] εν τη σ. in ℵL (Tisch.); τη without εν in B (W.H.).

the time they had last seen Him, not implying three days' search in Jerusalem. The place where they had lodged and the temple would be among the first places visited in the search.—ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ: probably in a chamber in the temple court used for teaching and kindred purposes. Some think it was in a synagogue beside the temple.—Ver. 46. καθεζόμενον, sitting; therefore, it has been inferred, as a teacher, not as a scholar, among (ἐν μέσῳ) the doctors, for scholars stood, teachers only sitting. An unwelcome conclusion, to which, happily, we are not shut up by the evidence, the posture-rule on which it rests being more than doubtful (vide Vitringa, Synag., p. 167). —ἐπερωτῶντα: nothing unusual, and nothing unbecoming a thoughtful boy.—Ver. 47. ἐξίσταντο, were amazed, not at His position among the doctors, or at His asking questions, but at the intelligence (συνέσει) shown in His answers to the questions of the teachers; something of the rare insight and felicity which astonished all in after years appearing in these boyish replies.—Ver. 48. ἰδόντες refers to the parents. This astonishment points to some contrast between a previous quiet, reserved manner of Jesus and His present bearing; sudden flashing out of the inner life.—ἡ μήτηρ: the mother spoke naturally; a woman, and the mother's heart more keenly touched. This apart from the peculiar relation referred to in Bengel's major erat necessitudo matris.—Ver. 49. ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός μου, in the things of my Father ("about my Father's business," A. V.); therefore in the place or house of my Father (R. V.); the former may be the verbal translation, but the latter is the real meaning Jesus wished to suggest. In this latter rendering patristic and modern interpreters in the main concur. Note the new name for God compared with the "Highest" and the "Despotes" in the foregoing narrative. The dawn of a new era is here.—Ver. 50. οὐ συνῆκαν, they did not understand; no wonder! Even we do not yet fully understand.—Ver. 51. κατέβη, He went down with them, gentle, affectionate, habitually obedient (ὑποτασσόμενος), yet far away in thought, and solitary.—διετήρει: she did not forget, though she did not understand.—Ver. 52. προέκοπτε, steadily grew, used intransitively in later Greek.—ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ καὶ ἡλικίᾳ, in wisdom and (also as, the one the measure of the other) in stature, both growths alike real. Real in body, apparent in the mind: growth in manifestation of the wisdom within, complete from the first—such is the docetic gloss of ecclesiastical interpreters, making the childhood of Jesus a monstrum, and His humanity a phantom.—χάριτι π. Θ. καὶ ἀ., in favour with God and men: beloved of all; no division even among men while the new wisdom and the new religion lay a slumbering germ in the soul of the heaven-born boy.

CHAPTER III. THE MINISTRY OF THE NEW ERA OPENS. Having related the beginnings of the lives of the two prophets of the new time (chapters i. and ii.), the evangelist now introduces us to the beginnings of their prophetic ministries, or rather to the ministry of a here only in N. T.

b Ch. ii. 2.

III. 1. ἘΝ ἔτει δὲ πεντεκαιδεκάτῳ τῆς [a] ἡγεμονίας Τιβερίου Καίσαρος, [b] ἡγεμονεύοντος Ποντίου Πιλάτου τῆς Ἰουδαίας, καὶ τετραρχοῦντος [1] τῆς Γαλιλαίας Ἡρώδου, Φιλίππου δὲ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ τετραρχοῦντος τῆς Ἰτουραίας καὶ Τραχωνίτιδος χώρας, καὶ

[1] The spelling of this word varies in MSS. B has it as in T.R. ℵC τετρααρχουντος (ter), which Tisch. and W.H. adopt.

John as the prelude to the evangelic drama. In regard to the ministry of Jesus he gives us merely the date of its beginning (iii. 23), attaching thereto a genealogy of Jesus. Bengel has well expressed the significance of this chapter by the words: Hic quasi scena N. T. panditur.

Vv. 1-2. General historic setting of the beginnings. For Mt.'s vague "in those days" (iii. 1), which leaves us entirely in the dark at what date and age Jesus entered on His prophetic career, Lk. gives a group of dates connecting his theme with the general history of the world and of Palestine; the universalistic spirit here, as in ii. 1, 2, apparent. This spirit constitutes the permanent ethical interest of what may seem otherwise dry details: for ordinary readers of the Gospel little more than a collection of names, personal and geographical. Worthy of note also, as against those who think Lk. was to a large extent a free inventor, is the indication here given of the historical spirit, the desire to know the real facts (i. 3). The historic data, six in all, define the date of John's ministry with reference to the reigning Roman emperor, and the civil and ecclesiastical rulers of Palestine.

Ver. 1. ἐν ἔτει, etc., in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius as Caesar. This seems a very definite date, rendering all the other particulars, so far as fixing time is concerned, comparatively superfluous. But uncertainty comes in in connection with the question: is the fifteenth year to be reckoned from the death of Augustus (19 Aug., 767 A.U.C.), when Tiberius became sole emperor, or from the beginning of the regency of Tiberius, two years earlier? The former mode of calculation would give us 28 or 29 A.D. as the date of John's ministry and Christ's baptism, making Jesus then thirty-two years old; the latter, 26 A.D., making Jesus then thirty years old, agreeing with iii. 23. The former mode of dating would be more in accordance with the practice of Roman historians and Josephus; the latter lends itself to apologetic and harmonistic interests, and therefore is preferred by many (e.g., Farrar and Hahn).—Ποντίου Πιλάτου. Pilate was governor of the Roman province of Judaea from 26 A.D. to 36 A.D., the fifth in the series of governors. His proper title was ἐπίτροπος (hence the reading of D: ἐπιτροπεύοντος π. π.); usually ἡγεμὼν in Gospels. He owes his place here in the historic framework to the part he played in the last scenes of our Lord's life. Along with him are named next two joint rulers of other parts of Palestine, belonging to the Herod family; brought in, though of no great importance for dating purposes, because they, too, figure occasionally in the Gospel story.—τετραρχοῦντος, acting as tetrarch. The verb means primarily: ruling over a fourth part, then by an easy transition acting as a tributary prince.—Γαλιλαίας: about twenty-five miles long and broad, divided into lower (southern) Galilee and upper (northern). With Galilee was joined for purposes of government Peraea.—Ἡρώδου, Herod Antipas, murderer of the Baptist, and having secular authority over Jesus as his subject.—Φιλίππου, Herod Philip, brother of Antipas, whose name reappears in the new name of Paneas, rebuilt or adorned by him, Caesarea Philippi.—τῆς Ἰτουραίας καὶ Τραχωνίτιδος χώρας: so Lk. designates the territory ruled over by Philip. The words might be rendered: the Ituraean and Trachonitic territory, implying the identity of Ituraea and Trachonitis (as in Eusebius. For a defence of this view, vide article by Professor Ramsay in Expositor, February, 1894); or, as in A. V., of Ituraea and of the region of Trachonitis. The former was a mountainous region to the south of Mount Hermon, inhabited by a hardy race, skilled in the use of the bow; the latter (the rough country) = the modern El-Lejah, the kingdom of Og in ancient times, was a basaltic region south of Damascus, and east of Golan. It is probable that only a fragment of Ituraea belonged to Philip, the region around

Λυσανίου τῆς Ἀβιληνῆς τετραρχοῦντος, 2. ἐπ' ἀρχιερέων[1] Ἄννα καὶ Καϊάφα, ἐγένετο ῥῆμα Θεοῦ ἐπὶ Ἰωάννην τὸν τοῦ[2] Ζαχαρίου υἱὸν ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ· 3. καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν[3] περίχωρον τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, κηρύσσων βάπτισμα μετανοίας εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν· 4. ὡς γέγραπται ἐν βίβλῳ λόγων Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος,[4] 'Φωνὴ βοῶντος ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, Ἑτοιμάσατε τὴν ὁδὸν Κυρίου· εὐθείας ποιεῖτε τὰς

[1] αρχιερεως in most uncials; pl. in minusc. only. [2] Omit του most uncials.
[3] την is in ℵCDΔ al. (Tisch.); wanting in ABL (W.H.).
[4] ℵBDLΔ 1, 118, it. vulg. omit λεγοντος.

Paneas. On the other hand, according to Josephus, his territories embraced more than the regions named by Lk.: Batanaea, Auranitis, Gaulonitis, and some parts about Jamnia (various places in Ant. and B. J.).—Λυσανίου, etc. This last item in Lk.'s dating apparatus is the most perplexing, whether regard be had to relevancy or to accuracy. To what end this reference to a non-Jewish prince, and this outlying territory between the Lebanon ranges? What concern has it with the evangelic history, or of what use is it for indicating the place of the latter in the world's history? By way of answer to this question, Farrar (C. G. T.) suggests that the district of Abilene (Abila the capital) is probably mentioned here "because it subsequently formed part of the Jewish territory, having been assigned by Caligula to his favourite, Herod Agrippa I., in A.D. 36". As to the accuracy: it so happens that there was a Lysanias, who ruled over Chalchis and Abilene sixty years before the time of which Lk. writes, who probably bore the title tetrarch. Does Lk., misled by the title, think of that Lysanias as a contemporary of Herod Antipas and Herod Philip, or was there another of the name really their contemporary, whom the evangelist has in his view? Certain inscriptions cited by historical experts make the latter hypothesis probable. Schürer (The Jewish People, Div. I., vol. ii., appendix 1, on the History of Chalchis, Ituraea, and Abilene, p. 338) has no doubt on the point, and says: "the evangelist, Lk., is thoroughly correct when he assumes that in the fifteenth year of Tiberias there was a Lysanias tetrarch of Abilene".

Ver. 2. ἐπὶ ἀρχιερέως Ἄννα καὶ Καιάφα, under the high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas. The use of the singular ἀρχιερέως in connection with two names is peculiar, whence doubtless the correction into the easier ἀρχιερέων (T. R.); and the combination of two men as holding the office at the same time, is likewise somewhat puzzling. As Caiaphas was the actual high priest at the time, one would have expected his name to have stood, if not alone, at least first = under Caiaphas, the actual high priest, and the ex-high priest, Annas, still an influential senior. One can only suppose that among the caste of high priests past and present (there had been three between Annas and Caiaphas) Annas was so outstanding that it came natural to name him first. Annas had been deposed arbitrarily by the Roman governor, and this may have increased his influence among his own people. His period of office was A.D. 7-14, that of Caiaphas A.D. 17-35.—ἐγένετο ῥῆμα, etc., came the word of God to John; this the great spiritual event, so carefully dated, after the manner of the O. T. in narrating the beginning of the career of a Hebrew prophet (vide, e.g., Jer. i. 1). But the date is common to the ministry of John and that of Jesus, who is supposed to have begun His work shortly after the Baptist.—ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. From next verse it may be gathered that the desert here means the whole valley of the Jordan, El-Ghor.

Vv. 3-6. John's ministry.—Ver. 3. ἦλθεν. In Mt. and Mk. the people come from all quarters to John. Here John goes to the people in an itinerant ministry. The latter may apply to the early stage of his ministry. He might move about till he had attracted attention, then settle at a place convenient for baptism, and trust to the impression produced to draw the people to him.—κηρύσσων, etc.: here Lk. follows Mk. verbatim, and like him, as distinct from Mt., connects John's baptism with the forgiveness of sins, so making it in effect Christian.—Ver. 4. βίβλῳ λόγων: Lk. has his own way of τρίβους αὐτοῦ. 5. πᾶσα φάραγξ πληρωθήσεται, καὶ πᾶν ὄρος καὶ βουνὸς ταπεινωθήσεται· καὶ ἔσται τὰ σκολιὰ εἰς εὐθεῖαν,[1] καὶ αἱ τραχεῖαι εἰς ὁδοὺς λείας. 6. καὶ ὄψεται πᾶσα σὰρξ τὸ σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ.' 7. Ἔλεγεν οὖν τοῖς ἐκπορευομένοις ὄχλοις βαπτισθῆναι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, "Γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, τίς ὑπέδειξεν ὑμῖν φυγεῖν ἀπὸ τῆς μελλούσης ὀργῆς; 8. ποιήσατε οὖν καρποὺς ἀξίους[2] τῆς μετανοίας· καὶ μὴ ἄρξησθε λέγειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, Πατέρα ἔχομεν τὸν Ἀβραάμ· λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν, ὅτι δύναται ὁ Θεὸς ἐκ τῶν λίθων τούτων ἐγεῖραι τέκνα τῷ Ἀβραάμ. 9. ἤδη δὲ καὶ ἡ ἀξίνη πρὸς τὴν ῥίζαν τῶν δένδρων κεῖται· πᾶν οὖν δένδρον μὴ ποιοῦν καρπὸν καλὸν ἐκκόπτεται καὶ εἰς πῦρ βάλλεται."

c Ch. xxiii. 30. (Is. xl. 4.)

10. Καὶ ἐπηρώτων αὐτὸν οἱ ὄχλοι, λέγοντες, "Τί οὖν ποιήσομεν[3];" 11. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ λέγει[4] αὐτοῖς, "Ὁ ἔχων δύο χιτῶνας μεταδότω

[1] ευθειας in BDΞ. T.R. = ℵCLΔ many verss.

[2] αξιους καρπους in B. Orig. (W.H. marg.). Most uncials as in T.R. (Tisch.).

[3] ποιησωμεν in most uncials (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] ελεγεν in ℵBCL 1, 33, 69 al.

introducing the prophetic citation ("in the book of the words"), as he also follows his own course as to the words quoted. Whereas Mt. and Mk. are content to cite just so much as suffices to set forth the general idea of preparing the way of the Lord, Lk. quotes in continuation the words which describe pictorially the process of preparation (ver. 5), also those which describe the grand result: all mankind experiencing the saving grace of God (ver. 6). The universalistic bias appears here again.—Ver. 5. φάραγξ, a ravine, here only in N. T.—εἰς εὐθείας, the crooked places shall be (become) straight (ways, ὁδοὺς, understood)—αἱ τραχεῖαι (ὁδοί), the rough ways shall become smooth.

Vv. 7-9. John's preaching (cf. Mt. iii. 7-10).—Lk. gives no account of John's aspect and mode of life, leaving that to be inferred from i. 80. On the other hand he enters into more detail in regard to the drift of his preaching. These verses contain Lk.'s version of the Baptist's censure of his time.—Ver. 7. ἐκπορευομένοις ὄχλοις: what Mt. represents as addressed specially to the Pharisees and Sadducees, Lk. less appropriately gives as spoken to the general crowd. Note that here, as in the other synoptists, the crowd comes to John, though in ver. 3 John goes to them.—γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν: on this figure vide Mt. Lk.'s report of the Baptist's severe words corresponds closely to Mt.'s, suggesting the use of a common source, if not of Mt. himself. The points of variation are unimportant.—Ver. 8. καρποὺς: instead of καρπὸν, perhaps to answer to the various types of reform specified in the sequel.—ἄρξησθε instead of δόξητε (vide on Mt.), on which Bengel's comment is: "omnem excusationis etiam conatum praecidit". While the words they are forbidden to say are the same in both accounts, perhaps the raising up children to Abraham has a wider range of meaning for the Pauline Lk. than for Mt.: sons from even the Pagan world.

Vv. 10-14. Class counsels, peculiar to Lk. Two samples of John's counsels to classes are here given, prefaced by a counsel applicable to all classes. The classes selected to illustrate the Baptist's social preaching are the much tempted ones: publicans and soldiers.—Ver. 10. ἐπηρώτων, imperfect. Such questions would be frequent, naturally suggested by the general exhortations to repentance. The preacher would probably give special illustrative counsels without being asked. Those here reported are meant to be characteristic.—ποιήσωμεν: subj. delib.—Ver. 11. δύο χ.: two, one to spare, not necessarily two on the person, one enough; severely simple ideas of life. The χιτὼν was the under garment, vide on Mt. v. 40.—βρώματα: the plural should perhaps not be emphasised as if implying variety and τῷ μὴ ἔχοντι· καὶ ὁ ἔχων βρώματα ὁμοίως ποιείτω." 12. Ἦλθον δὲ καὶ τελῶναι βαπτισθῆναι, καὶ εἶπον πρὸς αὐτόν, "Διδάσκαλε, τί ποιήσομεν[1];" 13. Ὁ δὲ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Μηδὲν πλέον παρὰ τὸ διατεταγμένον ὑμῖν [d] πράσσετε." 14. Ἐπηρώτων δὲ αὐτὸν καὶ στρατευόμενοι, λέγοντες, "Καὶ ἡμεῖς τί ποιήσομεν[2];" Καὶ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς,[3] "Μηδένα διασείσητε, μηδὲ [e] συκοφαντήσητε· καὶ ἀρκεῖσθε τοῖς [f] ὀψωνίοις ὑμῶν."

15. Προσδοκῶντος δὲ τοῦ λαοῦ, καὶ διαλογιζομένων πάντων ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν περὶ τοῦ Ἰωάννου, μήποτε αὐτὸς εἴη ὁ Χριστός, 16. ἀπεκρίνατο ὁ Ἰωάννης ἅπασι λέγων,[4] "Ἐγὼ μὲν ὕδατι βαπτίζω ὑμᾶς· ἔρχεται δὲ ὁ ἰσχυρότερός μου, οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς λῦσαι τὸν ἱμάντα τῶν ὑποδημάτων αὐτοῦ· αὐτὸς ὑμᾶς βαπτίσει ἐν Πνεύματι d Ch. xix. 23.

e Ch. xix. 8.
f Rom. vi. 23. 1 Cor. ix. 7. 2 Cor. xi. 8.

[1] Again ποιησωμεν in most uncials; also in ver. 14.

[2] τι ποι. και ημεις in ℵBCLΞ 1, 69.

[3] αυτοις for προς αυτους in BDLΞ 33 (W.H.).

[4] ℵBL have λεγων απασι ο I. (Tisch., W.H.).

abundance (τὰ περισσεύοντα, Grotius). The counsel is: let him that hath food give to him that hath none, so inculcating a generous, humane spirit. Here the teaching of John, as reported by Lk., touches that of Jesus, and is evangelical not legal in spirit.—Ver. 13. μηδὲν πλέον παρὰ: this mode of expressing comparison (usual in mod. Grk.) is common to Lk. and the Ep. to Heb. (i. 4, etc.), and has been used in support of the view that Lk. wrote Heb. "Non improbabilis videtur mihi eorum opinio qui Lucae eam Ep. adjudicant," Pricaeus. —πράσσετε, make in a sinister sense, exact, exigite, Beza. Kypke quotes Julius Pollux on the vices of the publicans, one being παρεισπράττων, nimium exigens, and remarks that this word could not be better explained than by the phrase in Lk., πράττων π. π. τὸ διατ.—Ver. 14. στρατευόμενοι, "soldiers on service". R. V. margin. So also Farrar. But Field disputes this rendering. "The advice seems rather to point to soldiers at home, mixing among their fellow-citizens, than to those who were on the march in an enemy's country" (Ot. Nor.). Schürer, whom J. Weiss follows, thinks they would be heathen.—διασείσητε: the verb (here only) means literally to shake much, here = to extort money by intimidation = concertio in law, Latin. This military vice would be practised on the poor.—συκοφαντήσητε: literally to inform on those who exported figs from Athens; here = to obtain money by acting as informers (against the rich).—ὀψωνίοις (ὄψον, ὠνέομαι): a late Greek word, primarily anything eaten with bread, specially fish, "kitchen"; salary paid in kind; then generally wages. Vide Rom. vi. 23, where the idea is the "kitchen," the best thing sin has to give is death.

Vv. 15-17. Art thou the Christ? (Mt. iii. 11, 12, Mk. i. 7, 8).—Ver. 15. προσδοκῶντος: in Mt. and Mk. John introduces the subject of the Messiah of his own accord: in Lk. in answer to popular expectation and conjecture; an intrinsically probable account, vide on Mt.—μήποτε, etc., whether perhaps he might not himself be the Christ; expresses very happily the popular state of mind.—Ver. 16. ἅπασι: might suggest frequent replies to various parties, uniform in tenor; but against this is the aorist ἀπεκρίνατο, which suggests a single answer given once for all, to a full assembly, a formal solemn public declaration. On the Baptist's statement in this and the following verse, vide on Mt.—ἐν Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρί: against the idea of many commentators that the Holy Spirit and fire represent opposite effects on opposite classes—saving and punitive—Godet and Hahn press the omission of ἐν before πυρί, and take Πνεῦμα and πῦρ to be kindred = fire the emblem of the Spirit as a purifier. They are right as to the affinity but not as to the function. The function in both cases is judicial. John refers to the Holy Wind and Fire of Judgment.

Ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρί· 17. οὗ τὸ πτύον ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ διακαθαριεῖ[1] τὴν ἅλωνα αὐτοῦ· καὶ συνάξει[1] τὸν σῖτον εἰς τὴν ἀποθήκην αὐτοῦ, τὸ δὲ ἄχυρον κατακαύσει πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ." 18. Πολλὰ μὲν οὖν καὶ ἕτερα παρακαλῶν εὐηγγελίζετο τὸν λαόν. 19. Ὁ δὲ Ἡρώδης ὁ τετράρχης, ἐλεγχόμενος ὑπ' αὐτοῦ περὶ Ἡρωδιάδος τῆς γυναικὸς Φιλίππου[2] τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ, καὶ περὶ πάντων ὧν ἐποίησε πονηρῶν ὁ Ἡρώδης, 20. προσέθηκε καὶ τοῦτο ἐπὶ πᾶσι, καὶ[3] [a] κατέκλεισε τὸν Ἰωάννην ἐν τῇ[4] φυλακῇ.

[a] Acts xxvi. 10.

21. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν τῷ βαπτισθῆναι ἅπαντα τὸν λαόν, καὶ Ἰησοῦ βαπτισθέντος καὶ προσευχομένου, ἀνεῳχθῆναι τὸν οὐρανόν, 22. καὶ καταβῆναι τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον σωματικῷ εἴδει ὡσεὶ[5] περιστερὰν ἐπ' αὐτόν, καὶ φωνὴν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ γενέσθαι, λέγουσαν,[6] "Σὺ εἶ ὁ υἱός μου ὁ ἀγαπητός, ἐν σοὶ ηὐδόκησα." 23. Καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ὁ[7] Ἰησοῦς

[1] For και διακ. (from Mt.) ℵB have διακαθαραι, also συναγαγειν for συναξει.

[2] Omit Φιλιππου ℵBDLΔΞ al.

[3] Omit this και ℵBDΞ b, e (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] Omit τη ℵBDLΞ.

[5] ως in ℵBDL 33.

[6] Omit λεγ. (expletive) with ℵBDL verss.

[7] ℵBL 33 omit ο.

It is, however, not impossible that Lk. read an evangelic sense into John's words.

Vv. 18-20. Close of the Baptist's ministry and life. Lk. gives here all he means to say about John, condensing into a single sentence the full narratives of Mt. and Mk. as to his end.—Ver. 18. πολλὰ μὲν οὖν καὶ ἕτερα, "many things, too, different from these" (Farrar, who refers to John i. 29, 34, iii. 27-36, as illustrating the kind of utterances meant). The εὐηγγελίζετο following seems to justify emphasising ἕτερα, as pointing to a more evangelic type of utterance than those about the axe and the fan, and the wrath to come. But it may be questioned whether by such a representation the real John of history is not to a certain extent unconsciously idealised and Christianised.—μὲν οὖν: the οὖν may be taken as summarising and concluding the narrative about John and μὲν as answering to δὲ in ver. 19 = John was carrying on a useful evangelic ministry, but it was cut short; or μενοῦν may be taken as one word, emphasising πολλὰ καὶ ἕτερα, and preparing for transition to what follows (Hahn).—Ver. 19. Ἡρώδης: the tetrarch named in ver. 1.—περὶ πάντων, implying that John's rebuke was not confined to the sin with Herodias. Probably not, but it was what John said on that score that cost him his head.—Ver. 20. ἐπὶ πᾶσι, added this also to all his misdeeds, and above all the crowning iniquity, and yet Lk. forbears to mention the damning sin of Herod, the beheading of the Baptist, contenting himself with noting the imprisonment. He either assumes knowledge of the horrid tale, or shrinks from it as too gruesome.—κατέκλεισε: instead of the infinitive; the paratactic style savours of Hebrew, and suggests a Hebrew source (Godet).

Vv. 21-22. The baptism of Jesus (Mt. iii. 13-17, Mk. i. 9-11).—ἐν τῷ βαπτισθῆναι: the aorist ought to imply that the bulk of the people had already been baptised before Jesus appeared on the scene, i.e., that John's ministry was drawing to its close (so De Wette; but vide Burton, M. and T., p. 51, § 109, on the effect of ἐν).—καὶ Ἰ. βαπτισθέντος: so Lk. refers to the baptism of Jesus, in a participial clause, his aim not to report the fact, but what happened after it. On the different ways in which the synoptists deal with this incident, vide on Mt.—προσευχομένου: peculiar to Lk., who makes Jesus pray at all crises of His career; here specially noteworthy in connection with the theophany following: Jesus in a state of mind answering to the preternatural phenomena; subjective and objective corresponding.—σωματικῷ εἴδει, in bodily form, peculiar to Lk., and transforming a vision into an external event.—Σὺ εἶ: the voice, as in Mk., addressed to Jesus, and in the same terms.

ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἀρχόμενος,[1] ὤν, ὡς ἐνομίζετο, υἱὸς[2] Ἰωσήφ, τοῦ Ἡλί,[3] 24. τοῦ Ματθάτ, τοῦ Λευΐ, τοῦ Μελχί, τοῦ Ἰαννά, τοῦ Ἰωσήφ, 25. τοῦ Ματταθίου, τοῦ Ἀμώς, τοῦ Ναούμ, τοῦ Ἐσλί, τοῦ Ναγγαί, 26. τοῦ Μαάθ, τοῦ Ματταθίου, τοῦ Σεμεΐ, τοῦ Ἰωσήφ, τοῦ Ἰούδα, 27. τοῦ Ἰωαννᾶ, τοῦ Ῥησά, τοῦ Ζοροβάβελ, τοῦ Σαλαθιήλ, τοῦ Νηρί, 28. τοῦ Μελχί, τοῦ Ἀδδί, τοῦ Κωσάμ, τοῦ Ἐλμωδάμ, τοῦ Ἤρ, 29. τοῦ Ἰωσή, τοῦ Ἐλιέζερ, τοῦ Ἰωρείμ, τοῦ Ματθάτ, τοῦ Λευΐ, [1] αρχομενος before ωσει ε. τ. in ℵBL 1, 33, 131, etc. The order of T.R. = that of ADΔ al.

[2] υιος ως ενομ. in ℵBL 1, 131 al.

[3] The spelling of many of the names in this genealogy varies in the MSS. As these variations are of little importance I let the names stand as in T.R. without remark, referring the curious to W.H. or Tisch.

Vv. 23-38. The age of Jesus when He began His ministry, and His genealogy.—Ver. 23. καὶ αὐτὸς, etc., and He, Jesus, was about thirty years of age when He began. The evangelist's aim obviously is to state the age at which Jesus commenced His public career.—ἀρχόμενος is used in a pregnant sense, beginning = making His beginning in that which is to be the theme of the history. There is a mental reference to ἀπ' ἀρχῆς in the preface, i. 1; cf. Acts i. 1; "all that Jesus began (ἤρξατο) both to do and to teach".—ὡσεί, about, nearly, implying that the date is only approximate. It cannot be used as a fixed datum for chronological purposes, nor should any importance be attached to the number thirty as the proper age at which such a career should begin. That at that age the Levites began full service, Joseph stood before Pharaoh, and David began to reign are facts, but of no significance (vide Farrar in C. G. T.). God's prophets appear when they get the inward call, and that may come at any time, at twenty, thirty, or forty. Inspiration is not bound by rule, custom, or tradition.

Vv. 24-38. The genealogy. One is surprised to find in Lk. a genealogy at all, until we reflect on his preface with its professed desire for accuracy and thoroughness, and observe the careful manner in which he dates the beginning of John's ministry. One is further surprised to find here a genealogy so utterly different from that of Mt. Did Lk. not know it, or was he dissatisfied with it? Leaving these questions on one side, we can only suppose that the evangelist in the course of his inquiries came upon this genealogy of the Saviour and resolved to give it as a contribution towards defining the fleshly relationships of Jesus, supplying here and there an editorial touch. Whether this genealogy be of Jewish-Christian, or of Pauline-Christian origin is a question on which opinion differs.

Ver. 24. ὤν, being, introducing the genealogical list, which ascends from son to father, instead of, as in Mt., descending from father to son, therefore beginning at the end and going backwards.—ὡς ἐνομίζετο: presumably an editorial note to guard the virgin birth. Some regard this expression with Ἰωσήφ following, as a parenthesis, making the genealogy in its original form run being son of Eli, etc., so that the sense, when the parenthesis is inserted, becomes: being son (as was supposed of Joseph but really) of Eli, etc., Eli being the father of Mary, and the genealogy being that of the mother of Jesus (Godet and others). This is ingenious but not satisfactory. As has been remarked by Hahn, if that had been Lk.'s meaning it would have been very easy for him to have made it clear by inserting ὄντως δὲ before τοῦ Ἡλί. We must therefore rest in the view that this genealogy, like that of Mt., is Joseph's, not Mary's, as it could not fail to be if Jews were concerned in its compilation.

Vv. 24-31. From Joseph back to David. Compared with the corresponding section of Mt.'s genealogy these differences are apparent: (1) in both sub-divisions of the section (David to captivity, captivity to Christ) there are considerably more names (20, 14), a fact intelligible enough in genealogies through different lines; (2) they start from different sons of David (Nathan,

30. τοῦ Συμεών, τοῦ Ἰούδα, τοῦ Ἰωσήφ, τοῦ Ἰωνάν, τοῦ Ἐλιακείμ, 31. τοῦ Μελεᾶ, τοῦ Μαϊνάν, τοῦ Ματταθά, τοῦ Ναθάν, τοῦ Δαβίδ, 32. τοῦ Ἰεσσαί, τοῦ Ὠβήδ, τοῦ Βοόζ, τοῦ Σαλμών, τοῦ Ναασσών, 33. τοῦ Ἀμιναδάβ, τοῦ Ἀράμ, τοῦ Ἐσρώμ, τοῦ Φαρές, τοῦ Ἰούδα, 34. τοῦ Ἰακώβ, τοῦ Ἰσαάκ, τοῦ Ἀβραάμ, τοῦ Θάρα, τοῦ Ναχώρ, 35. τοῦ Σαρούχ, τοῦ Ῥαγαῦ, τοῦ Φαλέκ, τοῦ Ἔβερ, τοῦ Σαλά, 36. τοῦ Καϊνάν, τοῦ Ἀρφαξάδ, τοῦ Σήμ, τοῦ Νῶε, τοῦ Λάμεχ, 37. τοῦ Μαθουσάλα, τοῦ Ἐνώχ, τοῦ Ἰαρέδ, τοῦ Μαλελεήλ, τοῦ Καϊνάν, 38. τοῦ Ἐνώς, τοῦ Σήθ, τοῦ Ἀδάμ, τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Solomon); (3) they come together at the captivity in Shealtiel and Zerubbabel; (4) after running in separate streams from that point onwards they meet again in Joseph, who in the one is the son of Eli, in the other the son of Jacob. The puzzle is to understand how two genealogical streams so distinct in their entire course should meet at these two points. The earlier coincidence is accounted for by harmonists by the hypothesis of adoption (Jeconiah adopts Shealtiel, Shealtiel adopts Zerubbabel), the later by the hypothesis of a Levirate marriage. Vide Excursus ii. in Farrar's work on Luke (C. G. T.). These solutions satisfy some. Others maintain that they do not meet the difficulties, and that we must be content to see in the two catalogues genealogical attempts which cannot be harmonised, or at least have not yet been.

Vv. 32-34a. From David back to Abraham. The lists of Mt. and Lk. in this part correspond, both being taken, as far as Pharez, from Ruth iv. 18-22.

Vv. 34b-38. From Abraham to Adam. Peculiar to Lk., taken from Gen. xi. 12-26, v. 7-32, as given in the Sept., whence Canaan in ver. 36 (instead of שֶׁלַח in Gen. xi. 12, in Heb.). It is probable that this part of the genealogy has been added by Lk., and that his interest in it is twofold: (1) universalistic: revealed by running back the genealogy of Jesus to Adam, the father of the human race; (2) the desire to give emphasis to the Divine origin of Jesus, revealed by the final link in the chain: Adam (son) of God. Adam's sonship is conceived of as something unique, inasmuch as, like Jesus, he owed his being, not to a human parent, but to the immediate causality of God. By this extension of the genealogy beyond Abraham, and even beyond Adam up to God, the evangelist has deprived it of all vital significance for the original purpose of such tables: to vindicate the Messianic claims of Jesus by showing Him to be the son of David. The Davidic sonship, it is true, remains, but it cannot be vital to the Messiahship of One who is, in the sense of the Gospel, Son of God. It becomes like the moon when the sun is shining. Lk. was probably aware of this.

This genealogy contains none of those features (references to women, etc.) which lend ethical interest to Mt.'s.

CHAPTER IV. THE TEMPTATION AND BEGINNINGS OF THE MINISTRY.—Vv. 1-13. The Temptation (Mt. iv. 1-11, Mk. i. 12-13). Lk.'s account of the temptation resembles Mt.'s so closely as to suggest a common source. Yet there are points of difference of which a not improbable explanation is editorial solicitude to prevent wrong impressions, and ensure edification in connection with perusal of a narrative relating to a delicate subject: the temptation of the Holy Jesus by the unholy adversary. This solicitude might of course have stamped itself on the source Lk. uses, but it seems preferable to ascribe it to himself.

Ver. 1. δέ: introducing a new theme, closely connected, however, with the baptism, as appears from ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, the genealogy being treated as a parenthesis.—πλήρης Πνεύματος Ἁ., full of the Spirit, who descended upon Him at the Jordan, and conceived of as abiding on Him and in Him. This phrase is adopted by Lk. to exclude the possibility of evil thoughts in Jesus: no room for them; first example of such editorial solicitude.—ὑπέστρεψεν ἀ. τ. Ἰ. Hahn takes this as meaning that Jesus left the Jordan with the intention of returning immediately to Galilee, so that His retirement into the desert was the result of a change of purpose brought about by the influence of the Spirit.

IV. 1. ᾿ΙΗΣΟΥΣ δὲ Πνεύματος ῾Αγίου πλήρης[1] ὑπέστρεψεν ἀπὸ τοῦ ᾿Ιορδάνου· καὶ ἤγετο ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι εἰς τὴν ἔρημον[2] 2. ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα πειραζόμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου. καὶ οὐκ ἔφαγεν οὐδὲν ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις· καὶ συντελεσθεισῶν αὐτῶν, ὕστερον[3] ἐπείνασε. 3. καὶ εἶπεν[4] αὐτῷ ὁ διάβολος, "Εἰ υἱὸς εἶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, εἰπὲ τῷ λίθῳ τούτῳ ἵνα γένηται ἄρτος." 4. Καὶ ἀπεκρίθη ᾿Ιησοῦς πρὸς αὐτόν, λέγων,[5] "Γέγραπται, '῞Οτι οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ παντὶ ῥήματι Θεοῦ.'"[6] 5. Καὶ ἀναγαγὼν αὐτὸν ὁ διάβολος εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλὸν[7] ἔδειξεν αὐτῷ πάσας τὰς βασιλείας τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐν στιγμῇ χρόνου· 6. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ διάβολος, "Σοὶ δώσω τὴν ἐξουσίαν ταύτην ἅπασαν καὶ τὴν δόξαν αὐτῶν· ὅτι

[1] πληρης before Πν. Αγ. in ℵBDLΞ 1, 33 sah. cop. (Tisch., Trg., W.H.).
[2] εν τη ερημω in ℵBDL vet. Lat. (Tisch., W.H.).
[3] ℵBDL vet. Lat. omit. [4] ειπεν δε in ℵBDL 1, 33. [5] ℵBL omit λεγων.
[6] αλλ . . . θεου omitted in ℵBL sah. cop. (Tisch., W.H.).
[7] ο διαβ. . . . υψηλον omitted in ℵBDL 1 al. (from Mt.).

The words do not in themselves convey this sense, and the idea is intrinsically unlikely. Retirement for reflection after the baptism was likely to be the first impulse of Jesus. Vide on Mt.—ἤγετο: imperfect, implying a continuous process. —ἐν τῷ Πν., in the spirit, suggesting voluntary movement, and excluding the idea of compulsory action of the Spirit on an unwilling subject that might be suggested by the phrases of Mt. and Mk. Vide notes there.—ἐν τῇ ἐρ.: this reading is more suitable to the continued movement implied in ἤγετο than εἰς τὴν ἐ. of T.R.—Ver. 2. ἡμέρας τεσσ.: this is to be taken along with ἤγετο. Jesus wandered about in the desert all that time; the wandering the external index of the absorbing meditation within (Godet).—πειραζόμενος: Lk. refers to the temptation participially, as a mere incident of that forty days' experience, in marked contrast to Mt., who represents temptation as the aim of the retirement (πειρασθῆναι); again guarding against wrong impressions, yet at the same time true to the fact. The present tense of the participle implies that temptation, though incidental, was continuous, going on with increasing intensity all the time.—οὐκ ἔφαγεν οὐδὲν implies absolute abstinence, suggestive of intense preoccupation. There was nothing there to eat, but also no inclination on the part of Jesus.

Vv. 3-4. First temptation.—τῷ λίθῳ τ.: possibly the stone bore a certain resemblance to a loaf. Vide Farrar's note (C. G. T.), in which reference is made to Stanley's account (Sinai and Palestine, p. 154) of "Elijah's melons" found on Mount Carmel, as a sample of the crystallisations found in limestone formations.—Ver. 4. καὶ ἀπεκρίθη, etc.: the answer of Jesus as given by Lk., according to the reading of ℵBL, was limited to the first part of the oracle: man shall not live by bread only; naturally suggesting a contrast between physical bread and the higher food of the soul on which Jesus had been feeding (J. Weiss in Meyer).

Vv. 5-8. Second temptation. Mt.'s third.—καὶ ἀναγαγὼν, without the added εἰς ὄρος ὑψ. of T.R., is an expression Lk. might very well use to obviate the objection: where is the mountain so high that from its summit you could see the whole earth? He might prefer to leave the matter vague = taking Him up who knows how high!—τῆς οἰκουμένης: for Mt.'s τοῦ κόσμου, as in ii. 1.—ἐν στιγμῇ χ., in a point or moment of time (στιγμὴ from στίζω, to prick, whence στίγματα, Gal. vi. 17, here only in N. T.).—Ver. 6. ἐξουσίαν, authority. Vide Acts i. 7, 8, where this word and δύναμιν occur, the one signifying authority, the other spiritual power. —ὅτι ἐμοί, etc.: this clause, not in Mt., is probably another instance of Lk.'s editorial solicitude; added to guard against the notion of a rival God with independent possessions and power.

ἐμοὶ παραδέδοται, καὶ ᾧ ἐὰν θέλω δίδωμι αὐτήν· 7. σὺ οὖν ἐὰν προσκυνήσῃς ἐνώπιόν μου, ἔσται σου πάντα."[1] 8. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς αὐτῷ εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ[2] γέγραπται γάρ,[3] 'Προσκυνήσεις Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου,[4] καὶ αὐτῷ μόνῳ λατρεύσεις.'" 9. Καὶ ἤγαγεν[5] αὐτὸν εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ, καὶ ἔστησεν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Εἰ ὁ[6] υἱὸς εἶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, βάλε σεαυτὸν ἐντεῦθεν κάτω· 10. γέγραπται γάρ, 'Ὅτι τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ ἐντελεῖται περὶ σοῦ, τοῦ διαφυλάξαι σε· 11. καὶ ὅτι ἐπὶ χειρῶν ἀροῦσί σε, μήποτε προσκόψῃς πρὸς λίθον τὸν πόδα σου.'" 12. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Ὅτι εἴρηται, 'Οὐκ ἐκπειράσεις Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου.'" 13. Καὶ συντελέσας πάντα πειρασμὸν ὁ διάβολος ἀπέστη ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἄχρι καιροῦ.

14. ΚΑΙ ὑπέστρεψεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐν τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ Πνεύματος εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν· καὶ φήμη ἐξῆλθε καθ' ὅλης τῆς περιχώρου περὶ αὐτοῦ. 15. καὶ αὐτὸς ἐδίδασκεν ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν, δοξαζό-

[1] πασα in ℵABDLΔΞ.

[2] υπαγε . . . Σατ. omitted in ℵBDLΞ 1, 33 al. (from Mt.).

[3] γαρ omitted by the same authorities.

[4] ℵBDL al. have Κυρ. τον θ. σ. προσκ. (W.H.).

[5] ηγαγεν δε in ℵBLΞ, which also omit αυτον after εστησεν.

[6] Omit ο ℵABDLΔΞ.

From the Jewish point of view, it is true, Satan might quite well say this (J. Weiss-Meyer).—Ver. 7. σὺ, emphatic; Satan hopes that Jesus has been dazzled by the splendid prospect and promise: Thou—all Thine (ἔσται σοῦ πᾶσα).—Ver. 8. ὕπαγε Σατανᾶ is no part of the true text, imported from Mt.; suitable there, not here, as there is another tempt. to follow.

Vv. 9-13. Third temptation. Mt.'s second.—Ἱερουσαλήμ, instead of Mt.'s ἁγίαν πόλιν.—ἐντεῦθεν, added by Lk., helping to bring out the situation, suggesting the plunge down from the giddy height.—Vv. 10 and 11 give Satan's quotation much as in Mt., with τοῦ διαφυλάξαι σε added from the Psalm.—Ver. 12 gives Christ's reply exactly as in Mt. The nature of this reply probably explains the inversion of the order of the second and third temptations in Lk. The evangelist judged it fitting that this should be the last word, construing it as an interdict against tempting Jesus the Lord. Lk.'s version of the temptation is characterised throughout by careful restriction of the devil's power (vide vv. 1 and 6). The inversion of the last two temptations is due to the same cause. The old idea of Schleiermacher that the way to Jerusalem lay over the mountains is paltry. It is to be noted that Mt.'s connecting particles (τότε, πάλιν) imply sequence more than Lk.'s (καὶ, δὲ). On the general import of the temptation vide on Mt.—Ver. 13. πάντα π., every kind of temptation.—ἄχρι καιροῦ: implying that the same sort of temptations recurred in the experience of Jesus.

Vv. 14-15. Return to Galilee (cf. Mk. i. 14, 28, 39).—Ver. 14. ὑπέστρεψεν, as in ver. 1, frequently used by Lk.—ἐν τῇ δυνάμει τ. Π., in the power of the Spirit; still as full of the Spirit as at the baptism. Spiritual power not weakened by temptation, rather strengthened: post victoriam corroboratus, Bengel.—φήμη (here and in Mt. ix. 26), report, caused by the exercise of the δύναμις, implying a ministry of which no details are here given (so Schanz, Godet, J. Weiss, etc.). Meyer thinks of the fame of the Man who had been baptised with remarkable accompaniments; Hahn of the altered transfigured appearance of Jesus.—Ver. 15. ἐδίδασκεν: summary reference to Christ's preaching ministry in the Galilean synagogues.—αὐτῶν refers to Γαλιλαίαν, ver. 14, and means the μενος ὑπὸ πάντων. 16. καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν Ναζαρέτ,[1] οὗ ἦν τεθραμμένος[2]· καὶ εἰσῆλθε κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς αὐτῷ, ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν σαββάτων, εἰς τὴν συναγωγήν, καὶ ἀνέστη ἀναγνῶναι. 17. καὶ ἐπεδόθη αὐτῷ βιβλίον Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου[3]· καὶ ἀναπτύξας[4] τὸ βιβλίον, εὗρε τὸν[5] τόπον οὗ ἦν γεγραμμένον, 18. "Πνεῦμα Κυρίου ἐπ' ἐμέ· οὗ ἕνεκεν ἔχρισέ με εὐαγγελίζεσθαι[6] πτωχοῖς, ἀπέσταλκέ με ἰάσασθαι τοὺς συντετριμμένους τὴν καρδίαν[7] κηρύξαι αἰχμαλώτοις ἄφεσιν, καὶ τυφλοῖς ἀνάβλεψιν· ἀποστεῖλαι τεθραυσμένους ἐν ἀφέσει·

[1] εις Ναζαρ. without την ℵBDLΞ.

[2] ℵLΞ minusc. have ανατεθ. (Tisch., W.H., marg.).

[3] του προφ. Ησ. in ℵBLΞ 33, 69.

[4] So in ℵDΔ al. (Tisch.); ανοιξας in BLΞ 33 (W.H.).

[5] Omit τον ℵLΞ 33 (W.H. bracket).

[6] ευαγγελισασθαι in ℵBDLΔΞ al. T.R. in minusc.

[7] ιασασθαι . . . καρδιαν omit ℵBDLΞ 13, 33, 69 (Tisch., Trg., W.H.).

Galileans; construction ad sensum.—δοξαζόμενος: equally summary statement of the result—general admiration. Lk. is hurrying on to the following story, which, though not the first incident in the Galilean ministry (vv. 14 and 15 imply the contrary), is the first he wishes to narrate in detail. He wishes it to serve as the frontispiece of his Gospel, as if to say: ex primo disce omnia. The historic interest in exact sequence is here subordinated to the religious interest in impressive presentation; quite legitimate, due warning being given.

Vv. 16-30. Jesus in Nazareth (Mt. xiii. 53-58, Mk. vi. 1-6a). Though Lk. uses an editorial discretion in the placing of this beautiful story, there need be no suspicion as to the historicity of its main features. The visit of Jesus to His native town, which had a secure place in the common tradition, would be sure to interest Lk. and create desire for further information, which might readily be obtainable from surviving Nazareans, who had been present, even from the brethren of Jesus. We may therefore seek in this frontispiece (Programmstück, J. Weiss) authentic reminiscences of a synagogue address of Jesus.

Vv. 16-21. κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς: the reference most probably is, not to the custom of Jesus as a boy during His private life, but to what He had been doing since He began His ministry. He used the synagogue as one of His chief opportunities. (So J. Weiss and Hahn against Bengel, Meyer, Godet, etc.) That Jesus attended the synagogue as a boy and youth goes without saying.—ἀνέστη, stood up, the usual attitude in reading ("both sitting and standing were allowed at the reading of the Book of Esther," Schürer, Div. II., vol. ii., p. 79); either as requested by the president or of His own accord, as a now well-known teacher.—Ver. 17. Ἡσαΐου: the second lesson, Haphtarah, was from the prophets; the first, Parashah, from the Law, which was foremost in Rabbinical esteem. Not so in the mind of Jesus. The prophets had the first place in His thoughts, though without prejudice to the Law. No more congenial book than Isaiah (second part especially) could have been placed in His hand. Within the Law He seems to have specially loved Deuteronomy, prophetic in spirit (vide the temptation).—εὗρε τόπον: by choice, or in due course, uncertain which; does not greatly matter. The choice would be characteristic, the order of the day providential as giving Jesus just the text He would delight to speak from. The Law was read continuously, the prophets by free selection (Holtz., H. C.).—Vv. 18, 19 contain the text, Isaiah lxi. 1, 2, free reproduction of the Sept., which freely reproduces the Hebrew, which probably was first read, then turned into Aramaean, then preached on by Jesus, that day. It may have been read from an Aramaean version. Most notable in the quotation is the point at which it stops. In Isaiah after the "acceptable year" comes the "day of vengeance". The clause referring to

19. κηρύξαι ἐνιαυτὸν Κυρίου δεκτόν.' 20. Καὶ πτύξας τὸ βιβλίον, ἀποδοὺς τῷ ὑπηρέτῃ, ἐκάθισε· καὶ πάντων ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ[1] ἦσαν ἀτενίζοντες αὐτῷ. 21. Ἤρξατο δὲ λέγειν πρὸς αὐτούς, "Ὅτι σήμερον πεπλήρωται ἡ γραφὴ αὕτη ἐν τοῖς ὠσὶν ὑμῶν." 22. Καὶ πάντες ἐμαρτύρουν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἐθαύμαζον ἐπὶ τοῖς λόγοις τῆς χάριτος, τοῖς ἐκπορευομένοις ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔλεγον, "Οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς Ἰωσήφ[2];" 23. Καὶ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Πάντως ἐρεῖτέ μοι τὴν παραβολὴν ταύτην, Ἰατρέ, θεράπευσον σεαυτόν· ὅσα ἠκούσαμεν γενόμενα ἐν τῇ Καπερναούμ,[3] ποίησον καὶ ὧδε ἐν τῇ πατρίδι σου."

24. Εἶπε δέ, "Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ὅτι οὐδεὶς προφήτης δεκτός ἐστιν

[1] οι οφ. before εν τη συν. in ℵBL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] ουχι υιος εστιν l. ουτος in ℵBL (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] εις την Κ. in ℵBDL.

the latter is omitted.—ἀποστεῖλαι τεθραυσμένους ἐν ἀφέσει (ver. 19) is imported (by Lk. probably) from Is. lviii. 6, the aim being to make the text in all respects a programme for the ministry of Jesus. Along with that, in the mind of the evangelist, goes the translation of all the categories named—poor, broken-hearted, captives, blind, bruised—from the political to the spiritual sphere. Legitimately, for that was involved in the declaration that the prophecy was fulfilled in Jesus.—Ver. 20. πτύξας, folding, ἀναπτύξας in ver. 17 (T.R.) = unfolding.—ὑπηρέτῃ, the officer of the synagogue; cf. the use of the word in Acts xiii. 5.—ἀτενίζοντες, looking attentively (ἀτενής, intent, from α and τείνω), often in Acts, vide, e.g., xiii. 9.—Ver. 21. ἤρξατο: we may take what follows either as the gist of the discourse, the theme (De Wette, Godet, Hahn), or as the very words of the opening sentence (Grotius, Bengel, Meyer, Farrar). Such a direct arresting announcement would be true to the manner of Jesus.

Vv. 22-30. The sequel.—Ver. 22. ἐμαρτύρουν α., bore witness to Him, not = δοξαζόμενος in ver. 15; the confession was extorted from them by Christ's undeniable power.—ἐθαύμαζον, not, admired, but, were surprised at (Hahn).—λόγοις τῆς χάριτος, words of grace. Most take χάρις here not in the Pauline sense, but as denoting attractiveness in speech (German, Anmuth), suavitas sermonis (Kypke, with examples from Greek authors, while admitting that χάριτος may be an objective genitive, "sermo de rebus suavibus et laetis"). In view of the text on which Jesus preached, and the fact that the Nazareth incident occupies the place of a frontispiece in the Gospel, the religious Pauline sense of χάρις is probably the right one = words about the grace of God whereby the prophetic oracle read was fulfilled. J. Weiss (in Meyer), while taking χάρις = grace of manner, admits that Lk. may have meant it in the other sense, as in Acts xiv. 3, xx. 24. Words of grace, about grace: such was Christ's speech, then and always—that is Lk.'s idea.—οὐχὶ υἱός, etc.: this fact, familiarity, neutralised the effect of all, grace of manner and the gracious message. Cf. Mt. xiii. 55, Mk. vi. 3.—Ver. 23. πάντως, doubtless, of course—παραβολὴν = Hebrew mashal, including proverbs as well as what we call "parables". A proverb in this case.—Ἰατρέ, etc.: the verbal meaning is plain, the point of the parable not so plain, though what follows seems to indicate it distinctly enough = do here, among us, what you have, as we hear, done in Capernaum. This would not exactly amount to a physician healing himself. We must be content with the general idea: every sensible benefactor begins in his immediate surroundings. There is probably a touch of scepticism in the words = we will not believe the reports of your great deeds, unless you do such things here (Hahn). For similar proverbs in other tongues, vide Grotius and Wetstein. The reference to things done in Capernaum implies an antecedent ministry there.—Ver. 24. Ἀμὴν: solemnly in-ἐν τῇ πατρίδι αὐτοῦ. 25. ἐπ' ἀληθείας δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν, πολλαὶ χῆραι ἦσαν ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις Ἠλίου ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ, ὅτε ἐκλείσθη ὁ οὐρανὸς ἐπὶ[1] ἔτη τρία καὶ μῆνας ἕξ, ὡς ἐγένετο λιμὸς μέγας ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν· 26. καὶ πρὸς οὐδεμίαν αὐτῶν ἐπέμφθη Ἠλίας, εἰ μὴ εἰς Σάρεπτα τῆς Σιδῶνος[2] πρὸς γυναῖκα χήραν. 27. καὶ πολλοὶ λεπροὶ ἦσαν ἐπὶ Ἐλισσαίου τοῦ προφήτου ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ[3]· καὶ οὐδεὶς αὐτῶν ἐκαθαρίσθη, εἰ μὴ Νεεμὰν ὁ Σύρος." 28. Καὶ ἐπλήσθησαν πάντες θυμοῦ ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ, ἀκούοντες ταῦτα, 29. καὶ ἀναστάντες ἐξέβαλον αὐτὸν ἔξω τῆς πόλεως, καὶ ἤγαγον αὐτὸν ἕως τῆς[4] ὀφρύος τοῦ ὄρους, ἐφ' οὗ ἡ πόλις αὐτῶν ᾠκοδόμητο,[5] εἰς τὸ[6] [a] κατακρημνίσαι αὐτόν· 30. αὐτὸς δὲ διελθὼν διὰ μέσου αὐτῶν ἐπορεύετο.

[a] here only in N. T.

31. ΚΑΙ κατῆλθεν εἰς Καπερναοὺμ πόλιν τῆς Γαλιλαίας· καὶ ἦν

[1] επι, found in ℵCLΔ al. (Tisch.), is wanting in BD (W.H. text, επι marg.).

[2] Σιδωνιας in ℵBCDL 1, 13, 69, 131 al.

[3] εν τω Ισ. before επι Ελ. in ℵBCDL 1, 13, 33, 69 al.

[4] Omit της ℵABCLΔ al.

[5] ῳκοδομητο αυτων in ℵBDL 33, altered into the more usual order in T.R.

[6] ωστε for εις το in ℵBDL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

troducing another proverb given in Mt. and Mk. (xiii. 57, vi. 4) in slightly varied form.—δεκτός (vide ver. 19, also Acts x. 35), acceptable, a Pauline word (2 Cor. vi. 2, Phil. iv. 18).—Ver. 25. This verse begins, like ver. 24, with a solemn asseveration. It contains the proper answer to ver. 23. It has been suggested (J. Weiss) that vv. 22 and 24 have been interpolated from Mk. vi. 1-6 in the source Lk. here used.—ἔτη τρία κ. μ. ἕξ, three years and six months. The reference is to 1 Kings xvii. 1, xviii. 1, where three years are mentioned. The recurrence of the same number, three and a half years, in James v. 17 seems to point to a traditional estimate of the period of drought, three and a half, the half of seven, the number symbolic of misfortune (Daniel xii. 7).—Ver. 26. Σάρεπτα, a village lying between Tyre and Sidon = modern Surafend.—Ver. 27. ὁ Σύρος. Naaman and the widow of Sarepta both Gentiles: these references savouring of universalism were welcome to Lk., but there is no reason to suspect that he put them into Christ's mouth. Jesus might have so spoken (vide Mt. viii. 11).—Vv. 28-29. Unsympathetic from the first, the Nazareans, stung by these O. T. references, become indignant. Pagans, not to speak of Capernaum people, better than we: away with Him! out of the synagogue, nay, out of the town (ἔξω τῆς πόλεως).—ἕως ὀφρύος τ. ὄ., etc., to the eyebrow (supercilium, here only in N. T.) of the hill on which the city was built, implying an elevated point but not necessarily the highest ridge. Kypke remarks: "non summum montis cacumen, sed minor aliquis tumulus sive clivus intelligitur, qui cum monte cohaeret, metaphora a superciliis oculorum desumta, quae in fronte quidem eminent, ipso tamen vertice inferiora sunt". Nazareth now lies in a cup, built close up to the hill surrounding. Perhaps then it went further up.—ὥστε (εἰς τὸ, T.R.) with infinitive indicating intention and tendency, happily not result.—Ver. 30. αὐτὸς δὲ, but He, emphatic, suggesting a contrast: they infuriated, He calm and self-possessed. —διελθὼν: no miracle intended, but only the marvel of the power always exerted by a tranquil spirit and firm will over human passions.

Vv. 31-37. In Capernaum; the demoniac (Mk. i. 21-28).—κατῆλθεν εἰς Κ. He went down from Nazareth, not from heaven, as suggested in Marcion's Gospel, which began here: "Anno quintodecimo principatus Tiberiani Deum descendisse in civitatem Galilaeae Capharnaum," Tertull. c. Marc. iv. 7.—πόλιν τ. Γ.: circumstantially described διδάσκων αὐτοὺς ἐν τοῖς σάββασι. 32. καὶ ἐξεπλήσσοντο ἐπὶ τῇ διδαχῇ αὐτοῦ, ὅτι ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ ἦν ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ. 33. Καὶ ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ ἦν ἄνθρωπος ἔχων πνεῦμα δαιμονίου ἀκαθάρτου, καὶ ἀνέκραξε φωνῇ μεγάλῃ. 34. λέγων.[1] "Ἔα, τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί, Ἰησοῦ Ναζαρηνέ; ἦλθες ἀπολέσαι ἡμᾶς; οἶδά σε τίς εἶ, ὁ ἅγιος τοῦ Θεοῦ." 35. Καὶ ἐπετίμησεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, λέγων, "Φιμώθητι, καὶ ἔξελθε ἐξ[2] αὐτοῦ." Καὶ ῥίψαν αὐτὸν τὸ δαιμόνιον εἰς τὸ μέσον ἐξῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, μηδὲν βλάψαν αὐτόν. 36. καὶ ἐγένετο [b] θάμβος ἐπὶ πάντας, καὶ συνελάλουν πρὸς ἀλλήλους, λέγοντες, "Τίς ὁ λόγος οὗτος, ὅτι ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ καὶ δυνάμει ἐπιτάσσει τοῖς ἀκαθάρτοις πνεύμασι, καὶ ἐξέρχονται;" 37. Καὶ ἐξεπορεύετο ἦχος περὶ αὐτοῦ εἰς πάντα τόπον τῆς περιχώρου.

b Ch. v. 9. Acts iii. 10.

38. Ἀναστὰς δὲ ἐκ[3] τῆς συναγωγῆς, εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν Σίμωνος· ἡ[4] πενθερὰ δὲ τοῦ Σίμωνος ἦν συνεχομένη πυρετῷ μεγάλῳ· καὶ ἠρώτησαν αὐτὸν περὶ αὐτῆς. 39. καὶ ἐπιστὰς ἐπάνω αὐτῆς, ἐπετίμησε τῷ πυρετῷ, καὶ ἀφῆκεν αὐτήν· παραχρῆμα δὲ ἀναστᾶσα διηκόνει αὐτοῖς.

40. Δύνοντος δὲ τοῦ ἡλίου, πάντες ὅσοι εἶχον ἀσθενοῦντας νόσοις

[1] Omit λεγων ℵBLΞ cop. Orig.
[2] απ in ℵBDLΞ minusc.
[3] απο in ℵBCDLΞ 33 al.
[4] Omit η ℵABDLΞ.

as it is the first mention in Lk.'s own narrative. Yet the description is vague, as if by one far off, for readers in the same position. No mention here of the lake (vide v. 1).—Ver. 32. ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ, no reference to the scribes by way of contrast, as in Mk., whereby the characterisation loses much of its point.—Ver. 33. φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, added by Lk.: in Lk.'s narratives of cures two tendencies appear—(1) to magnify the power displayed, and (2) to emphasise the benevolence. Neither of these is conspicuous in this narrative, though this phrase and ῥίψαν, and μηδὲν βλάψαν αὐτόν in ver. 35, look in the direction of (1).—Ver. 34. ἔα: here only (not genuine in Mk., T.R.) in N. T. = ha! Vulg., sine as if from ἐᾷν; a cry of horror.—Ναζαρηνέ: Lk. usually writes Ναζωραῖε. The use of this form here suggests that he has Mk.'s account lying before him.—Ver. 35. μηδὲν before βλάψαν implies expectation of a contrary result.—Ver. 36. ὁ λόγος οὗτος refers either to the commanding word of Jesus, followed by such astounding results ("quid est hoc verbum?" Vulg.), or = what is this thing? what a surprising affair! ("quid hoc rei est?" Beza, and after him Grotius, De Wette, etc.). In either case Lk.'s version at this point is altogether secondary and colourless as compared with Mk.'s, q.v.—Ver. 37. ἦχος (ἀκοή, Mk.), a sound, report; again in xxi. 25, Acts ii. 2 = ἠχώ in classics.

Vv. 38, 39. Peter's mother-in-law (Mt. viii. 14, 15, Mk. i. 29-31).—Σίμωνος: another anticipation. In Mk. the call of Peter and others to discipleship has been previously narrated. One wonders that Lk. does not follow his example in view of his preface, where the apostles are called eye-witnesses, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς.—ἦν συνεχομένη, etc.: Lk'.s desire to magnify the power comes clearly out here. "The analytic imperfect implies that the fever was chronic, and the verb that it was severe," Farrar (C. G. T.). Then he calls it a great fever: whether using a technical term (fevers classed by physicians as great and small), as many think, or otherwise, as some incline to believe (Hahn, Godet, etc.), in either case taking pains to exclude the idea of a minor feverish attack.—Ver. 39. παραχρῆμα, immediately, another word having the same aim: cured at once, and perfectly; able to serve.

Vv. 40, 41. Sabbath evening cures (Mt. viii. 16, 17, Mk. i. 32-34).—δύνοντος τ. ἡ.: Lk. selects the more important part of Mk.'s dual definition of time.

ποικίλαις ἤγαγον αὐτοὺς πρὸς αὐτόν· ὁ δὲ ἑνὶ ἑκάστῳ αὐτῶν τὰς χεῖρας ἐπιθεὶς[1] ἐθεράπευσεν[2] αὐτούς. 41. ἐξήρχετο[3] δὲ καὶ δαιμόνια ἀπὸ πολλῶν, κράζοντα[4] καὶ λέγοντα, "Ὅτι σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστὸς[5] ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ." Καὶ ἐπιτιμῶν οὐκ εἴα αὐτὰ λαλεῖν, ὅτι ᾔδεισαν τὸν Χριστὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι. 42. Γενομένης δὲ ἡμέρας ἐξελθὼν ἐπορεύθη εἰς ἔρημον τόπον, καὶ οἱ ὄχλοι ἐζήτουν[6] αὐτόν, καὶ ἦλθον ἕως αὐτοῦ, καὶ κατεῖχον αὐτὸν τοῦ μὴ πορεύεσθαι ἀπ' αὐτῶν. 43. ὁ δὲ εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Ὅτι καὶ ταῖς ἑτέραις πόλεσιν εὐαγγελίσασθαί με δεῖ τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ· ὅτι εἰς[7] τοῦτο ἀπέσταλμαι."[8] 44. Καὶ ἦν κηρύσσων ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς[9] τῆς Γαλιλαίας.

[1] επιτιθεις in BDΞ al. (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] εθεραπευεν in BD (Tisch., W.H., text).

[3] εξηρχοντο in ℵCX 1, 33 (Tisch., W.H., marg.). BD have the sing. (W.H. text).

[4] So in many MSS. (ℵBCL, etc.). D has κραυγαζοντα (Tisch.).

[5] Omit ο Χριστος ℵBCDLΞ 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] επεζητουν in very many uncials (ℵBCDL, etc.).

[7] επι in ℵBL.

[8] απεσταλην in ℵBCDL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).

[9] εις τας συναγωγας in ℵBD.

With sunset the Sabbath closed. δύνοντος is present participle of the late form δύνω = δύω.—ἑνὶ ἑκάστῳ: laying His hands on each one, a touch peculiar to Lk., pointing, Godet thinks, to a separate source at Lk.'s command; much more certainly to Lk.'s desire to make prominent the benevolent sympathy of Jesus. Jesus did not heal en masse, but one by one, tender sympathy going out from Him in each case. Intrinsically probable, and worth noting. This trait in Lk. is in its own way as valuable as Mt.'s citation from Isaiah (viii. 17), and serves the same purpose.—Ver. 41. λέγοντα ὅτι, etc.: Lk. alone notes that the demons, in leaving their victims, bore witness in a despairing cry to the Divine Sonship of Jesus. God's power in this Man, our power doomed. Again a tribute to the miraculous might of Jesus.

Vv. 42-44. Withdrawal from Capernaum (Mk. i. 35-39).—γενομένης ἡμέρας, when it was day, i.e., when people were up and could see Jesus' movements, and accordingly followed Him. In Mk. Jesus departed very early before dawn, when all would be in bed; a kind of flight.—οἱ ὄχλοι: in Mk. Simon and those with him, other disciples. But of disciples Lk. as yet knows nothing.—ἕως αὐτοῦ, to the place where He was. From the direction in which they had seen Him depart they had no difficulty in finding Him.—κατεῖχον, they held Him back, from doing what He seemed inclined to do, i.e., from leaving them, with some of their sick still unhealed.—Ver. 43. ὅτι καὶ: the purpose of Jesus is the same in Lk. as in Mk., but differently expressed, in fuller, more developed terms, to preach the good news of the Kingdom of God. Of course all must hear the news; they could not gainsay that.—ἀπεστάλην, I was sent, referring to His Divine mission; in place of Mk.'s ἐξῆλθον, referring to the purpose of Jesus in leaving Capernaum. Lk.'s version, compared with Mk.'s, is secondary, and in a different tone. Mk.'s realism is replaced by decorum: what it is fitting to make Jesus do and say. Flight eliminated, and a reference to His Divine mission substituted for an apology for flight. Vide notes on Mk.

CHAPTER V. THE CALL OF PETER. THE LEPER. THE PALSIED MAN. THE CALL OF LEVI. FASTING.—Vv. 1-11. The call of Peter. This narrative, brought in later than the corresponding one in Mk., assumes larger dimensions and an altered character. Peter comes to the front, and the other three named a here only in same sense in N. T.

V. 1. ἘΓΕΝΕΤΟ δὲ ἐν τῷ τὸν ὄχλον [a] ἐπικεῖσθαι αὐτῷ τοῦ[1] ἀκούειν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ἑστὼς παρὰ τὴν λίμνην Γεννησαρέτ· 2. καὶ εἶδε δύο πλοῖα[2] ἑστῶτα παρὰ τὴν λίμνην· οἱ δὲ ἁλιεῖς ἀποβάντες ἀπ' αὐτῶν[3] ἀπέπλυναν[4] τὰ δίκτυα. 3. ἐμβὰς δὲ εἰς ἓν τῶν πλοίων, ὃ ἦν τοῦ[5] Σίμωνος, ἠρώτησεν αὐτὸν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς ἐπαναγαγεῖν ὀλίγον· καὶ καθίσας[6] ἐδίδασκεν ἐκ τοῦ πλοίου[7] τοὺς ὄχλους. 4. Ὡς δὲ ἐπαύσατο λαλῶν, εἶπε πρὸς τὸν Σίμωνα, "Ἐπανάγαγε εἰς τὸ [b] βάθος, καὶ χαλάσατε τὰ δίκτυα ὑμῶν εἰς ἄγραν." 5. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ[8] Σίμων εἶπεν αὐτῷ,[9] "Ἐπιστάτα, δι' ὅλης τῆς[10] νυκτὸς κοπιάσαντες οὐδὲν ἐλάβομεν· ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ ῥήματί

b here only in same sense in N. T.

[1] και for του in ℵABL 1, 131.

[2] B has πλοια δυο (W.H. text). ℵCL 33 al. min. have πλοιαρια (Tisch., W.H., marg.).

[3] απ αυτων αποβαντες in BCDL 33.

[4] επλυναν (-ον) in ℵBCDL.

[5] Omit του ℵBDL.

[6] καθισας δε in ℵBL.

[7] εκ τ. πλ. εδιδασκεν in B (W.H.). ℵD have εν τ. πλ. also before εδιδ. (Tisch.).

[8] Omit ο BLΔ.

[9] Omit αυτω ℵBC, e, cop.

[10] Omit της ℵABL 33.

in Mk., James, John and Andrew, retire into the shade; the last-named, indeed, does not appear in the picture at all. This, doubtless, reflects the relative positions of the four disciples in the public eye in the writer's time, and in the circle for which he wrote. The interest gathered mainly about Peter: Christian people wanted to be told about him, specially about how he became a disciple. That interest had been felt before Lk. wrote, hence the tradition about his call grew ever richer in contents, till it became a lengthy, edifying story. Lk. gives it as he found it. Some think he mixes up the call with the later story told in John xxi. 1-8, and not a few critics find in his account a symbolic representation of Peter's apostolic experience as narrated in the book of Acts. Such mixture and symbolism, if present, had probably found their way into the history before it came into Lk.'s hands. He gives it bonâ fide as the narrative of a real occurrence, which it may quite well be.

Vv. 1-7. ἐπικεῖσθαι. In Mt. and Mk. (iv. 18, i. 16) the call of the four disciples took place when Jesus was walking alone. Here Jesus is surrounded by a crowd who pressed upon Him.—καὶ ἀκούειν, etc., and were hearing the word of God. The crowd, and their eagerness to hear the word of God (phraseology here secondary), serve in the narrative to explain the need of disciples (so Schanz and Hahn).—παρὰ τὴν λίμνην Γ. The position of Jesus in speaking to the crowd was on the margin of the lake; called by Lk. alone λίμνη.—Ver. 2. ἑστῶτα: two boats standing by the lake, not necessarily drawn up on shore, but close to land, so that one on shore could enter them. They had just come in from the fishing, and were without occupants, their owners having come on shore to clean their nets.—Ver. 3. ἐμβὰς: this action of Jesus would be noticed of course, and would bring the owner to His side. It was Simon's boat, the man whose mother-in-law, in Lk.'s narrative, had been healed of fever.—ἐπαναγαγεῖν, to put out to sea, here and in ver. 4 and Mt. xxi. 18 only.—ὀλίγον: just far enough to give command of the audience.—ἐδίδασκεν: this teaching from a boat took place again on the day of the parables (Mt. xiii. 2, Mk. iv. 1). But that feature does not appear in the corresponding narrative of Lk. (viii. 4). Did Peter's call attract that feature from the later occasion in the tradition which Lk. followed?—Ver. 4. εἰς τὸ βάθος, into the deep sea, naturally to be found in the centre, inside the shelving bottom stretching inwards from the shore.—χαλάσατε, plural, after ἐπανάγαγε, singular; the latter addressed to Peter as the master, the former denoting an act in which all in the boat would assist. Bornemann (Scholia) gives instances of similar usage in classics.—ἄγραν, here and in ver. 9 only, in N. T.; in the first place may be σου χαλάσω τὸ δίκτυον." [1] 6. Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσαντες, συνέκλεισαν ἰχθύων πλῆθος [2] πολύ· διερρήγνυτο δὲ τὸ δίκτυον [3] αὐτῶν, 7. καὶ κατένευσαν τοῖς [c] μετόχοις τοῖς [4] ἐν τῷ ἑτέρῳ πλοίῳ, τοῦ ἐλθόντας συλλαβέσθαι αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἦλθον, καὶ ἔπλησαν ἀμφότερα τὰ πλοῖα, ὥστε βυθίζεσθαι αὐτά. 8. ἰδὼν δὲ Σίμων Πέτρος προσέπεσε τοῖς γόνασι τοῦ [5] Ἰησοῦ, λέγων, "Ἔξελθε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλός εἰμι, Κύριε." 9. Θάμβος γὰρ περιέσχεν αὐτὸν καὶ πάντας τοὺς σὺν αὐτῷ, ἐπὶ τῇ ἄγρᾳ τῶν ἰχθύων ᾗ [6] συνέλαβον· 10. ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην, υἱοὺς Ζεβεδαίου, οἳ ἦσαν κοινωνοὶ τῷ Σίμωνι. Καὶ εἶπε πρὸς τὸν Σίμωνα ὁ [7] Ἰησοῦς, "Μὴ φοβοῦ· ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν ἀνθρώπους ἔσῃ ζωγρῶν." 11. Καὶ καταγαγόντες τὰ πλοῖα ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, ἀφέντες ἅπαντα, ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ.

c here and several times in Heb. (i. 9, etc.).

[1] τα δικτυα in ℵBDL. [2] πληθος ιχθυων in ℵABCL. T.R. = D.

[3] ℵBL have διερησσετο, and ℵBDL τα δικτυα (Tisch., W.H., adopt both).

[4] Omit τοις ℵBDL. [5] ℵB al. omit του.

[6] ων in BD instead of η (in ℵCL). [7] Omit ο BL.

used actively = for taking, in the second, passively = for a take. But the latter sense might suit both places. If so used here the word implies a promise (Hahn).—Ver. 5. ἐπιστάτα: Lk.'s name for Jesus as Master, six times; a Greek term for Gentile readers instead of Rabbi = (1) Master, then (2) Teacher, "qui enim magistri doctrinae erant, ii magistri simul vitae esse solebant," Kypke.—ἐπὶ τῷ ῥήματί σου, at Thy word or bidding. Success was doubly improbable: it was day, and in deep water; fish were got at night, and near shore. The order, contrary to probability, tempts to symbolic interpretation: the deep sea the Gentile world; Peter's indirect objection symbol of his reluctance to enter on the Gentile mission, overcome by a special revelation (Acts x.). So Holtz., H. C.—Ver. 6. διερήσσετο, began to break, or were on the point of breaking; on the symbolic theory = the threatened rupture of unity though the success of the Gentile mission (Acts xv.).—Ver. 7. κατένευσαν, they made signs, beckoned, here only in N. T. (ἐνένευον, i. 62); too far to speak perhaps, but fishers would be accustomed to communicate by signs to preserve needful stillness (Schanz).—συλλαβέσθαι αὐτοῖς: this verb with dative occurs in Phil. iv. 3 = to help one.—ὥστε, with infinitive = tendency here, not result.—βυθίζεσθαι, to sink in the deep (βυθός), here only in O. or N. T. in reference to a ship; in 1 Tim. vi. 9 in reference to rich men.

Vv. 8-11. Sequel of the miracle.—Ver. 8. Πέτρος: here for first time introduced without explanation, presumably in connection with the great crisis in his history.—ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλός: a natural exclamation especially for an impulsive nature in the circumstances. But the utterance, though real, might have been passed over in the tradition. Why so carefully recorded by Lk.? Perhaps because it was a fitting thing for any man to say on becoming a disciple of the Holy Jesus—the sin of the disciple a foil to the holiness of the Master. Also to supply a justification for the statement in ver. 32, "I came not to call," etc. In this connection sin is ascribed to all the apostles when called, in very exaggerated terms in Ep. Barnab., v. 9 (ὄντας ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν ἁμαρτίαν ἀνομωτέρους). — Ver. 10. Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην, dependent on περιέσχεν: fear encompassed them also, not less than Peter and the rest. This special mention of them is not explained, unless inferentially in what follows.—μὴ φοβοῦ, fear not, addressed to Peter alone. He alone, so far as appears, is to become a fisher of men, but the other two are named, presumably, because meant to be included, and in matter of fact they as well as Simon abandon all and follow Jesus (ver. 11).—ζωγρῶν: the verb means to take alive, then generally to take; here and in 2 Tim. ii. 26. The analytic form (ἔσῃ ζωγρῶν) implies permanent occupation = thou shall be a taker.—Ver. 11. καταγαγόντες τ. πλ.,

12. ΚΑΙ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ εἶναι αὐτὸν ἐν μιᾷ τῶν πόλεων, καὶ ἰδού, ἀνὴρ πλήρης λέπρας· καὶ ἰδὼν[1] τὸν Ἰησοῦν, πεσὼν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον, ἐδεήθη αὐτοῦ, λέγων, "Κύριε, ἐὰν θέλῃς, δύνασαί με καθαρίσαι." 13. Καὶ ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα, ἥψατο αὐτοῦ, εἰπών,[2] "Θέλω, καθαρίσθητι." Καὶ εὐθέως ἡ λέπρα ἀπῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. 14. καὶ αὐτὸς παρήγγειλεν αὐτῷ μηδενὶ εἰπεῖν· "ἀλλὰ ἀπελθὼν δεῖξον σεαυτὸν τῷ ἱερεῖ, καὶ προσένεγκε περὶ τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ σου, καθὼς προσέταξε Μωσῆς, εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς." 15. Διήρχετο δὲ μᾶλλον ὁ λόγος περὶ αὐτοῦ· καὶ συνήρχοντο ὄχλοι πολλοὶ ἀκούειν, καὶ θεραπεύεσθαι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ[3] ἀπὸ τῶν ἀσθενειῶν αὐτῶν· 16. αὐτὸς δὲ ἦν ὑποχωρῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐρήμοις, καὶ προσευχόμενος.

17. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν μιᾷ τῶν ἡμερῶν, καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν διδάσκων· καὶ ἦσαν καθήμενοι Φαρισαῖοι καὶ νομοδιδάσκαλοι, οἳ ἦσαν ἐληλυθότες ἐκ πάσης κώμης τῆς Γαλιλαίας καὶ Ἰουδαίας καὶ Ἱερουσαλήμ· καὶ δύναμις Κυρίου ἦν εἰς τὸ ἰᾶσθαι αὐτούς.[4] 18. καὶ ἰδού, ἄνδρες φέροντες ἐπὶ κλίνης ἄνθρωπον ὃς ἦν παραλελυμένος, καὶ ἐζήτουν

[1] ιδων δε in ℵBC cop. [2] λεγων in ℵBCDL 33 al.

[3] Omit υπ αυτου ℵBCDL minusc.

[4] αυτον in ℵBLΞ aeth. (Tisch., W.H.), not understood, hence corrected into αυτους (T.R.).

drawing up their ships on land; that work done for ever. Chiefly in Lk. and Acts.

Vv. 12-16. The leper (Mt. viii. 1-4, Mk. i. 40-45).—Ver. 12. ἐν μιᾷ τ. π. for ἔν τινι, one of the cities or towns of Galilee in which Jesus had been preaching (Mk. i. 39 Lk. iv. 44).—καὶ ἰδού, after καὶ ἐγένετο, very Hebraistic.—πλήρης λέπρας, full of leprosy (λεπρὸς in parallels). Note here again the desire to magnify the miracle.—ἐὰν θέλῃς, etc., the man's words the same in all three narratives. His doubt was as to the will not the power to heal.—Ver. 13. ἥψατο: this also in all three—a cardinal point; the touch the practical proof of the will and the sympathy. No shrinking from the loathsome disease.—ἡ λέπρα ἀπῆλθεν: Lk. takes one of Mk.'s two phrases, Mt. the other. Lk. takes the one which most clearly implies a cure; ἐκαθερίσθη (Mt.) might conceivably mean: became technically clean.—Ver. 14. ἀλλὰ, etc.: here the oratio indirecta passes into or. directa as in Acts i. 4, xiv. 22, etc.—τῷ ἱερεῖ, to the priest; not necessarily in Jerusalem, but to the priest in the province whose business it was to attend to such duties (Hahn).—Ver. 15. ἀκούειν, to hear, but not the word as in ver. 1, rather to hear about the wonderful Healer and to get healing for themselves (θεραπεύεσθαι).—Ver. 16. To retirement mentioned in Mk. Lk. adds prayer (προσευχόμενος); frequent reference to this in Lk.

Vv. 17-26. The paralytic (Mt. ix. 1-8, Mk. ii. 1-12).—Ver. 17. ἐν μιᾷ τῶν ἡμερῶν, a phrase as vague as a note of time as that in ver. 12 as a note of place.—καὶ αὐτὸς, etc., and He was teaching; the Hebraistic paratactic construction so common in Lk. Note καὶ ἦσαν and καὶ δύναμις Κ. ἦν following.—νομοδιδάσκαλοι, teachers of the law, Lk.'s equivalent for γραμματεῖς. The Pharisees and lawyers appear here for the first time in Lk., and they appear in force—a large gathering from every village of Galilee, from Judaea, and from Jerusalem. Jesus had preached in the synagogues of Galilee where the scribes might have an opportunity of hearing Him. But this extensive gathering of these classes at this time is not accounted for fully in Lk. Not till later does such a gathering occur in Mk. (iii. 22).—αὐτόν, the reading in ℵBL gives quite a good sense; it is accusative before ἰᾶσθαι = the power of the Lord (God) was present to the effect or intent that He (Jesus) should heal.—Ver. 18. παραλελυμένος, instead of παραλυτικός αὐτὸν εἰσενεγκεῖν καὶ θεῖναι ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ· 19. καὶ μὴ εὑρόντες διὰ[1] ποίας εἰσενέγκωσιν αὐτὸν διὰ τὸν ὄχλον, ἀναβάντες ἐπὶ τὸ δῶμα, διὰ τῶν κεράμων καθῆκαν αὐτὸν σὺν τῷ κλινιδίῳ εἰς τὸ μέσον ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. 20. καὶ ἰδὼν τὴν πίστιν αὐτῶν, εἶπεν αὐτῷ,[2] "Ἄνθρωπε, ἀφέωνταί σοι αἱ ἁμαρτίαι σου." 21. Καὶ ἤρξαντο διαλογίζεσθαι οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι, λέγοντες, "Τίς ἐστιν οὗτος ὃς λαλεῖ βλασφημίας; τίς δύναται ἀφιέναι ἁμαρτίας,[3] εἰ μὴ μόνος ὁ Θεός;" 22. Ἐπιγνοὺς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοὺς διαλογισμοὺς αὐτῶν ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Τί διαλογίζεσθε ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν; 23. τί ἐστιν εὐκοπώτερον, εἰπεῖν, Ἀφέωνταί σοι αἱ ἁμαρτίαι σου, ἢ εἰπεῖν, Ἔγειραι[4] καὶ περιπάτει; 24. ἵνα δὲ εἰδῆτε ὅτι ἐξουσίαν ἔχει ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου[5] ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἀφιέναι ἁμαρτίας," εἶπε τῷ παραλελυμένῳ, "Σοὶ λέγω, ἔγειραι,[6] καὶ ἄρας τὸ κλινίδιόν σου, πορεύου εἰς τὸν οἶκόν σου." 25. Καὶ παραχρῆμα ἀναστὰς ἐνώπιον αὐτῶν, ἄρας ἐφ᾽ ᾧ[7] κατέκειτο, ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ, δοξάζων τὸν Θεόν. 26. καὶ ἔκστασις ἔλαβεν ἅπαντας, καὶ ἐδόξαζον τὸν Θεόν, καὶ ἐπλήσθησαν φόβου, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι εἴδομεν παράδοξα σήμερον."

[1] δια omitted in all uncials.
[2] ℵBLΞ 33 omit αυτω.
[3] αμαρ. αφιεναι in BDΞ.
[4] εγειρε in ℵABCDLΞ.
[5] ο υ. τ. αν. εξουσιαν εχει in BLΞ (Tisch., W.H.).
[6] εγειρε here again in many MSS.
[7] εφ ο in ℵABCLΔΞ al.

in the parallels, the former more in use among physicians, and the more classical.—ἐζήτουν. imperfect, implying difficulty in finding access, due, one might think, to the great numbers of Pharisees and lawyers present, no mention having as yet been made of any others. But the ὄχλος comes in in next verse.—Ver. 19. ποίας (διὰ ποίας ὁδοῦ), by what way.—σ. τ. κλινιδίῳ: dim. of κλίνη (ver. 18, here only in N. T.). Lk. avoids Mk.'s κράββατος, though apparently following him as to the substance of the story.—Ver. 20. ἄνθρωπε, man, instead of Mk.'s more kindly τέκνον and Mt.'s still more sympathetic θάρσει τέκνον; because (suggests J. Weiss) it was not deemed fitting that such a sinner should be addressed as son or child! This from Lk., the evangelist of grace! The substitution, from whatever reason proceeding, is certainly not an improvement. Possibly Lk. had a version of the story before him which used that word. Doubtless Jesus employed the kindlier expression.—Ver. 21. διαλογίζεσθαι: Lk. omits the qualifying phrases ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις of Mt. and Mk., leaving it doubtful whether they spoke out or merely thought.—λέγοντες does not settle the point, as it merely indicates to what effect they reasoned.—Ver. 22. The expression "in your hearts" coming in here suggests that Lk. may have omitted it in ver. 21 merely to avoid repetition.—Ver. 24. ἔγειρε καὶ ἄρας . . . πορεύου: by introducing the participle ἄρας Lk. improves the style as compared with Mk., but weakens the force of the utterance, "arise, take up thy bed and go". The same remark applies to the words of the scribes, ver. 21, "who is this that speaketh blasphemies?" compared with, "why doth this person speak thus?" He blasphemes. Lk.'s is secondary, the style of an editor working over a rugged, graphic, realistic text.—Ver. 25. παραχρῆμα (παρὰ τὸ χρῆμα), on the spot, instantly; in Lk. only, magnifying the miracle.—Ver. 26. ἔκστασις might be taken out of Mk.'s ἐξίστασθαι.—παράδοξα. Each evangelist expresses the comments of the people in different terms. All three may be right, and not one of them may give the ipsissima

27. Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἐξῆλθε, καὶ ἐθεάσατο τελώνην, ὀνόματι Λευΐν, καθήμενον ἐπὶ τὸ τελώνιον, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, "Ἀκολούθει μοι." 28. Καὶ καταλιπὼν ἅπαντα, ἀναστὰς ἠκολούθησεν[1] αὐτῷ. 29. Καὶ ἐποίησε δοχὴν μεγάλην ὁ[2] Λευῒς αὐτῷ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἦν ὄχλος τελωνῶν πολύς,[3] καὶ ἄλλων οἳ ἦσαν μετ' αὐτῶν κατακείμενοι. 30. καὶ ἐγόγγυζον οἱ γραμματεῖς αὐτῶν καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι[4] πρὸς τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, λέγοντες, "Διατί μετὰ τελωνῶν καὶ ἁμαρτωλῶν ἐσθίετε καὶ πίνετε;" 31. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσιν οἱ ὑγιαίνοντες ἰατροῦ, ἀλλ' οἱ κακῶς ἔχοντες. 32. οὐκ ἐλήλυθα καλέσαι δικαίους, ἀλλὰ ἁμαρτωλοὺς εἰς

[1] ηκολουθει in BDLΞ 69, a.
[2] Omit ο all uncials.
[3] πολυς before τελ. in ℵBCDLΞ 33 al.
[4] οι Φαρ. και οι γρ. αυτων in ABCLΔΞ al. T.R. = ℵD.

verba. Lk.'s version is: We have seen unexpected things to-day. Here only in N. T.

Vv. 27-32. Call of Levi (Mt. ix. 9-13, Mk. ii. 13-17).—Ver. 27. ἐθεάσατο, instead of εἶδεν. Hahn, appealing to John i. 14, iv. 35, xi. 45, assigns to it the meaning, to look with interest, to let the eye rest on with complacency. But it is doubtful whether in later usage it meant more than to look in order to observe. If the view stated in Mt. on the so-called Matthew's feast (q.v.) be correct, Jesus was on the outlook for a man to assist Him in the Capernaum mission to the publicans.—ἐπὶ τὸ τελώνιον, at "the tolbothe," Wyclif. The tolls collected by Levi may have been either on highway traffic, or on the traffic across the lake. Mk.'s παράγων (ver. 14) coming after the reference to the sea (ver. 13) points to the latter.—Ver. 28. καταλιπὼν ἅπαντα, leaving all behind, in Lk. only; a specialty of the ebionitically inclined evangelist, thinks J. Weiss (in Meyer). But it merely predicates of Levi what all three evangelists predicate of Peter and his comrades.—Ver. 29. δοχὴν (from δέχομαι here and in xiv. 13), a reception, a feast, in Sept. for מִשְׁתֶּה (Gen. xxvi. 30, Esther i. 3). That Mt. made a feast is directly stated only by Lk., perhaps as an inference from the phrases in Mk. which imply it: κατακεῖσθαι, συνανέκειντο (ver. 15), ἐσθίει καὶ πίνει (ver. 16). That it was a great feast is inferred from πολλοὶ in reference to the number present. The expressions of the evangelists force us to conceive of the gathering as exceeding the dimensions of a private entertainment—a congregation rather, in the court, to eat and to hear the gospel of the kingdom. Possibly none of the evangelists realised the full significance of the meeting, though Lk. by the expression ὄχλος πολὺς shows that he conceived of it as very large.—ἄλλων stands for ἁμαρτωλῶν, which Lk. does not care to use when speaking for himself of the class, preferring the vague word "others". They were probably a very nondescript class, the "submerged tenth" of Capernaum.—Ver. 30. οἱ Φαρισαῖοι καὶ οἱ γραμ. αὐτῶν, the Pharisees, and the scribes connected with them, the professional men of the party. They were not of course guests, but they might if they chose look in: no privacy on such occasions in the East; or they might watch the strange company as they dispersed.—ἐσθίετε καὶ πίνετε: addressed to the disciples. In the parallels the question refers to the conduct of Jesus though put to the disciples.—Ver. 31. Jesus replies, understanding that it is He who is put on His defence. His reply is given in identical terms in all three Synoptics; a remarkable logion carefully preserved in the tradition.—Ver. 32. εἰς μετάνοιαν: doubtless a gloss of Lk.'s or of a tradition he used, defining and guarding the saying, but also limiting its scope.—καλέσαι is to be understood in a festive sense = I came to call sinners to the feast of the Kingdom, as I have called to this feast the "sinners" of Capernaum.

Vv. 33-39. Fasting (Mt. ix. 14-17, Mk. ii. 18-22).—Ver. 33. οἱ δὲ connects what follows with what goes before as a continuation of the same story. Not so in Mk.; connection there simply topical.

μετάνοιαν." 33. Οἱ δὲ εἶπον πρὸς αὐτόν, "Διατί[1] οἱ μαθηταὶ Ἰωάννου νηστεύουσι πυκνά, καὶ δεήσεις ποιοῦνται, ὁμοίως καὶ οἱ τῶν Φαρισαίων· οἱ δὲ σοὶ ἐσθίουσι καὶ πίνουσιν;" 34. Ὁ δὲ[2] εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, "Μὴ δύνασθε τοὺς υἱοὺς τοῦ νυμφῶνος, ἐν ᾧ ὁ νυμφίος μετ' αὐτῶν ἐστι, ποιῆσαι νηστεύειν[3]; 35. ἐλεύσονται δὲ ἡμέραι, καὶ ὅταν ἀπαρθῇ ἀπ' αὐτῶν ὁ νυμφίος, τότε νηστεύσουσιν ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις." 36. Ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ παραβολὴν πρὸς αὐτούς, "Ὅτι οὐδεὶς ἐπίβλημα ἱματίου καινοῦ[4] ἐπιβάλλει ἐπὶ ἱμάτιον παλαιόν· εἰ δὲ μήγε, καὶ τὸ καινὸν σχίζει,[5] καὶ τῷ παλαιῷ οὐ συμφωνεῖ[6]

[1] Omit διατι BLΞ 33 cop.
[2] Add Ιησους ℵBCDLΞ 33.
[3] νηστευσαι in BΞ 28 (Tisch., W.H.). T.R. = ℵACDL.
[4] For ιμ. καινου ℵBDLΞ 33 al. have απο ιμ. κ. σχισας (Tisch., W.H.).
[5] σχισει in ℵBCDL 33.
[6] συμφωνησει in ℵABCDLX 33 and many other minusc.

The supposed speakers are the Pharisees and scribes (ver. 30). In Mk. Phar. and John's disciples. In Mt. the latter only. If the Pharisees and scribes were the spokesmen, their putting John's disciples first in stating the common practice would be a matter of policy = John held in respect by Jesus, why then differ even from him?—πυκνὰ (neuter plural, from πυκνός, dense), frequently.—δεήσεις ποιοῦνται, make prayers, on system; added to complete the picture of an ascetic life; cf. ii. 37; referred to again in xi. 1; probably the question really concerned only fasting, hence omitted in the description of the life of the Jesus-circle even in Lk.—ἐσθίουσιν καὶ πίνουσι, eat and drink; on the days when we fast, making no distinction of days.—Ver. 34. μὴ δύνασθε . . . ποιῆσαι νησ., can ye make them fast? In Mt. and Mk., can they fast? Lk.'s form of the question points to the futility of prescriptions in the circumstances. The Master could not make His disciples fast even if He wished.—Ver. 35. καὶ ὅταν: Mt. and Mk. place the καὶ before τότε in the next clause. Lk.'s arrangement throws more emphasis on ἡμέραι: there will come days, and when, etc. The καὶ may be explicative (= et quidem, Bornemann), or it may introduce the apodosis.—ὅταν ἀπαρθῇ, the subjunctive with ἂν in a relative clause referring to a probable future event.

Vv. 36-39. Relative parabolic Logia.—ἔλεγε . . . ὅτι: an editorial introduction to the parabolic sayings. The first of these, as given by Lk., varies in form from the version in the parallels, suggests somewhat different ideas, and is in itself by no means clear. Much depends on whether we omit or retain σχίσας in the first clause. If, with ℵBDL, we retain it, the case put is: a piece cut out of a new garment to patch an old one, the evil results being: the new spoiled, and the old patched with the new piece presenting an incongruous appearance (οὐ συμφωνήσει). If, with AC, etc., we omit σχίσας, the case put may be: a new piece not cut out of a new garment, but a remnant (Hahn) used to patch an old, this new piece making a rent in the old garment; τὸ καινὸν in second clause not object of, but nominative to, σχίσει, and the contrast between the new patch and old garment presenting a grotesque appearance. The objection to this latter view is that there is no reason in the case supposed why the new patch should make a rent. In Mt. and Mk. the patch is made with unfulled cloth, which will contract. But the remnant of cloth with which a new garment is made would not be unfulled, and it would not contract. The sole evil in that case would be a piebald appearance. On the whole it seems best to retain σχίσας, and to render τὸ καινὸν σχίσει, he (the man who does so foolish a thing) will rend the new. Kypke suggests as an alternative rendering: the new is rent, taking σχίζει intransitively, of which use he cites an instance from the Testament of the twelve patriarchs. The sense on this rendering remains the same.—Ver. 37. The tradition of the second logion seems to have come down to Lk.'s time without variation; at all events he gives ἐπίβλημα τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ καινοῦ. 37. καὶ οὐδεὶς βάλλει οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς παλαιούς· εἰ δὲ μήγε, ῥήξει ὁ νέος οἶνος[1] τοὺς ἀσκούς, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐκχυθήσεται, καὶ οἱ ἀσκοὶ ἀπολοῦνται· 38. ἀλλὰ οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς καινοὺς βλητέον, καὶ ἀμφότεροι συντηροῦνται.[2] 39. καὶ οὐδεὶς πιὼν παλαιὸν εὐθέως[3] θέλει νέον· λέγει γάρ, Ὁ παλαιὸς χρηστότερός[4] ἐστιν."

[1] ο οινος ο νεος in BCDL al.

[2] και αμφ. συντηρ. omitted in ℵBL 1, 33 al. cop. (Tisch., W.H.); an addition from Mt.

[3] Omit ευθεως ℵBCL minusc. cop.

[4] χρηστος in ℵBL cop. D and some western codd. of vet. Lat. omit this verse.

it substantially as in parallels. The difficulty connected with this parabolic word is not critical or exegetical, but scientific. The question has been raised: could even new, tough skins stand the process of fermentation? and the suggestion made that Jesus was not thinking at all of fermented, intoxicating wine, but of "must," a non-intoxicating beverage, which could be kept safely in new leather bottles, but not in old skins, which had previously contained ordinary wine, because particles of albuminoid matter adhering to the skin would set up fermentation and develop gas with an enormous pressure. On this vide Farrar (C. G. T., Excursus, III.).—Ver. 38 gives the positive side of the truth answering to Mt. ix. 17b, only substituting the verbal adjective βλητέον for βάλλουσιν.—Ver. 39. The thought in this verse is peculiar to Lk. It seems to be a genial apology for conservatism in religion, with tacit reference to John and his disciples, whom Jesus would always treat with consideration. They loved the old wine of Jewish piety, and did not care for new ways. They found it good (χρηστός), so good that they did not wish even to taste any other, and could therefore make no comparisons. (Hence χρηστὸς preferable to χρηστότερος in T. R.) This saying is every way worthy of Christ, and it was probably one of Lk.'s finds in his pious quest for traditions of the Personal Ministry.

With reference to the foregoing parabolic words, drawn from vesture and wine, Hahn truly remarks that they would be naturally suggested through association of ideas by the figure of a wedding feast going before. Bengel hints at the same thought: "parabolam a veste, a vino; inprimis opportunam convivio".

CHAPTER VI. SABBATIC CONFLICTS. THE APOSTLES. THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.—Vv. 1-5. The ears of corn (Mt. xii. 1-8, Mk. ii. 23-28).—ἐν σαββάτῳ: Mk. makes no attempt to locate this incident in his history beyond indicating that it happened on Sabbath. Mt. uses a phrase which naturally suggests temporal sequence, but to which in view of what goes before one can attach no definite meaning. Lk. on the other hand would seem to be aiming at very great precision if the adjective qualifying σαββάτῳ—δευτεροπρώτῳ, were genuine. But it is omitted in the important group ℵBL, and in other good documents, and this fact, combined with the extreme unlikelihood of Lk.'s using a word to which it is now, and must always have been, impossible to attach any definite sense, makes it highly probable that this word is simply a marginal gloss, which found its way, like many others, into the text. How the gloss arose, and what it meant for its author or authors, it is really not worth while trying to conjecture, though such attempts have been made. Vide Tischendorf, N. T., ed. viii., for the critical history of the word.—ἤσθιον, ate, indicating the purpose of the plucking, with Mt. Mk. omits this, vide notes there.—ψώχοντες τ. χ., rubbing with their hands; peculiar to Lk., indicating his idea of the fault (or that of the tradition he followed); rubbing was threshing on a small scale, an offence against one of the many minor rules for Sabbath observance. This word occurs here only in N. T., and is not classical.—Ver. 2. τινὲς: more exact than Mt. and Mk., who say the Pharisees generally, but not necessary to make their meaning clear. Of course it was only some of the class.—Ver. 3. οὐδὲ, for Mk.'s οὐδέποτε and

VI. 1. ʼΕΓΕΝΕΤΟ δὲ ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ[1] διαπορεύεσθαι αὐτὸν διὰ τῶν[2] σπορίμων· καὶ ἔτιλλον οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ τοὺς στάχυας, καὶ ἤσθιον,[3] ψώχοντες ταῖς χερσί. 2. τινὲς δὲ τῶν Φαρισαίων εἶπον αὐτοῖς,[4] "Τί ποιεῖτε ὃ οὐκ ἔξεστι ποιεῖν ἐν[5] τοῖς σάββασι;" 3. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς πρὸς αὐτοὺς εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Οὐδὲ τοῦτο ἀνέγνωτε, ὃ ἐποίησε Δαβίδ, ὁπότε[6] ἐπείνασεν αὐτὸς καὶ οἱ μετʼ αὐτοῦ ὄντες[7]; 4. ὡς[8] εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τοὺς ἄρτους τῆς προθέσεως ἔλαβε, καὶ[9] ἔφαγε, καὶ ἔδωκε καὶ[9] τοῖς μετʼ αὐτοῦ, οὓς οὐκ ἔξεστι φαγεῖν εἰ μὴ μόνους τοὺς ἱερεῖς;" 5. Καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, "Ὅτι[10] κύριός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου καὶ τοῦ σαββάτου."[11]

[1] ℵBL 33 al. omit δευτεροπρωτω. Vide below.

[2] ℵBL al. omit των (from parall.).

[3] και ησθιον τους σταχυας in BCL (W.H.; Tisch. = T.R. with ℵ).

[4] Omit αυτοις ℵBCL minusc. a, c, e, cop.

[5] B omits ποιειν, and ℵBL omit εν (W.H. omit both).

[6] οτε in ℵBCDL minusc. (W.H.; Tisch. has οποτε with less weighty witnesses, vide below).

[7] Omit οντες with ℵBDL 33 al. (W.H.).

[8] B omits ως (W.H. in brackets), D also, reading εισελθων.

[9] For ελαβε και BCLX 33 have λαβων, and BL omit και after εδωκε.

[10] ℵB 1, 131 aeth. omit οτι (W.H.).

[11] του σαβ., without και, before ο υ. τ. αν. in ℵB cop. aeth. (W.H.). DL = T.R. (Tisch.).

Mt.'s οὐκ = not even; have ye so little understood the spirit of the O. T.? (De Wette). The word might be analysed into οὐ, δὲ, when it will mean: but have ye not then read this? So Hofmann, Nösgen, Hahn.—ὁπότε, here only in N. T., if even here, for many good MSS. have ὅτε (W.H.).—Ver. 4. Lk. contents himself with the essential fact: hunger, overruling a positive law concerning the shewbread. No reference to the high priest, as in Mk., and no additional instance of the Sabbath law superseded by higher interests, as in Mt. (xii. 5). The controversy no longer lives for him, and his accounts are apt to be colourless and secondary.—Ver. 5. καὶ ἔλεγεν: in Lk. this important logion about the Son of Man's Lordship over the Sabbath is simply an external annex to what goes before = and He said: instead of arising out of and crowning the argument, as in Mt., and partly in Mk., though the latter uses the same phrase in introducing the logion peculiar to him about the Sabbath being made for man. If Lk. had Mk. before him, how could he omit so important a word? Perhaps because it involved a controversial antithesis not easily intelligible to Gentiles, and because the Lordship of the Son of Man covered all in his view. How did he and his readers understand that Lordship?

Vv. 6-11. The withered hand (Mt. xii. 9-14, Mk. iii. 1-6).—Ver. 6. ἐν ἑτέρῳ σαββάτῳ: simply intended to indicate that the following incident, like the one going before, happened on a Sabbath. Observe Lk. uses here, as in vi. 1, 5, the singular for the Sabbath.—τὴν συν.: the article here might point to a particular synagogue, as in Mt., or be generic.—διδάσκειν, present, εἰσελθεῖν, aorist: the entering an act, the preaching continuous. He was preaching when the following happened.—καὶ ἡ χεὶρ: by comparison with Mt. and Mk. Lk. is here paratactic and Hebraistic in construction. But Palairet, against Grotius emphasising the Hebraism, cites from Aelian, Hist. Anim. (lib. xii., c. 24): ἐν τῇ θαλάττῃ τῇ Ἐρυθρᾷ ἰχθὺς γίνεται, καὶ ὄνομα αὐτῷ ὑγρὸς φοῖνιξ.—ἡ δεξιά,

6. Ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ[1] ἐν ἑτέρῳ σαββάτῳ εἰσελθεῖν αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν καὶ διδάσκειν· καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ ἄνθρωπος,[2] καὶ ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ ἡ δεξιὰ ἦν ξηρά. 7. παρετήρουν[3] δὲ αὐτὸν οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι, εἰ ἐν τῷ σαββάτῳ θεραπεύσει[4]· ἵνα εὕρωσι κατηγορίαν[5] αὐτοῦ. 8. αὐτὸς δὲ ᾔδει τοὺς διαλογισμοὺς αὐτῶν, καὶ εἶπε τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ[6] τῷ ξηρὰν ἔχοντι τὴν χεῖρα, "Ἔγειραι,[7] καὶ στῆθι εἰς τὸ μέσον." Ὁ δὲ[8] ἀναστὰς ἔστη. 9. Εἶπεν οὖν[9] ὁ Ἰησοῦς πρὸς αὐτούς, "Ἐπερωτήσω[10] ὑμᾶς, τί ἔξεστι τοῖς σάββασιν,[11] ἀγαθοποιῆσαι ἢ κακοποιῆσαι; ψυχὴν σῶσαι ἢ ἀπολέσαι;" 10. Καὶ περιβλεψάμενος πάντας αὐτούς, εἶπε τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ,[12] "Ἔκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου." Ὁ δὲ ἐποίησεν οὕτω.[13] καὶ ἀποκατεστάθη[14] ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ ὑγιὴς ὡς ἡ ἄλλη.[15] 11. αὐτοὶ δὲ ἐπλήσθησαν ἀνοίας· καὶ διελάλουν πρὸς ἀλλήλους, τί ἂν ποιήσειαν[16] τῷ Ἰησοῦ.

[1] Omit και ℵBL min. [2] ανθ. εκει in ℵBL 33 al. (Tisch., W.H.).
[3] παρετηρουντο in ABDL 33 al. (Tisch., W.H.).
[4] θεραπευει in ℵADL (Tisch., W.H., text). T.R. = B (W.H. marg.).
[5] κατηγορειν αυτου in ℵB (D -γορησαι).
[6] ειπεν δε τω ανδρι in ℵBL 33 (Tisch., W.H.).
[7] εγειρε in very many uncials. [8] For ο δε ℵBDL have και.
[9] For ουν ℵBDL 33 al. have δε. [10] επερωτω in ℵBL.
[11] ℵBDL have ει for τι, and τω σαββατω for τοις σαββασιν.
[12] αυτω in B and many other uncials. T.R. = ℵDL 33.
[13] Omit ουτω BLΔ 33.
[14] απεκατεσταθη in ADL al. pl., but B has αποκ.
[15] Omit υγιης . . . αλλη (from Mt.) with ℵBL.
[16] ποιησαιεν in BLΛ 33 al. pl. (Tisch., W.H.).

the right hand. This particular peculiar to Lk., with the Hebrew style, proves, some think (Godet, Hahn), a source distinct from Mt. or Mk. Not necessarily. It may be an inference by Lk., added to magnify the beneficence of the miracle. The right hand the working hand, the privation great, the cure the more valuable.—Ver. 7. παρετηροῦντο, they kept watching, in a sly, furtive manner, ex obliquo et occulto, Bengel on Mk.—εἰ θεραπεύει, whether He is going to heal, if that is to be the way of it.—Ver. 8. ᾔδει: a participle might have been expected here = He knowing their thoughts said, etc.—ἔγειρε καὶ στῆθι, etc.: this command was necessary to bring the matter under the notice of the audience present, who as yet knew nothing of the thoughts of the Pharisees, and possibly were not aware that the man with the withered hand was present.—Ver. 9. ἀγαθοποιῆσαι, κακοποιῆσαι: on the meaning of these words and the issue raised vide on Mk.—Ver. 10. περιβλεψάμενος. Lk. borrows this word from Mk., but omits all reference to the emotions he ascribes to Jesus: anger mixed with pity. He looks round merely waiting for an answer to His pointed question. None being forthcoming, He proceeds to heal: "qui tacet, consentit," Bornemann.—Ver. 11. ἀνοίας: they were filled with senseless anger. They were "mad" at Jesus, because He had broken the Sabbath, as they conceived it, in a way that would make Him popular: humanity and preternatural power combined.—τί ἂν ποιήσαιεν: ἂν with the optative in an indirect question, in Lk. only, following classic usage. This combination of occasional classicism with frequent Hebraism is curious. It is noticeable that Lk. does not impute murderous intentions to the opponents of Jesus at this stage, nor combination with politicians to effect truculent designs (vide Mk. iii. 6).

12. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ταύταις, ἐξῆλθεν[1] εἰς τὸ ὄρος προσεύξασθαι· καὶ ἦν διανυκτερεύων ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ. 13. καὶ ὅτε ἐγένετο ἡμέρα, προσεφώνησε τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐκλεξάμενος ἀπ' αὐτῶν δώδεκα, οὓς καὶ ἀποστόλους ὠνόμασε, 14. Σίμωνα ὃν καὶ ὠνόμασε Πέτρον, καὶ Ἀνδρέαν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, Ἰάκωβον[2] καὶ Ἰωάννην, Φίλιππον καὶ Βαρθολομαῖον, 15. Ματθαῖον καὶ Θωμᾶν, Ἰάκωβον τὸν τοῦ[3] Ἀλφαίου καὶ Σίμωνα τὸν καλούμενον Ζηλωτήν, 16. Ἰούδαν Ἰακώβου, καὶ Ἰούδαν Ἰσκαριώτην, ὃς καὶ[4] ἐγένετο προδότης· 17. καὶ καταβὰς μετ' αὐτῶν, ἔστη ἐπὶ τόπου πεδινοῦ, καὶ ὄχλος[5] μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ πλῆθος πολὺ τοῦ λαοῦ ἀπὸ

[1] εξελθειν αυτον in ℵBDL.

[2] ℵBDL have και before Ιακωβον, and there is MS. authority for και before every name (Tisch., W.H.: και in brackets before Ιακ. Αλφ., omitted there only in B, probably by oversight).

[3] Omit τον του ℵBL 33. [4] Omit και ℵBL. [5] οχλος πολυς in ℵBL.

Vv. 12-19. On the hill (Mt. iv. 24-25, x. 2-4; Mk. iii. 7-19).—Ver. 12. ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ταύταις: a vague expression, but suggestive of some connection with foregoing encounters.—ἐξελθεῖν, went out; whence not indicated, probably from a town (Capernaum?) into the solitude of the mountains.—εἰς τὸ ὄρος: as in Mt. v. i. and Mk. iii. 13, to the hill near the place where He had been. —προσεύξασθαι, to pray, not in Mk.; might be taken for granted. But Lk. makes a point of exhibiting Jesus as a devotional Model, often praying, and especially at critical times in His life. The present is viewed as a very special crisis, hence what follows.—ἦν διανυκτερεύων, etc., He was spending the whole night in prayer to God; διανυκτερεύων occurs here only in N. T. —τοῦ θεοῦ is genitive objective: prayer of which God is the object; but if προσευχὴ were taken as = a place for prayer in the open air, as in Acts xvi. 13, we should get the poetic idea of the proseucha of God—the mountains!—Ver. 13. τοὺς μαθητὰς, the disciples, of whom a considerable number have gathered about Jesus, and who have followed Him to the hill.—ἀποστόλους, Apostles, used by Lk. in the later sense, here and elsewhere. The word is more frequent in his Gospel than in Mt. and Mk. (six times in Lk., once in Mt., twice in Mk.).—Ver. 14. Σίμωνα: here follows the list much the same as in Mt. and Mk. Lk., though he has already called Simon, Peter (v. 8), here mentions that Jesus gave him the name. In the third group of four Judas Jacobi takes the place of Thaddaeus in Mk. and Lebbaeus in Mt. and Simon the Kananite is called Simon the Zealot. Of Judas Iscariot it is noted that he became a traitor, "turned traitor" (Field, Ot. Nor.).—προδότης has no article, and therefore should not be rendered the traitor as in A. V. and R. V. When the verb is used it is always παραδιδόναι.—Ver. 17. καταβὰς, descending, with the Twelve, suggesting descent to the foot of the hills, the plain below. Yet the expression τόπου πεδινοῦ is peculiar; hardly what we should expect if the reference were to the plain beside the lake; rather suggestive of a flat space lower down the hill. —πεδινὸς, here only in N. T. The descent takes place in order to the delivery of a discourse which, with the choice of the Apostles, constitutes the occasion with reference to which Jesus had spent the night in prayer. The audience consists of three classes separately named (1) the Twelve, (2) the company of disciples described as an ὄχλος πολὺς, (3) a multitude (πλῆθος) gathered from a wide area. This is the same multitude from which in Mk.'s narrative Jesus escaped to the hill, taking His disciples with Him, to get rest, and presumably to devote some leisure time to their instruction. Of this desire to escape from the crowd, so apparent in Mk., there is no trace in Lk. In indicating the sources of this great human stream Lk. omits Galilee as superfluous, mentions Judaea and πάσης τῆς Ἰουδαίας καὶ Ἱερουσαλήμ, καὶ τῆς παραλίου Τύρου καὶ Σιδῶνος, οἳ ἦλθον ἀκοῦσαι αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἰαθῆναι ἀπὸ τῶν νόσων αὐτῶν. 18. καὶ οἱ ὀχλούμενοι ὑπὸ[1] πνευμάτων ἀκαθάρτων, καὶ[2] ἐθεραπεύοντο. 19. καὶ πᾶς ὁ ὄχλος ἐζήτει[3] ἅπτεσθαι αὐτοῦ· ὅτι δύναμις παρ' αὐτοῦ ἐξήρχετο, καὶ ἰᾶτο πάντας.

20. Καὶ αὐτὸς ἐπάρας τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ εἰς τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ ἔλεγε, "Μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοί, ὅτι ὑμετέρα ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ. 21. μακάριοι οἱ πεινῶντες νῦν, ὅτι χορτασθήσεσθε. μακάριοι οἱ κλαίοντες νῦν, ὅτι γελάσετε. 22. μακάριοί ἐστε,

[1] ενοχλουμενοι απο in ℵABL (D has απο).

[2] και omitted in ℵABDL 33. [3] εζητουν in ℵBL. T.R. a correction.

Jerusalem, passing over Idumaea and Peraea (Mk. iii. 8), and winds up with Tyre and Sidon, defining the territory there whence people came by the expression τῆς παραλίου (χώρας understood), the sea-coast. The people come from all these places to hear Jesus (ἀκοῦσαι αὐτοῦ) in the first place, as if in expectation of a great discourse, and also to be healed. The eagerness to get healing even by touch, of which Mk. gives so graphic a picture (iii. 10), is faintly indicated by ἐζήτουν (ἐζήτει, T. R.).—Ver. 19. δύναμις may be nominative both to ἐξήρχετο and to ἰᾶτο (A. V. and R. V.), or we may render: "power went forth from Him and He healed all".

Vv. 20-49. The Sermon (Mt. v.-vii.). That it is the same sermon as Mt. reports in chapters v.-vii. may be regarded as beyond discussion. How, while the same, they came to be so different, is a question not quite easy to answer. There probably was addition to the original utterance in the case of Mt., and there was almost certainly selection involving omission in the case of Lk.'s version, either on his part or on the part of those who prepared the text he used. Retouching of expression in the parts common to both reports is, of course, also very conceivable. As it stands in Lk. the great utterance has much more the character of a popular discourse than the more lengthy, elaborate version of Mt. In Mt. it is didache, in Lk. kerygma—a discourse delivered to a great congregation gathered for the purpose, with the Apostles and disciples in the front benches so to speak, a discourse exemplifying the "words of grace" (iv. 22) Jesus was wont to speak, the controversial antithesis (Mt. v. 17-48) eliminated, and only the evangelic passages retained; a sermon serving at once as a model for "Apostles" and as a gospel for the million.

Vv. 20-26. First part of the discourse: Beatitudes and Woes (Mt. v. 1-12).—Ver. 20. ἐπάρας τ. ὀφ.: in Lk. the Preacher lifts up His eyes upon His audience (τ. μαθητὰς, who are themselves a crowd), in Mt. He opens His mouth; both expressions introducing a solemn set discourse. Lk.'s phrase suggests a benignant look, answering to the nature of the utterance.—μακάριοι: Lk. has only four Beatitudes, of which the poor, the hungry, the weeping, the persecuted are the objects; the sorrows not the activities of the children of the kingdom the theme.—πτωχοί, πεινῶντες, κλαίοντες are to be taken literally as describing the social condition of those addressed. They are characteristics of those who are supposed to be children of the kingdom, not (as in Mt.) conditions of entrance. The description corresponds to the state of the early Church. It is as if Jesus were addressing a church meeting and saying: Blessed are ye, my brethren, though poor, etc., for in the Kingdom of God, and its blessings, present and prospective, ye have ample compensation. Note the use of the second person. In Mt. Jesus speaks didactically in the third person. Christ's words are adapted to present circumstances, but it is not necessary to suppose that the adaptation proceeds from an ebionitic circle, ascetic in spirit and believing poverty to be in itself a passport to the kingdom, and riches the way to perdition.

Vv. 22, 23. In the corresponding passage in Mt. there is first an objective didactic statement about the persecuted, ὅταν μισήσωσιν ὑμᾶς οἱ ἄνθρωποι, καὶ ὅταν ἀφορίσωσιν ὑμᾶς, καὶ ὀνειδίσωσι, καὶ ἐκβάλωσι τὸ ὄνομα ὑμῶν ὡς πονηρόν, ἕνεκα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. 23. χαίρετε[1] ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ σκιρτήσατε· ἰδοὺ γάρ, ὁ μισθὸς ὑμῶν πολὺς ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ· κατὰ ταῦτα[2] γὰρ ἐποίουν τοῖς προφήταις οἱ πατέρες αὐτῶν. 24. Πλὴν οὐαὶ ὑμῖν τοῖς πλουσίοις, ὅτι ἀπέχετε τὴν παράκλησιν ὑμῶν. 25. οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, οἱ ἐμπεπλησμένοι,[3] ὅτι πεινάσετε. οὐαὶ ὑμῖν,[4] οἱ γελῶντες νῦν, ὅτι πενθήσετε καὶ κλαύσετε. 26. οὐαὶ ὑμῖν,[4] ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσι πάντες οἱ ἄνθρωποι· κατὰ ταῦτα[5] γὰρ ἐποίουν τοῖς ψευδοπροφήταις οἱ πατέρες αὐτῶν.

27. "Ἀλλ' ὑμῖν λέγω τοῖς ἀκούουσιν, Ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ὑμῶν, καλῶς ποιεῖτε τοῖς μισοῦσιν ὑμᾶς, 28. εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρω-

[1] χαρητε in all uncials. [2] τα αυτα in BD (Tisch., W.H.).
[3] ℵBLΞ 33 al. add νυν to εμπεπλ.
[4] Omit υμιν in both places ℵBLΞ. Many more omit the second.
[5] τα αυτα again in ℵBDΞ 33.

then an expansion in the second person. Here all is in the second person, and the terms employed are such as suited the experience of the early Christians, especially those belonging to the Jewish Church, suffering, at the hands of their unbelieving countrymen, wrong in the various forms indicated—hatred, separation, calumny, ejection.—ἀφορίσωσιν may point either to separation in daily life (Keil, Hahn) or to excommunication from the synagogue (so most commentaries) = the Talmudic נִדָּה. In the former case one naturally finds the culminating evil of excommunication in the last clause—ἐκβάλωσιν τὸ ὄ. ὑ. = erasing the name from the membership of the synagogue. In the latter case this clause will rather point to the vile calumnies afterwards heaped upon the excommunicated. "Absentium nomen, ut improborum hominum, differre rumoribus," Grotius.—Ver. 23. σκιρτήσατε, leap for joy; the word occurs in i. 41, 44, and this and other terms found in the sermon have led some to infer that Lk. uses as his source a version of the discourse emanating from a Jewish-Christian circle. Vide the list of words in J. Weiss, Meyer, note, p. 387. Vide also Feine, Vork. Überlief.

Vv. 24-26. πλὴν, but, used here adversatively, a favourite word with Lk., suggesting therefore the hypothesis that he is responsible for the "woes" following, peculiar to his version of the sermon. —ἀπέχετε, ye have in full; riches and nothing besides your reward (cf. Mt. vi. 2).—Ver. 25. ἐμπεπλησμένοι, the sated, a class as distinct in character as the δεδιωγμένοι of Mt. v. 10, on whom vide remarks there. Readers can picture the sated class for themselves.—Ver. 26. This woe is addressed, not to the rich and full without, but to the disciples within, and points out to them that to be free from the evils enumerated in ver. 22 is not a matter of congratulation, but rather a curse, as indicative of a disloyalty to the faith and the Master, which makes them rank with false prophets.

Vv. 27-35. The law of love (Mt. v. 38-48).—Ver. 27. ὑμῖν λέγω: Lk. here uses the phrase with which Mt. introduces each dictum of Jesus in opposition to the dicta of the scribes. But of the many dicta of the Lord reported in Mt. he has preserved only one, that relating to the duty of loving (Mt. v. 44). The injunction to love enemies is much weakened in force by omission of the antithesis: love neighbours and hate enemies. As if to compensate Lk. gives the precept twice, (1) as a general head under which to collect sayings culled from the section of the discourse omitted (Mt. v. 17-42), (2) as a protest against limiting love to those who love us (ver. 35, cf. ver. 32).—τοῖς ἀκούουσιν, to you who hear; a phrase by which the discourse is brought back to the actual audience from the rich and the false disciples apostrophised in the preceding verses. It is an editorial phrase.— a 1 Pet. iii. 16.

μένους ὑμῖν,[1] καὶ[2] προσεύχεσθε ὑπὲρ[3] τῶν ᵃἐπηρεαζόντων ὑμᾶς, 29. τῷ τύπτοντί σε ἐπὶ τὴν σιαγόνα, πάρεχε καὶ τὴν ἄλλην· καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴροντός σου τὸ ἱμάτιον, καὶ τὸν χιτῶνα μὴ κωλύσῃς. 30. παντὶ δὲ τῷ[4] αἰτοῦντί σε, δίδου· καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴροντος τὰ σά, μὴ ἀπαίτει. 31. καὶ καθὼς θέλετε ἵνα ποιῶσιν ὑμῖν οἱ ἄνθρωποι, καὶ ὑμεῖς ποιεῖτε αὐτοῖς ὁμοίως. 32. καὶ εἰ ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, ποία ὑμῖν χάρις ἐστί; καὶ γὰρ οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας αὐτοὺς ἀγαπῶσι. 33. καὶ[5] ἐὰν ἀγαθοποιῆτε τοὺς ἀγαθοποιοῦντας ὑμᾶς, ποία ὑμῖν χάρις ἐστί; καὶ γὰρ[6] οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ποιοῦσι. 34. καὶ ἐὰν δανείζητε[7] παρ' ὧν ἐλπίζετε ἀπολαβεῖν,[8] ποία ὑμῖν χάρις ἐστί; καὶ γὰρ οἱ[9] ἁμαρτωλοὶ ἁμαρτωλοῖς δανείζουσιν, ἵνα ἀπολάβωσι τὰ ἴσα. 35. πλὴν ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ὑμῶν, καὶ ἀγαθοποιεῖτε, καὶ δανείζετε μηδὲν[10] ἀπελπίζοντες· καὶ

[1] υμας in ℵBDΞ vet. Lat. 6. υμιν is a correction to classical usage.
[2] Omit και ℵBDLΞ al.
[3] περι in ℵBLΞ.
[4] Omit δε τω ℵB.
[5] ℵB have και γαρ εαν (Tisch., W.H., in brackets).
[6] Omit γαρ ℵB.
[7] δανισητε in ℵBΞ (Tisch., W.H.).
[8] λαβειν in ℵBLΞ.
[9] ℵBLΞ omit γαρ, and many uncials omit οι.
[10] μηδεν is the best attested reading (ℵBLΔ al., W.H. in brackets); μηδενα in ℵΞΠ (Tisch.).

καλῶς ποιεῖτε, etc.: Lk., in contrast with Mt. (true text), enlarges here, as if to say: you must love in every conceivable case, even in connection with the most aggravated evil treatment. In the clause enjoining prayer for such as have done wrong Lk. substitutes ἐπηρεαζόντων (ver. 28) for Mt.'s διωκόντων = those who insult you, the people it is hardest to pray for. Persecution may be very fierce, at the prompting of conscience, yet respectful.—Ver. 29 = Mt. v. 39, 40 with some changes: τύπτειν for ῥαπίζειν, παρέχειν for στρέφειν; αἴροντος suggests the idea of robbery instead of legal proceedings pointed at by Mt.'s κριθῆναι; ἱμάτιον and χιτῶνα change places, naturally, as the robber takes first the upper garment; for Mt.'s ἄφες Lk. puts μὴ κωλύσῃς = withhold not (for the construction τινὰ ἀπό τινος κωλύειν, which Bornemann thought unexampled, vide Gen. xxiii. 6, Sept.).—Ver. 30. Lk. passes over Mt.'s instance of compulsory service (v. 41), perhaps because it would require explanation, or was not a practical grievance for his readers, and goes on to the duty of generous giving, which is to be carried the length of cheerfully resigning what is taken from us by force.—Ver. 31. Lk. brings in here the law of reciprocity (Mt. vii. 12), hardly in its proper place, as the change from singular to plural shows, but in sympathy with what goes before, though not quite in line, and therefore inserted at this point as the best place to be found for the golden rule. It seems to be meant as a general heading for the particular hypothetical cases following = you would like men to love you, therefore love them whether they love you or not, etc.—Ver. 32. χάρις, here and in the following verses stands for Mt.'s μισθὸς, as if to avoid a word of legal sound and substitute an evangelical term instead. Yet Lk. retains μισθὸς in ver. 23.—χάρις probably means not "thanks" from men but favour from God. It is a Pauline word, and apparently as such in favour with Lk. Vide on iv. 22.—ἁμαρτωλοὶ here and in vv. 33, 34 for τελῶναι and ἐθνικοὶ in Mt., a natural alteration, but much weakening the point; manifestly secondary.—Ver. 33. For Mt.'s salutation Lk. substitutes doing good (ἀγαθοποιῆτε).—Ver. 34. This example is robbed of its point if it be supposed that Lk. had an ascetic bias. If a man despise money there is no merit in lending without expecting repayment.—Ver. 35. πλὴν, but, in ἔσται ὁ μισθὸς ὑμῶν πολύς, καὶ ἔσεσθε υἱοὶ τοῦ[1] ὑψίστου· ὅτι αὐτὸς χρηστός ἐστιν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀχαρίστους καὶ πονηρούς. 36. γίνεσθε οὖν[2] [b]οἰκτίρμονες, καθὼς καὶ[3] ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν οἰκτίρμων ἐστί. 37. καὶ μὴ κρίνετε, καὶ οὐ μὴ κριθῆτε. μὴ καταδικάζετε, καὶ οὐ μὴ καταδικασθῆτε. ἀπολύετε, καὶ ἀπολυθήσεσθε· 38. δίδοτε, καὶ δοθήσεται ὑμῖν· μέτρον καλόν, [c]πεπιεσμένον καὶ[4] σεσαλευμένον καὶ[4] [d]ὑπερεκχυνόμενον δώσουσιν εἰς τὸν κόλπον ὑμῶν. τῷ γὰρ αὐτῷ μέτρῳ ᾧ[5] μετρεῖτε, ἀντιμετρηθήσεται ὑμῖν."

39. Εἶπε δὲ[6] παραβολὴν αὐτοῖς, "Μήτι δύναται τυφλὸς τυφλὸν

b here and Jas. v. 11.

c here only in N. T. (Micah vi. 15).

d here and in Joel ii. 24.

[1] Omit του ℵABDLΔΞ al. pl.

[2] Omit ουν ℵBDLΞ 33 al.

[3] Omit και ℵBLΞ.

[4] ℵBL omit first και and ℵBDLΞ the second; more expressive without.

[5] For τω γαρ . . . ω ℵBDLΞ 33 al. have ω γαρ μετρω (Tisch., W.H.).

[6] δε και in ℵBCDLΞ 33.

opposition to all these hypothetical cases.—μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, "hoping for nothing again," A. V., is the meaning the context requires, and accepted by most interpreters, though the verb in later Greek means to despair, hence the rendering "never despairing" in R. V. The reading μηδένα ἀπ. would mean: causing no one to despair by refusing aid.—υἱοὶ Ὑψίστου, sons of the Highest, a much inferior name to that in Mt. In Lk. to be sons of the Highest is the reward of noble, generous action; in Mt. to be like the Father in heaven is set before disciples as an object of ambition.—χρηστός, kind; by generalising Lk. misses the pathos of Mt.'s concrete statement (ver. 45), which is doubtless nearer the original.

Vv. 36-38. Mercifulness inculcated. God the pattern.—Ver. 36 corresponds to Mt. v. 48, which fitly closes the promulgation of the great law of love = be ye therefore perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect (vide notes there). Lk. alters the precept both in its expression (οἰκτίρμονες for τέλειοι), and in its setting, making it begin a new train of thought instead of winding up the previous one = be compassionate (οὖν omitted, ℵBDL, etc.) as, etc.—the precepts following being particulars under that general.—γίνεσθε, imperative, for the future in Mt.—οἰκτίρμονες: a legitimate substitution, as the perfection inculcated referred to loving enemies, and giving opportunity for setting forth the doctrine of God's free grace.—καθὼς for Mt.'s ὡς, common in Lk. (twenty-eight times), witnessing to editorial revision.—ὁ πατὴρ ὑ.: without ὁ οὐράνιος, which is implied in the epithet "the Highest" (ver. 35).—Ver. 37. In these special precepts it is implied throughout that God acts as we are exhorted to act. They give a picture of the gracious spirit of God.—καὶ, connecting the following precept as a special with a general. No καὶ in Mt. vii. 1, where begins a new division of the sermon. In Mt. the judging condemned is referred to as a characteristic Pharisaic vice. Here it is conceived of as internal to the disciple-circle, as in James iv. 12.—ἀπολύετε, set free, as a debtor (Mt. xviii. 27), a prisoner, or an offender (τῆς ἁμαρτίας ἀπολυθῆναι, 2 Macc. xii. 45).—Ver. 38. δίδοτε: this form of mercy is suggested by Mt. vii. 2, ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε, etc.: be giving, implying a constant habit, and therefore a generous nature.—μέτρον καλὸν, good, generous measure; these words and those which follow apply to man's giving as well as to the recompense with which the generous giver shall be rewarded.—πεπιεσμένον, etc., pressed down, shaken, and overflowing; graphic epexegesis of good measure, all the terms applicable to dry goods, e.g., grain. Bengel takes the first as referring to dry (in aridis), the second to soft (in mollibus), the third to liquids (in liquidis).—κόλπον: probably the loose bosom of the upper robe gathered in at the waist, useful for carrying things (De Wette, Holtz., H. C., al.). It is implied that God gives so, e.g., "plenteous redemption" (Ps. cxxx. 7).

Vv. 39-45. Proverbial lore.—Ver. 39. εἶπε δὲ: the Speaker is represented here as making a new beginning, the connection of thought not being apparent.

ὁδηγεῖν; οὐχὶ ἀμφότεροι εἰς βόθυνον πεσοῦνται[1]; 40. οὐκ ἔστι μαθητὴς ὑπὲρ τὸν διδάσκαλον αὐτοῦ[2]· κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς ἔσται ὡς ὁ διδάσκαλος αὐτοῦ. 41. τί δὲ βλέπεις τὸ κάρφος τὸ ἐν τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου, τὴν δὲ δοκὸν τὴν ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ ὀφθαλμῷ οὐ κατανοεῖς; 42. ἢ[3] πῶς δύνασαι λέγειν τῷ ἀδελφῷ σου, Ἀδελφέ, ἄφες ἐκβάλω τὸ κάρφος τὸ ἐν τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ σου, αὐτὸς τὴν ἐν τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ σου δοκὸν οὐ βλέπων; ὑποκριτά, ἔκβαλε πρῶτον τὴν δοκὸν ἐκ τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ σου, καὶ τότε διαβλέψεις ἐκβαλεῖν[4] τὸ κάρφος τὸ ἐν τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου. 43. οὐ γάρ ἐστι δένδρον καλὸν ποιοῦν καρπὸν σαπρόν· οὐδὲ δένδρον σαπρὸν ποιοῦν καρπὸν καλόν. 44. ἕκαστον γὰρ δένδρον ἐκ τοῦ ἰδίου καρποῦ γινώσκεται· οὐ γὰρ ἐξ ἀκανθῶν συλλέγουσι σῦκα, οὐδὲ ἐκ βάτου τρυγῶσι σταφυλήν.[5] 45. ὁ ἀγαθὸς ἄνθρωπος ἐκ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ θησαυροῦ τῆς καρδίας αὐτοῦ προφέρει τὸ ἀγαθόν· καὶ ὁ πονηρὸς ἄνθρωπος[6] ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ θησαυροῦ τῆς καρδίας αὐτοῦ[6] προφέρει τὸ πονηρόν· ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ[7] περισσεύματος τῆς[7] καρδίας λαλεῖ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ.

[1] εμπεσ. in BDL; πεσ. in ℵCΔΞ 33. [2] Omit αυτου ℵBDLΞ 33.
[3] B omits η. ℵ has πως δε. Most uncials = T.R.
[4] εκβαλειν at end of sentence in B 13, 69 al. (Tisch., W.H.).
[5] σταφ. τρυγ. in ℵBCDLΞ 13, 33, 69.
[6] ℵBDL omit ανθρωπος and θησ. της καρδιας αυτου (explanatory additions).
[7] ℵABDΞ omit both articles.

Grotius says plainly that there is no connection, and that Lk. has deemed it fitting to introduce here a logion that must have been spoken at another time. Mt. has a similar thought to that in ver. 39, not in the sermon but in xv. 14.—τυφλὸς τυφλὸν: viewing the sermon as an ideal address to a church, this adage may apply to Christians trying to guide brethren in the true way (James v. 19), and mean that they themselves must know the truth.—Ver. 40. The connection here also is obscure; the adage might be taken as directed against the conceit of scholars presuming to criticise their teachers, which is checked by the reminder that the utmost height that can be reached by the fully equipped (κατηρτισμένος, a Pauline word, 1 Cor. i. 10, cf. 2 Tim. iii. 17, ἐξηρτισμένος) scholar is to be on a level with his teacher.—Ver. 41 introduces a thought which in Mt. stands in immediate connection with that in ver. 37 (Mt. vii. 1, 2, 3). If the view of ver. 40, above suggested, be correct, then this and the next verses may also be understood as referring still to the relations between teacher and taught in the Church, rather than to the vices of the Pharisees, which in Lk.'s version of the sermon are very much left out of account. Censoriousness is apt to be a fault of young converts, and doubtless it was rife enough in the apostolic age. On the parable of the mote and the beam vide on Mt. vii. 3-5.—Ver. 40. οὐ βλέπων: this is one of the few instances in N. T. of participles negatived by οὐ. The οὐ in such cases may = μὴ, which in classical Greek has the force of a condition, οὐ being used only to state a fact (vide Burton, § 485).—Vv. 43-45. In Mt. these parabolic sayings are connected with a warning against false prophets (Mt. vii. 15-19). Here the connection is not obvious, though the thread is probably to be found in the word ὑποκριτά, applied to one who by his censoriousness claims to be saintly, yet in reality is a greater sinner than those he blames. This combination of saint and sinner is declared to be impossible by means of these adages.—Ver. 44. For τριβόλοι in Mt., Lk. puts βάτος = thorn bush, rubus, and for συλλέγουσιν applied to both thorns and thistles in Mt., Lk. uses in connection with βάτου τρυγῶσιν the

46. "Τί δέ με καλεῖτε, Κύριε, Κύριε, καὶ οὐ ποιεῖτε ἃ λέγω; 47. πᾶς ὁ ἐρχόμενος πρός με καὶ ἀκούων μου τῶν λόγων καὶ ποιῶν αὐτούς, ὑποδείξω ὑμῖν τίνι ἐστὶν ὅμοιος. 48. ὅμοιός ἐστιν ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδομοῦντι οἰκίαν, ὃς [e] ἔσκαψε καὶ [f] ἐβάθυνε, καὶ ἔθηκε θεμέλιον ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν· πλημμύρας[1] δὲ γενομένης, προσέρρηξεν ὁ ποταμὸς τῇ οἰκίᾳ ἐκείνῃ, καὶ οὐκ ἴσχυσε σαλεῦσαι αὐτήν· τεθεμελίωτο γὰρ ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν.[2] 49. ὁ δὲ ἀκούσας καὶ μὴ ποιήσας ὅμοιός ἐστιν ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδομήσαντι οἰκίαν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν χωρὶς θεμελίου· ᾗ προσέρρηξεν ὁ ποταμός, καὶ εὐθέως ἔπεσε,[3] καὶ ἐγένετο τὸ ῥῆγμα τῆς οἰκίας ἐκείνης μέγα."

e Ch. xiii. 8; xvi. 3.
f here only in N. T.

VII. 1. 'ΕΠΕΙ δὲ[4] ἐπλήρωσε πάντα τὰ ῥήματα αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰς ἀκοὰς τοῦ λαοῦ, εἰσῆλθεν εἰς Καπερναούμ. 2. Ἑκατοντάρχου δέ

[1] πλημμυρης in ℵBLΞ 33.

[2] For τεθ. γαρ . . . πετραν (from Mt.) ℵBLΞ 33 have δια το καλως οικοδομησ(-εισ-)θαι αυτην (Tisch., W.H.).

[3] συνεπεσεν in ℵBDLΞ 33 al., a stronger word = collapsed (Tisch., W.H.).

[4] επειδη in ABC (Tisch., W.H., text); επει δε in ℵLΞ (W.H. marg.).

proper word for grape-gathering.—Ver. 45. θησαυροῦ τῆς καρδίας: either, the treasure which is in the heart, or the treasure which the heart is (Hahn). In either case the sense is: as is the heart, so is the utterance.

Ver. 46, introducing the epilogue, rather than winding up the previous train of thought, answers to Mt. vii. 21-23; here direct address (2nd person), there didactic (3rd person); here a pointed question, and paratactic structure as of an orator, in lively manner, applying his sermon, there a general statement as to what is necessary to admission into the Kingdom of Heaven—οὐ πᾶς ὁ λέγων, etc.

Vv. 47-48. The epilogue (Mt. vii. 24-27).—Ver. 47. πᾶς ὁ ἐρχόμενος, etc.: the style of address here corresponds to the idea of the discourse suggested by Lk.'s presentation throughout, the historical Sermon on the Mount converted into an ideal sermon in a church = every one that cometh to me by becoming a Christian, and heareth my words generally, not these words in particular. — Ver. 48. ἔσκαψε καὶ ἐβάθυνε, dug, and kept deepening. A Hebraism, say Grotius and others = dug deeply. But Raphel produces an example from Xenophon of the same construction: σαφηνίζει τε καὶ ἀληθεύει for ἀληθῶς σαφηνίζει (Oeconomici, cap. xx.).—πλημμύρης (from πίμπλημι, ἅπ. λεγ in N. T.), a flood, "the sudden rush of a spate," Farrar (C. G. T.); "Hochwasser," Weizsäcker.—προσέρρηξεν, broke against, here and in ver. 49 only, in N. T.—Ver. 49. χωρὶς θεμελίου, without a foundation; an important editorial comment. The foolish builder did not make a mistake in choosing a foundation. His folly lay in not thinking of a foundation, but building at haphazard on the surface. Vide notes on Mt. for the characteristics of the two builders.—τὸ ῥῆγμα (πτῶσις in Mt.), the collapse, here only in N. T. This noun is used to answer to the verb προσέρρηξεν.

The impression produced by the foregoing study is that Lk's version of the Sermon on the Mount, while faithfully reproducing at least a part of our Lord's teaching on the hill, gives us that teaching, not in its original setting, but readapted so as to serve the practical purposes of Christian instruction, either by Lk. or by some one before him.

CHAPTER VII. THE CENTURION OF CAPERNAUM. THE WIDOW'S SON AT NAIN. THE BAPTIST. IN THE HOUSE OF SIMON.—Vv. 1-10. The Centurion of Capernaum (Mt. viii. 5-13).—Ver. 1. εἰς τὰς ἀκοὰς, into the ears = εἰς τὰ ὦτα in Sept. (Gen. xx. 8, l. 4, Ex. x. 2). To show that it is not a Hebraism, Kypke cites from Dion. Hal.: εἰς τὴν ἁπάντων τῶν παρόντων ἀκοὴν.—εἰσῆλθεν, entered, not returned to, Capernaum.—Ver. 2. ὃς ἦν αὐτῷ ἔντιμος, who was dear to him; though a slave, indicating that he a (Ch. xiv. 8.) Phil. ii. 29. 1 Pet. ii. 4, 6.

τινος δοῦλος κακῶς ἔχων ἤμελλε τελευτᾶν, ὃς ἦν αὐτῷ ᵃ ἔντιμος. 3. ἀκούσας δὲ περὶ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτὸν πρεσβυτέρους τῶν Ἰουδαίων, ἐρωτῶν αὐτόν, ὅπως ἐλθὼν διασώσῃ τὸν δοῦλον αὐτοῦ. 4. οἱ δὲ παραγενόμενοι πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν παρεκάλουν[1] αὐτὸν σπουδαίως, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι ἄξιός ἐστιν ᾧ παρέξει[2] τοῦτο· 5. ἀγαπᾷ γὰρ τὸ ἔθνος ἡμῶν, καὶ τὴν συναγωγὴν αὐτὸς ᾠκοδόμησεν ἡμῖν." 6. Ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἐπορεύετο σὺν αὐτοῖς. ἤδη δὲ αὐτοῦ οὐ μακρὰν ἀπέχοντος ἀπὸ[3] τῆς οἰκίας, ἔπεμψε πρὸς αὐτὸν[4] ὁ ἑκατόνταρχος φίλους,[5] λέγων αὐτῷ,[6] "Κύριε, μὴ σκύλλου· οὐ γάρ εἰμι ἱκανὸς[7] ἵνα ὑπὸ τὴν στέγην μου εἰσέλθῃς· 7. διὸ οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν ἠξίωσα πρός σε ἐλθεῖν· ἀλλὰ εἰπὲ λόγῳ, καὶ ἰαθήσεται[8] ὁ παῖς μου. 8. καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπός εἰμι ὑπὸ ἐξουσίαν τασσόμενος, ἔχων ὑπ' ἐμαυτὸν στρατιώτας, καὶ λέγω τούτῳ, Πορεύθητι, καὶ πορεύεται· καὶ ἄλλῳ, Ἔρχου, καὶ

[1] So in BC al. ηρωτων in ℵDLΞ minusc. (Tisch.). [2] παρεξη in ℵABCDLΔΞ al.
[3] ℵD min. omit απο (Tisch.). [4] Omit προς αυτον ℵB.
[5] φιλους before ο εκ. in ℵBCLΞ 33 al. [6] ℵ omits αυτω (Tisch.).
[7] ικ. ειμι in ℵB. [8] ιαθητω in BL. T.R. is from Mt.

was a humane master. Lk. has also in view, according to his wont, to enhance the value of the benefit conferred: the life of a valued servant saved.—Ver. 3. ἀκούσας: reports of previous acts of healing had reached him.—ἀπέστειλε: there is no mention of this fact or of the second deputation (in ver. 6) in Mt.'s version. Lk. is evidently drawing from another source, oral or written.—πρεσβυτέρους τῶν Ἰουδαίων, elders of the Jews; the reference is probably to elders of the city rather than to rulers of the synagogue. From the designation "of the Jews" it may be inferred that the centurion was a Pagan, probably in the service of Antipas.—διασώσῃ, bring safely through the disease which threatened life.—Ver. 4. σπουδαίως, earnestly; though he was a Pagan, they Jews, for reason given.—ἄξιος ᾧ παρέξῃ, for ἄξιος ἵνα αὐτῷ π. παρέξῃ is the 2nd person singular, future, middle, in a relative clause expressing purpose instead of the more usual subjunctive (vide Burton, § 318).—Ver. 5. ἀγαπᾷ γὰρ, etc., he loveth our race; a Philo-Jewish Pagan, whose affection for the people among whom he lived took the form of building a synagogue. Quite a credible fact, which could easily be ascertained. Herod built the temple. Vide Lightfoot on this.—Ver. 6. ἐπορεύετο: no hint of scruples on the part of Jesus, as in the case of the Syrophenician woman.—οὐ μακρὰν, not far, i.e., quite near. Lk. often uses the negative with adjectives and adverbs to express strongly the positive. Hahn accumulates instances chiefly from Acts.—φίλους: these also would naturally be Jews.—ἱκανός εἰμι ἵνα: here we have ἱκανὸς, followed by ἵνα with subjunctive. In iii. 16 it is followed by the infinitive.—Ver. 7. εἰπὲ λόγῳ, speak, i.e., command, with a word.—Ver. 8. καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ: here follows the great word of the centurion reported by Lk. much as in Mt. But it seems a word more suitable to be spoken in propria persona than by deputy. It certainly loses much of its force by being given second hand. Lk. seems here to forget for the moment that the centurion is not supposed to be present. Schanz conjectures that he did come after all, and speak this word himself. On its import vide at Mt. viii. 9—τασσόμενος: present, implying a constant state of subordination.

Comparing the two accounts of this incident, it may be noted that Lk.'s makes the action of the centurion consistent throughout, as inspired by diffident humility. In Mt. he has the courage to ask Jesus directly, yet he is too humble to let Jesus come to his house. In Lk. he uses intercessors, who show a geniality welcome to the irenic evangelist. Without suggesting intention, it may further be remarked that this story embodies the main features of the kindred incident of the ἔρχεται· καὶ τῷ δούλῳ μου, Ποίησον τοῦτο, καὶ ποιεῖ." 9. Ἀκούσας δὲ ταῦτα ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐθαύμασεν αὐτόν· καὶ στραφεὶς τῷ ἀκολουθοῦντι αὐτῷ ὄχλῳ εἶπε, "Λέγω ὑμῖν, οὐδὲ ἐν τῷ Ἰσραὴλ τοσαύτην πίστιν εὗρον." 10. Καὶ ὑποστρέψαντες οἱ πεμφθέντες εἰς τὸν οἶκον[1] εὗρον τὸν ἀσθενοῦντα[2] δοῦλον ὑγιαίνοντα.

11. ΚΑΙ ἐγένετο ἐν τῇ[3] ἑξῆς, ἐπορεύετο[4] εἰς πόλιν καλουμένην Ναΐν· καὶ συνεπορεύοντο αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἱκανοί,[5] καὶ ὄχλος πολύς. 12. ὡς δὲ ἤγγισε τῇ πύλῃ τῆς πόλεως, καὶ ἰδού, ἐξεκομίζετο τεθνηκώς, υἱὸς μονογενὴς[6] τῇ μητρὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ αὕτη ἦν χήρα· καὶ ὄχλος τῆς πόλεως ἱκανὸς[7] σὺν αὐτῇ. 13. καὶ ἰδὼν αὐτὴν ὁ Κύριος

[1] εις τ. ο. before οι πεμφ. in ℵBDL al. vet. Lat. (Tisch., W.H.).

[2] Omit ασθενουντα ℵBL.

εν τω εξης in many MSS., including BL (W.H.). T.R. = ℵCD (Tisch.).

[4] επορευθη in ℵB 13, 69 (Tisch., W.H.).

[5] Omit ικανοι ℵBDLΞ (W.H.).

[6] μον. υιος in ℵBLΞ.

[7] Add ην after ικ. ℵBL 33.

Syrophenician woman, not reported by Lk. The excessive humility of the centurion = "we Gentile dogs". The intercession of the elders = that of the disciples. The friendliness of the elders s an admonition to Judaists = this is the attitude you ought to take up towards Gentiles. All the lessons of the "Syrophenician woman" are thus taught, while the one unwelcome feature of Christ's refusal or unwillingness to help, which might seem to justify the Judaist, is eliminated. How far such considerations had an influence in moulding the tradition followed by Lk. it is impossible to say. Suffice it to point out that the narrative, as it stands, does double duty, and shows us:—

1. Gentile humility and faith.
2. Jewish friendliness.
3. Christ's prompt succour, and admiration of great faith.

Vv. 11-17. The son of the widow of Nain. In Lk. only.—ἐν τῷ ἑξῆς (καιρῷ), in the following time, thereafter; vague. —ἐν τῇ ἑ. would mean: on the following day (ἡμέρᾳ, understood), i.e., the day after the healing of the centurion's servant in Capernaum. Hofmann defends this reading on the negative ground that no usage of style on the part of Lk. is against it, and that it better suits the circumstances. "We see Jesus on the way towards the city of Nain on the north-western slope of the little Hermon, a day's journey from Capernaum. It is expressly noted that His disciples, and, as ἱκανοί is well attested, in considerbable numers, not merely the Twelve, were with Him, and many people besides; a surrounding the same as on the hill where He had addressed His disciples. Those of the audience who had come from Judaea are on their way home." The point must be left doubtful. W. and H. have ἐν τῷ ἑ., and omit ἱκανοί.—Ναΐν: there is still a little hamlet of the same name (vide Robinson, Palestine, ii. 355, 361). Eusebius and Jerome speak of the town as not far from Endor. Some have thought the reference is to a Nain in Southern Palestine, mentioned by Josephus. But Lk. would hardly take his readers so far from the usual scene of Christ's ministry without warning.—Ver. 12. καὶ ἰδού, and lo! The καὶ introduces the apodosis, but is really superfluous; very Hebrew (Godet).—ἐξεκομίζετο, was being carried out (here only in N. T.); ἐκφέρειν used in the classics (Acts v. 6). Loesner cites examples of the use of this verb in the same sense, from Philo.—μονογενής, χήρα: these words supply the pathos of the situation, depict the woe of the widowed mother, and by implication emphasise the benevolence of the miracle, always a matter of interest for Lk.—Ver. 13. ὁ Κύριος, the Lord, first time this title has been used for Jesus in the narrative. Lk. frequently introduces it where the other synoptists have "Jesus". The heavenly Christ, Lord of the Church, is in his mind, and perhaps he employs the title here because it is a case of raising from the dead. The "Lord" is Himself the risen One.—ἐσπλαγχνίσθη: express mention of sympathy, pity, as the ἐσπλαγχνίσθη ἐπ' αὐτῇ, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Μὴ κλαῖε." 14. Καὶ προσελθὼν ἥψατο τῆς σοροῦ· οἱ δὲ βαστάζοντες ἔστησαν· καὶ εἶπε, "Νεανίσκε, σοὶ λέγω, ἐγέρθητι." 15. Καὶ ἀνεκάθισεν[1] ὁ νεκρός, καὶ ἤρξατο λαλεῖν· καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτὸν τῇ μητρὶ αὐτοῦ. 16. ἔλαβε δὲ φόβος ἅπαντας, καὶ ἐδόξαζον τὸν Θεόν, λέγοντες, "Ὅτι προφήτης μέγας ἐγήγερται[2] ἐν ἡμῖν," καὶ "Ὅτι ἐπεσκέψατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ." 17. Καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ὁ λόγος οὗτος ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ περὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐν[3] πάσῃ τῇ περιχώρῳ.

